- Elison, Jeff, and Susan L. Harter (2007). "Humiliation: Causes, correlates, and consequences." In The self-conscious emotions: Theory and research, edited by Jessica L. Tracy, Richard W. Robins, and June Price Tangney. Chapter 17, pp. 310–29. New York: Guilford Press.
- Ellis, Bruce J., Marco Del Giudice, Thomas J. Dishion, Aurelio Jose Figueredo, Peter Gray, Vladas Griskevicius, Patricia H. Hawley, et al. (2012). "The evolutionary basis of risky adolescent behavior: Implications for science, policy, and practice." In Developmental Psychology, 48 (3), 598–623. doi: 10.1037/a0026220.
- Elshout, Maartje, Rob M. A. Nelissen, and Ilja van Beest (2016). "Conceptualising humiliation." In Cognition and Emotion, 0 (0), 1–14. doi: 10.1080/02699931.2016.1249462.
- Elster, Jon (2003). Alchemies of the mind: Rationality and the emotions. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Elworthy, Scilla, and Gabrielle Rifkind (2005). Hearts and minds: Human security approaches to political violence. London: Demos.
- Emmott, Stephen (2013). Ten billion. London: Penguin.
- Engerman, Stanley L., and Eugene D. Genovese (1975). Race and slavery in the Western hemisphere: Quantitative studies. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Englander, David (2013). Poverty and Poor Law Reform in nineteenth-century Britain, 1834-1914: From Chadwick to Booth. Florence: Taylor and Francis.
- Enloe, Cynthia (1990). Bananas, beaches and bases: Making feminist sense of international politics. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Enloe, Cynthia (1993). The morning after: Sexual politics at the end of the cold war. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Enloe, Cynthia (2000). Maneuvers: The international politics of militarizing women's lives. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Enloe, Cynthia (2004). The curious feminist: Searching for women in a new age of empire. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Enloe, Cynthia (2007). Globalization and militarism: Feminists make the link. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Enmark, Kristin (2015). Valvet, föraktet och mitt kärleksförhållande med Clark Olofsson. Stockholm: Adlibris.
- Epstein, Gerald A., Tom Schlesinger, Matias Vernengo, and Robert A. Blecker (Eds.) (2014). Banking, monetary policy and the political economy of financial regulation: Essays in the tradition of Jane D'Arista. Cheltenham: Edward Elgar.
- Eriksson, M., and B. Lindstrom (2005). "Validity of Antonovsky's sense of coherence scale: A systematic review." In Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health, 59 (6), 460–66. doi: 10.1136/jech.2003.018085.
- Escrigas, Cristina (2016). A higher calling for higher education. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/GTI\_publications/A-Higher-Calling-for-Higher-Education.pdf.
- Etzioni, Amitai (2013). "A liberal communitarian paradigm for counterterrorism." In Stanford Journal of International Law, 49 (2, Summer), 330–70. https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract\_id=2354033.
- Evanoff, Douglas D., George G. Kaufman, and Anastasios G. Malliaris (Eds.) (2012). New perspectives on asset price bubbles: Theory, evidence and policy. New York: Oxford University

- Press. https://driehaus.depaul.edu/about/centers-and-institutes/driehaus-center-for-behavioral-finance/publications-and-resources/Documents/DeBont\_Asset\_bubbles,\_from\_book\_new\_pers.pdf.
- Evans, Patricia (2010). The verbally abusive relationship: How to recognize it and how to respond. 3rd edition. Avon, MA: Adams.
- Evans, Peter (2008). "Is an alternative globalization possible?" In Politics and Society, 36 (2, Special Issue: Between the Washington Consensus and Another World: Interrogating United States Hegemony and Alternative Visions), 271–305. doi: 0.1177/0032329208316570. <http://sociology.berkeley.edu/sites/default/files/faculty/evans/Evans%20Alter%20Globalization%20Pol%26Soc%20v36n2%20June08.pdf>.
- Everaerd, Daphne, Floris Klumpers, Guido van Wingen, Indira Tendolkar, and Guillén Fernández (2015). "Association between neuroticism and amygdala responsivity emerges under stressful conditions." In NeuroImage, 112, 218–24. doi: 10.1016/j.neuroimage.2015.03.014.
- Ewen, Elizabeth, and Stuart Ewen (2009). Typecasting: On the arts and sciences of human inequality. New York: Seven Stories Press.
- Eymericus, Nicolas (1578). Directorium Inquisitorum. Romae: In Aedibvs Pop Rom. <http://digital.library.cornell.edu/cgi/t/text/text-idx?c=witch;idno=wit045>.
- Fallon, James H. (2006). "Neuroanatomical background to understanding the brain of the young psychopath." In Ohio State Journal of Criminal Law, 3 (34), 341–67. http://moritzlaw.osu.edu/osjcl/Articles/Volume3\_2/Symposium/Fallon-PDF-03-29-06.pdf.
- Fallon, James H. (2013). The psychopath inside: A neuroscientist's personal journey into the dark side of the brain. New York: Penguin.
- Fanon, Frantz (1952/1967). Black skin, white masks. Translated by Charles Lam Markmann. New York: Grove Press. French original Peau noire, masques blancs, Paris: Seuil, 1952.
- Fanon, Frantz (1961/1963). The wretched of the earth. Translated by Constance Farrington. New York: Grove Press. French original Les damnés de la terre, Paris: Maspero, 1961.
- Farrington, David P. (1993). "Understanding and preventing bullying." In Crime and Justice, 17 (January), 381–458.
- Fassin, Didier (2015). L'ombre du monde: Une anthropologie de la condition carcérale. Paris: Seuil.
- Fatemi, Sayyed Mohsen (2014). "Questioning the unquestionability of the expert's perspective in psychology." In Journal of Humanistic Psychology, 1–29. doi: 10.1177/0022167814531656. <http://jhp.sagepub.com/content/early/2014/05/29/0022167814531656.abstract>.
- Fattah, Khaled, and Karin M. Fierke (2009). "A clash of emotions: The politics of humiliation and political violence in the Middle East." In European Journal of International Relations, 15 (1), 67–93. doi: 10.1177/1354066108100053.
- Fawda, Faraj (1985). Qabla al-Suqūt (Before downfall). Cairo: F. A. Fawda.
- Fawda, Faraj (1988). al-Irhāb (Terrorism). Cairo: Dar Misr al-Jadida lil-Nashr wal-tawzi.
- Fazio, Russell H., David M. Sanbonmatsu, Martha C. Powell, and Frank R. Kardes (1986). "On the automatic activation of attitudes." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 50 (2), 229–38. doi: apa.org/journals/psp/50/2/229.pdf.
- Fazio, Russell H. (1990). "Multiple processes by which attitudes guide behavior: The MODE model as an integrative framework." In Advances in Experimental Social Psychology, 23, 75–109. www.researchgate.net/profile/Russell\_Fazio/publication/246902103\_Multiple\_processes\_by\_which\_attitudes\_guide\_behavior\_The\_MODE\_model\_as\_an\_integrative\_framework/links/53dfa6d90cf2a768e49bc5b2.pdf.
- Feather, Norman T., and Katherine Nairn (2005). "Resentment, envy, Schadenfreude, and sympathy: Effects of own and other's deserved or undeserved status." In Australian Journal of Psychology, 57 (2), 87–102. doi: 10.1080/00049530500048672.
- Feather, Norman T. (2008). "Effects of observer's own status on reactions to a high achiever's failure: Deservingness, resentment, schadenfreude, and sympathy." In Australian Journal of Psychology, 60 (1), 31–43. doi: 10.1080/00049530701458068. www.tandfonline.com/doi/abs/10.1080/00049530701458068.
- Feather, Norman T. (2015). "Analyzing relative deprivation in relation to deservingness, entitlement and resentment." In Social Justice Research, 28 (1), 7–26. doi: 10.1007/s11211-015-0235-9.
- Federici, Silvia (2004). Caliban and the witch: Women, the body and primitive accumulation. New York: Autonomedia.
- Fedigan, Linda Marie (1986). "The changing role of women in models of human evolution." In Annual Review of Anthropology, 15 (1), 25–66. doi: 10.1146/annurev.an.15.100186.000325,

- www.genderinscience.org/index.php/downloads/doc_download/144-fedigan-l-1986-the-changing-role-of-women-in-models-of-human-evolution.
- www.annualreviews.org/doi/abs/10.1146/annurev.an.15.100186.000325.
- Feigon, Lee (2002). Mao: A reinterpretation. Blue Ridge Summit, PA: Ivan R. Dee.
- Feldman, Marc D. (2004). Playing sick? Untangling the web of Munchausen syndrome, Munchausen by proxy, malingering and factitious disorder. New York: Routledge.
- Feldman, Stanley (2003). "Enforcing social conformity: A theory of authoritarianism." In Political Psychology, 24 (1), 41–74. doi: 10.1111/0162-895x.00316.
- Feldman, Stanley (2013). "Comments on authoritarianism in social context: The role of threat." In International Journal of Psychology, 48 (1), 55–59. doi: 10.1080/00207594.2012.742196.
- Feller, Amanda E., and Kelly K. Ryan (2012). "Definition, necessity, and Nansen: Efficacy of dialogue in peacebuilding." In Conflict Resolution Quarterly, 29 (4), 351–80. doi: 10.1002/crq.21049.
- Fellman, Gordon (1998). Rambo and the Dalai Lama: The compulsion to win and its threat to human survival. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Fenstermacher, Laurie, and Todd Leventhal (Eds.) (2011). Countering violent extremism: Scientific methods and strategies. Washington, DC: Nationwide Suspicious Activity Reporting (SAR) Initiative (NSI), Topical strategic multi-layer assessment and air force research laboratory multi-disciplinary white paper in support of counter-terrorism and counter-WMD. http://nsiteam.com/scientist/wp-content/uploads/2014/02/U\_Counter-Violent-Extremism-Final\_Approved-for-Public-Release\_28Oct11v3.pdf.
- Fernbach, Philip M., Todd Rogers, Craig R. Fox, and Steven A. Sloman (2013). "Political extremism is supported by an illusion of understanding." In Psychological Science, XX(X) 1–8. doi: 10.1177/0956797612464058. <http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1177/0956797612464058>.
- Ferrari, Alize J., Fiona J. Charlson, Rosana E. Norman, Scott B. Patten, Greg Freedman, Christopher J. L. Murray, Theo Vos, and Harvey A. Whiteford (2013). "Burden of depressive disorders by country, sex, age, and year: Findings from the global burden of disease study 2010." In Public Library of Science (PLOS) Medicine, 10 (11), e1001547. doi: 10.1371/journal.pmed.1001547. <http://journals.plos.org/plosmedicine/article?id=10.1371/journal.pmed.1001547>.
- Festinger, Leon (1954). "A theory of social comparison processes." In Human Relations, 7 (2), 117–40. doi: 10.1177/001872675400700202.
- Festinger, Leon (1957). A theory of cognitive dissonance. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Festinger, Leon (1980). Retrospections on social psychology. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Feuchtwang, Stephan (2011). After the event: The transmission of grievous loss in Germany, China and Taiwan. London: Berghahn.
- Ficks, Courtney A., and Irwin D. Waldman (2014). "Candidate genes for aggression and antisocial behavior: A meta-analysis of association studies of the 5HTTLPR and MAOA-uVNTR." In Behavior Genetics, 44 (5), 427–44. doi: 10.1007/s10519-014-9661-y.
- Fierke, Karin M. (2004). "Whereof we can speak, thereof we must not be silent: Trauma, political solipsism and war." In Review of International Studies, 30 (4), 471–91. doi: 10.1017/S0260210504006187.
- Figes, Orlando (2007). The whisperers: Private life in Stalin's Russia. New York: Picador.
- Figgis, John Neville (1914). The divine right of kings. 2nd edition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. <https://archive.org/details/cu31924030444693>.
- Fine, Michelle, and Alexis Halkovic (2014). "A delicate and deliberate journey toward justice challenging privilege: Building structures of solidarity." In The handbook of conflict resolution: Theory and practice, edited by Morton Deutsch, Peter T. Coleman, and Eric C. Marcus. 2nd Edition edition. Chapter 3, pp. 56–75. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass.
- Fineman, Martha Albertson (2004). The myth of autonomy: A theory of dependency. New York: New Press.
- Fischer-Kowalski, Marina, and Helmut Haberl (2007). Socioecological transitions and global change: Trajectories of social metabolism and land use. Cheltenham: Edward Elgar.
- Fischer, David Hackett (1989). Albion's seed: Four British folkways in America. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Fischer, Ernst Peter (2009). Der kleine Darwin. Alles, was man über Evolution wissen sollte. München, Germany: Pantheon Verlag.
- Fisher-Yoshida, Beth, Kathy Dee Geller, and Steven A. Shapiro (Eds.) (2009). Innovations in transformative learning: Space, culture and the arts. New York: Peter Lang.

- Fisher, Helen E. (2009). Why him? Why her? Finding real love by understanding your personality type. New York: Henry Holt.
- Fisher, Roger, William Ury, and Bruce Patton (1991). Getting to yes: Negotiating agreement without giving in. New York: Houghton Mifflin.
- Fisher, Roger, William Ury, and Bruce Patton (2011). Getting to yes: Negotiating agreement without giving in. 3rd revised edition. New York: Penguin.
- Fisher, Ronald Aylmer (1930). The genetical theory of natural selection. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Fiske, Alan Page (1991). Structures of social life: The four elementary forms of human relations – communal sharing, authority ranking, equality matching, market pricing. New York: Free Press.
- Fiske, Alan Page (2004). “Relational models theory 2.0.” In Relational models theory: A contemporary overview, edited by Nick Haslam. Chapter 1, pp. 3–25. London: Psychology Press.
- Fiske, Alan Page, and Susan T. Fiske (2007). “Social relationships in our species and cultures.” In Handbook of cultural psychology, edited by Shinobu Kitayama, and Dov Cohen. Chapter 11, pp. 283–306. New York: Guilford Press.
- Flannery, Kent V., and Joyce Marcus (2003). “The origin of war: New 14C dates from ancient Mexico.” In Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS), 100 (20), 11801–05. doi: 10.1073/pnas.1934526100. www.pnas.org/content/100/20/11801.abstract.
- Folbre, Nancy (2009). Saving State U: Why we must fix public higher education. New York: The New Press.
- Foldvary, Fred E. (2006). The ultimate tax reform: Public revenue from land rent. Santa Clara, CA: Santa Clara University, Civil Society Institute. <http://foldvary.net/works/policystudy.pdf>.
- Fonagy, Peter, György Gergely, Elliot Jurist, and Mary Target (2004). Affect regulation, mentalization, and the development of the self. London: Karnac.
- Fonagy, Peter, David Cottrell, Jeannette Phillips, Dickon Bevington, Danya Glaser, and Elizabeth Allison (2015). What works for whom? A critical review of treatments for children and adolescents. 2nd edition. New York: Guilford Press.
- Fontan, Victoria (2001). The dialectics of humiliation: Polarization between occupier and occupied in post-Saddam Iraq. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/FontanHumiliationIrak.pdf.
- Fontan, Victoria C. (2008). Voices from post-Saddam Iraq: Living with terrorism, insurgency, and new forms of tyranny. Westport, CT: Praeger Security International, Greenwood.
- Fontan, Victoria C. (2012). Decolonizing peace. Lake Oswego, OR: World Dignity University Press.
- Forbes, Jack D. (2008). Columbus and other cannibals. Revised edition. New York: Seven Stories Press.
- Ford, Elizabeth (2017). Amazing things can happen: Heartbreak and hope on the Bellevue Hospital Psychiatric Prison Ward. New York: Regan Arts.
- Forster, Edward Morgan (1910). Howards end. London: Edward Arnold.
- Foucault, Michel (1957a). “La psychologie de 1850 à 1950.” In Histoire de la philosophie européenne, tome II: Tableau de la philosophie contemporaine, edited by Denis Huisman, and Alfred Weber, pp. 591–606. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher, reproduit en Michel Foucault, Dits et écrits, Paris, Gallimard, 1994, tome I, pp. 120–137.
- Foucault, Michel (1957b). “La recherche scientifique et la psychologie.” In Des chercheurs Français s’interrogent: Orientation et organisation du travail scientifique en France, edited by Jean Édouard Morère, pp. 173–201. Toulouse: Collection Nouvelle Recherche no. 13, reproduit en Michel Foucault, Dits et Écrits, Paris: Gallimard, 1994, tome I. pp. 137–158.
- Foucault, Michel (1961). Folie et déraison: Histoire de la folie à l’âge classique. Paris: Librairie Plon.
- Foucault, Michel (1961/2006). Madness and civilization: A history of insanity in the age of reason. Translated by Jonathan Murphy, and Jean Khalfa. New York: Routledge. French original Histoire de la folie à l’âge classique – Folie et déraison, Paris: Plon, 1961.
- Foucault, Michel (1966/1970). The order of things: An archaeology of the human sciences. New York: Pantheon Books. French original Les mots et les choses. Une archéologie des sciences humaines, Paris: Gallimard, 1966.
- Foucault, Michel, and Gilles Deleuze (1972). “Les intellectuels et le pouvoir.” In L’Arc, 49 (second trimester), 3–10, reprinted in Michel Foucault, Dits et Écrits. Volume II, Paris: Gallimard, 1994.
- Foucault, Michel (1975). Surveiller et punir: Naissance de la prison. Paris: Gallimard.
- Foucault, Michel (1979). “On governmentality.” In Ideology and Consciousness, 6, 5–21.
- Foucault, Michel, and Colin Gordon (1980). Power/knowledge: Selected interviews and other writings, 1972–1977. New York: Pantheon. <http://uwf.edu/dearle/foucault.pdf>.

- Foucault, Michel (1984). "What is enlightenment? (Qu'est-ce que les lumières?)." In The Foucault reader, edited by Paul Rabinow, pp. 32–50. New York: Pantheon Books.
<http://foucault.info/documents/whatisenlightenment/foucault.whatisenlightenment.en.html>.
- Foucault, Michel (1991). "Governmentality." In The Foucault effect: Studies in governmentality, edited by Graham Burchell, Colin Gordon, and Peter Miller. Chapter 4, pp. 87–104. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. <https://laelectrodomestica.files.wordpress.com/2014/07/the-foucault-effect-studies-in-governmentality.pdf>.
- Foucault, Michel (1994a). Dits et écrits III, 1976 – 1979. Paris: Gallimard.
https://monoskop.org/images/3/3b/Foucault\_Michel\_Dits\_et\_ecrits\_3\_1976-1979.pdf.
- Foucault, Michel (1994b). Dits et écrits IV, 1980 – 1988. Paris: Gallimard.
https://monoskop.org/images/5/58/Foucault\_Michel\_Dits\_et\_ecrits\_4\_1980-1988.pdf.
- Fox, Warwick (1992). "Intellectual origins of the 'depth' theme in the philosophy of Arne Naess." In Trumpeter, 9 (2), trumpeter.athabasca.ca/archives/content/v9.2/fox2.html.
- Fox, Warwick (2000). Ethics and the built environment. London: Routledge.
- Fraenkel, Carlos F. (2015). Teaching Plato in Palestine: Philosophy in a divided world. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Fraenkel, Ernst (1941). The dual state: A contribution to the theory of dictatorship. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Fraiman, Susan (2003). Cool men and the second sex. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Frank, Jerome D. (1961). Persuasion and healing: A comparative study of psychotherapy. Baltimore, MD: John Hopkins University Press.
- Frank, Robert H. (2011). The Darwin economy: Liberty, competition, and the common good. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Frank, Robert H. (2016). Success and luck: Good fortune and the myth of meritocracy. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Frank, Roberta (1984). "Viking atrocity and Skaldic verse: The Rite of the Blood-Eagle." In The English Historical Review, XCIX (CCCXCI), 332–43. doi: 10.1093/ehr/XCIX.CCCXCI.332.
<http://ehr.oxfordjournals.org/content/XCIX/CCCXCI/332.short>.
- Frank, Thomas (2004). What's the matter with Kansas? How conservatives won the heart of America. New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Frankl, Viktor Emil (1946). Ärztliche Seelsorge. Grundlagen der Logotherapie und Existenzanalyse. Wien: Deuticke.
- Frankl, Viktor Emil (1946/1959). Man's search for meaning: An introduction to logotherapy. Translated by Ilse Lasch, and Gordon W. Allport. New York: Beacon Press. Earlier title From Death-Camp to Existentialism, 1959. German original Ein Psycholog erlebt das Konzentrationslager, Wien, Austria: Verlag für Jugend und Volk, 1946.
- Frase, Peter (2016). Four futures: Life after capitalism. London: Verso.
- Fraser, Nancy (2014). "Can society be commodities all the way down? Post-Polanyian reflections on capitalist crisis." In Economy and Society, 43 (4), 541–58. doi: 10.1080/03085147.2014.898822.
- Frednes, Trond Einar, and Jørn Lier Horst (2015). Badboy. Oslo: Kagge.
- Freeman, Charles P. (2003a). "Constantine and the coming of the Christian state." In The closing of the Western mind: The rise of faith and the fall of reason. Chapter 11, pp. 154–77. New York: Knopf.
- Freeman, Charles P. (2003b). The closing of the Western mind: The rise of faith and the fall of reason. New York: Knopf.
- Freire, Paulo (1968/1970). Pedagogy of the oppressed. Translated by Myra Bergman Ramos. New York: Herder and Herder. Portuguese original Pedagogia do oprimido, 1968.
- Freire, Paulo (1968/1973). Education for critical consciousness. Translated by Myra Bergman Ramos. New York: Seabury Press. Portuguese original Educação e conscientização: Extencionismo rural, Cuernavaca, México: CIDOC/Cuaderno, no. 25, 1968.
- French, Jeffrey A., Kevin B. Smith, John R. Alford, Adam Guck, Andrew K. Birnie, and John R. Hibbing (2014). "Cortisol and politics: Variance in voting behavior is predicted by baseline cortisol levels." In Physiology and Behavior, 133, 61–67. doi: 10.1016/j.physbeh.2014.05.004.
- Freud, Sigmund (1939/2010). Der Mann Moses und die monotheistische Religion: Schriften über die Religion. Stuttgart, Germany: Philipp Reclam.
- Freyd, Jennifer J., and Pamela Birrell (2013). Blind to betrayal: Why we fool ourselves we aren't being fooled. Hoboken, NJ: Wiley.

- Freyre, Gilberto (1933). Casa-grande e senzala: Formacao da familia brasileira sob o regimen de economia patriarcal. Rio de Janeiro: Maria and Schmidt.
- Fried, Morton H. (1967). The evolution of political society: An essay in political anthropology. New York: Random House.
- Fried, Rebecca A. (2015). "No Irish need deny: Evidence for the historicity of NINA restrictions in advertisements and signs." In Journal of Social History. doi: 10.1093/jsh/shv066. <http://jsh.oxfordjournals.org/content/early/2015/07/03/jsh.shv066.abstract>.
- Frijda, Nico H. (2008). "The psychologists' point of view." In Handbook of Emotions, edited by Jeannette M. Haviland-Jones, Lisa F. Barrett, and Michael Lewis, pp. 68–87. New York: Guilford Press.
- Fromm, Erich (1941). Escape from freedom. New York: Rinehart.
- Fromm, Erich (1963). War within man: A psychological enquiry into the roots of destructiveness. Philadelphia: American Friends Service Committee. <http://eric.ed.gov/?id=ED073981>.
- Fromm, Erich (1973). The anatomy of human destructiveness. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston.
- Fromm, Erich (1976). To have or to be? New York: Harper and Row.
- Fromm, M. Gerard (Ed.) (2011). Lost in transmission: Studies of trauma across generations. London: Karnac.
- Frost, Tore (2003). "Hva mener vi med respekt for menneskeverdet?" In Samordningsrådet (SOR) rapport Nr. 3, pp. 6–14. Oslo: Samordningsrådet (SOR). www.samordningsradet.no/sitefiles/4055/Arkiv\_Rapport/Fullversjoner/2003/Fullversjon\_\_3\_03.pdf.
- Fry, Douglas P. (2007). Beyond war: The human potential for peace. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Fry, Douglas P. (2009). "Anthropological insights for creating nonwarring social systems." In Journal of Aggression, Conflict and Peace Research, 1 (2), 4–15. doi: 10.1108/17596599200900008.
- Fry, Douglas P. (Ed.) (2013). War, peace, and human nature: The convergence of evolutionary and cultural views. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Fröhling, Ulla (2012). Unser geraubtes Leben: Die wahre Geschichte von Liebe und Hoffnung in einer grausamen Sekte. Köln, Germany: Bastei Lübbe.
- Fuchs, Eberhard, and Gabriele Flügge (2014). "Adult neuroplasticity: More than 40 years of research." In Neural Plasticity, 2014, 10. doi: 10.1155/2014/541870. downloads.hindawi.com/journals/np/2014/541870.pdf.
- Fuglestad, Ingrid (2005). "Contact and communication in Northern Europe 10 200 – 9 000 / 8 500 BP – A phenomenological approach to the connection between technology, skill and landscape." In Pioneer settlements and colonization processes in the Barents region, Vuollerim papers in hunter-gatherer archaeology, volume 1, Vuollerim 6000 år, edited by Helena Knutsson, pp. 79–96. Vuollerim, Sweden: Vuollerim Museum Press.
- Fuglestad, Ingrid (2008). "How many totemic clans existed in Eastern Norway during the Late Mesolithic?" In Facets of archeology. Essays in honour of Lotte Hedeager on her 60th birthday, edited by Konstantinos Chilidis, Julie Lund, and Christopher Prescott, pp. 351–66. Oslo: Unipub.
- Fuglestad, Ingrid (2010). Why did it take so long? The pioneer condition on peninsular Scandinavia and the termination of the 'Palaeolithic way' in Europe. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Archaeology, Conservation and History.
- Fujiwara, Takeo, and Ichiro Kawachi (2008). "Social capital and health: A study of adult twins in the U.S." In American Journal of Preventive Health, 35 (2), 139–44.
- Fulbeck, William (1602). The second part of the Parallele, or conference of the ciuill law, the canon law, and the common law of this realme of England: Wherein the agreement and disagreement of these three lawes touching diuers matters not before conferred, is at large debated and discussed. Whereunto is annexed a table ... Handled in seauen dialogues. London: Printed by Adam Islip for Thomas Wight.
- Fuller, R. Buckminster (1981). Critical path. New York: St. Martin's Press.
- Fuller, Robert W. (2003). Somebodies and nobodies: Overcoming the abuse of rank. Gabriola, BC: New Society Publishers.
- Fuller, Robert W., and Pamela A. Gerloff (2008). Dignity for all: How to create a world without rankism. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler.
- Føllesdal, Dagfinn (1988). "Husserl on evidence and justification." In Edmund Husserl and the phenomenological tradition: Essays in phenomenology, edited by Robert Sokolowski, pp. 107–29.

- Washington, DC: Catholic University of America Press. Proceedings of a lecture series in the Fall of 1985, in Studies in Philosophy and the History of Philosophy, Vol. 18.
- Føllesdal, Dagfinn, and Michael Depaul (2015). "The role of arguments in philosophy." In Journal of Philosophical Research, 40 (9999), 17–23. doi: 10.5840/jpr201540Supplement5.
- Gabel, Peter Joseph (2000). The bank teller and other essays on the politics of meaning. San Francisco: Acada.
- Gadamer, Hans-Georg (1960/1989). Truth and method. Translated by Joel Weinsheimer, and Donald G. Marshall. London: Sheed and Ward. German original Wahrheit und Methode: Grundzüge einer philosophischen Hermeneutik, Tübingen, Germany: Mohr Siebeck, 1960.
- Gaertner, Samuel L., and John F. Dovidio (1999). Reducing intergroup bias: The common ingroup identity model. Hove: Psychology Press.
- Gaertner, Samuel L., John F. Dovidio, Mary C. Rust, Jason A. Nier, Brenda S. Banker, Christine M. Ward, Gary R. Mottola, and Missy Houlette (1999). "Reducing intergroup bias: Elements of intergroup cooperation." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 76 (3), 388–402. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.76.3.388.
- Gaertner, Samuel L., John F. Dovidio, Brenda S. Banker, Missy Houlette, Kelly M. Johnson, Elizabeth A. McGlynn, and Donelson R. Forsyth (2000). "Reducing intergroup conflict: From superordinate goals to decategorization, recategorization, and mutual differentiation." In Group Dynamics: Theory, Research, and Practice, 4 (1), 98–114. doi: 10.1037/1089-2699.4.1.98.
- Gaertner, Samuel L., Betty A. Bachman, John F. Dovidio, and Brenda S. Banker (2012). "Corporate mergers and stepfamily marriages: Identity, harmony, and commitment." In Social identity processes in organizational contexts, edited by Michael A. Hogg, and Deborah J. Terry. New edition, pp. 265–82. New York: Psychology Press.
- Gallese, Vittorio (2003). "The roots of empathy: The shared manifold hypothesis and the neural basis of intersubjectivity." In Psychopathology, 36 (4), 171–80. doi: 10.1159/000072786.
- Galli, Thomas (2016). Die Schwere der Schuld: Ein Gefängnisdirektor erzählt Berlin: Das Neue Berlin.
- Galtung, Johan, Carl G. Jacobsen, Kai Frithjof Brand-Jacobsen, and Finn Tschudi (2000). Searching for peace: The road to TRANSCEND. London: Pluto Press in association with TRANSCEND.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1969). "Violence, peace, and peace research." In Journal of Peace Research, 3, 167–91. www.jstor.org/stable/422690.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1971). "A structural theory of imperialism." In Journal of Peace Research, 8 (2), 81–117. doi: 10.1177/002234337100800201. <http://bev.berkeley.edu/ipe/readings/galtung.pdf>.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1976). Social position and social behavior: Center-periphery concepts and theories. Oslo, Dubrovnik: University of Oslo, Inter-University Centre, Dubrovnik, Croatia. www.transcend.org/galtung/papers/Social%20Position%20and%20Social%20Behavior%20-%20Center-Periphery%20Concepts%20and%20Theories.pdf.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1977). Methodology and ideology: Theory and methods of social research. Essays in methodology, volume 1. Copenhagen: Christian Ejlers.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1978). Peace and social structure. Essays in peace research, volume 3. Copenhagen: Christian Ejlers.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1990). "Cultural violence." In Journal of Peace Research, 27 (3), 291–305. www2.kobe-u.ac.jp/~alexroni/IPD%202015%20readings/IPD%202015\_2/Galtung,%20Violence%20and%20Gender%20\(Confortini\).pdf.pdf).
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (1996). Peace by peaceful means. Oslo and London: International Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO) and Sage.
- Galtung, Johan Vincent (2012). Peace economics: From a killing to a living economy. Oslo: Kolofon.
- Gandhi, Arun Manilal (2003). Legacy of love: My education on the path of nonviolence. El Sobrante, CA: North Bay Book.
- Garber, James, F. Kent Reilly, and George E. Lankford (Eds.) (2011). Visualizing the sacred: Cosmic visions, regionalism, and the art of the Mississippian world. Austin, TX: University of Texas Press.
- Garland, Robert (2010 ). Hannibal London: Bristol Classical Press.
- Gawronski, Bertram (2004). "Theory-based bias correction in dispositional inference: The fundamental attribution error is dead, long live the correspondence bias." In European Review of Social Psychology, 15 (1), 183–217. doi: 10.1080/10463280440000026.

- Gawronski, Bertram, and Galen V. Bodenhausen (2006). "Associative and propositional processes in evaluation: An integrative review of implicit and explicit attitude change." In Psychological Bulletin, 132 (5), 692–731. doi: 10.1037/0033-2909.132.5.692.
- Gazzaniga, Michael S. (2011). Who's in charge? Free will and the science of the brain. New York: Ecco.
- Gbadegesin, Segun (1991). African philosophy: Traditional Yoruba philosophy and contemporary African realities. New York: Peter Lang.
- Geertz, Clifford (1983). Local knowledge: Further essays in interpretive anthropology. New York: Basic Books.
- Gellately, Robert (2007). Lenin, Stalin, and Hitler: The age of social catastrophe. New York: Knopf.
- George, Henry (1879). Progress and poverty: An inquiry into the cause of industrial depressions and of increase of want with increase of wealth: The remedy. New York: D. Appleton and Company. www.henrygeorge.org/pdfs/PandP\_Drake.pdf.
- George, Susan (2015). Shadow sovereigns: How global corporations are seizing power. Cambridge: Polity press.
- Gepts, Paul L., Thomas R. Famula, Robert L. Bettinger, Stephen B. Brush, Ardesir B. Damania, Patrick E. McGuire, and Calvin O. Qualset (Eds.) (2012). Biodiversity in agriculture: Domestication, evolution, and sustainability. New York: Cambridge University Press.
- Gerbault, Pascale, Anke Liebert, Yuval Itan, Adam Powell, Mathias Currat, Joachim Burger, Dallas M. Swallow, and Mark G. Thomas (2011). "Evolution of lactase persistence: an example of human niche construction." In Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society B: Biological Sciences, 366 (1566), 863–77. doi: 10.1098/rstb.2010.0268. <http://rstb.royalsocietypublishing.org/content/royptb/366/1566/863.full.pdf>.
- Gergen, Kenneth J., Aydan Gulrerce, Andrew Lock, and Girishwar Misra (1996). "Psychological science in cultural context." In American Psychologist, 51 (5, May), 496–503. doi: 10.1037//0003-066X.51.5.496.
- Gergen, Kenneth J. (2010). "The acculturated brain." In Theory and Psychology, 20 (6), 1–20. doi: 10.1177/0959354310370906. www.swarthmore.edu/sites/default/files/assets/documents/kenneth-gergen/Acculturated\_Brain.pdf.
- Gerritzen, Daniel (2016). Erstkontakt: Warum wir uns auf Außerirdische vorbereiten müssen. Stuttgart, Germany: Kosmos.
- Gessen, Masha (2013). The man without a face: The unlikely rise of Vladimir Putin. London: Granta.
- Giacaman, Rita, Niveen M. E. Abu-Rmeileh, Abdullatif Hussein, Hana Sasb, and William Boyce (2007). "Humiliation: The invisible trauma of war for Palestinian youth." In Public Health, 121 (8), 563–71. doi: 10.1016/j.puhe.2006.10.021.
- Gibson, Rachel L. (2007). Toxic baby bottles: Scientific study finds leaching chemicals in clear plastic baby bottles. Los Angeles: Environment California Research and Policy Center. http://environmentcaliforniacenter.org/sites/environment/files/reports/Toxic-Baby-Bottles\_0.pdf.
- Giddens, Anthony (1984). The constitution of society: Outline of the theory of structuration. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Giddens, Anthony (1990). The consequences of modernity. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Giddens, Anthony (1991). Modernity and self-identity: Self and society in the late modern age. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Gilad, Ben, and Markus Götz Junginger (2010). Mit Business Wargaming den Markt erobern: Strategische Kriegsführung für Manager. München, Germany: Redline Verlag.
- Gilbert, Daniel T. (1998). "Speeding with Ned: A personal view of the correspondence bias." In Attribution and social interaction: The legacy of Edward E. Jones, edited by John M. Darley, and Joel Cooper. Chapter 1, pp. 5–36. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association. www.wjh.harvard.edu/~dtg/SpeedingwithNed.pdf.
- Gilbert, Daniel T. (2006). Stumbling on happiness. New York: Knopf.
- Gilbert, Gustave M. (1947). Nuremberg diary. New York: Farrar, Straus.
- Gilbert, Paul (2001). "Evolutionary approaches to psychopathology: The role of natural defences." In Australian and New Zealand Journal of Psychiatry, 35 (1), 17–27.
- Gill, Richardson Benedict (2000). The great Maya droughts: Water, life, and death. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press.
- Gilligan, James (2000). "Punishment and violence: Is the criminal law based on one huge mistake." In Social Research, 67 (3), 745–72. www.jstor.org/stable/40971409.

- Gilligan, James (2003). "Shame, guilt, and violence." In Social Research, 70 (4, Winter), 1149–80. www.jstor.org/stable/40971965.
- Gilpin, Robert (1981). War and change in world politics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Gilpin, Robert (1988). "The theory of hegemonic war." In The Journal of Interdisciplinary History, 18 (4, Spring, The Origin and Prevention of Major Wars), 591–613. doi: 10.2307/204816. www.jstor.org/stable/204816.
- Ginges, Jeremy, Scott Atran, Douglas Medin, and Khalil Shikaki (2007). "Sacred bounds on rational resolution of violent political conflict." In Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS) of the United States of America, 104 (18), 7357–60. doi: 10.1073/pnas.0701768104.
- Ginges, Jeremy, and Scott Atran (2008). "Humiliation and the inertia effect: Implications for understanding violence and compromise in intractable intergroup conflicts." In Journal of Cognition and Culture, 8 (3), 281–94. doi: 10.1163/156853708X358182. www.artisresearch.com/articles/Atran\_Humiliation\_and\_the\_Inertia\_Effect.pdf.
- Ginsberg, Benjamin (2011). The fall of the faculty: The rise of the all-administrative university and why it matters. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Giroux, Henry A., and Paulo Freire (Foreword) (Eds.) (2001). Theory and resistance in education: Towards a pedagogy for the opposition. Westport, CT: Bergin and Garvey.
- Giroux, Henry A., and Susan Searls Giroux (2004). Take back higher education: Race, youth, and the crisis of democracy in the post-civil rights era. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Giroux, Henry A. (2010). Hearts of darkness: Torturing children in the war on terror. Boulder, CO: Paradigm.
- Giroux, Henry A. (2011). Zombie politics and culture in the age of casino capitalism. New York: Peter Lang.
- Giroux, Henry A. (2012). Disposable youth, racialized memories, and the culture of cruelty. New York: Routledge.
- Giroux, Henry A. (2013). America's education deficit and the war on youth. New York: Monthly Review Press.
- Giroux, Henry A. (2014a). The violence of organized forgetting: Thinking beyond America's disimagination machine. San Francisco: City Lights.
- Giroux, Henry A. (2014b). Neoliberalism's war on higher education. Chicago: Haymarket.
- Gladwell, Malcolm (2000). The tipping point: How little things can make a big difference. Boston: Little, Brown and Company.
- Gladwell, Malcolm (2005). Blink: The power of thinking without thinking. New York: Little, Brown and Company.
- Glaser, Charles L. (1997). "The security dilemma revisited." In World Politics, 50 (1, October, Fiftieth Anniversary Special Issue), 171–201. <https://iscs.elliott.gwu.edu/sites/iscs.elliott.gwu.edu/files/downloads/cgdocs/SecurityDilemma-WP-1997.pdf>.
- Gleditsch, Nils Petter (2012). "Aldri for sent å være pessimist?" In I strid for fred: Fredskontoret 1962-1972 – idealistisk fredsarbeid og bred grasrotaktivitet, edited by Sverre Røed-Larsen, and Anne Margrete Hjort-Larsen, pp. 179–82. Oslo: Kolofon.
- Glimcher, Paul W., and Ernst Fehr (Eds.) (2014). Neuroeconomics: Decision making and the brain. Amsterdam: Elsevier.
- Gobodo-Madikizela, Pumla (2008). "Trauma, forgiveness and the witnessing dance: Making public spaces intimate." In Journal of Analytical Psychology, 53 (2), 169–88. doi: 10.1111/j.1468-5922.2008.00715.x.
- Goetz, Rainald (2012). Johann Holtrop: Abriss der Gesellschaft. Berlin: Suhrkamp.
- Goetzmann, William N. (2016). Money changes everything: How finance made civilization possible. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Goffman, Erving (1955). "On face-work: An analysis of ritual elements of social interaction." In Psychiatry: Journal for the Study of Interpersonal Processes, 18 (3), 213–31. doi: 10.1521/00332747.1955.11023008.
- Goffman, Erving (1967). Interaction ritual: Essays on face-to-face behavior. New York: Doubleday. <http://web.stanford.edu/~eckert/PDF/GoffmanFace1967.pdf>.
- Goffman, Erving (1974). Frame analysis: An essay on the organization of experience. New York: Harper and Row.
- Goldhahn, Joakim, Ingrid Fuglestad, and Andrew Jones (Eds.) (2010). Changing pictures: Rock art traditions and visions in northern Europe. Oxford: Oxbow Books.

- Goldman, Jennifer S., and Peter T. Coleman (2005a). How humiliation fuels intractable conflict: The effects of emotional roles on recall and reactions to conflictual encounters. New York: International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution, Teachers College, Columbia University.
- Goldman, Jennifer S., and Peter T. Coleman (2005b). A theoretical understanding of how emotions fuel intractable conflict: The case of humiliation. New York: International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution, Teachers College, Columbia University.
- Goldstein, Joshua S. (2001). War and gender: How gender shapes the war systems and vice versa. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Goldstein, Joshua S. (2011). Winning the war on war: The decline of armed conflict worldwide. New York: Dutton/Plume.
- Goldstein, Joshua S., and Jon C. Pevehouse (2016). International relations. 11th edition. New York: Pearson Longman.
- Goldstone, Jack A., Ted Robert Gurr, and Farrokh Moshiri (1991). Revolutions of the late twentieth century. Boulder, CO: Westview Press.
- Goldstone, Jack A., and Jay Ulfelder (2005). "How to construct stable democracies." In Washington Quarterly, 28 (1), 9–20. doi: 10.1162/0163660042518198.
- Goldstone, Jack A., Robert H. Bates, David L. Epstein, Ted Robert Gurr, Michael B. Lustik, Monty G. Marshall, Jay Ulfelder, and Mark Woodward (2010). "A global model for forecasting political instability." In American Journal of Political Science, 54 (1, January), 190–208. www.systemicpeace.org/Global%20Model%20for%20Forecasting%20AJPS%202010.pdf.
- Goodale, Mark, and Sally Engle Merry (Eds.) (2007). The practice of human rights: Tracking law between the global and the local. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Goodwin, Jeff, and James M. Jasper (Eds.) (2004). Rethinking social movements: Structure, meaning, and emotion. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Goodwin, Neva Rockefeller, Jonathan M. Harris, Julie A. Nelson, Brian Roach, and Mariano Torras (2014a). Microeconomics in context. 3rd edition. Armonk, NY: Sharpe.
- Goodwin, Neva Rockefeller, Jonathan M. Harris, Julie A. Nelson, Brian Roach, and Mariano Torras (2014b). Macroeconomics in context. 2nd edition. Armonk, NY: Sharpe.
- Gorbačev, Mikhail Sergeyevich (2014/2016). The new Russia. Cambridge: Polity. Russian original Posle Kremlya, Moskva: Ves mir, 2014.
- Gordon, Lewis R. (2008). An introduction to Africana philosophy. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Gore, Al (2013). The future: Six drivers of global change. New York: Random House.
- Gornitzka, Åse, and Liv Langfeldt (Eds.) (2008). Borderless knowledge: Understanding the 'new' internationalisation of research and higher education in Norway. Dordrecht, The Netherlands: Springer.
- Gortemaker, Heike B. (2010). Eva Braun. Leben mit Hitler. München, Germany: C.H. Beck.
- Gorz, André (1964). Stratégie ouvrière et néocapitalisme. Paris: Éditions du Seuil.
- Gorz, André (1967). A strategy for labor: A radical proposal. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Gottlieb, Lynn (1995). She who dwells within: A feminist vision of a renewed Judaism. New York: HarperOne.
- Gottman, John Mordechai, Lynn Fainsilber Katz, and Carole Hooven (1997). Meta-emotion: How families communicate emotionally. Mahwah, NJ: Erlbaum.
- Gould, Kenneth A., Allan Schnaiberg, and Adam S. Weinberg (1996). Local environmental struggles: Citizen activism in the treadmill of production. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Gowdy, John, and Irmi Seidl (2004). "Economic man and selfish genes: The implications of group selection for economic valuation and policy." In The Journal of Socio-Economics, 33 (3), 343–58. doi: 10.1016/j.socec.2003.12.026.
- Gowdy, John M., Denise E. Dollimore, David Sloan Wilson, and Ulrich Witt (2013). "Economic cosmology and the evolutionary challenge." In Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization, 90, S11–S20. doi: 10.1016/j.jebo.2012.12.009.
- Graeber, David (2001). Toward an anthropological theory of value: The false coin of our own dreams. New York: Palgrave.
- Graeber, David (2011). Debt: The first 5,000 years. New York: Melville House. https://libcom.org/files/Debt\_The\_First\_5\_000\_Years.pdf.
- Granovetter, Mark S. (1973). "The strength of weak ties." In American Journal of Sociology, 78 (May), 1360–80. www.immorlica.com/socNet/granstrengthweakties.pdf.

- Granovetter, Mark S. (2002). "A theoretical agenda for economic sociology." In The new economic sociology: Developments in an emerging field, edited by Mauro Guillen, Randall Collins, Paula England, and Marshall Meyer. Chapter 2, pp. 35–60. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Gray, John (2002). False dawn: The delusions of global capitalism. London: Granta Books.
- Grear, Anna (2012). "Should trees have standing: 40 years on?" In Journal of Human Rights and the Environment, 3 (0), 1. doi: 10.4337/jhre.2012.02.00. www.elgaronline.com/view/journals/jhre/3-0/jhre.2012.02.00.xml.
- Greene, Joshua David (2013). Moral tribes: Emotion, reason, and the gap between us and them. New York: Penguin.
- Greene, Michael B. (2006). "Bullying in schools: A plea for measure of human rights." In Journal of Social Issues, 62 (1), 63–79. doi: 10.1111/j.1540-4560.2006.00439.x.
- Greenfeld, Liah (1992). Nationalism: Five roads to modernity. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Greenfeld, Liah (1996). "Nationalism and modernity." In Social Research, 63 (1), 3–40.
- Greenfeld, Liah (2006). Nationalism and the mind: Essays on modern culture. Oxford: Oneworld.
- Greenleaf, Robert K. (2002). Servant leadership: A journey into the nature of legitimate power and greatness. 25th anniversary edition. New York: Paulist Press.
- Gress, David (1985). Peace and survival: West Germany, the Peace Movement, and European security. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Groos, Thomas, and Nora Jehles (2015). Der Einfluss von Armut auf die Entwicklung von Kindern: Werkstattbericht. Bochum, Gütersloh, Germany: Ruhr-Universität Bochum, Fakultät für Sozialwissenschaft, Zentrum für interdisziplinäre Regionalforschung (ZEFIR), Arbeitspapiere wissenschaftliche Begleitforschung „Kein Kind zurücklassen!“, Bertelsmann Stiftung. www.bertelsmann-stiftung.de/fileadmin/files/BSt/Publikationen/GrauePublikationen/03\_Werkstattbericht\_Einfluss\_von\_Armut.pdf.
- Grossman, Dave (1995). On killing: The psychological cost of learning to kill in war and society. Boston: Little, Brown and Company.
- Grossman, Henryk (2006). "The beginnings of capitalism and the new mass morality." In Journal of Classical Sociology, 6 (2), 201–13. doi: 10.1177/1468795x06064861. <http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1177/1468795X06064861>.
- Grothe, Mardy (2017). Metaphors be with you: An A to Z dictionary of history's greatest metaphorical quotations. New York: HarperCollins.
- Grünewald, Stephan (2013). Die erschöpfte Gesellschaft: Warum Deutschland neu träumen muss. Frankfurt am Main: Campus.
- Grävingholt, Jörn, Stefan Gänzle, and Sebastian Ziaja (2009). Policy brief: Concepts of peacebuilding and state building – How compatible are they? Bonn: German Development Institute. www.die-gdi.de/uploads/media/Peacebuilding\_and\_Statebuilding\_\_Draft\_11-03-09\_\_01.pdf.
- Grønnerød, Cato, Pål Grøndahl, and Ulf Stridbeck (2016). "Forensic psychiatric experts under the legal microscope." In Legal and Criminological Psychology, 21 (1), 15–24. doi: 10.1111/lcrp.12037.
- Guala, Francesco (2012). "Reciprocity: Weak or strong? What punishment experiments do (and do not) demonstrate." In Behavioral and Brain Sciences, 35 (1, February), 1–15. doi: 10.1017/S0140525X11000069.
- Guha, Ranajit, and Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak (Eds.) (1988). Selected subaltern studies. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Gunning, Jeroen, and Richard Jackson (2011). "What's so 'religious' about 'religious terrorism'?" In Critical Studies on Terrorism, 4 (3), 369–88. doi: 10.1080/17539153.2011.623405.
- Guo, Jian, Song Yongyi, and Yuan Zhou (2006). Historical dictionary of the Chinese Cultural Revolution. Lanham, MD: Scarecrow Press.
- Gurr, Ted Robert (1970). Why men rebel. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Gurr, Ted Robert (1993). "Why minorities rebel: A global analysis of communal mobilization and conflict since 1945." In International Political Science Review, 14 (2), 161–201.
- Gurr, Ted Robert (2000). "Ethnic warfare on the wane." In Foreign Affairs, 79 (3), 52–64. www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/56045/ted-robert-gurr/ethnic-warfare-on-the-wane.
- Gyekye, Kwame (2004). Beyond cultures: Perceiving a common humanity. Washington, DC: Council for Research in Values and Philosophy.
- Göle, Nilüfer (2013). Islam and public controversy in Europe. Farnham: Ashgate.

- Göring, Hermann (1943). "Göring's Speech of January 30, 1943." In Bulletin of International News, 20 (3, February 6), 100–04. www.jstor.org/stable/25643383, <http://research.calvin.edu/german-propaganda-archive/goeb36.htm>, German original: <https://youtu.be/FjDDKoql6sw>.
- Haavelsrud, Magnus (2015). "The academy, development, and modernity's 'other'." In International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning, 7 (2, Development Education in the Global South), 46–60. <http://ingentaconnect.com/content/ioep/ijdeg1/2015/00000007/00000002/art00005>.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1962). Strukturwandel der Öffentlichkeit: Untersuchungen zu einer Kategorie der bürgerlichen Gesellschaft. Neuwied, Germany: Luchterhand.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1968/1972). Knowledge and human interests. Translated by Jeremy J. Shapiro. Boston: Beacon Press, German original Erkenntnis und Interesse, Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp, 1968.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1973). Legitimationsprobleme im Spätkapitalismus. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1981). Theorie des kommunikativen Handelns (Band I: Handlungsrationalität und gesellschaftliche Rationalisierung, Band II: Zur Kritik der funktionalistischen Vernunft). Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1983). "Die Verschlingung von Mythos und Aufklärung – Bemerkungen zur 'Dialektik der Aufklärung' – nach einer erneuten Lektüre." In Mythos und Moderne: Begriff und Bild einer Rekonstruktion, edited by Karl-Heinz Bohrer. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1985–1987). The theory of communicative action (Volume 1: Reason and the rationalization of society, 1985, Volume 2: Lifeworld and system: A critique of functionalist reason, 1987). Boston: Beacon Press.
- Habermas, Jürgen (1989). The structural transformation of the public sphere: An inquiry into a category of bourgeois society. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Habermas, Jürgen, and Peter Dews (1992). Autonomy and solidarity: Interviews with Jürgen Habermas. London: Verso.
- Hacker, Andrew, and Claudia Dreifus (2010). Higher education? How colleges are wasting our money and failing our kids – and what we can do about it. New York: Times Books.
- Hafez, Mohammed M. (2003). Why Muslims rebel: Repression and resistance in the Islamic world. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner.
- Hafez, Mohammed M. (2007a). "Martyrdom mythology in Iraq: How jihadists frame suicide terrorism in videos and biographies." In Terrorism and Political Violence, 19 (1), 95–115. doi: 10.1080/09546550601054873.
- Hafez, Mohammed M. (2007b). Suicide bombers in Iraq: The strategy and ideology of martyrdom. Washington, DC: United States Institute of Peace Press.
- Haffner, Sebastian (1978). Anmerkungen zu Hitler. München, Germany: Kindler.
- Haffner, Sebastian (2000). Geschichte eines Deutschen: Die Erinnerungen 1914-1933. Stuttgart, Germany: Deutsche Verlags-Anstalt.
- Haidt, Jonathan (2012). The righteous mind: Why good people are divided by politics and religion. London: Allen Lane.
- Haldane, Andrew G. (Ed.) (2004). Fixing financial crises in the twenty-first century. London: Routledge.
- Haldane, John Burdon Sanderson (1932). The causes of evolution. London: Longmans, Green and Co.
- Hall, Todd H., and Andrew A. G. Ross (2015). "Affective politics after 9/11." In International Organization, 69 (04), 847–79. doi: 10.1017/S0020818315000144.
- Hamann, Brigitte (1996). Hitlers Wien: Lehrjahre eines Diktators. München, Germany: Piper.
- Hamdan, Gamal (2014). Shaksiyat Misr [The character of Egypt: A study of the uniqueness of the place]. New edition. Cairo: National Library and Archives.
- Hameiri, Boaz, Roni Porat, Daniel Bar-Tal, Atara Bieler, and Eran Halperin (2014). "Paradoxical thinking as a new avenue of intervention to promote peace." In Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States of America, 111 (30), 10996–1001. doi: 10.1073/pnas.1407055111. www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC4121792/.
- Hamid, Mohsin (2007). The reluctant fundamentalist. Karachi: Oxford University Press.
- Hamid, Mohsin (2014). Discontent and its civilizations: Dispatches from Lahore, New York, and London. London: Hamish Hamilton.
- Hamilton, William D. (1963). "The evolution of altruistic behavior." In The American Naturalist, 97 (896), 354–56. doi: 10.1086/497114. www.journals.uchicago.edu/doi/abs/10.1086/497114.

- Hamilton, William D. (1964a). "The genetical evolution of social behaviour. I." In Journal of Theoretical Biology, 7 (1), 1–16. doi: 10.1016/0022-5193(64)90038-4. www.uvm.edu/pdodds/files/papers/others/1964/hamilton1964a.pdf.
- Hamilton, William D. (1964b). "The genetical evolution of social behaviour. II." In Journal of Theoretical Biology, 7 (1), 17–52. doi: 10.1016/0022-5193(64)90039-6. www.uvm.edu/pdodds/files/papers/others/1964/hamilton1964b.pdf.
- Hannah, Margaret (2015). Humanising healthcare: Patterns of hope for a system under strain. Axminster, Devon: Triarchy Press.
- Hansen, David (2012). Radical rhetoric – moderate behavior: Perceptions of Islam, shari'a, and the radical dimension in urban Pakistan. Trondheim, Norway: Tapir.
- Hansen, James (2009). Storms of my grandchildren: The truth about the coming climate catastrophe and our last chance to save humanity. New York: Bloomsbury.
- Hansen, Lene (2000). "The little mermaid's silent security dilemma and the absence of gender in the Copenhagen school." In Millennium – Journal of International Studies, 29 (2), 285–306. mil.sagepub.com/cgi/reprint/29/2/285.pdf.
- Hansen, Mette Halskov, and Rune Svarverud (Eds.) (2010). iChina: The rise of the individual in modern Chinese society. Copenhagen: NIAS Press.
- Harari, Yuval Noah (2014). Sapiens: A brief history of humankind. London: Harvill Secker. First published in Hebrew in Tel Aviv by Kinneret Zmora-Bitan Dvir.
- Harari, Yuval Noah (2015/2016). Homo deus: A brief history of tomorrow. London: Harville Secker. Hebrew original The History of Tomorrow, Tel Aviv: Kinneret Zmora-Bitan Dvir.
- Haraway, Donna J. (2007). When species meet. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press.
- Hardin, Garrett James (1968). "The tragedy of the commons." In Science, 162 (3859), 1243–48. <http://cecs.wright.edu/~swang/cs409/Hardin.pdf>.
- Hardin, Garrett James (1998). "Extensions of 'The Tragedy of the Commons'." In Science, 280 (5364), 682–83. doi: 10.1126/science.280.5364.682. <http://web.mit.edu/12.000/www/m2017/pdfs/extensions.pdf>.
- Hardin, Garrett James (2007). "Tragedy of the commons." In The concise encyclopedia of economics. 2nd edition. Indianapolis, IN: Library of Economics and Liberty. www.econlib.org/library/Enc/TragedyoftheCommons.html.
- Hardin, Russell (1995). One for all: The logic of group conflict. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Hardisty, Jean V. (1999). Mobilizing resentment: Conservative resurgence from the John Birch Society to the promise keepers. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Hare, Robert D. (2003). Hare psychopathy checklist-revised (PCL-R). Multi-Health Systems Inc.
- Harner, Michael J. (1970). "Population Pressure and the Social Evolution of Agriculturalists." In Southwestern Journal of Anthropology, 26 (1), 67–86. doi: 10.1086/soutjanth.26.1.3629271.
- Harré, Romano, and Paul F. Secord (1972). The explanation of social behaviour. Oxford: Blackwell.
- Harrigan, Jane, and Hamed El-Said (2009). Aid and power in the Arab World: World Bank and IMF policy-based lending in the Middle East and North Africa. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Harrigan, Jane, and Hamed El-Said (2010). Globalisation, democratisation and radicalisation in the Arab World. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Harris, Sam, and Maajid Nawaz (2015). Islam and the future of tolerance: A dialogue. Cambridge: Harvard University Press.
- Harrison, Paul (1999). Elements of pantheism: A spirituality of nature and the universe. Shaftesbury, Dorset: Element Books.
- Hart, Donna, and Robert W. Sussman (2009). Man the hunted: Primates, predators, and human evolution. Expanded edition. Boulder, CO: Westview Press.
- Harter, Susan, Sabina M. Low, and Nancy R. Whitesell (2003). "What have we learned from Columbine: The impact of the self-system on suicidal violent ideation among adolescents." In Journal of School Violence, 2 (3), 3–26. doi: 10.13001J202v02n03 02.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret (1995). Humiliation: Assessing the specter of derision, degradation, and debasement. Cincinnati, OH: Union Institute Graduate School, doctoral dissertation.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret (2008a). "Jean Baker Miller: Living in connection." In Feminism and Psychology, 18 (3), 326–35. doi: 10.1177/0959353508092085.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret (2008b). "Strengthening resilience in a risky world: It's all about relationships." In Women and Therapy, 31 (2/3/4), 51–70. doi: 10.1080/02703140802145870.

- Hartling, Linda Margaret, Diane Littlefield, and Jean Baker Miller (2008). Evolving concepts in relational-cultural theory. Wellesley, MA: Wellesley College, Jean Baker Miller Training Institute.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret, Evelin Gerda Lindner, Ulrich Josef Spalthoff, and Michael Francis Britton (2013). "Humiliation: A nuclear bomb of emotions?" In Psicología Política, 46 (Mayo), 55–76. www.uv.es/garzon/psicologia%20politica/N46.htm.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret, and Evelin Gerda Lindner (2016a). "Healing humiliation: From reaction to creative action." In Journal of Counseling and Development (JCD), 94, Special Section focussing on Relational Cultural Theory (4), 383–90. doi: 10.1002/j.1556-6676.2014.00000.x.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret, and Evelin Gerda Lindner (2016b). "Healing humiliation: From reaction to creative action." In Journal of Counseling and Development (JCD), 94 (4, Special Section: Relational-Cultural Theory), 383–90. doi: 10.1002/jcad.12096.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret, and Evelin Gerda Lindner (2017). "Can systemic humiliation be transformed into systemic dignity?" In Power, humiliation, and violence: Understanding identity-based conflicts, edited by Daniel Rothbart. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, forthcoming.
- Hartling, Linda Margaret, and Evelin Gerda Lindner (forthcoming). "Dignity in times of crises: Awakening our need for a new social climate." In Routledge media and humanitarian action handbook, edited by Purnaka L. de Silva, and Robin Andersen. New York: Routledge.
- Hartmann, Christian, Thomas Vordermayer, Othmar Plöckinger, Roman Töppel, Edith Raim, Pascal Trees, Angelika Reizle, Martina Seewald-Mooser, and Institut für Zeitgeschichte (Eds.) (2016). Hitler, Mein Kampf: Eine kritische Edition. München, Germany: Institut für Zeitgeschichte.
- Hartmann, Uwe, and Martin Burkart (2007). "Erectile dysfunctions in patient-physician communication: Optimized strategies for addressing sexual issues and the benefit of using a patient questionnaire." In The Journal of Sexual Medicine, 4 (1), 38–46. doi: 10.1111/j.1743-6109.2006.00385.x.
- Hartwig, Richard E. (1983). Roads to reason: Transportation administration and rationality in Colombia. Pittsburgh, PA: University of Pittsburgh Press.
- Hartwig, Richard E. (2008). "Rationality, social science and Paul Diesing." In Urbana: Urban Affairs and Public Policy, IX (Spring-Fall), 1–24. www.urbanauapp.org/wp-content/uploads/Spring-Fall-2008-Richard-Hartwig.pdf.
- Hartzband, Pamela, and Jerome Groopman (2009). "Money and the changing culture of medicine." In New England Journal of Medicine, 360 (2), 101–03. doi: 10.1056/NEJMp0806369. www.nejm.org/doi/full/10.1056/NEJMp0806369.
- Harvey, David (1990). The condition of postmodernity: An enquiry into the origins of cultural change. Oxford: Blackwell.
- Harvey, David (2000). Spaces of hope. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.
- Harvey, David (2003). The new imperialism. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Harvey, David (2005). A brief history of neoliberalism. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Harvey, David (2011). The enigma of capital: And the crises of capitalism. London: Profile Books.
- Harvey, David (2014). Seventeen contradictions and the end of capitalism. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Hasegawa, Tsuyoshi (2005). Racing the enemy: Stalin, Truman, and the surrender of Japan. Cambridge, MA: Belknap.
- Hatherley, Owen (2015). The ministry of nostalgia: Consuming austerity. London: Verso.
- Haugevik, Kristin M., Julie Wilhelmsen, and Morten Skumsrud Andersen (2015). "Trusselbilder og forsvar i endring." In Internasjonal Politikk, 73 (3), 340–42. www.idunn.no/file/pdf/66800599/trusselbilder\_og\_forsvariendring.pdf.
- Hauser, Dorothea (1998). Baader und Herold. Beschreibung eines Kampfes. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Fischer.
- Hayashi, Kichiro (2003). "Current intercultural issues and challenges in Japanese business interfaces: Blending theory and practice." In Management Japan, 35. www.ijnet.or.jp/imaj/mj/hayashi35.pdf.
- Hayden, Michael V. (2016). Playing to the dge: American intelligence in the age of terror. New York: Penguin.
- Heaney, Jonathan G. (2013). "Emotions and power: A bifocal prescription to cure theoretical myopia." In Journal of Political Power, 6 (3), 355–62. doi: 10.1080/2158379X.2013.849367.
- Heard, Gerald (1963). The five ages of man. New York: Julian Press.
- Heath-Kelly, Charlotte (2013). Politics of violence: Militancy, international politics, killing in the name. Abingdon: Routledge.

- Heath-Kelly, Charlotte, Christopher Baker-Beall, and Lee Jarvis (Eds.) (2016). Neoliberalism and terror: Critical engagements. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Heatherly, Charles L., and Heritage Foundation (1981). Mandate for leadership: Policy management in a conservative administration. Washington, DC: Heritage Foundation.
- Hechter, Michael (1992). "The dynamics of secession." In Acta Sociologica, 35 (4), 267–83. doi: 10.1177/000169939203500401.
- Hedges, Chris (2002). War is a force that gives us meaning. New York: PublicAffairs.
- Heelas, Paul (1996). The New Age movement: The celebration of the self and the sacralization of modernity. Oxford: Blackwell.
- Heelas, Paul (2008). Spiritualities of life: New Age romanticism and consumptive capitalism. Malden, MA: Blackwell.
- Heffermehl, Fredrik S. (2010). The Nobel Peace Prize: What Nobel really wanted. Santa Barbara, CA: Praeger.
- Heffernan, Margaret (2011). Wilful blindness: Why we ignore the obvious at our peril. London: Simon and Schuster.
- Heffernan, Margaret (2014). A bigger prize: Why competition isn't everything and how we do better. London: Simon and Schuster.
- Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1807/1967). The phenomenology of mind. Translated by James Black Baillie. London: Haper and Row. German original Phänomenologie des Geistes, Bamberg und Würzburg: Joseph Anton Göbhardt, 1807.
- Hegghammer, Thomas (2006). "Militant Islamism in Saudi Arabia: Patterns of recruitment to 'al-Qaida on the Arabian peninsula'." In FFI rapport-2006/00935: Paths to global jihad: Radicalisation and recruitment to terror networks, edited by Laila Bokhari, Thomas Hegghammer, Brynjar Lia, Petter Nesser, and Truls H. Tonnessen. Chapter 3, pp. 22–29. Kjeller, Norway: Norwegian Defence Research Establishment. Proceedings from a Forsvarets forskningsinstitutt (FFI) seminar, Oslo, 15 March 2006.
<https://docs.google.com/viewer?a=v&pid=sites&srcid=ZGVmYXVsdGRvbWFpbmxqaWhhZGlzbXN0dWRpZXNuZXR8Z3g6MWI0MTY5MjVjYmJmNTM5Yg>.
- Hegghammer, Thomas (2010/2011). "The rise of Muslim foreign fighters: Islam and the globalization of jihad." In International Security, 35 (3), 53–94.
- Hegghammer, Thomas, and Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI) (2013). "Should I stay or should I go? Explaining variation in Western Jihadist's choice between domestic and foreign fighting." In American Political Science Review, February, 1–15. doi: 10.1017/S0003055412000615. http://hegghammer.com/\_files/Hegghammer\_-\_Should\_I\_stay\_or\_should\_I\_go.pdf.
- Hegghammer, Thomas (2016). "The future of jihadism in Europe: A pessimistic view." In Perspectives on Terrorism, 10 (6).
www.terrorismanalysts.com/pt/index.php/pot/article/view/566/html.
- Hegre, Håvard, and Håvard Møkleiv Nygård (2015). "Governance and conflict relapse." In Journal of Conflict Resolution, 59 (6), 984–1016. doi: 10.1177/0022002713520591.
<http://jcr.sagepub.com/content/59/6/984.abstract>.
- Heine, Steven J., Darrin R. Lehman, Hazel Rose Markus, and Shinobu Kitayama (1999). "Is there a universal need for positive self-regard?" In Psychological Review, 106 (4), 766–94. doi: 10.1037/0033-295X.106.4.766.
- Heisenberg, Werner (1969/1971). Physics and beyond: Encounters and conversations. Translated by Arnold J. Pomerans. New York: Harper and Row. German original Der Teil und das Ganze: Gespräche im Umkreis der Atomphysik. München, Germany: Reinhard Piper, 1969.
- Heitmeyer, Wilhelm, Joachim Müller, and Helmut Schröder (1997). Verlockender Fundamentalismus: Türkische Jugendliche in Deutschland. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp.
- Heitmeyer, Wilhelm (2010). Deutsche Zustände, Folge 9. Berlin: Suhrkamp.
- Heitmeyer, Wilhelm, Heinz-Gerhard Haupt, Stefan Malthaner, and Andrea Kirschner (Eds.) (2011). Control of violence: Historical and international perspectives on violence in modern societies. New York: Springer.
- Held, David (1980). Introduction to critical theory: Horkheimer to Habermas. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Heller, Agnes (1984). Everyday life. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul.
- Hellestveit, Cecilie (2017). Syria: En stor krig i en liten verden. Oslo: Pax.

- Hellesøy Harrisson, Cathrine (2016). "Hvor mye av verdens konflikter kan forklares med ydmykelse? I 40 år har psykolog Evelin Lindner forsket for å finne svaret." In Aftenposten A-Magasinet, 9. desember, 59–63. www.aftenposten.no/amagasinet/Hvor-mange-av-verdens-konflikter-kan-forklares-med-ydmykelse-609193b.html.
- Helliwell, John, and Christopher Barrington-Leigh (2011). "How much is social capital worth?" In The social cure: Identity, health, and well-being, edited by Jolanda Jetten, Catherine Haslam, and S. Alexander Haslam, pp. 55–71. Milton Park: Psychology Press.
- Helman, Gerald B., and Steven R. Ratner (1992). "Saving failed states." In Foreign Policy, 89 (Winter, 1992–1993), 3–20. doi: 10.2307/1149070.
- Helmick, Raymond G., Rodney L. Petersen, and Desmond Tutu (Foreword) (Eds.) (2001). Forgiveness and reconciliation: Religion, public policy and conflict transformation. Radnor, PA: Templeton Foundation Press.
- Hemenway, Toby (2009). Gaia's garden: A guide to home-scale permaculture. 2nd edition. White River Junction, VT: Chelsea Green Publishing.
- Hemmingby, Cato, and Tore Bjørge (2016). The dynamics of a terrorist targeting process: Anders B. Breivik and the 22 July attacks in Norway. Basingstoke: Palgrave MacMillan.
- Henckens, Marloes J. A. G., Guido A. van Wingen, Marian Joëls, and Guillén Fernández (2010). "Time-dependent effects of corticosteroids on human amygdala processing." In The Journal of Neuroscience, 30 (38), 12725–32. doi: 10.1523/JNEUROSCI.3112-10.2010.
- Hendrix, Harville (2008). Getting the love you want: A guide for couples. 20th anniversary edition. New York: Henry Holt.
- Hénin, Nicolas (2015). Jihad Academy: Nos erreurs face à l'État islamique. Paris: Fayard.
- Henrich, Joseph, Steven J. Heine, and Ara Norenzayan (2010). "The weirdest people in the world?" In Behavior and Brain Sciences, 33 (2–3), 61–83; discussion pp. 83–135. doi: 10.1017/s0140525x0999152x.
- Henrich, Natalie, and Joseph Henrich (2007). Why humans cooperate: A cultural and evolutionary explanation. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Herman, Judith Lewis (2001). Trauma and recovery. London: Pandora.
- Hermans, Erno J., Hein J. F. van Marle, Lindsey Ossewaarde, Marloes J. A. G. Henckens, Shaozheng Qin, Marlieke T. R. van Kesteren, Vincent C. Schoots, et al. (2011). "Stress-related noradrenergic activity prompts large-scale neural network reconfiguration." In Science, 334 (6059), 1151–53. doi: 10.1126/science.1209603. www.sciencemag.org/content/334/6059/1151.abstract.
- Hermans, Erno J., Marloes J. A. G. Henckens, Marian Joëls, and Guillén Fernández (2014). "Dynamic adaptation of large-scale brain networks in response to acute stressors." In Trends in Neurosciences, 37 (6), 304–14. doi: 10.1016/j.tins.2014.03.006.
- Herrmann, Ulrike (2013). Der Sieg des Kapitals. Wie der Reichtum in die Welt kam. Die Geschichte von Wachstum, Geld und Krisen. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Westend Verlag.
- Hersh, Richard H., and John Merrow (Eds.) (2005). Declining by degrees: Higher education at risk. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Hervé, Hugies, and John C. Yuille (Eds.) (2007). The psychopath: Theory, research, and practice. Mahwah, NJ: Erlbaum.
- Herz, John H. (1950). "Idealist internationalism and the security dilemma." In World Politics, 2 (2), 157–80. doi: 10.2307/2009187.
- Hetherington, Marc, Meri Long, and Thomas Rudolph (2016). "Revisiting the myth: New evidence of a polarized electorate." In Public Opinion Quarterly, 80 (S1), 321–50. doi: 10.1093/poq/nfw003.
- Hetherington, Marc J., and Jonathan Daniel Weiler (2009). Authoritarianism and polarization in American politics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Hetherington, Marc J., and Elizabeth Suhay (2011). "Authoritarianism, threat, and Americans' support for the war on terror." In American Journal of Political Science, 55 (3), 546–60. doi: 10.1111/j.1540-5907.2011.00514.x.
- Hewstone, Miles, Ed Cairns, Alberto Voci, Juergen Hamberger, and Ulrike Niens (2006). "Intergroup contact, forgiveness, and experience of 'the troubles' in Northern Ireland." In Journal of Social Issues, 62 (1), 99–120. doi: 10.1111/j.1540-4560.2006.00441.x.
- Hibbing, John R., Kevin B. Smith, and John R. Alford (2014). Predisposed: Liberals, conservatives, and the biology of political differences. New York: Routledge.
- Hickok, Gregory (2014). The myth of mirror neurons: The real neuroscience of communication and cognition. New York: Norton.

- Higgins, Polly (2016). Eradicating ecocide: Exposing the corporate and political practices destroying the planet and proposing the laws needed to eradicate ecocide. 2nd edition. London: Shephard Walwyn.
- Hinde, Robert A., and Joseph Rotblat (2003). War no more: Eliminating conflict in the nuclear age. London: Pluto Press.
- Hird, Myra J. (2009). "Feminist engagements with matter." In Feminist Studies, 35 (2), 329–46.
- Hirschman, Albert Otto (1977). The passions and the interests: Political arguments for capitalism before its triumph. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Hitchens, Christopher (2012). No one left to lie to. Sydney: Allen and Unwin.
- Hitler, Adolf (1925–26/1999). Mein Kampf. Translated by Ralph Manheim. London: Pimlico. Original work published in 1925–26.
- Ho, David Yau Fai (1976). "On the concept of face." In American Journal of Sociology, 81 (4), 867–84. doi: 10.1086/226145, www.jstor.org/stable/2777600.
- Ho, David Yau Fai (2014). Enlightened or mad? A psychologist glimpses into mystical magnanimity. Lake Oswego, OR: Dignity Press.
- Hobbes, Thomas (1651). Leviathan, or, The matter, forme, and power of a common wealth, ecclesiasticall and civil. Printed for Andrew Crooke, at the Green Dragon in St. Paul's Churchyard. www.gutenberg.org/files/3207/3207-h/3207-h.htm.
- Hobsbawm, Eric J. (1962). The age of revolution: Europe 1789–1848. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Hobsbawm, Eric J. (1975). The age of capital: 1848–1875. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Hobsbawm, Eric J. (1987). The age of empire: 1875–1914. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Hobsbawm, Eric J. (1994). Age of extremes: The short twentieth century 1914–1991. London: Michael Joseph.
- Hobsbawm, Eric J. (2000). Bandits. 2nd revised edition. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Hobson, John Atkinson (1902). Imperialism. A study. New York: James Pott and Co. www.econlib.org/library/YPDBooks/Hobson/hbsnImp.html.
- Hochschild, Arlie Russell (1979). "Emotion work, feeling rules, and social structure." In American Journal of Sociology, 85 (3), 551–75. www.jstor.org/stable/2778583.
- Hochschild, Arlie Russell (1983). The managed heart: Commercialization of human feeling. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Hodgson, Geoffrey M., and Thorbjørn Knudsen (2010). Darwin's conjecture: The search for general principles of social and economic evolution. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Hoel, Dag (2014). Armageddon halleluja! Møter med politisk kristendom. Oslo: Spartacus.
- Hoffman, Bruce (1998). Inside terrorism. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Hoffman, David H., Danielle J. Carter, Cara R. Viglucci Lopez, Heather L. Benzmilller, Ava X. Guo, S. Yasir Latifi, and Daniel C. Craig (2015). Report to the special committee of the board of directors of the American Psychological Association: Independent review relating to apa ethics guidelines, national security interrogations, and torture. Chicago: Sidley Austin. www.apa.org/independent-review/revised-report.pdf.
- Hoffmann, Peter (1995). Stauffenberg: A family history 1905–1944. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Hofstede, Geert (1986). "Cultural differences in teaching and learning." In International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 10 (3), 301–20. doi: 10.1016/0147-1767(86)90015-5.
- Hofstede, Geert (2001). Culture's consequences: Comparing values, behaviors, institutions, and organizations across nations. 2nd edition. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.
- Holbrook, Colin, Keise Izuma, Choi Deblieck, Daniel M. T. Fessler, and Marco Iacoboni (2015). "Neuromodulation of group prejudice and religious belief." In Social Cognitive and Affective Neuroscience. doi: 10.1093/scan/nsv107. <http://scan.oxfordjournals.org/content/early/2015/09/03/scan.nsv107.abstract>.
- Hollick, Malcolm (2006). The science of oneness: A worldview for the twenty-first century. Ropley, Hampshire: O Books.
- Hollick, Malcolm, and Christine Connelly (2011). Hope for humanity: How understanding and healing trauma could solve the planetary crisis. Winchester: O Books. www.o-books.com/book/detail/648/Hope-For-Humanity.
- Holmes, Stephen (2007). The matador's cape: America's reckless response to terror. New York: Cambridge University Press.

- Holt-Lunstad, Julianne, Timothy B. Smith, and J. Bradley Layton (2010). "Social relationships and mortality risk: A meta-analytic review." In Public Library of Science (PLOS) Medicine, 7 (7), e1000316. doi: 10.1371/journal.pmed.1000316.
- Holtzworth-Munroe, Amy, and Jeffrey C. Meehan (2004). "Typologies of men who are maritally violent: Scientific and clinical implications." In Journal of Interpersonal Violence, 19 (12), 1369–89. doi: 10.1177/0886260504269693. <http://jiv.sagepub.com/content/19/12/1369.abstract>.
- Homer-Dixon, Thomas F. (2006). The upside of down: Catastrophe, creativity, and the renewal of civilization. Toronto: Knopf.
- Honneth, Axel (1992/1995). The struggle for recognition: The moral grammar of social conflicts. Translated by Joel Anderson. Cambridge: Polity Press. German original Kampf um Anerkennung, Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp, 1992.
- Honneth, Axel (1997). "Recognition and moral obligation." In Social Research: An International Quarterly of the Social Sciences, 64 (1, Spring, The Decent Society), 16–35. www.jstor.org/stable/40971157.
- Hooch, Holger (2017). Scars of independence: America's violent birth. New York: Crown.
- Hooper, Charlotte (2001). Manly states: Masculinities, international relations, and gender politics. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Horgan, John (2009). Walking away from terrorism: Accounts of disengagement from radical and extremist movements. Abingdon-on-Thames: Routledge.
- Horgan, John, and Kurt Braddock (2010). "Rehabilitating the terrorists? Challenges in assessing the effectiveness of de-radicalization programs." In Terrorism and Political Violence, 22 (2), 267–91. doi: 10.1080/09546551003594748. www.start.umd.edu/sites/default/files/files/publications/Derad.pdf.
- Horgan, John, and Kurt Braddock (2011). "Evaluating the effectiveness of de-radicalisation programs: Towards a scientific approach to terrorism risk reduction." In Countering violent extremism: Scientific methods and strategies, edited by Laurie Fenstermacher, and Todd Leventhal, pp. 158–63. Washington, DC: Nationwide Suspicious Activity Reporting (SAR) Initiative (NSI), Topical strategic multi-layer assessment and air force research laboratory multi-disciplinary white paper in support of counter-terrorism and counter-WMD. http://nsiteam.com/scientist/wp-content/uploads/2014/02/U\_Counter-Violent-Extremism-Final\_Approved-for-Public-Release\_28Oct11v3.pdf.
- Hornborg, Alf, J. R. McNeill, and Juan Martinez-Alier (Eds.) (2007). Rethinking environmental history: World-system history and global environmental change. Lanham, MD: Altamira Press.
- Horne, Alistair (1977). A savage war of peace: Algeria 1954–1962. London: Macmillan.
- Hornsey, Matthew J., and Michael A. Hogg (2000). "Subgroup relations: A comparison of mutual intergroup differentiation and common ingroup identity models of prejudice reduction." In Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, 26 (2), 242–56. doi: 10.1177/0146167200264010. <http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1177/0146167200264010>.
- Horton, Richard (2004). "Rediscovering human dignity." In The Lancet, 364 (9439), 1081–85. doi: 10.1016/S0140-6736(04)17065-7.
- Houellebecq, Michel (1994/1998). Whatever. Translated by Paul Hammond. London: Serpent's Tail, French original Extension du domaine de la lutte, Paris: M. Nadeau, 1994.
- Houellebecq, Michel (1998/2001). Atomised. Translated by Frank Wynne. London: Vintage, French original Les particules élémentaires, Paris: Flammarion, 1998.
- Houellebecq, Michel (2010/2012). The map and the territory. Translated by Gavin Bowd. London: Vintage, French original La carte et le territoire, Paris: Flammarion, 2010.
- Houellebecq, Michel (2015). Submission. Translated by Lorin Stein. London: William Heinemann, French original Soumission, Paris: Flammarion, 2015.
- Hsu, Francis L. K. (1948). Under the ancestors' shadow: Chinese culture and personality. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Hsu, Francis L. K. (1953). Americans and Chinese: Two ways of life. New York: Henry Schuman.
- Hsu, Francis L. K. (1963). Clan, caste, and club. New York: Van Nostrand.
- Hsu, Francis L.K. (1965). "The effect of dominant kinship relationships on kin and non-kin behavior: A hypothesis." In American Anthropologist, 67 (3), 638–61. doi: 10.1525/aa.1965.67.3.02a00020/pdf.
- Huang, Hsuan-Ying (2014). "The emergence of the psycho-boom in contemporary urban China." In Studies for the society for the social history of medicine: Psychiatry and Chinese history, edited by Howard Chiang. Chapter 10, pp. 183–204. London: Pickering and Chatto.

- Hudson, Michael (2003). Super imperialism: The origin and fundamentals of U.S. world dominance. New and revised edition. London: Pluto Press. <http://michael-hudson.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/superimperialism.pdf>.
- Hudson, Michael (2012). The bubble and beyond: Fictitious capital, debt deflation and the global crisis. Dresden, Germany: ISLET.
- Hudson, Valerie M., Bonnie Ballif-Spanvill, Mary Caprioli, and Chad F. Emmett (2012). Sex and world peace. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Hultman, Karin, and Hillevi Lenz Taguchi (2010). "Challenging anthropocentric analysis of visual data: A relational materialist methodological approach to educational research." In International Journal of Qualitative Studies in Education (QSE), 23 (5), 525–42. doi: 10.1080/09518398.2010.500628.
- Human Rights Watch (2014). With liberty to monitor all: How large-scale US surveillance is harming journalism, law, and American democracy. New York: Human Rights Watch and American Civil Liberties Union. www.hrw.org/reports/2014/07/28/liberty-monitor-all.
- Hung, Ho-fung (2009). China and the transformation of global capitalism. Baltimore, MD: John Hopkins University Press.
- Hunt, Tristram (2010). Marx's general: The revolutionary life of Friedrich Engels. London: Picador.
- Huntington, Samuel P. (1996). The clash of civilizations and the remaking of world order. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Husain, Ed (2007). The Islamist: Why I joined radical Islam in Britain, what I saw inside and why I left. London: Penguin Books.
- Hutchinson, Emma (2016). Affective communities in world politics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Hutton, Patrick H., Huck Gutman, and Luther H. Martin (1988). Technologies of the self: A seminar with Michel Foucault. Amherst, MA: University of Massachusetts Press.
- Huxley, Aldous (1932). Brave new world. London: Chatto and Windus.
- Härtel-Petri, Roland (2014). Crystal Meth: Wie eine Droge unser Land überschwemmt. München, Germany: Münchner Verlagsgruppe.
- Höjdestrand, Tova (2009). Needed by nobody: Homelessness, humiliation, and humanness in post-socialist Russia. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Ibn Khaldun (1377/1958). The Muqaddimah: An introduction to history, in three volumes. Translated by Franz Rosenthal. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press. www.muslimphilosophy.com/ik/Muqaddimah/.
- Ide, Sachiko (1989). "Formal forms and discernment: Two neglected aspects of universals of linguistic politeness." In Multilingua – Journal of Cross-Cultural and Interlanguage Communication, 8 (2/3), 223–48. doi: 10.1515/mult.1989.8.2-3.223. www.sachikoide.com/1989b\_Formal\_Forms\_and\_Discernment.pdf.
- Iglesias, Juan (2010). Derecho romano. 15th edition. Barcelona, Spain: Sello Editorial.
- Imhof, Lorens A., Drew Fudenberg, and Martin A. Nowak (2007). "Tit-for-tat or win-stay, lose-shift?" In Journal of theoretical biology, 247 (3), 574–80. doi: 10.1016/j.jtbi.2007.03.027. www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2460568/.
- Inglehart, Ronald, and Christian Welzel (2005). Modernization, cultural change, and democracy: The human development sequence. New York: Cambridge University Press.
- Ingold, Tim (2000). The perception of the environment: Essays in livelihood, dwelling and skill. London: Routledge.
- Institute for Economics and Peace (2014). Global terrorism index 2014: Measuring and understanding the impact of terrorism. Sydney, New York, Mexico City: Institute for Economics and Peace. <http://economicsandpeace.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/Global-Terrorism-Index-Report-2014.pdf>.
- Institute for Economics and Peace (2015). Global terrorism index 2015: Measuring and understanding the impact of terrorism. Sydney, New York, Mexico City: Institute for Economics and Peace. <http://economicsandpeace.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/2015-Global-Terrorism-Index-Report.pdf>.
- International Labour Office (ILO) (2014). Profits and poverty: The economics of forced labour. Geneva, Switzerland: International Labour Office (ILO), Special Action Programme to Combat Forced Labour (SAP-FL), Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work Branch (FPRW). www.ilo.org/wcmsp5/groups/public/---ed\_norm/---declaration/documents/publication/wcms\_243391.pdf.

- Internationaler Militärgerichtshof Nürnberg (1989). "Band 29: Urkunden und anderes Beweismaterial." In Internationaler Militärgerichtshof Nürnberg (IMT): Der Nürnberger Prozess gegen die Hauptkriegsverbrecher. München, Germany: Delphin Verlag.
- Iroegbu, Patrick E. (2005). "Beginning, purpose and end of life." In Kpim of morality ethics, edited by Patrick E. Iroegbu, and Anthony Echekwube, pp. 440–45. Ibadan, Nigeria: Heinemann Educational Books.
- Isdal, Per (2000). Meningen med volden Kommuneforlaget.
- Ishiguro, Kazuo (2005). Never let me go. London: Faber and Faber.
- Ismail, Tarek Z., Naureen Shah, and Andrea Prasow (2014). Illusion of justice: Human rights abuses in US terrorism prosecutions. New York: Human Rights Watch, The Human Rights Institute at Columbia Law School. www.hrw.org/node/126101.
- Ivy, Marilyn (1993). "Have you seen me? Recovering the inner child in late twentieth-century America." In Social Text (37), 227–52. doi: 10.2307/466270.
- Jabri, Vivienne (2007). War and the transformation of global politics. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Jackman, Mary (1994). The velvet glove: Paternalism and conflict in gender, class, and race relations. Berkeley: University of California Press, ark.cdlib.org/ark:/13030/ft958009k3.
- Jackson, Richard (2010). "In defence of 'terrorism': Finding a way through a forest of misconceptions." In Behavioral Sciences of Terrorism and Political Aggression, 3 (2), 116–30. doi: 10.1080/19434472.2010.512148.
- Jackson, Richard (2011). "The failed paradigm of prevent." In Soundings: Policy matters for Muslims in Britain. London: Muslim Council of Britain (MCB). <http://soundings.mcb.org.uk/?p=35>.
- Jackson, Richard, Marie Breen-Smyth, Jeroen Gunning, and Lee Jarvis (2011). Terrorism: A critical introduction. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Jackson, Robert H. (1990). Quasi-states: Sovereignty, international relations and the third world. Cambridge, MA: Cambridge University Press.
- Jackson, Tim (2009). Prosperity without growth: Economics for a finite planet. London: Earthscan.
- Jahoda, Gustav (2016). "On the rise and decline of 'indigenous psychology'." In Culture and Psychology, 22 (2), 169–81. doi: 10.1177/1354067x16634052. <http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1177/1354067X16634052>.
- Jakobs, Hans-Jürgen (2016). Wem gehört die Welt: Die Machtverhältnisse im globalen Kapitalismus. München: Albrecht Knaus Verlag.
- Jakobsen, Ove (2017). Transformative ecological economics: Process philosophy, ideology and utopia. London: Taylor and Francis.
- Jameson, Fredric (1991). Postmodernism, or, The cultural logic of late capitalism. London: Verso.
- Jameson, Fredric (1994). The seeds of time. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Janis, Irving L., and Leon Mann (1977). Decision making: A psychological analysis of conflict, choice, and commitment. New York: Free Press.
- Jansz, Jeroen, and Peter van Drunen (2004). A social history of psychology. Malden, MA: Blackwell.
- Jantsch, Erich (1980). The self-organizing universe: Scientific and human implications of the emerging paradigm of evolution. Oxford: Pergamon Press.
- Jasper, James M. (1997). The art of moral protest: Culture, biography, and creativity in social movements. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Jasper, James M. (2011). "Emotions and social movements: Twenty years of theory and research." In Annual Review of Sociology, 37 (1), 285–303. doi: 10.1146/annurev-soc-081309-150015.
- Jasper, James M. (2014). Protest: A cultural introduction to social movements. Cambridge: Polity.
- Jasper, James M., and Jan Willem Duyvendak (2015). Players and arenas: The interactive dynamics of protest. Amsterdam: Amsterdam University Press.
- Jaspers, Karl (1919). Psychologie der Weltanschauungen. Berlin: Springer.
- Jaspers, Karl (1949). Vom Ursprung und Ziel der Geschichte. München, Germany: Piper.
- Jaspers, Karl (1951). Way to wisdom, an introduction to philosophy. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press. <https://archive.org/details/waytowisdomintro00jasp>.
- Jaynes, Julian (1976). The origin of consciousness in the breakdown of the bicameral mind. Boston: Houghton Mifflin.
- Jeismann, Karl-Ernst (2000). "'Geschichtsbewußtsein' als zentrale Kategorie der Didaktik des Geschichtsunterrichts." In Geschichte und Bildung, edited by Karl-Ernst Jeismann, pp. 46–72. Paderborn: Ferdinand Schöningh.

- Jemsek, Greg (2011). Quiet horizon: Releasing ideology and embracing self-knowledge. Bloomington: Trafford.
- Jenni, Alexis (2011). L'art français de la guerre. Paris: Gallimard.
- Jennings, Jerry L., and Christopher M. Murphy (2000). "Male-male dimensions of male-female battering: A new look at domestic violence." In Psychology of Men and Masculinity, 1 (1), 21–29. doi: 10.1037//1524-92.20.1.1.21.
- Jensen, Barbara (2012). Reading classes: On culture and classism in America. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Jensen, Michael C., and William H. Meckling (1994). "The nature of man." In Journal of Applied Corporate Finance, 7 (2), 4–19. doi: 10.1111/j.1745-6622.1994.tb00401.x.
- Jervis, Robert (1978). "Cooperation under the security dilemma." In World Politics, 30 (2, January), 167–214. www.jstor.org/stable/2009958.
- Jervis, Robert, Richard Ned Lebow, and Janice Gross Stein (1985). Psychology and deterrence. Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- Jervis, Robert (2006). "Understanding beliefs." In Political Psychology, 27 (5), 641–63. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-9221.2006.00527.x.
- Job, Brian L. (Ed.) (1992). The insecurity dilemma: National security of third world states. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner.
- Johnson, Chalmers Ashby (2000). Blowback: The costs and consequences of American empire. New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Johnson, Chalmers Ashby (2004). The sorrows of empire: Militarism, secrecy, and the end of the republic. New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Johnson, Chalmers Ashby (2006). Nemesis: The last days of the American Republic. New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Johnson, Chalmers Ashby (2010). Dismantling the Empire: America's last best hope. New York: Henry Holt.
- Johnson, David W., Roger T. Johnson, and Dean Tjosvold (2014). "Constructive controversy: The value of intellectual opposition." In The handbook of conflict resolution: Theory and practice, edited by Morton Deutsch, Peter T. Coleman, and Eric C. Marcus. 3rd edition. Chapter 4, pp. 76–103. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass.
- Johnson, Michael (2001). All honourable men: The social origins of war in Lebanon. London: Centre for Lebanese Studies and I.B. Tauris.
- Johnson, Michael P. (2008). A typology of domestic violence: Intimate terrorism, violent resistance, and situational couple violence. Lebanon, NH: Northeastern University Press.
- Johnson, Richard (2007). "Post-hegemony?" In Theory, Culture and Society, 24 (3), 95–110. doi: 10.1177/0263276407075958.
- Johnson, Sheri L., Liane J. Leedom, and Luma Muhtadie (2012). "The dominance behavioral system and psychopathology: Evidence from self-report, observational, and biological studies." In Psychological Bulletin, 138 (4), 692–743. doi: 10.1037/a0027503.
- Jolowicz, H. F. (1932). Historical introduction to the study of Roman law. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Jones, Carol (2009). "State of transformation: Drag queen masculinity in two Scottish texts." In Genders, 50, Edinburgh Research Explorer. www.research.ed.ac.uk/portal/files/7970980/Genders_OnLine_Journal_Presenting_innovative_theories_in_art_literature_history_music_TV_and_film.pdf.
- Jones, Eric Lionel, and Societies American Council of Learned (1993). Growth recurring: Economic change in world history. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Jones, Gregg (2012). Honor in the dust: Theodore Roosevelt, war in the Philippines, and the rise and fall of America's imperial dream. New York: New American Library.
- Jones, James Edward (2006). The post-victim ethical exemption syndrome: An outgrowth of humiliation. New York: Paper presented at the 2006 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, December 14–15, 2006. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/JonesNY06meeting.pdf.
- Jones, John Y. (2008). Careers, kings and consultants. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, published also as 'Etterarbeid med mening' in Vårt Land, Oslo, Norway, 2008. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/JohnJonesCareersKingsandConsultants.pdf.

- Jones, John Y. (2011). "Dag Hammarskjöld stood up for the UN on development." In UN Chronicle. www.un.org/wcm/content/site/chronicle/home/archive/webarticles2011/daghammarskjoldstoodupfortheunondevelopment.
- Jones, Seth G., and Martin C. Libicki (2008). How terrorist groups end: Lessons for countering Al Qai'da. Rand Corporation. www.rand.org/content/dam/rand/pubs/monographs/2008/RAND\_MG741-1.pdf.
- Jordán, Javier, and Robert Wesley (2006). "The Madrid attacks: Results of investigations two years later." In Terrorism Monitor, 4 (5, March 9), 1–4. www.jamestown.org/programs/tm/single/?tx\_ttnews%5Btt\_news%5D=696&tx\_ttnews%5BbackPid%5D=181&no\_cache=1#.V3fqu6LICgw.
- Jordan, Judith V. (2010). The power of connection: Recent developments in relational-cultural theory. New York: Routledge.
- Jorge Fernandes Mata, Tiago (2006). Dissent in economics: Making radical political economics and post Keynesian economics, 1960–1980. London: London School of Economics and Political Science, doctoral dissertation. <http://etheses.lse.ac.uk/2691/1/U615640.pdf>.
- Jost, John T., and Lee D. Ross (1999). "Fairness norms and the potential for mutual agreements involving majority and minority groups." In Research on managing groups and teams (Vol. 2): Groups in their context, edited by Elizabeth A. Mannix, Margaret A. Neale, and Ruth Wageman, pp. 93–114. Greenwich, CT: JAI Press.
- Jost, John T., Brett W. Pelham, and Mauricio R. Carvalho (2002). "Non-conscious forms of system justification: Implicit and behavioral preferences for higher status groups." In Journal of Experimental Social Psychology, 38 (6), 586–602. doi: 10.1016/S0022-1031(02)00505-X.
- Jost, John T., Mahzarin R. Banaji, and Brian A. Nosek (2004). "A decade of system justification theory: Accumulated evidence of conscious and unconscious bolstering of the status quo." In Political Psychology, 25 (6), 881–919. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-9221.2004.00402.x. www.psych.nyu.edu/jost/Jost,%20Banaji,%20&%20Nosek%20%282004%29%20A%20Decade%20of%20System%20Justificati.pdf.
- Jost, John T., Aaron C. Kay, and Hulda Thorisdottir (2009). Social and psychological bases of ideology and system justification. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Joughin, Ian, Benjamin E. Smith, and Brooke Medley (2014). "Marine ice sheet collapse potentially under way for the Thwaites Glacier Basin, West Antarctica." In Science, 344 (6185), 735–38. doi: 10.1126/science.1249055. www.sciencemag.org/content/344/6185/735.abstract.
- Jozelic, Jasna (2006). Islamisering og islams posisjon i dagens Bosnia og Hercegovina. Bergen, Norway: Universitet i Bergen, hovedfagsoppgave i religionsvitenskap.
- Juergensmeyer, Mark (2000). Terror in the mind of god: The global rise of religious violence. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Junger, Sebastian (2016). Tribe: On homecoming and belonging. New York: Twelve.
- Juran, Joseph M. (1964). Managerial breakthrough: A new concept of the manager's job. New York: McGraw-Hill.
- Jünger, Ernst (1979). Ernst Jünger: Sämtliche Werke, 18 Bände. Band 1: Der Erste Weltkrieg. Stuttgart, Germany: Klett-Cotta.
- Jäckel, Eberhard, and Axel Kuhn (Eds.) (1980). Hitler. Sämtliche Aufzeichnungen 1905–1924. Stuttgart Deutsche Verlags-Anstalt.
- Kaddor, Lamya (2015). Zum Töten bereit: Warum deutsche Jugendliche in den Dschihad ziehen. München, Germany: Piper.
- Kaeuper, Richard W., and Elspeth Kennedy (Eds.) (1996). The book of chivalry of Geoffroi de Charny: Text, context, and translation. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
- Kagan, Donald (1997). Honor, interest, and nation-state. Paper delivered at the conference 'Intangible Interests and U.S. Foreign Policy', held in 1996, published in Commentary, April 1997. www.cs.utexas.edu/users/vl/notes/kagan.html.
- Kagan, Sacha (2011). Art and sustainability: Connecting patterns for a culture of complexity. Bielefeld, Germany: Transcript.
- Kahneman, Daniel (2011). Thinking, fast and slow. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux.
- Kaleck, Wolfgang, Michael Ratner, Tobias Singelstein, and Peter Weiss (Eds.) (2007). International prosecution of human rights crimes. Berlin, Heidelberg: Springer.
- Kaleck, Wolfgang (2016). Unternehmen vor Gericht. Globale Kämpfe für Menschenrechte. Berlin Wagenbach.

- Kalecki, Michal (1943). "Political aspects of full employment." In Political Quarterly, 14 (4), 322–30. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-923X.1943.tb01016.x. <http://mrzine.monthlyreview.org/2010/kalecki220510.html>.
- Kant, Immanuel (1784). "Beantwortung der Frage: Was ist Aufklärung?" In Berlinische Monatsschrift, Dezember-Heft 1784, 481–94. www.uni-potsdam.de/u/philosophie/texte/kant/aufklaer.htm.
- Kant, Immanuel (1785). Grundlegung zur Metaphysik der Sitten. Riga, Latvia: Johann Friedrich Hartknock.
- Kaplan, Martha (1995). Neither cargo nor cult: Ritual politics and the colonial imagination in Fiji. Durham, NC: Duke University Press.
- Kaptelinin, Victor, and Bonnie A. Nardi (2006). Acting with technology: Activity theory and interaction design. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press.
- Karabel, Jerome (2005). The chosen: The hidden history of admission and exclusion at Harvard, Yale, and Princeton. New York: Houghton Mifflin Harcourt.
- Karamah – Muslim Women Lawyers for Human Rights (2008). Zina, rape, and Islamic Law: An Islamic legal analysis of the rape laws In Pakistan – A position paper. Washington, DC: Karamah – Muslim Women Lawyers for Human Rights. www.geo.tv/zs2006/Zina\_article\_Final.pdf.
- Karatani, Kôjin (2010/2014). The structure of world history: From modes of production to modes of exchange. Translated by Michael K. Bourdaghs. Durham, NC: Duke University Press. Japanese original 世界史の構造, Tokyo: Iwanami, 2010.
- Karatani, Kojin (2014). The structure of world history: From modes of production to modes of exchange. Durham, NC: Duke University Press.
- Karlberg, Michael Robert (2004). Beyond the culture of contest: From adversarialism to mutualism in an age of interdependence. Oxford: George Ronald.
- Karlberg, Michael Robert (2008). "Discourse, identity, and global citizenship." In Peace Review: A Journal of Social Justice, 20 (3), 310–20. doi: 10.1080/10402650802330139.
- Karlberg, Michael Robert (2012). "Reframing public discourses for peace and justice." In Forming a culture of peace: Reframing narratives of intergroup relations, equity, and justice, edited by Karina V. Korostelina. Chapter 1, pp. 15–42. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Karlberg, Michael Robert (2013). Reframing the concept of human dignity. Paper originally presented at the conference "Reflections on Human Dignity" at the University of Maryland, April 19, 2013. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/KarlbergReframingtheConceptofHumanDignity.pdf, <https://youtu.be/gvCFTUTkQ58>.
- Karlberg, Michael Robert (2014). Meaning, religion, and a Great Transition. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/Karlberg-Meaning\_Religion\_and\_a\_Great\_Transition.pdf.
- Karsh, Efraim (2007). Islamic imperialism: A history. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Kass, Leon (2002). Life, liberty, and the defense of dignity: The challenge for bioethics. San Francisco: Encounter Books.
- Kasser, Tim (2017). "Living both well and sustainably: A review of the literature, with some reflections on future research, interventions, and policy." In Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society A: Physical, Mathematical, and Engineering Sciences, forthcoming.
- Katz, Claire Elise (2010). "Education east of Eden: Levinas, the psychopath and the paradox of responsibility." In Radicalizing Levinas, edited by Peter Atterton, and Matthew Calarco. Chapter 11, pp. 171–84. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Katz, Jack (1988). Seductions of crime: Moral and sensual attractions in doing evil. New York: Basic Books.
- Kauffman, Stuart A., and Sonke Johnsen (1991). "Coevolution to the edge of chaos: Coupled fitness landscapes, poised states, and coevolutionary avalanches." In Journal of Theoretical Biology, 149 (4), 467–505. doi: 10.1016/S0022-5193(05)80094-3. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0022519305800943.
- Kauffman, Stuart Alan (1995). At home in the universe: The search for the laws of self-organization and complexity. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Kauffman, Stuart Alan, and Arran Gare (2015). "Beyond Descartes and Newton: Recovering life and humanity." In Progress in Biophysics and Molecular Biology, 119 (3), 219–44. doi: 10.1016/j.pbiomolbio.2015.06.003.
- Kauffman, Stuart Alan (2016). Humanity in a creative universe. New York: Oxford University Press.

- Kaufman, Alison Adcock (2010). "The 'century of humiliation,' then and now: Chinese perceptions of the international order." In Pacific Focus, 25 (1), 1–33. doi: 10.1111/j.1976-5118.2010.01039.x.
- Kaufman, Stuart J. (2001). Modern hatreds: The symbolic politics of ethnic war. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Kautsky, John H. (1982). The politics of aristocratic empires. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Keen, Sam (1986). Faces of the enemy: Reflections of the hostile imagination. San Francisco: Harper and Row.
- Keenan, Brian (1993). An evil cradling. London: Vintage.
- Kelly, Raymond C. (2005). "The evolution of lethal intergroup violence." In Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS) of the United States of America, 102 (43), 15294–98. doi: 10.1073/pnas.0505955102.
- Kelsen, Hans, and Carl Schmitt (1931/2015). The guardian of the constitution: Hans Kelsen and Carl Schmitt on the limits of constitutional law. Translated by Lars Vinx. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Keltner, Dacher (2009). Born to be good: The science of a meaningful life. New York: Norton.
- Keltner, Dacher, Jason Marsh, and Jeremy Adam Smith (Eds.) (2010). The compassionate instinct: The science of human goodness. New York: W. W. Norton.
- Kemme, Stefanie, Michael Hansmaier, and Christian Pfeiffer (2014). "Experience of parental corporal punishment in childhood and adolescence and its effect on punitiveness." In Journal of Family Violence, 29 (2), 129–42. doi: 10.1007/s10896-013-9564-3.
- Kendall, Diana (2007). Sociology in our times. Belmont, CA: Wadsworth.
- Kendler, Kenneth S., John M. Hettema, Frank Butera, Charles O. Gardner, and Carol A. Prescott (2003). "Life event dimensions of loss, humiliation, entrapment, and danger in the prediction of onsets of major depression and generalized anxiety." In Archives of General Psychiatry, 60 (8), 789–96. doi: 10.1001/archpsyc.60.8.789.
- Kendler, Kenneth S., and Carol A. Prescott (2006). Genes, environment, and psychopathology: Understanding the causes of psychiatric and substance use disorders. New York: Guilford.
- Kennedy, Hugh (2007). The great Arab conquests: How the spread of Islam changed the world we live in. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Kennedy, Paul (1987). The rise and fall of the great powers: Economic change and military conflict from 1500 to 2000. New York: Random House.
- Kepel, Gilles (1993). Le Prophète et pharaon: Aux sources des mouvements islamistes. Paris: Seuil.
- Kepel, Gilles (2006). Jihad: The trail of political Islam. New edition. London: I.B. Tauris.
- Kepel, Gilles (2008). Beyond terror and martyrdom: The future of the Middle East. Harvard: Harvard University Press.
- Kepel, Gilles, and Jean Pierre Milelli (2008). Al Qaeda in its own words. Cambridge, MA: Belknap.
- Kepel, Gilles (2015). Terreur dans l'Hexagone: Genèse du djihad français. Paris: Gallimard.
- Kepel, Gilles (2016). La fracture. Paris: Coédition Gallimard / France Culture.
- Kershaw, Ian (1998). Hitler 1889–1936: Hubris. London: Allen Lane.
- Kershaw, Ian (2000). Hitler 1936–45: Nemesis. London: Allen Lane.
- Kershaw, Ian (2011). The end: Hitler's Germany, 1944–45. London: Allen Lane.
- Kessels, Eelco J.A.M. (Ed.) (2010). Countering violent extremist narratives. The Hague, The Netherlands: National Coordinator for Counter-Terrorism.
- Keval, Narendra (2016). Exploring the perversion of thinking and curiosity in racism. London: Karnac.
- Keyes, Ralph (1995). The courage to write: How writers transcend fear. New York: Henry Holt.
- Keysers, Christian (2011). The empathic brain: How the discovery of mirror neurons changes our understanding of human nature. Lexington, KY: Social Brain Press.
- Khalidi, Rashid (2004). Resurrecting empire: Western footprints and America's perilous path in the Middle East. Boston: Beacon.
- Kidder, Rushworth M. (1994). Shared values for a troubled world:: Conversations with men and women of conscience. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass.
- Kim, Kisam, and Donald Kirk (2013). Kim Dae-jung and the quest for the Nobel: How the president of South Korea bought the peace prize and financed Kim Jong-il's nuclear program. New York: Palgrave Macmillan. www.donaldkirk.com/files/kim\_dae-jung\_and\_the\_quest\_for\_the\_nobel\_\(1\).pdf.pdf).

- Kim, Young Yun, and Brent David Ruben (1988). "Intercultural transformation: A systems theory." In Theories in intercultural communication, edited by Young Yun Kim, and William B. Gudykunst, pp. 299–321. Newbury Park, CA: Sage.
- Kimmel, Michael (2013). Angry white men: American masculinity at the end of an era. New York: Nation Books.
- Kimura, Masato, and Toshihiro Minohara (Eds.) (2013). Tumultuous decade: Empire, society and diplomacy in 1930s Japan. Toronto: University of Toronto Press.
- Kindleberger, Charles P. (2013). The world in depression 1929 – 1939. 40th anniversary edition. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- King, Martin Luther (1955). A comparison of the conception of God in the thinking of Paul Tillich and Henry Nelson Wieman. Boston: Boston University, doctoral dissertation.
- King, Ursula (2007). "Religious education and peace: An overview and response." In British Journal of Religious Education, 29 (1), 115–24. doi: 10.1080/01416200601037593.
- Kingsley, Charles (1867). The ancien regime. Lectures at the Royal Institution. www.pagebypagebooks.com/Charles\_Kingsley/The\_Ancien\_Regime/index.html.
- Kingston, Christopher G., and Robert E. Wright (2010). "The deadliest of games: The institution of dueling." In Southern Economic Journal, 76 (4), 1094–106. doi: 10.4284/sej.2010.76.4.1094. www3.amherst.edu/~cgkingston/duels.pdf.
- Kinnvall, Catarina (2004). "Globalization and religious nationalism: Self, identity, and the search for ontological security." In Political Psychology, 25 (5), 741–67. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-9221.2004.00396.x.
- Kipnis, Andrew B. (2012). Chinese modernity and the individual psyche. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Kirby, Vicki (2011). Quantum anthropologies: Life at large. Durham, NC: Duke University Press.
- Kirsch, Jonathan (2008). The Grand Inquisitor's manual: A history of terror in the name of God. New York: HarperCollins.
- Kirschenbaum, Howard, and Valerie Land Henderson (Eds.) (1990). Carl Rogers: Dialogues: Conversations with Martin Buber, Paul Tillich, B.F. Skinner, Gregory Bateson, Michael Polanyi, Rollo May, and others. London: Constable.
- Kirst, Hans Hellmut (1975/1976). The nights of the long knives. New York: Coward, McCann and Geoghegan. German original Die Nächte der langen Messer, Hamburg: Hoffman und Campe, 1975.
- Kissinger, Henry (1957). A world restored: Metternich, Castlereagh and the problems of peace, 1812–22. Boston: Houghton Mifflin.
- Kitayama, Shinobu, and Dov Cohen (Eds.) (2007). Handbook of cultural psychology. New York: Guilford Press.
- Kjos, Ingeborg (2013). Anders Behring Breiviks manifest: En idéanalyse. Oslo: University of Oslo, master's thesis in political science. www.duo.uio.no/bitstream/handle/10852/36983/IngeborgxKjosxmaster.pdf?sequence=1.
- Klas, Gerhard (2011). Die Mikrofinanz-Industrie: Die große Illusion oder das Geschäft mit der Armut. Berlin: Assoziation A.
- Kleinig, John (2011). "Humiliation, degradation, and moral capacity: A response to Hörnle and Kremnitzer." In Israel Law Review, 44 (1-2), 169–83. law.huji.ac.il/upload/ILR44KleinigCRCFinal.pdf.
- Kleinig, John, and Nicholas G. Evans (2013). "Human flourishing, human dignity, and human rights." In Law and Philosophy, 32 (5), 539–64. doi: 10.1007/s10982-012-9153-2.
- Klimecki, Olga M., Susanne Leiberg, Matthieu Ricard, and Tania Singer (2014). "Differential pattern of functional brain plasticity after compassion and empathy training." In Social Cognitive and Affective Neuroscience, 9 (6), 873–79. doi: 10.1093/scan/nst060.
- Klitgaard, Kent A. (2017). The struggle for meaningful work. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/GTI\_publications/Meaningful-Work.pdf.
- Knausgård, Karl Ove (2009–2011). Min kamp. Oslo: Oktober.
- Knutson, Brian, G. Elliott Wimmer, Camelia M. Kuhnen, and Piotr Winkielman (2008). "Nucleus accumbens activation mediates the influence of reward cues on financial risk taking." In Neuroreport, 19 (5), 509–13. doi: 10.1097/WNR.0b013e3282f85c01, www-psych.stanford.edu/~span/Publications/bk08nr.pdf.
- Koenigs, Michael, Liane Lee Young, Ralph Adolphs, Daniel Tranel, Fiery Cushman, Marc Hauser, and António Rosa Damásio (2007). "Damage to the prefrontal cortex increases utilitarian moral

- judgments.” In Nature, 446 (7138, April 19), 908–11. doi: 10.1038/nature05631, www.nature.com/nature/journal/v446/n7138/pdf/nature05631.pdf.
- Koenigs, Tom (2007). Suicide Attacks in Afghanistan (2001 – 2007). Kabul, Afghanistan: United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan. www.securitycouncilreport.org/atf/cf/%7B65BFCF9B-6D27-4E9C-8CD3-CF6E4FF96FF9%7D/Afgh%202007SuicideAttacks.pdf.
- Koestler, Arthur (1967). The ghost in the machine. London: Hutchinson.
- Koestler, Arthur (1970). “Beyond atomism and holism – the concept of the holon.” In Perspectives in Biology and Medicine, 13 (2), 131–54. doi: 10.1353/pbm.1970.0023. <https://muse.jhu.edu/article/405643>.
- Koestler, Arthur (1974). “The urge to self-destruction.” In The heel of Achilles: Essays 1968 – 1973. London: Hutchinson. Edited version of the Sonning Prize Acceptance Address to the University of Copenhagen, April 1968, and of a paper read at the Fourteenth Nobel Symposium, Stockholm, September 1969.
- Koestler, Arthur (1978). Janus: A summing up. London: Hutchinson.
- Kogon, Eugen (1946/1950). The theory and practice of hell: The German concentration camps and the system behind them. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux. German original Der SS-Staat: Das System der deutschen Konzentrationslager, München, Germany: Karl Alber, 1946.
- Kohn, Alfie (1990). The brighter side of human nature: Altruism and empathy in everyday life. New York: Basic Books.
- Kohout, Barbara (2010). Mara im Kokon: Ein Leben unter Wachturm-Regeln. Leipzig, Germany: Engelsdorfer Verlag.
- Kohut, Heinz (1973). “Thoughts on narcissism and narcissistic rage.” In The psychoanalytic study of the child, edited by Ruth S. Eissler. New York: Quadrangle Books.
- Kolbert, Elizabeth (2006). Field notes from a catastrophe. London: Bloomsbury.
- Kolbert, Elizabeth (2014). The sixth extinction: An unnatural history. New York: Henry Holt.
- Kolås, Åshild (2010). “The 2008 Mumbai terror attacks: (Re-)constructing Indian (counter-)terrorism.” In Critical Studies on Terrorism, 3 (1), 83–98. doi: 10.1080/17539151003594244.
- Kornhuber, Hans Helmut, and Lüder Deecke (1965). “Hirnpotentialänderungen bei Willkürbewegungen und passiven Bewegungen des Menschen: Bereitschaftspotential und reafferente Potentiale.” In Pflüger’s Archiv für die gesamte Physiologie des Menschen und der Tiere, 284 (1), 1–17. doi: 10.1007/BF00412364.
- Korten, David C. (1995). When corporations rule the world. London: Earthscan.
- Korten, David C. (2006). The great turning: From empire to earth community. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler.
- Koschut, Simon (2014). “Emotional (security) communities: The significance of emotion norms in inter-allied conflict management.” In Review of International Studies, 40 (3), 533–58. doi: 10.1017/S0260210513000375.
- Kraidy, Marwan M., and Patrick D. Murphy (2008). “Shifting Geertz: Toward a theory of translocalism in global communication studies.” In Communication Theory, 18 (3), 335–55. doi: 10.1111/j.1468-2885.2008.00325.x. http://repository.upenn.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1331&context=asc\_papers.
- Kraushaar, Wolfgang (2006). Die RAF und der linke Terrorismus, Band 1. Hamburg, Germany: Hamburger Edition.
- Kreindler, Sara A. (2005). “A dual group processes model of individual differences in prejudice.” In Personality and Social Psychology Review, 9 (2), 90–107. doi: 10.1207/s15327957pspr0902_1.
- Kring, Ann M. (2001). “Emotion and psychopathology.” In Emotions: Current issues and future directions, edited by Tracy J. Mayne, and George A. Bonanno. Chapter 11, pp. 337–60. New York: Guilford Press.
- Kroes, Marijn C. W., Guido A. van Wingen, Jonas Wittwer, M. Hasan Mohajeri, Joris Kloek, and Guillén Fernández (2014). “Food can lift mood by affecting mood-regulating neurocircuits via a serotonergic mechanism.” In NeuroImage, 84, 825–32. doi: 10.1016/j.neuroimage.2013.09.041.
- Krogund, Andrew P. (2016). Kniv, sjel og gaffel: På sporet av det sultne mennesket. Oslo: Vega.
- Krolikowski, Alanna (2008). “State personhood in ontological security theories of international relations and Chinese nationalism: A sceptical view.” In The Chinese Journal of International Politics, 2 (1), 109–33. doi: 10.1093/cjip/pon003. <https://academic.oup.com/cjip/article-abstract/2/1/109/319143/State-Personhood-in-Ontological-Security-Theories?rss=1&ssource=mfc>.
- Krone-Schmalz, Gabriele (2007). Was passiert in Russland? München, Germany: Herbig.

- Kronman, Anthony T. (2007). Education's end: Why our colleges and universities have given up on the meaning of life. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Krueger, Alan B. (2016). Where have all the workers gone? Princeton, NJ: Princeton University and NBER. Paper prepared for the Boston Federal Reserve Bank's 60th Economic Conference, October 14, 2016. www.bostonfed.org/-/media/Documents/economic/conf/great-recovery-2016/Alan-B-Krueger.pdf.
- Krueger, Alan B. (2017). What makes a terrorist: Economics and the roots of terrorism. Anniversary edition. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Kruger, Justin, and David Dunning (1999). "Unskilled and unaware of it: How difficulties in recognizing one's own incompetence lead to inflated self-assessments." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 77 (6), 1121–34. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.77.6.1121. http://psych.colorado.edu/~vanboven/teaching/p7536\_heurbias/p7536\_readings/kruger\_dunning.pdf.
- Kruse, Kevin M. (2015). One nation under god: How corporate America invented Christian America. New York: Basic Books.
- Krüger, Jörg, Bertram Nickolay, and Sandro Gaycken (Eds.) (2013). The secure information society: Ethical, legal and political challenges. London: Springer London.
- Krüger, Uwe (2013). Meinungsmacht: Der Einfluss von Eliten auf Leitmedien und Alpha-Journalisten – eine kritische Netzwerkanalyse. Köln, Germany: Herbert von Halem.
- Kuan, Teresa (2015). Love's uncertainty: The politics and ethics of child rearing in contemporary China. Oakland, CA: University of California Press.
- Kuhn, Thomas Samuel (1962). The structure of scientific revolutions. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Kundnani, Arun (2012). "Radicalisation: The journey of a concept." In Race and Class, 54 (2), 3–25. doi: 10.1177/0306396812454984. <http://rac.sagepub.com/content/54/2/3.abstract>.
- Kury, Patrick (2012). Der überforderte Mensch: Eine Wissensgeschichte vom Stress zum Burnout. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Campus.
- Kuźniar, Roman (2009). Poland's foreign policy after 1989. Leverkusen, Germany: Barbara Budrich.
- Kwenda, Chirevo V. (2003). "Cultural justice: The pathway to reconciliation and social cohesion." In What holds us together: Social cohesion in South Africa, edited by David Chidester, Phillip Dexter, and Wilmot James, pp. 67–82. Cape Town, South Africa: Human Sciences Research Council.
- Kühn, Simone, and Marcel Brass (2009). "Retrospective construction of the judgement of free choice." In Consciousness and Cognition, 18 (1), 12–21. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S1053810008001311.
- Kühne, Thomas (2011). "The pleasure of terror: Belonging through genocide." In Pleasure and power in Nazi Germany, edited by Pamela E. Swett, Corey Ross, and Fabrice d'Almeida. Chapter 11, pp. 234–55. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan. www.academia.edu/8525019/\_The\_Pleasure\_of\_Terror\_Belonging\_through\_Genocide\_in\_Fabrice\_dAlmeida\_Corey\_Ross\_and\_Pamela\_Swett\_eds.\_Pleasure\_Power\_and\_Everyday\_Life\_under\_National\_Socialism\_Houndmills\_Palgrave\_Macmillan\_2011\_234-255.
- Lacina, Bethany, Nils Petter Gleditsch, and Bruce Russett (2006). "The declining risk of death in battle." In International Studies Quarterly, 50 (3), 673–80. doi: 10.1111/j.1468-2478.2006.00419.x.
- Laclau, Ernesto (2005). On populist reason. London: Verso.
- Lair, Daniel J., Katie Sullivan, and George Cheney (2005). "Marketization and the recasting of the professional self." In Management Communication Quarterly, 18 (3), 307–43. doi: 10.1177/0893318904270744.
- Lakhani, Suraj (2013). Radicalisation as a moral career: A qualitative study of how people become terrorists in the United Kingdom. Cardiff: Police Science Institute, School of Social Sciences, Cardiff University, doctoral dissertation.
- Lakoff, George P., and Mark L. Johnson (1980). Metaphors we live by. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Lakoff, George P., and Mark L. Johnson (1999). Philosophy in the flesh: The embodied mind and its challenge to western thought. New York: Basic Books.
- Lakoff, George P. (2002). Moral politics: How liberals and conservatives think. 2nd edition. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Lakoff, George P. (2004). Don't think of an elephant! Know your values and frame the debate: The essential guide for progressives. White River Junction, VT: Chelsea Green.

- Lakoff, George P. (2006a). Thinking points: Communicating our American values and vision. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux.
- Lakoff, George P. (2006b). Whose freedom? The battle over America's most important idea. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux. <https://bdgrdemocracy.files.wordpress.com/2014/04/whose-freedom-full-text.pdf>.
- Lakoff, George P. (2016). "Language and emotion." In Emotion Review, 8 (3), 269–73. doi: 10.1177/1754073915595097.
- Lambert, Robert (2008). Salafi and Islamist Londoners: Stigmatised minority faith communities countering al-Qaida. Presentation given at the NATO advanced research workshop 'Indigenous Terrorism: Understanding and Addressing the Root Causes of Radicalisation Among Groups with an Immigrant Heritage in Europe', Budapest, Hungary, 7–9th March, 2008.
- Lambert, Robert (2011). Countering Al-Qaeda in London: Police and Muslims in partnership. London: C. Hurst.
- Lamm, Claus, and Jasminka Majdandzic (2015). "The role of shared neural activations, mirror neurons, and morality in empathy: A critical comment." In Neuroscience Research, 90, 15–24. doi: 10.1016/j.neures.2014.10.008.
- Lamont, Michèle, Silva Grazielle Moraes, Jessica S. Welburn, Joshua Guetzkow, Nissim Mizrahi, Hanna Herzog, and Reis Elisa (2016). Getting respect: Responding to stigma and discrimination in the United States, Brazil, and Israel. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Lane, Robert E. (2001). The loss of happiness in market democracies. New edition. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Langer, Walter Charles (1972). The mind of Adolf Hitler: The secret wartime report. New York: Basic Books.
- Langman, Peter (2015). School shooters: Understanding high school, college, and adult perpetrators. Blue Ridge Summit, PA: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Langner, Ralph (2012). Robust control system networks: How to achieve reliable control after Stuxnet. New York: Momentum Press.
- Lankford, Adam (2009). Human killing machines: Systematic indoctrination in Iran, Nazi Germany, al Qaeda, and Abu Ghraib. Lanham, MD: Lexington Books.
- Lankford, Adam (2013). The myth of martyrdom: What really drives suicide bombers, rampage shooters, and other self-destructive killers. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Lappé, Frances Moore (2016). Farming for a small planet: Agroecology now. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/GTI\_publications/Lapp%C3%A9-Farming-for-a-Small-Planet.pdf.
- Laqueur, Walter (1977). Terrorism. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Laqueur, Walter (2001). A history of terrorism. New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction.
- Laqueur, Walter (2009). Mein 20. Jahrhundert. Stationen eines politischen Lebens. Berlin: Propyläen.
- Larsen, Tord (2009). Den globale samtalen: Om dialogens muligheter. Oslo: Scandinavian Academic Press.
- Lasch, Christopher (1991). The culture of narcissism: American life in an age of diminishing expectations. Revised edition. New York: Norton.
- Laszlo, Alexander (2014). "Connecting the DOTS: The design of thrivable systems through the power of collective intelligence." In Systems Research and Behavioral Science, 31 (5), 586–94. doi: 10.1002/sres.2307.
- Laszlo, Alexander (2015). "Living systems, seeing systems, being systems: Learning to be the system that we wish to see in the world." In Spanda Journal, 1 (2, Systemic Change), www.spanda.org/publications.html#journal.
- Latour, Bruno (2004). "Why has critique run out of steam? From matters of fact to matters of concern." In Critical Inquiry, 30 (2, Winter), 225–48. doi: 10.1086/421123. www.bruno-latour.fr/sites/default/files/89-CRITICAL-INQUIRY-GB.pdf.
- Laverty, Anthony A., Lucia Magee, Carlos A. Monteiro, Sonia Saxena, and Christopher Millett (2015). "Sugar-sweetened and artificially sweetened beverage consumption and adiposity changes: a national longitudinal study (clinical report)." In The Lancet, 386, S49.
- Lawrence, Thomas Edward (1922). Seven pillars of wisdom. Private edition, unabridged Oxford text. Subscribers' Edition text of 1926, http://wikilivres.ca/wiki/Seven\_Pillars\_of\_Wisdom.
- Lawrence, Thomas Edward (1938). "Guerrilla warfare." In Encyclopædia Britannica. Chicago: Encyclopædia Britannica. www.britannica.com/topic/T-E-Lawrence-on-guerrilla-warfare-1984900.
- Lawson, Tony (2015). Essays on the nature and state of the modern economics. London: Routledge.

- Lazare, Aaron (2004). On apology. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Lazarsfeld, Paul F., and Robert K. Merton (1954). "Friendship as social process: A substantive and methodological analysis." In Freedom and control in modern society, edited by Morroe Berger, Theodore Abel, and Charles H. Page, pp. 18–66. Toronto: D. Van Nostrand.
- Le Bon, Gustave (1895/1896). The crowd: A study of the popular mind. London: T. Fisher Unwin. French original La psychologie des foules, Paris: Félix Alcan, 1895.
- Le Bon, Gustave (1915/1916). Psychology of the Great War: The First World War and its origins. Translated by E. Andrews. New York: Macmillan. French original Enseignements psychologiques de la guerre européenne, Paris: Ernest Flammarion, 1915.
- Leach, William R. (1993). Land of desire: From the department store to the Department of Commerce: The rise of America's commercial culture. New York: Pantheon Books.
- Leacock, Eleanor, Virginia Abernethy, Amita Bardhan, Catherine H. Berndt, Judith K. Brown, Beverly N. Chiñas, Ronald Cohen, et al. (1978). "Women's status in egalitarian society: Implications for social evolution." In Current Anthropology, 19 (2, June), 247–75. Based on paper originally given at the annual meeting of the American Anthropological Association in November 1974. www.jstor.org/stable/2741993.
- Leakey, Richard E., and Roger Lewin (1977). Origins: What new discoveries reveal about the emergence of our species and its possible future. New York: E. P. Dutton.
- Lebow, Richard Ned (1981). Between peace and war: The nature of international crisis. Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- Lebow, Victor (1955). "Price competition in 1955." In Journal of Retailing, Spring. hundredgoals.files.wordpress.com/2009/05/journal-of-retailing.pdf.
- Lecercle, Jean-Jacques (2002). Deleuze and language. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Lee, Benjamin (1995). "Critical Internationalism." In Public Culture, 7 (3), 559–92. doi: 10.1215/08992363-7-3-559. <http://publicculture.dukejournals.org/content/7/3/559.short>.
- Lee, Richard B., and Irven DeVore (Eds.) (1968). Man the hunter: The first intensive survey of a single, crucial stage of human development – man's once universal hunting way of life. New Brunswick, NJ: AldineTransaction, collection of papers presented at the symposium 'Man the Hunter', held at the Center for Continuing Education at the University of Chicago, April 6–9, 1966.
- Lee, Wayne E. (2015). "When did warfare begin? Archaeology, evolution, and the early evidence of conflict." In Quarterly Journal of Military History, 27 (2, Winter), 64–71.
- Leep, Matthew Coen (2010). "The affective production of others: United States policy towards the Israeli-Palestinian conflict." In Cooperation and Conflict, 45 (3), 331–52. doi: 10.1177/0010836710378617.
- LeGates, Marlene (2001). In their time: A history of feminism in Western society. New York: Routledge.
- Leidner, Bernhard, Hammad Sheikh, and Jeremy Ginges (2012). "Affective dimensions of intergroup humiliation." In Public Library of Science (PLOS) One, 7 (9), e46375. doi: 10.1371/journal.pone.0046375.
- Leighton, Alexander H. (1959). My name is legion: Foundations for a theory of man in relation to culture. New York: Basic Books.
- Leiss, William (1976). The limits to satisfaction: An essay on the problem of needs and commodities. Toronto: University of Toronto Press.
- Leonhardt, Wolfgang (2009). 'Hannoversche Geschichten' – Berichte aus verschiedenen Stadtteilen. Norderstedt, Germany: Books on Demand.
- Leontiev, Aleksei Nikolaevich (1975/1978). Activity, consciousness, and personality. Translated by Marie J. Hall. Pacifica, CA: Marxist Internet Archive. Russian original Деятельность. Сознание. Личность, Moscow: Politisdat, 1975. <http://marxistsfr.org/archive/leontev/works/activity-consciousness.pdf>.
- Lepper, Mark R., David Greene, and Richard E. Nisbett (1973). "Undermining children's intrinsic interest with extrinsic reward: A test of the 'overjustification' hypothesis." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 28 (1, October), 129–37. doi: 10.1037/h0035519.
- Lerner, Melvin J. (1980). The belief in a just world: A fundamental delusion. New York: Plenum.
- LeShan, Lawrence (1992). The psychology of war: Comprehending its mystique and its madness. Chicago: Noble Press.
- Leung, Angela K. Y., and Dov Cohen (2011). "Within- and between-culture variation: Individual differences and the cultural logics of honor, face, and dignity cultures." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 100 (3), 507–26. doi: 10.1037/a0022151.

- Levesque, Shannon, Michael Surace, Jacob McDonald, and Michelle Block (2011). "Air pollution and the brain: Subchronic diesel exhaust exposure causes neuroinflammation and elevates early markers of neurodegenerative disease." In Journal of Neuroinflammation, 8 (1), 105–05. doi: 10.1186/1742-2094-8-105.
- Lévinas, Emmanuel (1961/1969). Totality and infinity: An essay on exteriority. Translated by Alphonso Lingis. Pittsburgh, PA: Duquesne University Press. French original Totalité et infini: Essai sur l'extériorité, The Hague, The Netherlands: Martinus Nijhoff, 1961.
- Lévinas, Emmanuel (1982). Éthique et infini – Dialogues avec Philippe Nemo. Paris: Fayard.
- Lévinas, Emmanuel (1985a). "The face." In Ethics and infinity: Conversations with Philippe Nemo. Chapter 7. Pittsburgh, PA: Duquesne University Press.
http://hermitmusic.tripod.com/levinas\_ethics\_infinity.pdf.
- Lévinas, Emmanuel (1985b). "Responsibility for the other." In Ethics and infinity: Conversations with Philippe Nemo. Chapter 8, pp. 93–101. Pittsburgh, PA: Duquesne University Press.
http://hermitmusic.tripod.com/levinas\_ethics\_infinity.pdf.
- Levine, Bruce E. (2007). Surviving America's depression epidemic: How to find morale, energy, and community in a world gone crazy. White River Junction, VT: Chelsea Green Publishing.
- Levine, Madeline (2006). The price of privilege: How parental pressure and material advantage are creating a generation of disconnected and unhappy kids. New York: HarperCollins.
- Levitt, Kari (2002). Silent surrender: The multinational corporation in Canada. Montreal, QC: McGill-Queen's University Press.
- Levy, Howard S. (1992). The lotus lovers: The complete history of the curious erotic custom of footbinding in China. Buffalo, NY: Prometheus Books.
- Lewin, Kurt (1941). "Defining the 'field at a given time'." In Psychological Review, 50 (3), 292–310. doi: 10.1037/h0062738.
- Lewin, Kurt, and Dorwin Cartwright (1951). Field theory in social science: Selected theoretical papers. New York: Harper and Brothers.
- Lewis, Harry R. (2006). Excellence without a soul: How a great university forgot education. New York: Public Affairs.
- Lewis, Helen Block (1971). Shame and guilt in neurosis. New York: International Universities Press.
- Lewis, Helen Block (Ed.) (1987). The role of shame in symptom formation. Hillsdale, NJ: Erlbaum.
- Lewis, Ioan Myrddin (1961). A pastoral democracy: A study of pastoralism and politics among the Northern Somali of the Horn of Africa. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Lewis, Ioan Myrddin (1998). Peoples of the Horn of Africa: Somali, Afar and Saho. London: Haan.
- Lewis, Michael M. (1989). Liar's poker: Rising through the wreckage on Wall Street. New York: Norton.
- Lewis, Michael M. (2010). The big short: Inside the doomsday machine. New York: Norton.
- Lewontin, Richard (1991). Biology as ideology: The doctrine of DNA. New York: Harper Perennial.
- Lia, Brynjar (2006). "The al-Qaida strategist Abu Mus'ab al-Suri: A profile." In FFI rapport-2006/00935: Paths to global jihad: Radicalisation and recruitment to terror networks, edited by Laila Bokhari, Thomas Hegghammer, Brynjar Lia, Petter Nesser, and Truls H. Tonnessen. Chapter 5, pp. 39–53. Kjeller, Norway: Norwegian Defence Research Establishment. Proceedings from a Forsvarets forskningsinstitutt (FFI) seminar, Oslo, 15 March 2006.
<https://docs.google.com/viewer?a=v&pid=sites&srcid=ZGVmYXVsdGRvbWFpbXbWpbnxqaWhhZGlzbXN0dWRpZXNuZXhR8Z3g6MWI0MTY5MjVjYmJmNTM5Yg>.
- Liberman, Varda, Steven M. Samuels, and Lee D. Ross (2004). "The name of the game: Predictive power of reputations versus situational labels in determining prisoner's dilemma game moves." In Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, 30 (9), 1175–85. doi: 10.1177/0146167204264004.
<http://psp.sagepub.com/content/30/9/1175.abstract>.
- Libet, Benjamin, Curtis A. Gleason, Elwood W. Wright, and Dennis K. Pearl (1983). "Time of conscious intention to act in relation to onset of cerebral activity (readiness-potential)." In The Unconscious Initiation of a Freely Voluntary Act, 106 (3), 623–42. doi: 10.1093/brain/106.3.623.
<http://brain.oxfordjournals.org/brain/106/3/623.full.pdf>.
- Lieberman, Matthew D. (2015). Social: Why our brains are wired to connect. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Lietaer, Bernard A., Christian Arnspurger, Sally Goerner, and Stefan Brunnhuber (2012). Money and sustainability: The missing link. Axminster: Triarchy Press, a report from the Club of Rome-EU Chapter to Finance Watch and the World Business Academy.

- Lifton, Robert Jay (1993). The protean self: Human resilience in the age of fragmentation. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Lifton, Robert Jay (2003). Super power syndrome: America's apocalyptic confrontation with the world. New York: Nations Books.
- Lin, Chun, and Gregor Benton (2010). Was Mao really a monster? The academic response to Chang and Halliday's Mao, the unknown story. London: Routledge.
- Lindlof, Thomas R., and Bryan Copeland Taylor (2011). Qualitative communication research methods. 3rd edition. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (1995a). National identity, ethics, and rational choice: Their influences on national willingness to share sovereignty. Oslo: Project proposal developed together with The Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), for the Norwegian Research Council. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (1995b). Identity, security, and rising Islamic fundamentalism: A study of attitudes of Muslim immigrant groups in France, Germany, and The Netherlands. Oslo: Project proposal developed with the Peace Research Institute, Oslo (PRIO), for the European Programme Human Capital and Mobility. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (1996). The feeling of being humiliated: A central theme in armed conflicts. A study of the role of humiliation in Somalia, and Great Lakes Region, between the warring parties, and in relation to third intervening parties. Outline of research project. Oslo: Doctoral project description, University of Oslo, Department of Psychology, The Norwegian Research Council, Department of Multilateral Affairs, The Royal Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. See also the French version Le sentiment d'être humilié: Un Thème central dans des conflits armés. Une étude du rôle de humiliation en Somalie et Burundi/Rwanda, parmi les partis belligérants, et par rapport aux tiers partis intervenants. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (1999). "Women in the global village: Increasing demand for traditional communication patterns." In Towards a women's agenda for a culture of peace, edited by Ingeborg Breines, Dorota Gierycz, and Betty A. Reardon. Chapter 5, pp. 89–98. Paris: UNESCO Publishing.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000a). "Hitler, shame and humiliation: The intricate web of feelings among the German population towards Hitler." In Medlemsblad for Norske leger mot atomvåpen, med bidrag fra psykologer for fred, 1, 28–30.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000b). "Were ordinary Germans Hitler's 'willing executioners'? Or were they victims of humiliating seduction and abandonment? The case of Germany and Somalia." In IDEA: A Journal of Social Issues, 5 (1). www.ideajournal.com/articles.php?id=31, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000c). Humiliation in the flesh. Honour is "FACE", arrogance is "NOSE UP", and humiliation is "TO BE PUT DOWN". Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000d). Humiliation, human rights, and global corporate responsibility. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000e). The psychology of humiliation: Somalia, Rwanda / Burundi, and Hitler's Germany. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology, doctoral dissertation in psychology.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000f). Transnational corporations and the global poor: From humiliation to dialogue. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology, postdoctoral research proposal. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000g). Recognition or humiliation – The psychology of intercultural communication. Bergen, Norway: Proceedings of the ISSEI Millennium Conference Approaching a New Millennium: Lessons from the Past – Prospects for the Future, the 7th Conference of the International Society for the Study of European Ideas, Bergen, Norway, 14th–18th August, 2000. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000h). "Were the Germans Hitler's 'willing executioners'?" In Medlemsblad for Norske leger mot atomvåpen, med bidrag fra psykologer for fred, 2, 26–29.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2000i). "Were Hitler and Siad Barre 'Robin Hoods' who felt humiliated by their own followers? (Part I)." In Medlemsblad for Norske leger mot atomvåpen, med bidrag fra psykologer for fred, 3, 20–25.

- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001a). "How research can humiliate: Critical reflections on method." In Journal for the Study of Peace and Conflict, Annual Edition 2001-2002, 16–36. jspc.library.wisc.edu, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001b). Towards a theory of humiliation: Somalia, Rwanda / Burundi, and Hitler's Germany. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology, draft for Habilitation submitted to the University of Regensburg, Germany, Department of Psychology, October 2001. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001c). "Humiliation – Trauma that has been overlooked: An analysis based on fieldwork in Germany, Rwanda/Burundi, and Somalia." In TRAUMATOLOGY, 7 (1), Article 3 (32 pages). <http://tmt.sagepub.com/cgi/content/abstract/7/1/43>, www.fsu.edu/%7Etrauma/v7/Humiliation.pdf, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001d). The concept of humiliation: Its universal core and culture-dependent periphery. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001e). "How research can humiliate: Critical reflections on method." In Journal for the Study of Peace and Conflict, Annual Edition 2001 – 2002, 16–36. <http://jspc.library.wisc.edu>.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001f). "Humiliation as the source of terrorism: A new paradigm." In Peace Research: The Canadian Journal of Peace Studies, 33 (2), 59–68. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001g). Moratorium on humiliation: Cultural and "human factor" dimensions underlying structural violence. New York: Discussion paper presented at the expert group meeting on Structural Threats to Social Integration: Indicators for Conflict Prevention, Session 2: Structural Threats to Social Integrity, organized by the Social Integration Branch of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs, Division for Social Policy and Development, December 18–20, 2001, New York City. www.un.org/esa/socdev, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001h). "Were Hitler and Siad Barre 'Robin Hoods' who felt humiliated by their own followers? (Part II)." In Medlemsblad for Norske leger mot atomvåpen, med bidrag fra psykologer for fred, 1, 20–23.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001i). "Women and terrorism: The lessons of humiliation." In New Routes: A Journal for Peace Research and Action, 6, Special Issue: Targeting Women (3), 10–12. www.life-peace.org/newroutes/newroutes2001/nr200103/lessonsofhum0301.htm, also in RBSE, v.1, n.1, pp. 76–92, Joao Pessoa, GREM, abril de 2002, on www.rbse.rg3.net as artigo ISSN 1676-8965, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001j). Women and terrorism: The lessons of humiliation. Trondheim, Norway: Paper given at the Conference on Social and Community Psychology, University of Trondheim (NTNU), Department of Psychology, 9th October 2001. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2001k). The psychology of humiliation – Summary of results and what the research on humiliation added to pre-existing knowledge. Oslo: University of Oslo, Department of Psychology. Spanish summary / versión Española, translated into Spanish by Sara Horowitz. www.peace.ca/humiliation.htm, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2002). "Healing the cycles of humiliation: How to attend to the emotional aspects of 'unsolvable' conflicts and the use of 'humiliation entrepreneurship'." In Peace and Conflict: Journal of Peace Psychology, 8 (2), 125–38. doi: 10.1207/S15327949PAC0802_02. www.informaworld.com/smpp/ftinterface~content=a785828772~fulltext=713240930.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2004a). "Gendercide and humiliation in honor and human-rights societies." In Gendercide and genocide, edited by Adam Jones. Chapter 2, pp. 39–61. Nashville, TN: Vanderbilt University Press.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2004b). Humiliation as psychological risk factor for terrorism. Stockholm: Lecture given at Riskkollegiet / Society of Risk Sciences, invited by Olof Söderberg, 12th October 2004. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda, and Stefan Backe (2004). "Referat av Stefan Backe från seminariet 'Humiliation as psychological risk factor for terrorism?'" In Risknytt (1), 2–5. www.riskkollegiet.nu/, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.

- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2005a). "Parents – The role model." In Sahil, 14 (32, April-June), 9, long version, 'Parenting styles and their impact on children: Humiliation, abuse and neglect'. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2005b). Globalization, human rights, terrorism, and humiliation. New York: Lecture at the Program on Global Security and Cooperation of the Social Science Research Council (SSRC), invited by Bernice Ortega, December 6, 2005. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2005c). Mature differentiation as response to terrorism and humiliation: Refrain from the language of "war" and "evil". Lund, Sweden: The Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research, 22nd September 2005. www.oldsite.transnational.org/SAJT/tff/people/e\_lindner.html.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2006a). "Humiliation and reactions to Hitler's seductiveness in post-war Germany: Personal reflections." In Social Alternatives, 25 (1, Special Issue: Humiliation and History in Global Perspectives, First Quarter), 6–11, edited by Bertram Wyatt-Brown, upon invitation by D. Raja Ganesan. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2006b). Is it possible to "change the world"? Some guidelines to how we can build a more decent and dignified world effectively: The case of dignifying abusers. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2006c). "The cartoon war" of humiliation versus humiliation: What should be done? Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2006d). Making enemies: Humiliation and international conflict. Westport, CT: Praeger Security International, Greenwood.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda, and Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies network members (2006–2017). Appreciative nurturing. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2007a). How the human rights ideal of equal dignity separates humiliation from shame. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2007b). How multicultural discourses can help construct new meaning. Paper presented at the 2nd International Conference on Multicultural Discourses, 13–15th April 2007, followed by the 9th Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, Institute of Discourse and Cultural Studies, and Department of Applied Psychology, Zhejiang University, Hangzhou, China. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2007c). Psychological factors in Euro-Arab relations. Alexandria, Egypt: Lecture as part of the pilot course Young Swedish Muslim Peace Agents, 19th–27th January 2007, at the Swedish Institute, with Director Jan Henningsson, 2nd January 2007. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2007d). "Avoiding humiliation – From intercultural communication to global interhuman communication." In Journal of Intercultural Communication, SIETAR Japan, 10, 21–38. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2008a). "Beginning to understand the causes of conflicts and terrorism – and finding ways to transcend them." In Creativity: With Pakistani children's drawings, edited by Atle Hetland. Islamabad: Pakistan – Norway Association (PANA): An International Friendship Association in Pakistan. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2008b). "Why there can be no conflict resolution as long as people are being humiliated." In International Review of Education, Volume 55 (May 2–3, 2009, Special Issue on Education for Reconciliation and Conflict Resolution), 157–84. doi: 10.1007/s11159-008-9125-9, published OnlineFirst on December 27, 2008, at www.springerlink.com/content/bg5g32x832152953/?p=61dc6cf755b1443c83e89d49221b3e7a&pi=1, including the short version of Finn Tschudi's response and Evelin Lindner's rejoinder; long version at humiliationstudies.org/documents/evelin/ReconciliationforBirgitFinnEvelinlonginterview.pdf.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2009a). "Genocide, humiliation, and inferiority: An interdisciplinary perspective." In Genocides by the oppressed: Subaltern genocide in theory and practice, edited by Nicholas A. Robins, and Adam Jones. Chapter 7, pp. 138–58. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.

- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2009b). "Why there can be no conflict resolution as long as people are being humiliated." In International Review of Education, 55 (May 2–3, Special Issue on Education for Reconciliation and Conflict Resolution), 157–84. doi: 10.1007/s11159-008-9125-9, published OnlineFirst December 27, 2008, at www.springerlink.com/content/bg5g32x832152953/?p=61dc6cf755b1443c83e89d49221b3e7a&pi=1, including the short version of Finn Tschudi's response and Evelin Lindner's rejoinder; long version at humiliationstudies.org/documents/evelin/ReconciliationforBirgitFinnEvelinlonginterview.pdf.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2009c). What Asia can contribute to world peace: The role of dignity and humiliation. Background text for two papers: (1) "How Asia Can Contribute to World Peace Psychology: The Role of Dignity and Humiliation", in Cristina Montiel and Noraini Noor (Eds.), The Theory and Practice of Peace Psychology in Asia, New York, NY: Springer Science and Business Media, 2008; (2) "Peace and Dignity: More than the Absence of Humiliation – What We Can Learn From the Asia-Pacific Region", in The Australian Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies: Occasional Papers Series, Brisbane, Australia: University of Queensland, Australian Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies (ACPACS), after the author had spent one month (August 2007) at ACPACS and had given a lecture on The Role of Dignity and Humiliation for Peace and Conflict Studies on 14th August 2007. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2009d). Emotion and conflict: How human rights can dignify emotion and help us wage good conflict. Westport, CT: Praeger, Greenwood.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2009e). "Humiliation and global terrorism: How to overcome it nonviolently." In Encyclopedia of life support systems: Nonviolent alternatives for social change, edited by Ralph Summy, pp. 227–48. Oxford: Encyclopedia of Life Support Systems (EOLSS), developed under the auspices of UNESCO. www.eolss.net/sample-chapters/c04/e6-120-13.pdf, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2009f). Peace and dignity: More than the absence of humiliation – what we can learn from the Asia-Pacific region. Paper written for the Australian Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies (ACPACS). www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda, Thomas M. Pick, Anne Speckhard, and Beatrice Jacuch (2009). "The relevance of humiliation studies for the prevention of terrorism." In Home-grown terrorism: Understanding and addressing the root causes of radicalisation among groups with an immigrant heritage in Europe, edited by Thomas M. Pick, Anne Speckhard, and Beatrice Jacuch. Chapter Section 3, pp. 163–88. Amsterdam, The Netherlands: IOS Press, supported by the NATO Science for Peace and Security Programme, E: Human and Societal Dynamics, Vol. 60, 2009. Proceedings of the NATO advanced research workshop Indigenous Terrorism: Understanding and Addressing the Root Causes of Radicalisation Among Groups with an Immigrant Heritage in Europe, Budapest, Hungary, 7–9th March, 2008. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2010a). "Traumatized by humiliation in times of globalization: Transforming humiliation into constructive meaning." In Mass trauma and emotional healing around the world: Rituals and practices for resilience, Vol. 2: Human-made disasters, edited by Ani Kalayjian, and Dominique Eugene. Chapter 20, pp. 361–82. Santa Barbara, CA: Praeger, ABC-CLIO.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2010b). "Disasters as a chance to implement novel solutions that highlight attention to human dignity." In Rebuilding sustainable communities for children and their families after disasters: A global survey, edited by Adenrele Awotona, pp. 335–58. Newcastle upon Tyne: Cambridge Scholars Publishing.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda, and Desmond Tutu (Foreword) (2010). Gender, humiliation, and global security: Dignifying relationships from love, sex, and parenthood to world affairs. Santa Barbara, CA: Praeger, ABC-CLIO.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2011). Terror in Norway: How can we continue from a point of utter despair? Promoting a dignity culture, not just locally, but globally. Dunedin, New Zealand: Paper prepared for the 17th Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies "Enlarging the Boundaries of Compassion", in Dunedin, New Zealand, 29th August–1st September 2011. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012a). Humiliation and terrorism. Oslo: Course PSYC3203, Anvendt sosialpsykologi, Universitet i Oslo / University of Oslo, Psykologisk institutt / Department of Psychology, 25th January 2012. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.

- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012b). "Fostering global citizenship." In The psychological components of sustainable peace, edited by Morton Deutsch, and Peter T. Coleman. Chapter 15, pp. 283–98. New York: Springer.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012c). Creating a dignified world: A video message to the Brazilian people from Evelin Lindner. Brasilia, Brasil: Comissão de Direitos Humanos e Minorias (Committee for Human Rights and Minorities), Câmara dos Deputados (Chamber of Deputies), 5th June 2012. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012d). Shame, humiliation, and humility: How human rights ideals impact their roles in the continuum of balance and the continuum of toxicity Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, reflections in response to Hélène Lewis questions in connection with her work on shame. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012e). South America 2012: Reflections on a "digniventure". Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012f). A dignity economy: Creating an economy which serves human dignity and preserves our planet. Lake Oswego, OR: World Dignity University Press.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2012g). After 22nd July: Humiliation and terrorism. Oslo: Lecture at the University of Oslo, Centre for Gender Research / Senter for tverrfaglig kjønnsforskning, 8th February 2012. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2013). Who we are and our latest news. Stellenbosch, South Africa: Introductory presentation, 24th April 2013, 21st Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies "Search for Dignity", at the University of Stellenbosch, 24th–27th April 2013. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda, and Robert Morrell (2013). Human dignity and humiliation studies: Transdisciplinarity in practice. Cape Town, South Africa: Workshop on "Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies: Transdisciplinarity in Practice", convened by Robert Morrell, University of Cape Town, co-ordinator of the Programme for the Enhancement of Research Capacity (PERC), 4th July 2013. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda, and Kosheek Sewchurran (2013). A dignity economy. Cape Town, South Africa: Lunch time discussion to trace the connections between "A Dignity Economy", "Values Based Leadership", "Inclusive Innovation", "Business Model Innovation", and "Management and Leadership Education", convened by Kosheek Sewchurran, University of Cape Town, Graduate School of Business, Innovation Management and Information Systems, 5th July 2013. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin021.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2014a). "Urban dignity – global dignity: What is it? How do we achieve it? Part 1 and Part 2." In Journal of Urban Culture Research, 8 and 9, Arts and Social Outreach – Designs for Urban Dignity (January – June, and July – December), 8–22, and 8–34. Part 1: 8–22, www.cujucr.com/downloads/JUCR%20Vol8%202014-F.pdf, Part 2: 8–34, www.cujucr.com/downloads/JUCR%20Vol9%202014-F.pdf.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2014b). "Living globally: Global citizenship of dignity and care as personal practice." In Global citizen: Challenges and responsibility in an interconnected world, edited by Aksel Braanen Sterri. Chapter 3, pp. 15–26. Rotterdam, The Netherlands: Sense Publishers. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2014c). The terrorist. Chapter for the forthcoming book Understanding the Self of Suicidal Behaviour Among Ethnic Minorities: Who Is Killing Whom? edited by Latha Nruham. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2014d). "Emotion and conflict: Why it is important to understand how emotions affect conflict and how conflict affects emotions." In The handbook of conflict resolution: Theory and practice, edited by Morton Deutsch, Peter T. Coleman, and Eric C. Marcus. Chapter 12, pp. 283–309. San Francisco, CA: Jossey-Bass. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2015a). Tannhäuser, terrorism, revolution, and economism. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2015b). Reflections on the 25th Dignity Conference in Rwanda in 2015. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2016a). Publication list of Evelin Lindner. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2016b). Cities at risk – From humiliation to dignity: A journey from Sarajevo to Dubrovnik, or the case of Southeast Europe. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. Paper

- written for the 27th Annual Dignity Conference “Cities at Risk – From Humiliation to Dignity”, in Dubrovnik, Croatia, 19th–23rd September 2016.
www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2016c). The journey of humiliation and dignity, and the significance of the year 1757. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.
www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2016d). Reflection on Journey to Earthland: The great transition to planetary civilization. Boston: Great Transition Initiative, Evelin Lindner on the importance of the affective and institutional dimensions of global citizenship, reflecting on Paul Raskin’s book, Journey to Earthland: The Great Transition to Planetary Civilization, Boston: Tellus Institute, 2016.
www.greattransition.org/publication/jte-reflections-lindner.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2016e). “Auswirkungen von Demütigung auf Menschen und Völker.” In Gehirne zwischen Liebe und Krieg: Menschlichkeit im Zeitalter der Neurowissenschaften, edited by Helmut Fink, and Rainer Rosenzweig. Chapter 3, pp. 41–73. Münster, Germany: mentis.
www.satzundsonders.de/transfer/FinkRosenzweig10\_BeitragLindner.pdf.
- Lindner, Evelin Gerda (2017). A global life design: Reflections and a chronological description, 2006 – 2017. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.
www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/09.php#chronology.
- Lindstrom, Lamont (1993). Cargo cult: Strange stories of desire from Melanesia and beyond. Honolulu, HI: University of Hawaii Press.
- Linklater, Andrew (2005). “Dialogic politics and the civilising process.” In Review of International Studies, 31 (1), 141–54. doi: 10.1017/S0260210505006340.
- Linn, Vaddhaka (2015). The Buddha on wall street: What’s wrong with capitalism and what we can do. Cambridge: Windhorse
- Linser, Josef-Harry (2016). Josef-Harry Linser’s life story. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.
www.humiliationstudies.org/publications/publications.php#linser.
- Linton, Sally (1974). “Woman the gatherer: Male bias in anthropology.” In Women in perspective: A guide for cross-cultural studies, edited by Sue-Ellen Jacobs, pp. 9–21. Urbana: University of Illinois Press.
- Lipton, Michael, and Emanuel De Kadt (1988). Agriculture-health linkages. Geneva, Switzerland: World Health Organization.
- Lira, Elizabeth (2001). “Violence, fear, and impunity: Reflections on subjective and political obstacles for peace.” In Peace and Conflict: Journal of Peace Psychology, 7 (2), 109–18. doi: 10.1207/S15327949PAC0702_02.
- Litz, Brett T., Nathan Stein, Eileen Delaney, Leslie Lebowitz, William P. Nash, Caroline Silva, and Shira Maguen (2009). “Moral injury and moral repair in war veterans: A preliminary model and intervention strategy.” In Clinical Psychology Review, 29 (8), 695–706. doi: 10.1016/j.cpr.2009.07.003. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0272735809000920.
- Loewenstein, Antony (2015). Disaster capitalism: Making a killing out of catastrophe. London: Verso.
- Lofgren, Mike (2016). The deep state: The fall of the constitution and the rise of a shadow government. New York: Viking.
- Logiest, Guy (1982). Mission au Rwanda. Un blanc dans la bagarre Hutu-Tutsi. Bruxelles: Didier Hatier.
- Lohmann, Georg (2014). “Ethik der radikalen Endlichkeit.” In Information Philosophie, 42 (1), 5–11.
- Lord, Charles G., Lee D. Ross, Mark R. Lepper, and Clyde Hendrick (1979). “Biased assimilation and attitude polarization: The effects of prior theories on subsequently considered evidence.” In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 37 (11), 2098–109. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.37.11.2098.
- Lorenz, Konrad (1963/1966). On aggression. Translated by Marjorie Latzke. London: Methuen.
 German original Das sogenannte Böse. Zur Naturgeschichte der Aggression, Wien, Austria: Dr. G. Borotha-Schoeler Verlag, 1963.
- Lotto, David (2016). Terrorism: An overview. In press.
- Lowman, Rodney L. (2013). Internationalizing multiculturalism: Expanding professional competencies in a globalized world. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association.
- Lu Xun (1981). Call to arms (Na Han). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lu Xun (2000a). “A madman’s diary.” In Call to arms (Na Han). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.

- Lu Xun (2000b). "The true story of Ah Q (A Q Zhengzhuan)." In Call to arms (Na Han). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lu Xun (2002a). Wandering (Pang Huang). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lu Xun (2002b). Old tales retold (Gu Shi Xin Bian). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lu Xun (2002c). Lu Xun selected poems. Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lu Xun (2003). Dawn blossoms plucked at dusk (Zhao Hua Xi Shi). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lu Xun (2004). Wild grass (Ye Cao). Beijing: Foreign Languages Press.
- Lugard, Frederick John Dealtry (1965). The dual mandate in British tropical Africa. London: Frank Cass.
- Lukacs, John (1997). The Hitler of history. New York: Vintage.
- Lunati, M. Teresa (1992). "On altruism and cooperation." In Methodus, 4 (December), 69–75. www.helsinki.fi/jarj/inem/methodus/pdf/v4n2/v4n2p69.pdf.
- Luo, Zhitian T. (1993). "National humiliation and national assertion – The Chinese response to the twenty-one demands." In Modern Asian Studies, 27 (2), 297–319. doi: 10.1017/S0026749X00011501.
- Lurås, Helge (2015). Hva truer Norge nå? Sikkerhetspolitiske selvbedrag etter den kalde krigen. Oslo: Cappelen Damm.
- Lutz, Catherine A., and Lila Abu-Lughod (1990). Language and the politics of emotion. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Lüders, Michael (2015). Wer den Wind sät. Was westliche Politik im Orient anrichtet. München, Germany: C.H. Beck.
- Lüders, Michael (2017). Wer den Wind sät: Was westliche Politik im Orient anrichtet. München, Germany: C.H. Beck.
- Lykes, M. Brinton (2001). "Human rights violations as structural violence." In Peace, conflict, and violence: Peace psychology for the 21st century, edited by Daniel J. Christie, Richard V. Wagner, and Deborah Du Nann Winter, pp. 158–67. Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice-Hall.
- Lynch, Jake (2013). A global standard for reporting conflict. New York: Routledge.
- Lyons-Padilla, Sarah, Michele J. Gelfand, Hedieh Mirahmadi, Mehreen Farooq, and Marieke van Egmond (2015). "Belonging nowhere: Marginalization and radicalization risk among Muslim immigrants." In Behavioral Science and Policy, 1 (2), 1–12. https://behavioralpolicy.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/1-2/BSP\_vol1no2\_Lyons\_final.pdf.
- Lyons, John O. (1978). The invention of the self. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press.
- Lyons, Oren (1980). "An Iroquois perspective." In American Indian environments: Ecological issues in native American history, edited by Christopher T. Vecsey, Robert W. Venables, and Kai T. Erikson, pp. 171–74. Syracuse, NY: Syracuse University Press.
- Lyotard, Jean-Francois (1979/1984). The postmodern condition: A report on knowledge. Translated by Geoffrey Bennington, and Brian Massumi. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press. French original La condition postmoderne: Rapport sur le savoir, Paris: Éditions de Minuit, 1979.
- Lyotard, Jean-François (1974/1983). Libidinal economy. Translated by Iain Hamilton Grant. Bloomington, IN: Indiana University Press. French original Économie Libidinale, Paris: Minuit, 1974.
- Maalouf, Amin (1998/2000). In the name of identity: Violence and the need to belong. Translated by Barbara Bray. New York: Arcade. French original Les Identités Meurtrières, Paris: Grasset, 1998.
- Maalouf, Amin (2009). Le dérèglement du monde: Quand nos civilisations s'épuisent. Paris: Grasset.
- MacDonald, Geoff, and Lauri A. Jensen-Campbell (Eds.) (2011). Social pain: Neuropsychological and health implications of loss and exclusion. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association.
- Machiavelli, Niccolò (1532). Il Principe. Rome: Antonio Blado d'Asola.
- MacIntyre, Alasdair, and D. R. Bell (1967). "Symposium: The idea of a social science." In Proceedings of the Aristotelian Society, 41, 95–132. www.jstor.org/stable/4106718.
- Mack, Andrew, and Zoe Nielsen (2010). Human security report 2009/2010: The causes of peace and the shrinking costs of war. Vancouver, BC: Human Security Report Project, Simon Fraser University. <http://hsrgroup.org/human-security-reports/20092010/overview.aspx>.
- Mackay, Hugh (1994). Why don't people listen? Solving the communication problem. Sydney: Pan Macmillan Australia.
- Macklin, Ruth (2003). "Dignity is a useless concept." In British Medical Journal, 327 (7429, December), 1419–20. doi: 10.1136/bmj.327.7429.1419. www.bmj.com/bmj/327/7429/1419.full.pdf.

- MacLure, Maggie (2015). "The 'new materialisms': A thorn in the flesh of critical qualitative inquiry?" In Critical qualitative inquiry: foundations and futures, edited by Gaile S. Cannella, Michelle Perez, and Penny A. Pasque. Walnut Creek, CA: Left Coast Press. <https://e-space.mmu.ac.uk/596897/2/post-criticalLATEST.pdf>.
- MacMurray, John (1949/1991). Conditions of freedom. Humanity Books. Original Toronto: Ryerson Press, 1949.
- Macmurray, John (1961). Persons in relation. London: Faber and Faber. Fulltext at The Gifford Lectures Online. www.giffordlectures.org/books/persons-relation.
- Macpherson, Crawford Brough (1962). The political theory of possessive individualism: Hobbes to Locke. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Madsen, Ole Jacob (2014a). "Psychology oblivious to psychology: Some limits on our capacity for processing psychology in society." In Theory and Psychology, 24 (5), 609–29. doi: 10.1177/0959354314543969. <http://tap.sagepub.com/content/24/5/609.abstract>.
- Madsen, Ole Jacob (2014b). The therapeutic turn: How psychology altered western culture. London: Routledge.
- Magdoff, Fred, and John Bellamy Foster (2011). What every environmentalist needs to know about capitalism: A citizen's guide to capitalism and the environment. New York: Monthly Review Press.
- Maine, Henry Sumner Sir (1861). Ancient law: Its connection with the early history of society, and its relation to modern ideas. Boston: Beacon Press.
<https://archive.org/stream/ancientlawitsco18maingooog#page/n6/mode/2up>.
- Malcolm, Noel (1998). Kosovo: A short history. London: Papermac.
- Malinowski, Bronislaw (1944). A scientific theory of culture and other essays. Chapel Hill: The University of North Carolina Press.
- Malinowski, Stephan (2005). "From king to Führer: The German aristocracy and the Nazi movement." pp. S.5–28. London: German Historical Institute London.
- Mallmann, Klaus-Michael, Jochen Böhrer, and Matthäus Jürgen (2008). Einsatzgruppen in Polen. Darstellung und Dokumentation. Darmstadt, Germany: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft.
- Malthus, T. R. (1798). An essay on the principle of population, as it affects the future improvement of society. With remarks on the speculations of Mr. Godwin, M. Condorcet, and other writers. London: printed for J. Johnson.
- Managhan, Tina (2012). Gender, agency and war: The maternalized body in US foreign policy. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Manicas, Peter T. (2006). A realist philosophy of social science: Explanation and understanding. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Mann, Barbara Alice (2000). Iroquoian women, the Gantowisas. New York: Peter Lang.
- Mann, Charles C. (2005). 1491: New revelations of the Americas before Columbus. New York: Knopf.
- Mann, James (2004a). Rise of the vulcans: The history of Bush's war cabinet. New York: Viking.
- Mann, Jonathan M. (1997). "Medicine and public health, ethics and human rights." In The Hastings Center Report, 27 (3, May-June), 6–13. www.jstor.org/stable/3528660.
- Mann, Michael (2004b). Fascists. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Manning, Richard (2004). Against the grain: How agriculture has hijacked civilization. New York: North Point Press.
- Mansel, Jürgen, and Wilhelm Heitmeyer (2009). Precarity, segregation, and poverty in the social space. Berlin: Deutsches Institut für Urbanistik. www.difu.de/publikationen/precarity-segregation-and-poverty-in-the-social-space.html.
- Mansour, Ahmad (2015). Generation Allah. Warum wir im Kampf gegen religiösen Extremismus umdenken müssen. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Fischer.
- Mantel, Barbara (2014). "Assessing the threat from al Qaeda: Is the militant Islamist group still a danger to the West?" In CQ Researcher, 24 (24, June 27), 555–75.
<http://photo.pds.org:5012/cqresearcher/getpdf.php?id=cqresre2014062700>.
- Manvell, Roger, and Heinrich Fraenkel (1962). Goering. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Marbach, Jan, Paul Matussek, and Peter Matussek (2007). Affirming psychosis. The mass appeal of Adolf Hitler. New York: Peter Lang.
- Maren, Michael (1997). The road to hell: The ravaging effects of foreign aid and international charity. New York: Free Press.
- Margalit, Avishai (1996). The decent society. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

- Margalit, Avishai (1997). "Decent equality and freedom: A postscript." In Social Research: An International Quarterly of the Social Sciences, 64 (1, Spring, The Decent Society), 147–60. www.jstor.org/stable/40971164.
- Margalit, Avishai (2002). The ethics of memory. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Margolis, Howard (1982). Selfishness, altruism, and rationality: A theory of social choice. New York: Cambridge University Press.
- Marmot, Michael (2004a). "Dignity and inequality." In The Lancet, 364 (9439), 1019–21. doi: 10.1016/S0140-6736(04)17075-X.
- Marmot, Michael (2015). The health gap: The challenge of an unequal world. London: Bloomsbury.
- Marmot, Michael G. (2004b). The status syndrome: How social standing affects our health and longevity. New York: Times Books.
- Marquardt, Angela (2015). Vater, Mutter, Stasi. Köln, Germany: Kiepenheuer und Witsch.
- Marsden, George M. (1994). The soul of the American university: From protestant establishment to established nonbelief. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Marsden, Sarah V., and Alex Peter Schmid (2011). "Typologies of Terrorism and Political Violence." In The Routledge handbook of terrorism research, edited by Alex Peter Schmid, pp. 158–200. London, New York: Routledge.
- Marsella, Anthony J., Francis L. K. Hsu, and George A. De Vos (Eds.) (1985). Culture and self: Asian and Western perspectives. New York: Tavistock.
- Marsella, Anthony J., and Ann Marie Yamada (2007). "Culture and psychopathology: Foundations, issues, and directions." In Handbook of cultural psychology, edited by Shinobu Kitayama, and Dov Cohen. Chapter 33, pp. 797–820. New York: Guilford Press.
- Marsella, Anthony J. (2009). "Some reflections on potential abuses of psychology's knowledge and practices." In Psychological Studies, 54 (1), 23–27. doi: 10.1007/s12646-009-0003-8.
- Marsella, Anthony J. (2012). Genocide: The ecology of pathways to ending lives and life. Keaau, HI: International Academy for Intercultural Research. www.intercultural-academy.net/images/downloads/Marsella\_Genocide.pdf, and personal email titled 'Things that need to be said on Thanksgiving Day', November 23, 2012.
- Marsella, Anthony J. (2014). Contexts of war and peace: Reflections on sources, consequences, choices. Alpharetta, GA: Anthony Marsella.
- Marsella, Anthony J. (2015). "Trends, changes, challenges in North American (Eurocentric) psychology: Rethinking assumptions, practices, and organization in socio-political contexts." In Journal for Social Action in Counseling and Psychology, 7 (1, Summer 2015), 143–52. www.psysr.org/jsacp/marsella-v7n1-2015\_143-152.pdf.
- Marshall, Graham R. (2008). "Nesting, subsidiarity, and community-based environmental governance beyond the local level." In International Journal of the Commons, 2 (1, January), 75–97. doi: 10.18352/ijc.50
- Marshall, Monty G. (1999). Third World War: System, process, and conflict dynamics. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Marshall, Monty G. (2002). "Global terrorism: An overview and analysis." In Occasional Paper #3. College Park, MD: University of Maryland, Integrated Network for Societal Conflict Research (INSCR), Center for International Development and Conflict Management (CIDCM), and Center for Systemic Peace. www.systemicpeace.org/vlibrary/CSP3GlobalTerrorism2002.pdf.
- Marshall, Monty G., and Ted Robert Gurr (2005). Peace and conflict 2005: A global survey of armed conflicts, self-determination movements, and democracy. College Park, MD: Center for International Development and Conflict Management, University of Maryland.
- Marshall, Monty G. (2014–2016). Managing complexity in modern-societal systems. Vienna, VA: Center for Systemic Peace. www.systemicpeace.org/videobook.html.
- Martin, Glen T. (2010). Triumph of civilization: Democracy, nonviolence and the piloting of spaceship Earth. Sun City, AZ: Institute for Economic Democracy Press.
- Martin, Judith N., Thomas K. Nakayama, and Lisa A. Flores (2001). "A dialectical approach to intercultural communication." In Readings in intercultural communication: Experiences and contexts, edited by Judith N. Martin, Thomas K. Nakayama, and Lisa A. Flores. New edition, pp. 3–13. Boston: McGraw-Hill.
- Martin, Mike (2014). Intimate war: An oral history of the Helmand conflict, 1978 – 2012. London: Hurst.
- Martinez-Alier, Juan, and Inge Røpke (Eds.) (2008). Recent developments in ecological economics. Cheltenham: Edward Elgar.

- Mason, Paul (2015). Postcapitalism: A guide to our future. London: Allen Lane.
- Massumi, Brian (2002). Parables for the virtual: Movement, affect, sensation. Durham, NC: Duke University Press.
- Matsumoto, David Ricky (1988). "Reexamination of the universality of Face: Politeness phenomena in Japanese." In Journal of Pragmatics, 12 (4), 403–26. doi: 10.1016/0378-2166(88)90003-3.
- Matsumoto, David Ricky, Hee Seung Yoo, and Jeffery A. LeRoux (2007). "Emotion and intercultural adjustment." In Handbook of applied linguistics, volume 7: Intercultural communication, edited by Helga Kotthoff, and Helen Spencer-Oatley. Chapter 5, pp. 77–98. Berlin: Mouton de Gruyter. www.davidmatsumoto.com/content/Handbook%20Applied%20Linguistics.pdf.
- Mavor, Kenneth I., Winnifred R. Louis, and Chris G. Sibley (2010). "A bias-corrected exploratory and confirmatory factor analysis of right-wing authoritarianism: Support for a three-factor structure." In Personality and Individual Differences, 48 (1), 28–33. doi: 10.1016/j.paid.2009.08.006.
- Max-Neef, Manfred A. (2005). "Foundations of transdisciplinarity." In Ecological Economics, 53, 5–16. doi: 10.1016/j.ecolecon.2005.01.014.
- May, Rollo (1969). Love and will. New York: W. W. Norton.
- May, Timothy Michael (2012). The Mongol conquests in world history. London: Reaktion Books.
- Mayer, Jane (2016). Dark money: The hidden history of the billionaires behind the rise of the radical right. New York: Doubleday.
- Mazzetti, Mark (2013). The way of the knife: The CIA, a secret army, and war at the ends of the earth. New York: Penguin.
- McAdam, Douglas, Sidney Tarrow, and Charles Tilly (2001). Dynamics of contention. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- McCandless, Erin, and Tony Karbo (Eds.) (2011). Peace, conflict, and development in Africa: A reader. San Jose, Costa Rica: University for Peace. www.upeace.org/pdf%5CREADER\_webpages.pdf.
- McCarthy, Cormac (2006). The road. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.
- McCauley, Clark, and Sophia Moskalkenko (2014a). "Toward a profile of lone wolf terrorists: What moves an individual from radical opinion to radical action." In Terrorism and Political Violence, 26 (1), 69–85. doi: 10.1080/09546553.2014.849916.
- McCauley, Clark, and Sophia Moskalkenko (2014b). "Some things we think we've learned since 9/11: A commentary on Marc Sageman's 'The stagnation in terrorism research'." In Terrorism and Political Violence, 26 (4), 601–06. doi: 10.1080/09546553.2014.895653.
- McCauley, Clark (2017). "Toward a psychology of humiliation in asymmetric conflict." In American Psychologist, 72 (3, Special Issue: Psychology of Terrorism), 255–65. doi: 10.1037/amp0000063. www.apa.org/pubs/journals/releases/amp-amp0000063.pdf.
- McCauley, Clark, and Sophia Moskalkenko (2017). "Understanding political radicalization: The two-pyramids model." In American Psychologist, 72 (3), 205–16. doi: 10.1037/amp0000062. www.apa.org/pubs/journals/releases/amp-amp0000062.pdf.
- McCauley, Clark R., and Sophia Moskalkenko (2011). Friction: How radicalization happens to them and us. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- McCauley, Clark R., Sophia Moskalkenko, and Ben Van Son (2013). "Characteristics of lone-wolf violent offenders: A comparison of assassins and school attackers." In Perspectives on Terrorism, North America, February 7.
- McChrystal, Stanley A. (2013). My share of the task: A memoir. New York: Portfolio.
- McClelland, David C. (1978). "Managing motivation to expand human freedom." In American Psychologist, 33 (3), 201–10. doi: 10.1037/0003-066x.33.3.201.
- McCloskey, Deirdre N. (2006–2016). The bourgeois era (Volume 1: The bourgeois virtues: Ethics for an age of commerce, 2006, Volume 2: Bourgeois dignity: Why economics can't explain the modern world, 2010, Volume 3: Bourgeois equality: How ideas, not capital or institutions, enriched the world, 2016). Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- McCrudden, Christopher (2013). "Reva Siegel and the role of religion in constructing the meaning of 'human dignity'." In University of Michigan Public Law Research Working Paper No. 320. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan. https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/Data\_Integrity\_Notice.cfm?abid=2229832.
- McCullough, Michael E. (2008). Beyond revenge: The evolution of the forgiveness instinct. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass.
- McDonald, Duff (2017). The golden passport: Harvard business school, the limits of capitalism, and the moral failure of the MBA elite. New York: HarperCollins.

- McFadden, John (2016). Empathizing with terrorists: An unthinkable necessity explained. Accepted for publication in the fall of 2016 by Tikkun.
- McGilchrist, Iain (2009). The master and his emissary: The divided brain and the making of the Western world. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- McGoey, Linsey (2012). "The logic of strategic ignorance." In The British Journal of Sociology, 63 (3), 553–76. doi: 10.1111/j.1468-4446.2012.01424.x.
- McKinlay, Andrew, and Chris McVittie (2008). Social psychology and discourse. Chichester: Wiley-Blackwell.
- McKnight, John (1995). The uncaring society: Community and its counterfeits. New York: Basic Books.
- McKnight, John, and Peter Block (2010). The abundant community: Awakening the power of families and neighborhoods. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler.
- McLuhan, Marshall (1972). Take today: The executive as dropout. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich.
- McMaster, Christopher Todd (2013). "Working the 'shady spaces': Resisting neoliberal hegemony in New Zealand education." In Policy Futures in Education, 11 (5), 523–31. doi: 10.2304/pfie.2013.11.5.523.
- McMeekin, Sean (2010). Berlin-Baghdad Express: The Ottoman Empire and Germany's bid for World Power, 1898–1918. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- McNamara, Robert S., and James G. Blight (2001). Wilson's ghost: Reducing the risk of conflict, killing, and catastrophe in the 21st Century. New York: Public Affairs.
- McNeill, John Robert, and William Hardy McNeill (2003). The human web: A bird's-eye view of world history. New York: Norton.
- McSorley, Kevin (Ed.) (2013). War and the body: Militarisation, practice and experience. Abingdon: Routledge.
- McSorley, Kevin (2015). War and the body: Militarisation, practice and experience. Abingdon: Routledge.
- McWhorter, John (2016). Words on the move: Why English won't – and can't – sit still. New York: Henry Holt.
- Meadows, Donella, Jørgen Randers, and Dennis Meadows (2005). Limits to growth: The 30-year update. London: Earthscan.
- Meadows, Donella H. (2008). Thinking in systems: A primer. White River Junction, VT: Chelsea Green Publishing.
- Meffert, Harma, Valeria Gazzola, Johan A. den Boer, Arnold A. J. Bartels, and Christian Keyzers (2013). "Reduced spontaneous but relatively normal deliberate vicarious representations in psychopathy." In Brain, 136 (8), 2550–62. doi: 10.1093/brain/awt190. <http://brain.oxfordjournals.org/brain/136/8/2550.full.pdf>.
- Melber, Takuma (2011). "Verhört: Alliierte Studien zu Moral und Psyche japanischer Soldaten im Zweiten Weltkrieg." In „Der Führer war wieder viel zu human, viel zu gefühlvoll“: Der Zweite Weltkrieg aus der Sicht deutscher und italienischer Soldaten, edited by Christian Gudehus, Sönke Neitzel, and Harald Welzer. Chapter 414–437. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Fischer.
- Melucci, Alberto, John Keane, and Paul Mier (1989). Nomads of the present: Social movements and individual needs in contemporary society. Philadelphia: Temple University Press.
- Melucci, Alberto (1996). The playing self: Person and meaning in the planetary society. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Menkhaus, Ken (2003). "Bantu ethnic identities in Somalia." In Annales d'Ethiopie, 19 (1), 323–39. www.persee.fr/doc/ethio\_0066-2127\_2003\_num\_19\_1\_1051.
- Merari, Ariel (2010). Driven to death: Psychological and social aspects of suicide terrorism. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Merleau-Ponty, Maurice (1945/1962). Phenomenology of perception. Translated by Colin Smith. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul. French original La phénoménologie de la perception, Paris: Gallimard, 1945.
- Merleau-Ponty, Maurice (1961/1993). "Eye and mind." Translated by Michael B. Smith. In The Merleau-Ponty Aesthetics Reader, edited by Galen A. Johnson, pp. 121–49. Evanston, IL: Northwestern University Press. French original L'Œil et l'esprit, Paris: Gallimard, 1961.
- Merleau-Ponty, Maurice, and Claude Lefort (1964/1968). The visible and the invisible: Followed by working notes. Translated by Alphonso Lingis. Evanston, IL: Northwestern University Press. French original Le visible et l'invisible: Suivi de notes de travail, Paris: Gallimard.

- Merryman, John Henry (1969). The civil law tradition: An introduction to the legal systems of Western Europe and Latin America. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Merton, Robert K. (1969). "War and the crisis of language." In The critique of war: Contemporary philosophical explorations, edited by Robert Ginsberg. Chicago: Henry Regnery Company.
www.aloha.net/~stroble/merton2.html.
- Merz, Sibille (2012). "'Missionaries of the new era': Neoliberalism and NGOs in Palestine." In Race and Class, 54 (1), 50–66. doi: 10.1177/0306396812444820.
<http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1177/0306396812444820>.
- Mesøy, Atle (2013). "Poverty and radicalisation into violent extremism: A causal link?" In NOREF Expert Analysis, 23 January 2013. Oslo: The Norwegian Peacebuilding Resource Centre / Norsk Ressurscenter for Fredsbygging (NOREF).
www.peacebuilding.no/var/ezflow\_site/storage/original/application/e60a8a679f48427d592a1906daf569d4.pdf.
- Mettan, Guy (2017). Creating russophobia: From the great religious schism to anti-Putin hysteria. Atlanta, GA: Clarity Press.
- Metz, Thaddeus (2007). "Toward an African moral theory." In Journal of Political Philosophy, 15 (3), 321–41. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-9760.2007.00280.x.
- Metz, Thaddeus (2010). "Human dignity, capital punishment, and an African moral theory: Toward a new philosophy of human rights." In Journal of Human Rights, 9 (1), 81–99. doi: 10.1080/14754830903530300.
- Metz, Thaddeus (2011). "An African theory of dignity and a relational conception of poverty." In The humanist imperative in South Africa, edited by John de Gruchy, pp. 233–42. Stellenbosch, South Africa: African Sun Media.
- Metz, Thaddeus (2012). "African conceptions of human dignity: Vitality and community as the ground of human rights." In Human Rights Review, 13 (1), 19–37. doi: 10.1007/s12142-011-0200-4.
- Meyer, Christian, Christian Lohr, Detlef Gronenborn, and Kurt W. Alt (2015). "The massacre mass grave of Schöneck-Kilianstädten reveals new insights into collective violence in Early Neolithic Central Europe." In Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, 1–6. doi: 10.1073/pnas.1504365112. www.pnas.org/content/early/2015/08/12/1504365112.abstract.
- Mezirow, Jack (2000). Learning as transformation: Critical perspectives on a theory in progress. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass.
- Michalska, Kalina J., Thomas A. Zeffiro, and Jean Decety (2016). "Brain response to viewing others being harmed in children with conduct disorder symptoms." In Journal of Child Psychology and Psychiatry, and Allied Disciplines, 57 (4), 510. doi: 10.1111/jcpp.12474.
- Midiohouan, Guy Ossito (1991). "Ahmadou Kourouma or the bitter knowledge of black humiliation." In Research in African Literatures, 22 (2), 231–34. www.jstor.org/stable/3819836.
- Mielants, Eric H. (2007). The origins of capitalism and the "rise of the West". Philadelphia: Temple University Press.
- Mies, Maria (1986). Patriarchy and accumulation on a world scale: Women in the international division of labour. London: Zed Books.
- Mignolo, Walter D. (2000). Local histories/global designs: Coloniality, subaltern knowledges, and border thinking. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Miklian, Jason, and Niranjana Sahoo (2016). "Supporting a more inclusive and responsive urban India'." In PRIO Policy Brief March 2016. Oslo: Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO).
http://file.prio.no/publication\_files/prio/Milkian,%20Sahoo%20-%20Supporting%20a%20More%20Inclusive%20and%20Responsive%20Urban%20India,%20PRIO%20Policy%20Brief%203-2016.pdf.
- Milani, Abbas (2008). Eminent Persians: The men and women who made modern Iran, 1941-1979. Syracuse, NY: Syracuse University Press.
- Milgram, Stanley (1974). Obedience to authority. New York: Harper and Row.
- Miller, Alice (1980/2002). For your own good: Hidden cruelty in child-rearing and the roots of violence. Translated by Hildegard Hannum, and Hunter Hannum. 4th edition. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux. German original Am Anfang war Erziehung, Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp, 1980. www.nospank.net/fyog.htm.
- Miller, Alice (2006a). The body never lies: The lingering effects of hurtful parenting. New York: Norton.

- Miller, Alice (2008a). The drama of being a child: The search for the true self. Revised edition. London: Virago.
- Miller, Jean Baker (1976/1986). Toward a new psychology of women. 2nd edition. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Miller, Jean Baker (1986a). Toward a new psychology of women. 2nd edition. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Miller, Jean Baker (1986b). "What do we mean by relationships?" In Work in progress, No. 22. Wellesley, MA: Stone Center Working Paper Series, Wellesley College.
- Miller, Jean Baker (1988). "Connections, disconnections, and violations." In Work in progress, No. 33. Wellesley, MA: Stone Center Working Paper Series.
- Miller, Jean Baker, Irene P. Stiver, Judith V. Jordan, and Janet L. Surrey (1994). "The psychology of women: A relational approach." In Personality and personal growth, edited by Robert Frager, and James Fadiman, pp. 159–79. New York: Harper Collins.
- Miller, Jean Baker, and Irene P. Stiver (1997). The healing connection: How women form relationships in therapy and in life. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Miller, Jean Baker (2006b). "Forced choices, false choices." In Research and Action Report: Wellesley Centers for Women, 27 (2), 16–17.
- Miller, Jean Baker (2008b). "Connections, disconnections, and violations." In Feminism and Psychology, 18 (3), 368–80. doi: 10.1177/0959353508092090
- Miller, Seymour M. (2013). How to dialogue and why: S. M. Miller. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. <http://youtu.be/CONuz9mubnY>.
- Miller, William Ian (1993). Humiliation: And other essays on honor, social discomfort, and violence. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Millon, Theodore, Carrie M. Millon, Roger D. Davis, and Seth D. Grossman (2009). MCMI-III Manual. 4th edition. Minneapolis, MN: Pearson Education.
- Millon, Theodore, Robert F. Krueger, and Erik Simonsen (2010). Contemporary directions in psychopathology: Scientific foundations of the DSM-V and ICD-11. New York: Guilford Press.
- Millon, Theodore, and Paul H. Blaney (Eds.) (2014). Oxford textbook of psychopathology. 3rd edition. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Mills, C. Wright (1956). The power elite. London: Oxford University Press.
- Mills, C. Wright (1958). The causes of world war three. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Milne, David (2008). America's Rasputin: Walt Rostow and the Vietnam War. New York: Hill and Wang.
- Misra, Girishwar, and Anand Prakash (2012). "Kenneth J. Gergen and social constructionism." In Psychological Studies, 57 (2, June, Kenneth J. Gergen and Social Constructionism), 121–25. doi: 10.1007/s12646-012-0151-0.
- Mitter, Rana (2004). A bitter revolution: China's struggle with the modern world. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Mitzen, Jennifer (2006). "Ontological security in world politics: State identity and the security dilemma." In European Journal of International Relations, 12 (3), 341–70. doi: 10.1177/1354066106067346. <http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/abs/10.1177/1354066106067346>.
- Modiano, Patrick (2005/2015). Pedigree. Translated by Mark Polizzotti. London: MacLehose. French original Un pedigree, Paris: Gallimard, 2005.
- Moeller van den Bruck, Arthur (1923). Das dritte Reich. Berlin: Ring Verlag.
- Moghaddam, Fathali M. (2004). "Cultural preconditions for potential terrorist groups: Terrorism and societal change." In Understanding terrorism: Psychosocial roots, consequences, and interventions, edited by Anthony J. Marsella, and Fathali M. Moghaddam. Chapter 5, pp. 103–17. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association.
- Moghaddam, Fathali M. (2009). "De-radicalisation and the staircase from terrorism." In The faces of terrorism: multidisciplinary perspectives, edited by David V. Canter, pp. xiv, 300 s. Chichester: Wiley-Blackwell.
- Mohamedou, Mohammad-Mahmoud Ould (2011). Understanding Al Qaeda: Changing war and global politics. 2nd edition. London: Pluto Press.
- Moïsi, Dominique (2007). "The clash of emotions: Fear, humiliation, hope and the new world order." In Foreign Affairs, 86 (8, January/February, Terrorism and Counterterrorism), 8–12. www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/2007-01-01/clash-emotions.
- Moïsi, Dominique (2009). The geopolitics of emotion: How cultures of fear, humiliation, and hope are reshaping the world. New York: Doubleday.

- Mokgoro, Justice Yvonne (1998). "Ubuntu and the law in South Africa." In Potchefstroom Electronic Law Journal, 1, 1–11.
www.nwu.ac.za/sites/www.nwu.ac.za/files/images/1998x1x\_Mokgoro\_art.pdf.
- Monroe, Kristen Renwick (1996). The heart of altruism: Perceptions of a common humanity. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Montagu, Ashley (1989). Growing young. 2nd edition. Westport, CT: Bergin and Garvey.
- Montaigne, Michel de (1575). 1575 essays by Michel de Montaigne. Translated by Charles Cotton.
<http://eserver.org/philosophy/montaigne-essays.txt>.
- Montgomery, Evan Braden (2006). "Breaking out of the security dilemma: Realism, reassurance, and the problem of uncertainty." In International Security, 31 (2, Fall), 7–41.
www.jstor.org/stable/4137519.
- Moolman, Nico (2012). The Boer whore. 2nd edition. Vanderbijlpark, Gauteng, Republic of South Africa: Nico Moolman.
- Moore, Kathleen Dean (2016). Great tide rising: Towards clarity and moral courage in a time of planetary change. Berkeley, CA: Counterpoint.
- Morais, Clodomir Santos de (1979). Apuntes de teoría de la organización. Managua, Nicaragua: Programa de las Naciones Unidas para el Desarrollo (PNUD), OIT-NIC/79/010, COPERA Project.
- Morais, Clodomir Santos de (1983). Diccionario de reforma agraria: Latinoamérica. San José, Costa Rica: EDUCA.
- More, Jason W. (2014). The Capitalocene, Part II: Abstract social nature and the limits to capital.
www.researchgate.net/profile/Jason\_Moore3/publication/264457281\_The\_Capitalocene\_Part\_II\_Abstract\_Social\_Nature\_and\_the\_Limits\_to\_Capital/links/53dfe3520cf27a7b830748fb.pdf.
- More, Thomas (1516–18/2012). The open utopia Wivenhoe, New York, Port Watson: Minor Compositions, a complete edition, including all the letters and commendations as well as the marginal notes that were included in the first four printings of 1516–1518, translated, edited and with an introduction by Stephen Duncombe in 2012. <http://theopenutopia.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/09/Open-Utopia-fifth-poofs-facing-amended.pdf>.
- Morgenthau, Hans J. (1946). Scientific man versus power politics. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Morgenthau, Hans Joachim (1948). Politics among nations: The struggle for power and peace. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.
- Morgenthau, Hans Joachim (1951). In defense of the national interest: A critical examination of American foreign policy. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.
- Morin, Edgar (2011). La voie: Pour l'avenir de l'humanité. Paris: Fayard.
- Morris, Albert (2009). Civilisation hijacked: Rescuing Jesus from Christianity and the human spirit from bondage. Bloomington: iUniverse.
- Morris, Rossabi (1994). "All the Khan's horses." In Asian topics in world history: The Mongols in world history. New York City: Columbia University, reprinted from Natural History.
http://afe.easia.columbia.edu/mongols/conquests/khans\_horses.pdf.
- Morris, William (1890). News from nowhere. London: Published in serial form in the Commonweal journal beginning on 11 January 1890.
- Morrison, David, and Paul Gilbert (2001). "Social rank, shame and anger in primary and secondary psychopaths." In Journal of Forensic Psychiatry, 12 (2), 330–56. doi: 10.1080/09585180110056867.
- Morrison, Toni (1987). Beloved: A novel. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.
- Moss, Michael (2013). Salt, sugar, fat: How the food giants hooked us. New York: Random House.
- Moss, Sigrun Marie (2014). "Beyond conflict and spoilt identities: How Rwandan leaders justify a single recategorization model for post-conflict reconciliation." In Journal of Social and Political Psychology, 2 (1), 435–49. doi: 10.5964/jspp.v2i1.291.
- Moss, Sigrun Marie, and Johanna Ray Vollhardt (2015). "'You can't give a syringe with unity': Rwandan responses to the government's single recategorization policies." In Analyses of Social Issues and Public Policy. doi: 10.1111/asap.12097.
- Motzfeldt Loades, Celine (2016). "Contested places and ambivalent identities: Social change and development in UNESCO enlisted Dubrovnik." In Journal of Urban Culture Research, 12 (January – June), 20–37. doi: 10.14456/jucr.2016.2.
www.cujucr.com/downloads/Individual%20Articles/12/vol12%20Celine%20Motzfeldt%20Loades.pdf.

- Muenster, Bettina, and David Lotto (2010). "The social psychology of humiliation and revenge: The origins of the fundamentalist mindset." In The fundamentalist mindset: Psychological perspectives on religion, violence, and history, edited by Charles B. Strozier, David M. Terman, and James W. Jones, pp. 71–79. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Muir, William (1924). "Al-Musta' Sim, the last of the Caliphs 640–656 A.H. / 1242–1258 A.D." In The Caliphate: Its rise, decline, and fall. Revised edition. Chapter LXXVIII, pp. 590–92. Edinburgh: John Grant. www.answering-islam.de/Books/Muir/Caliphate/chap78.htm.
- Muller, Roland (2001). Honor and ahome: Unlocking the door Bloomington, IN: Xlibris
- Murray, Craig (2006). Murder in Samarkand: A British Ambassador's controversial defiance of tyranny in the war on terror. Edinburgh: Mainstream.
- Musah, Abdel-Fatau, and Kayode Fayemi (2000). Mercenaries: An African security dilemma. London: Pluto.
- Mussel, Patrick, Andrea M. F. Reiter, Roman Osinsky, and Johnnes Hewig (2015). "State- and trait-greed, its impact on risky decision-making and underlying neural mechanisms." In Social Neuroscience, 10 (2), 126–34. doi: 10.1080/17470919.2014.965340.
- Müchler, Günter (2015). 1813: Napoleon, Metternich und das weltgeschichtliche Duell von Dresden. Darmstadt, Germany: Theiss.
- Myers, Wade C., Roger C. Burket, and David S. Husted (2006). "Sadistic personality disorder and comorbid mental illness in adolescent psychiatric inpatients." In Journal of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law Online, 34 (1), 61–71.
- Müller, Jan-Dirk (2009). Das Nibelungenlied. 3rd edition. Berlin: Erich Schmidt.
- Müller, Jan-Werner (2003). A dangerous mind: Carl Schmitt in post-war European thought. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Müller, Jan-Werner (2016). What is populism? 2. Auflage. edition. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press. German original Was ist Populismus? Ein Essay, Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp, 2016.
- Münch, Richard (2011). Akademischer Kapitalismus: Über die politische Ökonomie der Hochschulreform. Berlin: Suhrkamp.
- Münkler, Herfried (2015). Kriegssplitter: Die Evolution der Gewalt im 20. und 21. Jahrhundert. Berlin: Rowohlt
- Nadler, Arie, and Samer Halabi (2006). "Intergroup helping as status relations: Effects of status stability, identification, and type of help on receptivity to high-status group's help." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 91 (1), 97–110. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.91.1.97.
- Nadler, Arie (2012). "Intergroup reconciliation: Definitions, processes, and future directions." In Oxford handbook of conflict, edited by Linda R. Tropp. Chapter 17, pp. 291–308. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Nagata, Adair Linn (2006). "Transformative learning in intercultural education." In Rikkyo Intercultural Communication Review, 4, 39–60.
- Nagata, Adair Linn (2007). "Bodymindfulness for skillful communication." In Rikkyo Intercultural Communication Review, 5, 61–76.
- Nagel, Mechthild (2016). Troubling justice: Towards a ludic ubuntu ethic. Cortland, NY: Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/NagelUbuntu2016.php.
- Nagel, Thomas (1986). The view from nowhere. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Nagel, Thomas (2012). Mind and cosmos: Why the materialist neo-Darwinian conception of nature is almost certainly false. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Nathanson, Donald L. (1996). "What's a script?" In Bulletin of The Tomkins Institute, 3, Spring-Summer, 1–4.
- National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States, and Thomas H. Kean (2004). Final Report of the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States. New York: Norton.
- Nawaz, Maajid (2012). Radical: My journey out of Islamist extremism. London: WH Allen.
- Nazemroaya, Mahdi Darius (2012). The globalization of NATO. Atlanta, GA: Clarity Press.
- Neff, Kristin (2011). Self-compassion: Stop beating yourself up and leave insecurity behind. New York: William Morrow.
- Negrao, Claudio, George A. Bonanno, Jennie G. Noll, Frank W. Putnam, and Penelope K. Trickett (2005). "Shame, humiliation, and childhood sexual abuse: Distinct contributions and emotional coherence." In Child Maltreatment, 10 (4), 350–63. doi: 10.1177/1077559505279366.
- Nelson, Julie A. (2010a). Economics for humans. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

- Nelson, Julie A. (2012). "Is dismissing the precautionary principle the manly thing to do? Gender and the economics of climate change." In Working paper no. 12-04. Somerville, MA: Global Development And Environment Institute at Tufts University (GDAE). www.ase.tufts.edu/gdae/Pubs/wp/12-04NelsonPrecautionManly.pdf.
- Nelson, Robert H. (2010b). The new holy wars: Economic religion vs. environmental religion in contemporary America. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press.
- Nesser, Petter (2006). "Jihad in Europe: Recruitment for terrorist cells in Europe." In FFI rapport-2006/00935: Paths to global jihad: Radicalisation and recruitment to terror networks, edited by Laila Bokhari, Thomas Hegghammer, Brynjar Lia, Petter Nesser, and Truls H. Tonnessen. Chapter 2, pp. 9–21. Kjeller, Norway: Norwegian Defence Research Establishment. Proceedings from Forsvarets forskningsinstitutt (FFI) seminar, Oslo, 15 March 2006. <https://docs.google.com/viewer?a=v&pid=sites&srcid=ZGVmYXVsdGRvbWpbnxqaWhhZGlzbXN0dWRpZXNuZXR8Z3g6MWI0MTY5MjYjYmJmNTM5Yg>.
- Nesser, Petter (2011). Jihad in Europe: Patterns in Islamist terrorist cell formation and behaviour, 1995 – 2010. Oslo: University of Oslo, doctoral dissertation.
- Nesser, Petter (2014). Islamist terrorism in Europe: A history. London: Hurst.
- Neubauer, Claudia, and Matthieu Calamé (2013). "Redesign progress now! The use of knowledge for a re-conceptualised human progress." In Report higher education in the world 5: Knowledge, engagement and higher education: Contributing to social change. Chapter 56-59. Barcelona, Spain: Global University Network for Innovation (GUNI). www.guninetwork.org/report/higher-education-world-5.
- Neumann, Franz Leopold (1942). Behemoth: The structure and practice of national socialism. London: Victor Gollancz.
- Neumann, Peter R. (2008a). "Introduction." In Perspectives on radicalisation and political violence, edited by Peter R. Neumann, Jacob Stoil, and Dina Esfandiary. London: The International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and Political Violence (ICSR), papers from the First International Conference on Radicalisation and Political Violence, London, 17–18 January 2008. <http://icsr.info/wp-content/uploads/2012/10/1234516938ICSRPerspectivesonRadicalisation.pdf>.
- Neumann, Peter R. (2008b). Joining Al-Qaeda: Jihadist recruitment in Europe. Abingdon-on-Thames: The International Institute for Strategic Studies and Routledge.
- Neumann, Peter R., and Michael Lawrence Rowan Smith (2008). The strategy of terrorism: How it works, and why it fails. London: Routledge.
- Neumann, Peter R., Jacob Stoil, and Dina Esfandiary (Eds.) (2008). Perspectives on radicalisation and political violence. London: The International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and Political Violence (ICSR), papers from the First International Conference on Radicalisation and Political Violence, London, 17–18 January 2008. <http://icsr.info/wp-content/uploads/2012/10/1234516938ICSRPerspectivesonRadicalisation.pdf>.
- Neumann, Peter R. (2009). Old and new terrorism. London: Polity Press.
- Neumann, Peter R. (2010). Prisons and terrorism: Radicalisation and de-radicalisation in 15 countries. London: A policy report by the International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and Political Violence (ICSR) in partnership with the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism (START). <http://icsr.info/wp-content/uploads/2012/10/1277699166PrisonsandTerrorismRadicalisationandDeradicalisationin15Countries.pdf>.
- Neumann, Peter R. (2015). Victims, perpetrators, assets: The narratives of Islamic State defectors. London: The International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and Political Violence (ICSR). <http://icsr.info/wp-content/uploads/2015/09/ICSR-Report-Victims-Perpetrators-Assets-The-Narratives-of-Islamic-State-Defectors.pdf>.
- Neumann, Peter R. (2015/2016). Radicalized: New Jihadists and the threat against the West. Translated by Alexander Starritt. London: I.B. Tauris. German original Die neuen Dschihadisten: ISIS, Europa und die nächste Welle des Terrorismus, Berlin: Econ, 2015.
- Neurath, Otto (1959). "Protocol sentences." In Logical positivism, edited by Alfred Jules Ayer, pp. 199–208. Glencoe, IL: Free Press.
- Nevo, Baruch, and Iris Brem (2002). "Peace education programs and the evaluation of their effectiveness." In Peace education: The concept, principles, and practices around the world, edited by Gavriel Salomon, and Baruch Nevo. Chapter 24, pp. 271–82. Mahwah, NJ: Erlbaum.
- Newfield, Christopher (2008). Unmaking the public university: The forty-year assault on the middle class. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

- Newman, Leonard S., Kimberley J. Duff, and Roy F. Baumeister (1997). "A new look at defensive projection: Thought suppression, accessibility, and biased person perception." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 72 (5), 980–1001. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.72.5.980.
- Nickerson, Raymond S., and Peter Salovey (1998). "Confirmation bias: A ubiquitous phenomenon in many guises." In Review of General Psychology, 2 (2), 175–220. doi: 10.1037/1089-2680.2.2.175.
- Nicolson, Paula (2010). Domestic violence and psychology: A critical perspective. London: Routledge.
- Niebuhr, Reinhold (1952/2008). The irony of American history. Reprint edition. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, with a new introduction by Andrew J. Bacevich.
- Niemi, Laura, and Liane Young (2016). "When and why we see victims as responsible: The impact of ideology on attitudes toward victims." In Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin. doi: 10.1177/0146167216653933.
- Nietzsche, Friedrich (1883–1891). Also sprach Zarathustra: Ein Buch für Alle und Keinen. Chemnitz: Verlag Ernst Schmeitzner. www.gutenberg.org/cache/epub/7205/pg7205.txt.
- Nietzsche, Friedrich (1883–1891/1998). Thus spake Zarathustra: A book for all and none. Translated by Thomas Common. Project Gutenberg. German original Also sprach Zarathustra: Ein Buch für Alle und Keinen, Chemnitz: Verlag Ernst Schmeitzner, 1883–1891. www.gutenberg.org/files/1998/1998-h/1998-h.htm.
- Nietzsche, Friedrich (1887/2013). On the genealogy of morals. Translated by Michael A. Scarpitti. London: Penguin. German original Zur Genealogie der Moral: Eine Streitschrift, Leipzig: Verlag von C. G. Naumann, 1887.
- Nikolakaki, Maria (Ed.) (2012). Critical pedagogy in the new dark ages: Challenges and possibilities. New York: Peter Lang. Foreword by Henry Giroux, Afterword by Ana-Maria Araújo Freire.
- Nilsen, Kjell Arild, and Helge Øgrim (2015). Kina vs. Norge: Den ukjente historien fra Maos nei til dagens krise. Oslo: Kagge.
- Ninnemann, Kristi (2015). "Hwa-Byung." In Encyclopedia of immigrant health, edited by Sana Loue, and Martha Sajatovic. Chapter 377, pp. 862–63. New York: Springer.
- Nisbett, Richard E., and Dov Cohen (1996). Culture of honor: The psychology of violence in the south. Boulder, CO: Westview Press.
- Noma, Hiroko, and Joanna Crossman (2012). "Analogue and digital mindsets: Some implications for intercultural communication between Western and Eastern organisations." In Asian Academy of Management Journal, 17 (1, January ), 115–29. http://web.usm.my/aamj/17.1.2012/aamj\_17.1.6.pdf.
- Norel, Philippe (2009). L'histoire économique globale. Paris: Seuil.
- Norgaard, Richard B. (2011). Economism and the night sky. The International Society for Ecological Economics. www.isecoeco.org/economism-and-the-night-sky/.
- Norgaard, Richard B. (2015). The church of economism and its discontents. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/pdf/Norgaard-The-Church-of-Economism-and-Its-Discontents.pdf.
- Norris, Pippa, and Ronald Inglehart (2011). Sacred and secular: Religion and politics worldwide. 2nd edition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Nowak, Martin A., and Roger Highfield (2011). SuperCooperators: Altruism, evolution, and why we need each other to succeed. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Nowak, Martin A., and Roger Highfield (2012). Supercooperators: Beyond the survival of the fittest: Why cooperation, not competition, is the key to life. Edinburgh: Canongate.
- Nussbaum, Martha C., and Amartya Sen (1993). The quality of life. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Nussbaum, Martha C. (1995). "Objectification." In Philosophy and Public Affairs, 24 (4), 249–91. doi: 10.1111/j.1088-4963.1995.tb00032.x.
- Nussbaum, Martha C. (2000). Women and human development: The capabilities approach. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Nussbaum, Martha C. (2010). Not for profit: Why democracy needs the humanities. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Nussbaum, Martha C. (2013). Political emotions: Why love matters for justice. Cambridge, MA: Belknap.
- Nussbaum, Martha Craven (1998). Plato's Republic: The good society and the deformation of desire. Washington: Library of Congress.
- Nye, Joseph S. (2004). Soft power: The means to success in world politics. New York: Public Affairs.
- Nyerere, Julius K. (1968). Ujamaa: Essays on socialism. London: Oxford University Press.

- Nygård, Håvard Mokleiv. "Five essays on the political economy of regime survival." University of Oslo, Faculty of Social Sciences, Department of Political Science, doctoral dissertation, 2014.
- Næss, Arne (1978). "Through Spinoza to Mahayana Buddhism or through Mahayana Buddhism to Spinoza?" In Spinoza's philosophy of man: Proceedings of the Scandinavian Spinoza Symposium 1977, edited by Jon Wetlesen. Oslo: University of Oslo Press.
- O'Hara, Maureen (2010). "Another inconvenient truth and the developmental role for psychology in a threatened world." In Humanistic Psychologist, 38 (2), 101–19. doi: 10.1080/08873267.2010.485915, www.tandfonline.com/doi/pdf/10.1080/08873267.2010.485915.
- O'Hara, Maureen, and Graham Leicester (2012). Dancing at the edge: Competence, culture and organisation in the 21st century. Axminster, Devon: Triarchy Press.
- O'Hara, Maureen, and Andrew Lyon (2014). "Well-being and well-becoming: Reauthorizing the subject in incoherent times." In Well-being and beyond: Broadening the public and policy discourse, edited by Timo J. Hamalainen, and Juliet Michaelson. Chapter 4. Cheltenham: Edward Elgar.
- O'Mara, Shane (2015). Why torture doesn't work: The neuroscience of interrogation. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- O'Meara, Aisling, Jason Davies, and Sean Hammond (2011). "The psychometric properties and utility of the Short Sadistic Impulse Scale (SSIS)." In Psychological Assessment, 23 (2), 523–31. doi: 10.1037/a0022400.
- O'Neill, Maggie (2007). "Re-imagining diaspora through ethno-mimesis: Humiliation, human dignity and belonging." In Transnational lives and the media: Reimagining diaspora, edited by Olga Guedes-Bailey, Myria Georgiou, and Ramaswami Harindranath, pp. 72–94. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- O'Shea, Andrew, and Maeve O'Brien (Eds.) (2011). Pedagogy, oppression and transformation in a 'post-critical' climate: The return to Freirean thinking. London: Continuum.
- Obama, Barack (2004). Dreams from my father: A story of race and inheritance. New York: Three Rivers Press. Originally published 1995, the 2004 edition includes a new preface by Obama and his DNC keynote address.
- Oberhaus, Salvador (2007). 'Zum wilden Aufstande entflammen' – die deutsche Ägyptenpolitik 1914 bis 1918. Ein Beitrag zur Propagandageschichte des Ersten Weltkrieges. Düsseldorf, Germany: Heinrich-Heine-Universität Düsseldorf, doctoral dissertation.
- Oberschall, Anthony (2001). "From ethnic cooperation to violence and war in Yugoslavia." In Ethnopolitical warfare: Causes, consequences, and possible solutions, edited by D. Chirot, and Martin E. P. Seligman, pp. 119–50. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association.
- Oborne, Peter (2007). Triumph of the political class. London: Simon and Schuster.
- Odora Hoppers, Catherine Alum (Ed.) (2002). Indigenous knowledge and the integration of knowledge systems: Towards a philosophy of articulation. Claremont, South Africa: New Africa Books.
- Odora Hoppers, Catherine Alum (2008). Life long learning in Africa: Lessons, experiences and opportunities from cultural and cognitive justice. Paris: Speech of Catherine Odora Hoppers, University of South Africa, Pretoria, Professor and South African Research Chair in Development Education, at the occasion of the session of the 21st century talks on the theme "Lifelong learning for all: how long to get there?" UNESCO, 29th October 2008. <http://unesdoc.unesco.org/images/0016/001636/163618e.pdf>.
- Odora Hoppers, Catherine Alum, and Howard Richards (2012). Rethinking thinking: Modernity's other and the transformation of the university. Pretoria, South Africa: University of South Africa.
- Ohnuki-Tierney, Emiko (2002). Kamikaze, cherry blossoms, and nationalisms: The militarization of aesthetics in Japanese history. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
- Okuku, Juma Anthony (2006). "The Land Act (1998) and land tenure reform in Uganda." In Africa Development, 31 (1), 1–26. doi: 10.4314/ad.v31i1.22248
- Oldmeadow, Julian A., and Susan T. Fiske (2012). "Contentment to resentment: Variation in stereotype content across status systems." In Analyses of Social Issues and Public Policy, 12 (1), 324–39. doi: 10.1111/j.1530-2415.2011.01277.x.
- Oliner, Samuel P., and Pearl M. Oliner (1988). The altruistic personality: Rescuers of Jews in Nazi Europe. New York: Free Press.
- Olson, Mancur (1982). The rise and decline of nations: Economic growth, stagflation, and social rigidities. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- Olsson, Peter A. (2005). Malignant pied pipers of our time: A psychological study of destructive cult leaders from Rev. Jim Jones to Osama bin Laden. Baltimore, MD: Publish America.

- Open Science Collaboration (OSC) (2015). "Estimating the reproducibility of psychological science." In Science, 349 (6251). doi: 10.1126/science.aac4716.
<http://science.sciencemag.org/content/sci/349/6251/aac4716.full.pdf>.
- Opatow, Susan (1995). "Drawing the line: Social categorization, moral exclusion, and the scope of justice." In Cooperation, conflict, and justice: Essays inspired by the work of Morton Deutsch, edited by Barbara Benedict Bunker, and Jeffrey Z. Rubin. Chapter 11, pp. 347–69. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Opatow, Susan (2011). "How this was possible: Interpreting the Holocaust." In Journal of Social Issues, 67 (1), 205–24. doi: 10.1111/j.1540-4560.2010.01694.x.
- Opp, Karl-Dieter (2009). Theories of political protest and social movements: A multidisciplinary introduction, critique, and synthesis. Abingdon-on-Thames: Routledge.
- Oppenlander, Richard A. (2011). Comfortably unaware – Global depletion and food responsibility... What you choose to eat. Minneapolis, MN: Langdon Street Press.
- Opperman Lewis, Hélène (2016). Apartheid: Britain's bastard child. Cape Town, South Africa: Reach Publishers.
- Orbach, Susie (2009). Bodies. London: Profile.
- Orentlicher, Diane F. (2016). "International norms in human rights fact-finding." In The transformation of human rights fact-finding, edited by Philip Alston, and Sarah Knuckey. Chapter 24, pp. 501–34. New York: Oxford Scholarship Online.
- Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) (2015). In it together: Why less inequality benefits all. Paris: OECD Publishing. www.keepeek.com/Digital-Asset-Management/oecd/employment/in-it-together-why-less-inequality-benefits-all\_9789264235120-en#page1.
- Orton, Michael (2011). "Flourishing lives: The capabilities approach as a framework for new thinking about employment, work and welfare in the 21st century." In Work, Employment and Society, 25 (2), 352–60. doi: 10.1177/0950017011403848. <http://wes.sagepub.com/content/25/2/352.abstract>.
- Orwell, George (1949). Nineteen eighty-four: A novel. London: Secker and Warburg.
- Osler, Audrey (2010). Education for cosmopolitan citizenship? A challenge for the nation-state. Hong Kong: Centre for Citizenship Education, Hong Kong Institute of Education.
- Ostrom, Elinor (1990). Governing the commons: The evolution of institutions for collective action. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Ostrom, Elinor (2010). "Beyond markets and states: Polycentric governance of complex economic systems." In American Economic Review, 100 (3), 641–72. doi: 10.1257/aer.100.3.641.
- Ott, Michael R. (2016). "Gathering the fragments of truth, reason, hope and redemption: Walter Benjamin's critical theory of religion." In Heathwood Journal of Critical Theory, 1 (3, Reclaiming Walter Benjamin for Revolutionary Times), 28–60.
- Otten, Marte, and Kai J. Jonas (2013). "Humiliation as an intense emotional experience: Evidence from the electro-encephalogram." In Social Neuroscience, 9 (1), 23–35. doi: 10.1080/17470919.2013.855660.
- Otto, Rudolf (1917/1923). The idea of the holy: An inquiry into the non-rational factor in the idea of the divine and its relation to the rational. Translated by John W. Harvey. London: Oxford University Press. German original Das Heilige – Über das Irrationale in der Idee des Göttlichen und sein Verhältnis zum Rationalen, Breslau: Trewendt und Granier, 1917.
<https://archive.org/details/theideaoftheholyy00ottouoft>.
- Otto, Ton (2009). "What happened to cargo cults? Material religions in Melanesia and the West." In Social Analysis, 53 (1), 82–102. doi: 10.3167/sa.2009.530106.
<https://researchonline.jcu.edu.au/9273/>.
- Outhwaite, William (1994). Habermas: A critical introduction. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Oxley, Lawrence J. (2012). Extreme weather and the financial markets: Opportunities in commodities and futures. Hoboken, NJ: Wiley.
- Packard, Vance (1960). The waste makers. New York: David McKay.
- Packard, Vance Oakley (1957). The hidden persuaders. New York: Random House.
- Packard, Vance Oakley (1959). The status seekers: An exploration of class behaviour in America and the hidden barriers that affect you, your community, your future. New York: David McKay.
- Packard, Vance Oakley (1972). A nation of strangers. New York: David McKay.
- Packard, Vance Oakley (1977). The people shapers. Boston: Little, Brown and Company.
- Packard, Vance Oakley (1983). Our endangered children: Growing up in a changing world. Boston: Little, Brown and Company.

- Packard, Vance Oakley (1989). The ultra rich: How much is too much? Boston: Little, Brown and Company.
- Paley, Dawn (2014). Drug war capitalism. Edinburgh: AK Press.
- Palincsar, A. Sullivan (1998). "Social constructivist perspectives on teaching and learning." In Annual Review of Psychology, 49, 345–75. doi: 10.1146/annurev.psych.49.1.345.
- Palmquist, Stephen R. (2015). Comprehensive Commentary on Kant's Religion Within the Bounds of Bare Reason. Chichester: Wiley.
- Pamuk, Orhan, and Maureen Freely (2004). Snow. London: Faber and Faber.
- Pankhurst, Reza (2013). The inevitable Caliphate? A history of the struggle for global Islamic union, 1924 to the present. London: Hurst.
- Pantham, Thomas (2009). "Against untouchability: The discourses of Gandhi and Ambedkar." In Humiliation: Claims and context, edited by Gopal Guru. Chapter 10, pp. 179–208. New Delhi: Oxford University Press.
- Papadopoulos, Renos K. (2006). "Terrorism and panic." In Psychotherapy and Politics International, 4 (2), 90–100. doi: 10.1002/ppi.105.
- Pape, Robert A. (2005). Dying to win: The strategic logic of suicide terrorism. New York: Random House.
- Paris, Joel (2008). Prescriptions for the mind: A critical view of contemporary psychiatry. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Park-Kang, Sungju (2014). Fictional international relations. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Park, Crystal L., Susan Folkman, and Peter Salovey (1997). "Meaning in the context of stress and coping." In Review of General Psychology, 1 (2), 115–44. doi: 10.1037/1089-2680.1.2.115.
- Park, Crystal L., and Stephen P. Hinshaw (2010). "Making sense of the meaning literature: An integrative review of meaning making and its effects on adjustment to stressful life events." In Psychological Bulletin, 136 (2), 257–301. doi: 10.1037/a0018301.
- Park, Crystal L. (2012). "Meaning, spirituality, and growth: Protective and resilience factors in health and illness." In Handbook of health psychology, edited by Andrew Baum, Tracey A. Revenson, and Jerome E. Singer. 2nd edition, pp. 405–29. New York: Psychology Press.
- Parker, Christopher S., and Matt A. Barreto (2013). Change they can't believe in: The Tea Party and reactionary politics in America. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Parker, Rozsika (2003). "Body hatred." In British Journal of Psychotherapy, 19 (4), 447–64. doi: 10.1111/j.1752-0118.2003.tb00098.x.
- Parkins, Wendy, and Geoffrey Craig (2006). Slow living. Oxford: Berg.
- Parsons, Talcott (1951). The social system. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul.
- Parzinger, Hermann (2015). Die Kinder des Prometheus: Eine Geschichte der Menschheit vor Erfindung der Schrift. 4. Aufl. (2015), 5. Aufl. (2016). edition. München, Germany: Beck.
- Passer, Michael W., Ronald E. Smith, Michael L. Atkinson, John B. Mitchell, and Darwin W. Muir (2011). Psychology: Frontiers and applications. 4th Canadian edition. Toronto: McGraw-Hill Ryerson.
- Patai, Raphael (1983). The Arab mind. New York: Charles Scribner.
- Patrick, Stewart (2011). Weak links: Fragile states, global threats, and international security. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Pavlović, Srdja (2006). "Reckoning: The 1991 siege of Dubrovnik and the consequences of the 'war for peace'." In Spaces of Identity, 5 (1, Special Issue: War Crimes). www.yorku.ca/soi/\_Vol\_5\_1/\_HTML/Pavlovic.html.
- Payne, James L. (2004). Exploring the worldwide movement against habits of coercion, bloodshed, and mayhem. Sandpoint, ID: Lytton.
- Peccei, Aurelio (1982). "Global modelling for humanity." In Futures, 14 (2), 91–94. doi: 10.1016/0016-3287(82)90082-9.
- Penttinen, Elina (2013). Joy and international relations: A new methodology. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Perkins, John (2004). Confessions of an economic hit man. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler.
- Perlin, Michael L., and Naomi Weinstein (2014). "'Friend to the martyr, a friend to the woman of shame': Thinking about the law, shame and humiliation." In Southern California Review of Law and Social Justice, September, 1–51, presented at the Workshop on Transforming Humiliation and Violent Conflict, December 6, 2013. http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract\_id=2380701.
- Pérouse de Montclos, Marc-Antoine (2015). "Boko Haram, une exception dans la mouvance djihadiste?" In Politique Étrangère, Été (2), 147–58. doi: 10.3917/pe.152.0147.

- Perry, Bruce D. (2007). Maltreated children: Experience, brain development and the next generation. New York: Norton.
- Petersen, Roger D. (2002). Understanding ethnic violence: Fear, hatred, and resentment in twentieth-century Eastern Europe. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Pettigrew, Thomas F., and Linda R. Tropp (2006). "A meta-analytic test of intergroup contact theory." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 90 (5), 751–83. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.90.5.751.
- Pettit, Philip (1996). "Freedom as antipower." In Ethics, 106 (3), 576–604.
www.princeton.edu/~ppettit/papers/FreedomasAntipower_Ethics_1996.pdf.
- Pettit, Philip (1997a). "Freedom with honor: A republican ideal." In Social Research: An International Quarterly of the Social Sciences, 64 (1, Spring, The Decent Society), 52–76.
www.princeton.edu/~ppettit/papers/FreedomwithHonor_SocialResearch_1997.pdf.
- Pettit, Philip (1997b). Republicanism: A theory of freedom and government. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Pettit, Philip (2014). Just freedom: A moral compass for a complex world. New York: Norton.
- Phang, Sara Elise (2008). Roman military service: Ideologies of discipline in the late Republic and early Principate. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Philip IV of France (2002). "Order to arrest the Templars (September 14, 1307)." In The Templars, edited by Malcolm Barber, and Keith Bate. 2nd edition, pp. 244–47. Manchester: Manchester University Press.
- Phillips, Nelson, and Cynthia Hardy (2002). Discourse analysis: Investigating processes of social construction. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.
- Phillips, Peter, Lew Brown, and Bridget Thornton (2006). US electromagnetic weapons and human rights: A study of the history of US intelligence community human rights violations and continuing research in electromagnetic weapons. Rohnert Park, CA: Sonoma State University, Project Censored, and Media Freedom Foundation.
www.bibliotecapleyades.net/sociopolitica/esp_sociopol_mindcon31.htm.
- Phillipson, Nicholas (2010). Adam Smith: An enlightened life. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Pickering, Andrew (1995). The mangle of practice: Time, agency, and science. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Pickering, Andrew (2010). The cybernetic brain: Sketches of another future. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Pieterse, Jan Nederveen (2001). "Hybridity, so what? The anti-hybridity backlash and the riddles of recognition." In Theory, Culture and Society, 18 (2-3), 219–45. doi: 10.1177/026327640101800211. <http://tcs.sagepub.com/content/18/2-3/219.abstract>.
- Piff, Paul K., Daniel M. Stancato, Stéphane Côté, Rodolfo Mendoza-Denton, and Dacher Keltner (2012). "Higher social class predicts increased unethical behavior." In Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS), 109 (11), 4086–91. doi: 10.1073/pnas.1118373109.
<http://www.pnas.org/content/109/11/4086.full.pdf>.
- Piketty, Thomas (2013/2014). Capital in the twenty-first century. Translated by Arthur Goldhammer. Cambridge, MA: Belknap. French original Le capital au XXI<sup>e</sup> siècle, Paris: Seuil, 2013.
- Pingel-Schliemann, Sandra (2004). Zersetzen: Strategie einer Diktatur. Berlin: Robert-Havemann-Gesellschaft.
- Pinker, Steven (1995). The language instinct: The new science of language and mind. London: Penguin.
- Pinker, Steven (1997). How the mind works. New York: Norton.
- Pinker, Steven (2002). The blank slate: The modern denial of human nature. London: Penguin Books.
- Pinker, Steven (2011). The better angels of our nature: Why violence has declined. New York: Viking Adult.
- Pinker, Susan (2008). The sexual paradox: Extreme men, gifted women and the real gender gap. Toronto: Random House Canada.
- Pirson, Michael, Kenneth Goodpaster, and Claus Dierksmeier (2016). "Human dignity and business: Guest editors' introduction." In Business Ethics Quarterly, 26 (4). doi: 10.1017/beq.2016.47.
- Pisoiu, Daniela (2012). Islamist radicalisation in Europe: An occupational change process. London, New York: Routledge.
- Plato (360 BCE). The Republic: Book VI. <http://classics.mit.edu/Plato/republic.7.vi.html>.
- Pogge, Thomas W. (2002). World poverty and human rights: Cosmopolitan responsibilities and reforms. Cambridge: Polity Press.

- Polanyi, Karl Paul, and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword) (1944/2001). The great transformation: The political and economic origins of our time. 2nd edition. Boston: Beacon Press, first published by Farrar and Rinehart, 1944.
- Polanyi, Michael (1967). The tacit dimension. New York: Anchor Books.
- Pollack, Robert Elliot (1999). The missing moment: How the unconscious shapes modern science. Boston: Houghton Mifflin.
- Polman, Linda (2010). The crisis caravan: What's wrong with humanitarian aid? New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Pope, Kenneth S., and Melba J. T. Vasquez (2007). "Ethics and critical thinking." In Ethics in psychotherapy and counseling: A practical guide, pp. 16–36. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass. <http://kspope.com/apologies.php>.
- Pope, Kenneth S. (2011). "Are the American Psychological Association's detainee interrogation policies ethical and effective? Key claims, documents, and results." In Zeitschrift für Psychologie / Journal of Psychology, 219 (3), 150–58. doi: 10.1027/2151-2604/a000062. <http://psycnet.apa.org/journals/zfp/219/3/150.pdf>.
- Popper, Karl R. (1945). The open society and its enemies (volume 1: The spell of Plato, volumes 2: The high tide of prophecy: Hegel, Marx, and the aftermath). London: George Routledge and Sons.
- Popper, Karl R. (1957). The poverty of historicism. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul.
- Porch, Douglas (2000). History of warfare: Wars of empire. London: Cassell.
- Porpora, Douglas V. (1993). "Cultural rules and material relations." In Sociological Theory, 11 (2), 212–29. doi: 10.2307/202143.
- Porpora, Douglas V. (2015). Reconstructing sociology: The critical realist approach. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Porter, Gareth (2004). Perils of dominance: Imbalance of power and the road to war in Vietnam. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Posen, Barry (1993). "The security dilemma and ethnic conflict." In Survival, 35 (1), 27–47. doi: 10.1080/00396339308442672.
- Post, Jerrold M. (2007). The mind of the terrorist: The psychology of terrorism from the IRA to Al Qaeda. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Poteete, Amy R., Marco A. Janssen, and Elinor Ostrom (2010). Working together: Collective action, the commons, and multiple methods in practice. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Power, Samantha (2002). 'A problem from hell': America and the age of genocide. New York: Basic Books.
- Powers, William T. (1973). Behavior: The control of perception. Chicago: Aldine.
- Powers, William T. (1998). Making sense of behavior: The meaning of control. New Canaan, CT: Benchmark.
- Prashad, Vijay (2007). The darker nations: A people's history of the third world. New York: The New Press.
- Prashad, Vijay (2012). "Dream history of the global South." In Interface: A journal for and about social movements, 4 (1, May), 43–53. http://ggjalliance.org/sites/default/files/Interface-4-1-Prashad\_1.pdf.
- Pratt, Simon Frankel (2016). "A relational view of ontological security in international relations." In International Studies Quarterly, sqw038. doi: 10.1093/isq/sqw038.
- Pratto, Felicia, and Andrew L. Stewart (2011). "Social dominance theory." In The encyclopedia of peace psychology, edited by Daniel J. Christie. Chichester: Wiley-Blackwell.
- Pressman, D. Elaine (2009). Risk assessment decision for violent political extremism. Report by Public Safety Canada. www.publicsafety.gc.ca/cnt/rsrscs/pblctns/2009-02-rdv/2009-02-rdv-eng.pdf.
- Price, Munro (2012). "Napoleon and Metternich in 1813: Some new and some neglected evidence." In French History, 26 (4), 482–503. doi: 10.1093/fh/crs119. <http://fh.oxfordjournals.org/content/26/4/482.abstract>.
- Pritzker, Sonya E. (2014). Living translation: Language and the search for resonance in U. S. Chinese Medicine. New York: Berghahn.
- Pritzker, Sonya E. (2016). "New Age with Chinese characteristics? Translating inner child emotion pedagogies in contemporary China." In Ethos, 44 (2, Special Issue: Emotion Pedagogies), 150–70. doi: 10.1111/etho.12116.
- Prochaska, James O., Carlo C. DiClemente, and John C. Norcross (1992). "In search of how people change. Applications to addictive behaviors." In The American Psychologist, 47 (9), 1102–14. doi: 10.1037/0003-066X.47.9.1102.

- Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus, and Michael D. Reeve (2004). Epitoma rei militaris. Oxford: Clarendon Press, written possibly in the reign of Theodosius the Great, Roman Emperor from 379–395 CE, first printed edition Utrecht, 1473.
- Purdey, Stephen J. (2010). Economic growth, the environment and international relations: The growth paradigm. London: Routledge.
- Purpura, Philip P. (2011). Terrorism and homeland security. Burlington: Elsevier Science.
- Pushkin, Aleksandr Sergeevich (1876). Marie: A story of Russian love. Chicago: Jansen, McClurg. <https://archive.org/details/marieastoryruss01zielgoog>.
- Putnam, Robert David (1976). The comparative study of political elites. Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall.
- Putnam, Robert David (1995). “Bowling alone: America’s declining social capital.” In Journal of Democracy, 6, 65–78. <http://xroads.virginia.edu/~HYPER/detoc/assoc/bowling.html>.
- Putnam, Robert David (2000). Bowling alone: The collapse and revival of American community. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Putnam, Robert David (2007). “E pluribus unum: Diversity and community in the twenty-first century – The 2006 Johan Skytte Prize.” In Scandinavian Political Studies, 30 (2, June), 137–74. www.utoronto.ca/ethnicstudies/Putnam.pdf.
- Pynchon, Susan Reynolds (2005). Resisting humiliation in schooling: Narratives and counter-narratives. Washington, DC: University of Washington, doctoral dissertation.
- Pyszczynski, Thomas A., Jeff Greenberg, and Sheldon Solomon (2003). In the wake of 9/11: The psychology of terror. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association.
- Pyszczynski, Thomas A., Abdolhossein Abdollahi, Sheldon Solomon, Jeff Greenberg, Florette Cohen, and David Weise (2006). “Mortality salience, martyrdom, and military might: The great satan versus the axis of evil.” In Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, 32 (4), 525–37. doi: 10.1177/0146167205282157.
- Quataert, Donald (2000). The Ottoman Empire, 1700-1922. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Quilligan, Michael (2013). Understanding shadows: The corrupt use of intelligence. Atlanta, GA: Clarity Press.
- Rachman, Gideon (2017). Easternization: Asia’s rise and America’s decline from Obama to Trump and beyond. New York: Other Press.
- Rancière, Jacques (2004). The politics of aesthetics: The distribution of the sensible. London: Continuum.
- Randall, Lisa (2015). Dark matter and the dinosaurs: The astounding interconnectedness of the universe. New York: Ecco.
- Randt, Leif (2015). Planet Magnon. Köln, Germany: Kiepenheuer und Witsch.
- Rashid, Ahmed (2008). Descent into chaos: How the war against Islamic extremism is being lost in Pakistan, Afghanistan and central Asia. London: Allen Lane.
- Raskin, Paul D., Tariq Banuri, Gilbert Gallopín, Pablo Gutman, Albert Hammond, Robert Kates, and Rob Swart (2002). Great transition: The promise and lure of the times ahead. Boston: Stockholm Environment Institute (SEI), Tellus Institute, report of the Global Scenario Group. www.gtinitiative.org/documents/Great\_Transitions.pdf.
- Raskin, Paul D. (2008). “World lines: A framework for exploring global pathways.” In Ecological Economics, 65 (3), 461–70. doi: 10.1016/j.ecolecon.2008.01.021.
- Raskin, Paul D. (2014). A great transition? Where we stand. Keynote address at the biennial conference of the International Society for Ecological Economics (ISEE) in Reykjavik, Iceland, August 2014. www.greattransition.org/publication/a-great-transition-where-we-stand.
- Raskin, Paul D. (2016). Journey to Earthland: The great transition to planetary civilization. Boston: Tellus Institute. www.greattransition.org/publication/journey-to-earthland.
- Ray, Paul H., and Sherry Ruth Anderson (2000). The cultural creatives: How 50 million people are changing the world. New York: Three Rivers Press.
- Razeto-Barry, Pablo R., and Catalina C. Canals (2015). “Does the world progress?” In Ecological Economics, Under review.
- Readings, Bill (1996). The university in ruins. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Reardon, Betty A., and Asha Hans (Eds.) (2010). The gender imperative: Human security versus state security. New Delhi: Routledge India.
- Reber, Arthur S. (1995). The Penguin dictionary of psychology. 2nd edition. Harmondsworth: Penguin.

- Reder, Michael, Verena Risse, Katharina Hirschbrunn, and Georg Stoll (Eds.) (2015). Global common good. Intercultural perspectives on a just and ecological transformation. Frankfurt am Main, Germany, New York: Campus.
- Redlich, Fritz (1999). Hitler: Diagnosis of a destructive prophet. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Refsdal, Pål (2010). Geriljareportereren. Oslo: Versal.
- Reichberg, Gregory M., Henrik Preben Syse, and Endre Begby (Eds.) (2006). The ethics of war: Classic and contemporary readings. Malden, MA: Blackwell Publishing.
- Reidy, Dennis E., Amos Zeichner, and L. Alana Seibert (2011). "Unprovoked aggression: Effects of psychopathic traits and sadism." In Journal of Personality, 79 (1), 75–100. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-6494.2010.00691.x.
- Remy, Maurice Philip (2002). Mythos Rommel. München, Germany: List Verlag.
- Reyna, Valerie F., and Evan A. Wilhelms (Eds.) (2015). Neuroeconomics, judgment, and decision making. New York: Psychology Press.
- Ricard, Matthieu (2013/2016). Altruism: The power of compassion to change yourself and the world. New York: Little, Brown. French original Playdoyer pour l'altruisme, Paris: NiL éditions, 2013.
- Ricardo, David (1817). On the principles of political economy and taxation. London: John Murray.
- Rich, Bruce (1994). Mortgaging the earth: The World Bank, environmental impoverishment, and the crisis of development. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Rich, Bruce (2013). Foreclosing the future: The World Bank and the politics of environmental destruction. Washington, DC: The Center for Resource Economics and Island Press.
- Richards, Howard (1995). Letters from Quebec: A philosophy of peace and justice. San Francisco, London: International Scholars Press.
- Richards, Howard (2004). Understanding the global economy. Revised edition. Santa Barbara, CA: Peace Education Books.
- Richards, Howard, and Joanna Swanger (2006a). The dilemmas of social democracies. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Richards, Howard, and Joanna Swanger (2006b). Dilemmas of social democracies. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Richards, Howard, and Joanna Swanger (2008). Manual for building cultures of peace. New York: Springer.
- Richards, Howard, and Joanna Swanger (2009). "Culture change: A practical method with a theoretical basis." In Handbook for building cultures of peace, edited by Joseph de Rivera, pp. 57–70. New York: Springer.
- Richards, Howard (2010). Humanizing methodologies in transformation. Pretoria, South Africa: University of South Africa, lecture given on July 20, 2010.
- Richards, Howard (2011). "Human development and the transformation of the academy." In Journal of Developing Societies, 27 (2, June), 201–06. doi: 10.1177/0169796X1102700205.
- Richards, Howard (2013). "On the genealogy of morals." In On Foucault: Non-authoritarian authority: Philosophical contributions to building cultures of solidarity Chapter 9. Limache, Chile: howardrichards.org/peace/content/view/91/95/.
- Richards, Howard, and Joanna Swanger (2013). Gandhi and the future of economics. Lake Oswego, OR: Dignity Press.
- Richards, Howard (2014). "Unbounded organization and the unbounded university curriculum." In University engagement and environmental sustainability, edited by Patricia Inman, and Diana Robinson. Chapter 2. Manchester: Manchester University Press.
- Richards, Howard (2015). "Modernity's 'other' and the transformation of the university." In International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning, 7 (2, Development Education in the Global South), 6–25.
- Richards, Howard, and Gavin Andersson (2015). Unbounded organization in community. Lake Oswego, OR: Dignity Press.
- Richards, Howard, Catherine Alum Odora Hoppers, and Evelin Gerda Lindner (2015a). Beyond Foucault: The rise of indigenous subjugated knowledges – Dialogues by Evelin Lindner, Howard Richards and Catherine Odora Hoppers. Forthcoming. Inspired by the lecture series 'Against Foucault', given by Howard Richards in Pretoria, South Africa in 2013. www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/videos.php#foucault.
- Richards, Howard, Catherine Alum Odora Hoppers, and Evelin Gerda Lindner (2015b). Beyond Foucault: The rise of indigenous subjugated knowledges – Dialogues with Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and Evelin Lindner. Pretoria, South Africa: Inspired by the lecture

- series Against Foucault given by Howard Richards in Pretoria, South Africa, in 2013.
www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/videos.php#foucault.
- Richards, Howard (2016a). The Nice terror attack: Mind at the end of its tether. Limache, Chile: Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.
www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/RichardsNiceTerrorAttack2016.pdf.
- Richards, Howard (2016b). South African elections 2016. Limache, Chile: Chileufú – Casa de Diálogo. <http://chileufu.cl/south-african-elections-2016/>.
- Richards, Howard (2016c). Individual and human rights. Limache, Chile: Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.
www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/RichardsIndividualandHumanRights2016.pdf.
- Richards, Howard, and Gavin Andersson (2017). Economic theory and community development. Forthcoming.
- Richerson, Peter J., Robert Boyd, and Robert L. Bettinger (1999). The origins of agriculture as a natural experiment in cultural evolution. Davis, CA: University of California, Center for Agricultural History. www.des.ucdavis.edu/faculty/Richerson/Origins\_Ag\_IV3.htm.
- Richerson, Peter J., and Robert Boyd (2001). "Institutional evolution in the Holocene: The rise of complex societies." In The origin of human social institutions, edited by Walter G. Runciman, pp. 197–204. Oxford: Oxford University Press. Proceedings of the British Academy Foundation meeting 'The Origin of Human Social Institutions', organised by Walter G. Runciman, Draft 8 22 00, April 2000. <http://tuvalu.santafe.edu/~bowles/Holocene.pdf>,
www.des.ucdavis.edu/faculty/Richerson/evolutioninstitutions.pdf.
- Richerson, Peter J., Robert Boyd, and Robert L. Bettinger (2001). "Was agriculture impossible during the Pleistocene but mandatory during the Holocene? A climate change hypothesis." In American Antiquity, 66, 387–411. doi: 10.2307/2694241.
- Richter, Carola, and Asiem El Difraoui (Eds.) (2015). Arabische Medien. Konstanz, Germany: UVK Verlagsgesellschaft.
- Rickards, James (2014). The death of money: The coming collapse of the international monetary system. New York: Portfolio.
- Ricks, Thomas E. (2006). Fiasco: The American military adventure in Iraq. New York: Penguin Press.
- Ridley, Matt (1996). The origins of virtue: Human instincts and the evolution of cooperation. London: Penguin.
- Ridley, Matt (2010). The rational optimist: How prosperity evolves. New York: HarperCollins.
- Rieff, David (2016). In praise of forgetting: Historical memory and its ironies. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Riesman, David, Nathan Glazer, and Reuel Denney (1950/2001). The lonely crowd: A study of the changing American character. Revised edition. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press. Originally published in 1950.
- Rifkin, Jeremy (2009). The empathic civilization: The race to global consciousness in a world in crisis. New York: Jeremy P. Tarcher.
- Rifkin, Jeremy (2014). The zero marginal cost society: The internet of things, the collaborative commons, and the eclipse of capitalism. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Rignot, Eric, Jeremie Mouginot, Mathieu Morlighem, Helene Seroussi, and Bernd Scheuchl (2014). "Widespread, rapid grounding line retreat of Pine Island, Thwaites, Smith and Kohler glaciers, West Antarctica from 1992 to 2011." In Geophysical Research Letters. doi: 10.1002/2014GL060140.
- Riley, Naomi Schaefer (2011). The faculty lounges: And other reasons why you won't get the college education you paid for. Chicago: Ivan R. Dee.
- Ringmar, Erik (2002). "The recognition game: Soviet Russia against the West." In Cooperation and Conflict, 37 (2), 115–36. doi: 10.1177/0010836702037002973.
- Rippin, Ann (2013). "The human touch versus 'silver-handedness': The importance of the haptic in organisational life." In International Journal of Work Organisation and Emotion, 5 (4), 357–68. doi: 10.1504/IJWOE.2013.057401.
www.inderscienceonline.com/doi/abs/10.1504/IJWOE.2013.057401.
- Risen, James (2014). Pay any price: Greed, power, and endless war. New York: Houghton Mifflin Harcourt.
- Roach, Steven C. (2017). Decency and difference. forthcoming.

- Robinson, William I. (2017). Global capitalism: Reflections on a brave new world. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/Robinson-Global-Capitalism.pdf.
- Rock, Paul (2005). "Chronocentrism and British criminology." In The British Journal of Sociology, 56 (3), 473–791. doi: 10.1111/j.1468-4446.2005.00078.x.
- Rockström, Johan (2015). Bounding the planetary future: Why we need a Great Transition. Boston: Great Transition Initiative: Toward a Transformative Vision and Practice. www.greattransition.org/images/GTI\_publications/Rockstrom-Bounding\_the\_Planetary\_Future.pdf.
- Rodina, Mihaela (1999). Blood code rules in northern Albania. Paris: Agence France-Presse dispatch 30th June.
- Rodrik, Dani (2011). The globalization paradox: Democracy and the future of the world economy. New York: Norton.
- Roe, Paul (1999). "The intrastate security dilemma: Ethnic conflict as a 'tragedy'?" In Journal of Peace Research, 36 (2), 183–202. doi: 10.1177/0022343399036002004.
- Roe, Paul (2005). Ethnic violence and the societal security dilemma. London: Routledge.
- Rogers, Carl R. (1977). Carl Rogers on personal power. New York: Delacorte Press.
- Rogers, Carl R., Harold C. Lyon, Reinhard Tausch, and Karin Lyon (2014). On becoming an effective teacher: Person-centered teaching, psychology, philosophy, and dialogues with Carl R. Rogers and Harold Lyon. London: Routledge.
- Rogers, Everett M. (1962). Diffusion of innovations. New York: Free Press of Glencoe.
- Rogers, Yvonne, Andrew Rutherford, and Peter A. Bibby (1992). Models in the mind: Theory, perspective and application. London: Academic Press.
- Rolls, Edmund T. (2014). Emotion and decision-making explained. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Romarheim, Anders Grindlia (2015). War at home: Strategic narratives of the war on terrorism. London: King's College London, School of Social Science and Public Policy, Department of War Studies, doctoral dissertation.
- Ronfeldt, David F. (1996). Tribes, institutions, markets, networks: A framework about societal evolution. Santa Monica, CA: RAND (Research AND Development) National Security Research Division. www.rand.org/content/dam/rand/pubs/papers/2005/P7967.pdf.
- Roodman, David, and Jonathan Morduch (2009). "The impact of microcredit on the poor in Bangladesh: Revisiting the evidence." In Working Paper 174. Washington, DC: Center for Global Development.
- Roosevelt, Eleanor (1948). "The promise of human rights." In Foreign Affairs, 26 (3), 470–77. doi: 10.2307/20030126. www.gwu.edu/~erpapers/documents/articles/promiseofhumanrights.cfm.
- Rosa, Hartmut (2005). Beschleunigung: Die Veränderung der Zeitstrukturen in der Moderne. Frankfurt: Suhrkamp.
- Rosa, Hartmut (2010). Alienation and acceleration: Towards a critical theory of late-modern temporality. Malmö, Aarhus: Nordic Summer University Press.
- Rosas, Alejandro (2012). "Towards a unified theory of reciprocity." In Behavioral and Brain Sciences, 35 (1), 36–37. doi: 10.1017/s0140525x11001312, www.docentes.unal.edu.co/arosasl/docs/Rosas\_on%20GualaBBS.pdf.
- Rose, Steven P. R., Richard Lewontin, and Leon J. Kamin (1984). Not in our genes: Biology, ideology and human nature. Harmondsworth: Penguin.
- Rose, William (2000). "The security dilemma and ethnic conflict: Some new hypotheses." In Security Studies, 9 (4), 1–51. doi: 10.1080/09636410008429412.
- Rosen, Michael (2012). Dignity: Its history and meaning. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Rosenberg, Morris, Carmi Schooler, Carrie Schoenbach, and Florence Rosenberg (1995). "Global self-esteem and specific self-esteem: Different concepts, different outcomes." In American Sociological Review, 60 (1), 141–56. www.jstor.org/stable/2096350.
- Rosenthal, Bruce, and Donald L. Zimmerman (2012). "Hikikomori." In International Journal of Mental Health, 41 (4), 82–95. doi: 10.2753/IMH0020-7411410406.
- Rosenthal, Caitlin C. (2013). "From memory to mastery: Accounting for control in America, 1750–1880." In Enterprise and Society, 14 (4), 732–48.
- Rosenwein, Barbara H. (2006). Emotional communities in the early Middle Ages. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Roskies, Adina L. (2010). "How does neuroscience affect our conception of volition?" In Annual Review of Neuroscience, 33, 109–30. doi: 10.1146/annurev-neuro-060909-153151.

- Ross, Andrew A. G. (2013). Mixed emotions: Beyond fear and hatred in international conflict. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Ross, Lee D. (1995). "Reactive devaluation in negotiation and conflict resolution." In Barriers to the negotiated resolution of conflict, edited by Kenneth Arrow, Robert H. Mnookin, Lee D. Ross, Amos Tversky, and Robert Wilson. Chapter 2, pp. 26–43. New York: Norton.
- Ross, Lee D., and Andrew Ward (1996). "Naive Realism in everyday life: Implications for social conflict and misunderstanding." In Values and knowledge, edited by Terrance Brown, Edward S. Reed, and Elliot Turiel. Chapter 6, pp. 103–35. Hillsdale, NJ: Erlbaum.
- Ross, Lee D. (2012). "Reflections on biased assimilation and belief polarization." In A Journal of Politics and Society, 24 (2), 233–45. doi: 10.1080/08913811.2012.711025.
- Rotering, Frank M. (2013). The economics of needs and limits. 2nd edition. Vancouver, BC. <http://needsandlimits.wdfiles.com/local--files/site:about/The%20Economics%20of%20Needs%20and%20Limits.pdf>.
- Roth, Gerhard, Klaus-Jürgen Grün, and Michel Friedman (2010). Kopf oder Bauch? Zur Biologie der Entscheidung. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck und Ruprecht.
- Roth, Wolff-Michael, Luis Radford, and Lionel LaCroix (2012). "Working with cultural-historical activity theory." In Forum: Qualitative Sozialforschung / Social Research, 13 (2), Article 23. www.qualitative-research.net/index.php/fqs/rt/printerFriendly/1814/0.
- Rothkopf, David J. (2008). Superclass: The global power elite and the world they are making. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux.
- Rotter, Julian B. (1954). Social learning and clinical psychology. New York: Prentice-Hall.
- Rousseau, Jean-Jacques (1762). Du contrat social ou principes du droit politique. Amsterdam, The Netherlands: Marc-Michel Rey. http://athena.unige.ch/athena/rousseau/jjr\_cont.rtf.
- Rowe, Cami (2013). The politics of protest and US foreign policy: Performative construction of the war on terror. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Rowen Sivertsen, Barbara (2011). Shianshenka: The rise and fall of the perfect creation. Nesoddtangen, Norway: Birch Tree Road Publishing.
- Roy, Olivier (2004). Globalized Islam: The search for a new Ummah. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Rubin, Jeffrey Z., and Bert R. Brown (1975). The social psychology of bargaining and negotiation. New York: Academic Press.
- Rudmin, Floyd Webster (1991). "Seventeen early peace psychologists." In Journal of Humanistic Psychology, 31 (2, Spring), 12–43.
- Rummel, Rudolph Joseph (1994). Death by government. New Brunswick, NJ: Transactions Publishers.
- Ruppert, Franz (2008). Trauma, bonding and family constellations: Understanding and healing injuries of the soul. Frome: Green Balloon.
- Rushkoff, Douglas (2009). Life inc.: How the world became a corporation and how to take it back. New York: Random House.
- Rutkoff, Peter M. (1981). Revanche and revision: The ligue des patriotes and the origins of the radical right in France, 1882-1900. Athens: Ohio University Press.
- Ryan, Charlotte, and William A. Gamson (2006). "The art of reframing political debates." In Contexts, 5 (1), 13–18. doi: 10.1525/ctx.2006.5.1.13. <http://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1525/ctx.2006.5.1.13>.
- Ryan, Christopher, and Cacilda Jethá (2010). Sex at dawn: The prehistoric origins of modern sexuality. New York: HarperCollins.
- Ryan, Stephen (1995). "Peace-building and conflict transformation." In Ethnic conflict and international relations. 2nd edition, pp. 129–52. Aldershot: Dartmouth Publishing. www.colorado.edu/conflict/peace/example/ryan7470.htm.
- Räpple, Eva Maria (2010). "The seductive serpent." In Locating the past/discovering the present: Comparative perspectives on religion, culture and marginality, edited by David Gay, and Stephen R. Reimer. Edmonton, AB: University of Alberta Press.
- Rödder, Andreas (2011). Geschichte der deutschen Wiedervereinigung. München, Germany: C.H. Beck.
- Røed-Larsen, Sverre, and Anne Margrete Hjort-Larsen (Eds.) (2012). I strid for fred: Fredskontoret 1962-1972 – idealistisk fredsarbeid og bred grasrotaktivitet. Oslo: Kolofon.

- Røislien, Hanne Eggen, and Jo Røislien (2010). "The logic of Palestinian terrorist target choice? Examining the Israel defense forces' official statistics on Palestinian terrorist attacks 2000–2004." In Studies in Conflict and Terrorism, 33 (2), 134–48. doi: 10.1080/10576100903488436.
- Röpke, Andrea, and Andreas Speit (2013). Blut und Ehre: Geschichte und Gegenwart rechter Gewalt in Deutschland. Berlin, Germany: Ch. Links Verlag.
- Sageman, Marc (2004). Understanding terror networks. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
- Sageman, Marc (2008). Leaderless jihad: Terror networks in the twenty-first century. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
- Sageman, Marc (2009). "Confronting Al-Qaeda: Understanding the threat in Afghanistan." In Perspectives on Terrorism, North America, 3 (4), 4–25. www.terrorismanalysts.com/pt/index.php/pot/article/view/79.
- Sahlberg, Pasi (2011). Finnish lessons 2.0: What can the world learn from educational change in Finland? New York: Teachers College Press.
- Sahlberg, Pasi (2015). Finnish lessons 2.0: What can the world learn from educational change in Finland? 2nd revised edition. New York: Teachers College Press.
- Said, Edward W. (1978). Orientalism. New York: Pantheon Books.
- Said, Edward W. (2003). Orientalism. London: Penguin Books.
- Salecl, Renata (2004). On anxiety: Thinking in action. London: Routledge.
- Salomon, Gavriel, and Baruch Nevo (Eds.) (2002). Peace education: The concept, principles, and practices around the world. Mahwah, NJ: Erlbaum.
- Sanderson, Stephen K. (2007). Evolutionism and its critics: Deconstructing and reconstructing an evolutionary interpretation of human society. Boulder, CO: Paradigm.
- Sapolsky, Robert M. (2017). Behave: The biology of humans at our best and worst. New York: Penguin.
- Sarotte, Mary Elise (2014). The collapse: The accidental opening of the Berlin Wall. New York: Basic books.
- Sarraj, Eyad El (2002). "Suicide bombers: Dignity, despair, and the need for hope." In Journal of Palestine Studies, XXXI (4, Summer), 71–76. doi: 10.1525/jps.2002.31.4.71.
- Sartre, Jean-Paul (1960). Critique de la raison dialectique. Paris: Gallimard.
- Sassen, Saskia (2014). Expulsions: Brutality and complexity in the global economy. Cambridge, MA: Belknap.
- Satter, David (2003). Darkness at dawn: The rise of the Russian criminal state. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Saval, Nikil (2014). Cubed: A secret history of the workplace. New York: Knopf.
- Sayler, Michael (2004). Humiliation and the poor: A study in the management of meaning. Santa Barbara, CA: Fielding Graduate Institute, doctoral dissertation.
- Scahill, Jeremy (2007). Blackwater: The rise of the world's most powerful mercenary army. New York: Nation Books.
- Scahill, Jeremy (2013). Dirty wars: The world is a battlefield. New York: Nation Books.
- Schacht, Robert M. (1988). "Circumscription theory: A critical review." In American Behavioral Scientist, 31 (4), 438–48. doi: 10.1177/000276488031004005.
- Schachter, Oscar (1983). "Human dignity as a normative concept." In The American Journal of International Law, 77 (4, October), 848–54. www.jstor.org/stable/2202536.
- Scharmer, Claus Otto (2009). Theory U: Leading from the future as it emerges: The social technology of presencing. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler.
- Scharmer, Otto, and Katrin Kaufer (2013). Leading from the emerging future: From ego-system to eco-system economies. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler.
- Schattschneider, Elmer Eric (1960). The semisovereign people: A realist's view of democracy in America. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston.
- Schattschneider, Elmer Eric (1969). Two hundred million Americans in search of government. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston.
- Scheff, Thomas J., and Suzanne M. Retzinger (1991). Emotions and violence: Shame and rage in destructive conflicts. Lexington, MA: Lexington Books.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (1994). Bloody revenge: Emotions, nationalism and war. Boulder: Westview Press.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (1997). Emotions, the social bond and human reality. Part/whole analysis. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

- Scheff, Thomas J., and Suzanne M. Retzinger (1997). "Shame, anger and the social bond: A theory of sexual offenders and treatment." In Electronic Journal of Sociology. www.sociology.org/content/vol003.001/sheff.html.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (2000). "Shame and the social bond: A sociological theory." In Sociological Theory, 18 (1), 84–99. doi: 10.1111/0735-2751.00089.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (2006). "Aggression, hypermasculine emotions and relations: The silence/violence pattern." In Irish Journal of Sociology, 15 (1), 24–37. www.soc.ucsb.edu/faculty/scheff/53.htm.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (2007). War and emotion: Hypermasculine violence as a social system. Santa Barbara, CA. www.soc.ucsb.edu/faculty/scheff/51.html.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (2010). Social-emotional origins of violence: A theory of multiple killing. Santa Barbara, CA: University of California. www.soc.ucsb.edu/faculty/scheff/82.pdf.
- Scheff, Thomas J. (2013). "Getting unstuck: Interdisciplinarity as a new discipline." In Sociological Forum, 28 (1, March), 179–85. doi: 10.1111/socf.12008, www.blackwellpublishing.com/journal.asp?ref=0884-8971&site=1.
- Scheler, Max (1912/1961). Ressentiment. Translated by William W. Holdheim. New York: Free Press of Glencoe. German original Über Ressentiment und moralisches Werturteil, Leipzig: Engelmann, 1912.
- Scheler, Max (1913/1923/1954). The nature of sympathy. Translated by Peter Heath. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul. German originals Wesen und Formen der Sympathie, Bonn, Germany: F. Cohen, 1923, and Zur Phänomenologie und Theorie der Sympathiegefühle und von Liebe und Hass, Halle, Saale: Max Niemeyer, 1913. www.sdvigpress.org/dox/101173/101173.pdf.
- Scheler, Max (1914–1916/1957). "Ordo amoris [Logic of the heart]." In Schriften aus dem Nachlaß, Band I: Zur Ethik und Erkenntnislehre, edited by Maria Scheler. Bern, Switzerland: Francke Verlag.
- Schell, Jonathan (2003). The unconquerable world: Power, nonviolence, and the will of the people. New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Schell, Orville, and John Delury (2013). Wealth and power: China's long march to the twenty first century. Random House.
- Scherer, Greg (2011). No local: Why small scale alternatives can't change the world. Winchester: Zeri Books.
- Scheuer, Michael (2011). Osama bin Laden. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Schirmacher, Frank (2006). Minimum: Vom Vergehen und Neuentstehen unserer Gemeinschaft. München, Germany: Karl Blessing.
- Schivelbusch, Wolfgang (2001). Die Kultur der Niederlage. Berlin: Alexander Fest.
- Schleichert, Hubert (1999). Wie man mit Fundamentalisten diskutiert, ohne den Verstand zu verlieren: Anleitung zum subversiven Denken. München, Germany: C.H. Beck.
- Schlosser, Eric (2013). Command and control: Nuclear weapons, the Damascus accident, and the illusion of safety. New York: Penguin.
- Schlund-Vials, Cathy J., and Samuel Martínez (Eds.) (2017). Interrogating the perpetrator: Violation, culpability, and human rights. New York: Routledge.
- Schlögel, Karl (2008). Terror und Traum: Moskau 1937. München, Germany: Carl Hanser.
- Schmid, Alex Peter (Ed.) (2011). The Routledge handbook of terrorism research. London: Routledge.
- Schmid, Alex Peter (2013). "Radicalisation, de-radicalisation, counter-radicalisation: A conceptual discussion and literature review." In ICCT Research Paper March 2013. The Hague, The Netherlands: The International Centre for Counter-Terrorism (ICCT). www.icct.nl/download/file/ICCT-Schmid-Radicalisation-De-Radicalisation-Counter-Radicalisation-March-2013.pdf.
- Schmidt, Bettina E., and Ingo W. Schröder (2001). "Violent imaginaries and violent practices." In Anthropology of violence and conflict, edited by Bettina E. Schmidt, and Ingo W. Schröder, pp. 1–24. London: Routledge.
- Schmidt, Jeff (2000). Disciplined minds: A critical look at salaried professionals and the soul-battering system that shapes their lives. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Schmitt, Carl (1922). Politische Theologie. Vier Kapitel zur Lehre von der Souveränität. München, Leipzig, Germany: Duncker und Humblot.
- Schmitt, Carl (1927/2007). The concept of the political. Translated by George D. Schwab. Expanded edition. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. German original "Der Begriff des Politischen", in Archiv für Sozialwissenschaft und Sozialpolitik, 1927, 58 (1), 1–33, and München, Germany: Duncker und Humblot, 1932.

- Schmitt, Carl (1931). Der Hüter der Verfassung. Tübingen, Germany: J. C. B. Mohr.
- Schmitt, Carl (1963/2004). "Theory of the partisan: Intermediate commentary on the concept of the political (1963)." In Telos (127, March), 11–78. German original Theorie des Partisanen: Zwischenbemerkung zum Begriff des Politischen, Berlin: Duncker and Humblot, 1963.
- Schmitz-Berning, Cornelia (2007). Vokabular des Nationalsozialismus. 2nd revised edition. Berlin: De Gruyter.
- Schmitz, Dominic Musa (2016). Ich war ein Salafist: Meine Zeit in der islamistischen Parallelwelt. Berlin: Ullstein.
- Schnaiberg, Allan (1980). The environment: From surplus to scarcity. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Schneider, Kirk J. (2004). Rediscovery of awe: Splendor, mystery and the fluid center of life. St. Paul, MN: Paragon House.
- Schneider, Kirk J. (2013). The polarized mind: Why it's killing us and what we can do about it. Colorado Springs, CO: University Professors Press.
- Schor, Juliet (2010). Plenitude: The new economics of true wealth. New York: Penguin Press.
- Schor, Juliet B. (1993). The overworked American: The unexpected decline of leisure. New York: Basic Books.
- Schor, Juliet B. (1999). The overspent American: Upscaling, downshifting and the new consumer. New York: Harper Perennial.
- Schor, Juliet B. (2004). Born to buy: The commercialized child and the new consumer culture. New York: Scribner.
- Schor, Juliet B., and Craig J. Thompson (2014). Sustainable lifestyles and the quest for plenitude: Case studies of the new economy. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Schore, Allan N., and Daniela Sieff (2015). "On the same wave-length: How our emotional brain is shaped by human relationships." In Understanding and healing emotional trauma: Conversations with pioneering clinicians and researchers, edited by Daniela Sieff, pp. 111–36. New York: Routledge.
- Schroeder, Doris (2012). "Human rights and human dignity: An appeal to separate the conjoined twins." In Ethical Theory and Moral Practice, 15 (3), 323–35. www.jstor.org/stable/23254292.
- Schroeder, Doris, and Abol-Hassan Bani-Sadr (2017). Dignity in the 21st century: Middle East and West. Cham, Switzerland: Springer.
- Schulz von Thun, Friedemann (1981). Miteinander Reden, 1: Störungen und Klärungen. Reinbek, Germany: Rowohlt.
- Schulz von Thun, Friedemann (2007). Miteinander reden: Fragen und Antworten. Reinbek, Germany: Rowohlt.
- Schumacher, Ernst Friedrich (1973). Small is beautiful: A study of economics as if people mattered. London: Blond and Briggs.
- Schwartz, Barry (2004). The paradox of choice: Why more is less. New York: Ecco/HarperCollins.
- Schwartz, Warren, Keith Baxter, and David Ryan (1984). "The duel: Can these gentlemen be acting efficiently?" In The Journal of Legal Studies, 13 (2, June), 321–25. www.jstor.org/stable/724239.
- Schwartzman, David (2016). "How much and what kind of energy does humanity need?" In Socialism and Democracy, 30 (2), 97–120. doi: 10.1080/08854300.2016.1183999.
- Schwarz, Hans-Peter (1997). Konrad Adenauer: A German politician and statesman in a period of war, revolution and reconstruction: The statesman, 1952-1967. Oxford, New York: Berghahn.
- Schwarzenbach, Sibyl Ann (2009). On civic friendship: Including women in the state. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Schweller, Randall L. (1996). "Neorealism's status-quo bias: What security dilemma?" In Security Studies, 5 (3), 90–121. doi: 10.1080/09636419608429277.
- Schweller, Randall L. (2011). "Rational theory for a bygone era." In Security Studies, 20 (3), 460–68. doi: 10.1080/09636412.2011.599196.
- Scott, L. Plous, and G. Zimbardo Philip (2004). "How social science can reduce terrorism." In The Chronicle of Higher Education, 51 (3), B.9–B10. www.socialpsychology.org/pdf/chronicle04.pdf.
- Scott, Niall, and Jonathan Seglow (2007). Altruism. Maidenhead: Open University Press.
- Searle, John R. (1983). Intentionality: An essay in the philosophy of mind. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Searle, John Rogers (1995). The construction of social reality. New York: Free Press.
- Sebag Montefiore, Simon (2003). Stalin: The court of the red tsar. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.
- Sebag Montefiore, Simon (2016). The Romanovs 1613–1918. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.

- Sebald, W. G. (1992/1996). The emigrants. Translated by Michael Hulse. London: Harvill. German original Die Ausgewanderten: Vier lange Erzählungen, Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Eichborn, 1992.
- Seierstad, Åsne (2013/2015). One of us: The story of Anders Breivik and the massacre in Norway. Translated by Sarah Death. London: Virago, Norwegian original En Av Oss: En Fortelling Om Norge, Oslo: Kagge, 2013.
- Seierstad, Åsne (2016). To søstre. Oslo: Kagge forlag.
- Selasi, Taiye (2013). Ghana must go. New York: Penguin.
- Seligman, Martin E. P. (1972). "Learned helplessness." In Annual Review of Medicine, 23 (1), 407–12. doi: 10.1146/annurev.me.23.020172.002203.
- Seligman, Martin E. P. (1974). "Depression and learned helplessness." In The psychology of depression: Contemporary theory and research, edited by Raymond J. Friedman, and Martin M. Katz, pp. 83–125. Washington, DC: V. H. Winston.
- Sen, Amartya (1992). Inequality reexamined. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Sen, Amartya (2001). Development as freedom. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Sen, Amartya (2009). The idea of justice. London: Allen Lane.
- Senghor, Shaka (2016). Writing my wrongs: Life, death, and redemption in an American prison. Detroit, MI: Drop a Gem.
- Serres, Michel (1997). The troubadour of knowledge. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.
- Sewchurran, Kosheek, and Jennifer McDonogh (2015). "The phenomenon of being-in-management in executive education programmes – An integrative view." In International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning, 7 (2, Development Education in the Global South), 75–88.
- Shahab Ahmed, Zahid, and Khan Zeb (2016). "Direct and indirect impacts of terrorism on youth in Pakistan." In Journal of Research Society of Pakistan, 53 (1, January–June), 235–49. http://pu.edu.pk/images/journal/history/PDF-FILES/17%20Paper\_v53\_1\_16.pdf.
- Shamay-Tsoory, Simone G. (2011). "The neural bases for empathy." In Neuroscientist, 17 (1), 18–24. doi: 10.1177/1073858410379268.
- Shane, Scott (2015). Objective troy: A terrorist, a president, and the rise of the drone. New York: Tim Duggan.
- Shapiro, Daniel (2016). Negotiating the nonnegotiable: How to resolve your most emotionally charged conflicts. New York: Viking.
- Shaw, Bernard (1889). Fabian essays in socialism. London: W. Scott. <http://oll.libertyfund.org/titles/shaw-fabian-essays-in-socialism>.
- Shaw, Martin (2000). Theory of the global state: Globality as unfinished revolution. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Shay, Jonathan (1995). Achilles in Vietnam: Combat trauma and the undoing of character. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Shay, Jonathan (2002). Odysseus in America: Combat trauma and the trials of homecoming. New York: Scribner.
- Shay, Jonathan (2011). "Casualties." In Daedalus, the Journal of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, 140 (3), 179–88. doi: 10.1162/DAED_a_00107.
- Shay, Jonathan (2014). "Moral injury." In Psychoanalytic Psychology, 31 (2, April), 182–91. doi: 10.1037/a0036090.
- Sheets-Johnstone, Maxine (2007). Strangers, trust, and religion: On the vulnerability of being alive. Durham, NC: Guest lecture at Durham University, Department of Philosophy, May 2007, podcast.ic.sunysb.edu/weblog/templeton.
- Shelley, Percy Bysshe (1819). The Cenci: A tragedy, in five acts. London: Charles and James Ollier, see The Harvard Classics, 1909–1914. www.bartleby.com/br/01804.html.
- Sherif, Muzafer (1936). The psychology of social norms. Oxford: Harper.
- Sherif, Muzafer (1961). The Robbers' Cave experiment: Intergroup conflict and cooperation. Norman: The University of Oklahoma, Institutions of Group Relations.
- Sherratt, Yvonne (2013). Hitler's philosophers. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Shiva, Vandana (2000). Stolen harvest: The hijacking of the global food supply. Cambridge, MN: South End Press.
- Shultziner, Doron (2013). "The social-psychological origins of the Montgomery Bus Boycott: Social interaction and humiliation in the emergence of social movements." In Mobilization: An International Quarterly, 18 (2, June), 117–42. www.sscnet.ucla.edu/polisci/faculty/chwe/ps269/shultziner.pdf.

- Sidanius, Jim, and Felicia Pratto (1999). Social dominance: An intergroup theory of social hierarchy and oppression. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
<http://catdir.loc.gov/catdir/samples/cam032/98044356.pdf>.
- Siebert, Rudolf J. (2010). Manifesto of the critical theory of society and religion: The wholly other, liberation, happiness and the rescue of the hopeless, Volumes 1-3. Leiden, The Netherlands: Brill.
- Siebert, Rudolf J., and Michael R. Ott (2016). Walter Benjamin's critical theory of society and religion: From enslavement to freedom, happiness and redemption. Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/SiebertOttWalterBenjamin2016.pdf.
- Siegel, Reva B. (2012). "Dignity and sexuality: Claims on dignity in transnational debates over abortion and same-sex marriage." In International Journal of Constitutional Law, 10 (2), 355–79. doi: 10.1093/icon/mos013. <http://icon.oxfordjournals.org/content/10/2/355.abstract>.
- Silke, Andrew (Ed.) (2003). Terrorists, victims, and society: Psychological perspectives on terrorism and its consequences. Chichester: Wiley.
- Silke, Andrew, and Jennifer Schmidt-Petersen (2015). "The golden age? What the 100 most cited articles in terrorism studies tell us." In Terrorism and Political Violence. doi: 10.1080/09546553.2015.1064397.
www.researchgate.net/publication/281462391\_The\_Golden\_Age\_What\_the\_100\_Most\_Cited\_Articles\_in\_Terrorism\_Studies\_Tell\_Us.
- Simmel, Georg (1955). Conflict: The web of group-affiliations. Glencoe, IL: Free Press.
- Singer, Tania, Ben Seymour, John P. O'Doherty, Klaas E. Stephan, Raymond J. Dolan, and Chris D. Frith (2006). "Empathic neural responses are modulated by the perceived fairness of others." In Nature, 439 (7075), 466–69. doi: 10.1038/nature04271.
www.nature.com/nature/journal/v439/n7075/supinfo/nature04271\_S1.html.
- Singer, Tania, and Olga M. Klimecki (2014). "Empathy and compassion." In Current Biology, 24 (18), R875–R78. doi: 10.1016/j.cub.2014.06.054. www.cell.com/current-biology/pdf/S0960-9822\(14\)00770-2.pdf00770-2.pdf).
- Singer, Tania, and Matthieu Ricard (Eds.) (2015). Caring economics: Conversations on altruism and compassion, between scientists, economists, and the Dalai Lama. New York: Picador.
- Singh, Neera M. (2013). "The affective labor of growing forests and the becoming of environmental subjects: Rethinking environmentality in Odisha, India." In Geoforum, 47, 189–98. doi: 10.1016/j.geoforum.2013.01.010.
- Sitter, Carmen (1995). Die Rolle der vier Frauen im Parlamentarischen Rat: Die vergessenen Mütter des Grundgesetzes. Münster, Germany: LIT Verlag.
- Sitter, Nikolai (2017). Terrorismens historie: Attentat og terrorbekjempelse fra Bakunin til IS. Oslo: Dreyer.
- Skidelsky, Robert, and Edward Skidelsky (2012). How much is enough? The love of money, and the case for the good life. London: Allen Lane.
- Skjelsbæk, Inger (2013). The political psychology of war rape: Studies from Bosnia and Herzegovina. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Skocpol, Theda, and Alexander Hertel-Fernandez (2016). The Koch effect: The impact of a cadre-led network on American Politics. San Juan, Puerto Rico: Paper presented at the Inequality Mini-Conference, Southern Political Science Association, January 8, 2016.
www.scholarsstrategynetwork.org/sites/default/files/the\_koch\_effect\_for\_spsa\_w\_apps\_skocpol\_and\_hertel-fernandez-corrected\_1-4-16\_1.pdf.
- Skurdal, Ingunn, and Steinar Bryn (2012). "Dialog som verktøy i fredsbygging." In I strid for fred: Fredskontoret 1962-1972 – idealistisk fredsarbeid og bred grasrotaktivitet, edited by Sverre Røed-Larsen, and Anne Margrete Hjort-Larsen, pp. 175–78. Oslo: Kolofon.
- Slocum, Sally (1975). "Woman the gatherer: Male bias in anthropology." In Toward an anthropology of women, edited by Rayna R. Reiter, pp. 36–50. New York: Monthly Review Press.
http://core.roehampton.ac.uk/repository2/content2/subs/t.durt/t.durt1843/Slocum%20\(1975\)%20Woman%20The%20Gatherer.pdf%20Woman%20The%20Gatherer.pdf).
- Sloutman, Marieke, and Jean Tillie (2006). Processes of radicalisation: Why some Amsterdam Muslims become radicals. Amsterdam, The Netherlands: University of Amsterdam, Institute for Migration and Ethnic Studies. <http://dare.uva.nl/document/337314>.
- Smedslund, Jan (1988). Psycho-logic. Berlin: Springer.
- Smedslund, Jan (1997). "Is the 'psycho-logic' of trust universal?" In The Language of emotions: Conceptualization, expression, and theoretical foundation, edited by Susanne Niemeier, and René Dirven, pp. 3–13. Amsterdam, The Netherlands: John Benjamins.

- Smedslund, Jan (2013). From nonsense syllables to holding hands: Sixty years as a psychologist. Chagrin Falls, OH: Taos Institute Publication.
- Smith, Adam (1759). The theory of moral sentiments. London, Edinburg: Printed for A. Millar, London; and A. Kincaid and J. Bell, Edinburgh.
- Smith, Adam (1776). An inquiry into the nature and causes of the wealth of nations: In two volumes. London: Printed for W. Strahan; and T. Cadell, in the Strand.
- Smith, Anthony D. (1996). The ethnic origins of nations. Oxford: Basil Blackwell.
- Smith, Christian (1991). The emergence of liberation theology: Radical religion and social movement theory. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Smith, Christian (2010). What is a person? Rethinking humanity, social life, and the moral good from the person up. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Smith, Dennis (1997). The civilizing process and the care of the self: Comparing Elias and Foucault. Bielefeld: Norbert Elias Centenary Conference, University of Bielefeld, Zentrum für interdisziplinäre Forschung, June 1997.
- Smith, Dennis (1999). “‘The civilizing process’ and ‘the history of sexuality’: Comparing Norbert Elias and Michel Foucault.” In Theory and Society, 28 (1), 79–100. www.jstor.org/stable/3108506.
- Smith, Dennis (2001). “Organisations and humiliation: Looking beyond Elias.” In Organization, 8 (3), 537–60. doi: 10.1177/135050840183005.
- Smith, Eliot R., and Diane M. Mackie (2015). “Dynamics of group-based emotions: Insights from intergroup emotions theory.” In Emotion Review, 7 (4), 349–54. doi: 10.1177/1754073915590614.
- Smith, J. W. (2005). Economic democracy: The political struggle of the twenty-first century. 4th edition. Suny, AZ: Institute for Economic Democracy Press.
- Smith, M. Brewster, Jerome S. Bruner, and Robert W. White (1956). Opinions and personality. New York: Wiley.
- Smith, Mark M. (1998). Debating slavery: Economy and society in the Antebellum American South. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Smith, Wilfred Cantwell (1962). The meaning and end of religion. New York: Macmillan.
- Smith, Zadie (2000). White teeth. London: Hamish Hamilton.
- Smyth, Marie Breen, Jeroen Gunning, and Richard Jackson (Eds.) (2009). Critical terrorism studies: A new research agenda. London: Routledge.
- Snow, Charles Percy (1959). The two cultures and the scientific revolution. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Snow, David A., and Robert D. Benford (1988). “Ideology, frame resonance, and participant mobilization.” In From structure to action: Comparing social movement research across cultures, edited by Bert Klandermans, Hanspeter Kriesi, and Sidney G. Tarrow, pp. 197–217. Greenwich, CT: JAI Press.
- Snyder, Claire R. (2000). Citizen-soldiers and manly warriors: Military service and gender in the civic republican tradition. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Snyder, Jack (1985). “Perceptions of the security dilemma in 1914.” In Psychology and deterrence, edited by Robert Jervis, Richard Ned Lebow, and Janice Gross Stein, pp. 153–79. Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- Snyder, Jack, and Robert Jervis (1999). “Civil war and the security dilemma.” In Civil wars, insecurity, and intervention, edited by Jack Snyder, and Barbara F. Walter, pp. 15–37. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Snyder, Jack, and Barbara Walters (Eds.) (1999). The security dilemma and intervention in civil wars. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Snyder, Timothy David (2010). Bloodlands: Europe between Hitler and Stalin. New York: Basic Books.
- Snyder, Timothy David (2015). Black earth: The Holocaust as history and warning. New York: Tim Duggan Books.
- Snyder, Timothy David (2017). On tyranny: Twenty lessons from the twentieth century. New York: Tim Duggan.
- Soage, Ana Belén (2007). “Faraj Fawda, or the cost of freedom of expression.” In Middle East Review of International Affairs (MERIA Journal), 11 (2), 26–33. www.rubincenter.org/meria/2007/06/Soage.pdf.
- Sober, Elliott, and David Sloan Wilson (1998). Unto others: The evolution and psychology of unselfish behavior. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

- Soeffner, Hans-Georg (1988). "Luther – Der Weg von der Kollektivität des Glaubens zu einem lutherisch-protestantischen Individualitätstypus." In Vom Ende des Individuums zur Individualität ohne Ende, edited by Hans-Georg Brose, and Bruno Hildenbrand, pp. 107–49. Opladen, Germany: Leske and Budrich.
- Soleim, Marianne Neerland, Jens-Ivar Nergård, and Oddmund Andersen (2015). Grenselos i grenseland: Samisk og norsk losvirksomhet i Nordre Nordland og Sør-Troms: 1940-1945. Stamsund: Orkana akademisk.
- Solomon, Hussein (2015). Terrorism and counter-terrorism in Africa: Fighting insurgency from Al Shabaab, Ansar Dine and Boko Haram. London: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Solomon, Norman (2005). War made easy: How presidents and pundits keep spinning us to death. Hoboken, NJ: Wiley.
- Solomon, Sheldon, Jeff Greenberg, and Thomas A. Pyszczynski (1991). "A terror management theory of social behavior: The psychological functions of self-esteem and cultural worldviews." In Advances in experimental social psychology, Volume 24, edited by Mark P. Zanna, pp. 93–159. Orlando, FL: Academic Press.
- Solomon, Ty (2014). "The affective underpinnings of soft power." In European Journal of International Relations, 20 (3), 720–41. doi: 10.1177/1354066113503479.
- Solovey, Mark, and Hamilton Cravens (2012). Cold war social science: Knowledge production, liberal democracy, and human nature. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Soudien, Crain (2015). "Curriculum, knowledge, and the idea of South Africa." In International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning, 7 (2, Development Education in the Global South), 26–45.
- Sovacool, Benjamin K. (2011). Contesting the future of nuclear power: A critical global assessment of atomic energy. Singapore: World Scientific.
- Spanish National Commission for UNESCO (1986). Seville statement on violence. Seville, Spain: Spanish National Commission for UNESCO. www.unesco.org/new/en/education/themes/leading-the-international-agenda/human-rights-education.
- Spengler, Oswald (1918–1922/1963). Der Untergang des Abendlandes: Umrisse einer Morphologie der Weltgeschichte. München, Germany: C.H. Beck. Erstdruck in zwei Bänden. Erster Band: Gestalt und Wirklichkeit, Wien, Leipzig: Braumüller, 1918; in dritter Auflage München: C.H. Beck, 1919, und in einer völlig umgestalteten Ausgabe München: C.H. Beck, 1923. Zweiter Band: Welthistorische Perspektiven, München: C.H. Beck, 1922. www.zeno.org/Philosophie/M/Spengler,+Oswald/Der+Untergang+des+Abendlandes.
- Spier, Fred (2010). Big history and the future of humanity. Chichester: Wiley-Blackwell.
- Spufford, Francis, and Elizabeth Kolbert (2007). The ends of the earth: An anthology of the finest writing on the Arctic and the Antarctic. London: Granta Books.
- Stadtwald, Kurt (1992). "Pope Alexander III's humiliation of Emperor Frederick Barbarossa as an episode in sixteenth-century German history." In Sixteenth Century Journal, 23 (4), 755–68. www.jstor.org/stable/2541731.
- Stael, Germaine de, and Aurelian Craiutu (1818/2008). Considerations on the principal events of the French Revolution. Newly revised translation of the 1818 English edition. Indianapolis: Liberty Fund.
- Stainback, Kevin, Sibyl Kleiner, and Sheryl Skaggs (2016). "Women in Power: Undoing or redoing the gendered organization?" In Gender and Society, 30 (1), 109–35. doi: 10.1177/0891243215602906. <http://gas.sagepub.com/content/30/1/109.abstract>.
- Standing, Guy (2011). The precariat: The new dangerous class. London: Bloomsbury Academic.
- Stanley, Liz, and Sue Wise (2011). "The domestication of death: The sequestration thesis and domestic figuration." In Sociology, 45 (6), 947–62. doi: 10.1177/0038038511416153. www.research.ed.ac.uk/portal/files/14764494/DomDeathpdfproofed.pdf.
- Staub, Ervin (1989). The roots of evil: The origins of genocide and other group violence. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Staub, Ervin (1993). "The psychology of bystanders, perpetrators, and heroic helpers." In International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 17 (3), 315–41. doi: 10.1016/0147-1767(93)90037-9.
- Staub, Ervin (2012). Psychology and morality in genocide and violent conflict: Perpetrators, passive bystanders, and rescuers. Washington, DC: American Psychological Association.
- Staub, Ervin (2015). The roots of goodness and resistance to evil: Inclusive caring, moral courage, altruism born of suffering, active bystandership and heroism. New York: Oxford University Press.

- Steele, Brent J. (2007a). Ontological security in international relations: Self-identity and the IR state. Florence, KY: Routledge.
- Steele, David (2007b). "Global society and its ancient Greek antecedents." In The European Legacy, 12 (1), 1–21. doi: 10.1080/10848770601080842. http://pdfserve.informaworld.com/55441\_751315987\_762428366.pdf.
- Stefánsson, Þórarinn, and Ragnheiður Karlsdóttir (2009). "Mentoring og coaching – pedagogiske hjelpe- og utviklingsperspektiver." In Mentoring og coaching i et læringsperspektiv, edited by Ragnvald Kvalsund, and Ragnheiður Karlsdóttir. Chapter 2. Trondheim, Norway: Tapir akademisk forlag.
- Steinberg, Guido (2015). Kalifat des Schreckens. IS und die Bedrohung durch den islamistischen Terror. München, Germany: Knaur.
- Steiner, Claude M. (2003). Emotional literacy: Intelligence with a heart. Fawnskin, CA: Personhood Press.
- Steinsland, Gro (2007). Myth and power in the cultural transformation of the nordic countries from viking to medieval age. Oslo: University of Oslo, Institutt for lingvistiske og nordiske studier (ILN), Centre for Advanced Study (CAS) at the Norwegian Academy of Science and Letters, lecture by Gro Steinsland, group leader at CAS 2007/2008, at the opening ceremony, September 4, 2007. www.cas.uio.no/research/0708rulership/lecture\_040907.pdf.
- Stellmacher, Jost, and Thomas Petzel (2005). "Authoritarianism as a group phenomenon." In Political Psychology, 26 (2), 245–74. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-9221.2005.00417.x.
- Stengers, Isabelle (2002/2011). Thinking with Whitehead: A free and wild creation of concepts. Translated by Michael Chase. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press. French original Penser avec Whitehead: Une libre et sauvage création de concepts, Paris, Le Seuil, 2002.
- Stenner, Karen (2005). The authoritarian dynamic. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Sterling, Peter (2016). Why we consume: Neural design and sustainability. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/GTI\_publications/Sterling-Why-We-Consume.pdf.
- Stern, Klaus, and Jörg Herrmann (2007). Andreas Baader. Das Leben eines Staatsfeindes. München, Germany: Deutscher Taschenbuch Verlag.
- Stevens, Stanley Smith (1946). "On the theory of scales of measurement." In Science 103 (2684), 677–80. doi: 10.1126/science.103.2684.677.
- Stevenson, Betsey, and Justin Wolfers (2009). The paradox of declining female happiness. Cambridge, MA: The National Bureau of Economic Research. www.nber.org/papers/w14969.
- Stevenson, Bryan (2015). Just Mercy: A story of justice and redemption. Melbourne, Australia: Scribe Publications.
- Stevenson, Paul A., and Jan Rillich (2015). "Adding up the odds – Nitric oxide signaling underlies the decision to flee and post-conflict depression of aggression." In Science Advances, 1 (2). doi: 10.1126/sciadv.1500060. <http://advances.sciencemag.org/advances/1/2/e1500060.full.pdf>.
- Steward, Dick (2000). Duels and the roots of violence in Missouri. Columbia: University of Missouri Press.
- Stewart, Frances (2008). Horizontal inequalities and conflict: Understanding group violence in multiethnic societies. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Stiglitz, Joseph E., and Linda Bilmes (2008). The three trillion dollar war: The true cost of the Iraq conflict. New York: Norton.
- Stiglitz, Joseph E. (2012). The price of inequality: How today's divided society endangers our future. New York: Norton.
- Stillwell, Arlenem, Royf Baumeister, and Regane Del Priore (2008). "We're all victims here: Toward a psychology of revenge." In Basic and Applied Social Psychology, 30 (3), 253–63. doi: 10.1080/01973530802375094.
- Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI) (2016). SIPRI yearbook 2016: Armaments, disarmament and international security. Stockholm, Sweden: Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI). www.sipri.org/yearbook/2016.
- Stone, Christopher D. (1972). "Should trees have standing? Toward legal rights for natural objects." In Southern California Law Review, 45, 450–501. <https://iseethics.files.wordpress.com/2013/02/stone-christopher-d-should-trees-have-standing.pdf>.
- Stone, Geoffrey R. (2004). Perilous times: Free speech in wartime: From the Sedition Act of 1798 to the war on terrorism. New York: Norton.
- Stone, Geoffrey R. (2007). Top secret: When our government keeps us in the dark. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.

- Storaker, Aslak (Ed.) (2016). Sikkerhetspolitiske veivalg: Skjebnefellesskap med USA og NATO? Oslo: Progressivt forlag.
- Stout, Martha (2005). Sociopath next door. New York: Broadway Books.
- Stover, Eric, and Harvey M. Weinstein (Eds.) (2004). My neighbor, my enemy: Justice and community in the aftermath of mass atrocity. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Strack, Fritz, and Roland Deutsch (2004). "Reflective and impulsive determinants of social behavior." In Personality and Social Psychology Review, 8 (3), 220–47. doi: 10.1207/s15327957pspr0803_1.
- Strange, Guy Le (1900). "The story of the death of the last Abbasid Caliph, from the Vatican MS. of Ibn-al-Furāt." In Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland (April), 293–300. doi: 10.2307/25208190, www.jstor.org/stable/25208190. www.jstor.org/stable/25208190.
- Strasburger, Victor C., Barbara J. Wilson, and Amy B. Jordan (2013). Children, adolescents, and the media. 3rd edition. Los Angeles, CA: Sage.
- Strathern, Andrew, Pamela J. Stewart, and Neil L. Whitehead (Eds.) (2006). Terror and violence: Imagination and the unimaginable. London: Pluto Press.
- Strawson, Peter Frederick (1959). Individuals: An essay in descriptive metaphysics. London: Methuen.
- Strawson, Peter Frederick (1974). Freedom and resentment: And other essays. London: Methuen.
- Street, Paul Louis (2014). They rule: The 1% vs. democracy. Boulder, CO: Paradigm.
- Stump, Jacob L., and Priya Dixit (2013). Critical terrorism studies: An introduction to research methods. Abingdon-on-Thames: Routledge.
- Støre, Jonas Gahr (2012). "Taming summit-mania: Ineffective communication in global dialogue." In Harvard International Review, 34 (1), 12–15. www.jstor.org/stable/43746548.
- Sue, Derald Wing, Christina M. Capodilupo, Gina C. Torino, Jennifer M. Bucceri, Aisha M. B. Holder, Kevin L. Nadal, and Marta Esquilin (2007). "Racial microaggressions in everyday life: Implications for clinical practice." In American Psychologist, 62 (4), 271–86. doi: 10.1037/0003-066X.62.4.271.
- Sugarman, Jeff, Brent Slife, and Richard T. G. Walsh (2015). "Neoliberalism and psychological ethics." In Journal of Theoretical and Philosophical Psychology, 35 (2), 103–16. doi: 10.1037/a0038960.
- Suhay, Elizabeth (2015). "Explaining group influence: The role of identity and emotion in political conformity and polarization." In Political Behavior, 37 (1), 221–51. doi: 10.1007/s11109-014-9269-1.
- Summy, Hilary N. (2006). 'Peace angel' of World War I: Dissent of Margaret Thorp. Brisbane, Australia: Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies, University of Queensland.
- Sundararajan, Louise (2012). Indigenous psychology: Grounding science in culture, why and how? Anthropology in China. www.cnanthropology.com/portal.php?mod=view&aid=380.
- Sundararajan, Louise (2015). Understanding emotion in Chinese culture: Thinking through psychology. New York: Springer.
- Sundberg, Anna, and Jesper Huor (2016). Älskade terrorist: 16 år med militanta islamister. Stockholm: Nordstedts.
- Sunstein, Cass R. (2016). The ethics of influence: Government in the age of behavioral. New York: Cambridge University Press.
- Sussman, Robert W. (1999). "The myth of man the hunter, man the killer and the evolution of human morality." In Zygon, 34 (3), 453–71. doi: 10.1111/0591-2385.00226.
- Suttner, Bertha von (1889). Die Waffen nieder! Dresden: Piersons Verlag, Band 1. http://austria-forum.org/ebook/wbin/ambrosius.html#book=Belletristik%2FDie\_Waffen\_nieder\_Band\_1, Band 2: http://austria-forum.org/ebook/wbin/ambrosius.html#book=Belletristik%2FDie\_Waffen\_nieder\_Band\_2.
- Suttner, Bertha von (1908). 'Ground arms!' – 'Die Waffen nieder': A romance of European war. Translated by Alice Asbury Abbott. 8th edition. Chicago: A.C. McClurg.
- Sveaass, Nora (2013). "Gross human rights violations and reparation under international law: Approaching rehabilitation as a form of reparation." In European Journal of Psychotraumatology, 4. doi: 10.3402/ejpt.v4i0.17191. www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3650211/.
- Swidler, Leonard, and Paul Mojzes (2000). The study of religion in an age of global dialogue. Philadelphia: Temple University Press.
- Sylvester, Christine (2013). War as experience: Contributions from international relations and feminist analysis. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Sylvester, Christine (2015). Masquerades of war. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Syse, Henrik Preben (2003). Rettferdig krig? Om militærmakt, etikk og idealer. Oslo: Aschehoug.

- Syse, Henrik Preben (2009). Måtehold i grådighetens tid. Oslo: Cappelen Damm.
- Szirtes, Tamás (2012). "Managing knowledge sharing: Case study of a consulting firm." In Society and Economy, 34 (1), 139–60. doi: 10.1556/SocEc.2011.0009.
- Tacey, David J. (2000). ReEnchantment: The new Australian spirituality. Sydney: HarperCollins.
- Tacitus, Cornelius (1942). The complete works of Tacitus: The annals; The history; The life of Cnaeus Julius Agricola; Germany and its tribes; A dialogue on oratory. New York: The Modern library, translated by Alfred John Church and William Jackson Brodribb from Latin, edited and with an introduction by Moses Hadas.
- Taibbi, Matt (2017). Insane clown president: Dispatches from the 2016 circus. New York: Spiegel and Grau.
- Tainter, Joseph A. (1988). The collapse of complex societies. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Tajfel, Henri (1970). "Experiments in intergroup discrimination." In Scientific American, 223 (5), 96–102. doi: 10.1038/scientificamerican1170-96.
- Tajfel, Henri, and John C. Turner (1979). "An integrative theory of intergroup conflict." In The social psychology of intergroup relations, edited by William G. Austin, and Stephen Worchel. Chapter 3, pp. 33–48. Monterey, CA: Brooks-Cole. www.alnap.org/pool/files/tajfel-turner-1979-compressed.pdf.
- Tajfel, Henri, and John C. Turner (1986). "The social identity theory of intergroup behavior." In Psychology of intergroup relations, edited by Stephen Worchel, and William G. Austin, pp. 204–27. Chicago: Neston-Hall.
- Tanaka, Yuki, and Marilyn Young (Eds.) (2010). Bombing civilians: A twentieth-century history. New York: The New Press.
- Tanaka, Yuki, Tim McCormack, and Gerry Simpson (Eds.) (2011). Beyond victor's justice? The Tokyo war crimes trial revisited. The Hague, The Netherlands: Martinus Nijhoff.
- Tang, Shiping (2011). "The security dilemma and ethnic conflict: Toward a dynamic and integrative theory of ethnic conflict." In Review of International Studies, 37 (2), 511–36. doi: 10.1017/S0260210510000616.
- Tangney, June Price (1990). "Assessing individual differences in proneness to shame and guilt: Development of the Self-Conscious Affect and Attribution Inventory." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 59 (1), 102–11. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.59.1.102.
- Tangney, June Price, Patricia Wagner, Carey Fletcher, and Richard Gramzow (1992). "Shamed into anger? The relation of shame and guilt to anger and self-reported aggression." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 62 (4), 669–75. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.62.4.669.
- Tangney, June Price, and Ronda L. Dearing (2002). Shame and guilt. New York: Guilford Press.
- Tanner, Nancy Makepeace (1981). On becoming human. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Task Force on Disorders and Terrorism (1976). Disorders and terrorism: Report of the Task Force on Disorders and Terrorism. Washington, DC: Law Enforcement Assistant Administration in the United States, National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals. www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/Digitization/39469NCJRS.pdf.
- Taylor, Alan John Percivale (1955). Bismarck: The man and the statesman. London: Hamish Hamilton.
- Taylor, Charles (1971). "Interpretation and the sciences of man." In Review of Metaphysics, 25 (1, September), 3–51. <http://goodliffe.byu.edu/310/protect/taylor.pdf>.
- Taylor, Charles (1989). Sources of the self: The making of the modern identity. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Taylor, Charles (1992). The ethics of authenticity. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press. Originally published in Canada in 1991 under the title The Malaise of Modernity, an extended version of the 1991 Massey Lectures.
- Taylor, Charles (1993a). "To follow a rule..." In Bourdieu: Critical perspectives, edited by Craig Calhoun, Edward LiPuma, and Moishe Postone. Chapter 3, pp. 45–60. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Taylor, Charles (1994). "The politics of recognition." In Multiculturalism: Examining the politics of recognition, edited by Amy Gutman, pp. 25–73. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press. http://elplandehiram.org/documentos/JoustingNYC/Politics\_of\_Recognition.pdf.
- Taylor, Mark C. (2010). Crisis on campus: A bold plan for reforming our colleges and universities. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.
- Taylor, Peter (1980). Beating the terrorists? Interrogation at Omagh, Gough, and Castlereagh. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books.
- Taylor, Peter (1993b). States of terror: Democracy and political violence. London: BBC Books.

- Taylor, Peter (1996). The way the modern world works: World hegemony to world impasse. Chichester: Wiley.
- Taylor, Peter (1997a). Provos: The IRA and Sinn Fein. London: Bloomsbury.
- Taylor, Peter (1997b). Behind the mask: The IRA and Sinn Fein. New York: TV Books.
- Taylor, Peter (2000). Loyalists. London: Bloomsbury.
- Taylor, Peter (2011). Talking to Terrorists: A Personal Journey from the IRA to Al Qaeda. Sydney: HarperCollins.
- Taylor, Shelley E., Laura Cousino Klein, Brian P. Lewis, Tara L. Gruenewald, Regan A. R. Gurung, and John A. Updegraff (2000). "Biobehavioral responses to stress in females: Tend-and-befriend, not fight-or-flight." In Psychological Review, 107 (3, July), 411–29. doi: 10.1037/0033-295X.107.3.411.
- Teichmann, Gabriele (2014). Mehr als eine Bank: Oppenheim in Köln. Köln, Germany: Greven.
- Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre (1920–1952/1959). The future of mankind. Translated by Norman Denny. New York: Harper and Row. French original L'Avenir de l'Homme, Paris: Seuil, 1920–1952. www.religion-online.org/showbook.asp?title=2287.
- Tellkamp, Uwe (2008). Der Turm: Geschichte aus einem versunkenen Land. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Suhrkamp.
- Teo, Thomas (2015). "Critical psychology: A geography of intellectual engagement and resistance." In The American Psychologist, 70 (3, April), 243–54. doi: 10.1037/a0038727.
- Terreblanche, Sampie (2014). Western empires: Christianity, and the inequalities between the West and the rest. Johannesburg, South Africa: Penguin South Africa.
- Terrizzi, John A., Natalie J. Shook, and W. Larry Ventis (2010). "Disgust: A predictor of social conservatism and prejudicial attitudes toward homosexuals." In Personality and Individual Differences, 49 (6), 587–92. doi: 10.1016/j.paid.2010.05.024.
- Textor, Martin R. (1992). "Gestörte Familienstrukturen und -prozesse." In Hilfen für Familien. Ein Handbuch für psychosoziale Berufe, edited by Martin R. Textor. 2nd edition. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Fischer. <http://kindergartenpaedagogik.de/2106.html>.
- Thaler, Richard, and Cass Sunstein (2008). Nudge: Improving decisions about health, wealth and happiness. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Thandeka (1998). "The whiting of Euro-Americans: A divide and conquer strategy." In World: The Journal of the Unitarian Universalist Association, XII (4, July/August), 14–20. <https://msuweb.montclair.edu/~furr/spl/thandekawhiting.html>.
- The Equal Justice Initiative (EJI) (2015). Lynching in America: Confronting the legacy of racial terror. Montgomery, AL: The Equal Justice Initiative (EJI). www.eji.org/node/1037.
- The International Panel of Eminent Personalities to Investigate the 1994 Genocide in Rwanda and the Surrounding Events (2000). Rwanda: The preventable genocide. Special Report, July 7, 2000, presented at the Organization of African Unity's (OAU) Summit in Lomé, Togo, July 10–12, 2000. www.peaceau.org/uploads/report-rowanda-genocide.pdf.
- Ther, Philipp (2014/2016). Europe since 1989: A history. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press. German original Die neue Ordnung auf dem alten Kontinent: Eine Geschichte des neoliberalen Europa, Berlin: Suhrkamp, 2014.
- Thesiger, Wilfred (1964). The Marsh Arabs. London: Longmans.
- Thompson, Hunter Stockton (1970). "The Kentucky Derby is decadent and depraved." In Scanlan's Monthly, June.
- Thompson, Hunter Stockton (1979). The great shark hunt: Strange tales from a strange time. New York: Summit Books.
- Thorndike, Edward Lee (1920). "A constant error in psychological ratings." In Journal of Applied Psychology, 4 (1, March), 25–29. doi: 10.1037/h0071663.
- Thucydides (431 BCE). History of the Peloponnesian War. The Internet Classics Archive. <http://classics.mit.edu/Thucydides/pelopwar.mb.txt>.
- Tiger, Lionel (1984). Men in groups. New York: Marion Boyars.
- Tilley, James, and Sara B. Hobolt (2011). "Is the government to blame? An experimental test of how partisanship shapes perceptions of performance and responsibility." In The Journal of Politics, 73 (2), 316–30. doi: 10.1017/S0022381611000168.
- Tillich, Paul (1954). Love, power and justice: Ontological analyses and ethical applications. London: Oxford University Press, given as Firth Lectures in Nottingham, England, and as Sprunt Lectures in Richmond, Virginia.
- Tilly, Charles (1978). From mobilization to revolution. Reading, MA: Addison-Wesley.

- Tilly, Charles (2004). Social movements, 1768–2004. Boulder, CO: Paradigm.
- Tilly, Charles (2010). Regimes and repertoires. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Titchener, Edward B. (1909). Lectures on the experimental psychology of the thought-processes. New York: MacMillan. www.crossingdialogues.com/Ms-E14-01.pdf.
- Titlestad, Torgrim (2016). Vikingtid: Motstandsrett og folkestyre. Hafrsfjord, Norway: Saga.
- Tocqueville, Alexis de (1856). L'Ancien Régime et la Révolution. Paris: Michel Levy. <http://gallica.bnf.fr/ark:/12148/btv1b8622134v>.
- Toffler, Alvin (1970). Future shock. New York: Random House.
- Tolstoy, Leo (1886/1935). What then must we do? Translated by Aylmer Maude. Revised edition. Oxford: The World's Classics, Oxford University Press. www.vidyaonline.net/dl/whatthenmustwedo.pdf.
- Tolstoy, Leo (1894). "The kingdom of God is within you": Christianity not as a mystic religion but as a new theory of life. New York: Cassell. <https://archive.org/details/TheKingdomOfGodIsWithinYou>.
- Tomasello, Michael, Malinda Carpenter, Josep Call, Tanya Behne, and Henrike Moll (2005). "Understanding and sharing intentions: The origins of cultural cognition." In Behavioral and Brain Sciences, 28 (5), 675–91. doi: 10.1017/S0140525X05000129.
- Tomasello, Michael (2009). Why we cooperate. Cambridge, MA: Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) Press.
- Tomasello, Michael (2014). A natural history of human thinking. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Tomasello, Michael (2016). A natural history of human morality. Harvard University Press.
- Tong, Eddie M. W., Kenny W. T. Tan, Agapera A. B. Chor, Emmeline P. S. Koh, Jehanne S. Y. Lee, and Regina W. Y. Tan (2016). "Humility facilitates higher self-control." In Journal of Experimental Social Psychology, 62, 30–39. doi: 10.1016/j.jesp.2015.09.008. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0022103115001183.
- Torres, Walter J., and Raymond M. Bergner (2010). "Humiliation: Its nature and consequences." In Journal of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law, 38 (2), 195–204. www.jaapl.org/cgi/reprint/38/2/195.
- Totten, Samuel, William S. Parsons, and Israel W. Charny (2004). Century of genocide: Critical essays and eyewitness accounts. New York: Routledge.
- Touraine, Alain (2000). Can we live together? Equality and difference. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Touraine, Alain (2003). "Equality and/or difference: Real problems, false dilemmas." In Canadian Journal of Sociology / Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 28 (4), 543–50. doi: 10.2307/3341841.
- Toynbee, Arnold J. (1934–1961). A study of history, 12 volumes 1934 – 1961. London: Oxford University Press. http://nobsword.blogspot.de/1993\_10\_17\_nobsword\_archive.html.
- Toynbee, Arnold J. (1962). America and the world revolution: Public lectures delivered at the University of Pennsylvania, spring 1961. London: Oxford University Press.
- Trainer, Ted (2014). "The degrowth movement from the perspective of the simpler way." In Capitalism Nature Socialism, 1–18. doi: 10.1080/10455752.2014.987150.
- Traves, Frederic George (1919). Five months on a German raider: Being the adventures of an Englishman captured by the "Wolf". London: Headley. <https://archive.org/details/germanraider00trayuoft>.
- Tremblay, Rodrigue (2010). The code for global ethics: Ten humanist principles. Amherst, NY: Prometheus.
- Treue, Wilhelm (Ed.) (1958). Rede Hitlers vor der deutschen Presse am 10. Nov. 1938. München, Germany: Institut für Zeitgeschichte.
- Trewhela, Paul (2009). Inside Quatro: Uncovering the exile history of the ANC and SWAPO. Auckland Park, South Africa: Jacana Media.
- Trigger, Bruce G. (1993). Early civilizations: Ancient Egypt in context. Cairo, Egypt: American University in Cairo Press.
- Tripathi, Deepak (2011). Breeding ground: Afghanistan and the origins of Islamist terrorism. Washington, DC: Potomac.
- Tripathi, Deepak (2013a). Imperial designs: War, humiliation and the making of history. Washington, DC: Potomac.
- Tripathi, Deepak (2013b). A journey through turbulence. Lake Oswego, OR: Dignity Press.
- Tripp, Charles (2007). A history of Iraq. 3rd edition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

- Ullrich, Volker (2013). Adolf Hitler: Die Jahre des Aufstiegs. Biographie. Frankfurt am Main, Germany: Fischer.
- UNEP/Wuppertal Institute Collaborating Centre on Sustainable Consumption and Production (CSCP) (2011–2012). SPREAD sustainable lifestyles 2050. Wuppertal, Germany: A European social platform project, project coordinator UNEP/Wuppertal Institute Collaborating Centre on Sustainable Consumption and Production (CSCP). www.sustainable-lifestyles.eu/fileadmin/images/content/D4.1\_FourFutureScenarios.pdf.
- United Nations (2015). The Millennium Development Goals report 2015. New York: United Nations. www.un.org/millenniumgoals/2015\_MDG\_Report/pdf/MDG%202015%20rev%20%28July%2015%29.pdf.
- United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (2014). Human development report 2014: Sustaining human progress: Reducing vulnerabilities and building resilience. New York: United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). <http://hdr.undp.org/sites/default/files/hdr14-report-en-1.pdf>.
- United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (2005). The dynamics of honour killings in Turkey: Prospects for action. New York: United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). www.unfpa.org/press/zero-tolerance-crucial-confronting-honour-killings-turkey-according-new-unfpaundp-report.
- United States, Congress (1973). Energy reorganization act of 1973. Hearings, ninety-third Congress, first session, on H.R. 11510. Washington, DC: U.S. Government. <https://catalog.hathitrust.org/Record/000013418>.
- United States Congress (1945). To create a department of peace: Hearings before the United States House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Seventy-Ninth Congress, first session, on November 8, 1945. Washington, DC: U.S. Government Publishing Office.
- United States Department of Defense, Office of Inspector General (2014). Joint warfighting and readiness: The army needs to improve the processes for reporting inventory losses in Afghanistan. Washington, DC: United States Department of Defense, Office of Inspector General, DODIG-2015-009. www.dodig.mil/m/pubs/report\_summary.cfm?id=6029, <http://freebeacon.com/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/losses.pdf>.
- United States Senate Select Committee on Intelligence (2014). Committee study of the Central Intelligence Agency's Detention and Interrogation Program. Washington, DC: United States Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. www.intelligence.senate.gov/study2014.html.
- Updike, John (2006). Terrorist. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.
- Ury, William (1999). Getting to peace: Transforming conflict at home, at work, and in the world. New York: Viking.
- Ury, William (2000). The third side: Why we fight and how we can stop. New York: Penguin.
- Ury, William (2007). The power of a positive no: How to say no and still get to yes. New York: Bantam.
- Utvik, Bjørn Olav (2006). The pious road to development: Islamist economics in Egypt. London: Hurst.
- Vallacher, Robin R., Peter T. Coleman, Andrzej Nowak, and Lan Biu-Wrozsinka (2010). "Rethinking intractable conflict: The perspectives of dynamical systems." In American Psychologist, 65 (4), 262–78. doi: 10.1037/a0019290.
- Vambheim, Nils Vidar (2011). "War on terror(ism) – or dialogue?" In Security Dialogues. Journal in the field of Security, Defence and Peace Studies, 3 (II), 19–38. <http://sd.fzf.ukim.edu.mk/ar>.
- Vambheim, Nils Vidar (2016). Studies in conflict, violence and peace. Trondheim, Norway: Norwegian University of Science and Technology (NTNU), Department of Education and Lifelong Learning, doctoral dissertation.
- Van Boven, Leaf, Charles M. Judd, David K. Sherman, and Jeffrey Simpson (2012). "Political polarization projection: Social projection of partisan attitude extremity and attitudinal processes." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 103 (1), 84–100. doi: 10.1037/a0028145.
- van der Kolk, Bessel A. (2014). The body keeps the score: Brain, mind, and body in the healing of trauma. New York: Viking.
- Van Dijk, Teun A. (2001). "Critical discourse analysis." In The handbook of discourse analysis, edited by Deborah Schiffrin, Deborah Tannen, and Heidi Ehernberger Hamilton. Chapter 18, pp. 352–71. Oxford: Blackwell.

- Van Rythoven, Eric (2015). "Learning to feel, learning to fear? Emotions, imaginaries, and limits in the politics of securitization." In Security Dialogue, 46 (5), 458–75. doi: 10.1177/0967010615574766.
- Van Vuuren, Willem, and Ian Liebenberg (1994). "'Government by illusion': The legacy and its implications." In The hidden hand, covert operations in South Africa, edited by Anthony Minnaar, Ian Liebenberg, and Charl Schutte, pp. 25–43. Pretoria: Human Sciences Research Council.
- van Wingen, Guido A., Elbert Geuze, Matthán W. A. Caan, L. Tamás Kozicz, Silvia D. Olabarriaga, DDamiaan A. J. P. Denys, Eric Vermetten, and Guillén S. E. Fernandez (2012a). "Persistent and reversible consequences of combat stress on the mesofrontal circuit and cognition." In Proceedings of the National Academy of Science of the United States of America, 109 (38), 15508–13. doi: 10.1073/pnas.1206330109.
- van Wingen, Guido A., Elbert Geuze, Eric Vermetten, and Guillén Fernández (2012b). "The neural consequences of combat stress: Long-term follow-up." In Molecular psychiatry, 17 (2), 116. doi: 10.1038/mp.2011.110.
- Vance, J. D. (2016). Hillbilly Elegy: A Memoir of a Family and Culture in Crisis. New York: HarperCollins.
- Vandello, Joseph A., and Dov Cohen (2003). "Male honor and female fidelity: Implicit cultural scripts that perpetuate domestic violence." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 84 (5), 997–101. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.84.5.997.
- Vandello, Joseph A., Jennifer K. Bosson, Dov Cohen, Rochelle M. Burnaford, and Jonathan R. Weaver (2008). "Precarious manhood." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 95 (6), 1325–39. doi: 10.1037/a0012453.
- Vaughan, Geneviève (2008). Gift economy: The mother economy. Paper presented to the IPRA General Conference in Leuven, Belgium, 2008, and presented to the Mother Summit in Karlsruhe, Germany, 2008. http://unboundedorganization.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/Gift\_economy.pdf.
- Veldhuis, Tinka M., Ernestine H. Gordijn, Rene Veenstra, and Siegwart Lindenberg (2014). "Vicarious group-based rejection: Creating a potentially dangerous mix of humiliation, powerlessness, and anger." In Public Library of Science (PLoS) ONE, 9 (4), e95421. doi: 10.1371/journal.pone.0095421.
- Verdesio, Gustavo (2005). "Latin American subaltern studies revisited: Is there life after the demise of the group?" In Dispositio, 25 (52), 5–42. www.jstor.org/stable/41491785.
- Verdross, Alfred, and John D. Gorby (1979). "Fundamental human rights: The journey of an idea." In Human Rights, 8 (3, Fall), 20–54. www.jstor.org/stable/27879152.
- Verdross, Alfred, and Bruno Simma (1984). Universelles Völkerrecht: Theorie und Praxis. 3rd completely revised edition. Berlin: Duncker und Humblot.
- Verseuil, Jean (1946). Les rois fainéants - De Dagobert à Pépin. Paris: Critérion.
- Vertigans, Stephen (2007). "Socializing terrorists in a global context." In Terrorism, democracy, the West and the Muslim world, edited by Abdul Rashid Moten, and Noraini M. Noor. Chapter 8, pp. 157–89. Singapore: Thomson Learning.
- Vetlesen, Arne Johan. Nytt klima: Miljøkrisen i samfunnskritisk lys. Oslo: Gyldendal, 2008.
- Vetlesen, Arne Johan (2015). The denial of nature: Environmental philosophy in the era of global capitalism. London: Routledge.
- Victor, George (1998). Hitler: The pathology of evil. Washington, DC: Brassey's.
- Villa-Vicencio, Charles, and Wilhelm Verwoerd (Eds.) (2000). Looking back reaching forward: reflections on the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa. Cape Town, South Africa: University of Cape Town Press.
- Visser, Wayne, and Polly Courtice (2011). Sustainability leadership: Linking theory and practice. Cambridge: University of Cambridge, Cambridge Programme for Sustainability Leadership. www.cisl.cam.ac.uk/publications/publication-pdfs/sustainability-leadership-linking-theory-and.pdf.
- Vogel, Susanne, Floris Klumpers, Harm J. Krugers, Zhou Fang, Krista T. Oplaat, Melly S. Oitzl, Marian Joëls, and Guillén Fernández (2015). "Blocking the mineralocorticoid receptor in humans prevents the stress-induced enhancement of centromedial amygdala connectivity with the dorsal striatum." In Neuropsychopharmacology: Official publication of the American College of Neuropsychopharmacology, 40 (4), 947. doi: 10.1038/npp.2014.271.
- Volkan, Vamik D. (1997). Bloodlines: From ethnic pride to ethnic terrorism. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux.

- Volkan, Vamik D. (2001). "Transgenerational transmissions and chosen traumas: An aspect of large-group identity." In Group Analysis, 34 (1), 79–97. doi: 10.1177/05333160122077730. <http://gaq.sagepub.com/content/34/1/79.abstract>.
- Volkan, Vamik D. (2004). Blind trust: Large groups and their leaders in times of crisis and terror. Charlottesville, VA: Pitchstone.
- Volkan, Vamik D. (2006). Killing in the name of identity: A study of bloody conflicts. Charlottesville, VA: Pitchstone.
- Volkan, Vamik D. (2013). Enemies on the couch: A psychopolitical journey through war and peace. Charlottesville, VA: Pitchstone.
- Volkogonov, Dmitriy (1978). Militarist character of Maoist ideology and policy. Moscow: Military Publishing House (in Russian).
- Volkogonov, Dmitriy, and Harold Shukman (1998). The rise and fall of the Soviet empire: Political leaders from Lenin to Gorbachev. London: HarperCollins.
- von Braun, Christina (2012). Der Preis des Geldes: Eine Kulturgeschichte. Berlin: Aufbau Verlag.
- Voon, Valerie, Thomas B. Mole, Paula Banca, Laura Porter, Laurel Morris, Simon Mitchell, Tatyana R. Lapa, et al. (2014). "Neural correlates of sexual cue reactivity in individuals with and without compulsive sexual behaviours." In Public Library of Science (PLoS) ONE, 9 (7), e102419. doi: 10.1371/journal.pone.0102419.
- Vrijzen, Janna, Susanne Vogel, Alejandro Arias-Vásquez, Barbara Franke, Guillén Fernández, Eni Becker, Anne Speckens, and Iris Van Oostrom (2015). "Depressed patients in remission show an interaction between variance in the mineralocorticoid receptor NR3C2 gene and childhood trauma on negative memory bias." In Psychiatric Genetics, 25 (3), 99–105. doi: 10.1097/YPG.0000000000000081.
- Vygotsky, Lev Semyonovich (1978). Mind in society: The development of higher psychological processes. Cambridge: Harvard University Press.
- Wacquant, Loïc J. D. (1991). "Making class: The middle class(es) in social theory and social structure." In Bringing class back in: Contemporary and historical perspectives, edited by Scott G. McNall, Rhonda F. Levine, and Rick Fantasia, pp. 39–64. Boulder, CO: Westview Press.
- Wadhwa, Vivek, AnnaLee Saxenian, Richard B. Freeman, and Gary Gereffi (2009). America's loss is the world's gain: America's new immigrant entrepreneurs, part 4. Durham, NC: Duke University. <http://ssrn.com/abstract=1348616>.
- Wagner, Michael W., Kristen D. Deppe, Carly M. Jacobs, Amanda Friesen, Kevin B. Smith, and John R. Hibbing (2015). "Beyond survey self-reports: Using physiology to tap political orientations." In International Journal of Public Opinion Research, 27 (3), 303–17. doi: 10.1093/ijpor/edu036.
- Wagner, Richard V. (2006). "Terrorism: A peace psychological analysis." In Journal of Social Issues, 62 (1), 155–71. doi: 10.1111/j.1540-4560.2006.00444.x.
- Wainwright, David, and Michael Calnan (2002). Work stress: The making of a modern epidemic. Buckingham: Open University Press.
- Wainwright, Tom (2016). Narconomics: How to run a drug cartel. New York: PublicAffairs.
- Waldron, Jeremy (2012). Dignity, rank, and rights. New York: Oxford University Press, the Tanner Lectures on Human Values, University of California, Berkeley, April 21–23, 2009. http://tannerlectures.utah.edu/\_documents/a-to-z/w/Waldron\_09.pdf.
- Walker, Julian, and Victoria Knauer (2011). "Humiliation, self-esteem, and violence." In Journal of Forensic Psychiatry and Psychology, 22 (5, Special Issue: Emotions, Emotional Regulation and Offender Treatment), 724–41. doi: 10.1080/14789949.2011.617542.
- Waller, David (1996). Rwanda: Which way now? Oxford: Oxfam.
- Waller, James (2002). Becoming evil: How ordinary people commit genocide and mass killing. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Wallerstein, Immanuel Maurice (1974–1989). The modern world-system (Volume I: Capitalist agriculture and the origins of the European world-economy in the sixteenth century, 1974, Volume II: Mercantilism and the consolidation of the European world-economy, 1600–1750, 1980, Volume III: The second great expansion of the capitalist world-economy, 1730 – 1840's, 1989). New York: Academic Press.
- Wambacq, Judith, and Christian Ciocan (2011). "Maurice Merleau-Ponty's criticism of Bergson's theory of time seen through the work of Gilles Deleuze." In Studia Phaenomenologica, XI, 233–49. <https://biblio.ugent.be/publication/1965461/file/6763193.pdf>.
- Wang, Sam, and Sandra Aamodt (2011). Welcome to your child's brain: How the mind grows from conception to college. New York: Bloomsbury USA.

- Wang, Zheng (2008). "National humiliation, history education, and the politics of historical memory: Patriotic education campaign in China." In International Studies Quarterly, 52 (4), 783–806. doi: 10.1111/j.1468-2478.2008.00526.x.
- Wang, Zheng (2012). Never forget national humiliation: Historical memory in Chinese politics and foreign relations. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Ward, Martha C., and Monica D. Edelstein (2009). A world full of women. Boston: Pearson.
- Waring, Marilyn (1988). If women counted: A new feminist economics. San Francisco: Harper and Row.
- Warneken, Felix, and Michael Tomasello (2008). "Extrinsic rewards undermine altruistic tendencies in 20-month-olds." In Developmental Psychology, 44 (6), 1785–88.
www.eva.mpg.de/psycho/staff/tomas/pdf/Warneken_Tomasello_DevPsy_2008.pdf.
- Warner, Jeffrey (2009). Sarajevo evolution: A tribute to survival. Sarajevo, Bosnia: Jeff's Journalism. www.jeffsjournalism.com/post-war-bosnia-sarajevo-evolution-tribute-survival.
- Warner, Jeffrey (2014a). Template for the "de" of development: A case study for humankind. Chiang Mai, Thailand: Jeff's Journalism. www.jeffsjournalism.com/template-de-velopment.
- Warner, Jeffrey (2014b). Dignity amidst the rubbish: Hour-by-hour with a Burmese migrant community in Thailand. Chiang Mai, Thailand: Jeff's Journalism.
www.jeffsjournalism.com/dignity-amidst-rubbish.
- Warner, Jeffrey (2014c). Indigenous voices: Glimpses into the margins of modern development. Chiang Mai, Thailand: Jeff's Journalism. www.jeffsjournalism.com/indigenous-voices.
- Warren, Elizabeth (2017). This fight is our fight: The battle to save America's middle class. New York: Metropolitan Books.
- Wasem, Jürgen, Hans-Dieter Nolting, Martin Albrecht, Antje Schwinger, Toon Overstijns, Marcel Mangen, and Mario Klesse (2009). Perspektive 2020 Gesundheit als Chance: 5. Delphi-Studie zur Zukunft des Gesundheitswesens. Berlin, Essen, Neuss, Germany: IGES Institut GmbH, Berlin, Alfred Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach Stiftungslehrstuhl für Medizin-Management, Universität Duisburg-Essen, Janssen-Cilag GmbH. www.janssen-deutschland.de/customdownload/file/fid/573.
- Watkins, John G., and Helen Huth Watkins (1997). Ego states: Theory and therapy. New York: Norton.
- Watson, D. M. S., N. W. Timofeeff-Ressovsky, E. J. Salisbury, W. B. Turrill, T. J. Jenkin, R. Ruggles Gates, Ronald Aylmer Fisher, et al. (1936). "A discussion on the present state of the theory of natural selection." In Proceedings of the Royal Society of London. Series B, Biological Sciences (1934 – 1990), 121 (820), 43–73. doi: 10.1098/rspb.1936.0052.
http://rspb.royalsocietypublishing.org/content/royprsb/121/820/43.full.pdf.
- Watters, Ethan (2010). Crazy like us: The globalization of the American psyche. New York: Free Press.
- Watzlawick, Paul, Janet Beavin Bavelas, and Don D. Jackson (1967). Pragmatics of human communication: A study of interactional patterns, pathologies, and paradoxes. New York: Norton.
- Webb, Tony (2009). "On love, shame and other strong emotions." In No to Violence, 5 (1), 45–73.
- Webber, David, Kristen Klein, Arie Kruglanski, Ambra Brizi, and Ariel Merari (2015). "Divergent paths to martyrdom and significance among suicide attackers." In Terrorism and Political Violence, 1–23. doi: 10.1080/09546553.2015.1075979.
- Weber-Guskar, Eva (2016). Würde als Haltung. Eine philosophische Untersuchung zum Begriff der Menschenwürde. Münster, Germany: mentis.
- Weber, Max (1904–1905). "Die protestantische Ethik und der Geist des Kapitalismus." In Archiv für Sozialwissenschaften und Sozialpolitik, Band 20, 1904, Band 21, 1905 (1), 1–54, 1–110.
www.zeno.org/Soziologie/M/Weber,+Max/Schriften+zur+Religionssoziologie/Die+protestantische+Ethik+und+der+Geist+des+Kapitalismus.
- Weber, Max (1904/1949). "Objectivity in social science and social policy." In The methodology of social sciences, edited by Edward Shils, and Henry Finch, pp. 49–112. Glencoe, IL: Free Press, German original 'Die „Objektivität“ sozialwissenschaftlicher und sozialpolitischer Erkenntnis', in Archiv für Sozialwissenschaft und Sozialpolitik, Band 19, pp. 22–87, 1904. http://anthropos-lab.net/wp/wp-content/uploads/2011/12/Weber-objectivity-in-the-social-sciences.pdf.
- Weber, Max (1919). Wissenschaft als Beruf. München, Germany: Duncker und Humblot.
- Webster, David L. (2002). The fall of the ancient Maya: Solving the mystery of the Maya collapse. London: Thames and Hudson.
- Weiner, Eugene, and Alan B. Slifka (Foreword). The handbook of interethnic coexistence. New York: Abraham Fund Publication, 1998.

- Weininger, Elliott B. (2005). "Foundations of Bourdieu's class analysis." In Approaches to class analysis, edited by Erik Olin Wright. Chapter 4, pp. 82–118. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. www.ssc.wisc.edu/~wright/Chapter%204%20--%20Weininger%20Jan%202004doc.pdf.
- Weininger, Otto (1903). Geschlecht und Charakter. Wien, Leipzig: C. G. Braumüller.
- Weiss, Harvey, and Raymond S. Bradley (2001). "What drives societal collapse?" In Science, 291 (5504), 609–10. doi: 10.1126/science.1058775. www.sciencemag.org/content/291/5504/609.short.
- Weisæth, Lars, and Freja Ulvestad Kärki (2014). Fra sjokk til mestring: Norges respons på et nasjonalt traume. Oslo: Gyldendal akademisk forlag.
- Wendt, Alexander (1992). "Anarchy is what states make of it: The social construction of power politics." In International Organization, 46 (2, Spring), 391–425. www.jstor.org/stable/2706858.
- Wendt, Alexander (1999). Social theory of international politics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Wendt, Alexander (2003). "Why a world state is inevitable." In European Journal of International Relations, 9 (4), 491–542. doi: 10.1177/135406610394001.
- Wendt, Alexander, Stefano Guzzini, and Anna Leander (2006). Constructivism and international relations: Alexander Wendt and his critics. London: Routledge.
- Wendt, Alexander (2015). Quantum mind and social science: Unifying physical and social ontology. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Wergeland, Henrik (1843). Henrik Wergeland, IV. Avhandlingar, opplysningsskrifter: 5te Bind 1843 – 1845. Oslo: Dokumentasjonsprosjekt Universitetet i Bergen, Universitetet i Oslo, Universitetet i Trondheim, Universitetet i Tromsø. www.dokpro.uio.no/wergeland/WIV5/WIV5001.html.
- West, Diana (2008). The death of the grown-up: How America's arrested development is bringing down Western civilization. New York: St. Martin's Press.
- Wetz, Franz Josef (2014). Die Rebellion der Selbstachtung: Gegen Demütigung. Aschaffenburg, Germany: Alibri.
- Whippman, Ruth (2016). The pursuit of happiness: And why it's making us anxious. London: Hutchinson.
- Whitaker, Mark Douglas (2008). Ecological revolution: The political origins of environmental degradation and environmental amelioration: Patterns, processes, outcomes; a comparative study of Japan, China, and Europe. Madison, WI: University of Wisconsin-Madison, doctoral dissertation.
- White, Jonathan R. (2014). Terrorism and homeland security. 8th edition. Belmont, CA: Wadsworth Cengage Learning.
- White, Ralph K. (1984). Fearful warriors: A psychological profile of U.S.-Soviet relations. New York: Free Press.
- Whitehead, Neil L., and Nasser Abufarha (2008). "Suicide, violence, and cultural conceptions of martyrdom in Palestine." In Social Research, 75 (2, Summer), 395–416. www.academia.edu/169058/Martyrdom\_and\_Suicide-Bombers.
- Whitehead, Stephen M. (2002). Men and masculinities: Key themes and new directions. Cambridge: Polity Press.
- Whitson, J. A., and A. D. Galinsky (2008). "Lacking control increases illusory pattern perception." In Science, 322 (5898), 115–7. doi: 10.1126/science.1159845.
- Wibye, Carl S. (2017). Terrorens rike: Hvordan en voldelig sekt fra den arabiske ørken radikaliserte Islam. Oslo: Gyldendal.
- Wichterich, Christa (2000). The globalized woman: Reports from a future of inequality. London: Spinifex Press.
- Wichterich, Christa (2010). The other financial crisis: Poor women, small credits, big businesses. Brussels: Women In Development Europe (WIDE). https://wideplusnetwork.files.wordpress.com/2012/10/theotherfinancialcrisis\_microcredit\_christa2010secodn.pdf.
- Wigby, Stuart, and Tracey Chapman (2004). "Sperm competition." In Current Biology, 14 (3), R100–R03. doi: 10.1016/j.cub.2004.01.013. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0960982204000284.
- Wijdekop, Femke (2016). Against ecocide: Legal protection for Earth. Boston: Great Transition Initiative. www.greattransition.org/images/GTI\_publications/Against-Ecocide.pdf.
- Wijkman, Anders, and Johan Rockström (2012). Bankrupting nature: Denying our planetary boundaries. Abingdon-on-Thames: Routledge.

- Wiktorowicz, Quintan (2004). Islamic activism: A social movement theory approach. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Wiktorowicz, Quintan (2005). Radical Islam rising: Muslim extremism in the West. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Wilbanks, Kimberly (2008). "The female contribution to the origin of life sustaining tools." In Lethbridge Undergraduate Research Journal, 3 (1), 1–8.
www.uleth.ca/dspace/bitstream/handle/10133/1206/Wilbanks.pdf?sequence=1.
- Wilce, James M. (2009). Language and emotion. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Wilce, James M., and Janina Fenigsen (2016). "Emotion pedagogies: What are they, and why do they matter?" In Ethos, 44 (2, Special Issue: Emotion Pedagogies), 81–95. doi: 10.1111/etho.12117.
- Wilcox, Lauren B. (2015). Bodies of violence: Theorizing embodied subjects in international relations. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Wilkerson, William S., and Jeffrey Paris (Eds.) (2001). New critical theory: Essays on liberation. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield.
- Wilkinson, Richard G. (2005). The impact of inequality. How to make sick societies healthier. London: Routledge.
- Wilkinson, Richard G., and Kate Pickett (2009). The spirit level: Why more equal societies almost always do better. London: Allen Lane.
- Williams, Charles (2000). Adenauer: The father of the new Germany. London: Brown Little.
- Williams, Raymond (1961). The long revolution. London: Chatto and Windus.
- Willms, Johannes (2015). Bismarck – Dämon der Deutschen: Anmerkungen zu einer Legende. New edition. München, Germany: Deutscher Taschenbuch Verlag.
- Wilshire, Bruce (1990). The moral collapse of the university: Professionalism, purity, and alienation. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Wilson, D. S., and E. O. Wilson (2007). "Rethinking the theoretical foundation of sociobiology." In The Quarterly Review of Biology, 82 (4), 327–48.
<https://pdfs.semanticscholar.org/7694/67447fc718c5c0069391958c77df93af7882.pdf>.
- Wilson, David Sloan (2002a). Darwin's cathedral: Evolution, religion, and the nature of society. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Wilson, David Sloan, and John M. Gowdy (2013). "Evolution as a general theoretical framework for economics and public policy." In Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization, 90, 3–10. doi: 10.1016/j.jebo.2012.12.008. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0167268112002673.
- Wilson, David Sloan (2015). Does altruism exist? Culture, genes, and the welfare of others. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Wilson, Edward O. (2013). The social conquest of earth. New York: Liveright.
- Wilson, Timothy D. (2002b). Strangers to ourselves: Discovering the adaptive unconscious. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Winkler, Heinrich August (2009–2015). Geschichte des Westens (Von den Anfängen in der Antike bis zum 20. Jahrhundert, 2009, Die Zeit der Weltkriege. 1914–1945, 2011, Vom Kalten Krieg zum Mauerfall, 2014, Die Zeit der Gegenwart, 2015). München, Germany: C.H. Beck.
- Winnicott, Donald Woods (1965). "Ego distortion in terms of true and false self." In The maturational process and the facilitating environment: Studies in the theory of emotional development, pp. 140–52. Madison: International Universities Press.
- Wintersteiner, Werner (1999). Pädagogik des Anderen: Bausteine für eine Friedenspädagogik in der Postmoderne. Münster, Germany: Agenda.
- Wise, Tim (2015). Under the affluence: Shaming the poor, praising the rich, and sacrificing the future of America. San Francisco: City Lights Books.
- Wiswede, Daniel, Svenja Taubner, Anna Buchheim, Thomas Münte, Michael Stasch, Manfred Cierpka, Horst Kächele, et al. (2014). "Tracking Functional Brain Changes in Patients with Depression under Psychodynamic Psychotherapy Using Individualized Stimuli." In Public Library of Science (PLOS) ONE, 9 (10). doi: 10.1371/journal.pone.0109037.
- Witt, Ulrich, and Georg Schwesinger (2013). "Phylogenetic footprints in organizational behavior." In Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization, 90, S33–S44. doi: 10.1016/j.jebo.2012.12.011.
- Wixon, Vincent, and Paul Merchant (Eds.) (2014). Sound of the ax: Aphorisms and poems by William Stafford. Pittsburgh, PA: University of Pittsburgh Press.
- Wohl, Michael J. A., and Nyla R. Branscombe (2008). "Remembering historical victimization: collective guilt for current ingroup transgressions." In Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 94 (6), 988–1006. doi: 10.1037/0022-3514.94.6.988.

- Wohl, Michael J. A., and Jay J. Van Bavel (2011). "Is identifying with a historically victimized group good or bad for your health? Transgenerational post-traumatic stress and collective victimization." In European Journal of Social Psychology, 41 (7), 818–24. doi: 10.1002/ejsp.844. www.psych.nyu.edu/vanbavel/lab/documents/Wohl.VanBavel.2011.EJSP.pdf.
- Wolf, Reinhard (2013). Resentment in international relations. Mainz, Germany: Paper prepared for the European Consortium for Political Research (ECPR) Workshop on Status Claims, Recognition, and Emotions in IR: Theoretical and Methodological Challenges', Mainz, March 11–16, 2013. <https://ecpr.eu/Filestore/PaperProposal/295db94d-e25a-41d6-b0d4-550444a21644.pdf>.
- Woo, Choong-Wan, Leonie Koban, Ethan Kross, Martin A. Lindquist, Marie T. Banich, Luka Ruzic, Jessica R. Andrews-Hanna, and Tor D. Wager (2014). "Separate neural representations for physical pain and social rejection." In Nature Communications, 5, Article 5380. doi: 10.1038/ncomms6380.
- Wood, Ellen Meiksins (2003). Empire of capital. London: Verso.
- Wood, Ian (1994). The Merovingian kingdoms: 450 – 751. London: Longman.
- Wood, Joanne V., W. Q. Elaine Perunovic, and John W. Lee (2009). "Positive self-statements: Power for some, peril for others." In Psychological Science, 20 (7), 860–66. doi: 10.1111/j.1467-9280.2009.02370.x.
- Woodley, Michael A., Jan te Nijenhuis, and Raegan Murphy (2013). "Were the Victorians cleverer than us? The decline in general intelligence estimated from a meta-analysis of the slowing of simple reaction time." In Intelligence, 41 (6), 843–50. doi: 10.1016/j.intell.2013.04.006. www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0160289613000470.
- Woods, John (2003). Boys who have abused: Psychoanalytic psychotherapy with victim / perpetrators of sexual abuse. New York: Jessica Kingsley Publishers.
- World Commission on Environment and Development, and Gro Harlem Brundtland (1987). Our common future. Oxford: Oxford University Press, en.wikisource.org/wiki/Brundtland\_Report.
- World Wildlife Fund (WWF) (2014). Living planet report 2014: Species and spaces, people and places. London: World Wildlife Fund (WWF), wwf.panda.org/about\_our\_earth/all\_publications/living\_planet\_report/.
- World Wildlife Fund (WWF), Zoological Society of London (ZSL), and Global Footprint Network (2016). Living planet report 2016: Risk and resilience in a new era. London: World Wildlife Fund (WWF). http://awsassets.panda.org/downloads/lpr\_living\_planet\_report\_2016.pdf.
- Wortham, Stanton, and Kara Jackson (2012). "Relational education: Applying Gergen's work to educational research and practice." In Psychological Studies, 57 (2, June, Kenneth J. Gergen and Social Constructionism), 164–71. doi: 10.1007/s12646-011-0120-z.
- Wrangham, Richard W., and Dale Peterson (1996). Demonic males: Apes and the origins of human violence. New York: Houghton Mifflin.
- Wright, Lawrence (2006). The looming tower: Al-Qaeda and the road to 9/11. New York: Knopf.
- Wright, Lawrence (2013). Going clear: Scientology, Hollywood, and the prison of belief. New York: Knopf.
- Wright, Philip Quincy, William M. Evan, and Morton Deutsch (Eds.) (1962). Preventing World War III: Some proposals. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Wu, Charlene C., Matthew D. Sacchet, and Brian Knutson (2012). "Toward an affective neuroscience account of financial risk taking." In Frontiers in Neuroscience, 6. doi: 10.3389/fnins.2012.00159. www.frontiersin.org/Journal/Abstract.aspx?s=291&name=decision\_neuroscience&ART\_DOI=10.3389/fnins.2012.00159.
- Wulf, Andrea (2015). The invention of nature. The adventures of Alexander von Humboldt – The lost hero of science. London: John Murray.
- Wyatt-Brown, Bertram (1982). Southern honor: Ethics and behavior in the old south. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Wyatt-Brown, Bertram (2005). The changing faces of honor in national crises: Civil War, Vietnam, Iraq, and the Southern factor. Baltimore, MD: The Johns Hopkins History Seminar, Fall 2005.
- Wyatt-Brown, Bertram (2014). A warring nation: Honor, race, and humiliation in America and abroad. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press.
- Wöss, Fritz (1958). Hunde, wollt ihr ewig leben? Hamburg, Germany, Wien, Austria: Paul Zsolnay.
- Yamada, David C. (2015). "Workplace bullying and the law: U.S. legislative development 2013-15." In Employee Rights and Employment Policy Journal, 19 (1), 49–59. <http://ssrn.com/abstract=2568894>.

- Yamada, David C. (2016). "Intellectual activism and the practice of public interest law." In Southern California Review of Law and Social Justice, 25 (2, June 24), 127–81, Suffolk University Law School Research Paper No. 15–30. <http://ssrn.com/abstract=2647697>.
- Yang, Jie (2013). "'Fake happiness': Counseling, potentiality, and psycho-politics in China." In Ethos, 41 (3), 292–312. doi: 10.1111/etho.12023.
- Yang, Jie (2015). Unknotting the heart: Unemployment and therapeutic governance in China. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Yeager, David S., Adriana S. Miu, Joseph Powers, and Carol S. Dweck (2013). "Implicit theories of personality and attributions of hostile intent: A meta-analysis, an experiment, and a longitudinal intervention." In Child Development, 84 (5), 1651–67. doi: 10.1111/cdev.12062. www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/23402434.
- Yiwu, Liao (2002/2008). Corpse walker. Translated by Wen Huang. New York: Anchor. Chinese original part of Interviews with People from the Bottom Rung of Society, Taipei: Rye Field, 2002.
- Yongyi, Song (2011). "Chronology of mass killings during the Chinese Cultural Revolution (1966 – 1976)" In Online encyclopedia of mass violence. www.massviolence.org/Chronology-of-Mass-Killings-during-the-Chinese-Cultural.
- Yoo, John (2005). The powers of war and peace: The constitution and foreign affairs after 9/11. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Yoshikawa, Muneo Jay (1980). The "double swing" model of Eastern-Western intercultural communication. Honolulu: Paper prepared for the Seminar on Communication Theory from Eastern and Western Perspectives, East-West Communication Institute.
- Yoshikawa, Muneo Jay (1987). "The 'double swing' model of intercultural communication between the East and West." In Communication theory: Eastern and Western perspectives, edited by D. Lawrence Kincaid. Chapter 22, pp. 319–29. San Diego, CA: Academic Press.
- Young, Richard, Stefano Orsini, and Ian Fitzpatrick (2015). Soil degradation: A major threat to humanity. Bristol: Sustainable Food Trust. <http://sustainablefoodtrust.org>, www.fao.org/fsnforum/sites/default/files/resources/Soil-degradation-Final-final\_0.pdf.
- Zajonc, Robert B. (1980). "Feeling and thinking: Preferences need no inferences." In American Psychologist, 35 (2), 151–75. doi: 10.1037/0003-066X.35.2.151.
- Zalasiewicz, Jan, Mark Williams, Will Steffen, and Paul Crutzen (2010). "The new world of the Anthropocene." In Environment Science and Technology, 44 (7), 2228–31. doi: 10.1021/es903118j.
- Zalewski, Marysia, and Jane Parpat (Eds.) (1998). The 'man question' in international relations. Boulder, CO: Westview.
- Zehnpfennig, Barbara (2016). "Die Bedeutung des Kampfes in Hitlers Denken." In Totalitarianism and Democracy, 13 (1), 85–106. doi: 10.13109/tode.2016.13.1.85.
- Zehr, Howard (2005). Changing lenses: A new focus for crime and justice. 3rd edition. Scottsdale, PA: Herald Press.
- Zihlman, Adrienne L., Alison Galloway, and Mary Ellen Morbeck (Eds.) (1997). The evolving female: A life-history perspective. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Zihlman, Adrienne L. (2009). "Reflections on women in evolution: Looking back and going forward." In Voices, 9 (1, Winter), 18–24.
- Žižek, Slavoj (2012). Less than nothing: Hegel and the shadow of dialectical materialism. London: Verso.
- Zubok, Vladislav (2014). "With his back against the wall: Gorbachev, Soviet demise, and German reunification." In Cold War History, 14 (4), 619–45. doi: 10.1080/14682745.2014.950251.
- Zunes, Stephen (2002). Tinderbox: US Middle East Policy and the Roots of Terrorism. Monroe, ME: Common Courage Press.
- Åhäll, Linda, and Thomas Gregory (Eds.) (2015). Emotions, politics and war. New York: Routledge.
- Ås, Berit (2008). "De fem hersketeknikkene: Om ufarliggjøring av undertrykkernes våpen." In Kvinner i alle land: Håndbok i frigjøring, edited by Berit Ås. Revised edition, pp. 64–93. Oslo: Aschehoug.

INDEX

- Abu Ghraib, xii, 198
 Acres of Diamonds, 22, 121
 Adorno, Theodor W., 5, 42, 140
 Agriculture (intensification), 7, 11, 24, 30, 49, 244
 Al-Aswany, Alaa, 194, 257
 Alexander the Great, 28, 205
     Siwa Oasis, 205
 Alfred Nobel, Nobel Peace Prize, 4, 5, ix, lvii, 13, 16, 50, 83, 92, 96, 97, 120, 139, 175, 185, 206, 216, 218, 271, 275, 277, 288, 292, 296
 Al-Rodhan, Nayef R. F., xlv, xlv
 Apartheid, xlv, 314
 Appiah, K. Anthony, 59, 227
 Arab Spring, xlv, 62, 106, 117, 175, 199, 241, 257, 279
 Archer, Margaret S., 41
 Arendt, Hannah, xvii, xxxi, lx, 143, 246, 271
 Aristotle, lx, lxii, 47, 205
 Armageddon, 51, 180, 190
 Ås, Berit, 116, 199, 290
 Atran, Scott, 194, 195, 199, 200, 270
 Avery, John Scales, 216, 217, 271, 296
 Axelrod, Robert, 178, 291
 Badie, Bertrand, 117
 Ban Ki-moon, 65, 66, 69, 92, 97
 Barad, Karen, xxxviii
 Bargal, David, 3, 322
 Barthes, Roland, 129
 Bauman, Zygmunt, xxii, xlviii, 13, 28, 43, 316
 Bauwens, Michel, 63
 Behring Breivik, Anders, xii, xix, 18, 258, 259, 260, 263
 Belenky, Mary Field, lx
 Benjamin, Walter, 24, 34, 146, 280
 Berlin, Isaiah, xxvii, xxxii
 Bernard of Clairvaux (Bernardus Claraevallensis, 1090 – 1153), 52
 Berry, Joanna (Jo), 73
 Bhaskar, Roy, 153, 251
     critical realism, 135, 153, 251, 254
 Billig, Michael G., xviii, xlv, xlv
 Bin Laden, Osama, 45, 101, 196, 197, 201, 238, 239, 240, 241, 259, 267, 299
 Bjørge, Tore, lvi, 70
 Blood eagle, exceptionally gruesome method of execution for high-ranking enemies, 90
 Blood feud, 86, 95, 162
 Blue Planet, xxi, xxvi, xxxiii, 283, 321
 Bøås, Morten, lvi
 Boehm, Christopher, 292
 Bohr, Niels (see for the ontological material turn in philosophy and science), xxxviii
 Bokhari, Laila, lvi, 70
 Bolton, John, 65, 101, 187, 188
 Bond, Michael Harris, 4, 134
 Bostad, Inga, 5, lx
 Bourdieu, Pierre, xxxvi, 37, 54, 90, 94, 107, 129, 132, 133, 135, 136, 264, 265, 276, 285, 310, 319
 Boyd, Robert, and Peter Richerson, 133, 254
 Brandt, Willy, 295
 Breines, Ingeborg, xxvi, 66
 Britton, Michael F., xxii, xxv, xxvi, xxxi, 306, 321
 Bruhns, Hinnerk, xxv, 83
 Brundtland, Gro Harlem, 252
 Buber, Martin, 32, 166, 167
 Buffett, Warren, 56, 62
 Bush, George W., lxi, 5, 13, 50, 174, 188, 191, 197, 206, 217, 228, 229, 254, 267, 268, 279, 300, 309, 311
 Bushido, 48, 105, 234, 235
 Carneiro, Robert Leonard, 8, 9
 Carson, Rachel, xxxv, 284, 294
 Carveth, Donald L., 32, 230, 237, 243, 293
 Charlie Hebdo, 112, 197, 205, 274
 Chase-Dunn, Christopher, 9
 Chomsky, Noam, 52, 65, 228, 261, 262
 Christie, Daniel J., 101
 Circumscription, xxix, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 18, 24, 28, 30, 43, 47, 48, 49, 61, 102, 130, 148
 City of London, 97
 Clausewitz, Carl von, 61, 109, 150, 206, 219, 222, 250
 Coates, Ta-Nehisi, 3, 213, 316
 Cold War, xxi, xxiii, 13, 50, 51, 52, 56, 58, 67, 108, 121, 173, 174, 182, 183, 206, 216, 217, 239, 248, 255, 259, 263, 267, 270, 274, 279
 Coleman, Peter T., 6, xlv, lvii, 22, 141, 142, 221, 300, 306, 307
     attractor (dynamical systems approach), 142, 221, 306, 307
 Conscientization (the ability to feel humiliated and act constructively), xi, xxi, xxii, xli, lvii
 Constitutive rules (rather than just regulatory rules), xv, xxii, xxxiv, xlvii, 129, 153, 154, 169, 183, 247, 251, 254, 294, 317, 318
 Council of Nicea in 325 CE. (Roman Emperor Caesar Flavius Constantine), 211
 Critical realism, 135, 153, 251, 254
 Crusades, 52, 212, 259
 Cyberwar, 123, 146
 Daly, Herman, 136
 Davis, Garry, 167
 Deep state, 14, 38, 54, 182

- Deutsch, Morton, 3, 4, 6, ix, xxv, xlv, lvi, lx, 55, 173
- Dewey, John critical thinking, xviii, xx, li, 153, 251, 322
- Dignitism or dignism (Evelin Lindner), xxiii, xxx, xxxiv, lvi, 166, 248, 251, 254, 314, 321, 324
- Dignity
dignity dilemma (Evelin Lindner), 68, 183, 285, 305, 306, 323, 324 dignity economy (Evelin Lindner), 3, 97, 135, 243, 250, 265, 277, 291 dignity gap (Evelin Lindner), xxii, 285 dignity revolution, xlv, xlvi, 98, 106, 257 dignity transition (Evelin Lindner), xii, 68, 183, 210, 285, 305, 306, 324
- Dominium, 154, 251
- Dong, Jingyi, 17, 54, 132, 143, 264, 311
- Doomsday clock, li, 224
- Dower, John W., 32
- Dueling, liv, 77, 80, 84, 85, 90, 118, 129, 130, 211, 227, 318
- Early women activists
Anthony, Susan B., 294
Stanton, Elizabeth Cady, 294
Thorp, Margaret, 13
- Earth Charter, 217
- Ecocide, 5, xii, 7, 49, 148, 159, 225, 243, 250, 291, 298, 299
- Economism, 23, 145, 148, 149, 153, 181, 243, 246, 251, 253, 275, 276, 306, 311
- Egalization (equality in dignity, Evelin Lindner), 3, xxiii, xxix, xxx, xxxiv, xliii, xlviii, liii, 166, 297, 312, 313, 314, 321 globalization with egalization = globegalization, xxiii, xxxiv, lvi, 321, 324 globegalization in global cooperation = co-globegalization, 321
- Einstein, Albert, 9, 275, 305
- Eisenhower Dwight David, Ike, 216, 303
- Eisenstein, Charles, 63
- Eisler, Riane T., xxxii, xxxiii, xlii, xlvii, xlviii, lvi, 4, 81, 89, 152, 293
- Elias, Norbert, 15, 88, 117, 126, 127, 167, 180
- Emancipation, 42, 44, 113, 178
- Employment, unemployment, jobs, xlvi, 10, 40, 96, 152, 156, 157, 175, 227, 249, 291
- Enlightenment, xix, xlviii, 42, 114, 135, 153, 212, 253, 254, 285, 312
- Enloe, Cynthia C., 238
- Ethno-mimesis (Maggie O'Neill), 73
- Etzioni, Amitai, 39, 85, 131, 134, 141, 165, 247, 279, 295
- Fanon, Frantz, xxi, lvii, 37, 186, 268
- Fatwa, 127
- Feminism, 18, 31, 42, 92, 117, 180, 226
- First round of globalization (Evelin Lindner), 9, 13, 285, 324
- Fiske, Alan Page (communal sharing, authority ranking, equality matching, and market pricing), 11, 39, 40, 153, 156, 157, 168, 169, 243, 244, 290, 293
- Foda, Farag, 105, 106
- Fog of war, 109, 250, 252
- Føllesdal, Dagfinn K., xvi, lii
- Fontan, Victoria C., 86
- Foragers, 3, xxix, 7, 10, 80, 337
- Foucault, Michel, xix, xlv, 10, 39, 42, 43, 93, 118, 119, 129, 133, 141, 206, 253
- Framing (for example, Wall Street game versus community game), 178, 319
- Frankish royalty (Merovingian and Carolingians rulers), 114
- Freedom
level playing field, xxxvi, xlvii, 154
- Freire, Paulo, xi, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxxi, xxxv, xxxviii, xli, liv, lvii, lix, lx, 3, 59, 78, 99, 106, 107, 135, 153, 251, 294, 325
- French Revolution liberté, égalité, fraternité (liberty, equality, fraternity), xliii, xlvii, 44, 100, 210, 215, 256, 293, 311, 318, 321
- Friedman, Thomas, 75
- Fuglestad, Ingrid, 10
- Fuller, Robert W.
rankism, xxix, xlix, 4, 230
- Gaia, 235, 236
- Gaiatsu (Japanese for change through foreign force), 235, 266
- Galtung, Johan, xxxix, 24, 84, 94, 117, 124, 132, 134, 141, 179, 180, 181, 196, 212, 219, 239, 254, 262, 266, 300, 337
- Game theory (win-win, win-lose, pie of resources), xxix, 324
- Gandhi, Mahatma, xi, xiv, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxvii, xxx, xxxv, xxxviii, xli, xliii, liii, liv, lvii, lix, 3, 15, 33, 56, 59, 63, 65, 73, 74, 78, 79, 99, 106, 107, 121, 135, 141, 171, 194, 198, 199, 222, 294, 296, 300, 314, 322, 325
- Gautama Buddha, 4, 24, 52, 212
- Geertz, Clifford, 119, 266, 316
- Giddens, Anthony, 133, 153, 251, 288
- Gift culture, xx, xliii, 40, 60, 197, 208, 232, 243, 307
- Gift economy, 243
- Giroux, Henry A., 75, 157, 164, 173
- Global economy, 11, 60, 148, 155, 243, 250
- Goffman, Erving, xxxiv, 86
- Goldstone, Jack, 122
- Goodwin, Neva Rockefeller, 164, 337
- Gorbachev (or Gorbačev), Mikhail Sergeyevich, 50

- Greenspan, Alan, 155
 Gule, Lars, lvi
 Gurr, Ted, lvi, 122
 Gyokusai (a shattering crystal ball, image used to aestheticize death), 131
 Habermas, Jürgen, xlv, lx, 21, 42, 139, 141, 285
 Hāfez-e Shīrāzī (circa 1320 – 1389), 58
 Hamdan, Gamal, 105
 Hannibal, 208, 209
 Harari, Yuval Noah, 337
 Harpviken, Kristian Berg, 5, 242, 299
 Hartling, Linda M., 3, 4, 5, xi, ix, x, xxv, xxxvi, xl, lx, 57, 90, 152, 159, 162, 192, 248, 251, 271, 294, 297, 305, 320
 Harvey, David, 155
 Hawking, Stephen, xxviii, 11, 14, 265
 Hedges, Chris, 119, 144, 238
 Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich, xlviii, 90, 207
 Hegghammer, Thomas, lvi, 70, 259
 Heller, Agnes, lx, 30
 Hierogamy, hieros gamos (Greek for sacred marriage), 22
 Higgs boson, 9
 Hijacked system, xxxvi, 44, 48, 162, 256, 263, 271, 297, 298, 299, 311 captured state, 120
 Hitler, Adolf
     the demon, 185, 263, 303
 Hobbes, Thomas, liii, 14, 17, 174, 219
 Hobsbawm, Eric J., 106, 262
 Holocaust, xxxi, xli, 74, 136, 139, 162, 215, 246, 253, 270, 271, 274, 289, 294, 316
 Homo sapiens
     Homo amans, 39, 92
     Homo dominans, 40, 60, 92
     Homo economicus, 39, 40, 59, 60, 80, 151, 199
     Homo honoris, 80, 92, 199
 Honneth, Axel, xlviii
 Honor killing, xxxiv, 4, 75, 77, 85, 95, 101, 133, 202, 230, 231
 Horkheimer, Max, 42
 Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies,
     HumanDHS, www.humiliationstudies.org, 3, 4, 5, x, xviii, xxiii, xxv, xxxv, xlv, lv, lvi, 18, 55, 73, 126, 225, 293, 305
 Human Rights Watch, 253, 262
 Human security, xvii, xx, xxxiii, 54, 66, 68, 183, 249, 302
 Humiliation cycles of humiliation, 5, ix, x, xiv, xviii, xxvii, xli, xlv, lxii, 18, 48, 52, 53, 64, 102, 110, 115, 135, 185, 239, 251, 281, 297, 307, 323, 325 dynamics of humiliation, xi, xiv, liv, 28, 63, 64, 135, 142, 252, 268, 285, 324 humiliated fury, xli, 116, 226, 295 humiliation as nuclear bomb of the emotions, ix, xli, 1, 113, 116, 195, 285
 Hurd, Douglas, 200
 Ibn Khaldun, 27, 262, 266
     asabia (solidarity), 27
 If you want peace, prepare for war (Si vis pacem, para bellum, Vegetius), xi, xxviii, 1, 63, 65, 66, 183, 185, 205, 206, 267 war for peace, 205, 214, 275, 278
 Indices
     Gross domestic product (GDP), 54, 58, 61, 155, 168, 252, 291
     Happy Planet Index, 168
 Indigenous approaches
     Indigenous Knowledge Systems (Catherine Odora Hoppers), 125, 166, 227
     Living Well (indigenous social system that focuses on reciprocity between people and Earth), 147, 166, 293
 International Monetary Fund, 156, 248
 International relations theory, xli, 13, 14, 324
 Invisible hand (Adam Smith), 22, 136, 152, 154
 Islamic prophet Muhammad, 89
 It takes a village to raise a child, xi, xv, 71, 147, 200, 202, 305
 Jackson, Richard, 238
 Jaspers, Karl, 21, 220, 222
 Jerusalem, 28, 51, 52, 143, 180, 259
 Jesus of Nazareth, 114, 180, 190, 211
 Jünger, Ernst, 220
 Kagan, Donald, 86, 175
 Kaku, Michio, xxxviii
 Kaleck, Wolfgang, 71, 72, 108
 Kamikaze (tokkotai), 130
 Kant, Immanuel, xxxi, xlviii, 17, 41, 42, 61, 129, 134, 135, 140, 168, 208, 293
     Mündigkeit – Sapere aude! Dare to know! Dare to think independently!, 131 perpetual peace, 31
 Kanun (law), 87
 Karlberg, Michael Robert, xlii, xliii, 24, 41, 254, 277
 Kennedy family, 261
 Kepel, Gilles, 70, 194, 195, 197
 Kimmel, Michael S., 98
 King, Martin Luther, Jr., xxi, xxvi, xliii, xlvii, lvii, 296
 Klein, Donald C., 3, ix, xliii, 230, 246
 Knights Templar, 52, 258
 Knowledge society, 3, xxix, 80, 290, 320, 324
 Koenigs, Tom, 71, 143, 249
 Koestler, Arthur, 29
 Kogon, Eugen, 146
 Korten, David, 148, 236, 275
 Krugman, Paul, 311

- Kuhn, Thomas Samuel, xv, lvii, 129, 134, 141, 165
- Kühne, Thomas, 270, 271
- Kulich, Steve, 162, 260
- Lakoff, George P., xlii, 4, 68, 134, 140, 233, 303 strict father model versus nurturant parent model (with Mark Johnson), xlii, 4, 140, 230, 233, 303
- Lane, Robert E., 248
- Laqueur, Walter, 215
- Lazare, Aaron, 234
- Learned helplessness (Martin Seligman), xli, 18, 104, 113, 116, 140, 177
- Legitimizing myths (Jim Sidanius and Felicia Pratto), lvii, 21, 22, 141, 268, 319
- Lenin, Vladimir Ilyich, xlii, 136, 153, 210, 215, 256, 270, 288, 311
- Lévinas, Emmanuel, 59, 86, 316
- Lewis, Ioan, 89
- Lia, Brynjar, lvi, 70
- Liberté, égalité, fraternité (liberty, equality, fraternity), xlvii, 44, 293, 321
- Lifton, Robert Jay, 201
- Literacy of love (Evelin Lindner), 294, 325
agape (Greek for gaping, as with wonder, spiritual love for God and humankind), 308 big love (Evelin Lindner), xliii, 33, 92, 294, 308, 325
metta (Pali) or maitri (Sanskrit for loving-kindness, friendliness, benevolence, amity, friendship, good will, kindness, love, sympathy, or active interest in others), 308
philia (Greek for love between friends), 308
- Lu Xun (or Lu Hsun, pen name for Zhou Shuren), 209, 311
- Maalouf, Amin, xxvii, 203, 247, 254
- Machiavelli, Niccolò, 177, 219
- Mandela, Nelson Rolihlahla, ix, xix, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxx, xxxi, xxxv, xxxviii, xli, liii, liv, lvii, lix, 3, 15, 59, 62, 78, 79, 99, 106, 107, 116, 117, 180, 181, 183, 194, 196, 199, 222, 227, 262, 268, 291, 303, 305, 313, 318
- Manosphere (man plus blogosphere, or androsphere, or mandrosphere), 18, 31, 94, 280
- Mao Zedong, 132, 143, 177, 210, 230
- Margalit, Avishai, xlix, 163, 288, 293, 337 decency, 5, 8, 285, 293, 298 decent society, 288
- Marsella, Anthony J., 34, 118, 149, 269, 277, 278, 279
- Marshall Plan, 303
- Marshall, Monty, lvi, 108, 295
- Martin, Glen T., 17, 217, 247
- Masculinities, lix, lx, 94, 98, 99, 272, 275, 286, 298, 299, 317
- Matsumoto, David Ricky, xxxix, 85 voyager and vindicator, xxxix, 167
- McCauley, Clark, lvi, lxi, 79, 190, 194, 220, 222
- Mead, Margaret, lxii, 34, 318
- Mecca, 89, 127, 181
- Meister Eckhart, 235
- Metaphors
Otto Neurath's ship metaphor, 307 ship of fools, xxvii, 307
Titanic metaphor, xxvii, xxviii, 18, 146, 147, 168, 277, 287, 307, 308, 309, 317, 323 traffic metaphor, xxxvi, liv, 5, 216, 217, 309
- Metz, Thaddeus, 60, 61
- Might is right, xlii, xlv, xlvii, 17, 219, 263, 309, 311
- Milgram, Stanley, 28, 222
- Military-Industrial-Media-Academic Complex (MIMAC), xx, 158, 216, 217, 303
- Millennium Development Goals, 228
- Miller, Alice, 32, 140
- Miller, Jean Baker, 3, ix, xix, xli, lxii, 27, 117, 133, 135, 140, 152, 162, 236, 288, 305, 320 false choices, liv, 135, 136, 152, 169, 236, 277, 288, 295, 315, 320 waging good conflict, xix, lxii, 305, 320
- Miller, Seymour M. (Mike), ix
- Miller, William Ian, 88, 117, 123, 124, 318
- Mitchell, James Elmer, 103, 104, 113, 192, 222, 231, 232
- Mofid, Kamran, 147, 243, 253
- Moghaddam, Fathali M., 78
- Moïsi, Dominique, xlix
- Mongols, xxviii, 14, 28, 58, 77
- Moorish Kingdom, 58
- Moral shock, 139, 198
- Mubarak, Hosni, 247, 257, 258
- Murderous professors, xlvi
- Muslim Brotherhood, 23, 70, 257, 258
- Nadler, Arie, 227
- Næss, Arne, ix, xiv, xviii, 74, 225
- Nasser, Gamal Abdel, 257
- Nation-state system, 165, 169, 177, 189, 216, 217, 241, 286, 296
- Nesser, Petter, lvi, 70, 97, 195, 196, 197, 198, 269
- Neumann, Peter, xvii, 38, 215, 223
- Neurath, Otto, 307
- New consciousness critical consciousness (Paulo Freire), xi, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxxi, xxxv, xxxviii, xli, liv, lvii, lix, lx, 3, 59, 78, 99, 106, 107, 135, 153, 251, 294, 325 planetary consciousness, 25
postindividual unity consciousness, 25
- New meaning of humiliation in 1757, 88, 117, 123, 124, 318
- Nibelungentreue, 48, 105, 234, 235

- Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm, 84, 93, 124, 185, 207
- Nilsen, Ragnhild, xl
- Nordic lessons, 22, 85, 280
- Nussbaum, Martha, xlii, xlvii, lx
- O'Neill, Maggie, 73
- Obama, Barack, 65, 66, 101, 163, 174, 186, 187, 191, 217, 241, 271, 300, 315
- Øberg, Jan, xx, 50
- Odora Hoppers, Catherine Alum, 10, 43, 60, 125, 166, 227, 310
- Ohnuki-Tierney, Emiko, 130
- Omertà, 87, 88
- Ommundsen, Reidar, xxxix
- Ontological material turn, xxxviii
- Ontology of the mind dualism, 166, 180, 292
nondualism, 166, 237, 294
- Ostrom, Elinor, 292
- Ott, Michael R., 124
- Otto, Rudolf, 235
- Ottoman dynasty, xlv, 114, 214, 220, 240, 312
- Papal Encyclical Letter Laudato Si' by Pope Francis (2015), 295
- Pastoral democracy (Somalia), 89
- Pater familias, 113, 178
- Pax (Latin for peace)
Pax Dei (Peace of God), Pax Mundi (World Peace), 51
perpetual peace, 51
- Pearl Harbor, 12, 239, 301
- Pettit, Philip, xlix, 4, 81
- Piketty, Thomas, 249
- Pinker, Steven, xvii, xl, xlvi, liii, 113
- Planetary boundaries, 53
- Plato, lxii, 21
- Polanyi, Karl Paul, 39, 134, 153, 157, 219, 249
- Profit maximization, lxii, 16, 67, 146, 149, 150, 164, 174, 237, 254, 280
- Pushkin, Aleksandr Sergeevich, 211
- Putin, Vladimir, 50, 130, 211
- Qutb, Sayyed, 258
- Raiding culture, 11, 14, 15, 50, 110, 112, 149, 157, 274
- Raja, Abid Qayyum, 69, 91
- Rand, Ayn, 33, 155, 162, 265, 311
- Raskin, Paul, 43, 63, 252, 281, 286, 287, 288, 308, 319
Great Transition, 7, 43, 56, 63, 252, 297, 308, 319, 337
- Rawls, John, 136
- Ray, Paul, and Sherry Ruth Anderson (moderns, traditionals, and cultural creatives), 41, 196, 197, 220, 221, 277, 281, 293, 318
- Razeto, Luis and Pablo, 252
- Reagan, Ronald, xxxv, 57, 120, 189, 199, 217, 243
- Realpolitik, xlviii, lii, 57, 174, 274, 294, 295, 320
- Reardon, Betty A., 6, 306
- Refolution (Timothy Garton Ash), 210, 321
- Richards, Howard, xxvi, xliii, 10, 40, 43, 47, 61, 64, 119, 125, 135, 146, 152, 157, 159, 164, 175, 206, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 265, 275, 282, 305, 310, 315, 318, 322
- Riesman, David, 139, 235, 290
- Rifkin, Jeremy, 288, 293
- Rockström, Johan, 165
- Roosevelt family, 174, 289, 293, 294, 298
Eleanor Roosevelt, 174, 289, 293, 294, 298
- Rosa, Hartmut, lii, 248
- Rosenblum-Kumar, Gay, 6, lv
- Rousseau, Jean-Jacques, liii, 148, 230
- Roy, Olivier, 153, 194, 195, 251
- Rūmī, Jalāl ad-Dīn Muḥammad (1207 – 1273), 58, 127
- Ruthless individualism (Evelin Lindner), 57, 150, 162, 166, 179, 259, 261
- Sachsenspiegel, 51, 127
- Sadat, Anwar, xlv, 68, 197, 201, 257, 258
- Sageman, Marc, 69, 215
- Saladin (1137 – 1193), the first sultan of Egypt and Syria, 259
- Salafism, 52, 70, 197, 289
- Sanders, Bernard (Bernie), 187, 221, 222, 253, 281, 282
- Sassen, Saskia, 57
- Satyāgraha, xxxv, lix, 33, 294, 325
- Scheff, Thomas J., 15, 84, 89, 90, 226
- Schmid, Alex Peter, xvii, xix, xxxvi, l, lvi, lxi, lxii, 60, 79, 106, 112, 267, 273, 274, 300
- Schmitt, Carl, 14, 177
- Schor, Juliet, 120, 298
- Schumacher, Ernst Friedrich, 120, 147, 284, 337
- Searle, John, 134, 153, 251
- Self-reflexivity (see also Adair Linn Nagata), 34
- Sen, Amartya, xlii, xlvii, lx
- Sharegiver and careholder (Linda Hartling, in place of shareholder and stakeholder), xv, 148, 164, 286
- Shiva, Vadana, 276
- Shutaisei (Japanese for true subjectivity), 33, 87
- Singer, Tania, 231
- Smaldino, Carol, 24, 111, 142, 162, 245, 300
- Smedslund, Jan, xxxix
- Smith, Adam, 22, 23, 136, 153, 154, 155 invisible hand, 22, 136, 152, 154
- Smith, Dan, xii, 240, 244
- Smith, Dennis, 107
- Snyder, Timothy, 1, 9, 253, 254, 289
- Sociocide, xii, 7, 148, 159, 243, 244, 249, 250, 299, 337

- Solheim, Erik, 5, lvi, 69, 139, 314
- Sophrosyne (Greek for a sense of limit, moral sanity, self-control, and moderation guided by true self-knowledge), lxii
- Southern honor (Wyatt-Brown, Bertram), 174, 188
- Spalthoff, Ulrich J., 3, xxv
- Stalin, Joseph, xxxvii, 44, 91, 210, 211, 215, 230, 256, 270, 311
- Stasi (East German Ministry for State Security), 115, 116, 164, 186
- State terror, xii, xv, xxxii, lviii, 45, 62, 72, 108, 239, 270, 274
- Staub, Ervin, 271, 316
- Stockholm syndrome, xlv, lvii, 37, 129, 141, 177
- Sufism, 101, 235, 237, 290, 293
- Suttner, Bertha von, ix, lvii, lix, 13, 14, 31, 59, 78, 79, 83, 85, 92, 99, 103, 106, 107, 108, 130, 143, 186, 271
- Sveaass, Nora, xlix, 236, 243
- Sykes-Picot Agreement 1916, xlv, 52, 239
- Syse, Henrik Preben, 5, lxii
- System-of-systems approach, 323
- Tahrir Square in Cairo, 257, 273, 279
- Taylor, Charles, xlviii, 153, 251, 259
- Taylor, Peter, 132, 143, 178
- Terroristic laws (Eric Mielants), 10, 119, 147, 154, 324
- Thatcher, Margaret, xxxv, 57, 73, 217, 243
- The attacks on the Twin Towers in New York on September 11, 2001, xii, xv, 5, 13, 52, 71, 79, 84, 101, 104, 105, 106, 113, 180, 190, 192, 200, 201, 239, 240, 262, 267, 270, 285, 301, 315
- The best defense is a good offense (Clausewitz), 14, 61, 191, 192, 206
- The case of Farida, 193, 199
- The Holy (Mysterium tremendum et fascinans, or fearful and fascinating mystery), 235
- The Humiliation of Canossa (Holy Roman Emperor Henry IV, 1050 – 1106), 209
- The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), lvi, 50, 51, 58, 104, 183, 210, 242, 262
- The tragedy of the commons, 19, 148
- There is no path to peace. Peace is the path (Gandhi), xi, 65
- Tilly, Charles, 139
- Tipping points, 165, 308
- Tocqueville, Alexis de, 139, 142, 197, 247, 314
- Tolstoy, Leo, 80, 283, 296, 308
- Tönnies, Ferdinand, 34, 39, 57, 153
- Toynbee, Arnold J., 262, 266, 289
- Treaty of Versailles, 83, 100
- Trump, Donald J., xv, xxxvii, xl, 38, 51, 58, 100, 101, 111, 155, 163, 181, 187, 188, 189, 211, 221, 253, 258, 261, 274, 280, 281, 283, 297, 300, 303, 309, 311
- Truth commission, 213, 257, 317
- Tutu, Archbishop Desmond Mpilo, 3, xxi, xxxi, lvii, 56
- Twenge, Jean M., 163
- United Nations, 5, 6, xxxiii, xxxv, xli, lv, lvi, lxi, 48, 49, 51, 65, 69, 71, 72, 92, 94, 97, 101, 127, 183, 187, 190, 191, 216, 217, 226, 241, 249, 276, 314
- United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), 5, lvi, 69, 314
- Unity in diversity, xviii, xxii, xxiii, xxxiv, xxxv, xxxviii, xl, lv, 4, 34, 41, 56, 58, 166, 167, 169, 183, 209, 212, 213, 237, 280, 281, 287, 320, 321
- constrained pluralism, 320
- holarchy, 167
- regulatory pyramids, 167
- subsidiarity, 167, 320
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights, xii, xxxiii, xxxv, xliii, xlvi, xlix, 4, 41, 183, 186, 236, 293
- Unmanned combat aerial vehicles (UCAV), also known as combat drones, 66, 112, 173, 232, 308
- Ury, William, xxi, xxvii, xxix, liii, 8, 10, 80, 295, 312
- Vambheim, Vidar, 136, 179, 181, 182, 315, 316, 317
- Vaughan, Geneviève (gift economy), 243
- Vietnam War, 12, 261, 310
- Vikings, xxviii, 14, 22, 77, 165, 245
- Volkan, Vamik, 22, 85, 201, 243, 267
- chosen trauma, lvii, 22, 141, 221, 243, 296, 319
- Vygotsky, Lev Semyonovich, xli, 133
- Wahhabism, 221, 289
- Wall Street, 56, 152, 178, 319
- Wallerstein, Immanuel, 153, 251
- world-system, xi, xv, xxii, xxxiv, 8, 9, 17, 62, 119, 129, 147, 153, 159, 251, 265, 283, 306, 307, 315, 317, 323, 324
- Warsaw Pact, 50, 183
- Washington Consensus, 57
- Weber, Max, xxix, 4, 22, 39, 57, 83, 93, 110, 126, 215, 235, 292
- ideal-type approach, xxix, 4, 87, 215
- Wendt, Alexander, xlviii
- Wergeland, Henrik, 293
- Whitehead, Neil L., 23
- Wieviorka, Michel, xxv
- Wilson, David Sloan, 21, 133, 291
- World Bank, 73
- World citizenship, xxviii, 63, 302, 318
- World Dignity University initiative, WDUi, 2, 3, 4, 5, xxxvi, xl, lv, 237, 293

- World passport, 167
- World War I, 14, 17, 32, 48, 56, 57, 83, 84, 93,
109, 110, 115, 129, 130, 173, 183, 186, 190,
207, 213, 214, 215, 216, 246, 260, 263, 267,
278, 286, 322
- World War II, 17, 32, 56, 57, 84, 109, 115, 130, 173, 183, 190, 213, 216, 246, 260, 263, 267,
278, 286
- Yoshikawa, Muneo, 166
double swing model, 166

NOTES

Preface

<sup>1</sup> This warning resonates with the message of Yuval Noah Harari, 2015/2016.

<sup>2</sup> See a summary of this Preface on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/05.php.

<sup>3</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>4</sup> Schell, 2003. Solomon, 2005. Neva Rockefeller Goodwin, pioneer of contextual economics education, co-director of the Global Development And Environment Institute at Tufts University (www.gdae.org) and project director of the Social Science Library (www.socialsciencelibrary.org), in her contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Degrowth Alternative,” January 30, 2015:

...the 21st century is likely to become known as the century of loss. Species, opportunities, travel, places where it is safe to live, many aspects of what we know as our lifestyles, will be seriously diminished. We already see signs of it; the destruction of coral reefs; loss of fish, bird, and animal species is just the tip of the (shrinking) iceberg.

Carolyn Raffensperger speaks of Pre-Traumatic Stress Disorder

(www.commondreams.org/views/2013/01/24/prescription-injuries-soul-healing-earth-healing-us) – as people know unconsciously what they don’t let themselves know consciously.

On June 2, 2016, in her comment to Escrigas, 2016, Neva Goodwin recommends the Heterodox news website, www.heterodoxnews.com, when asked by students where they should go if they want to learn about economics in the real world. Under “study programs,” there is an annotated list of universities throughout the world that offer at least some courses which go beyond the mainstream.

I had the privilege of meeting Neva Goodwin at the Thirtieth Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures “Voices of a New Economics,” in New York City on November 20, 2010.

<sup>5</sup> Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>6</sup> “Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society,” writes Johan Galtung. See “Sociocide, Palestine and Israel,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, October 8, 2012, www.transcend.org/tms/2012/10/sociocide-palestine-and-israel/ (italics in original):

Sociocide, the killing of a society’s capacity to survive and to reproduce itself, should become equally and prominently a crime against humanity. A society is a self-reproducing social system. So are human beings, with our basic needs for survival, wellness, identity, freedom. Society is also an organism, with a lifespan far beyond that of individuals. For humans to survive as humans their basic needs have to be met. For that to happen the society has to survive. For the society to survive the basic social prerequisites must be met:

- for security, against violence, killing, wounding the members
- for economic sustainability, against their starvation, illness
- for identity culturally, a meaning with life, against alienation
- for autonomy politically, to be a master of their own house

As society unfolds so do humans, and vice versa. Life breeds life.

This also holds for nomadic societies based on hunter-gatherers. Monasteries are incapable of self-reproduction biologically when based on one gender, but are highly viable societies based on recruitment.

Under modernity, identity is carried by the nation, with four characteristics: an idiom, a religion-world view, a history— of the past, present and future – and geographical attachment. Time, Space, with the means to communicate and something to believe is crucial.

Under modernity the state is the key executor of all the above.

Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society.

Sociocide molests the human members. In the longer run, lethally. Sociocide is what Western, and not only Western, colonialism has done for centuries, denying others their autonomy, imposing their own identity – language and world-view – moving others out of their own historical dialectic and into history as Western periphery, denying them the land they are attached to with their hearts and minds. And their bodies for security and sustenance, for food, water, health.

Johan Galtung is professor emeritus of Peace Studies and Sociology at the University of Oslo and Founder of the International Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), the Galtung-Institute, and the Transcend Network. See also Cormann, 2015.

<sup>7</sup> Higgins, 2016. See a precursor to the concept of ecocide in Christopher Stone, 1972, and for a look back forty years later, see Anna Grear, 2012. See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016. Consider also the sustainability principle in the Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia. In September 2016, the International Criminal Court added environmental disasters and destruction, even land grabs, to the definition of Crimes Against Humanity, which shows that “hard” international legal instruments now follow soft law (Earth Charter) and symbolic language (ecocide, where the mens rea required cannot be demonstrated). There are voices, however, that warn that introducing a crime of ecocide in the International Criminal Court (ICC) may ultimately be undesirable, because the vehicle of an international crime overreaches and is insufficient at the same time. See Capra and Mattei, 2015. See also Ugo Mattei of the Hastings College of Law at the University of California, and his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 5, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. The ICC, due to the lack of international centralized power or independence, is just a mockery of an institution, writes Mattei, and continues:

Ecocide is too serious of an issue to be entangled with such a spectacle of an international institution that never worked to reach the actual powerful culprits. Moreover, even if we were to take seriously international criminal law in a world of dramatic power imbalance, a crime of ecocide would necessarily require a level of culpability that is most probably absent in all the major episodes of devastation of the environment. Disasters such as Fukushima, Chernobyl, or even the Gulf spill would clearly fall below that. There are issues of corporate responsibility, of criminal consequences of recklessness, of sufficiency, of omissions, or of causality that handled by any good criminal attorney would clear let wealthy corporate actors immune from responsibility.

It is hard to believe that any powerful wrongdoer will be deterred by such a crime, and, as consequence, the very idea of ecocide will suffer prestige and credibility.

We live in a world in which very few people have any awareness of the disasters of the Anthropocene, so we need diffused ecological literacy. We live in a world in which people believe that the only concept of law is that of a vertical model in the hands of governments, so we need diffused legal literacy.

In seeking a legal solution for problems of such ecological relevance, involving so many non-human interests traditionally and presently ignored and massively violated by the very structure of extractive capitalism, we need (if at all available) the best not the worst part of legal systems. We need to culturally transform the perception of law, to disentangle it with notions of power-concentration, to give it back to communities as a decentralized cultural and legitimate tool to share problems and solutions. Nothing is further away from people and social movements than an appeal to jails, cops, and police to solve our ecological problems. Would such a move increase international ecological legal literacy?

It is an honor for me to be part in Anna Grear’s network, as well as Paul Raskin’s GTN discussions.

<sup>8</sup> See, among many other relevant publications, Ahmed, 2017.

<sup>9</sup> “Land Degradation Could Force 135 Million to Migrate in Next 30 Years,” by Manipadma Jena, Inter Press Service (IPS), October 18, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/10/qa-land-degradation-could-force-135-million-to-migrate-in-next-30-years/.

<sup>10</sup> “Climate and Terrorism,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), August 2, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/08/climate-and-terrorism/:

The International Organisation for Migration (IOM) forecasts 200 million environmental migrants by 2050, moving either within their countries or across borders, on a permanent or temporary basis. Many of them would be coastal population.

<sup>11</sup> “The Conflict Horizon 3: Only Connect,” Dan Smith, Dan Smith’s Blog: Analysis and Commentary on World Issues, April 25, 2014, dansmithsblog.com/2014/04/25/the-conflict-horizon-3-only-connect/. I thank Dan Smith for his support when he was the director of the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), and I devised research proposals for my doctorate, see Lindner, 1995a, Lindner, 1995b.

<sup>12</sup> Watch Deeyah Khan: What We Don’t Know About Europe’s Muslim Kids, TEDxExeter, April 2016. www.ted.com/talks/deeyah\_khan\_what\_we\_don\_t\_know\_about\_europe\_s\_muslim\_kids. It is a privilege to have Deeyah Khan as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>13</sup> “The War of the Future? Picture Big Armies and Many Fronts,” by Helene Cooper, The New York Times, June 10, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/06/11/us/the-war-of-the-future-picture-big-armies-and-many-fronts.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>14</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>15</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 48. See also The Clash of Fundamentalisms, by Ali, 2002.

<sup>16</sup> “I Helped Create ISIS,” by Vincent Emanuele, Telesur, December 18, 2015, www.telesurtv.net/english/opinion/I-Helped-Create-ISIS-20151218-0016.html. Vincent Emanuele was stationed in Iraq with the 1st Battalion, 7th Marines, 2003-2005. See also the National Intelligence Estimate (NIE) NIE 2006-02R, “Trends in Global Terrorism: Implications for the United States,” April 2006, released by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence ( ODNI), p. 5:

The Iraq conflict has become the “cause celebre” for jihadists, breeding a deep resentment of US involvement in the Muslim world and cultivating supporters for the global jihadist movement.

See, furthermore, “US Iraq War Veteran Speaks Out Before Australian Tour,” an interview with Vince Emanuele, Only in America Blogspot, June 25, 2013, <http://onlyinamericablogging.blogspot.com/2013/06/an-interview-with-vince-emanuele.html> (originally on waca.net.au/us-iraq-war-veteran-speaks-out-before-australian-tour/). See also US Activist and Iraq War Veteran Vincent Emanuele Speaks Out, video, Information Clearing House, July 12, 2013, www.informationclearinghouse.info/article35533.htm. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of Emanuele’s engagement. It is a privilege to have Anthony Marsella as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>17</sup> Da’esh is the acronym from the Arabic name Al-Dawlah Al-Islamiyah fe Al-Iraq wa Al-Sham, for the self-proclaimed Islamic State (IS) in Iraq and Syria, or ISIL (Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant), or ISIS (the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria).

<sup>18</sup> Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, the leader of Da’esh survived the Camp Bucca detention center of the US Forces-Iraq. See, among others, “Jordan Executes ISIS Jihadists: Female Suicide Bomber Among Two Put to Death in Dawn Hangings in Retaliation for Terrorists Releasing Video of Pilot Being Torched to Death in Cage,” by John Hall, Julian Robinson, Tom Wyke, and Steph Cockcroft for MailOnline, and David Williams, Chief Reporter for the Daily Mail, February 3, 2015, www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2938199/Burned-alive-cage-ISIS-release-video-claiming-horrifying-murder-captured-Jordanian-pilot.html.

<sup>19</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>20</sup> This book was supported by a 7-months stipend from the Norwegian Non-Fiction Literature Fund in 2011.

<sup>21</sup> Del Re, et al., 2009, Lindner, 2001a, d, c, 2004a, 2005b, a, 2008b, 2009c, 2011, 2012a, g, 2014d, 2015a, Lindner and Backe, 2004, Lindner, et al., 2009.

<sup>22</sup> On July 22, 2011, Anders Behring Breivik bombed government buildings in Oslo, Norway, where eight people died, and then began a mass shooting at a Workers’ Youth League (AUF) camp on the island of Utøya, a ca. 40 minutes car-drive outside of Oslo, killing 69 people, mostly teenagers. The purpose of the attack, he stated, was to save Norway and Western Europe from a Muslim takeover and punish the ruling Labor Party in Norway for betraying Norway’s interests. What is being called “right-wing” extremism expresses itself in two main branches in Norway, with a smaller branch focusing on race, which would include anti-Semitism, and a larger branch, to which also Breivik belonged, focusing on culture and nation. See an in-depth analysis of Breivik’s’ terrorist operation in Hemmingby and Bjørge, 2016, an analysis of Breivik’s ideas in Kjos, 2013, and an account of how he grew up in Seierstad, 2013/2015.

<sup>23</sup> In his book on the history of terrorism, Norwegian political economist Nikolai Sitter, 2017, explains how the attacks on the Norwegian government quarter and Utøya on July 22, 2011, put terrorism and counterterrorism on the agenda in Norway in an entirely new way. After a decade of focusing on Al-Qaeda, those attacks were a stark reminder of how complex the phenomenon of terrorism is. Almost all terrorists are trying to provoke states to overreact – but, so warns Sitter, history shows that there are better alternatives.

<sup>24</sup> In my work, I call for the humanization of globalization, or for globegalization, a term drawn together from globalization and egalization (equal dignity for all).

<sup>25</sup> Tellingly, my 2006 book was titled Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict. Yet, long before I warned that the humiliated of this world will strike back, others had warned of the same. While I write this book, Heinrich Geiselberger is in the process of editing a book on The Great Recession, see www.thegreatregression.eu/. Geiselberger is an editor at the leading German publisher Suhrkamp Verlag. He reminds of sociologist Ralf Dahrendorf and his twenty-year-old prediction that the 21st century will become a “century of authoritarianism.” In the early nineties, Dahrendorf’s work indeed inspired me to briefly become a member of the political party he supported in Germany, and be its candidate for the European Parliament in 1994 (I left the party soon after and have never joined any political party since). We were thrilled that Ralf Dahrendorf wished to participate in our Annual Dignity Conference in Berlin in 2005, and were saddened that health reasons ultimately prevented him. In 2003, I met historian Edward Luttwak, who noted already in 1994 that it was perilous to let working people descend into such personal economic insecurity. I heard Luttwak at the Conference “Can Israel Be Secure Within Its ‘67 Borders?” at The Hebrew University in Jerusalem, November 16–18, 2003.

Also philosopher Richard Rorty warned of possible regressions. In the wake of Donald Trump's rise to victory, in November 2016, New Yorker editor David Remnick reminded of Rorty's 1998 book Achieving Our Country, where Rorty had predicted that Americans with less education will develop resentment at being dictated by arrogant college graduates, and that this resentment will find its outlets. See "The Political Scene," by David Remnick, New Yorker, November 28, 2016, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2016/11/28/obama-reckons-with-a-trump-presidency, and "Something Will Crack": Supposed Prophecy of Donald Trump Goes Viral," by Edward Helmore in New York, The Guardian, November 19, 2016, www.theguardian.com/us-news/2016/nov/19/donald-trump-us-election-prediction-richard-rorty.

See also political scientist Jean Hardisty, 1999, and her book titled Mobilizing Resentment: Conservative Resurgence from the John Birch Society to the Promise Keepers. I thank Linda Hartling for having made me aware of Hardisty's work.

Norwegian historian Rune Slagstad describes how populists now challenge the modern state with its liberal democracy and the rule of law at its core. See "Carl Schmitt i Det hvite hus," by Rune Slagstad, Institutt for samfunnsforskning, Klassekampen, February 11, 2017, www.klassekampen.no/article/20170211/ARTICLE/170219981.

Slagstad warns that in the United States of America, strategists such as Richard Spencer and Stephen Bannon have now come to power, who draw on a very "dangerous mind," as Jan-Werner Müller, 2003, has expressed it, namely, Carl Schmitt (1888 – 1985), one of the twentieth century's most significant political theorists. Schmitt, 1927/2007, has inspired all sides, right-wing and left-wing, whenever they set out to leave behind compromise and consensus and return to simple dichotomies, particularly, that of friend versus enemy, which, according to Schmitt, is the very factum brutum of politics, both in form of outer and inner enemies. The Biblical admonition "Love your enemies" (Matthew 5:44) applies only in private life and not in public life, according to Schmitt. Schmitt called for "Führertum," an efficient, unified powerful state-will, not undermined by democratic control, where might – not truth – becomes right, legitimized through popular acclamation. "Souverän ist, wer über den Ausnahmezustand entscheidet," Schmitt, 1922, p. 11. See also Kelsen and Schmitt, 1931/2015, Schmitt, 1931. Schmitt admired revolutionary syndicalist Georges Sorel (1847 – 1922), who believed that the proletariat should be mobilized to fight against the other classes, until the liberating moment of the revolution would come in a final violent battle. Left-leaning thinkers such as Giorgio Agamben, Chantal Mouffe, Antonio Negri, or Slavoj Žižek have read Schmitt, but, more recently, also those of the right-wing political spectrum, not only in Poland, Hungary, and Austria, but also in the U.S.A., as, for instance, in Donald Trump's ideological surroundings. Donald Trump represents a radicalized Schmitt, says Slagstad, not only does he claim to hold the monopoly on decisions but also the "truth monopoly": the sovereign decides what is true, what is fact.

Schmitt, 1963/2004, sees the partisan (terrorist, we would say) as the last truly political actor of present times, as he does not shy away from the friend versus enemy dichotomy – the very dichotomy, from which Schmitt sees the real concept of the political emerge. The partisan/terrorist is the last truly political actor in present-day's post-national context, because states have lost their monopoly on war, which means that non-state actors become belligerent. The primary objective of those actors is not territorial conquest, but the eradication of "decadent lifestyles," where "absolute enmity" makes civilian and military targets indistinguishable. Stephen Bannon's "clash of civilizations" narrative fits into Schmitt's thinking and is an apocalyptic mirror image of Da'esh's rhetoric.

See also Tunander, 2009, in note 98 in Chapter 1. See, furthermore, Kagan, 1997, and Fraenkel, 1941, in note 15 in the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>26</sup> When I began to interview people and collect material in 2010, at first, a single book in three parts was planned: Part I – The Past: Terrorism in the Context of Honor – Terror as Accepted Path to More Honor with three chapters, Chapter 1: The Security Dilemma – Too Far Apart, Chapter 2: Honor Humiliation – Pressure from Outside to Retaliate, and Chapter 3: Peace the Old Way – Keeping One's Enemies Out and One's Own People Down. Since its inception, the book project has grown into three books. The three parts of the original book project have become three volumes. This book represents the first volume.

<sup>27</sup> Part II – The Present: Terrorism in the Context of Dignity – Terror as Unacceptable Path to More Dignity with three chapters, Chapter 4: The Dignity Dilemma – Too Close Together, Chapter 5: Dignity Humiliation – Urge from Inside to Retaliate, Chapter 6: Peace the Mandela Way – Inclusive Dialogue between Equals.

<sup>28</sup> Part III – The Future: Toward a Terrorism-Free World with three chapters, Chapter 7: Creating a World of Unity in Diversity – Humanizing Globalization Through Egalization, Chapter 8: Walking the Gandhi and Mandela Path – Understanding, yet Not Condoning, Respecting, yet Not Appeasing, Chapter 9: Practicing the Human Dignity Way – Toward a Future of Careholdership for Global Equality in Dignity.

<sup>29</sup> Wulf, 2015. I explain my personal global life design in more detail on the website of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/evelin.php.

<sup>30</sup> I thank Betty Scheper for informing me of the Brownbag discussion "Global Terrorism: What the Data Says," by Aubrey Fox, executive director, Institute for Economics and Peace-USA, and moderator Jehangir Khan, director of CTITF/UNCCT, at the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force (CTITF), Office of the United Nations Department of Political Affairs, December 10, 2015.

<sup>31</sup> Intellectual activism is both a philosophy and a practice for engaging in scholarship relevant to real-world problems, writes David Yamada, 2016. It is a privilege to have David Yamada as esteemed member in the board of directors of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>32</sup> Therapist and minister John McFadden, 2016, writes:

Empathizing with ISIS, Al-Qaeda, and other terrorist groups does seem unthinkable. That is partly because, to most people, “empathy” means “sympathy,” and sympathy for heinous murderers sounds blatantly ridiculous. A second less familiar reason is that violent people seem obviously to not care about their victims, so there is no point in trying to get through to them at all except by force. Therefore, empathy can only detract from reasonable efforts to control and get rid of terrorists.

McFadden observes that relying on empathy toward terrorists, toward those who seemingly lack shame and conscience, for many “is a fool’s errand that can only detract from realistic attempts to prevent violence.” McFadden concludes: “...anti-empathy understanding is embedded in civilization at every level of relationships, ranging from relations between parents and kids to relations between nations.” It is a privilege to have John McFadden’s support for Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

<sup>33</sup> “Humiliation Is the Root of All Terrorism,” by Peter Gabel, Tikkun editor at large, TruthOut, December 16, 2015, www.truth-out.org/speakout/item/34062-humiliation-is-the-root-of-all-terrorism. I thank Seymour M. (Mike) Miller and Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. Gabel writes, “...longing and vulnerability when met with non-recognition leads to humiliation, which leads to substitute imaginary visions that resolve the pain of non-recognition through prideful grandiosity, perfect unity, and dehumanization of those who dehumanized you.” Gabel offers a two-pronged strategy: first, in the short term, finding rational ways to protect ourselves in public places, second, offering an “alternative ideology” to the sympathizers who make it possible for more violent actors to function:

...we should begin to relate to these humiliated populations of the world as we always should have, with empathy and compassion and generosity and care. We should see them as our fellow human beings and offer them the recognition and affirmation and respect that they were always entitled to, but which has been systematically and often ruthlessly denied to them for decades, or even centuries, from the Crusades to World War I to the Iraq War to the present-day exploitation for our benefit of their oil reserves. In repair of disrupting, destroying and demeaning their historical communities, we should enter into present community with them.

<sup>34</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, the section “Children, Madmen, Criminals, Enemies, or Subhumans? Which Interpretation Fits Terrorists Best?” in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 96–98.

<sup>35</sup> See for an illustration, “Responses: The Humiliation Myth: Humiliation Doesn’t Explain Terrorism; the Spread of Political Islam Does. A Response to Peter Bergen and Michael Lind,” by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Spring 2007, Number 4, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/4/the-humiliation-myth/>, where Goldhagen remarks that “the ‘myth of deprivation’ is so manifestly inadequate that it is worth asking whether its supporters actually believe it...” Also humiliation is not “the issue”:

Humiliation is not the issue. An all-consuming, divinely ordained desire to impose theocratic totalitarian control is... We should stop fixating on al Qaeda and terrorism, narrowly construed, as the overwhelming problem and recognize that the biggest danger is the Political Islamic colossus and aspiring hegemon...

“Humiliation and Terrorism: Goldhagen’s Analysis,” by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, March 27, 2007, www.theaugenstables.com/2007/03/27/humiliation-and-terrorism-goldhagens-analysis/:

In this kind of honor-shame battle, any concessions from us will fuel the triumphalism of the other side. This is, whether we like it or not, and long before Bush invaded Iraq, a fight we cannot walk away from. How we fight back still needs serious consideration. But anyone who thinks the way to deal with Arab/Muslim “humiliation” is to accommodate their demands is a dupe of demopaths and a fool.

<sup>36</sup> “Was bedeutet es, die RAF zu verstehen? Mit RAFlern zu reden, heißt nicht, ihre Taten zu billigen. Eine Gegenrede auf Jan Philipp Reemtsma,” by Horst-Eberhard Richter, Die Tageszeitung (Taz), October 27, 2004, www.taz.de/!681743/. German original translated by Lindner:

Kein Terrorismus gedeiht ohne einen politischen Nährboden, der ihn erst möglich macht. Übersieht man die psychische Innenseite des Politischen, wird dieser Zusammenhang leicht unsichtbar, zumal dann, wenn die Unmenschlichkeit des Terrors seine absolute Ächtung fordert und jeden der heimlichen Komplizenschaft verdächtig macht, der besser zu verstehen sucht, was unfassbar sein und bleiben soll. Aber ohne den jeweiligen Nährboden von Terrorismus zu erforschen und die dabei zu gewärtigende Diskriminierung zu ertragen, erhöht man die Gefährdung, deren Verhütung anzustreben ist.

I had the privilege of having the support of Jan Philip Reemtsma during my years in Hamburg 1991 – 1994, when I organized the Hamburger Ideenkette.

<sup>37</sup> Arne Næss explained his point at length at the 2nd Annual Meeting of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, September 12–13, 2003, Maison des Sciences de l’Homme de l’Homme, Paris, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting02.php. Næss described in rich detail how he would invite convicted murderers from prison into his philosophy class at Oslo University to demonstrate to his students that even murderers deserve and need to be dignified. He was adamant that only individuals who feel secure in their connection to humanity can admit to a crime, feel guilty, and show remorse. As long as people feel less than fully human, there is no reason for them to care that they have hurt others or society.

<sup>38</sup> See, among others, the Chief of Psychiatry for Correctional Health Services in New York City, Elizabeth Ford, 2017, calling on everyone to acknowledge the humanness in all prison inmates.

<sup>39</sup> “Children, Madmen, Criminals, Enemies, or Subhumans? Which Interpretation Fits Terrorists Best?” in Lindner, 2006a, Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 96–98.

<sup>40</sup> The so-called public trust doctrine, which indicates that the citizens of a country own the natural resources, has been advocated in recent years as a tool to compel governments across the world to take action against climate change. See, among others, Our Children’s Trust, www.ourchildrenstrust.org.

<sup>41</sup> Philosopher of social science Howard Richards, in a personal communication on January 12, 2013:

Dear Evelin, Linda, Uli, and Michael,

I am reminded of a radio newscaster named Edward R. Murrow whom my mother listened to faithfully for many years. Murrow ended every newscast citing different viewpoints on a topic and concluding, “The truth may lie somewhere in between. A view I have finally arrived at, which is expressed in Rethinking Thinking is the idea of “speaking responsibly.” There are so many things one might say. Most of them could be regarded as true or as false or as meaningful or as meaningless in some sense or other. Whatever one might say will no doubt be understood in different ways by different hearers. It is necessary although difficult (in some senses impossible) to make a reasonable prediction concerning what the consequences of one’s speech acts will be. But silence is not a responsible option. Silence also has real-world consequences that are hard to predict. The idea of “responsibility” (which is developed by Amartya Sen, 2009, in his recent book on justice) is about being responsible for the consequences of one’s actions. These would include one’s speech acts.

It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>42</sup> See, among others, Talking to the Enemy, by anthropologist Scott Atran, uploaded on November 18, 2010, <https://youtu.be/6ijmBd69878>, where Atran explores the evolutionary origins of religions in connection with the mindsets of extremist people in the twenty-first century. Atran calls terrorists “essential outliers,” who are holding our civilization hostage, not through what they do, but through our hysterical responses, such as the militarization of the response and the attack on civil liberties – at least in the United States, less so in Britain – responses which almost exceed what was the case during the Cold War. In the United States, Atran warns that the foreign policy is at odds with its American Dream, into which the majority of its Muslims does buy into. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of this video.

<sup>43</sup> Historian Philip Blom suggests that one need not be a writer to imagine that in fifty years, an aging authoritarian fortress Europe will face an Orthodox Russian empire, and an Islamic caliphate. See Warum es um viel mehr geht als um Obergrenzen, tt – titel thesen temperamente, Das Erste, January 31, 2016, www.daserste.de/information/wissen-kultur/ttt/sendung/hr/sendung-vom-31012016-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters. See also Blom, 2008.

<sup>44</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>45</sup> Lindner, 2010b.

<sup>46</sup> “Scientists Warn of Perilous Climate Shift Within Decades, Not Centuries,” by Justin Gillis, New York Times, March 22, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/23/science/global-warming-sea-level-carbon-dioxide-emissions.html?\_r=0. See also the first book by climate scientist James Hansen, 2009.

<sup>47</sup> Schell, 2003. Solomon, 2005. None is in a better position to describe the dilemma of “winning the battle and losing the peace” than those who are used to winning battles. Six former heads of the Shin Bet, Israel’s secret service agency reflected publicly on their actions and decisions in The Gatekeepers, a 2012 documentary film by director Dror Moreh. See www.thegatekeepersfilm.com/.

<sup>48</sup> Social scientist and social activist Riane T. Eisler, 1987, developed a cultural transformation theory where she describes how otherwise widely divergent societies all around the globe employ what she has named the dominator model of society, rather than the partnership model. She describes how, from the samurai of Japan to the Aztecs of Meso-America, people lived in very similar hierarchies of domination and under a rigidly male-dominant “strongman” rule, both in the family and state. Hierarchies of domination were maintained by a high degree of institutionalized and socially accepted violence, ranging from wife- and child-beating within the family to aggressive warfare at the larger tribal or national level.

See her most recent book Eisler, 2007. Philosopher Karl Popper, 1945, spoke of irrational tribal emotions to describe the adoration of strong men and hatred of people with a different ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, or political ideology.

See also, Kautsky, 1982, recommended by historian Richard Landes, who offers a list of elements that characterize what he calls a prime-divider polity in contrast to a civil polity. See “Civil Polity vs. Prime-Divider Polity,” by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, July 26, 2006, www.theaugenstables.com/reflections-from-second-draft/civil-society-vs-prime-divider-society/. A prime-divider polity would contain the following main features:

- legal privilege for the elites (including exemption from taxation, lighter sentences for their misdeeds and heavier penalties for offenses against them),
- self-help justice in which clans defend their members regardless of legal issues like intent (blood revenge, vendetta, feud, duel),
- mystery surrounding political authority (e.g., monarchy above the law),
- commoner populations illiterate, controlled by intimidation (Machiavelli’s: a ruler should be feared not loved)
- manual labor stigmatized, vast majority (masses) excluded from public sphere except on choreographed occasions,
- elites with a monopoly on literacy, weaponry, rapid transportation, and political power.

Civil polity would entail the following interlocking elements:

- same rules for all (equality before the law, what the ancient Greeks called isonomia,
- independent law courts that determine fair judgments and pre-empt private (self-help) justice,
- public transparency and accountability of people in power (free press, freedom of speech),
- commoner populations empowered by education to assert and protect their own legislated rights,
- commitment to voluntarism as a principle form of social interaction and political organization, emphasizing, mutual trust, contractual obligations, and moral autonomy,
- manual labor is not stigmatized, and manual laborers and their children can participate in public discourse and if sufficiently successful, enter the elite.

<sup>49</sup> Kuhn, 1962. See also The Prince by Machiavelli, 1532, where he observes:

There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct, or more uncertain in its success, than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order to things. Because the innovation has for enemies all those who have done well under the old conditions, and lukewarm defenders in those who may do well under the new.

See also the work of the founder of the Club of Rome, Aurelio Peccei, 1982, on shifting paradigms, or “making a civilizational, or evolutionary turn.” I thank Dino Karabeg for reminding me of Peccei’s work.

<sup>50</sup> Marsden and Schmid, 2011, Table 1, p. 14. In 2016, the German Defence Minister Ursula von der Leyen began to equip the Bundeswehr with a new “Cyber and Information Space” unit with 13,500 IT specialists, thus responding to the increasing attacks on the country’s networks, approximately 6,500 per day. See “Auftrag: Cyber-Verteidigung,” Bundesministerium der Verteidigung, Berlin, April 26, 2016, [www.bmvg.de/portal/a/bmvg/!ut/p/c4/NYuxDsIwDET\_yE4kJARbSxcYOnSBsqVtFBk1cWWcsvDxJAN30hvu6fCJpcntFJwSJ7fiA8eZztMHprgHeHGWskKkRG\_1QjnivX4WDzMnr5Xqk1JhEKcssLHoWk0WKQZowdHYrjXW\_GO\_zel y63t7OHbXdsAtxuYH1flcrA!!/](http://www.bmvg.de/portal/a/bmvg/!ut/p/c4/NYuxDsIwDET_yE4kJARbSxcYOnSBsqVtFBk1cWWcsvDxJAN30hvu6fCJpcntFJwSJ7fiA8eZztMHprgHeHGWskKkRG_1QjnivX4WDzMnr5Xqk1JhEKcssLHoWk0WKQZowdHYrjXW_GO_zel y63t7OHbXdsAtxuYH1flcrA!!/).

<sup>51</sup> See among others:

- “Back from the ‘Caliphate’: Returnee Says IS Recruiting for Terror Attacks in Germany,” by Hubert Gude and Wolf Wiedmann-Schmidt, Spiegel Online International, December 16, 2015, www.spiegel.de/international/world/german-jihadist-returns-from-syria-and-gives-testimony-a-1067764.html.
- “Activating the Sleepers: Islamic State Adopts a New Strategy in Europe,” by Christoph Reuter in Beirut, Spiegel Online International, March 29, 2016, www.spiegel.de/international/world/islamic-state-adopts-a-new-approach-in-europe-a-1084489.html.

<sup>52</sup> “Next Generation Bioweapons: The Technology Of Genetic Engineering Applied To Biowarfare And Bioterrorism,” by Michael J. Ainscough, Colonel, USAF, The Counterproliferation Papers, Future Warfare Series Number 14, April 2002, www.fas.org/irp/threat/cbw/nextgen.pdf, p. 11:

The recent revolution in molecular biology may have incidentally unleashed a new threat to mankind, in the form of genetically engineered pathogens, which could be used to develop many new offensive biological weapons.

Source: The Federation of American Scientists (FAS), Washington, DC, www.fas.org. The FAS was founded in 1945 by scientists who worked on the Manhattan Project to develop the first atomic bombs. The USAF Counterproliferation Center is located at the Air War College, Air University, Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama, www.au.af.mil/au/awc/awcgate/awc-cps.htm. The Counterproliferation Papers Series was established by the USAF to provide information and analysis to assist the understanding of the U.S. national security policy-makers and USAF officers to help them better prepare to counter the threat from weapons of mass destruction.

<sup>53</sup> See for recent discussions, “Monetizing Nature: Taking Precaution on a Slippery Slope,” by Barbara Unmüssig, President of the Heinrich Böll Foundation in Berlin, Germany, Great Transition Initiative, www.greattransition.org/document/monetizing-nature-taking-precaution-on-a-slippery-slope, or Costanza and Kubiszewski, 2014, and Rotering, 2013. See also Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>54</sup> Expert on corporate sustainability management, Mark W. McElroy, Center for Sustainable Organizations, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 22, 2014.

<sup>55</sup> Institute for Economics and Peace, 2015. Since September 11, 2001, an American residing in the United States was five thousand times more likely to be killed by a fellow citizen armed with a gun than by a “jihadist” (Bergen, 2016), while Nigeria and Kenya have suffered much more significantly, so has eastern India, where the Maoist “Naxalite” insurgency has raged since almost 50 years.

See also a map showing the concentration and intensity (combining fatalities and injuries) of terrorist attacks that occurred worldwide in the 2014 World Map of the Global Terrorism Database (GTB) of the University of Maryland’s National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism (START), A Center of Excellence of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, www.start.umd.edu/gtd/images/START\_GlobalTerrorismDatabase\_2014TerroristAttacksConcentrationIntensityMap.jpg.

<sup>56</sup> Institute for Economics and Peace, 2015. The Global Terrorism Index is a partnership between the Institute for Economics and Peace, and the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism (START) Center at the University of Maryland. The Global Terrorism Index is a comprehensive survey of key local trends, patterns and drivers of terrorism activity in 162 countries. It draws upon START’s Global Terrorism Database, which has to date codified over 140,000 terrorist incidents. We read on pp. 6–7:

Defining terrorism is not a straightforward matter. There is no single internationally accepted definition of what constitutes terrorism, and the terrorism literature abounds with competing definitions and typologies. IEP accepts the terminology and definitions agreed to by the authors of the GTD, the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism (START) researchers and its advisory panel. The GTI therefore defines terrorism as “the threatened or actual use of illegal force and violence by a non-state actor to attain a political, economic, religious, or social goal through fear, coercion, or intimidation.” This definition recognizes that terrorism is not only the physical act of an attack, but also the psychological impact it has on a society for many years after. In order to be included as an incident in the GTD the act has to be: “an intentional act of violence or threat of violence by a non-state actor.” This means an incident has to meet three criteria in order for it to be counted as a terrorist act:

1. The incident must be intentional – the result of a conscious calculation on the part of a perpetrator.
2. The incident must entail some level of violence or threat of violence – Including property damage, as well as violence against people.
3. The perpetrators of the incidents must be sub-national actors. This database does not include acts of state terrorism.

In addition to this baseline definition, two of the following three criteria have to be met in order to be included in the START database from 1997:

- The violent act was aimed at attaining a political, economic, religious, or social goal.
- The violent act included evidence of an intention to coerce, intimidate, or convey some other message to a larger audience other than to the immediate victims.
- The violent act was outside the precepts of international humanitarian law.

<sup>57</sup> “At Geneva Conference, Ban Calls for Global Partnership to Prevent Violent Extremism,” UN News Centre, April 8, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=53638#.Vw1MwHrICgx.

<sup>58</sup> Papadopoulos, 2006.

<sup>59</sup> The estimate of about 170 million civilians killed in the twentieth century comes from political scientist Rudolph Joseph Rummel, 1994. Around 100 million deaths can be attributed to Stalin, Mao, and Hitler. The ratio would be 340 to one, if the death from non-state groups over the same period of time is calculated at around 500,000.

Peace researcher Johan Galtung wrote in “The State of the World – By Journalism,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 23, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/09/the-state-of-the-world-by-journalism/:

They cure illness with medicine or surgery, not with illness; like fire with water, not with fire. For violence, however, authorities often recommend more violence to stop violence; like terrorism with state terrorism, killing more innocent victims than the growing non-state terrorism it may even stimulate. The term “state terrorism” is even ruled out; journalism focused on that will be “not fit to print.”

<sup>60</sup> See, for instance, “In West, ISIS Finds Women Eager to Enlist,” by Steven Erlanger, New York Times, October 23, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/10/24/world/europe/as-islamists-seek-to-fill-ranks-more-western-women-answer-their-call.html.

<sup>61</sup> “Four Key Reasons to Understand the Irresistible Attraction of Radical Islam,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), November 3, 2014, www.ipsnews.net/2014/11/opinion-the-irresistible-attraction-of-radical-islam/.

<sup>62</sup> “The Rise of ISIS is Fueled by Iraq’s Deteriorating Economic Conditions,” an interview with Sabah Alnasseri, The Real News, November 3, 2014, www.informationclearinghouse.info/article40135.htm.

<sup>63</sup> “New Freedoms in Tunisia Drive Support for ISIS,” by David D. Kirkpatrick, New York Times, October 21, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/10/22/world/africa/new-freedoms-in-tunisia-drive-support-for-isis.html?\_r=0.

<sup>64</sup> See reports from the United Nations and Amnesty International, summarized here:

- “The Islamic State of Sexual Violence,” by Aki Peritz and Tara Maller, Foreign Policy, September 16, 2014, [www.foreignpolicy.com/articles/2014/09/16/the\_islamic\_state\_of\_sexual\_violence\_women Rape\_Iraq\_Syria](http://www.foreignpolicy.com/articles/2014/09/16/the_islamic_state_of_sexual_violence_women Rape_Iraq_Syria).
- “Gruesome Evidence of Ethnic Cleansing in Northern Iraq as Islamic State Moves to Wipe Out Minorities,” Amnesty International, September 2, 2014, www.amnesty.org/en/news/gruesome-evidence-ethnic-cleansing-northern-iraq-islamic-state-moves-wipe-out-minorities-2014-0.

“We are gravely concerned by continued reports of acts of violence, including sexual violence against women and teenage girls and boys belonging to Iraqi minorities,” said the Special Representative of the United Nations Secretary-General for Iraq (SRSG), Nickolay Mladenov, and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict, Zainab Hawa Bangura. See United Nations Iraq, Baghdad, August 12, 2014, www.uniraq.org/index.php?option=com\_k2&view=item&id=2373:srsg-bangura-and-srsg-mladenov-gravely-concerned-by-reports-of-sexual-violence-against-internally-displaced-persons&Itemid=605&lang=en.

Sara Meger, however, cautions: “The Political Economy of ‘Barbarity’ and Sexual Violence by Islamic State (ISIS),” by Sara Meger, Gender at War, October 2, 2014, www.genderandwar.com/2014/10/02/the-political-economy-of-barbarity-and-sexual-violence-by-islamic-state-isis/.

<sup>65</sup> The Scottish physiologist John Scott Haldane pioneered the use of “sentinel animals,” which could be caged canaries or white mice, in mining operations in the 1890s.

<sup>66</sup> I am indebted to peace linguist Francisco Gomes de Matos for suggesting the phrase psycho-geo-historical. He wrote in a personal communication on January 3, 2012: “In characterizing your approach you say that your intention is to embed terrorism in a large geo-historical frame, but in the spirit of your clarifying subtitle, isn’t your goal also psychological? Wouldn’t PSYCHO-GEO-HISTORICAL more accurately label your approach?”

<sup>67</sup> Ruben Nelson, director of Foresight Canada, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Great Transition? Where We Stand,” September 17, 2014, in response to Raskin, 2014.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid.

<sup>69</sup> Arie Nadler wrote about radical empathy and radical reconciliation. It is a privilege to have Arie Nadler as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Arie Nadler, 2012, p. 304:

Consistent with Arendt’s terminology, I propose to label forgiveness for “radical evil” as “radical forgiveness” and the intergroup reconciliation that may follow as “radical reconciliation.” ... Such an understanding was expected to culminate in empathy with the perpetrator of “radical evil,” that we propose to label as “radical empathy.”

Hannah Arendt, 1961, in her discussion of the moral dilemmas presented by the Jewish Holocaust, suggested an extreme category of evil, more extreme than the Kantian definition of evil. The Kantian moral imperative defines it as evil if one treats others as means to achieving some end, rather than treating them as ends in themselves. Arendt felt that radical evil goes further. The victims of Auschwitz were neither means to some end, nor an end in themselves; they were regarded as valueless and useless objects that were thus superfluous and expandable. If this is so: can radical evil ever be forgiven, and if so, under what conditions?

My experience as a therapist indicates that the dehumanization of the Jews that Arendt alludes to, a dehumanization that was also meted out to others, for instance, the Tutsi in the Rwandan genocide, is not to be taken at face value (Lindner, 2009d). To my observation, people who dehumanize others, do not really believe in their claim that their victims are useless objects. They only attempt to believe it, because it would be a relief for them to be able to believe it. Truly useless objects do not merit much attention and surely no hatred. Why was so much effort invested into eradicating these particular useless objects? Because they were not truly useless. I observe something very counterintuitive at the bottom of this dynamic, namely, admiration for the power of the enemy and fear of this power. Declaring a powerful enemy to be useless is an instrument of ultimate humiliation out of overwhelming fear, based on admiration. In this sense, the victims of such treatment are means to some end, and also an end in themselves. Understanding this, to me, is radical empathy. And there can be no forgiveness, not least because the notion of forgiveness entails the illusion of closure. Something much more difficult and radical than forgiveness is needed, in my view, namely, shouldering the radical collective responsibility, of all of us together, to create the proverbial village that it takes to raise a child. This means helping those among us who cannot muster the strength to respect those they admire and fear, to do so. This book is written with this radical sense of responsibility.

<sup>70</sup> See the journal Critical Studies on Terrorism at www.tandfonline.com/loi/rter20#.U85bp7Hzkmw. See, furthermore, among others, Smyth, et al., 2009, Gunning and Jackson, 2011, Jackson, 2010, Jackson, et al., 2011, Stump and Dixit, 2013, Burke, et al., 2014.

<sup>71</sup> The Psychology of Humiliation: Somalia, Rwanda / Burundi, and Hitler's Germany was my doctoral dissertation in social psychology at the Department of Psychology of the University of Oslo, Norway (Lindner, 2000c). See more chapters and papers by Lindner in full text on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.

<sup>72</sup> Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, is Lindner's first book on dignity and humiliation and how we may envision a more dignified world, and it has been characterized as a path-breaking book and been honored as "Outstanding Academic Title" for 2007 in the USA by the journal Choice. Choice is a publication of the Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL), a division of the American Library Association. See Lindner, 2006a. It came out in 2006 in Praeger, with a Foreword by the father of the field of conflict resolution, Morton Deutsch. The book discusses dignity and humiliation and how we may envision a more dignified world. It first lays out a theory of the mental and social dynamics humiliation and proposes the need for "egalization" (the undoing of humiliation) for a healthy global society. It then presents chapters on the role of misunderstandings in fostering feelings of humiliation; the role of humiliation in international conflict; and the relationship of humiliation to terrorism and torture. It concludes with a discussion of how to defuse feelings of humiliation and create a dignified world. For more details, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/01.php.

Emotion and Conflict: How Human Rights Can Dignify Emotion and Help Us Wage Good Conflict is Lindner's second book. See Lindner, 2009a. It is about dignity and how realizing its promise can help improve the human condition at all levels – from micro to meso to macro levels. The book came out in Praeger in 2009, with a Foreword by the father of the field of conflict resolution, Morton Deutsch. It uses a broad historical lens that captures all of human history, from its hunter-gatherer origins to the promise of a globally united knowledge society in the future. It emphasizes the need to recognize and leave behind malign cultural, social, and psychological effects of the past. The book calls upon the world community, academics and lay people alike, to own up to the opportunities offered by increasing global interdependence. For more details, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/02.php.

<sup>73</sup> Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security: Dignifying Relationships from Love, Sex, and Parenthood to World Affairs is Lindner's third book, published by Praeger. See Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. Archbishop Desmond Tutu kindly contributed with a Foreword (asked for a prepublication endorsement, he kindly offered to contribute with a Foreword). The book rounds off with an Afterword by Linda Hartling, director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, in honor of Jean Baker Miller and Don Klein. For more details, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/03.php.

The book was "highly recommended" by Choice (in July 2010):

In this far-ranging, sometimes brilliant book, Lindner (Columbia Univ. and Oslo Univ.) studies the social and political ramifications of human violations and world crises related to humiliation, defined as the enforced lowering of a person or group, a process of subjugation that harms or removes the dignity, pride, and honor of the other. A "transdisciplinary social scientist," the author charts how humiliation – and its antidote, love – are conditioned by large-scale, systemic social forces such as globalization. The force of this book resides in its construction of a compelling, compassionate alternative to the psychological effects of humiliation on gender and sexual relations, parenthood, and leadership. For Lindner, this alternative is not only love but also its psychological correlate, humility, both of which can become the basis of the social, political, and cultural change necessary to reform the harmful global tendency toward humiliation. Lindner's philosophy is avowedly non-dualist and rooted in ancient Eastern wisdom. A powerful follow up to her Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict (CH, Mar'07, 44-4114), this book appears in the "Contemporary Psychology" series; it will be indispensable for psychologists, humanists, and political scientists and invaluable to policy makers. Summing Up: Highly recommended. Upper-division undergraduates through faculty and professionals. – M. Uebel, University of Texas.

<sup>74</sup> A Dignity Economy: Creating an Economy that Serves Human Dignity and Preserves Our Planet is Lindner's fourth book. See Lindner, 2012d. It is the first publication of Dignity Press, published in its imprint World Dignity University Press, with a Foreword by Linda Hartling, director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, and Ulrich Spalthoff, director of Dignity Press. See more on www.dignitypress.org/wdu-press-books/dignity-economy. For more details, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/04.php.

<sup>75</sup> Like physicist Paul Raskin, I take a “crude-look-at-the-whole” or a CLAW, as Murray Gell-Mann would call it: “It ascends to high orbit ‘above the earth’ and across the centuries – ‘We must rise above the earth to fully understand the world in which we live’ – Socrates. From there, we can take in the contours of the whole system, the interplay of subsystems, and the slow wheels of history,” writes Paul Raskin in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” November 11, 2016, in response the comments on Raskin, 2016.

<sup>76</sup> Henrich, et al., 2010. See also Lindner, 2001f.

<sup>77</sup> Philosopher Thomas Nagel, 2012. Social change is only possible if we accept the interdependence of theory, research and action/practice, writes David Bargal, 2011a. See also his most recent work in Burnes and Bargal, 2017. I am deeply thankful for David Bargal’s guidance since we met at Columbia University in 2002, and his care at his university during my time in my beloved Jerusalem in 2004. I am deeply thankful also for his review of my book on gender, humiliation, and global security in Bargal, 2011b. David Bargal David Bargal is Gordon Brown professor at the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work at the Hebrew University, Jerusalem. He holds a Ph.D. in clinical and social psychology. Even though I had learned “by heart” every corner of Jerusalem’s Old City when I worked at the Alyn Hospital as a psychology student in 1975, David still showed me new faces of Jerusalem, the city that ought to be The Peace Capital of the World. See www.humiliationstudies.org/intervention/jerusalem.php.

<sup>78</sup> Lynch, 2013.

<sup>79</sup> Gadamer, 1960/1989. Hans-Georg Gadamer (1900 – 2002) grew up and studied classics and philosophy in the University of Breslau, where also my mother was born in 1930. I thank Hroar Klempe for reminding me of Gadamer’s work in April 2016. It is a privilege to have Hroar Klempe as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>80</sup> Charles Eisenstein, 2014, asks, “why is it assumed without much debate that no one can have direct access to the subjective experience of another person (or non-person)? This is obvious only if we conceive and experience ourselves as fundamentally separate from each other. There are other stories of self, however. We could see ourselves, as many spiritual traditions do, not as separate beings but as ‘interbeings,’ not just interdependent but interexistent.” It was a privilege to have Charles Eisenstein with us in our 2012 Workshop on Transforming Humiliation and Violent Conflict at Columbia University in New York City.

<sup>81</sup> Laszlo, 2014:

By expanding our systemic consciousness and drawing on our relational intelligence skills, we will be able to form what physicists term “coherence domains” – patches of networked holons that are in phase with each other. This alignment or “meeting of the minds” (not to mention of the hearts and spirit) is what creates the conditions for hyperconnectivity and gives rise to the systemic nurturance spaces so necessary as contextual complements to active engagement with of systemic leverage points we will identify.

I thank Dino Karabeg for introducing us to Alexander Laszlo and thank him also for accepting to become a member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>82</sup> The notion of living translation is a methodological and theoretical framework originally developed by Pritzker, 2014, to understand the translation of Chinese medicine into practice in the United States. It means that ideologies of language, emotion, and personhood mediate embodied interactions, within which the meaning and implications of specific semiotic and linguistic registers are made and remade.

<sup>83</sup> I thank philosopher Dagfinn Kåre Føllesdal for his support in formulating initial questions in 1996. I had the privilege of participating in his Ethics Programme of the Norwegian Research Council 1995 – 1996. Dagfinn Føllesdal’s publications span many decades, see, among others, Føllesdal, 1988, Føllesdal and Depaul, 2015. I was immensely touched by his personal support to my work, by his ethics seminars, and by his lectures, among others, by “How Can We Use Arguments in Ethics?” presentation at the Norwegian Academy of Science, Oslo, Norway, January 30, 1996. Dagfinn Føllesdal shared the following reflections with me in 1996:

In humiliation: the most important aspect is that it is a subjective notion, a subjective experience, less an objective notion. Although, of course, in some cases also an outsider can say: this is a humiliation. The subjective perspective is important. Therefore Husserl is helpful with respect to culture difference: How is humiliation experienced subjectively? People of different cultures will not be aware that they humiliate, and even if they do, they will not understand. People from the same culture would just abstain from doing something which humiliates. What is experienced as humiliating? For example in a peace treaties, one has to be careful not to humiliate somebody who is falling. There is a spectrum of possible reactions, depending on the experience of justice: for instance, if it means an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth.

What is the role of anger? Sometimes anger is not caused by humiliation. Incidents need to be mapped out in rich descriptive studies to show what it was that caused feelings of humiliation.

What is the role of ethics? Could there ever be justified humiliation? In Norway in the Middle Ages, outside of the church, there was a pranger, which was used as efficient way to stop crime. What about publishing the names of people who cheat on taxes in the newspaper? What about reputation, deterrent, and cost-effectiveness?

<sup>84</sup> I am acutely aware that many of my readers may be disappointed with me as much as Daniel Goldhagen was when he read Peter Bergen and Michael Lind's account of terrorism. See "Responses: The Humiliation Myth: Humiliation Doesn't Explain Terrorism; the Spread of Political Islam Does. A Response to Peter Bergen and Michael Lind," by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Spring 2007, Number 4, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/4/the-humiliation-myth/>, where Goldhagen writes:

Bergen and Lind treat Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda as stand-ins for terrorists in general. This is misleading, as other terrorists and other Political Islamic regimes have differing aspects and qualities. Bergen and Lind make no mention, for example, of Iran, with its financing of and support for the terrorists of Hezbollah and Hamas; its insistent drive to acquire nuclear weapons; its expressed desire to annihilate Israel; and its repeated threats to terrorize the Europeans should they not kow-tow to its demands. The Iranian regime, in power for 27 years and governing a wealthy, oil-rich country of almost 70 million people, hardly suffers from humiliation. And so while their goals and ideologies may be similar (despite their Sunni-Shia antipathies), Iran cannot be understood by subsuming it into an analysis of a loosely coordinated, deadly network of a few thousand terrorists.

I resonate with Richard Landes' reaction to Goldhagen's thoughts in "Humiliation and Terrorism: Goldhagen's Analysis," by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, March 27, 2007, www.theaugenstables.com/2007/03/27/humiliation-and-terrorism-goldhagens-analysis/, where Landes writes:

I'm not sure I'd dismiss the Iranian regime as "hardly suffer[ing] from humiliation." As Goldhagen points out, humiliation is relative and a function of perceptions, not reality. There are many reasons for Iranian leaders to feel humiliated, including their inability – so far – to fulfill the apocalyptic agenda with which they began their regime in 1400 AH/1979 CE.

<sup>85</sup> In his book A Global Standard for Reporting Conflict, director of the University of Sydney's Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies, Jake Lynch, 2013, constructs an argument identifying what constitutes good journalism. By using a critical realist approach, he accepts that the world cannot be accessed as it is, yet, it can be assembled as agreed – so long as consensus on important meanings is kept under constant review. We read in the book description that it delineates the role of journalism in public spheres by drawing on key concepts from political and communication theory:

And it shows how these concepts relate to ideas from peace research, in the form of Peace Journalism. Thinkers whose contributions are examined along the way include Michel Foucault, Johan Galtung, John Paul Lederach, Edward Herman and Noam Chomsky, Manuel Castells and Jürgen Habermas. The book argues for a critical realist approach, considering critiques of "correspondence" theories of representation to propose an innovative conceptualization of journalistic epistemology in which "social truths" can be identified as the basis for the journalistic remit of factual reporting. If the world cannot be accessed as it is, then it can be assembled as agreed – so long as consensus on important meanings is kept under constant review. These propositions are tested by extensive fieldwork in four countries: Australia, the Philippines, South Africa and Mexico.

<sup>86</sup> It was a privilege to sit with Barnett Pearce on June 11, 2003, in the cafeteria of Teachers College at Columbia University, have lunch and intense conversations, years before his much too early passing, and to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. CMM is the acronym for "Coordinated Management of Meaning," a phrase that describes what we do when we communicate with each other. See www.cmmstitute.net/about/about-cmm:

As human beings, we continuously interpret what we experience, including what happens around us and to us. Call this "meaning." These meanings are not simply "responses"; we have a limited capacity – and sometimes a powerful responsibility – to choose among potential meanings and to test and otherwise evaluate candidate interpretations. Call this "management of meaning." And we always do this in interaction with other people. Every action that we take is, in some ways, a response to things that have happened before and, in some ways, a request or hope or insistence on what will happen in the future. We call this the "coordinated management of meaning."

In a recent workshop, one participant jokingly described her reason for attending this way: "many of my friends are always talking about CMM and I thought I'd come today to learn what the big secret is, and perhaps learn how to perform the secret handshake." One of the leaders of the workshop, Barnett Pearce, laughed and said, "The secret is that there is no secret! A good bit of what we do is to unlearn some unhelpful ideas about what the social world is and how it works. When we do that, then we can see what has been right in front of us all along: that we live in processes of communication, and that these processes of communication are generative; they shape us and everything else in our social worlds. And then we work together to develop some language and other concepts to help us understand and act effectively in our social worlds.”

By taking what we call “the communication perspective,” those of us in the CMM Institute look at communication itself, seeing it as generating selves, relationships, organizations, institutions, nations, and cultures. By seeing selves, relationships, etc. as the products of the on-going and unfinished process of communication, our attention is drawn to the characteristics of communication itself.

We have found this perceptual shift revolutionary and powerful. We have generated a philosophically sophisticated theory, a respectable body of empirical research, and a diverse community of practice, including professionals such as managers, consultants, coaches, mediators, therapists, social workers, and teachers who use the underlying principles of CMM in their work.

We believe that CMM has an as-yet unfulfilled capacity to help us address the issues that confront us as persons and as a society and have set ourselves to promote the continued development of CMM and its application.

<sup>87</sup> “Life on Earth Is Dying,” by Robert J. Burrowes, Human Wrongs Watch, December 6, 2016, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2016/12/07/life-on-earth-is-dying/>: “On the day that you read this article, 200 species of life on Earth (plants, birds, animals, fish, amphibians, insects, reptiles) will cease to exist. Tomorrow, another 200 species will vanish forever.”

For background reflections, see also Talking to the Enemy, by anthropologist Scott Atran, uploaded on November 18, 2010, <https://youtu.be/6ijmBd69878>, where Atran explores the evolutionary origins of religions in connection with the mindsets of extremist people in the twenty-first century. He traces the desire to “save the world” to the legacy of monotheism. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of this video.

<sup>88</sup> Sociologist Aaron Antonovsky researched how people manage stressful situations and stay well. See, among others, Antonovsky, 1979, 1987, Eriksson and Lindstrom, 2005.

<sup>89</sup> Pinker, 2011.

<sup>90</sup> See for the network’s publications www.humiliationstudies.org/publications/publications.php, and for the author’s www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.

<sup>91</sup> Escrigas, 2016.

<sup>92</sup> “Nature’s Solutions: The IUCN Perspective,” interview with Julia Marton-Lefèvre, director general of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, Great Transition Initiative, September 2014, <http://greattransition.org/publication/nature-s-solutions-the-iucn-perspective>.

<sup>93</sup> Max-Neef, 2005, Abstract. I thank Catherine Odora Hoppers for reminding me of Max-Neef’s article, in an invitation she kindly sent to me on August 9, 2014, to “Healing and Citizenship Education as the First Principles in the Philosophy of Higher Education,” 7th South African Research Chairs Initiative (SARChI) Retreat, November 22–24, 2014, convened by the DST/NRF South African Research Chair in Development Education, funded by the Department of Science and Technology (DST), managed by the National Research Foundation (NRF), and hosted by the University of South Africa (UNISA). Catherine Odora Hoppers holds a South African Research Chair in Development Education at the University of South Africa. It is a privilege to have her and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>94</sup> Ruben Nelson, director of Foresight Canada, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Great Transition? Where We Stand,” September 17, 2014, in response to Raskin, 2014.

<sup>95</sup> Neumann, 2008a. See also Neumann, 2008b, 2009, 2010, Neumann and Smith, 2008, Neumann, et al., 2008. The International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation (ICSR), <http://icsr.info/>.

<sup>96</sup> Rock, 2005.

<sup>97</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 56.

<sup>98</sup> “When Nothing Is Cool,” by Lisa Ruddick, Criticism, The Point, 2015, <http://thepointmag.com/2015/criticism/when-nothing-is-cool>, an abridged version of an article in Bammer and Boetcher Joeres, 2015. See also Jameson, 1991, Latour, 2004, and Jones, 2009. Ruddick asks why academia has not been able “to shift away from norms that make ruthlessness look like sophistication,” and writes:

Some years ago Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick touched on this complex in her well-known essay on paranoid reading, where she identified a strain of “hatred” in criticism. Also salient is a more recent piece in which Bruno Latour has described how scholars slip from “critique” into “critical barbarity,” giving “cruel treatment” to experiences and ideals that non-academics treat as objects of tender concern. Rita Felski’s current work on the state of criticism has reenergized the conversation on the punitive attitudes encouraged by the hermeneutics of suspicion. And Susan Fraiman’s powerful analysis of the “cool male” intellectual style favored in academia is concerned with many of the same patterns I consider here. I hope to show that the kind of thinking these scholars, among others, have criticized has survived the supposed death of theory. More, it encourages an intellectual sadism that the profession would do well to reflect on.

...

Repeatedly, we will find scholars using theory – or simply attitude – to burn through whatever is small, tender, and worthy of protection and cultivation. Academic cool is a cast of mind that disdains interpersonal kindness, I-thou connection.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article. It is a privilege to have Michael Britton on the board of directors of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>99</sup> Lindner, 2001b.

<sup>100</sup> Arendt, 1963.

<sup>101</sup> In Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security, I highlight the notion of what I call big love.

<sup>102</sup> “The Scourge of Illiteracy and the Authoritarian Nightmare,” by Henry A. Giroux, Hamilton Spectator, April 25, 2016, www.thespec.com/opinion-story/6513400-the-scourge-of-illiteracy-and-the-authoritarian-nightmare/.

<sup>103</sup> I resonate with Georg Lohmann, 2014, and his position that, in contrast to theories, which show meaning in a logical way, images and metaphors can make meaning palpable in an interpretative way, for instance, the meaning of the notion of a “good life.” See the original in German in Lohmann, 2014, p. 11:

Auch hier muss und darf die radikale Endlichkeit nicht der Versuchung erliegen, eine absolute Konzeption des Guten Lebens zu suchen oder gar anbieten zu wollen. Sie kann stattdessen nur so etwas wie ein, man könnte sagen, “relativ Absolutes” gewinnen und anbieten. Die frustrierenden und ambivalenten Erfahrungen des Unverfügbaren bewältigen wir durch eine mehr oder weniger angemessene, argumentative Verständigung darüber, wer wir sind, sein wollen, sein sollen und sein können. Alle diese Aspekte fassen wir wie in einem Bilde zusammen, weil, anders als in Theorien, in Bildern ein angestrebter oder explizierter Sinnzusammenhang sich nicht logisch, sondern durch ein interpretatives Zusammenspiel von unterschiedlichen Elementen verstehen lässt. Menschliches Leben ist deshalb immer, relativ zu einem Menschenbild, interpretiertes Leben, und deshalb ist die Hermeneutik, als die Kunst des Verstehens, mit ihrer “Ehrenrettung der ‘schlechten Unendlichkeit’” die passende Philosophie der Endlichkeit.

Like Amitai Etzioni, I am not a legal scholar, and I am also not an expert in counterterrorism. I focus on the generalist perspective that I have developed throughout the course of my lifetime. Etzioni, 2013, p. 334:

The discussion focuses on the normative part of the dynamic. That is, although I fully recognize that we must move on both “legs” to proceed, currently the prevailing normative paradigms are particularly lagging behind the new international reality and hence warrant special attention. Also, I focus on the normative rather than the legal because I have no legal training and approach the subject of terrorism as a sociologist, social philosopher, and one who knows of combat first hand. Hence, that the expected review of the legal literature is not provided should not be viewed as a lack of respect for the work of legal scholars on these issues, but as an acknowledgment of my limitations.

<sup>104</sup> I very much resonate with indigenous psychologist Louise Sundararajan when she uses the image of painting. She suggests that emotions have to be described with a “gentle paint brush, rather than to nail discreet emotions down, if there is such a thing, with codified labels and categorizations,” Sundararajan, 2015, p. 75. Sundararajan speaks about Chinese emotions in this quote, however, I would suggest that this approach is recommendable for social sciences in general.

I also appreciate this description of critical and post-structural inquiry given in “Thinking Critically About Critical Thinking: Whose Thinking, Whose Benefits?” by Hank Stam, professor of psychology at University of Calgary, for the Day in Qualitative Psychology, the opening meeting of the Special Interest Group (SIG) in Critical and Poststructural Psychology at the International Congress of Qualitative Inquiry, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Wednesday, May 17, 2017, <http://icqi.org/pre-congress-days/a-day-in-qualitative-psychology/>:

We see poststructural inquiries as moving away from attempts to provide realistic, universal, and fixed representations and from referents and answers that are not situated in historical, political, and cultural positions. In underscoring the close link between knowledge and power, and the (im)possibilities of representation, poststructural forms of inquiry explore, participate in, and deconstruct experiences and meanings as part of discursive frames, linguistic practices, and relational realities. Knowledges become non-linear, fluid, and liminal between fields and disciplines, and outside of them. Rather than finding finite answers, inquiries open up possibilities, questions, and multiplicity, with an eye toward issues and constructions of social justice, inequality, and emancipation. Aware of the political and agentic situatedness of every form of inquiry, critical researchers seek to achieve equality and/or foster resistance, usually through collaborative and mutual approaches to an identified social issue and the knowledge/practice that may be developed or performed for its amelioration. Research is transformed into a diffractive and political practice that contributes to the empowerment of participants and to their resistance against institutionalized and hierarchical knowledge.

See also the description of the purpose and history of the Coalition for Critical Qualitative Inquiry (CCQI) Special Interest Group (SIG), <http://icqi.org/pre-congress-days/critical-qualitative-inquiry/>:

For some time, researchers engaging in critical qualitative scholarship have called for the construction of a critical social science that challenges disciplinary boundaries and rethinks research as construct and practice. To some extent, the broad expanse of qualitative research as a field has accomplished this reconceptualization, especially with the extensive work of feminist, postcolonial, and poststructural scholars (to name just a few of the epistemological perspectives that address issues of power and equity). However, the contemporary imposition of neoliberal forms of knowledge and practice broadly, but especially within higher education, is an immediate threat to qualitative research of all types, and most importantly, to a construction of higher education that would facilitate diverse ways of being and challenge social and environmental injustice and oppression in any form. From within this neoliberal condition, critical work is of utmost importance. Additionally, as critical perspectives have brought to the forefront the anthropocentrism that dominates research, those concerned with the “more-than-human” hope to challenge all forms of injustice. The main purpose of the Critical Qualitative Inquiry SIG within ICQI is to construct a Coalition of individuals from a range of fields who systematically work together to:

- Expand visibility for existing critical work, as well as newly emerging, post-human inquiry (e.g. feminisms, subaltern studies, queer theory, critical pedagogy, counter colonial critique, new materialisms, post-anthropocentric inquiry);
- Increase and maintain critical qualitative inquiry as an avenue for equity and social justice across, outside, and challenges to, disciplines;
- Construct new diverse forms of critical qualitative inquiry, related forms of activism, and innovative methods for sharing that work; and
- Systematically support critical qualitative scholars in the changing climate that is higher education, especially under contemporary neoliberal conditions that include the privileging of academic conservatism.

<sup>105</sup> Derrida, 1982.

<sup>106</sup> I had the privilege of meeting Kichiro Hayashi, professor emeritus of Aoyama Gakuin University, Tokyo, at the 20th Annual Conference of SIETAR Japan, June 25–26, 2005, at Rikkyo University in Tokyo. I thank Adair Linn Nagata for inviting me to that conference. The title of Hayashi’s contribution was “Management by dialogue (not by objective)!” He explained that it can create immense creativity to bring together people with very different styles and ask them NOT to compromise. When mutual contradictory and equally compelling stances clash, this can lead to new insights.

Analogue high-context communication and value as in Japan tends to lead to organic organizations, while digital low-context communication and value leads to mechanistic organizations like in the West. Analogue and digital perception and communication, according to Hayashi, are zero-order beliefs or mental models (akin to related concepts, such as life-worlds, scripts, Husserl’s concept of horizon, or Bachnik’s of tacit meaning). A Japanese manager will always need more information because he wants to understand a situation like a holistic painting; he will, however, not be aware why he always asks for more information. See Agi and Hayashi, 2007, Hayashi, 2003. See also Noma and Crossman, 2012.

<sup>107</sup> Dewey, 1931, p. 220.

<sup>108</sup> The Norwegian philosopher Arne Næss developed the notion of the “depth of intention,” the “depth of questioning” or “deepness of answers.” Greater depth means continuing to ask questions at the point at which others stop asking. Næss writes “our depth of intention improves only slowly over years of study. There is an abyss of depth in everything fundamental,” Næss, 1978, p. 143. Warwick Fox, in his paper “Intellectual Origins of the ‘Depth’ Theme in the Philosophy of Arne Næss,” explains:

The extent to which a person discriminates along a chain of precizations (and, therefore, in a particular direction of interpretation) is a measure of their depth of intention, that is, the depth to which that person can claim to have understood the intended meaning of the expression,” Fox, 2000, p. 5. See also Fox, 1992.

Arne Næss was a pillar of the Foundational Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies at the Maison des Sciences de l’Homme de l’Homme in Paris in September 12–13, 2003, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/02.php. Arne Næss was a highly esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>109</sup> Maggie MacLure, 2015, p. 8. MacLure points at Bruno Latour, 2004, who decries “the impotence of rational argument and social constructivism to halt manifestly disastrous events and policies, or even to distinguish their own moral authority from that of cranks and conspiracy theorists,” MacLure, 2015, p. 9:

Latour mounts a particularly savage attack on the futile bravado of explanation as an attempt to produce change by telling others what is really going on.

<sup>110</sup> See Belenky, et al., 1997a, Belenky, et al., 1997b, Clinchy, 1996. In connected knowing “one attempts to enter another person’s frame of reference to discover the premises for the person’s point of view,” explain Clinchy and Zimmerman, 1985. See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>111</sup> Listening into voice is an expression coined by Linda Hartling and explained as follows in a personal communication on June 4, 2009:

The expression “listening into voice” draws our attention to the fact that human communication is a bi-directional experience. It is a phrase that encourages us to attune to the fundamental relational nature of speaking. It reminds us to look beyond the individualist myth that speaking is a one-way experience in which the speaker is solely responsible for communicating effectively. Speaking is interactive. It is a two-way experience in which both (or all) people participating in the relationship can choose to listen and engage in a way that will help others to effectively express and clarify their ideas.

<sup>112</sup> Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies (HumanDHS), www.humiliationstudies.org.

<sup>113</sup> Billig, 2013. Michael Billig’s witty and entertaining book pinpoints what is going wrong with the way social scientists write. Using examples from diverse fields such as linguistics, sociology and experimental social psychology, Billig shows how technical terminology is regularly less precise than simpler language. He demonstrates that there are linguistic problems with the noun-based terminology that social scientists habitually use – “reification” or “nominalization” rather than the corresponding verbs “reify” or “nominalize.” According to Billig, social scientists not only use their terminology to exaggerate and to conceal, but also to promote themselves and their work.

<sup>114</sup> The Neuroscience of Compassion, by Tania Singer, presentation given at the 2015 annual meeting of the World Economic Forum, with the theme “new global context,” held in Davos, January, 21–24, 2015, published on March 9, 2015, <https://youtu.be/n-hKS4rucTY>, see also www.weforum.org. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this video. In this presentation, Tania Singer explains that her aim is to improve global cooperation and to see how we can become better global citizens. Singer regards the training of perspective-taking as crucially important in a globalizing world, as it would improve conflict resolution skills and help to better understand out-groups, other cultures, and other religions.

<sup>115</sup> Holbrook, et al., 2015. This research shows that the experience of threat increases ideological responses. Innovative experiments using transcranial magnetic stimulation, a method to incapacitate specific regions of the brain temporarily, appear to show that both belief in God and prejudice towards immigrants can be reduced by directing magnetic energy into the brain, in this case, the posterior medial frontal cortex, a part of the brain associated with detecting problems and triggering responses.

See also “Research that Is Simply Beyond Belief,” by Alistair Keely, University of York, October 14, 2015, www.york.ac.uk/news-and-events/news/2015/research/psychologist-brian-magnetic/:

Dr Colin Holbrook, from UCLA and the lead author of the paper, added: “These findings are very striking, and consistent with the idea that brain mechanisms that evolved for relatively basic threat-response functions are repurposed to also produce ideological reactions. However, more research is needed to understand exactly how and why religious beliefs and ethnocentric attitudes were reduced in this experiment.” The scientists say that whether we’re trying to clamber over a fallen tree that we find in our path, find solace in religion, or resolve issues related to immigration, our brains are using the same basic mental machinery.

<sup>116</sup> The formulation “waging good conflict” was coined by Jean Baker Miller, 1976/1986.

<sup>117</sup> Psychologist Carol Dweck, 1999, found that the challenges of life can be approached with an ego-oriented performance orientation or a task-oriented learning-mastery orientation, or as Linda Hartling would express it, a fixed mindset versus a growth mindset. Those with an ego orientation entertain an implicit entity theory of intelligence, they regard intelligence as fixed and try to look smart and avoid mistakes. Others think that intelligence is malleable, they adhere to an incremental theory of intelligence, and have an intrinsic motivation to achieve mastery in a task, desire to learn new things, even if they might get confused, make mistakes, and not look smart. Students with mastery goals are basically more successful. See also Dweck, 2007.

Psychologist David Yeager, et al., 2013, examined how holding a fixed mindset versus a growth mindset can influence interpretations of other people’s hostile intent. In a meta-analytic study of eight independent samples that included 1,128 students, Yeager and his colleagues found that a fixed mindset predicted hostile attributions equally for males and females, and for students from communities with higher and lower levels of violence. “In a following study, Yeager found that by experimentally changing implicit theories to a more incremental growth mindset substantially reduced attributions of hostile intent in both urban and suburban schools. In a final study, Yeager found that a short-term intervention (two class sessions) could result in more benign intent attributions over an eight-month school year,” in Hartling and Lindner, forthcoming.

<sup>118</sup> Even after having been kidnapped in Syria, journalist Nicolas Hénin, 2015, calls for radical respect. It is interesting to see that the German translation of his book highlights his critical view on the role of the West in its title (Der IS und die Fehler des Westens: Warum wir den Terror militärisch nicht besiegen können), while the English translation does not (Jihad Academy: The Rise of Islamic State).

<sup>119</sup> Alex P. Schmid, 2013, p. 1:

The popularity of the concept of “radicalization” stands in no direct relationship to its actual explanatory power regarding the root causes of terrorism. It was brought into the academic discussion after the bomb attacks in Madrid and London in 2004 and 2005 by European policymakers who coined the term “violent radicalization.” It has become a political shibboleth despite its lack of precision.

See also The Routledge Handbook of Terrorism Research that Alex Schmid edited, Schmid, 2011. See, furthermore, Hansen, 2012, who found that the radical rhetoric among people in Pakistan, was not accompanied by a desire for extremist action. David Hansen holds a Ph.D. in South Asian Studies from the University of Oslo in Norway, and foresees that the terror threat from the Taliban will get people to acknowledge that the Taliban’s version of Islam is not theirs.

<sup>120</sup> “Religious Fundamentalism-Extremism-Violence,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 8, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/02/religious-fundamentalism-extremism-violence/:

To navigate these difficult conceptual waters we need some rules. Here are three suggestions (the violence can be direct—as sometimes prescribed by the Abrahamic religions—or structural as by Hinduism):

- Anchor “religious fundamentalism” in religious scriptures taken literally according to the fundamentalists, not as “interpreted”
- Anchor “extremism” in violent action, verbal or physical
- Anchor “religious extremism” in violent action justified-legitimized by religious scriptures, by fundamentalists or not.

Fundamentalism has to do with inner faith, belief. Extremism has to do with outer violence against Other, and against Self (like flagellation for being a sinner). Keep them separate. And be careful.

We can have fundamentalism without extremism. The fundamentalist may believe much, beyond the beliefs of others, yet not cross the border to violence. We may say: let him-her do so; it is not obvious that fundamentalists are more violent than non-fundamentalists.

We can have extremism without fundamentalism. Most people exercising violence believe in nothing, beyond “doing their job.”

There are two criteria for “religious extremism”: violence and religious legitimation. That legitimation may be fundamentalist or not; could also be well-known quotes from the Scriptures. We might even speculate that for the fundamentalist faith may be sufficient.

The combination in “religious extremism” is vicious if it implies that violence will be supported by divine forces and/or that failure to be violent will incur their wrath. Probably a declining category.

Today’s secularizing, “enlightened” world brought us statism, nationalism, and their combination; secular fundamentalists and extremists, and their combination. They have given the world more violence for victory for whatever cause they design than religions. But with a rationality that may open for solving underlying conflicts.

...

Secular fundamentalism means strong attachment to one side in the one fault line seen as fundamental: with this issue (gender, race, class, nation, state) solved, the others will follow automatically!

Secular extremism, fundamentalist or not, uses violence against the Other in gender, race, class, nation, state; if fundamentalist for the salvation of humanity, with paradise on earth around the corner.

<sup>121</sup> See the influence of botanist Joseph Banks (1743 – 1820), who took part in Captain James Cook’s first voyage (1768 – 1771). He was a major supporter of the internationalist nature of science, science for its own sake, in contrast to science being subjugated to the competition for profit.

<sup>122</sup> See Foucault, 1957b, and Foucault, 1957a. I thank Howard Richards for reminding us of this part of Foucault’s work in Lecture Two of Beyond Foucault: The Rise of Indigenous Subjugated Knowledges, by Howard Richards in Pretoria, South Africa, May 4, 2013, <http://youtu.be/IcIlckWWE1Y>. See for more Richards, et al., 2015a. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>123</sup> Lecture Two of Beyond Foucault: The Rise of Indigenous Subjugated Knowledges, by Howard Richards in Pretoria, South Africa, May 4, 2013, <http://youtu.be/IcIlckWWE1Y>. See for more Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>124</sup> “Failure to Replicate: Crisis or Chrysalis for Psychological Science?” by Lisa M. Osbeck, submitted to the APA Annual Convention in Denver, August 4–7, 2016, with a Cross-Divisional symposium devoted to the replication crisis in psychology. See Open Science Collaboration (OSC), 2015. Here is Osbeck's summary:

We analyze the meaning of psychology's replication crisis in the context of the broader project of scientific advancement. The metaphor of the chrysalis suggests something that may appear initially as a barrier or constraint, yet from a broader perspective is essential to development. Situating the "crisis" in the history of philosophy of science, we interpret the "new instrument" of scientific method as at base a set of practices for generalizing from experience in the face of variation and human fallibility. The principal tool is a procedure of meticulous comparison, with the corresponding rule to generalize cautiously and give equal attention to counter-instances. We argue that such comparative analysis applies to all empirical research, though the sources of variation and fallibility are extremely complex in human science. We suggest that failure to replicate experimental results is analogous to a counter-instance variation, one to be taken up and analyzed through comparison within the overall inductive project of the science. Therefore replication problems in psychology must be understood within the context of the role of "failure" in science more generally. Through comparative analysis of our own, we demonstrate how the fallibility inherent in empirical research renders it fundamentally different from the formal sciences of mathematics, geometry, and logic, in which certainty and perfect replication are achieved. Moreover, empirical replication failure functions not only to check or constrain generalization but enables discovery and facilitates new insights, which we illustrate with a case example from an ethnographic study of laboratory research.

<sup>125</sup> Psychologists Jeroen Jansz and Peter van Drunen formulate three basic assumptions that constitute the "positivist view" of psychology: (a) Practical psychology is believed to rest on scientific knowledge developed within academic psychology, (b) this knowledge is further thought to be progressive and value-free, and (c) the application of this psychological knowledge is generally perceived as being beneficial for society and humankind. The opposite view, "the revisionist view," holds three different basic assumptions: (a) Practical psychology originates from societal forces rather than from academic psychology, (b) psychological knowledge does not necessarily imply progress and is never value-free, and (c) psychology often represses or conceals society's real conflicts. Jansz and van Drunen emphasize "that the positivist view," far from being a correct reflection of the history of psychology, "is first and foremost an article of faith, since psychology's utility and role in society has been oppressive just as often as it has fostered social progress," Jansz and Drunen, 2004, as quoted in Madsen, 2014b. See also Lindner, 2001f.

<sup>126</sup> Open Science Collaboration (OSC), 2015.

<sup>127</sup> See, for example, Lindner, 2001f. See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>128</sup> See for the conferences of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php.

<sup>129</sup> Robert Elliot Pollack, Ph.D., is a biology professor at the Department of Biological Sciences, and director of the Center for the Study of Science and Religion at Columbia University. I had the privilege of meeting him, for the first time, in 2004.

<sup>130</sup> Robert Pollack, 1999, explains how the human brain continually filters the present through memories and emotions of the past. It takes the brain a second to process perceptions, and, therefore, what we think is the present actually happened a second ago. In addition, painful memories are being repressed. As a result, even the most rational is permeated with unconscious feelings, fears, and emotions. "Thus the direction of scientific research is driven by private demons, not public needs... Today science can do more good than ever before, and it can also do more harm. The time has come for scientists and others to abandon the notion that there is any such thing as the disinterested pursuit of truth. Instead, they must strive for a therapeutic self-awareness of their unconscious agendas and work for larger goals than personal immortality," see the book cover of Pollack, 1999. See also Lindner, 2009a.

<sup>131</sup> Ibid.

<sup>132</sup> "For Thanksgiving: What We Have to Do With 'Twelve Years a Slave,' the Movie," by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, November 26, 2013, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/for-thanksgiving-what-we-\_b\_4344576.html:

Jung said the Holocaust could happen anywhere, and he suggested that America might be a particularly vulnerable location for another since the United States were so very much into the positive which lacked a deeper appreciation of the darker parts of our own history. We have them, and as he stated then, slavery was a big part of not only history but of the legacy which we would do well to deal with. In other words, he found America particularly lacking in the capacity to admit wrong and to find ways of dealing with the healing effects of apology and reparations.

Carol Smaldino is an esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>133</sup> Cristina Escrigas, 2016, describes this trend most cogently.

<sup>134</sup> Journalist James Risen, 2014, observed: "We have had a national security crisis... The secrecy that's layered on top of the war on terror – many people were able to come to Washington, claim to be an expert on counterterrorism, and gotten very rich.” Risen was interviewed by Jon Stewart, November 6, 2014, <http://thedailyshow.cc.com/extended-interviews/3evsva/james-risen-extended-interview>. See also Silke and Schmidt-Petersen, 2015.

After the medical profession in the United States, and its psychiatrists had refused to participate, two psychologists provided legitimacy to methods that amounted to torture, based on the “scientific” use of humiliation, that they developed and monitored against a payment of $ 81 million. See the CIA report submitted by the United States Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, 2014.

See also “In the Darkness of Dick Cheney,” by Mark Danner, The New York Review of Books, March 6, 2014, www.nybooks.com/articles/archives/2014/mar/06/darkness-dick-cheney/, where Danner reviews The World According to Dick Cheney, a film directed by R. J. Cutler and Greg Finton, In My Time: A Personal and Political Memoir, by Dick Cheney, with Liz Cheney, and Heart: An American Medical Odyssey, by Dick Cheney and Jonathan Reiner, MD, with Liz Cheney.

Mark Danner is staff writer at the New Yorker and professor at Berkeley, and he pinpoints Watergate as the once in a lifetime opportunity “offered by the resignation of one president and the humbling of his successor.” Danner explains: “At close range Cheney, still in his early thirties, had seen the secret organs of executive power, notably the CIA, exposed to the light, humiliated, leashed. If it was true that ‘after 9/11, the gloves came off,’ Cheney, as a young and unlikely power in the Nixon and Ford White Houses, had had a front-row seat to observe the methods by which Congress first put those gloves on.”

<sup>135</sup> “Instead of Bombing IS (Part B),” by Jan Øberg, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF) PressInfo # 281, October 7, 2014, <http://blog.transnational.org/2014/10/tff-pressinfo-282-instead-of-bombing-isis-concrete-proposals-part-b/>. It is a privilege to have Jan Øberg as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

See also Stiglitz and Bilmes, 2008, and “Post-9/11 Wars Have Cost Nearly $5 Trillion (and Counting): Report,” by Nadia Prupis, Common Dreams, September 13, 2016, www.commondreams.org/news/2016/09/13/post-911-wars-have-cost-nearly-5-trillion-and-counting-report.

<sup>136</sup> I forego full-time employment, for instance, as a professor at a national university, as this would lock me into a national interest context. This book is being supported by the independent Non-Fiction Writers and Translators Organisation in Norway by a seven-months stipend given in 2011.

<sup>137</sup> Evelin Lindner’s personal reflections, written down on October 16, 2013:

Particularly after I was given the privilege of a higher education, I wished to have a salary, pay taxes, give to charity, have children, and thus contribute constructively and responsibly to society. Like most people, I thought social and societal responsibility means to be part of the work force, make a decent living, raise a family, and contribute to the common good – in the United States of America this goal would be satisfied through philanthropy, while in Europe the duty of paying taxes has a higher moral standing.

Yet, there was a problem. What if being part of the work force also contributes to the plundering of the resources of our planet? Being part of the work force can be both constructive and destructive.

Like the child who sees the emperor naked and can’t suppress saying so any longer, I eventually had no choice but to deconstruct what it means to “constructively” contribute to society. I was pushed, despite of myself, and could no longer accept the dissonance that occurs when one wishes to be respected within a system one feels is failing. I observe many who expect the system that surrounds us to provide them with standing and reason for self-respect, while being fully aware that it systemically undermines social and ecological sustainability. Staying in the role of the lamenter, however, is like remaining in the adolescent position of yearning for the accept of their parents, of parents of whose life concept one is critical. Lamenting means wishing the parents would see the light and recognize their children, instead of growing up and developing an alternative life concept (Lindner, 2006b).

State officials, those employed by the state, live off society, live off tax payers’ contributions, so as to serve society, to keep the system functioning as it is. What if the system needs to be changed? What if the system does not offer appropriate and sufficient channels to change it from within? Then those who have the strength and vision, need to step outside so as to inspire change from outside.

In other words, there are two forms of refraining from being complicit with an unsustainable system, first, one can drop out in order to evade responsibility, or, second, one can drop into the future, to shoulder more responsibility than can be shouldered from within the existing system. Simply retreating from a harmful system into “private life,” seeking private happiness, would not be an optimal option, not least since nobody can escape the overall frame, at least not in the long term. My parents’ fate shows me how all people lost their homeland, including those who were unpolitical. By resisting, one loses only one’s possessions, however, keeps one’s dignity intact.

Imagine, you are living in Nazi Germany, or you live in South Africa under apartheid: What are your choices if you wish to be a responsible member of society? The situation is similar today, when systemic frames push for de-solidarization, between people and between people and their ecological foundation.

My parents feel as alienated by the market economy as they felt under Adolf Hitler. My father has a rural background, my mother an urban background. All around the world, I observe that a traditional rural background has the potential to offer a kind of strength that an urban background cannot. A rural background, if it provides closeness to animals and nature, has the potential to engender a deeper embeddedness into life than urban alienation ever can. I see people with an urban background expecting to be paid a salary by “Hitler” so to speak, for resisting him, more than rural people do, perhaps because the urban mental map has narrowed down the path toward obtaining respect only through paid work. Of course, this is only a rough generalization with many exceptions; proud Somali warriors, for instance, rural or not, will feel humiliated if not offered a position in an office at a desk (Lindner, 2000c).

Aside from this, any stepping out will be frowned upon by those who want to support the system, frowned upon as parasitic, as traitorousness, even as terrorist. Nelson Mandela, for instance, lived off the system when he had to be fed in prison by society, he was a burden on society, and neglected being the bread winner for his family. Should he have taken care of his family by adapting to apartheid?

Clearly, also families become divided. Those who resisted were often hated within their own families. Families might hand over their own family members to be punished for being what authorities call enemies-from-within, traitors, terrorists or deranged people.

In my case, I invite support from humanity at large for my efforts to contribute to systemic change (not anonymous crowdsourcing, but support in the spirit of a gift economy). I do so because I know that one cannot expect being paid by “Hitler” for resisting Hitler. One cannot change a systemic paradigm when one uses all one’s time and energy to support it just to appear responsible. Responsible behavior within an irresponsible system risks being irresponsible.

I am extremely responsible, and I pay to society and have children in many innovative ways. For instance, I donate the salary I could earn, I invest the privileges I was born into or had the opportunity to acquire, I renounce enjoying the trappings of the system that are open to me, and I do so with the aim to help build a global family of many “children” all around the world. I place the long-term interest of humankind above my personal short-term interest of wishing to be respected within the existing system, of wishing to enjoy its privileges for myself.

What I miss within the existing systemic frames is the vantage point of humankind as a whole and our interest to offer our children a decent future on an intact planet. Organizations such as Amnesty International or Medicine Sans Frontières come close. I am an “independent scholar.” When the system cannot create enough change from within, one has to build an alternative global alliance.

I deeply resonate with the poem that Linda Hartling shared with us, the poem Outwitted by Oregon poet laureate Edwin Markham (1852 – 1940):

He drew a circle that shut me out –
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win:
We drew a circle that took him in!

<sup>138</sup> Allow me to quote from a letter I wrote to Linda Hartling on October 24, 2013:

...Human rights ideals of equality in dignity are so important, in my view, that they ought to be first on the to-do list of every person on our planet, given the short time-frame we have to bring this transition about. It should not be seen as a hobby, or even as a job. It should be at the core of everybody’s life mission. It should define everybody’s life. As the transition from gathering and hunting towards agriculture was a transition that encompassed all segments of human life, human rights ideals demand the same from us now. Nelson Mandela is a good model, he gave his entire life, as does Aung San Suu Kyi in Myanmar, and many others whose names are less well-known.

But what do we see? We see people treating these ideals as a dispensable post on their to-do list, at the end of everything else.

The best starting point have those people who have the privilege of being paid for doing human rights work, paid by the world community, for instance, in the context of the United Nations. Through this support, they gather global knowledge and insight that few other people can gain, knowledge that should inform the rest of their lives, both while working with the UN, and after retirement. However, what do I observe? Some people in the UN regard their work simply as a job, they regard it as a way to gaining privileges, a source to attain or maintain superiority – I know people who maintain their traditional aristocratic sense of superiority in this way, a “Brahmin” sense of higher being so to speak. In other words, in their work life, they are supposed to stand for equality in dignity, however, they use this very work life to manifest the opposite in their personal lives, namely, inequality. The fact that they are being paid for going out into the world to bring about equality in dignity, and that this is a job, appears to mislead them into believing that when the job ends, also their ideals end and their mission end. Clearly, they have not understood their job at all. Very few people are in a similarly privileged position as they are, who else can bring the message of equality in dignity into the world as well as they can? How come that so many simply enjoy their privileges after work or in retirement, and do not see their responsibility? They think they have “done their job” and now they are “free.” However, they should not retire from their ideals of equality in dignity, they should not retire from their awareness that equality in dignity is lacking in the world, they should not retire from the knowledge they have accumulated that can help humankind correct its path, who else are they waiting for! They should not downgrade equal dignity from “job” to “hobby,” they should upgrade it to let it define their entire life! As you notice, dear Linda, I get impatient with people like them, particularly those who are highly enlightened, brilliant, privileged, full of ideals, knowledge and insights, if they do not understand their responsibility... Here are human rights defenders like Mandela, who give their lives, and then there are those who simply eat the privileges they were offered, failing to understand that being paid and pampered within a system such as the UN was given to them to do something with it, not for them to simply feel entitled to consume it. In that way, through their passivity, they give tacit support to failing systems, while having all the resources to do otherwise. There are few people as well prepared as such international workers, and therefore few groups seem to me to be as irresponsible if they squander their privileges by using them for themselves rather than for the common good.

I am even more sad when I see a meek civil servant mentality take over even those who have Paulo Freire's critical consciousness, who can describe all the failings of the global and local systems that surround them, yet, who fail to develop Clodomir de Moraes' organizational consciousness that a Mandela developed. In organizations such as the UN, we have civil servants who know when the systems they serve violates their own professed goals, and still, there are those who give priority to obedience. I see this happen, while the system now increasingly fails not just the common good at large, but also their own civil servants, insofar as precarious work conditions are increasingly being offered also in organizations such as the UN. Here they remain, lamenting, wishing to be respected members in a system that does not respect them. In all these cases, I want to call out: Would you have expected Adolf Hitler or the apartheid regime to pay a salary to you, the opponent? Would you have drawn your self-respect from being paid by Hitler or the apartheid regime, had you been an opponent? One cannot expect being paid by Hitler for resisting Hitler.

<sup>139</sup> See reflections on excluded knowledges in the dialogue that Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and Lindner conducted after Richards' Lecture Two of Beyond Foucault: The Rise of Indigenous Subjugated Knowledges, given in Pretoria, South Africa, May 4, 2013, <http://youtu.be/IcIlckWWE1Y>, and <http://youtu.be/emYEFqgTOoE>:

Catherine Odora Hoppers: ...Foucault's genealogies rewrite the past from the point of view of excluded knowledges. In Heidegger's terms this would mean adopting the way of being-in-the-world of the excluded. I would call it a "metaphysical" methodology."

Howard Richards: ... "metaphysical" in the sense in which Roy Bhaskar reclaims that much-abused word, in the sense that every culture has a metaphysics because it has its characteristic categories of thought...

Catherine Odora Hoppers: ...a methodology that moves back and forth between the mental models or categories of one culture and those of another culture.

See for more Richards, et al., 2015a. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>140</sup> Ross, 1995. It was a privilege to have Lee Ross as my doctoral advisor, and later as esteemed member of the first hour in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>141</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. iv. See also "'Stand up for Someone's Rights Today,' UN Urges on Human Rights Day," United Nations News Centre, December 9, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=55769#.WFAsm32OWgy, for warnings by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights: "And in this toxic tide of hatred which is slowly rising in many societies, some of the deepest, most essential principles which safeguard peaceful societies risk being swept away. We need to stop this. And I believe we can. We – you and I – can draw the line."

<sup>142</sup> "The Poisoned Poor" was the title of a panel discussion in 2015 at the United Nations in New York. On behalf of the governments of Sweden and Uruguay, and in collaboration with United Nations Environment Programme, the Secretariat of the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm Conventions and the Global Alliance on Health and Pollution, invited to an Interactive Panel Discussion "The Poisoned Poor: Why Safe Management of Chemicals and Wastes Matters for Sustainable Development," in the UN Headquarters, New York, on March 24, 2015. "The poisoned poor" is also what I meet around the world. The wealthy have means to protect themselves both against poison, and against becoming aware that they thrive because the poor are being poisoned.

<sup>143</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 50.

<sup>144</sup> Neumann, 2010.

<sup>145</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 39.

<sup>146</sup> Freire, 1968/1970, 1968/1973, and Moraes, 1979, 1983. See Andersson and Richards, 2013, Chapter IV, p. 15, of the unpublished manuscript:

De Moraes, in contradistinction to Freire, sets forward not two but three levels of awareness. He adds to Freire's two, which are: the naïve level and the critical level. The third is the organizational level of awareness. At the naïve level a person is aware of problems but is unable to understand their cause (and so may blame God or the Fates).

The critically conscious person is able to identify the factors responsible for problems, and their inter-relationship. Organizational awareness is reached when the person has the ability to act together with others to address a problem or attain particular results. Organizational awareness manifests what de Moraes calls a “methodological rationality.”

<sup>147</sup> Fanon, 1952/1967, 1961/1963.

<sup>148</sup> See also Slavoj Žižek, 2012, and his message that an emancipatory project needs to resist any smooth reconciliation and dare to look into the face of all what is lacking. In my language, this would mean not to flee from feelings of humiliation, or train “resilience,” but to embrace these feelings to turn their energy into constructive action.

<sup>149</sup> Space Exploration – A Powerful Symbol of Global Cooperation, Jim Zimmerman, NASA, interviewed by Susan T. Coleman, The Peacebuilding Podcast, December 13, 2016, <http://us11.campaign-archive1.com/?u=e5c2110f5cc4fe346c79bf3d1&id=06298a46ca&e=7c4dd8362>. I thank Judit Révész for making me aware of this interview.

<sup>150</sup> In 2017, the scientists in charge of the Doomsday Clock set the clock at just two and a half minutes from the apocalypse, considering that the Earth is now closer to oblivion than it has ever been since 1953, at the height of the nuclear confrontation between the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union. See <http://thebulletin.org/timeline>. See also the William J. Perry Project (www.wjperryproject.org) that was created by the former U.S. secretary of defense to work toward a world in which nuclear weapons are never used again.

<sup>151</sup> Becker, 2016.

<sup>152</sup> Researchers Jennifer Doudna and Emmanuelle Charpentier independently explored the CRISPR/Cas system in bacteria to learn how bacteria create their immune defenses. This system can now be used by scientists to edit genomes in ways that are much faster and easier to achieve than before. This new technology is being called a “game changer” in the field. It “democratizes” the field because it makes genome editing accessible to many more people than before. The U.S. Intelligence director James Clapper warns that this new technology can be used as a biological weapon of mass destruction: “Statement for the Record: Worldwide Threat Assessment of the US Intelligence Community, Senate Armed Services Committee,” by James R. Clapper, director of National Intelligence February 9, 2016, www.dni.gov/files/documents/SASC\_Unclassified\_2016\_ATA\_SFR\_FINAL.pdf, p. 9:

Genome Editing: Research in genome editing conducted by countries with different regulatory or ethical standards than those of Western countries probably increases the risk of the creation of potentially harmful biological agents or products. Given the broad distribution, low cost, and accelerated pace of development of this dual-use technology, its deliberate or unintentional misuse might lead to far-reaching economic and national security implications. Advances in genome editing in 2015 have compelled groups of high-profile US and European biologists to question unregulated editing of the human germline (cells that are relevant for reproduction), which might create inheritable genetic changes. Nevertheless, researchers will probably continue to encounter challenges to achieve the desired outcome of their genome modifications, in part because of the technical limitations that are inherent in available genome editing systems.

The U.S. Intelligence Community is a coalition of 17 agencies and organizations, including the ODNI, within the Executive Branch that work both independently and collaboratively to gather and analyze the intelligence necessary to conduct foreign relations and national security activities.

See also “Biodiversity, GMOs, Gene Drives and the Militarised Mind,” by Vandana Shiva, TRANSCEND MEDIA Services, July 11, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/07/biodiversity-gmos-gene-drives-and-the-militarised-mind/, where physicist, ecofeminist, philosopher, and activist Vandana Shiva warns that not only terrorists can use the CRISPR/Cas technology for destruction:

The right to food and nutrition of the people outside the US... can be extinguished by powerful men in the US because they messed up their agriculture with Roundup Ready crops, and now want to mess up the planet, its biodiversity, and food and agriculture systems of the world with the tool of gene drives to push species to extinction.

<sup>153</sup> See the Geneva Conference on Preventing Violent Extremism – The Way Forward, April 7–8, 2016, Palais des Nations, Geneva, Switzerland, www.un.org/counterterrorism/ctitf/en/geneva-conference-preventing-violent-extremism, and its “Plan of Action to Prevent Violent Extremism,” Seventieth session, Agenda items 16 and 117, Culture of peace, The United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, Report of the Secretary-General, www.un.org/en/ga/search/view\_doc.asp?symbol=A/70/674&referer=/english/&Lang=E, p. 22:

Undermining our common humanity, violent extremism is inherently global. It is driven by a mixture of personal, societal and ideational factors whose manifestations vary from one individual to the next. Violent extremism has affected different societies during different eras and in different regions of the world. The present plan of action does not provide a single solution to this challenge – there is no one tool or approach that will put it to rest forever. Instead, we need to broaden the way we think about this threat and take measures to prevent it from proliferating. What is most alarming in the present context is the rapid expansion of violent extremist ideologies in different parts of the world, which is being facilitated by the technological revolution. In the true spirit of the Charter of the United Nations, we must take action now in order to save succeeding generations.

<sup>154</sup> Ury, 1999, p. xvii. I thank William Ury for his support since I first met him in 1999. I had the privilege of participating in the launch of the Coexistence Initiative in Belfast in 1999.

<sup>155</sup> “Gorgeous Glimpses of Calamity,” by Michael Benson, New York Times, August 16, 2013, www.nytimes.com/2013/08/18/opinion/sunday/gorgeous-glimpses-of-calamity.html?\_r=0. Michael Benson is a photographer and filmmaker. See also Benson, 2012.

<sup>156</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>157</sup> “The Degrowth Alternative,” by Giorgos Kallis, The Great Transition Initiative, www.greattransition.org/publication/the-degrowth-alternative. See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

<sup>158</sup> Bauman, 2000.

<sup>159</sup> “The Charitable-Industrial Complex,” by Peter Buffett, son of investor Warren Buffett, New York Times, July 26, 2013, www.nytimes.com/2013/07/27/opinion/the-charitable-industrial-complex.html?hpw&\_r=0. Nigerian-American writer Teju Cole has been credited with coining the term White-Savior Industrial Complex. He calls on “innocent heroes” who wish to be helpers, to understand that they may “play a useful role for people who have much more cynical motives”: “The White Savior Industrial Complex is a valve for releasing the unbearable pressures that build in a system built on pillage. We can participate in the economic destruction of Haiti over long years, but when the earthquake strikes it feels good to send $10 each to the rescue fund. I have no opposition, in principle, to such donations (I frequently make them myself), but we must do such things only with awareness of what else is involved. If we are going to interfere in the lives of others, a little due diligence is a minimum requirement,” see “The White-Savior Industrial Complex,” by Teju Cole, The Atlantic, March 21, 2012, www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2012/03/the-white-savior-industrial-complex/254843/. See also Fontan, 2012, and Lindner, 2010b.

For the topic of conservation, see “A Challenge to Conservationists: Can We Protect Natural Habitats Without Abusing the People Who Live in Them?,” by Mac Chapin, World Watch Magazine, November/December 2004, Volume 17, Number 6, www.worldwatch.org/epublish/1/102. See also “The Indigenous ‘People of Wildlife’ Know How to Protect Nature,” by Baher Kamal, Inter Press Service (IPS), March 10 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/03/the-indigenous-people-of-wildlife-know-how-to-protect-nature/.

<sup>160</sup> Michael Britton in a personal communication on June 16, 2013.

<sup>161</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>162</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>163</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

Others use a slightly different terminology, for instance, Johan Galtung, 1976, when he speaks of actor, system, and structure, where the actors may be persons, districts, nations or regions, and a system is a certain sector of social life, such as work, education, economic transactions, family life, while a structure ties several systems together, meaning that actors interact with each other in more than one context: a society is a structure that is self-sufficient and can survive even if cut off from the rest.

<sup>164</sup> “The Rational Optimist,” review by Samuel Brittan, The Financial Times, June 12, 2010, www.ft.com/intl/cms/s/2/b2cbb506-74de-11d1-aed7-00144feabdc0.html#axzz3Cq4fyzJ8.

<sup>165</sup> Lindner, 2014b, 2017. I follow sociologist Alain Touraine, when he asks how a transnational economy can be reconciled with the reality of introverted communities. His explanation is that a few social rules of mutual tolerance and respect for personal freedom are not sufficient and that deeper bonds must and can be forged. Touraine argues that people can and should create a personal life-project and construct an active self or “subject,” with the ultimate aim to form meaningful social and political institutions. See Touraine, 2000, and Touraine, 2003.

In his work, Alain Touraine focuses on social and political conflict. I would have liked to attend the debate moderated by Michel Wieviorka in Paris in 2014, see Castells, et al., 2014. It is a privilege for me to be associated with the Maison des Sciences de l'Homme in Paris since 2001, initially through social psychologist Serge Moscovici. The first two conferences of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies were inspired and hosted by Hinnerk Bruhns, and supported by Michel Wieviorka, at the Maison des Sciences in 2003 and 2004, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php. It is a privilege to have Hinnerk Bruhns and other renowned colleagues from France as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>166</sup> Inga Bostad, professor and director of the Norwegian Centre for Human Rights coined the term Dignihome on June 2, 2014, in her introduction to Lindner's talk "Dignity, Humiliation, and Terrorism: How to Think Globally." At first, we called our initiative Dialogue Homes, then came Inga Bostad's Dignihomes, and now we sometimes also use the term Dignilogue Homes. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/whoweare.php. Philosopher Inga Bostad is a disciple of Arne Næss and a highly esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. She hosted the launch of the World Dignity University initiative on June 24, 2011, in her capacity as Vice-Rector of the University of Oslo. It is a privilege to have Inga Bostad as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>167</sup> Forster, 1910.

<sup>168</sup> Bernard Werber, science fiction writer, in L'Encyclopédie du savoir relatif et absolu or Livre secret des fourmis. English: The Encyclopedia of Absolute and Relative Knowledge.

Acknowledgments

<sup>1</sup> For my global life path see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin.php. See also Lindner, 2016a, 2017.

Introduction

<sup>1</sup> Berlin, 1997, p. 129:

The pattern, and it alone, brings into being and causes to pass away and confers purpose, that is to say, value and meaning, on all there is. To understand is to perceive patterns... To make intelligible is to reveal the basic pattern.

<sup>2</sup> Ury, 1999, p. xvii.

<sup>3</sup> Allen White, Senior Fellow of the Tellus Institute for a Great Transition, see www.tellus.org/about/people#, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Common Wealth Trusts: Structures of Transition," July 13, 2015.

<sup>4</sup> Maalouf, 2009. I thank Mai-Bente Bonnevie for making me aware of this book. It is a privilege to have Mai-Bente Bonnevie, as well as her partner Fredrik Heffermehl, as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See Heffermehl, 2010.

See a summary of the book on CDurable.info, <http://cdurable.info/Amin-Maalouf-Le-dereglement-du-monde,1660.html>. Translated from French by Lindner:

The central thesis of this long essay could be summarized as follows: the maladjustment of the world has less to do with a "clash of civilizations" and more with the simultaneous depletion of civilization. Humankind has reached its "moral threshold of incompetence." The age of ideological divisions and its debates is now followed by divisions of identity, where there is no more debate.

Islam and the West: both discourses have their theoretical consistency, but each, in practice, betrays its own ideals. The West is unfaithful to its own values, which disqualifies it in the eyes of the people it claims to acculturate to democracy. The Arab-Muslim world no longer has neither the legitimacy of the family nor the patriotic legitimacy around which it was historically structured. Living in humiliation and regressive nostalgia for its "Golden Age," the era of Islamism succeeding the era of nationalism, it is condemned to a headlong rush into radicalism. These "symmetrical maladjustments" are only one element of a broader global derangement that requires humanity to come together to deal with the emergencies, like climatic degradation which threatens all peoples. And if prehistory of humanity ended before our eyes, opening in the great convulsions, a new chapter of human history begins?

French original:

La thèse centrale de ce vaste essai pourrait être ainsi résumée: le dérèglement du monde tient moins à la 'guerre des civilisations' qu'à l'épuisement simultané des civilisations, l'humanité ayant atteint en quelque sorte son 'seuil d'incompétence morale'. A l'âge des clivages idéologiques qui suscitaient le débat succède celui des clivages identitaires, où il n'y a plus de débat.

Islam et Occident : les deux discours ont leur cohérence théorique, mais chacun, dans la pratique, trahit ses propres idéaux. L'Occident est infidèle à ses propres valeurs, ce qui la disqualifie auprès des peuples qu'il prétend acculturer à la démocratie. Le monde arabo-musulman n'a plus ni la légitimité généalogique ni la légitimité patriotique autour desquelles il s'était historiquement structuré. Vivant dans l'humiliation et la nostalgie régressive de son 'Age d'or', l'ère des islamismes ayant succédé à l'ère des nationalismes, il se trouve condamné à une fuite en avant dans le radicalisme. Ces 'dérèglements symétriques' ne sont qu'un des éléments d'un dérèglement planétaire plus global qui exige que l'humanité se rassemble pour faire face à des urgences qui, à l'exemple des perturbations climatiques, menacent tous les peuples. Et si la Préhistoire de l'humanité prenait fin sous nos yeux, ouvrant dans les convulsions le grand chapitre d'une nouvelle Histoire de l'homme qui commence?

<sup>5</sup> The ship of fools is an allegory, originating from Plato, 360 BCE.

<sup>6</sup> "When the End of Human Civilization Is Your Day Job," by John H. Richardson, Esquire, July 7, 2015, www.esquire.com/news-politics/a36228/ballad-of-the-sad-climatologists-0815/.

<sup>7</sup> "Tactical Nuclear Weapons in Europe," by John Scales Avery and the Danish Pugwash Group, TRANSCEND Media Service, March 23, 2015, www.transcend.org/tms/2015/03/tactical-nuclear-weapons-in-europe/. We read:

Although the Cold War has ended, the danger of a nuclear catastrophe is greater today than ever before. There are 16,300 nuclear weapons in the world today, of which 15,300 are in the hands of Russia and the United States. Several thousand of these weapons are on hair-trigger alert, meaning that whoever is in charge of them has only a few minutes to decide whether the signal indicating an attack is real, or an error. The most important single step in reducing the danger of a disaster would be to take all weapons off hair-trigger alert...

There is no defense against nuclear terrorism. We must remember the remark of U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan after the 9/11/2001 attacks on the World Trade Center. He said, "This time it was not a nuclear explosion." The meaning of his remark is clear: If the world does not take strong steps to eliminate fissionable materials and nuclear weapons, it will only be a matter of time before they will be used in terrorist attacks on major cities. Neither terrorists nor organized criminals can be deterred by the threat of nuclear retaliation, since they have no territory against which such retaliation could be directed. They blend invisibly into the general population. Nor can a "missile defense system" prevent terrorists from using nuclear weapons, since the weapons can be brought into a port in any one of the hundreds of thousands of containers that enter on ships each year, a number far too large to be checked exhaustively.

As the number of nuclear weapon states grows larger, there is an increasing chance that a revolution will occur in one of them, putting nuclear weapons into the hands of terrorist groups or organized criminals. Today, for example, Pakistan's less-than-stable government might be overthrown, and Pakistan's nuclear weapons might end in the hands of terrorists. The weapons might then be used to destroy one of the world's large coastal cities, having been brought into the port by one of numerous container ships that dock every day. Such an event might trigger a large-scale nuclear conflagration.

<sup>8</sup> "Anwohner wollen Stilllegung von Grohnde erzwingen – Atomkraftgegner drohen mit Klage," by Peter Mlodoch, Weser Kurier, March 26, 2015, www.weser-kurier.de/region\_artikel,-Atomkraftgegner-drohen-mit-Klage-\_arid,1088361.html. On January 31, 2015, regional groups met in Hannover to prepare for the 4th anniversary of the Fukushima disaster and for subsequent activities. Also in Hannover, on March 14, 2015, under the motto "Fukushima warns! – Decommission the AKW Grohnde," the Regional Conference Grohnde presented lectures and held discussion sessions covering the current situation in Fukushima, an inventory of nuclear waste, and informed about the legal action against the nuclear Grohnde. See "Regionalkonferenz Grohnde: Fukushima-Aktion am 14. März in Hannover," http://ag-schacht-konrad.de/index.php?option=com\_content&task=view&id=1495&Itemid=280.

<sup>9</sup> It is important to note that a global citizens movement, or global civil society, does not mean NGOs that are funded by interests that stand against the creation of global dignity for all. See Robinson, 2017. Anthropologist David Harvey, scholar of critical geography, speaks of "co-revolution," "co-evolution," "subversion," "the movement," the "Party of Indignation," or a "slow movement across the spheres." In his book The Enigma of Capital, Harvey, 2011, introduces seven "activity spheres" – such as technologies and organizational forms; social relations; institutional and administrative arrangements; production and labor processes; relations to nature; human reproduction; and mental conceptions of the world – and describes how capital "revolves through" these spheres "in search of profit." Harvey, 2011, p. 260:

Perhaps we should just define the movement, our movement, as anti-capitalist or call ourselves the Party of Indignation, ready to fight and defeat the Party of Wall Street and its acolytes and apologists everywhere, and leave it at that.

<sup>10</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>11</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>12</sup> Active SETI, also known as messaging to extraterrestrial intelligence (METI), consists of sending signals into space in the hope that they will be picked up by an alien intelligence. Stephen Hawking made a documentary series for the Discovery Channel, and he advises, “If aliens visit us, the outcome would be much as when Columbus landed in America, which didn’t turn out well for the Native Americans.” See “Stephen Hawking Takes a Hard Line on Aliens,” by Leo Hickman, The Guardian, April 26, 2010, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2010/apr/26/stephen-hawking-issues-warning-on-aliens. See also Gerritzen, 2016.

<sup>13</sup> Ruben Nelson in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 5, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016:

In the past, all transitions in the forms of civilization were slow, local/regional, exclusive, optional and unconscious. Today, we are faced by the need to undertake a GT in our dominant form of civilization that, in contrast, must be fast (by any historic standard), scalable to the whole planet, inclusive of all 7.4 billion of us, recognized as required and conscious. This last requirement also implies that today we must not only be conscious about change at every scale, but must develop a capacity for meta-consciousness about change at every scale.

<sup>14</sup> John Fullerton, now a new member of the Club of Rome, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 31, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016:

I particularly liked Paul’s near dismissal of the “Conventional Worlds” scenarios – both Market Forces and Policy Reform variations, what Paul calls “the false god of moderation that invites us to passively drift down the garden path to barbarization.” Of course, this is precisely the path we (collectively) are on, with all the well-meaning focus on “green growth,” internalizing “externalities” (an oxymoron), calls for greater market transparency with Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) metrics (our idolatry of markets and their ability to guide us is a deadly confusion of means and ends), Divest/Invest campaigns, quantifying in monetary terms ecosystem services offered by vital and priceless ecosystem function, circular economy manufacturing processes, impact investing, carbon demand-side reduction targets, more progressive taxation regimes, and on and on. ALL are essential incremental change, part of any ultimate solution. All are important work. But mostly what they accomplish is the extension of our runway, not systemic change, because they do not involve a fundamental change in the way we think. They could lull us into false confidence that we are on the right track. Collectively, they are the result of our intellectually lazy or simply ignorant preference to worship what Paul calls the “false god of moderation,” or simply represent the only way we can have our voices heard. We must see this for what it is, our ongoing 500-year-old Modern Era (and thus deeply ingrained literally into our DNA) reductionist mindset of treating symptoms like carbon emissions rather than seeking and then addressing root causes, holistically understood.

<sup>15</sup> Toffler, 1970. I thank Qin Shao for reminding me of Toffler’s book Future Shock. It is a privilege to have Qin Shao as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>16</sup> “The Call of the Nation,” by Uri Avnery, Human Wrongs Watch, December 10, 2016, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2016/12/13/the-call-of-the-nation/>.

<sup>17</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>18</sup> Ury, 1999, p. 108. It is a privilege to have William Ury as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>19</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber’s three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

Also Michael Karlberg explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with presumably objective reality. See Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>20</sup> Clearly, there is a connection between equality and equal dignity – the connection is entailed in the human rights stipulation that equal chances and enabling environments for all are necessary to protect human dignity.

<sup>21</sup> Discourse analyst Michael Karlberg, 2013, explains that, indeed, such a new social order would not be without hierarchy. Hierarchy is, however, no longer a structure of dominance or an outcome of power-seeking behavior: “Organic hierarchy provides the organization, coordination, and efficiency by which the diverse potentialities of autonomous individuals can be realized and their energies can be applied in productive ways that promote the common good.”

<sup>22</sup> Fuller and Gerloff, 2008. It is a privilege to have Robert Fuller as esteemed members in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>23</sup> I had the privilege of participating in the launch of the Coexistence Initiative in Belfast in 1999, and was impressed by the various ways coexistence can be conceptualized and criticized. See also Weiner and (Foreword), 1998.

<sup>24</sup> Neoliberaler Kahlschlag – Butterwege: Grundeinkommen wäre Ende des Sozialstaats, 3sat, October 13, 2016, www.3sat.de/page/?source=/makro/magazin/doks/189268/index.html. 3sat. is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe.

<sup>25</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017.

<sup>26</sup> Francisco Gomes de Matos in a personal communication on June 29, 2010.

<sup>27</sup> Schell, 2003.

<sup>28</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. See a review by social psychologist and Kurt Lewin expert David Bargal, 2011b. Read more about David Bargal in note 169 in the Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions at the end of Section Three.

<sup>29</sup> See Desmond Tutu in Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. vii. See also an interview with Sharon Davis titled Moment of Truth, ABC Radio National “Background Briefing,” May 4, 1997, www.abc.net.au/rn/talks/bbing/stories/s10597.htm.

<sup>30</sup> It is a privilege to have Michael Britton as on the board of directors of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

<sup>31</sup> Arendt, 1961.

<sup>32</sup> Arie Nadler wrote about radical empathy and radical reconciliation. It is a privilege to have Arie Nadler as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Arie Nadler, 2012, p. 304:

Consistent with Arendt’s terminology, I propose to label forgiveness for “radical evil” as “radical forgiveness” and the intergroup reconciliation that may follow as “radical reconciliation.” ... Such an understanding was expected to culminate in empathy with the perpetrator of “radical evil,” that we propose to label as “radical empathy.”

See also the work of John McFadden, 2016. It is a privilege to have his support for our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>33</sup> Lindner, 2009d.

<sup>34</sup> In 2005, U.S. policymakers in the second Bush administration sought to replace the bellicose “Global War on Terror” (GWOT) with lower-key concepts like “Struggle Against Violent Extremism” (SAVE), explains Alex Schmid, 2013, p. 10. Under the Obama administration it became a “war with al Qaeda.”

See also, “White House: ‘War on Terrorism’ Is Over,” The Washington Times, August 6, 2009, www.washingtontimes.com/news/2009/aug/06/white-house-war-terrorism-over/?feat=home\_headlines:

It’s official. The U.S. is no longer engaged in a “war on terrorism.” Neither is it fighting “jihadists” or in a “global war.” President Obama’s top homeland security and counter-terrorism official took all three terms off the table of acceptable words inside the White House during a speech August 6, 2009, at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a Washington think tank.

<sup>35</sup> In many publications, the question is being asked why states and international relations organizations participate in the “global war on terrorism.” See, among many, Beyer, 2010.

<sup>36</sup> Berlin, 1997, p. 129:

The pattern, and it alone, brings into being and causes to pass away and confers purpose, that is to say, value and meaning, on all there is. To understand is to perceive patterns... To make intelligible is to reveal the basic pattern.

<sup>37</sup> See, among others, Staub, 1989, 1993, 2012, 2015.

<sup>38</sup> Riane T. Eisler, 1987. See her most recent book Eisler, 2007. Philosopher Karl Popper, 1945, spoke of irrational tribal emotions to describe the adoration of strong men and hatred of people with a different ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, or political ideology.

<sup>39</sup> Eisler, 1987. She describes how, from the samurai of Japan to the Aztecs of Meso-America, people lived in very similar hierarchies of domination and under a rigidly male-dominant “strongman” rule, both in the family and state. Hierarchies of domination were maintained by a high degree of institutionalized and socially accepted violence, ranging from wife- and child-beating within the family to aggressive warfare at the larger tribal or national level. See also, for instance, Kautsky, 1982, recommended by historian Richard Landes, who offers a list of elements that characterize what he calls a prime-divider polity in contrast to a civil polity. See “Civil Polity vs. Prime-Divider Polity,” by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, July 26, 2006, www.theaugenstables.com/reflections-from-second-draft/civil-society-vs-prime-divider-society/. A prime-divider polity would contain the following main features:

- legal privilege for the elites (including exemption from taxation, lighter sentences for their misdeeds and heavier penalties for offenses against them).
- self-help justice in which clans defend their members regardless of legal issues like intent (blood revenge, vendetta, feud, duel)
- mystery surrounding political authority (e.g., monarchy above the law)
- commoner populations illiterate, controlled by intimidation (Machiavelli’s: a ruler should be feared not loved)
- manual labor stigmatized, vast majority (masses) excluded from public sphere except on choreographed occasions
- elites with a monopoly on literacy, weaponry, rapid transportation, and political power

Civil polity would entail the following interlocking elements:

- Same rules for all (equality before the law, what the ancient Greeks called isonomia)
- Independent law courts that determine fair judgments and pre-empt private (self-help) justice.
- Public transparency and accountability of people in power (free press, freedom of speech).
- Commoner populations empowered by education to assert and protect their own legislated rights
- Commitment to voluntarism as a principle form of social interaction and political organization, emphasizing, mutual trust, contractual obligations, and moral autonomy.
- Manual labor is not stigmatized, and manual laborers and their children can participate in public discourse and if sufficiently successful, enter the elite.

<sup>40</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more pressing and widely discussed. See Lindner, 2012d. Already when I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson’s and Kate Pickett’s work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk. Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Stiglitz, 2012, Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality.

<sup>41</sup> I resonate with Howard Richards’ observation that amid all the ups and downs there is “a generative causal power at work pushing toward the down side, even while other generative causal powers are pushing on the up side,” see “Individual and Human Rights,” by Howard Richards, Chileufú, October 20, 2016, <http://chileufu.cl/individual-and-human-rights/>.

<sup>42</sup> See, among many other relevant publications, Ahmed, 2017. Academics and public speakers such as Hans Rosling and Steven Pinker have been criticized for having a positivity bias, also called Pollyannaism, which means remembering pleasant items more accurately than unpleasant ones. The 1913 novel Pollyanna by Eleanor H. Porter describes a girl who tries to find something to be glad about in every situation. See also “A Confused Statistician,” by, Anne H. Ehrlich and Paul R. Ehrlich, Millennium Alliance for Humanity and Biosphere, November 12, 2013, <http://mahb.stanford.edu/blog/a-confused-statistician>.

<sup>43</sup> Der Publizist Sebastian Haffner (1907 – 1999) im “Sonntagsgespräch” mit Guido Knopp, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, December 20, 1987, www.zdf.de/ZDFzeit/Mein-Kampf-mit-Hitler-26139114.html. See also Haffner, 1978. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>44</sup> Human security, rather than national security, means “freedom from fear” and “freedom from want” for human beings, rather than the security of states. See “Human Security in Theory and Practice: An Overview of the Human Security Concept and the United Nations Trust Fund for Human Security, United Nations Human Security Unit, www.un.org/humansecurity/sites/www.un.org/humansecurity/files/human\_security\_in\_theory\_and\_practice\_english.pdf. See also Archer, 2005, Elworthy and Rifkind, 2005, Mack and Nielsen, 2010, Reardon and Hans, 2010. See, furthermore, the Human Security Report Project by the Human Security Research Group, www.hsrgroup.org/human-security-reports/human-security-report.aspx.

<sup>45</sup> Space Exploration – A Powerful Symbol of Global Cooperation, Jim Zimmerman, NASA, interviewed by Susan T. Coleman, The Peacebuilding Podcast, December 13, 2016, <http://us11.campaign-archive1.com/?u=e5c2110f5cc4fe346c79bf3d1&id=06298a46ca&e=7c4dd8362>. I thank Judit Révész for making me aware of this interview.

<sup>46</sup> This is known to be a Chinese Proverb. I thank conflict resolution expert Christine Locher for making us aware of this quote. China expert and scholar Jingyi Dong kindly attempted to find out more about this saying, and she shared with us the following on February 13, 2015:

I have searched on www.baidu.com, a Chinese search engine, and found some people who express their doubt. They cannot find a Chinese equivalent to this proverb. Someone mentions a saying that could be translated as “You should not impose upon others what you do not like.”

On February 16, 2015, Jingyi Dong added: “I asked one of my friends. He said it might be derived from a proverb used to criticize one who is not only incapable of any achievements, but also frustrates those who have the potential to succeed. Obviously, the English version is softer.”

<sup>47</sup> See the work on relational-cultural theory conducted at the Jean Baker Miller Training Institute (www.jbmti.org), at Wellesley Centers for Women, Wellesley College (www.wcwoonline.org). Linda Hartling is the former Associate Director of the JBMTI, and now the director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. See her doctoral dissertation on humiliation, Hartling, 1995, and recent work, for instance, Hartling and Lindner, 2016b, 2017.

Psychiatrist Robert J. Waldinger became known for a TED talk that went viral: What Makes a Good Life? Lessons from the Longest Study on Happiness, December 2015, www.ted.com/talks/robert\_waldinger\_what\_makes\_a\_good\_life\_lessons\_from\_the\_longest\_study\_on\_happiness. He talks about his findings from a 75-year-long Harvard study on adult happiness. This study rendered three main lessons about relationships: The first lesson is that social connections are beneficial for health, while health declines when loneliness and isolation prevail. Isolated people live shorter lives than people who are not lonely. Unfortunately, Waldinger notes, at any given time, more than one in five Americans will report that they are lonely. The second lesson is that it is not the quantity of one’s close relationship that counts, but the quality. Only warm relationships are protective. Getting a divorce may promote health more than living in a high-conflict marriage, for example. The third lesson is that good relationships protect both body and brain. People in unsafe relationships experience earlier memory decline. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of Waldinger’s TED talk.

See also Schwarzenbach, 2009, on Civic Friendship. It is a privilege to have Sibyl Schwarzenberg as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>48</sup> See more in my forthcoming book on human nature. Correspondent inference theory indicates that we infer that other people’s actions correspond to their underlying personality and disposition. Some psychologists have used the terms correspondence bias and fundamental attribution error interchangeably. See, among others, Gilbert, 1998. Others theorize that they are independent phenomena, with the correspondence bias resulting from a much wider range of processes. See, among others, Gawronski, 2004, Gawronski and Bodenhausen, 2006.

<sup>49</sup> “Make Russia Great Again? Aleppo and a Plea from Another World,” by Juan Francisco Lobo, openDemocracy, December 24, 2016, www.opendemocracy.net/juan-francisco-lobo/make-russia-great-again-aleppo-and-plea-from-another-world:

If as La Rochefoucauld said once, hypocrisy is the homage that vice pays to virtue, then the difference between a hypocrite and a cynic lies in the former’s capacity to recognize the existence of rules, only deliberately flouting them, whereas the latter does not even admit the existence of rules. Whereas the day of reckoning eventually comes for the hypocrite, the cynic is forever immune to criticism.

<sup>50</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber’s three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

Also Michael Karlberg explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality. See Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>51</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>52</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, pp. 84–88. Honor killings have been reported in many parts of the world, including Bangladesh, Britain, Brazil, Ecuador, Egypt, India, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Pakistan, Morocco, Sweden, Turkey, and Uganda. There is a vast amount of literature addressing honor killing. See, for instance, a summary and evaluation of qualitative research about honor killings, United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), 2005. Many prefer to use the term femicide rather than honor killing, since the main focus is on killing women.

The issue of femicide is much larger, see, among others, “Female Infanticide Worldwide: The Case for Action by the UN Human Rights Council,” by the Asian Centre for Human Rights (ACHR), New Delhi, June 2016, www.stopfemaleinfanticide.org/files/Femalefoeticideworldwide.pdf.

<sup>53</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>54</sup> Derrida, 1982.

<sup>55</sup> Karlberg, 2013, p. 1.

<sup>56</sup> Bateson, 1954, is often credited for the initial concept of an interpretive frame. He pointed out that discrete communicative acts are rendered meaningful within larger interpretive frames. For example, an apparently “hostile” communicative act can take on completely different meanings when interpreted through the frame “this is play” or the frame “this is war.” Building on these insights, Goffman, 1974, conceptualized frames as cognitive schemata or mental frameworks that shape our perceptions, interpretations, and representations of reality; mentally organize our experience; and provide normative guides for our actions. Following this work by Bateson and Goffman, the concept of frames and framing has been conceptualized with different nuances across the social and psychological sciences. What unifies these conceptions is the understanding that people must rely on acquired structures of interpretation to sift, sort, and make sense out of the otherwise overwhelming universe of information and experience they encounter in their daily lives.

<sup>57</sup> The Psychology of Humiliation: Somalia, Rwanda / Burundi, and Hitler’s Germany was my doctoral dissertation in social psychology at the Department of Psychology of the University of Oslo, Norway. See Lindner, 2000c. See more chapters and papers by Lindner in full text on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin02.php.

<sup>58</sup> Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict is Lindner’s first book on dignity and humiliation and how we may envision a more dignified world, and it has been characterized as a path-breaking book and been honored as “Outstanding Academic Title” for 2007 in the USA by the journal Choice. See Lindner, 2006a. It came out in 2006 in Praeger, with a Foreword by the father of the field of conflict resolution, Morton Deutsch. The book discusses dignity and humiliation and how we may envision a more dignified world. It first lays out a theory of the mental and social dynamics humiliation and proposes the need for “egalization” (the undoing of humiliation) for a healthy global society. It then presents chapters on the role of misunderstandings in fostering feelings of humiliation; the role of humiliation in international conflict; and the relationship of humiliation to terrorism and torture. It concludes with a discussion of how to defuse feelings of humiliation and create a dignified world. See more details on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/01.php.

Emotion and Conflict: How Human Rights Can Dignify Emotion and Help Us Wage Good Conflict is Lindner’s second book. See Lindner, 2009a. It is about dignity and how realizing its promise can help improve the human condition at all levels – from micro to meso to macro levels. The book came out in Praeger in 2009, with a Foreword by the father of the field of conflict resolution, Morton Deutsch. It uses a broad historical lens that captures all of human history, from its hunter-gatherer origins to the promise of a globally united knowledge society in the future. It emphasizes the need to recognize and leave behind malign cultural, social, and psychological effects of the past. The book calls upon the world community, academics and lay people alike, to own up to the opportunities offered by increasing global interdependence. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/02.php.

<sup>59</sup> Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security: Dignifying Relationships from Love, Sex, and Parenthood to World Affairs is Lindner’s third book, published by Praeger. See Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. Archbishop Desmond Tutu kindly contributed with a Foreword (asked for a prepublication endorsement, he kindly offered to contribute with a Foreword). The book rounds off with an Afterword by Linda Hartling, director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, in honor of Jean Baker Miller and Don Klein. For more details, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/book/03.php.

The book was “highly recommended” by Choice (in July 2010):

In this far-ranging, sometimes brilliant book, Lindner (Columbia Univ. and Oslo Univ.) studies the social and political ramifications of human violations and world crises related to humiliation, defined as the enforced lowering of a person or group, a process of subjugation that harms or removes the dignity, pride, and honor of the other. A “transdisciplinary social scientist,” the author charts how humiliation – and its antidote, love – are conditioned by large-scale, systemic social forces such as globalization. The force of this book resides in its construction of a compelling, compassionate alternative to the psychological effects of humiliation on gender and sexual relations, parenthood, and leadership. For Lindner, this alternative is not only love but also its psychological correlate, humility, both of which can become the basis of the social, political, and cultural change necessary to reform the harmful global tendency toward humiliation. Lindner’s philosophy is avowedly non-dualist and rooted in ancient Eastern wisdom. A powerful follow up to her Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict (CH, Mar’07, 44-4114), this book appears in the “Contemporary Psychology” series; it will be indispensable for psychologists, humanists, and political scientists and invaluable to policy makers. Summing Up: Highly recommended. Upper-division undergraduates through faculty and professionals. – M. Uebel, University of Texas (Choice is a publication of the Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL), a division of the American Library Association)

<sup>60</sup> A Dignity Economy: Creating an Economy that Serves Human Dignity and Preserves Our Planet is Lindner’s fourth book. See Lindner, 2012d. It is the first publication of Dignity Press, published in its imprint World Dignity University Press, with a Foreword by Linda Hartling, director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, and Ulrich Spalthoff, director of Dignity Press. See more on www.dignitypress.org/wdu-press-books/dignity-economy. See brief endorsements on www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/evelin/book/04.php#endorsement.

<sup>61</sup> Bateson, 1954. See also Chong and Druckman, 2007.

<sup>62</sup> Goffman, 1974.

<sup>63</sup> Snow and Benford, 1988, p. 213. See also Ryan and Gamson, 2006, p.14:

Like a picture frame, an issue frame marks off some part of the world. Like a building frame, it holds things together. It provides coherence to an array of symbols, images, and arguments, linking them through an underlying organizing idea that suggests what is essential – what consequences and values are at stake. We do not see the frame directly, but infer its presence by its characteristic expressions and language. Each frame gives the advantage to certain ways of talking and thinking, while it places others “out of the picture.”

<sup>64</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>65</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>66</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

Others use a slightly different terminology, for instance, Johan Galtung, 1976, when he speaks of actor, system, and structure, where the actors may be persons, districts, nations or regions, and a system is a certain sector of social life, such as work, education, economic transactions, family life, while a structure ties several systems together, meaning that actors interact with each other in more than one context: a society is a structure that is self-sufficient and can survive even if cut off from the rest.

<sup>67</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>68</sup> Stephan Feuchtwang in a personal communication on November 14, 2002.

<sup>69</sup> Anthony Marsella speaks of fractionation, hegemonic globalization, and recommends Lifeism, in “Addressing Fractionation: Principles for Arbitrating the ‘Common Good,’” Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, May 1, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/05/addressing-fractionation-principles-for-arbitrating-the-common-good/.

<sup>70</sup> “Trump Marks the End of a Cycle,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 21, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/02/trump-marks-the-end-of-a-cycle/:

In 1974, the UN General Assembly unanimously adopted the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States – the first (and only) plan for global governance – which called for a plan of action to reduce world inequalities and redistribute wealth and economic production. But this quickly became to be seen by the United States as a straitjacket.

The arrival of Ronald Reagan at the White House in 1981 marked an abrupt change in this phase of American policy based on multilateralism and shared international cooperation. A few months before taking office, Reagan had attended the North-South Economic Summit in Cancun, Mexico, where the 22 most important heads of state

(with China as the only socialist country) had met to discuss implementation of the General Assembly resolution. Reagan, who met up with enthusiastic British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, stopped the plan for global governance dead in its tracks. I was there and saw how, to my dismay, the world went from multilateralism to the old policy of power in just two days. The United States simply refused to see its destiny being decided by others – and that was the start of the decline of the United Nations, with the United States refusing to sign any international treaty or obligation.

<sup>71</sup> Carson, 1962. See also American Experience: Rachel Carson, documentary film directed by Michelle Ferrari, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), 2017, www.pbs.org/video/2365935530/, www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/films/rachel-carson/. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing this wonderful film with me. Our relationship can be described just like the one between Rachel Carson and Dorothy Freeman. Earlier, Linda Hartling showed me Not for Ourselves Alone: The Story of Elizabeth Cady Stanton & Susan B. Anthony, documentary film by Ken Burns, 1999, National Public Radio (NPR) and WETA, www.pbs.org/stantonanthony/.

<sup>72</sup> Linda Hartling, in a personal communication on April 12, 2017.

<sup>73</sup> “UN Chief Issues Warning on the Rise of Fascism,” by Peter Walker, Independent, December 9, 2016, www.independent.co.uk/news/world/politics/united-nations-chilling-warning-rise-fascism-human-rights-prince-zeid-a7464861.html.

See also “Warning Against Rising Intolerance, UN Remembers Holocaust and Condemns Anti-Semitism,” United Nations News Centre, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=56058#.WI3BB\_KOWgy.

See, furthermore, “Trump Marks the End of a Cycle,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 21, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/02/trump-marks-the-end-of-a-cycle/:

Bannon is organising a new international alliance of populists, xenophobes and nationalists – made up of thee likes of Nicholas Farage (United Kingdom), Matteo Salvini and Beppe Grillo (Italy), Marine Le Pen (France) and Geert Wilders (Netherlands) – with Washington as their point of reference... If, beyond its national agenda, the Trump administration succeeds in creating a new international order based on illiberal democracy, we should start to worry because war will not be far away.

See also Marine le Pen – Frontfrau der europäischen Rechten, documentary film by Michael Welch, Janine Bechthold, Tina Roth, and Olga Sviridenko, Das Erste, April 10, 2017, www.daserste.de/information/reportage-dokumentation/dokus/sendung/marine-le-pen-106.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>74</sup> I thank Linda Hartling for sharing her impressions of meeting Gandhi’s grandson Arun M. Gandhi at the “Messages of Peace” Conference, September 20, 2009, at Marylhurst University in Oregon, USA. Gandhi described the crucial lessons he learned from his grandfather about the lifelong practice of nonviolent action. He also offered a rare glimpse into how the women in his grandfather’s life shaped the development of nonviolent principles and practices. Gandhi, 2003, p. 91: “You cannot change people’s hearts by law,” Grandfather said. “You can only change hearts by love.” See also arungandhi.org.

<sup>75</sup> I thank philosopher Dagfinn Kåre Føllesdal for his support in formulating initial questions in 1996. I had the privilege of participating in his Ethics Programme at the Norwegian Research Council 1995 – 1996. Dagfinn Føllesdal’s publications span many decades, see, among others, Føllesdal, 1988, Føllesdal and Depaul, 2015. I was immensely touched by his personal support to my work, was deeply influenced by his ethics seminars, and profoundly impressed by his lectures, among others, “How Can We Use Arguments in Ethics?” presentation at the Norwegian Academy of Science, Oslo, Norway, January 30, 1996.

Dagfinn Føllesdal shared the following reflections with me in 1996:

In humiliation: the most important aspect is that it is a subjective notion, a subjective experience, less an objective notion. Although, of course, in some cases also an outsider can say: this is a humiliation. The subjective perspective is important. Therefore Husserl is helpful with respect to culture difference: How is humiliation experienced subjectively? People of different cultures will not be aware that they humiliate, and even if they do, they will not understand. People from the same culture would just abstain from doing something which humiliates.

What is experienced as humiliating? For example in a peace treaties, one has to be careful not to humiliate somebody who is falling. There is a spectrum of possible reactions, depending on the experience of justice: for instance, if it means an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth.

What is the role of anger? Sometimes anger is not caused by humiliation. Incidents need to be mapped out in rich descriptive studies to show what it was that caused feelings of humiliation.

What is the role of ethics? Could there ever be justified humiliation? In Norway in the Middle Ages, outside of the church, there was Pranger, which was used as efficient way to stop crime. What about publishing the names of people who cheat on taxes in the newspaper? What about reputation, deterrent, and cost-effectiveness?

<sup>76</sup> Lindner, 1996, 2000c.

<sup>77</sup> Hartling, 1995.

<sup>78</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 31.

<sup>79</sup> There were a few books and movies during my youth, which highlighted the theme of Nazi Germany just after the war, books I read – for instance, Borchert, 1947 – and movies I saw hundreds of times when I was young. They influenced me deeply, and I am infinitely thankful to the film makers for their nuanced way of making the Nazi era palpable for those born later. My father, being a teacher, was able to bring a film projector and film rolls to our house during vacations. I saw films such as In jenen Tagen (In Those Days, 1947, Helmut Käutner), Ein Tag – Bericht aus einem deutschen Konzentrationslager 1939 (A Day – Report from a German Concentration Camp in 1939, 1965, Egon Monk), Der Schlaf der Gerechten (The Sleep of the Just, 1962, Rolf Hädrich), Die Brücke (The Bridge, 1959, Bernhard Wicki), Wir Wunderkinder (We Wunderkinder, 1958, Kurt Hoffmann), Hunde, wollte ihr ewig leben, based on the novel with the same title by Fritz Wöss, 1958 (Stalingrad: Dogs, Do You Want to Live Forever?, 1959, Frank Wisbar). All films make the moral dilemmas and grotesqueness of the Nazi era palpable, but also show how humanness at times could shine through. The first film, In jenen Tagen, for example, addresses issues of collective guilt during the Nazi era, highlighting certain people's private resistance while they publically accepted the Nazi repression. Most movies are no longer shown, except for a few. Repetitions of Die Brücke, for instance, are still being shown regularly on German television.

<sup>80</sup> "Lieber tot als Sklav": "... wer weiße Fahnen hißt und sich kampflos ergibt, ist des Todes," Leonhardt, 2009, p. 80.

<sup>81</sup> Lindner, 2006a, pp. 25–26.

<sup>82</sup> Sustainable development expert Gwendolyn Hallsmith wrote in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Monetizing Nature," July 31, 2014:

...the systematic impoverishment of nature and humanity wrought by privatized monetary hegemony... Without changing the dominant "resource allocation system" by democratizing the monetary system, we will not be able to reverse the damage. It will continue, unabated, and will make the lives of future generations less and less tenable on a scorched Earth.

<sup>83</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more pressing and widely discussed. See Lindner, 2012d. Already when I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson's and Kate Pickett's work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk. Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Stiglitz, 2012, Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality.

<sup>84</sup> Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>85</sup> Bourdieu uses the term field for spheres such as economy, politics, arts, journalism, bureaucracy, science, and education. The position of agents in a field depends on the volume of economic, cultural, or political capital that they possess, but also on how different forms of capital are distributed, see Bourdieu and Wacquant, 1992, p. 108, or Bourdieu, 1996, p. 278. I commend Jingyi Dong for having applied Bourdieu's conceptualization on China, and thank her for having taught me much about Bourdieu's theory. See Dong, 2015.

<sup>86</sup> Bruce Fisher in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled "The Struggle for Meaningful Work," January 18, 2017, in response to Klitgaard, 2017.

<sup>87</sup> Berger, 2011, p. 77, quoted by Arancha García del Soto, from MUNDUBAT, a Basque NGO from Bilbao, and also the Global Leader for Peace at Haverford College in Pennsylvania, U.S.A, when she was a panelist at the Conference "Human Rights and Humanitarianism: Contradictory or Co-Dependent?" Columbia University Morningside Campus International Affairs Building, October 30, 2013. See also note 416 in this Introduction.

<sup>88</sup> In German, there is the word Schicksalsgemeinschaft or a "community of shared destiny."

<sup>89</sup> Peace psychologist Anthony Marsella made a list of the "characteristic ethos of popular American culture": Consumerism, materialism, commodification, inequality, violence and power, individual self-interest, celebrity identification and pre-occupation, competition, financial greed, rapid and continuous change, hedonism, and transgressive ideology. See "Popular American (USA) Culture: A Dysfunctional and Destructive Life Context," by Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, November 11, 2013, www.transcend.org/tms/2013/11/popular-american-usa-culture-a-dysfunctional-and-destructive-life-context/. It is a privilege to have Anthony Marsella as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>90</sup> See, among others, Lane, 2001. Depression is the second most common cause of disability worldwide after back pain, according to a review of research, see Ferrari, et al., 2013. See also Lane, 2001. See, furthermore, “What if Sociologists Had as Much Influence as Economists?” by Neil Irwin, New York Times, March 17, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/03/17/upshot/what-if-sociologists-had-as-much-influence-as-economists.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. According to the World Health Organisation (WHO, www.who.int), major depression (i.e. severe depressed mood that is episodic in nature and recurs in 75–80 percent of cases) is now the leading cause of disability worldwide with a lifetime prevalence of 17 percent in the Western world, thus ranking fourth among the ten leading causes of global disease burden. In addition, the WHO states that depression is the most common mental disorder leading to suicide and they project that, at its present rate of growth, depression will be the second leading contributor to global disease burden by 2020. See “Clinical Depression Costs Economy up to 22 Billion Euros Each Year,” New Report from Allianz Deutschland AG und RWI, www.allianz.com/en/press/news/studies/news\_2011-04-13.html.

See also “A Plea to Address Global Youth Depression,” by economist Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), February 10, 2015, www.gcgi.info/index.php/kamran-s-blog/665-a-plea-to-address-global-youth-depression. It is a privilege to have Kamran Mofid as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

The following story of “The Depressed Baker” was shared by psychologist Jan Smedslund, 2013, pp. 134–135:

She was a 65 year old woman who had been committed to the emergency ward by her son because she just sat in a chair all day long and did nothing. She talked willingly, and told me that she was a recent widow, that she had in the course of the last year lost her three (and only) best friends, and also her job in a bakery that she had loved. Her children lived in another city. She had a small apartment, but saw no other people. She had never had any particular interests, except her work, and caring for her husband and children. She had tried some of the obvious possibilities, such as finding a new job, travelling, etc., to no avail. After some sessions, our conversations came to a stop. My final response was to state that, since there appeared to be nothing more to say, and since I understood that she had a good reason to feel depressed, we could just be silent together. After a while, she asked if she could hold my hand. Then we just sat there for some time. The next day I heard that she had volunteered to bake a birthday cake for a fellow patient, and then she gradually expanded her volunteer work in the hospital kitchen. After some weeks she left the hospital apparently restituted to her normal functioning.

<sup>91</sup> Sociologist Émile Durkheim, 1897, in his book on suicide, developed the concept of anomie, understood as absence of norms, or too rigid norms, leading to apathy and detachment. Novelist Michel Houellebecq captures the many aspects and experiences of anomie in his work, see, among others, Houellebecq, 1994/1998, 1998/2001, 2015.

<sup>92</sup> See the work on loneliness by John Cacioppo and colleagues. Perceived social isolation has increased in industrialized countries, and in the U.S., loneliness now affects over forty percent of older adults. “The development of effective interventions for loneliness is still needed,” so Cacioppo, et al., 2014, p. 1497. Loneliness not only has numerous negative health effects, it also leads to self-centeredness, see Cacioppo, et al., 2017. See also Cacioppo, et al., 2009, Cacioppo and Patrick, 2008.

See, furthermore, “The Swedish Theory of Love: Why Swedes Are So Lonely,” by John-David Ritz, Vice, November 10, 2015, www.vice.com/en\_se/read/the-swedish-theory-of-love-or-why-we-swedes-are-so-lonely-234. I thank Guri Lorentzen Østbye for making me aware of the film and the article.

<sup>93</sup> I resonate with indigenous psychologist Louise Sundararajan, 2015, and her suggestion that we ought to replace the binary theories of collectivism and individualism with a more nuanced explanatory framework. Sundararajan differentiates between group-based collectivism and relational collectivism. Conformity to hierarchy, authority, social norms, and adaptation to social pressure characterizes group-based collectivism, whereas communal connections, other-directedness, and genuine care for others is the hallmark of relational collectivism.

<sup>94</sup> The Emperor’s New Clothes is a short tale by Danish author Hans Christian Andersen (Danish: Kejserens nye Klæder). The Emperor parades before his subjects in his new clothes, which he believes are clothes that are invisible to those who are unfit for their positions, stupid, or incompetent. No one is courageous enough to speak out and say that there are no clothes at all. Only a child cries out, “But he isn’t wearing anything at all!”

<sup>95</sup> Perhaps my childhood experience of roaming freely on a farm gave me the experiences necessary to develop a particular level of spatial seeing and thinking. When I think back to when I was six years old, for example, I remember that some developmental psychologists came to our school to measure child development. They asked us to paint a man on a chair. I painted him in perfect perspective; nobody else did. The researchers accused me of lying about my age, since they were certain that nobody that young could paint in perspective. For me it was not an achievement; I just “saw.” Later, when I was sixteen or seventeen, we had a philosophy class at school. The topic was meta-language. We could choose to have the end of term exam in this class, or in the geography class. All my class mates chose the geography exam, even though it required lots of learning by heart. I was the only one to take the philosophy exam. I did not need to prepare for it; I merely “saw.” It was clear to me what was meta-language and what not, and I got the highest grade in that exam.

<sup>96</sup> Karen Barad, 2003, p. 819:

Discourse is not what is said; it is that which constrains and enables what can be said. Discursive practices define what counts as meaningful statements. Statements are not the mere utterances of the originating consciousness of a unified subject; rather, statements and subjects emerge from a field of possibilities. This field of possibilities is not static or singular but rather is a dynamic and contingent multiplicity.

Karen Barad earned her doctorate in theoretical physics, building on insights from Niels Bohr, and is known for her theory of agential realism, where she follows Niels Bohr in questioning the dualisms of object/subject, knower/known, nature/culture, and word/world. Karen Barad asks: Does scientific knowledge represent an independently existing reality accurately? Does language accurately represent its referent? Does a given political representative, legal counsel, or piece of legislation accurately represent the interests of the people allegedly represented? (Barad, 2003, p. 804). Barad explains that for Bohr, “things do not have inherently determinate boundaries or properties, and words do not have inherently determinate meanings”; Bohr “calls into question the related Cartesian belief in the inherent distinction between subject and object, and knower and known,” Barad, 2003, p.813.

Barad builds also on Donna Haraway’s work on the practices through which the differential boundaries between categories of “human” and “nonhuman” are stabilized and destabilized. Names such as Donna Haraway, Judith Butler, Andrew Pickering, Bruno Latour, and Joseph Rouse are relevant with respect to performativity.

In her 2003 article “Posthumanist Performativity: Toward an Understanding of How Matter Comes to Matter,” Barad offers a deep analysis of her relational ontology that rejects the metaphysics of words and things (p. 812), that rejects the thingification – the turning of relations into “things” and “entities” (p. 812), that rejects representationalism as a Cartesian by-product – “a particularly inconspicuous consequence of the Cartesian division between ‘internal’ and ‘external’ that breaks along the line of the knowing subject” (p. 806), that rejects that there “are representations on the one hand and ontologically separate entities awaiting representation on the other,” that “representationalism separates the world into the ontologically disjoint domains of words and things, leaving itself with the dilemma of their linkage such that knowledge is possible” (p. 811). Barad observes that both scientific realists and social constructivists believe that scientific knowledge mediates our access to the material world, scientific knowledge in its multiple representational forms such as theoretical concepts, graphs, particle tracks, photographic images. Both groups subscribe to representationalism, they differ only on the question of referent, whether scientific knowledge represents things as they really are in “nature,” or represents objects that are the product of culture (pp. 805–6).

Barad recommends rather “a performative understanding, which shifts the focus from linguistic representations to discursive practice” (p. 807). “Reality is not composed of things-in-themselves or things-behind-phenomena but ‘things’-in-phenomena” (p. 817). In an “ongoing flow of agency... ‘part’ of the world makes itself differentially intelligible to another ‘part’ of the world,” and in this way, “local causal structures, boundaries, and properties are stabilized and destabilized,” something which does not take place in space and time “but in the making of spacetime itself” (p. 817). “The universe is agential intra-activity in its becoming” (p. 818). For Barad, the primary ontological units are not “things” but phenomena, namely, dynamic topological reconfigurings – or entanglements, relationalities, (re)articulations. Words are not “primary semantic units,” but “material-discursive practices through which boundaries are constituted” (p. 818). This dynamism of ongoing reconfigurings of the world is agency, where the term humans refers to phenomena, to “beings in their differential becoming, particular material (re)configurings of the world with shifting boundaries and properties that stabilize and destabilize along with specific material changes” (p. 818). Humans are neither pure cause nor pure effect but part of the world in its open-ended becoming (p. 821). Meaning is not a property of individual words or groups of words. “In its causal intra-activity, ‘part’ of the world becomes determinately bounded and propertied in its emergent intelligibility to another ‘part’ of the world. Discursive practices are boundary-making practices that have no finality in the ongoing dynamics of agential intra-activity” (p. 821). Knowing means that part of the world makes itself intelligible to another part. Practices of knowing and being are mutually implicated and not isolatable. It is not possible to obtain knowledge by standing outside of the world: we know because we are of the world, we are part of the world in its differential becoming. “The separation of epistemology from ontology is a reverberation of a metaphysics that assumes an inherent difference between human and nonhuman, subject and object, mind and body, matter and discourse. Onto-epistem-ology – the study of practices of knowing in being – is probably a better way to think about the kind of understandings that are needed to come to terms with how specific intra-actions matter” (p. 829).

Human bodies and human subjects do not preexist as such and are no mere end products either. “Matter is not little bits of nature, or a blank slate, surface, or site passively awaiting signification; nor is it an uncontested ground for theories... matter is substance in its intra-active becoming – not a thing, but a doing, a congealing of agency. Matter is a stabilizing and destabilizing process of iterative intra-activity... matter refers to the materiality/materialization of phenomena, not to an inherent fixed property of abstract independently existing objects of Newtonian physics... Neither discursive practices nor material phenomena are ontologically or epistemologically prior. Neither can be explained in terms of the other. Neither has privileged status in determining the other” (p. 822). Matter is substance in its intra-active becoming – not a thing but a doing, a congealing of agency, not a fixed essence (p. 828).

The reconceptualization of materiality offered by Barad allows for the empirical world to be taken seriously again, yet, not as the seeming “immediately given-ness” of the world, but with the understanding that the objective referent is phenomena. All bodies, not merely “human” bodies, come to matter through the world’s iterative intra-activity... Bodies are not objects with inherent boundaries and properties, are material-discursive phenomena. “Human” bodies are not different from “nonhuman” ones (p. 823), there is no exterior observational point where a “knower” can stand in externality to the natural world being investigated. The condition of possibility for objectivity is exteriority within phenomena, agential separability, not any absolute exteriority. “We” are not outside observers of the world, and we are not located at particular places in the world either, we are part of the world in its ongoing intra-activity... “we are a part of that nature we seek to understand” (p. 828). Humans are part of the “worldbody space in its dynamic structuration” (p. 829).

<sup>97</sup> Physicist Michio Kaku has impressed me when he used the metaphor of a shallow pond for the idea of hyperspace: for fish in a shallow pond, the universe is two-dimensional; the fish cannot imagine what we know, those who look down from a bridge and can go forward, backward, left, and right, like the fish, but, in addition, also up and down. I have always felt to be the person on the bridge looking down on me, the fish. See Michio Kaku: The Flash Gordon of Physics, uploaded on May 31, 2011, <https://youtu.be/jYiiiE2fwmc>, <http://bigthink.com>:

Michio Kaku: When I was a child, there was another event that helped to shape the person I was. My parents used to take me to San Francisco to the Japanese Tea Garden, and I used to spend hours watching the carp swimming just beneath the lily pads. And then I asked a question of myself that only a child would ask, and that is, what would it be like to be a fish? What would it be like to be a carp swimming in a two-dimensional world? A very shallow pond where you can only go forward, backwards, left and right, and anyone who would have talked about up, the world of the third dimension, was considered a crackpot. And then I imagined a carp scientist there and I said to myself, what would this scientist say? He would say, “Bah, humbug. Anyone who talks about the third-dimension, the world beyond the Lilly pads, the world beyond the pond, is an idiot because you can only go inside the pond. That is the universe. The universe is only what you can see and touch.”

And then I imagined reaching down and grabbing the scientist fish, lifting him up into the world of the third dimension. What would he see? Well, he would see beings moving without fins. A whole new law of physics. Beings breathing without water. A whole new law of biology. And then I imagined putting him back into the pond. What would he tell his fellow fish?

Well today, we physicists believe, but we cannot yet prove that we are the fish. We spent all our life in three-dimensions; going forward, backward, left, right, up, down, but anyone who talks about a higher dimension, the world of up, hyperspace, a dimension beyond what you can see and touch is considered a crackpot. Until recently. And now, of course, some of the world’s leading physicists now believe that perhaps there are other dimensions, other universes, other worlds to explore.

And perhaps one day, our machines will give us definitive proof of the existence of hyperspace.

<sup>98</sup> Latour, 2004.

<sup>99</sup> When I did my doctoral research in Somalia and Rwanda in 1998 and 1999, I grew increasingly uneasy with the idea that doing science means being an “expert” who “looks down” on “samples” of people to “study them.” I wrote an article on how research can humiliate (Lindner, 2001b), where I reflected on the notion of equality in dignity and how it means the dismantling of social systems of ranked honor, and how also science ought to follow and dismantle hierarchy. When I wrote my article in 2001, I was not aware of the ongoing ontological material turn in philosophy and science, also called new materialism, new empiricism, posthuman studies, actor network theory, affect theory, material feminism, or process philosophy, see Professor of Education Maggie MacLure, 2015, p. 3.

Maggie MacLure, 2015, explains this turn as the radical dismantling of hierarchy in philosophy and science, where ontologies of shifting relations among entities are now seen as “flat,” no longer as belonging to different “levels” or domains. See De Landa, 2002, Hultman and Lenz Taguchi, 2010. MacLure explains that “matter neither anchors nor submits to discourse,” matter is “neither backdrop nor bedrock,” instead, “matter and discourse are co-implicated in complex and shifting arrangements from which the world emerges,” MacLure, 2015, p. 5. The new materialisms oppose the “bifurcation of nature,” in Alfred North Whitehead’s words – see Stengers, 2002/2011 – they oppose dividing the world into battles where the general fights to win over the particular, mind over matter, science over philosophy, or the reverse, they oppose a world where what Derrida calls “violent hierarchies of binary opposition” reign, such as nature/culture, discourse/matter, human/nonhuman, representation/reality, original/copy, abstract/concrete. “Such binary logic, and the pairs of terms that it structures, have no place in new materialist ontologies, at least as ‘primitive’ or foundational entities,” MacLure, 2015, p. 5. MacLure introduces the reader to many of the theorists who have mobilized this turn, such as Karen Barad, 2007, who talks about material-discursive assemblage, or Gilles Deleuze, 1969/1990, who speaks of assemblage, or, as Jean-Jacques Lecercle, 2002, explains, a logic of unholy mixtures, she introduces to Andrew Pickering, 1995, who uses the term mangle, or to Manuel De Landa, 2002, who speaks of manifold. Other important names are Patricia Clough, 2009, Donna Haraway, 2007, Myra Hird, 2009, Brian Massumi, 2002, Rosi Braidotti, 2013, Vicki Kirby, 2011, Bruno Latour, 2004, Jane Bennett, 2010, and Isabelle Stengers, 2002/2011.

<sup>100</sup> “Inverted refrigerator,” quoted in Vambheim, 2016, p. 87, as a term coined by social anthropologist Thomas Hylland Eriksen.

<sup>101</sup> I thank Peter Coleman and Beth Fisher-Yoshida for making me aware of the book Tribe by Sebastian Junger, 2016, where Junger describes the significance of the sense of belonging, for instance, the intimate bonds of platoon life that combat veterans experience. Junger suggests that the loss of closeness that comes at the end of deployment may explain the high rates of post-traumatic stress disorder suffered by military veterans. This was also what I had learned in Sarajevo and Dubrovnik during the time I lived there in 2016, when people I met would talk about the solidarity they experienced during the siege and how they miss this today. In 2017, Sebastian Junger and Nick Quested came out with the documentary film Hell on Earth: The Fall Of Syria And The Rise of ISIS, where they explain how Da’esh could rise not least because democracy was seen as a greater threat by the ruling government in Syria. See <http://channel.nationalgeographic.com/hell-on-earth/>. It is a privilege to have Beth Fisher-Yoshida and Peter Coleman as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, together with Ardian Adžanela and other friends in Sarajevo and Dubrovnik.

<sup>102</sup> Schöne neue Welt: “Die Welt wird auf den Kopf gestellt,” documentary film on Silicon Valley by Claus Kleber, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, 2016, www.zdf.de/schoene-neue-welt/schoene-neue-welt-43773220.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. See also, “Silicon Valley and the Search for Happiness,” by Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), May 19, 2017, <http://gsgi.info/index.php/blog/858-silicon-valley-and-the-search-for-happiness>.

<sup>103</sup> Beverly Crawford, research director at the Center for German and European Studies at Berkeley, gave an excellent introduction to international relations and gender at the Sommerakademie Friedens- und Konfliktforschung in Loccum, Germany, July 20–25, 1997. I thank Günter Bierbrauer for organizing this excellent series of summer schools. See for more literature, Brock-Utne, 1985, Cooper, et al., 1989, LeGates, 2001. Crawford explained that feminist theory can be divided into three perspectives that partly criticize each other: Standpoint theory celebrates difference, liberal theory celebrates equality, and critical, postmodern theory celebrates deconstruction. Let me give a very brief summary of Beverly Crawford’s week-long seminar: Standpoint theory criticizes logical positivism and claims that there is no neutral perspective. Individual perspective is seen as influenced by class and gender position. Moderate standpoint theory attenuates radical standpoint theory’s assertions (of aggressive men and nurturing women). Two main aspects inform a gendered standpoint, namely, mothering and psychological training. Standpoint theory has been criticized for being too essentialist. Newer theories address this point, for instance, empirical theory (as pertaining to method) and liberal theory (as pertaining to political orientation). Liberal theory celebrates equality and accepts logical positivism – reality can be objective, reality exists independently of our standpoint, and therefore the world is available to men and women, where men can care as well as women. Postmodern and critical theory rejects essentialism and emphasizes deconstruction. It claims that all of reality is social construction, nothing is true “out there,” and we should therefore not accept anything as fact – most importantly, since everything is constructed, there are no masculine or feminine properties.

<sup>104</sup> Lee Badgett, 2016 describes the problems an “activist scholar” faces.

<sup>105</sup> See Belenky, et al., 1997a, Belenky, et al., 1997b, Clinchy, 1996. In connected knowing “one attempts to enter another person’s frame of reference to discover the premises for the person’s point of view,” Clinchy and Zimmerman, 1985. See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>106</sup> See Marmot, 2004b. See also “Status and Stress,” by Moises Velasquez-Manoff, New York Times, July 27, 2013, http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/07/27/status-and-stress/?src=me&ref=general&\_r=0. This article is part of The Great Divide, a series on inequality – the haves, the have-nots and everyone in between – in the United States and around the world, and its implications for economics, politics, society and culture. The series moderator is Joseph E. Stiglitz, a Nobel laureate in economics, a Columbia professor and a former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers and chief economist for the World Bank. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>107</sup> Paul Street writes in “The Plutocracy Grinds On,” July 25, 2013, www.paulstreet.org/?p=987:

Beneath the latest headline story about Egypt, Syria, the Zimmerman verdict, or the newborn English “royal baby” the United States financial plutocracy and the savage economic inequality on which it rests just grind along in full “mainstream” media view. Three weeks ago, the U.S. House stripped food stamps from the nation’s farm bill, threatening to deny a basic support to the nearly 50 million Americans who can’t afford adequate food. “We’ll get to [food stamps] later,” House Speaker John Boehner told reporters, failing to add that the House will try to cut the average daily food subsidy from its current paltry level of $4.39.”

See also Paul Street’s most recent book, Street, 2014. See www.paulstreet.org for his biographical background: Paul Louis Street is an independent journalist, policy adviser, and historian. Formerly he was Vice President for Research and Planning at the Chicago Urban League. Among his recent books are Barack Obama and the Future of American Politics (Paradigm, 2008), Racial Oppression in the Global Metropolis: A Living Black Chicago History (Rowman and Littlefield, 2007), and Segregated Schools: Educational Apartheid in Post-Civil Rights America (Routledge, 2005). His articles have appeared in the Chicago Tribune; In These Times; Dissent; Z Magazine; Black Commentator; Monthly Review; Journal of American Ethnic History; Journal of Social History, and other publications.

<sup>108</sup> Hitchens, 2012, pp. 17–18.

<sup>109</sup> Jeismann, 2000.

<sup>110</sup> Matsumoto, et al., 2007, p. 92: “With Emotion Regulation (ER), “people voyage through life; without it, they vindicate their lives.” It is a privilege to have David Matsumoto as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>111</sup> Sheets-Johnstone, 2007. For Lévinas the “space of love” is the space of ambivalence(s), the space of otherness(es). To be ethical, one must be willing to enter this space. Communication is more than the exchange of information, it is the very vulnerability of myself that I bring.

<sup>112</sup> Groos and Jehles, 2015, discuss the impact of poverty on children’s development. In my case, I was able to experience the privilege of belonging to a small rural community for the first six years of my life, a context that also where my father hails from. Later, I had the privilege of living in historical times and a societal context that allowed me to partake in elite education, even though my parents, not least due to their background as displaced people, would not have been able to shoulder the costs that are to be lifted today. In present-day’s contexts, I might have fallen outside.

<sup>113</sup> Galtung explained this point at the Higher Education for Peace Conference in Tromsø, Norway, May 4–6, 2000; see www.peace.uit.no.

<sup>114</sup> I very much resonate with the message of the article written on higher education by Cristina Escrigas, 2016.

<sup>115</sup> “Changing the Political Climate: A Transitional Imperative,” by Richard Falk, Great Transition Initiative, September 2014, <http://greattransition.org/publication/changing-the-political-climate-a-transitional-imperative>. Richard Falk is the Albert G. Milbank Professor Emeritus of International Law at Princeton University, and he writes in this article:

The state-centric world order has proven incapable of offering solutions that serve the human interest, as distinct from the totality of national interests, for global challenges such as nuclear weaponry and climate change. Indeed, the nationalization of political identity has become a liability to achieving a functional and humane world order for the twenty-first century. The idea of “world citizenship,” however, prematurely assumes the existence of a global political community when this is precisely what is absent. The concept of “citizen pilgrim” posits that the most useful form of reimagining citizenship conceives of civic responsibility by reference to time as well as space. The citizen pilgrim is engaged in a struggle to create a global political community in the future that will have capabilities and an outlook that are attuned to human interests, including the need for long-term planning. Citizen pilgrims are dedicated to promoting a transition to a humane world order in which states likely remain the dominant actors on the global stage, whose priorities are subordinated as necessary to serve the interests of humanity as a whole.

<sup>116</sup> Smedslund, 2013, p. 118. It was a great privilege to have Jan Smedslund as advisor for my doctoral research, supporting my advisor Reidar Ommundsen, and later as head of my doctoral committee at the University of Oslo in 2001. He was the first one who made me think of dignity humiliation being different from honor humiliation. Later, both became highly esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I wish to thank both for decades of crucial support.

<sup>117</sup> Smedslund, 2013.

<sup>118</sup> Smedslund, 1988, 1997.

<sup>119</sup> Lindner, 2001e.

<sup>120</sup> See Ruben Nelson, strategic futures thinker, <http://foresightcanada.com/ruben-nelson-biography/>. He draws on the scholarship of historians of religion (see, for instance, Wilfred Smith, 1962, on the reification of religion), humanistic psychologists (such as Rollo May, 1969), sociologists of knowledge (such as Peter L. Berger and Luckmann, 1966), philosophers of personhood (such as John Macmurray, 1961) and appliers of complexity theory (such as Thomas Homer-Dixon, 2006).

<sup>121</sup> Evelin Lindner’s Invitation to Join the World Dignity University Initiative, a video where Lindner is being interviewed by Ragnhild Nilsen about her vision of the World Dignity University. This dialogue took place at the University in Oslo in Norway on February 8, 2011. See <https://youtu.be/A8voZQ0t6bU>. Lasse Moer, Chief Engineer for Audiovisual Technology at the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University in Oslo, was the technical director of this video-take. Ragnhild Nilsen uses the artist name Arctic Queen. See also a WDU introduction in pdf format and a flyer on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/videos.php#wduinvitation. See a copy of this video on a site in China.

<sup>122</sup> See more in Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>123</sup> “Respekt for menneskets verdighet – en hovedfaktor i alle forsoningsprosesser,” lecture by philosopher Tore Frost, representative of the prize committee, during the award ceremony of the Blanche Majors Reconciliation Prize 2012 being awarded to HRH Crown Prince Haakon, Peace House in Risør, Norway, June 13, 2012, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/forsoningspris/2012/hovedtale\_respekt\_menneskeverd.htm. Translated and summarized from the Norwegian original by Lindner:

Det er også klokt ikke å forsøke seg på definitive begrunnelser av denne karakter. Kravet om anerkjennelse av menneskets iboende verdighet er et postulat uten innhold.

<sup>124</sup> Macklin, 2003, Abstract.

<sup>125</sup> “The Stupidity of Dignity,” by Steven Pinker, The New Republic, May 27, 2008, <https://newrepublic.com/article/64674/the-stupidity-dignity>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of Pinker’s article.

<sup>126</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on August 29, 2016.

<sup>127</sup> The following may serve as an illustration of this line of thought. See first “Responses: The Humiliation Myth: Humiliation Doesn’t Explain Terrorism; the Spread of Political Islam Does. A Response to Peter Bergen and Michael Lind,” by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Spring 2007, Number 4, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/4/the-humiliation-myth/>:

The relatively tame Danish political cartoons that ran in 2005 unleashed a torrent of protests among Political Islamists on three continents, threats of mass murder, and actual violence and killings. What does this reaction have to do with any reasonable sense of humiliation?

See for a reaction, “Humiliation and Terrorism: Goldhagen’s Analysis,” by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, March 27, 2007, www.theaugeanstables.com/2007/03/27/humiliation-and-terrorism-goldhagens-analysis/:

Now that’s a great expression – “reasonable sense of humiliation.” Any discussion of “humiliation” should include what’s “reasonable.” For example, any discussion of “humiliation” at checkpoints needs to address the reason for the checkpoints, the incredible shame to Islam that these checkpoints exist because of a death-cult that sends over women and children as suicide terrorists, and the fact that – viewed reasonably – Israeli checkpoints are a mild response to an outrageous provocation. Only the ability of demopaths to argue against the “Apartheid Wall” renders the “humiliation” of checkpoints the cause, not the consequence of the problem.

See also Lindner, 2006a, on Somali warlord Osman Ato, p. 85 (italics in the original):

A warlord may indeed cover up power lust by using humiliation rhetoric. Ato may or may not be using humiliation to shield ulterior motives. The situation could be mixed – perhaps he sometimes feels genuinely humiliated and sometimes merely uses the humiliation argument to his political advantage. We do not know. What we know, and what a researcher has to report, is that he uses the humiliation argument, genuinely or not. An impartial researcher must recount this, nothing more and nothing less. A researcher cannot discount a person’s claims to feeling humiliated.

<sup>128</sup> My book titled Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, came out in 2006 in Praeger with the term humiliation hesitantly accepted in the title. See Lindner, 2006a. Other publishers had not wished this term to be part of the title of a book altogether. The only book that had been published before, at least to my awareness, with the phrase humiliation in the title, was William Ian Miller, 1993, and his book on Humiliation: And Other Essays on Honor, Social Discomfort, and Violence. My book was subsequently honored as “Outstanding Academic Title” by the journal Choice for 2007 in the USA.

<sup>129</sup> A few examples of many are Prime Minister of India Narendra Modi, President of the Philippines Rodrigo “Rody” Roa Duterte, also known as Digong, or Prime Minister of Hungary Viktor Mihály Orbán. Also novelists make this trend palpable through their work, such as Henning Ahrens, 2015, who shows how it affects, for instance, rural areas in Germany.

<sup>130</sup> “The End of a Cycle?” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), December 6, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/12/italian-politics-the-end-of-a-cycle/:

But how can we expect from those who have been supporting and singing neoliberal globalization since 1989 to admit their guilt? It is a sign of the time that now the IMF, World Bank and OECD are those who are calling for a return to the role of the state as the regulator and decrying how social and economic inequalities are a brake to growth... For more than a generation the market has been considered as the only legitimate actor in economy and society. The values inscribed in the large majority of constitutions, like justice, solidarity, participation, and cooperation have been substituted by competition, enrichment, and individualism. Today, children in China, Russia, the United States and Europe are not united by values, but by brand: Adidas, Coca Cola. Citizens have become consumers. In the near future, data collected about each citizen through Internet, on their lives, activities and consumes, will further steer their lives.

<sup>131</sup> Lutz and Abu-Lughod, 1990, Foucault, 1991, Rancière, 2004. See also Fierke, 2004 and Barnett and Raymond, 2005.

<sup>132</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2016b. See also Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>133</sup> See, among others, Sarraj, 2002, Sayler, 2004, Giacaman, et al., 2007, Elison and Harter, 2007, Walker and Knauer, 2011.

<sup>134</sup> Leidner, et al., 2012.

<sup>135</sup> Kendler, et al., 2003.

<sup>136</sup> Otten and Jonas, 2013, p. 33.

<sup>137</sup> See for research on inertia, for instance, Leidner, et al., 2012. According to anthropologist Scott Atran, humiliation is a negative predictor for terrorism, since those who feel humiliated become submissive. However, it is different to act on behalf of others' exposure to humiliation, such as the second or third generation of Muslims in Britain who believe that their parents were humiliated. See, among others, Ginges and Atran, 2008.

See for an illustration, "Wave of Indigenous Suicides Leaves Canadian Town Appealing for Help," by Liam Stack, New York Times, March 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/19/world/americas/canada-youth-suicide.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>138</sup> Galtung, 1969.

<sup>139</sup> "Wave of Indigenous Suicides Leaves Canadian Town Appealing for Help," by Liam Stack, New York Times, March 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/19/world/americas/canada-youth-suicide.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. Hartling commented in a personal communication on March 21, 2016:

Canada's indigenous populations demonstrate the deleterious effect of continuous humiliation: they are driven into waves of suicide as an outflow of "cumulative humiliation," of a lingering trauma of colonialism and prejudice, of "cultural genocide."

<sup>140</sup> Lewis, 1971.

<sup>141</sup> Freire, 1968/1970, 1968/1973, and Morais, 1979, 1983. See Andersson and Richards, 2013, Chapter IV, p. 15, of the unpublished manuscript:

De Morais, in contradistinction to Freire, sets forward not two but three levels of awareness. He adds to Freire's two, which are: the naïve level and the critical level. The third is the organizational level of awareness. At the naïve level a person is aware of problems but is unable to understand their cause (and so may blame God or the Fates). The critically conscious person is able to identify the factors responsible for problems, and their inter-relationship. Organizational awareness is reached when the person has the ability to act together with others to address a problem or attain particular results. Organizational awareness manifests what de Morais calls a "methodological rationality."

<sup>142</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>143</sup> Ibid.

<sup>144</sup> See, for instance, political scientist Simon Koschut's overview over publications relevant for the "emotional turn" in international relations theory: Åhäll and Gregory, 2015; Bially Mattern, 2011; Edkins, 2003; Fattah and Fierke, 2009; Hall and Ross, 2015; Hutchinson, 2016; Koschut, 2014; Leep, 2010; Ross, 2013; Solomon, 2014; Van Rythoven, 2015; Wilcox, 2015. The narrative of humiliation in the Middle East, for instance, shows the intertextuality of emotions, and that "emotions have a history," Fattah and Fierke, 2009, p. 70.

See also an interview that Alexandros Koutsoukis conducted with Steven C. Roach on November 2, 2016, as part of a series of interviews under the motto "Resurrecting IR Theory," where Roach discusses affective values in international relations, the value of resilience, and how to theorize emotional actions, www.e-ir.info/2016/11/02/interview-steven-c-roach/.

Recent literature on war and conflict deals with aspects of emotion and discourse analysis in social constructivist terms. See, for instance, the book series War, Politics and Experience edited by Christine Sylvester, 2013, 2015. This is the description of this series on www.routledge.com/War-Politics-and-Experience/book-series/WPE:

This series will publish interdisciplinary, single-authored and edited volumes that address the experiences of war and the everyday politics of war-making that shape and are shaped by those experiences. These works will push boundaries of knowledge and disciplinarity by offering new, theoretically sophisticated, and empirically rich approaches to understanding the experiential politics of war in the post-World War II period.

See a selection of relevant publications in Managhan, 2012, Heath-Kelly, 2013, McSorley, 2013, McSorley, 2015, Rowe, 2013, Park-Kang, 2014, Bachmann, et al., 2015, Schlund-Vials and Martínez, 2017. See, especially, Inger Skjelsbæk, 2013, with whom I have the privilege of collaborating at the University of Oslo. See also Elina Penttinen, 2013, on how “the mechanistic-deterministic worldview derived from the Newtonian model has influenced the epistemology and methodology of IR (i.e., the idea that the world is constituted of independent fragments), and seeks ways to develop a new methodology for IR by drawing on the potential of a non-fragmented worldview”:

The author argues that it is this modern Western view of human beings (or societies) as isolated and separate from the world that prevents IR from finding new solutions to the questions of war and conflict. Drawing upon case studies, testimonies and examples from film, this book instead proposes joy as an alternative methodology for studying IR, exploring the possibility of self-healing in physical and emotional trauma in extreme violent conditions. The author also discusses how posthumanism contributes to positive psychology in understanding happiness and empowerment, and demonstrates how these findings can further widen the study of IR.

<sup>145</sup> Lindner, 2009a, pp. 18–20. One among myriad ways of describing emotions is to say that they are “socially recognized, structured episodes of affectively valenced response, such as joy or fear... a sub-category of patterned affective reactions,” in contrast to “affective dynamics” that are “the range of ways embodied mental processes and the felt dimensions of human experience influence thought and behavior,” Hall and Ross, 2015, p. 848. Indigenous psychologists, however, are critical of Western approaches, see, for instance, Louise Sundararajan, 2015, p. 200:

In contrast to the Western notion of emotion as a disruptive force to be regulated by reason and cognition... the Chinese consider the human capacity for responding to impact affectively as a positive quality to be enhanced through expanding consciousness. Consciousness expands not by reason or cognition but by mind-to-mind transactions.

<sup>146</sup> Elster, 2003. It was a great inspiration for me to meet with Jon Elster November 26, 2003, in Paris.

<sup>147</sup> See relational-cultural theory and cultural-historical activity theory. Linda Hartling builds on relational-cultural theory, as developed by her mentor Jean Baker Miller and colleagues, see, among others, Hartling, et al., 2008. Linda Hartling is the former Associate Director of the Jean Baker Miller Training Institute, and it is an immense privilege to have her now as the director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. Relational-cultural theory (CRP) evolved from the work of Jean Baker Miller, M.D., pioneer in women’s psychology. It assumes that humans have a natural drive toward relationships, and it applies a growth-in-connection model of human growth and development to organizational settings. See Miller, 1976/1986, and for an overview, among others, Hartling, et al., 2008, and Jordan, 2010.

<sup>148</sup> Cultural-historical activity theory builds on the work by Lev Vygotsky, 1978, and Aleksei Leontiev, 1975/1978. Its philosophical premise is that human physical and mental activity is integrally connected to large-scale cultural and historical processes and vice versa. It studies the culturally and historically situated, materially, and socially mediated process by which humans purposefully transform natural and social reality, including themselves. Community is seen to be central to all forms of learning, communicating, and acting, which means that community is central to the process of learning-by-doing, of making tools of all kinds, of communicating, and of making meaning and acting. The term cultural-historical activity theory (CHAT) was coined by Michael Cole and used by Yrjö Engeström for the various lines of work that had been inspired by Vygotsky. See for recent publications, for instance, Kapteinin and Nardi, 2006, Roth, et al., 2012. See also Richards and Andersson, 2015. I am indebted to Howard Richards and Gavin Andersson for bringing me to South Africa in 2013, and to the Organization Workshop (OW), a CHAT-based organizational learning method developed by Gavin Andersson, et al., 2016, as summarized in this Abstract:

Cultural-Historical Activity Theory (CHAT), is a theoretical framework which traces its roots to activity theory approaches first developed in Russian Psychology (by Vygotsky and Leontiev, in particular). The Organization Workshop (OW) is a CHAT-based organizational learning method with its roots, unusually, in the global South. Among the many scholarly applications of CHAT-related approaches of the last two decades, the OW stands out – together with the Finnish Change Laboratory (CL) and the French Clinique de l’Activité/Activity Clinic (AC) – as a field praxis-oriented laboratory method specifically geared to the world of work. OW is a large-group capacitation method. Organization is not taught. Participants achieve organization. It was initiated in the 1960s by the Brazilian lawyer, sociologist, and political activist Clodomir Santos de Moraes, who discovered, in his own experience, that a large group facing common challenges, given freedom of organization, access to a common resource pool and appropriate support from facilitators, could learn to organize itself. From Brazil, the “laboratorios organizacionais” spread out in the seventies to most of Latin America where they were applied at times on a national scale. The method was transferred in the eighties to English-speaking southern Africa where most of the theoretical work exploring its CHAT roots originated. Recently this eminently southern CHAT-based laboratory method has started to find applications in the North.

It is a privilege to have Howard Richards and Gavin Andersson as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>149</sup> Donati and Archer, 2015, go far beyond the “plural subject” of analytical philosophers and speak of the “relational subject.” They treat “the relation” between people as real and regard relational “goods” and “evils” as having causal effects upon agents and their subsequent actions. See the book description:

Many social theorists now call themselves “relational sociologists,” but mean entirely different things by it. The majority endorse a “flat ontology,” dealing exclusively with dyadic relations. Consequently, they cannot explain the context in which relationships occur or their consequences, except as resultants of endless “transactions.” This book adopts a different approach which regards “the relation” itself as an emergent property, with internal causal effects upon its participants and external ones on others. The authors argue that most “relationists” seem unaware that analytical philosophers, such as Searle, Gilbert and Tuomela, have spent years trying to conceptualize the “We” as dependent upon shared intentionality. Donati and Archer change the focus away from “We thinking” and argue that “We-ness” derives from subjects’ reflexive orientations towards the emergent relational “goods” and “evils” they themselves generate. Their approach could be called “relational realism,” though they suggest that realists, too, have failed to explore the “relational subject.”

See also Jervis, 2006.

<sup>150</sup> Wilson and Gowdy, 2013.

<sup>151</sup> New York Times economics columnist Robert Frank, 2011, argues that competition alone will not solve present-day problems, and that Charles Darwin’s understanding of competition describes economic reality more accurately than Adam Smith’s. Frank shows that economic competition, far from creating a perfect world, tends to encourage behaviors that are harmful to the group and to individuals. See also Corneo, 2014, and Mammon: Per Anhalter durch das Geldsystem, film by Philipp Enders, <https://absolutmedien.de/film/4047/MAMMON+-+PER+ANHALTER+DURCH+DAS+GELDSYSTEM>.

<sup>152</sup> Lindner, 2007d, Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 136. See also “Tribalism, Nationalism and Fascism,” by John Scales Avery, Human Wrongs Watch, January 5, 2017, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2017/01/06/tribalism-nationalism-and-fascism/>.

<sup>153</sup> The journal Psychological Studies published a special issue titled “Kenneth J. Gergen and Social Constructionism.” Misra and Prakash, 2012, highlight, on p. 123, that “in seeing human activities as culturally bound, we can envision alternative futures, especially with the understanding of phenomena like neural plasticity,” and they continue:

A concerted investment in relational processes has become a key concern of Ken’s work. He notes that in today’s era of rapidly changing “glocal” boundaries, the idea of an individual appears dislocated and inept. He also observes that the celebration of the individual mind as a locus of capacity for autonomous thought and judgment is a legacy of Western Enlightenment. Treating the individual mind as the primary reality creates a gulf between the self and other. In this scheme we don’t know the other mind so one need not trust the other. As a consequence, relationships are becoming artificial and of secondary importance and we are moving toward a culture of loneliness, self-centeredness, and antagonism, with reduced degree of community participation.

In the same issue of the journal, Anderson, 2012, speaks of therapy as “relational recovery,” highlighting that knowledge is not an individual cognitive construction but a communal one, that language is not representational but a dynamic social process, and that a person is not a bounded self but a “multi-being.” Wortham and Jackson, 2012, argue that education should enhance relationships rather than an individual’s mind, since individuals are woven into contextualized knowledge.

<sup>154</sup> “UN Chief Issues Warning on the Rise of Fascism,” by Peter Walker, Independent, December 9, 2016, www.independent.co.uk/news/world/politics/united-nations-chilling-warning-rise-fascism-human-rights-prince-zeid-a7464861.html. See also “Warning Against Rising Intolerance, UN Remembers Holocaust and Condemns Anti-Semitism,” United Nations News Centre, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=56058#.WI3BB\_KOWgy. See, furthermore, “Trump Marks the End of a Cycle,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 21, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/02/trump-marks-the-end-of-a-cycle/:

Bannon is organising a new international alliance of populists, xenophobes and nationalists – made up of thee likes of Nicholas Farage (United Kingdom), Matteo Salvini and Beppe Grillo (Italy), Marine Le Pen (France) and Geert Wilders (Netherlands) – with Washington as their point of reference... If, beyond its national agenda, the Trump administration succeeds in creating a new international order based on illiberal democracy, we should start to worry because war will not be far away.

See, furthermore, Marine le Pen – Frontfrau der europäischen Rechten, documentary film by Michael Welch, Janine Bechthold, Tina Roth, and Olga Sviridenko, Das Erste, April 10, 2017, www.daserste.de/information/reportage-dokumentation/dokus/sendung/marine-le-pen-106.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>155</sup> Linser, 2016. It was a great privilege to be part of Jo Linser's family, and to have Nimrod Sheinman as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>156</sup> Vance, 2016. See also note 25 in the Preface.

<sup>157</sup> "Anticipating India," by Shekhar Gupta, The Indian Express, April 26, 2014, <http://indianexpress.com/article/opinion/columns/anticipating-india>, quoted in Miklian and Sahoo, 2016.

<sup>158</sup> Rechtsextremismus: Wie Neonazis das Dorf Jamel erobert haben, by Silke Hasselmann, Deutschland Radio, August 18, 2015, www.deutschlandradiokultur.de/rechtsextremismus-wie-neonazis-das-dorf-jamel-erobert-haben.1001.de.html?dram:article\_id=328595. Mecklenburg-Vorpommern (known as Mecklenburg-West Pomerania in English) is a thinly populated marginal federated state in northern Germany that offers opportunities to militant extremists.

<sup>159</sup> Da'esh is the acronym from the Arabic name Al-Dawlah Al-Islamiyah fe Al-Iraq wa Al-Sham, for the self-proclaimed Islamic State (IS) in Iraq and Syria, or ISIL (Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant), or ISIS (the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria).

<sup>160</sup> "The Lure Of The Syrian War: The Foreign Fighters' Bosnian Contingent," by Vlado Azinović and Muhamed Jusić, Atlantic Initiative, 2015, http://atlanticinitiative.org/images/THE\_LURE\_OF\_THE\_SYRIAN\_WAR\_THE\_FOREIGN\_FIGHTERS\_BOSNIAN\_CONTINGENT/The\_Lure\_of\_the\_Syrian\_War\_-\_The\_Foreign\_Fighters\_Bosnian\_Contingent.pdf, Introduction.

<sup>161</sup> Hitler, 1925–26/1999, p. 167.

<sup>162</sup> See for a recent publication Maartje Elshout, et al., 2016. In her research, the prototype structure identified the fear of being humiliated in the future as "afraid of repetition" or "preventing repetition." While it first only seemed a peripheral feature, in the recall study, it became the most central feature of all, Maartje Elshout in a personal communication on February 7, 2017. See also Hartling and Lindner, 2016b, 2017.

<sup>163</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>164</sup> "Liechtenstein's Populists Gain Ground," by Sara Stefanini, Politico, February 5, 2017, www.politico.eu/article/liechtensteins-populists-gain-ground/.

<sup>165</sup> Ashcroft, 2005, p. 679. I thank Charles Coil, 2009, for making me aware of Ashcroft's article.

<sup>166</sup> Macklin, 2003.

<sup>167</sup> Beyleveld and Brownsword, 2001.

<sup>168</sup> This position is inspired by the writings on development and freedom of Amartya Sen, 1992, and Martha Nussbaum, 2000. Ashcroft also points at more recent articles in The Lancet, such as Marmot, 2004a, or Horton, 2004.

<sup>169</sup> Ashcroft describes this position as mainstream in European bioethics and theological writing on bioethical topics, as exemplified by Leon Kass, 2002.

<sup>170</sup> See also Chong and Druckman, 2007. The field of Michael Karlberg is the study of discourse as a social force. See the conclusion in Karlberg, 2013:

As the examples above illustrate, the maturation of human dignity lies, ultimately, in the reframing of human consciousness. And as the preceding analysis explains, the work of reframing will have to occur, in part, at the level of discourse, because discourse is a primary medium through which the codes of human culture and consciousness evolve. Moreover, at this critical juncture in history, this reframing has become an evolutionary imperative. Our reproductive and technological success as a species has transformed the conditions of our own existence. Over seven billion people now live on this planet and our technologies have amplified our impact a thousand-fold. Inherited codes of culture and consciousness are proving maladaptive under these conditions.

In this context, reframing significant discourses according to the logic of organic interdependence is a vital adaptive strategy. Skeptics may, of course, dismiss this view as naïve and unrealistic. But is it realistic to assume that the prevailing culture of contest can be sustained indefinitely on a planet with over seven billion people wielding increasingly powerful and destructive technologies? Is it realistic to assume that narrowly self-interested motives can continue to drive human behavior in this context? Is it realistic to assume that the struggle for power and domination can continue to define our social existence indefinitely under such conditions? What is needed, in this regard, is a new realism – a new interpretive frame. The logic of the social body frame offers this. And, in the process, it provides a genuine foundation for human dignity.

Michael Karlberg is professor in the department of Communication Studies at Western Washington University and much of his research is focused on what he calls “the culture of contest” and how it is becoming increasingly unjust and unsustainable. Within that context, much of what he examines is how the culture of contest is manifest in public discourse. See also <http://faculty.wvu.edu/karlberg/publications>.

Also Karlberg applies the ideal-type approach described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949, that I use in my work. He explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality. See Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

See also Coser, 1977.

<sup>171</sup> Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c. See the work by political scientist Stanley Feldman, for instance, Feldman, 2003. Read more in “The Rise of American Authoritarianism,” by Amanda Taub, Vox, March 1, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/3/1/11127424/trump-authoritarianism#change.

In the early 1990s, political scientist Stanley Feldman did innovative research. Feldman, a professor at SUNY Stony Brook, believed authoritarianism could be an important factor in American politics in ways that had nothing to do with fascism, but that it could only reliably be measured by unlinking it from specific political preferences. For Feldman, authoritarianism was a personality profile rather than a political preference, and in his questionnaires he therefore asks about parenting goals. He developed the definitive measurement of authoritarianism by asking four simple questions that appear to focus on parenting but are in fact designed to reveal how highly the respondent values hierarchy, order, and conformity over other values. This were his questions: Please tell me which one you think is more important for a child to have:

- independence or respect for elders?
- obedience or self-reliance?
- to be considerate or to be well-behaved?
- curiosity or good manners?

<sup>172</sup> Karlberg, 2013.

<sup>173</sup> Karlberg, 2013, p. 7.

<sup>174</sup> Karlberg, 2013, points at a number of authors, such as Bowles and Gintis, 2011a, Henrich and Henrich, 2007, Henrich, et al., 2010, de Waal, 2009, Keltner, 2009, Tomasello, 2009, Scott and Seglow, 2007, Margolis, 1982, Sober and Wilson, 1998, Fellman, 1998, Monroe, 1996, Lunati, 1992, Lewontin, 1991, Kohn, 1990, Rose, et al., 1984, Spanish National Commission for UNESCO, 1986, Axelrod, 2006, Leakey and Lewin, 1977, Becker, 1976.

<sup>175</sup> Karlberg, 2008. Karlberg also points at Monroe, 1996, Kohn, 1990.

<sup>176</sup> Karlberg, 2013.

<sup>177</sup> Mann, 1997, p. 12. I thank Charles R. Coil, 2009, for making me aware of Mann’s article.

<sup>178</sup> See Richards, 2016c. And see Tillich, 1954, and King, 1955.

<sup>179</sup> Howard Richards, Research Professor of Philosophy, Earlham College. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>180</sup> Richards, 2016c.

<sup>181</sup> It was a great privilege to have Don Klein as founding member of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship and member of its board of director until his passing in 2007. We always hold his memory dear.

<sup>182</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. During my adolescence, I survived its traumatic experiences through reading Viktor Frankl, 1946/1959, Erich Fromm, 1976, and others. See also Rollo May, 1969. I resonate with the field of affect theology and their focus on the heart of faith, tracking how human emotions become religious feelings. See <http://revthandeka.org/affect-theology-thandeka.html>:

The spiritual foundation of liberal faith, after all, is not a set of doctrinal claims or creeds or religious beliefs or ideas. Liberal faith begins with transformed and uplifted feelings that exalt the human soul and let us love beyond belief, come what may. I use affect theology’s core principle of love beyond belief when I work with congregations. The goal: to transform “corps cold” churches (as Ralph Waldo Emerson put it) into sanctuaries that warm and elevate the human heart and inspire folks to stand strong on the side of love.

<sup>183</sup> Wergeland, 1843, p. 23:

Haard er den Himmel, som bedækker Norge, Klimatet er strength; vi ere Beboere af en hyperboræisk Afkrog paa Kloden, og Naturen har bestemt os til at savne saamange af de mildere Landes Fordele. Men Naturen, god midt i sin tilsyneladende Ubarmhertighed, og retfærdig midt i sin Uretfærdighed, har aabenbar villet levne os Erstatning for hine Savn, og derfor beskikket, at Norges, i nogle Henseender saa ufordeeltige, Beliggenhed skulde i andre Henseender være saare velgjørende.

I thank Bernt Hagtvæt and Nikolai Brandal for making me aware of this quote. It is a privilege to have Bernt Hagtvæt as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>184</sup> Nagata, 2007.

<sup>185</sup> Lindner, 2014b, 2017. I follow sociologist Alain Touraine when he asks how a transnational economy can be reconciled with the reality of introverted communities, and when he replies that a few social rules of mutual tolerance and respect for personal freedom are not sufficient, that deeper bonds must and can be forged. Touraine argues that people can and should create a personal life-project and construct an active self or “subject,” with the ultimate aim to form meaningful social and political institutions. See Touraine, 2000, and Touraine, 2003. Alain Touraine focuses on social and political conflict in his work. I regret that I could not attend the debate moderated by Michel Wieviorka in Paris in 2014, see Castells, et al., 2014. It is a privilege for me to be associated with the Maison des Sciences de l’Homme in Paris since 2001, initially through social psychologist Serge Moscovici. The first two conferences of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies were inspired and hosted by Hinnerk Bruhns, and supported by Michel Wieviorka at the Maison des Sciences in 2003 and 2004. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoware/annualmeetings.php. It is a privilege to have Hinnerk Bruhns and other renowned colleagues from France as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>186</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, “Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change,” by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

<sup>187</sup> “Dignity’s Due: Why Are Philosophers Invoking the Notion of Human Dignity to Revitalize Theories of Political Ethics?,” by Samuel Moyn, The Nation, November 4, 2013, www.thenation.com/article/176662/dignitys-due#, review of Waldron, 2012. I thank Volker Berghahn for making me aware of these publications.

<sup>188</sup> “Freedom vs. Dignity: A Sustainable History Thesis for the Arab Spring,” by Nayef R.F. Al-Rodhan, Georgetown Journal of International Affairs, November 7, 2013, <http://journal.georgetown.edu/freedom-vs-dignity-a-sustainable-history-thesis-for-the-arab-spring-by-nayef-al-rodhan/>. Nayef R.F. Al-Rodhan is a Senior Member of St. Antony’s College at Oxford University, Oxford, United Kingdom, Senior Fellow and Centre director of the Centre for the Geopolitics of Globalization and Transnational Security at the Geneva Centre for Security Policy, Geneva, Switzerland. He is the author of, among others, Al-Rodhan, 2009, 2012.

<sup>189</sup> Ibid.

<sup>190</sup> “Dignity Deficit Fuels Uprisings in the Middle East,” by Nayef Al-Rodhan, Yale Global, September 10, 2013, yaleglobal.yale.edu/content/dignity-deficit-fuels-uprisings-middle-east:

The lack of collective dignity felt by so many in the Arab world is the result of a combination of internal autocratic and corrupt regimes, with predictable ineffective and unaccountable governance, supported by external actors with short-term geopolitical interests. This is coupled with a sense of collective cultural siege and hopelessness about the future. There is also a perception in the Arab-Islamic world that the West is disrespectful and dismissive of the people, the culture and their pivotal historical contributions to world civilization. This is said to be evidenced by the persistence of inhuman conditions for the stateless Palestinians, despite clear violations of human rights and international law, endless UN resolutions and concrete Arab peace plans. These factors together have produced a number of fatalistic perceptions and dignity deficits that are plaguing a region and limiting its tremendous potential...

<sup>191</sup> “Dignity Deficit Fuels Uprisings in the Middle East,” by Nayef Al-Rodhan, Yale Global, September 10, 2013, yaleglobal.yale.edu/content/dignity-deficit-fuels-uprisings-middle-east.

<sup>192</sup> “Fractured Lands: How the Arab World Came Apart,” by Scott Anderson, New York Times, August 11, 2016, www.nytimes.com/interactive/2016/08/11/magazine/isis-middle-east-arab-spring-fractured-lands.html.

<sup>193</sup> Tim Weiskel in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” June 1, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016.

<sup>194</sup> Lindner, 2009a, Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. See a review by social psychologist and Kurt Lewin expert David Bargal, 2011b. Read more about David Bargal in note 169 in the Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions at the end of Section Three.

<sup>195</sup> Kenneth Gergen, 2010, p. 5, noted that the brain may be thought of “as an instrument for achieving culturally constructed ends.” He continues on page 7:

In effect, brain scan data do not solve the problem of inference, but simply remove it from one site of speculation to another. Brain scans do not speak for themselves. To read them as evidence of depression, deceit, trust, empathy, political preferences, and so on, is essentially to participate in a tradition of cultural interpretation. In this sense, making connections between mind and brain is a form of cultural projection. That is, one must participate in a cultural tradition in which the existence of mental states is presumed in order to read brain scans in their terms.

<sup>196</sup> Snow, 1959.

<sup>197</sup> Foucault, 1979, 1991, Foucault and Gordon, 1980. See also Lutz and Abu-Lughod, 1990, Rancière, 2004, Fierke, 2004 or Barnett and Raymond, 2005, and “Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Four,” video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 8, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, http://youtu.be/pwDiTMUpJ\_Q. See the text also on www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/Richards04EarlyFoucaultPartFour8May2013.pdf. Richards, et al., 2015a, is the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>198</sup> Habermas, 1968/1972, p. 4. See also Fatemi, 2014.

<sup>199</sup> “‘Die andere Ansicht’ – Niedergang oder Sieg des Rechtsstaats?,” by Thomas Fischer, Zeit Online, August 25, 2015, www.zeit.de/gesellschaft/zeitgeschehen/2015-08/abweichende-meinung-rechtskultur-fischer-im-recht/komplettansicht. Thomas Fischer is a federal judge in Karlsruhe.

<sup>200</sup> McCauley and Moskalenko, 2014b.

<sup>201</sup> Billig, 2013.

<sup>202</sup> See “The Ties That Bind Captive to Captor,” by Frank M. Ochberg, Los Angeles Times, April 8, 2005, <http://articles.latimes.com/2005/apr/08/opinion/oe-ochberg8>. Frank M. Ochberg is co-founder of the National Center for Critical Incident Analysis and former associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health. See the book that one of the hostages, Kristin Enmark, 2015, wrote more than four decades after the event. See also Lindner, 2009a, p. 133.

<sup>203</sup> Sherratt, 2013.

<sup>204</sup> Chege, 1996.

<sup>205</sup> Kevin Clements, in a personal communication on August 21, 2007.

<sup>206</sup> See the Inside Job transcript, September 2010, www.sonyclassics.com/awards-information/insidejob\_screenplay.pdf.

<sup>207</sup> Western-liberal political philosophy regards the forms of dignity that can be legally respected and protected by a state as the right to self-determination, autonomy, and agency, see Rosen, 2012. The concept of dignity-as-autonomy is consistent with the social contest frame of dignity, see Karlberg, 2013:

When human nature is conceived largely in terms of self-interested motives playing out within competitive social arenas, then the autonomy of individuals and groups to pursue their own interests, within a set of rules that apply equally to all, takes on paramount importance.

<sup>208</sup> Schachter, 1983, p. 849. I thank Charles R. Coil, 2009, for making me aware of Schachter’s work.

<sup>209</sup> See Lindner, 2016b. Also Rosen, 2012, p. 11, explains that dignity “originated as a concept that denoted high social status and the honors and respectful treatment that are due to someone who occupied that position.” See also Karlberg, 2013. Michael Karlberg speaks of the social command frame of dignity, in contrast to the social contest frame and the social body frame, and explains:

This strongly hierarchical conception of dignity has, in turn, been adapted in various ways. Beyond signifying people of high rank, the term has also been used to signify an elevated or refined manner or bearing, as well as elevated or weighty discourse. What all of these meanings share in common is the signification of relative worth or value. Dignity thus denotes the relative worth or value of people, or of their bearing and manner, or of their thoughts and speech. All of these meanings thus denote social hierarchy in one form or another. In practice, such hierarchy has often been ascribed according to distinctions based on class, race, creed, genealogy, and other socio-economic categories.

<sup>210</sup> Schleichert, 1999, p. 17:

Das Enthymem ist eine im Alltag überaus häufig benutzte Form des Argumentierens. An ihm lässt sich sehr gut erkennen, wie sich die logische und die rhetorische Betrachtungsweise unterscheiden. Mit dem Begriff des Enthymems ist zweierlei gemeint:

i) In so gut wie allen alltäglichen Argumentationen erwähnt man nicht alle eigentlich nötigen Prämissen ausdrücklich, denn das wäre unnötig, langweilig, abstoßend, quälend. Wendet sich ein Redner an ein ihm wohl bekanntes Publikum, z. B. an Rechtsanwälte, Ärzte, Katholiken etc., so kann er bei seinen Zuhörern ohne weiteres bestimmte Kenntnisse und Urteile voraussetzen und muss sie nicht ausdrücklich erwähnen. Man argumentiert korrekt, aber enthymematisch, wenn man sagt: Sokrates ist sterblich, denn er ist ein Mensch. Durch explizites Hinzufügen des nur im Geiste (en thymo) formulierten, aber nicht ausgesprochenen Arguments Alle Menschen sind sterblich wird daraus die Standardform eines korrekten logischen Schlusses: Alle Menschen sind sterblich; Sokrates ist ein Mensch; also ist Sokrates sterblich. Bei Bedarf kann eine enthymematische Argumentation durch Hinzufügen der fehlenden Argumente also stets auf die Form eines vollständigen Schlusses gebracht werden. Der Unterschied zwischen einem logisch korrekten Beweis und einer rhetorischen Argumentation ist hier ein rein äußerlicher, technischer. Dies ist die erste Bedeutung von "Enthymem."

Nehmen wir folgendes Beispiel. Meier sagt: Ich finde, X sollte wieder Regierungschef werden; die Zeiten sind schwierig, und X hat schon zehn Jahre regiert. Müller aber entgegnet: Ich finde, X sollte nicht mehr Regierungschef werden; die Zeiten sind schwierig, und X hat schon zehn Jahre regiert. Diese beiden enthymematischen Argumentationen sind äußerlich ganz gleich, führen aber zu entgegengesetzten Thesen. Der Grund dafür ist klar: Die beiden Argumentationen benutzen zwei verschiedene, nicht ausgesprochene Argumente. Für die Analyse ist es nötig, die nicht ausgesprochenen Argumente explizit zu machen; häufig sind gerade sie der eigentliche Streitpunkt. Meier geht von dem Satz aus Wenn die Zeiten schwierig sind, sollte man einen altgedienten Regierungschef nicht auswechseln. Müller dagegen vertritt genau die gegenteilige Position.

<sup>211</sup> See, for instance, John MacMurray, 1949/1991, Isaiah Berlin, 1958. See also Whose Freedom, by George Lakoff, 2006b:

Since September 11, 2001, the Bush administration has relentlessly invoked the word "freedom." Al-Qaeda attacked us because "they hate our freedom." The U.S. can strike preemptively because "freedom is on the march." Social security should be privatized in order to protect individual freedoms. The 2005 presidential inaugural speech was a kind of crescendo: the words "freedom," "free," and "liberty," were used forty-nine times in President Bush's twenty-minute speech.

In Whose Freedom?, Lakoff surveys the political landscape and offers an essential map of the Republican battle plan that has captured the hearts and minds of Americans – and shows how progressives can fight to reinvigorate this most beloved of American political ideas.

See also "Bastard Economics of Greedy Neoliberalism and the Killings of the Innocents in London Tower," by Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), June 16, 2017, <http://gcgi.info/index.php/archive/867-bastard-economics-of-greedy-neoliberalism-and-the-killings-of-the-innocents-in-london-tower>:

For years successive governments have built what they call a bonfire of regulations. They have argued that "red tape" impedes our freedom and damages productivity. Britain, they have assured us, would be a better place with fewer forms to fill in, fewer inspections and less enforcement. But what they call red tape often consists of essential public protections that defend our lives, our futures and the rest of the living world. The freedom they celebrate is highly selective: in many cases it means the freedom of the rich to exploit the poor, of corporations to exploit their workers, landlords to exploit their tenants and industry of all kinds to use the planet as its dustbin. As RH Tawney remarked, "Freedom for the pike is death for the minnows."

Even Chinese President Xi, during the first day of the G20 summit in Hangzhou, China, September 4–5, 2016, stressed that inequality measured by the GINI coefficient has reached 0.7, surpassing the alarm level, which stands at 0.6. An official admitted: "Leaders have realized that they cannot ignore it anymore." The topic of fairness and inclusiveness was mentioned in every contribution. See "China Convinces G20 Nations with 'Fair' Communiqué," by Jorge Valero in Hangzhou, EurActiv, September 6, 2016, www.euractiv.com/section/global-europe/news/china-convinces-g20-nations-with-fair-communique/.

<sup>212</sup> "The Future of the United States of America," by Howard Richards, TRANSCEND Media Service, January 2, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/01/the-future-of-the-united-states-of-america/:

Although the social relations (like the relation of buyer to seller, or the relation of employer to employee), the social positions (like the position of owner), and the social constructs (like contracts) are constituted by cultural rules, the social structure thus constituted is material. It cashes out on the ground as some eating and others not, some sleeping under dirty blankets on sidewalks while others sleep between clean sheets in beds, some living and others dying. Agreeing with Jürgen Habermas that in our contemporary world the primary institution is the market, and that governments are secondary to it, I use the phrase “social structure” mainly to refer to the relations and positions established by the legal and moral rules that constitute markets. Those rules can be placed in these four categories that I call the four sides of “the box”...: 1 is property. 2 is contract. 3 is the individual autonomous juridical subject. 4 is the duty not to harm others with the conspicuous absence of a duty to help others.

The basic social structure also might be summarized in three words as “liberty without solidarity.” (Thinking, as Milton Friedman and similar thinkers often do, of 1 2 3 and 4 as four aspects of the one idea of liberty, also called freedom). In five words the basic social structure is “liberty without equality and fraternity.”

<sup>213</sup> Since solidarity is a moral obligation rather than a law, a relationship rather than a status, social concord rather than a contract, and communal rather than individual, fraternité is the most delicate part to be integrated into the motto. Fraternity was defined in the Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man and the Citizen of 1795 (Déclaration des droits et des devoirs de l’homme et du citoyen de 1795) as such: “Do not do to others what you would not wish to be done to you; always do the good to others you wish to receive” (Ne faites pas à autrui ce que vous ne voudriez pas qu’on vous fit; faites constamment aux autres le bien que vous voudriez en recevoir).

<sup>214</sup> Lindner, 2012d, Chapter 8. Robert K. Greenleaf (1904 – 1990) was the founder of the modern Servant leadership movement and the Greenleaf Center for Servant Leadership. See the 25th anniversary edition of Greenleaf, 2002.

<sup>215</sup> See note 212 above.

<sup>216</sup> Lindner, 2000e; Lakoff and Johnson, 1980, 1999. See also the work of phenomenological philosopher Maurice Merleau-Ponty (1908 – 1961), who emphasized the body as the primary site of knowing the world, strongly influenced by Edmund Husserl and Martin Heidegger. See Merleau-Ponty, 1945/1962, 1961/1993, Merleau-Ponty and Lefort, 1964/1968.

<sup>217</sup> Wetz, 2014. I thank Carsten Frerk for making me aware of this book. See the summary of the book, translated from German by Lindner:

All know the feeling: Something just is not right. Somehow, just now, I am treated incorrectly and I feel a resistance in me, and the urge to rebel. But how can I describe this gut feeling make more precisely?

Based on the rather questionable concept of human dignity Wetz illuminates our self-esteem based on numerous real-life examples – without having to resort to traditional notions such as that human beings are created in God’s image. His alternative approach builds on biologically explainable striving for self-preservation. Wetz shows how self-esteem can be defined, justified and lived – even in extreme situations.

What social and personal requirements must be met to ensure that self-esteem can develop? What threatens it?

When is it justified to feel humiliated and to resist it? When does self-respect become arrogance?

Conclusion: self-esteem is an ‘orthopedic challenge’: It is the art to walk upright!

<sup>218</sup> Karlberg, 2013.

<sup>219</sup> Weber-Guskar, 2016.

<sup>220</sup> Schroeder and Bani-Sadr, 2017, Chapter 4: Middle East and West: Can Common Ground Be Found? Abstract, p. 89. I thank Sultan Somjee for sharing this manuscript with me.

<sup>221</sup> Schroeder, 2012, Abstract: “In conclusion, proponents of universal human rights will fare better with alternative frameworks to justify human rights rather than relying on the concept of dignity.”

<sup>222</sup> Schroeder and Bani-Sadr, 2017, Chapter 4: Middle East and West: Can Common Ground Be Found? Abstract, p. 89.

<sup>223</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber’s three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

Also Michael Karlberg explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality. See Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>224</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>225</sup> Etzioni, 2013, p. 333.

<sup>226</sup> Gottman, et al., 1997, Wilce, 2009.

<sup>227</sup> Crespi and Yanega, 1995. Several different levels of sociality are differentiated, such as presociality (solitary but social), subsociality, parasocial (including communal, quasisocial, and semisocial), and eusocial. The term eusocial includes organisms (originally, only invertebrates) with the following features: 1. Reproductive division of labor (with or without sterile castes), 2. Overlapping generations, 3. Cooperative care of young.

<sup>228</sup> Wilson, 2013. See also “Interview with Edward O. Wilson: The Origin of Morals,” by Philip Bethge and Johann Grolle, Spiegel Online International, February 26, 2013, www.spiegel.de/international/spiegel/spiegel-interview-with-edward-wilson-on-the-formation-of-morals-a-884767.html. See, furthermore, Edward O. Wilson on the Human Condition, FORA.tv., April 20, 2012, http://fora.tv/2012/04/20/Edward\_O\_Wilson\_The\_Social\_Conquest\_of\_Earth.

<sup>229</sup> Honneth, 1992/1995, Honneth, 1997.

<sup>230</sup> Bauman, 2001.

<sup>231</sup> Chandhoke, 2009.

<sup>232</sup> Scheler, 1912/1961.

<sup>233</sup> Scheler, 1913/1923/1954.

<sup>234</sup> Taylor, 1994.

<sup>235</sup> Taylor, 1992.

<sup>236</sup> Greenfeld, 1992, 1996, 2006. See also Hechter, 1992. See more in Lindner, 2009b.

<sup>237</sup> See Heine, et al., 1999.

<sup>238</sup> Wendt, 2003, pp. 510–511. See also Ringmar, 2002. I am thankful for having had the chance to communicate with Alexander Wendt, for the first time in 2005.

<sup>239</sup> Political scientist Reinhard Wolf, 2013, draws on Frijda, 2008, p. 73, when he speaks of resentment as emotional attitude, or a persistent affective disposition, which creates biases toward perceived offenders. Wolf focuses particularly on hierarchical social settings, where a resenting person or group feels that others enjoy undeserved power and/or prestige. Wolf draws on Feather, 2008, Feather and Nairn, 2005, Oldmeadow and Fiske, 2012, and Petersen, 2002. Whereas anger usually is the first reaction when others infringe on one’s status by assuming a higher rank, resentment will often ensue when one lacks the means to reassert one’s “proper” position at once, unable to “rectify” the perceived injustice. The result will be something that is less “hot” and less visible than anger, a lasting ill-will towards the other, associated with negative stereotyping and the desire to bring the other down. While resentful feelings are more difficult to detect than open anger, indirect evidence for the experience can be found, in particular, in discourse. The reason is that the desire to bring someone down from a weak position can only be achieved through the help of allies. Those allies, however, must first be mobilized, they have to be convinced, grievances must be explained, and the “offenders” status delegitimized. See also Koschut, 2014, or Petersen, 2002. Wolf advises researchers who wish to detect this phenomenon to watch out for accusations of supposedly unfair status shifts, for the invocation of normative principles that call for rectifying “unfair” policies, for justifications for retributive measures, for insinuations which tarnish the social or moral status of the “wrongdoers,” for signs of Schadenfreude when the other experiences setbacks, and, at last, the presence of revenge fantasies. See also more recent work by Feather, 2015. It has been a privilege to have Reinhard Wolf in our 2009 Annual Dignity Conference in Honolulu, Hawai’i.

<sup>240</sup> Philosopher Howard Richards lives in Chile, and works often in South Africa. I had the privilege of joining him in both places. See Lindner, 2012e, Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>241</sup> “An Interview with Dr. Nora Sveaass: Why Torture Is Wrong,” by Nilantha Ilangamuwa, CounterPunch, October 11–13, 2013, www.counterpunch.org/2013/10/11/why-torture-is-wrong/. Nora Sveaass is an internationally renowned psychologist who became a member of the Committee against Torture in the United Nations (UNCAT). Sveaass is currently an associate professor at the Department of Psychology in the University of Oslo, Norway. It is a privilege for me to be included in her teaching program.

See also the work of Beatriz Brinkmann, 1999. I thank Wolfgang Kaleck for making me aware of Brinkmann’s work.

Brinkmann's experience in prison in Chile is described in "Belagerungszustand in Chile: Wer ist ein Terrorist?" by Freimut Duve, Die Zeit, October 31, 1986, <http://pdf.zeit.de/1986/45/wer-ist-ein-terrorist.pdf>. Brinkmann is working with the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims (CINTRAS), in Chile, a center for mental health and human rights, that works to alleviate the physical and emotional suffering of persons affected by torture or other forms of political repression. See www.irct.org. I thank Freimut Duve for his support for the Global Responsibility Festival "Hamburger IdeenKette" that I organized in Hamburg, Germany, in 1993, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/03.php.

<sup>242</sup> Health and Human Rights Info, www.hhri.org/about/.

<sup>243</sup> The International Center for Transitional Justice (ICTJ) is an international nonprofit organization specializing in the field of transitional justice with www.ictj.org. I thank Wolfgang Kaleck for making me aware of this organization.

<sup>244</sup> I thank Wolfgang Kaleck, et al., 2007, for explaining to me, during our meeting in Berlin on May 17, 2011, that there is no standard model for dealing with the past, but that a number of precedents have been established through the work of special rapporteurs and experts of the United Nations on the issues of impunity, reparations, and best practices in transitional justice. The principles against impunity were initially formulated by Louis Joinet in 1997 and later revised by Diane F. Orentlicher in 2005. Louis Joinet was a longtime UN expert and one of the main architects behind the Convention against Enforced Disappearances, and Diane Orentlicher is professor of international law and co-director of the Center for Human Rights and Humanitarian Law at Washington College of Law. The "Joinet/Orentlicher" principles are based on the precepts of state responsibility and the inherent right of redress for individual victims of grave human rights violations. See the reports submitted by Theo Van Boven (E/CN.4/Sub.2/1993/8), Louis Joinet (E7CN.4/Sub.2/1997/20/Rev.1), Diane Orentlicher (E/CN.4/2005/102/Add.1), and Cherif Bassiouni (E/CN.4/2000/62), and also Orentlicher, 2016.

<sup>245</sup> Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>246</sup> See, among others, Kleinig, 2011, Kleinig and Evans, 2013.

<sup>247</sup> See Pettit, 1996, 1997b, 2014.

<sup>248</sup> Fuller and Gerloff, 2008. It is a privilege to have Robert Fuller as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>249</sup> "Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can't Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden," by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>. See for a recent publication, Bergen, 2016. "Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can't Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden," by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>. See for a recent publication, Bergen, 2016. See, furthermore, "The Future by Al Gore – Review," by John Gray, The Guardian, January 31, 2013, www.theguardian.com/books/2013/jan/31/the-future-al-gore-review. See Gore, 2013. See, furthermore, Pratto and Stewart, 2011, or Jost, et al., 2009. Compare also Tocqueville, 1856.

<sup>250</sup> Pape, 2005.

<sup>251</sup> Moïsi, 2007, p. 8. I thank Selina Köhr for making me aware of this commentary by Dominique Moïsi. See also Moïsi, 2009.

<sup>252</sup> "Responses: The Humiliation Myth: Humiliation Doesn't Explain Terrorism; the Spread of Political Islam Does. A Response to Peter Bergen and Michael Lind," by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Spring 2007, Number 4, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/4/the-humiliation-myth/>. See also "Humiliation and Terrorism: Goldhagen's Analysis," by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, March 27, 2007, www.theaugeanstables.com/2007/03/27/humiliation-and-terrorism-goldhagens-analysis/.

<sup>253</sup> Lindner, 2001a.

<sup>254</sup> Huntington, 1996.

<sup>255</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 172. See also Moïsi, 2007.

<sup>256</sup> Lindner, 2002, p. 127.

<sup>257</sup> Adapted from Lindner, 2006a, pp. 171–72.

<sup>258</sup> "Critical thinking #3: An Interview with the Literary Critic Dwight Garner," by David Wolf, Prospect, October 15, 2013, www.prospectmagazine.co.uk/art-books/interview-with-dwight-garner/#.UnY2lBCmYnP.

<sup>259</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 59. Kessels, 2010.

<sup>260</sup> Keyes, 1995. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book and sharing her notes.

<sup>261</sup> See reflections on excluded knowledges in the dialogue that Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and Lindner conducted after his Lecture Two of Beyond Foucault: The Rise of Indigenous Subjugated Knowledges, given in Pretoria, South Africa, May 4, 2013, <http://youtu.be/Ic1lckWWE1Y>, and <http://youtu.be/emYEFqQT0oE>:

Catherine Odora Hoppers: ...Foucault's genealogies rewrite the past from the point of view of excluded knowledges. In Heidegger's terms this would mean adopting the way of being-in-the-world of the excluded. I would call it a "metaphysical" methodology."

Howard Richards: ..."metaphysical" in the sense in which Roy Bhaskar reclaims that much-abused word, in the sense that every culture has a metaphysics because it has its characteristic categories of thought...

Catherine Odora Hoppers: ...a methodology that moves back and forth between the mental models or categories of one culture and those of another culture.

See for more Richards, et al., 2015a. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>262</sup> Escrigas, 2016, pp. 7–8:

Today, education is focused on maximizing the content of the curriculum, some of which will soon become obsolete. To address the rapid evolution of knowledge, the prevailing educational paradigm needs to shift from a focus on knowing to one on being... We must find ways for specialization to coexist with education for global citizenship.

<sup>263</sup> "What Orwell Can Teach Us About the Language of Terror and War," by Rowan Williams, The Guardian, December 12, 2015, www.theguardian.com/books/2015/dec/12/words-on-war-a-summons-to-writers-orwell-lecture. I thank Ken Pope and Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. Merton, 1969, wrote an essay on "War and the Crisis of Language," in which he develops an Orwellian polemic against the corruption of writing and how the speech of military strategists and of politicians is characterized "by a narcissistic finality."

<sup>264</sup> In 2017, the scientists in charge of the Doomsday Clock set the clock at just two and a half minutes from the apocalypse, considering that the Earth is now closer to oblivion than it has ever been since 1953, at the height of the nuclear confrontation between the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union. See <http://thebulletin.org/timeline>. See also the William J. Perry Project (www.wjperryproject.org) that was created by the former U.S. secretary of defense to work toward a world in which nuclear weapons are never used again.

<sup>265</sup> "Scientists Warn of Perilous Climate Shift Within Decades, Not Centuries," by Justin Gillis, New York Times, March 22, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/23/science/global-warming-sea-level-carbon-dioxide-emissions.html?\_r=0. See also the first book by climate scientist James Hansen, 2009.

<sup>266</sup> "The Conflict Horizon 3: Only Connect," Dan Smith, Dan Smith's Blog: Analysis and Commentary on World Issues, April 25, 2014, dansmithsblog.com/2014/04/25/the-conflict-horizon-3-only-connect/. Dan Smith, director of the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, and former director of the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO) and International Alert in London, has this forecast for the future of the world: Unless there is dramatic change in how economies are run, population growth and fast-paced urbanization will drive continually increasing demand for natural resources across the next 20 years, leading to wide-spread social disconnection. This scenario will combine with rising prices as a result of growing competition for access to natural resources. Among the "winners" will be the conflict entrepreneurs, the gang leaders, the under-bosses, who will recruit their foot soldiers among disaffected young men. Most people will be caught in between.

<sup>267</sup> Schirrmacher, 2006. I thank Axel Rojczyk for making me aware of this book.

<sup>268</sup> "The Torah of Nonviolence: An Interview with Rabbi Lynn Gottlieb," by Emma Varvaloucas, Tricycle, Fall 2012, www.tricycle.com/web-exclusive/torah-nonviolence. Lynn Gottlieb is one of the first ten women to become a rabbi and the first woman ordained as a rabbi in the Jewish Renewal Movement, Rabbi Lynn is a committed peace activist who grounds her life in nonviolence. I thank Nimrod Sheinman for making me aware of this article. See also Gottlieb, 1995. It is a privilege to have Nimrod Sheinman as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I will never forget how he and his family welcomed me to spend many days, in November 2003, with his father-in-law, Joseph-Harry Linser, a Holocaust survivor, to chronicle his horrifying experiences. See his life story in Linser, 2016.

<sup>269</sup> In The Public and its Problems, philosopher John Dewey, 1927, defends democracy against journalist Walter Lippmann's argument that the "bewildered herd" can never become "omnicompetent citizens" and therefore needs experts. Yet, also these experts, as outsiders, would be incapable of effective action. John Dewey (1859 – 1952) agreed with the assertion of Lippmann (1889 – 1974) that the modern world was becoming too complex for citizens to grasp all its aspects, but Dewey, unlike Lippmann, believed that the public (a composite of many "publics" within society) could form a “Great Community” that could become educated about issues, come to judgments and arrive at solutions to societal problems.

<sup>270</sup> Douglas Schuler in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” June 2, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016:

It’s important to note that we must not consider civic intelligence as solely a knowledge-based capability. For it to function well it must draw on a variety of important enablers. Over the years my students and I developed a framework for civic intelligence that included a large number of important enablers. We identified many that are frequently omitted, such as self-efficacy, solidarity, and courage as well as some knowledge-based ones such as metacognition and salient knowledge.

See www.publicsphereproject.org/sites/default/files/enablers.pdf.

<sup>271</sup> Papadopoulos, 2006, pp. 98–99.

<sup>272</sup> Claudia Neubauer, Fondation Charles Léopold Mayer (FPH), in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” May 25, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016. See also Neubauer and Calamé, 2013. See, furthermore, Fellman, 1998.

John Amos Comenius (1592 – 1670) speaks of gardens. He is a Czech philosopher, pedagogue and theologian, considered to be the “father of modern education.” Philosopher Henning Vierck has even created a Comenius garden in one of the most socially vulnerable parts of Berlin, see Der Comeniusgarten in Berlin, ttt – titel thesen temperatmente, Das Erste, July 24, 2016, www.daserste.de/information/wissen-kultur/ttt/sendung/comeniusgarten-berlin-neukoelln-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>273</sup> “The Election, Lao Tzu, a Cup of Water,” by Ursula Kröber Le Guin, Book View Café, November 21, 2016, <http://bookviewcafe.com/blog/2016/11/21/the-election-lao-tzu-a-cup-of-water/>. I thank Linda Hartling of making me aware of her fellow Portland citizen Ursula Le Guin and her work.

<sup>274</sup> Ibid.

<sup>275</sup> This paragraph is adapted from Lindner, et al., 2009.

<sup>276</sup> Lindner, 2014d. See also Lindner, 2001a, Lindner, 2001d, Lindner, 2001c, Lindner, 2004a, Lindner and Backe, 2004, Lindner, 2005b, Lindner, 2005a, Lindner, 2008b, Lindner, 2009c, Lindner, et al., 2009, Lindner, 2011, Lindner, 2012a, Lindner, 2012g, Lindner, 2014d. See also Del Re, et al., 2009.

<sup>277</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>278</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>279</sup> Rosa, 2005, 2010. Hartmut Rosa is a professor of Sociology at the Friedrich Schiller University of Jena in Germany, and the head of the Max-Weber center of advanced cultural and social studies of the University of Erfurt. See also Why Are We Stuck Behind the Social Acceleration? TED talk by Hartmut Rosa, March 11, 2015, <https://youtu.be/7uG9OFGId3A>. The lead question is: How to have a good life in light of rapid social acceleration? Rosa’s argument is that modern societies are subjected to too close-meshed time regimes that regulate, coordinate, and control them outside of any ethical concepts.

<sup>280</sup> Parkins and Craig, 2006. See also the 2016 Stanford University’s 125th Commencement Address by historical documentary filmmaker Ken Burns, June 12, 2016, <http://news.stanford.edu/2016/06/12/prepared-text-2016-stanford-commencement-address-ken-burns/>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this address.

<sup>281</sup> I thank philosopher Dagfinn Kåre Føllesdal for his support in formulating initial questions in 1996. I had the privilege of participating in his Ethics Programme at the Norwegian Research Council 1995 – 1996. Dagfinn Føllesdal’s publications span many decades, see, among others, Føllesdal, 1988, Føllesdal and Depaul, 2015. I was immensely touched by his personal support to my work, was deeply influenced by his ethics seminars, and profoundly impressed by his lectures, among others, by “How Can We Use Arguments in Ethics?” presentation at the Norwegian Academy of Science, Oslo, Norway, January 30, 1996.

Dagfinn Føllesdal shared the following reflections with me in 1996:

In humiliation: the most important aspect is that it is a subjective notion, a subjective experience, less an objective notion. Although, of course, in some cases also an outsider can say: this is a humiliation. The subjective perspective is important. Therefore Husserl is helpful with respect to culture difference: How is humiliation experienced subjectively? People of different cultures will not be aware that they humiliate, and even if they do, they will not understand. People from the same culture would just abstain from doing something which humiliates. What is experienced as humiliating? For example in a peace treaties, one has to be careful not to humiliate somebody who is falling. There is a spectrum of possible reactions, depending on the experience of justice: for instance, if it means an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth.

What is the role of anger? Sometimes anger is not caused by humiliation. Incidents need to be mapped out in rich descriptive studies to show what it was that caused feelings of humiliation.

What is the role of ethics? Could there ever be justified humiliation? In Norway in the Middle Ages, outside of the church, there was Pranger, which was used as efficient way to stop crime. What about publishing the names of people who cheat on taxes in the newspaper? What about reputation, deterrent, and cost-effectiveness?

<sup>282</sup> See a summary composed in 2011 of Volume I: The Past: Terrorism in the Name of Honor – Terror as Accepted Path to Honor/Domination (the headings have changed slightly since):

Volume I, Section 1: The Security Dilemma – Too Far Apart

The first sections of this book invite the reader into understanding the landscape within which tactics of terror are inscribed. For this analysis, phenomena such as circumscription, which is a term used in anthropology, and the security dilemma, a term used in political science, are central. This conceptualization not only helps understanding in general by opening space for novel and constructive interpretations of present-day reality, but, most importantly, it opens space to manifest rejection in respectful ways.

Volume I, Section 2: Honor Humiliation – Outside Pressure to Kill

Honor is the term used in this book to denote the cultural script of the duty to kill one's enemies, to go to duel-like combat when one's status is threatened by equal peers or enemies, and for inferiors to remain in their due lowly place. This script still informs cultures in many parts of the world today. Terrorism often draws on this cultural script. It is therefore crucial to understand its inner logic. This section looks at the intricate and often hideous ways in which the ranking of human worth into supposedly higher beings who deserve more, and lesser beings who deserve less, was enforced throughout long stretches of human history in most world regions.

Terrorism is inscribed into the conundrum of overtly enforced and covertly achieved rankings, as they both stand in opposition to the ideal of equality in dignity. If I have learned to obey, and furthermore learned to identify with my masters definitions of the world, I am a useful tool in the hands of terror entrepreneurs, be they engaged in terror or war on terror.

Volume I, Section 3: Peace à la Hitler – Keeping One's Enemies Out and One's Own People Down

The security dilemma is a tragic dilemma that keeps all players in a permanent state of terror. Leaders live in unrelenting fear of neighboring rulers – alliances can always very quickly morph into enmity – and subalterns are kept in fear of their superiors and their enemies.

This section explains how peace is defined and enforced in cultures shaped by a strong security dilemma. Peace, in such a context, is regarded as the calm and quiet that reigns when power arrangements are stable, both vertically (with respect to out-groups), and horizontally (with respect to a ruler's in-group subordinates). Such stability is typically achieved through recipes of Realpolitik, i.e. pragmatic carrots-and-sticks negotiations that aim at creating allegiances by threatening with violence or by offering material and/or status rewards.

This concept of Realpolitik is the most influential road map, until today, both nationally, but, more importantly, internationally. Tribal honor in Pakistan is imbued with it, as is the Southern honor in the United States that historian Bertram Wyatt-Brown describes in his book with the same title. Honor often plays a strong role at the level of powerful international elites dealing with each other. It is strong in foreign policy matters, in armed services and diplomatic staffs, more so than among the lower echelons of the average citizen. A passion to retain a state's "honorable" preeminence, as Donald Kagan proposes, applies in today's world no less than it did earlier, even where "national honor" is partly concealed by human rights rhetoric and no longer invoked as openly as in the past.

<sup>283</sup> See a summary composed in 2011 of Volume II: The Present: Terrorism in the Name of Dignity – Terror as Unacceptable Path to More Dignity (the headings have changed slightly since):

Volume II, Section 1: The Dignity Dilemma – Too Close Together

Anthropologists call the coming-together of humankind that characterizes our times the ingathering of the tribes of the Earth: "For the first time since the origin of our species, humanity is in touch with itself."

The security dilemma is characterized by two binary opposites, namely, inside versus outside, and up versus down. Ingathering, or the shrinking of the world through globalization, affects both dualities. The result is that dignity and humiliation acquire hitherto unknown salience. This is of crucial relevance for understanding motives behind and strategies for tactics of terror, both with respect to terror and to war on terror, and their evaluations.

This section describes how in an increasingly globalizing and interdependent world, which is at the same time exposed to human rights ideals, no longer is it the fear entailed in the security dilemma but the wounds from failing respect for equality in dignity and rights which play a key role. Metaemotions, or how people feel about feelings, change profoundly: no longer is humiliation regarded as prosocial if perpetrated on underlings, but as antisocial in all cases. Might is no longer automatically accepted as right.

Volume II, Section 2: Dignity Humiliation – Inner Urge to Kill

Please read the following account and reflect whether it causes gut feelings of revulsion in you, or the joy they produced just a few hundred years ago. Sir James George Frazer (1854 – 1941), professor of social anthropology at Liverpool University, wrote about historic practices:

In the midsummer fires formerly kindled on the Place de Grève at Paris it was the custom to burn a basket, barrel, or sack full of live cats, which was hung from a tall mast in the midst of the bonfire; sometimes a fox was burned. The people collected the embers and ashes of the fire and took them home, believing that they brought good luck. The French kings often witnessed these spectacles and even lit the bonfire with their own hands. In 1648 Louis the Fourteenth, crowned with a wreath of roses and carrying a bunch of roses in his hand, kindled the fire, danced at it and partook of the banquet afterwards in the town hall.

This section highlights the deep change in the scope of human sensibilities that began a few hundred years ago. The idea of interpersonal forgiveness, with its accompanying ideas of apology, remorse, and a change of heart on the part of the wrongdoer, did not exist in ancient Greece and Rome, nor was it fully present in the Hebrew Bible or in the New Testament. This is what, for instance, philologist David Konstan shows in his work. Interpersonal forgiveness is a creation of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Forgiveness had formerly been God's sole prerogative. Divine forgiveness had first to be secularized to shape the backbone of what is today known as interpersonal forgiveness.

The concept of humiliation provides another illustration. The earliest recorded use of to humiliate meaning to mortify or to lower or to depress the dignity or self-respect of someone does not occur until 1757. In other words, the English language, the connotations of the verbs to humiliate and to humble parted around two hundred fifty years ago, going into opposite directions. Until that time, the verb to humiliate did not signify the violation of dignity. To humiliate meant merely to lower or to humble (to remind underlings of their due place), and this was widely regarded as a prosocial activity.

Volume II, Section 3: Peace à la Mandela – Inclusive Dialogue Between Equals

Human rights ideals represent a normative u-turn – no longer is the subjugation of the socio- and ecosphere by small dominator elites regarded as God-given. The new ideal is respect, mutuality, and balance. It is dialogue among partners considering each other as equals in dignity and rights, and it is respect for the planet's ecosphere.

A person who is set to commit terrorist acts to redress humiliated honor, will not be open to the same arguments of dissuasion as a person who is motivated by humiliated dignity. Empathy and dialogue in an atmosphere of mutual understanding and respect may be unacceptable as redress of matters of honor but rather be understood as weakness and cowardice.

A person whose urge to inflict terror flows from humiliated dignity, in contrast, may be much more open to such arguments. Through having connected to the emotions that surround the concept of dignity, she is "primed" to respond positively to empathy, dialogue, mutual understanding, respect, and individual dissent and responsibility. This priming must be recognized and responded to wisely if the threat of terrorism is to be reduced.

This section explains that responding wisely means acknowledging that dignity humiliation can only be healed through truly empathic dialogue and through true integrity of understanding and respect. The depth of the pain that flows from dignity humiliation must be acknowledged. Dignity humiliation cannot be redressed through the rhetoric of Realpolitik, nor through narrow rational choice approaches to negotiation, nor through bribing or threatening with "lessons" of shock and awe – all those strategies are informed by the calculus of domination and submission of ranked honor. And it can certainly not be mended by professing human rights ideals while betraying them with double standards.

<sup>284</sup> See a summary composed in 2011 of Volume III: The Future: Toward a Terror-Free World (the headings have changed slightly since):

Volume III, Section 1: Creating a World of Unity in Diversity – Humanizing Globalization Through Egalization

The global village is one village, not two, not three, and not several villages. This fact is the most important paradigm-shifting force in the imagery and reality of one interconnected world. The reason is that it weakens the security dilemma. This dilemma is so tragic that it can lead to war even when nobody desires it and the involved players are ever so peaceable otherwise. The weakening of the security dilemma is an unprecedented historic window of opportunity as it has never presented itself to humankind ever before. It opens space not only to unite globally, but also to replace power-over strategies with mutuality that is embedded in equality in dignity. Coercive hierarchies can now transmute into creative networks of unity in diversity. No longer must the human family be fragmented and ranked, but can be united and equal. Tactics of terror are no longer necessary and can be unlearned. This section urges that this window of opportunity must be grasped proactively if it is not to be lost.

Volume III, Section 2: Practicing the Gandhi and Mandela Way – Understanding but Not Condoning, Respecting but ## Not Appeasing

In an honor context, offering dialogue risks appearing “weak,” while showing readiness to defend oneself with violence signals “I am strong.” As long as all actors adhere to such a code, there is no contradiction; raw might is victorious and all agree with the outcome even if it hurts.

This section shows how the situation grows complicated and far more hurtful when two different sets of ground rules clash. In a context, in which people judge coercive domination to be an unethical and immoral violation of dignity codes, introducing the old code of honor produces violations of the new code, and vice versa. This can severely deepen wounds on all sides, rather than healing them.

Responding with scripts of dignity to terror that is scripted by honor, or vice versa, will fail. Strategies of dignity will cause violations of honor, and vice versa. Strategies of dignity can only succeed, if the human rights ideals and values of equality in dignity are first explained and advocated.

Volume III, Section 3: Practicing the Human Dignity Way – Careholdership for Global Equality in Dignity

This section is future-oriented and provocative. It discusses controversial and challenging visions for the future from the perspective of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

The most significant historical process of present times is that an emerging globally connected knowledge society opens space to liberate ideals, metaphysical concepts, cultural and psychological scripts, feelings, and emotions from being instrumentalized to serve the security dilemma. This process opens space, for example, for Martin Buber’s concept of loving I-Thou relationships characterized by mutual respect for equal dignity to replace the old concept of love and hatred as commodified tools to survive the security dilemma. This process also opens space to recover the prosocial aspects of shame in fundamentally new ways, the notion of “prosociality” no longer being equated with docile subservience of underlings, but with relationships of mutuality between equals.

This section maps out how tactics of terror can be healed and prevented in a united world characterized by the human rights ideals of equality in dignity for all. Since tactics of terror are part and parcel of a fragmented world of inequality in honor, no other transition is comprehensive enough to decrease terror than the transition to unity in diversity as manifestation of unity in equal dignity. Such a large-scale changeover cannot be brought about by one person or one nation, and it seems therefore like a far-fetched strategy for decreasing tactics of terror. Still, it is the single most important focus every citizen must hold, at every moment and in every single detail of life. And this is valid also for all who are concerned about terror. This section presents a variety of possible interventions at macro, meso and micro levels.

<sup>285</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 52.

<sup>286</sup> “Keynote Dialogue: In conversation with William Ury, Co-Author, Getting to Yes, USA, Geraldine McAteer and Jackie Redpath from Northern Ireland together with speakers from Bosnia, Israel, and South Africa,” at the launching of the Co-existence Initiative of the State of the World Forum in Belfast, Northern Ireland, in May 2–9, 1999.

<sup>287</sup> Waller, 2002.

<sup>288</sup> Morgenthau, 1946.

<sup>289</sup> Nietzsche, 1887/2013.

<sup>290</sup> I resonate with former British diplomat Craig Murray in his attempt to turn to historical grievances and resentment to understand behavior that otherwise might appear to be purely evil. See Craig Murray #NoWar2016, World Beyond War, September 26, 2016, <https://youtu.be/COjqnowC1JA>, where he uses the example of Sierra Leone. When I was in Sierra Leone in 1976, I learned about the Hut Tax War of 1898, a violent local resistance against a severe tax on huts imposed by British colonial forces. Murray draws a line from this war to the cruelties perpetrated later in the region, and how those atrocities were used as pretext to renew the colonization of resources through Western power players. See also Murray, 2006. Like Murray, also I have been confronted with the argument that “shooting them” is the only way to deal with people who use terror tactics, rather than dissecting historical cycles of humiliation.

<sup>291</sup> Ridley, 1996.

<sup>292</sup> Chagnon, 1968, and see for a more recent publication, Chagnon, 2013.

<sup>293</sup> Pinker, 2002. His first two popular books are Pinker, 1995, 1997.

<sup>294</sup> See Whose Freedom, by George Lakoff, 2006b, where he addresses freedom, “this most beloved of American political ideas”:

Since September 11, 2001, the Bush administration has relentlessly invoked the word “freedom.” Al-Qaeda attacked us because “they hate our freedom.” The U.S. can strike preemptively because “freedom is on the march.” Social security should be privatized in order to protect individual freedoms. The 2005 presidential inaugural speech was a kind of crescendo: the words “freedom,” “free,” and “liberty,” were used forty-nine times in President Bush’s twenty-minute speech.

See also note 211 in this Introduction.

<sup>295</sup> See the Eurobarometer 79.3, 2013, showing the results to the question: “Please tell me if you tend to trust or tend not to trust: Political Parties, the National Government, the National Parliament,” http://ec.europa.eu/public\_opinion/archives/eb/eb79/eb79\_first\_en.pdf.

In 2013, trust in national parliament stood in Central and Eastern Europe at 17 percent, in Southern Europe at 19 percent, in Western Europe at 39 percent, and in Northern Europe at 63 percent. Trust in national government in 2013 stood in Central and Eastern Europe at 22 percent, in Southern Europe at 19 percent, in Western Europe at 37 percent, and in Northern Europe at 48 percent. Trust had gone down since it was measured in 2008 for all national institutions in all countries.

<sup>296</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

<sup>297</sup> See, among others, Kautsky, 1982.

<sup>298</sup> Lindner, 2016b. See also Brendtro, et al., 2009, for saying “you no longer belong to our group” amounts to the ultimate form of punishment of social death. I thank Mechthild Nagel, for making me aware of Brendtro’s work. See also the work of ethologist Konrad Lorenz, 1963/1966, who, in his book On Aggression, describes intergroup aggression as being different from intragroup aggression. Among animals, fights for rank are seldom fatal, while, by contrast, groups of animals might fight to the death among each other, willing to kill or be killed in defense of their community.

<sup>299</sup> Karlberg, 2013. Discourse analyst Michael Karlberg describes three contrasting deep interpretive frames within which the concept of human dignity can be understood: the social command frame, the social contest frame of dignity, in contrast to the social contest frame and the social body frame. He points out that these frames sometimes co-exist in contradictory or fragmented ways. Also George Lakoff, 2006a, explains that people employ interpretive frames in unconscious ways that are not always consistent or coherent, and that can change over time. Karlberg continues:

In this regard, some people may employ the social contest frame in specific domains (such as governance, law, and the economy) while they employ the social body frame in other domains (such as family life or social affiliations). In addition, some people may unconsciously shift between these frames even when thinking about the same social domain. Interpretive frames can therefore be understood as patterned but shifting and sometimes fragmented interpretive tendencies that can nonetheless exert powerful influences on the ways people think, speak, and act in relation to various aspects of reality.

<sup>300</sup> Carol Anderson, 2016, speaks of “white rage, the unspoken truth of our racial divide.”

<sup>301</sup> The third of the five axioms of communication by Gregory Bateson, 1972, drawn on by Watzlawick, et al., 1967, refers to the sender and the receiver of information structuring the communication flow differently, each seeing their own behavior as a reaction to the other’s behavior.

When I was a psychology student in Hamburg, Germany (1974 – 1978), one of my professors was Friedemann Schulz von Thun, 1981, who built his four-sides model of communication on Watzlawick’s insights and on the three sides of the Organon model by Karl Bühler, 1934/1990. The four sides of communication begin with the “matter layer” pertaining to data and facts, second, there is the layer of self-revealing or self-disclosure of the speaker – intended or not – pertaining to motives, values, or emotions, third, there is the “relationship layer” as it is intended or understood, and, fourth, the “appeal layer” points at what the speaker is aiming at. Every layer can be misunderstood separately.

<sup>302</sup> Schulz von Thun, 1981, p. 62.

<sup>303</sup> Political scientist Reinhard Wolf, 2013, draws on Frijda, 2008, p. 73, when he speaks of resentment as emotional attitude, or a persistent affective disposition, which creates biases toward perceived offenders. Wolf focuses particularly on hierarchical social settings, where a resenting person or group feels that others enjoy undeserved power and/or prestige. Wolf draws on Feather, 2008, Feather and Nairn, 2005, Oldmeadow and Fiske, 2012, and Petersen, 2002. Whereas anger usually is the first reaction when others infringe on one’s status by assuming a higher rank, resentment will often ensue when one lacks the means to reassert one’s “proper” position at once, unable to “rectify” the perceived injustice. The result will be something that is less “hot” and less visible than anger, a lasting ill-will towards the other, associated with negative stereotyping and the desire to bring the other down. While resentful feelings are more difficult to detect than open anger, indirect evidence for the experience can be found, in particular, in discourse. The reason is that the desire to bring someone down from a weak position can only be achieved through the help of allies. Those allies, however, must first be mobilized, they have to be convinced, grievances must be explained, and the “offenders” status delegitimized. See also Koschut, 2014, or Petersen, 2002. Wolf advises researchers who wish to detect this phenomenon to watch out for accusations of supposedly unfair status shifts, for the invocation of normative principles that call for rectifying “unfair” policies, for justifications for retributive measures, for insinuations which tarnish the social or moral status of the “wrongdoers,” for signs of Schadenfreude when the other experiences setbacks, and, at last, the presence of revenge fantasies. See also more recent work by Feather, 2015. It has been a privilege to have Reinhard Wolf in our 2009 Annual Dignity Conference in Honolulu, Hawai‘i.

<sup>304</sup> Keval, 2016.

<sup>305</sup> Keval, 2016, book description.

<sup>306</sup> “UN Chief Issues Warning on the Rise of Fascism,” by Peter Walker, Independent, December 9, 2016, www.independent.co.uk/news/world/politics/united-nations-chilling-warning-rise-fascism-human-rights-prince-zeid-a7464861.html.

See also “Warning Against Rising Intolerance, UN Remembers Holocaust and Condemns Anti-Semitism,” United Nations News Centre, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=56058#.WI3BB\_KOWgy.

See, furthermore, “Trump Marks the End of a Cycle,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 21, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/02/trump-marks-the-end-of-a-cycle/:

Bannon is organising a new international alliance of populists, xenophobes and nationalists – made up of thee likes of Nicholas Farage (United Kingdom), Matteo Salvini and Beppe Grillo (Italy), Marine Le Pen (France) and Geert Wilders (Netherlands) – with Washington as their point of reference... If, beyond its national agenda, the Trump administration succeeds in creating a new international order based on illiberal democracy, we should start to worry because war will not be far away.

See also Marine le Pen – Frontfrau der europäischen Rechten, documentary film by Michael Welch, Janine Bechthold, Tina Roth, and Olga Sviridenko, Das Erste, April 10, 2017, www.daserste.de/information/reportage-dokumentation/dokus/sendung/marine-le-pen-106.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>307</sup> Keval, 2016, book description.

<sup>308</sup> Robert Muller (1923 – 2010), former UN Under-Secretary General, stood for the vision of the United Nation that I highly appreciate. He is widely quoted as having said that we ought “to see the world with global eyes, to love the world with a global heart, to understand the world with a global mind, and to merge with the world with a global spirit.” James Paul served for nearly nineteen years as executive director of the New York-based Global Policy Forum tracking the politics of the United Nations, and he explains that, in theory, “the Secretary General fills these posts independently, drawing on the best candidates worldwide. The Charter mandates independence of UN staff from government interference.” The problem is that this does not necessarily happen in practice: “Even the most effective incumbents serving in these P5-controlled posts symbolize a system of disregard for the Charter, disrespect for the opinions of other nations, and contempt for the very idea of neutrality of the international civil service,” see “UN Not Serving the Global Good: Big Powers Set to Grab High Level Un Posts,” by Thalif Deen, Inter Press Service (IPS), October 18, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/10/big-powers-set-to-grab-high-level-un-posts/.

<sup>309</sup> Sadly, the UN Interagency Framework Team for Preventive Action (FT) that Gay Rosenblum-Kumar had developed over more than twenty years was dismantled in 2014. I thank her for inviting me to share my work with her colleagues nearly every year during my annual stays in New York. For the first time this was at a brown bag lunch titled “Humiliation, Conflict Management, and Policy Making” at the Governance and Public Administration Branch of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs at the United Nations, on December 15, 2004. It is a privilege to have Gay Rosenblum-Kumar as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>310</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>311</sup> See, among others, Lindner, 2001f, Lindner, 2014b, or Lindner, 2017.

<sup>312</sup> Lindner, 2012e.

<sup>313</sup> See for a list of past and future conferences www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php. See where we stand in 2015 at www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/whoweare.php#status.

<sup>314</sup> It is a privilege to have Paul Stokes, College Lecturer in the Department of Sociology at the National University of Ireland in Dublin, as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>315</sup> Project 1: Refugees and Humiliation: How Dignity is Degraded When You Are a Refugee, or a Displaced or Stateless Person, www.humiliationstudies.org/research/projects.php#unu. This project was envisioned in 2005 as a large research project with 21 research teams of young scholars and their academic advisors, prepared by Evelin Lindner and Paul Stokes, invited by Ramesh Thakur and to be conducted in cooperation with the United Nations University (UNU), Tokyo, Japan. Article 1 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948 states that “all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.” In this research project we asked: What happens when rights and dignity are violated? What are the long-term effects? What is, for example, the long-term effect on people who are born, live and die as refugees, in refugee camps? What are the inter-generational effects? How are second and third generation refugees affected? Due to lack of finances, this project could not be realized.

Project 2: Terrorism and Humiliation: Why People Choose Terrorism, www.humiliationstudies.org/research/projects.php#unu. This project was envisioned in 2005 as a large research project with 9 research teams of young scholars and their academic advisors, prepared by Evelin Lindner and Paul Stokes, invited by Ramesh Thakur and to be conducted in cooperation with the United Nations University (UNU), Tokyo, Japan. The question guiding this project was: Why do people choose terrorism? This question merited deeper probing. The project aimed at shedding more light on the choices made by people who choose terrorism, so as to help prevent terrorism more efficiently. Due to lack of finances, this project could, however, not be realized.

<sup>316</sup> It is a privilege to have Zahid Shahab Ahmed as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. In 2016, Zahid Shahab Ahmed joined the Alfred Deakin Institute for Citizenship and Globalization of Deakin University in Australia as a postdoctoral fellow. See, for instance, Shahab Ahmed and Zeb, 2016. See also Krueger, 2017. And see an endorsement of the argument that terrorism does not follow from poverty, but from lack of freedom, in “The Roots of Terrorism,” by Sultan Mehmood, Dawn, March 3, 2016, www.dawn.com/news/796177/the-roots-of-terrorism:

A cursory analysis of the START Global Terrorism Database reveals that over the past decade, Pakistan has had the highest number of terrorism-related deaths in the world. In fact, the death toll exceeds the combined terrorism-related deaths for both Europe and North America. Hence, an understanding of terrorism, its dynamics, its causes, the reasons for its escalation and de-escalation is of utmost importance to Pakistan... To understand what causes terrorism, one need not ask how much of a population is illiterate or in abject poverty. Rather one should ask who holds strong enough political views to impose them through terrorism. It is not that most terrorists have nothing to live for. Far from it, they are the high-ability and educated political people who so vehemently believe in a cause that they are willing to die for it. The solution to terrorism is not more growth but more freedom.

<sup>317</sup> Lindner, 2011.

<sup>318</sup> See also Romarheim, 2015, or Grønnerød, et al., 2016, or Mesøy, 2013.

<sup>319</sup> It is a privilege to have Kristian Berg Harpviken, former director of the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), and many of its present and former members, as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>320</sup> Hegghammer, 2016, Abstract:

This article presents a ten-year forecast for jihadism in Europe. Despite reaching historically high levels in recent years, violent Islamist activity in Europe may increase further over the long term due to four macro-trends: 1) expected growth in the number of economically underperforming Muslim youth, 2) expected growth in the number of available jihadi entrepreneurs, 3) persistent conflict in the Muslim world, and 4) continued operational freedom for clandestine actors on the Internet. Over the next decade, the jihadi attack plot frequency in Europe may follow a fluctuating curve with progressively higher peaks. Many things can undercut the trends and lead to a less ominous outcome, but the scenario is sufficiently likely to merit attention from policymakers.

<sup>321</sup> Lindner, 2001h. I thank Monty G. Marshall for his immense support since 2001. Monty Marshall contributed to the expert meeting with his talk on Structural Indicators Measurement and Application to session # 4, Indicators of Social System Vulnerability and Resilience to Violent Conflict. It is a privilege to have Monty Marshall as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its inception. See, among others, Marshall, 1999, 2002, 2014–2016. See for the work of Ted Gurr, among many others, Goldstone, et al., 2010, Gurr, 1970. I thank Monty Marshall for bringing Jack Goldstone to our 2008 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, as part of the Wergeland Year for Human Dignity, in Oslo, Norway, June 23 – July 1, 2008, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/11.php. It is a privilege to have also Jack Goldstone as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>322</sup> It is a privilege to have Clark McCauley as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See his most recent publication in McCauley, 2017, and McCauley and Moskalenko, 2017. See a list over our workshops at www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeetings.php. See also the work of psychologist Arie Kruglanski, among others, Doosje, et al., 2016, Dugas and Kruglanski, 2014. It is a privilege to have Arie Kruglanski as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>323</sup> Schmid, 2013.

<sup>324</sup> See Lambert, 2008, and Lindner, et al., 2009. See also Lambert, 2011.

<sup>325</sup> Lindner, 2012e.

<sup>326</sup> Lindner, 2014a.

<sup>327</sup> Lindner, 2013, Lindner and Morrell, 2013, Lindner and Sewchurran, 2013, Richards, et al., 2015a, Lindner, 2015b.

<sup>328</sup> Lindner, 2016a.

<sup>329</sup> Erik Solheim was Minister of International Development when our conversation on humiliation and terrorism took place in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Oslo, Norway, on January 10, 2011. Solheim's reflections are summarized and translated from Norwegian by Lindner:

- A high Norwegian diplomat, an ambassador, once said to me: "You must never humiliate anyone! You make enemies for life. Whatever you think about a person, never humiliating them!" Common sense suggests the very same thing. Being humiliated in the family, for instance, is the most negative disruption that can occur; it hampers any dialogue afterwards.
  - What does it mean to humiliate anyone? The answer is that it varies from person to person and culture to culture. However, the feeling is always the same, and this is central!
- In Sri Lanka, in the 1950s, Sinhalese politicians introduced Sinhalese language as the only official language. This was perceived as humiliation on the Tamil side, not least since the Tamil culture sees itself as more important. Tamils look at their culture as the mother culture of all South Indian languages. All other languages are versions of Tamil. Tamils were indeed better educated and more successful in colonial times, and better off. And then suddenly came the Sinhalese and said: "We are the majority! We'll take over!" There is this famous quote: "A country and two languages, or one language and two countries."
- Apartheid was systemic humiliation. When Gandhi was not allowed to sit in the first class on the train, it was about humiliation, not the third class's poor conditions. He was not afraid of simple life, it was the humiliation that was at stake.
  - Interestingly enough, the colonial period was perceived as humiliation at the end of the colonial era, at a point when those who had been colonized already were much better off, particularly in Africa (with China and India as exceptions, since they were already wealthier before).
  - Tibet is another example. It would be much poorer without China. Tibet would be the poorest place in the region without China. Yet, it perceives it as humiliating to be "forced" into prosperity by China.

<sup>330</sup> Psychologists Jim Sidanius and Felicia Pratto speak of legitimizing myths, or compelling cultural ideologies that are taken as self-apparently true in society and that disguise the use of force and discrimination and make it acceptable. See Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See an overview in "Power Inequities," by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities. See also Pratto and Stewart, 2011, where they describe how legitimizing myths change over time. They refer, for instance, to the United States' expansion of its territory through the 1800s, and how it was underpinned by the doctrine of manifest destiny, indicating that Native Americans were "savages." Twentieth-century and twenty-first-century occupations of other nations, however are no longer seen as "colonization" by the United States now but as "democratizing." The U.S. feels superior to the old colonial powers of Europe now and views itself as the world's premier egalitarian democracy. The authors enumerate the list of justifications that reign now: national security, national interest, national liberation, religious purity, "together with stereotypic images of the enemy as barbaric, especially in contrast to images of one's own nation and allies as virtuous, can justify war, pre-emptive strikes, arms build-ups, violations of national sovereignty, terrorism, and violations of the International Humanitarian Law." Pratto and Stewart make clear that even "liberal" legitimizing myths can be used to justify the use of force or warfare, for example, when invading Afghanistan was to liberate its women from the oppression by the Taliban. Massive and brutal violence was employed by Marxist and "egalitarian" revolutionary movements, from the Russian revolution to Peru's Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path).

<sup>331</sup> See Volkan, 1997, 2004, 2006, 2013.

<sup>332</sup> See more on the notion of misrecognition in Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 5 and 8 of the book Emotion and Conflict, pp. 129–137. Concepts such as méconnaissance (misrecognition) and naturalization were used by Roland Barthes, Pierre Bourdieu, and Michel Foucault (among others). They address how power structures use the concealed nature of habitus to manipulate not just overtly but covertly and stealthily, making it much more difficult to rid oneself of these manipulations.

<sup>333</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, “Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change,” by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

<sup>334</sup> For instance, Tocqueville, 1856. See also “The Future by Al Gore – Review,” by John Gray, The Guardian, January 31, 2013, www.theguardian.com/books/2013/jan/31/the-future-al-gore-review. See Gore, 2013. See, furthermore, Pratto and Stewart, 2011, or Jost, et al., 2009. See, furthermore, “Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can’t Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden,” by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>. See for a recent publication, Bergen, 2016.

<sup>335</sup> Lerner, 1980.

<sup>336</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 199.

<sup>337</sup> Kuhn, 1962.

<sup>338</sup> Ibid.

<sup>339</sup> Jervis, 2006.

<sup>340</sup> Carveth, 2013.

<sup>341</sup> See “The Ties That Bind Captive to Captor,” by Frank M. Ochberg, Los Angeles Times, April 8, 2005, <http://articles.latimes.com/2005/apr/08/opinion/oe-ochberg8>. Frank M. Ochberg is co-founder of the National Center for Critical Incident Analysis and former associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health. See the book that one of the hostages, Kristin Enmark, 2015, wrote more than four decades after the event. See also Lindner, 2009a, p. 133.

<sup>342</sup> Arie Nadler wrote about radical empathy and radical reconciliation. It is a privilege to have Arie Nadler as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Arie Nadler, 2012, p. 304:

Consistent with Arendt’s terminology, I propose to label forgiveness for “radical evil” as “radical forgiveness” and the intergroup reconciliation that may follow as “radical reconciliation.” ... Such an understanding was expected to culminate in empathy with the perpetrator of “radical evil,” that we propose to label as “radical empathy.”

See also the work of John McFadden, 2016. It is a privilege to have his support for our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>343</sup> Suttner, 1889. See also Heffermehl, 2010.

<sup>344</sup> Freire, 1968/1970, 1968/1973, and Morais, 1979, 1983. See Andersson and Richards, 2013, Chapter IV, p. 15, of the unpublished manuscript:

De Morais, in contradistinction to Freire, sets forward not two but three levels of awareness. He adds to Freire’s two, which are: the naïve level and the critical level. The third is the organizational level of awareness. At the naïve level a person is aware of problems but is unable to understand their cause (and so may blame God or the Fates). The critically conscious person is able to identify the factors responsible for problems, and their inter-relationship. Organizational awareness is reached when the person has the ability to act together with others to address a problem or attain particular results. Organizational awareness manifests what de Morais calls a “methodological rationality.”

<sup>345</sup> Fanon, 1952/1967, 1961/1963.

<sup>346</sup> See also Slavoj Žižek, 2012, and his message that an emancipatory project needs to resist any smooth reconciliation and dare to look into the face of all that is lacking.

<sup>347</sup> The work of neuroscientists such as Jean Decety shows that desensitization to own or other people’s pain may be beneficial, for example, in physicians, but can also lead to an overall blunting of emotional sensitivity. See Decety, et al., 2010. Children with conduct disorder and callousness exhibited dampened hemodynamic response to viewing others being harmed in the insula, a region which plays a key role in empathy and emotional awareness. See Michalska, et al., 2016. See also van der Kolk, 2014. I thank Linda Hartling for reminding me of van Kolk’s book.

<sup>348</sup> van der Kolk, 2014. I thank Linda Hartling for reminding me of this book.

<sup>349</sup> Staub, 1989, 1993, 2012, 2015.

<sup>350</sup> Mimi Stokes-Katzenbach, Sustainable Creatives ([www.dramatic sustainability.com](http://www.dramatic sustainability.com)), in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 31, 2014.

<sup>351</sup> Lars Weisæth and Kärki, 2014, is a psychiatrist, an expert on psychotherapy, psychotraumatology and military psychiatry, and one of Norway’s leading experts on crisis psychiatry. He is research professor emeritus at the Norwegian Centre for Violence and Traumatic Stress Studies and professor emeritus of Psychiatry at the Institute of Clinical Medicine at the University of Oslo.

<sup>352</sup> Silke, 2003.

<sup>353</sup> McCauley, 2017, p. 263. McCauley refers to the 9/11 attack, and my suggestion in Lindner, 2006a, pp. 98–100, that it was humiliating for a superpower like America to be so grievously injured and insulted by an enemy that did not even have the status of being a state. See also Scott and Philip, 2004.

<sup>354</sup> “Education in the Context of ‘Divided’ Memories – How can a ‘Pedagogy of Conflict Elaboration’ Contribute?” by Monique Eckmann, School for Social Work at the University of Applied Sciences, Western Switzerland, Geneva, The European Wergeland Centre (EWC), August 2013, www.theewc.org/uploads/content/statement\_MEckmann\_final\_2.pdf. See also Edmondson, 1999, p. 354, and “New Research Reveals Surprising Truths about Why Some Work Groups Thrive and Others Falter,” by Charles Duhigg, New York Times, February 25, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/02/28/magazine/what-google-learned-from-its-quest-to-build-the-perfect-team.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>355</sup> “Education in the Context of ‘Divided’ Memories – How can a ‘Pedagogy of Conflict Elaboration’ Contribute?” by Monique Eckmann, August 2013, www.theewc.org/uploads/content/statement\_MEckmann\_final\_2.pdf.

<sup>356</sup> Hudson, et al., 2012.

<sup>357</sup> “Human Rights Violation,” UNiTE to End Violence against Women campaign, <http://endviolence.un.org/situation.shtml>.

<sup>358</sup> The estimate of about 170 million civilians killed in the twentieth century comes from political scientist Rudolph Joseph Rummel, 1994. Around 100 million deaths can be attributed to Stalin, Mao, and Hitler. The ratio would be 340 to one, if the death from non-state groups over the same period of time could be calculated at around 500,000.

<sup>359</sup> “Good Morning, Beautiful Business,” Judy Wicks, Twenty-Fourth Annual E. F. Schumacher Lecture, Stockbridge, MA, E. F. Schumacher Society (now New Economics Institute), October 2004, http://centerforneweconomics.org/publications/lectures/wicks/judy/good-morning-beautiful-business?utm\_source=Schumacher+Center+eNewsletter&utm\_campaign=1959b415a9-Wicks+eNews&utm\_medium=email. See also Barney, et al., 2015. It has been very enriching for me to participate in the Thirtieth Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 20, 2010, the Thirty-First Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 5, 2011, and the Thirty-Fourth Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 15, 2014, all in New York City.

<sup>360</sup> “How a Danish Town Helped Young Muslims Turn Away from ISIS,” by Hanna Rosin, National Public Radio (NPR), July 15, 2016, www.npr.org/sections/health-shots/2016/07/15/485900076/how-a-danish-town-helped-young-muslims-turn-away-from-isis?utm\_campaign=storyshare&utm\_. I thank Deb Reich for making me aware of this article.

<sup>361</sup> “‘Always Agitated. Always Mad’: Omar Mateen, According to Those Who Knew Him,” by Dan Barry, Serge F. Kovaleski, Alan Blinder And Mujib Mashal, New York Times, June 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/06/19/us/omar-mateen-gunman-orlando-shooting.html.

<sup>362</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017, quoting from “Overcompensation Nation: It’s Time to Admit that Toxic Masculinity Drives Gun Violence: Our National Attachment to Dominance Models of Manhood Is a Major Reason Why We Have So Much Violence,” Amanda Marcotte, Salon, June 13, 2016, www.salon.com/2016/06/13/overcompensation\_nation\_its\_time\_to\_admit\_that\_toxic\_masculinity\_drives\_gun\_violence/, and “Troubled. Quiet. Macho. Angry. The Volatile Life of the Orlando Shooter,” by Kevin Sullivan and William Wan, Washington Post, June 17, 2016, www.washingtonpost.com/national/troubled-quiet-macho-angry-the-volatile-life-of-omar-mateen/2016/06/17/15229250-34a6-11e6-8758-d58e76e11b12\_story.html.

<sup>363</sup> Taylor, et al., 2000. This may have an evolutionary background. While men were killed, women were often captured alive when communities were invaded and conquered. They may have adapted to this situation by developing a specific reaction to stress. However, gender-deterministic conceptualizations are contested.

<sup>364</sup> “Put up your dukes,” means “get ready to fight,” with “dukes” standing for fists.

<sup>365</sup> Johnson, et al., 2014. See also Fraenkel, 2015.

<sup>366</sup> Johnson, et al., 2014.

<sup>367</sup> See, among others, Rogers, 1977, Kirschenbaum and Henderson, 1990, Rogers, et al., 2014. Reinhard Tausch, a student of Carl Rogers, was my professor when I studied psychology and specialized as clinical psychologist at the University of Hamburg, Germany, 1974 – 1978.

<sup>368</sup> See Belenky, et al., 1997a, Belenky, et al., 1997b, Clinchy, 1996. In connected knowing “one attempts to enter another person’s frame of reference to discover the premises for the person’s point of view,” explain Clinchy and Zimmerman, 1985. See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>369</sup> Clinchy and Zimmerman, 1985.

<sup>370</sup> Belenky, et al., 1997b.

<sup>371</sup> Heller, 1984. See also social psychologist, feminist, and politician Berit Ås, 2008. Berit Ås explained her concept of Male Master Suppression Techniques to Evelin Lindner in her home in Asker, Norway, May 31, 2014, see <https://youtu.be/mRASpPcI8hk>. She explains how she started out with five master suppression techniques and later extended them. Berit Ås is professor of social science, the first female party leader in Norway (Democratic Socialists, AIK), a peace activist and feminist. She has been a Member of Parliament and founder of the Norwegian Women’s University. Her areas of research are accident and consumer research and in-depth women’s studies. She is a Knight of the Order of St. Olav first class. She has lectured on her theory of five male master suppression techniques in more than forty countries on four continents. Among others, she refers to Robert Merton (damned if you do and damned if you don’t), Ingjald Nissen, and her mentor Harriet Holter. It was a privilege to have Berit Ås as opponent when I defended my doctoral dissertation in 2001 at the University of Oslo, and to have her as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>372</sup> See, among others, Habermas, 1962, 1981, 1985–1987, 1989.

<sup>373</sup> On November 16, 2011, writer and peace scholar Janet Gerson took me to Zuccotti Park and The Atrium in New York City, where most of the Occupy Wall Street activities took place. Janet Gerson shared with me her doctoral research and I thank her for reminding me of the significance of the notion of grappling. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelinpics11.php. #OWS.

<sup>374</sup> As to the concept of nudging, see, among others, Thaler and Sunstein, 2008, or Sunstein, 2016. For reflections on Conditions of Freedom, see, for instance, John MacMurray, 1949/1991, and on resistance to manipulation, see, among others, Thomas Teo, 2015. I thank Louise Sundararajan for making me aware of Teo’s work.

<sup>375</sup> Deutsch, 2006.

<sup>376</sup> Dobson, 2012.

<sup>377</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on June 4, 2009.

<sup>378</sup> Miller, 2013.

<sup>379</sup> Buber, 1923/1937.

<sup>380</sup> Nussbaum and Sen, 1993. See also, among others, Orton, 2011.

<sup>381</sup> Freire, 1968/1973, O’Shea and O’Brien, 2011.

<sup>382</sup> Bohm, 2014.

<sup>383</sup> Scharmer, 2009.

<sup>384</sup> Swidler and Mojzes, 2000.

<sup>385</sup> Inga Bostad, Vice-Rector of the University in Oslo, Norway, sent a personal message after the 22/7 terror attacks in Oslo and Utøya. In this message, she encouraged and urged everybody to engage in dialogue. Her message was recorded on August 26, 2011, by Lasse Moer, see http://youtu.be/hbOBj\_UJt2Y. See also Bostad and Ottersen, 2014. See also note 166 in the Preface.

<sup>386</sup> See classic publications by McNeill and McNeill, 2003, or Chaisson, 2001. See also Spier, 2010, Harari, 2014, 2015/2016. See, furthermore, the 2016 Stanford University’s 125th Commencement Address by historical documentary filmmaker Ken Burns, June 12, 2016, <http://news.stanford.edu/2016/06/12/prepared-text-2016-stanford-commencement-address-ken-burns/>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of his address.

<sup>387</sup> Arendt, 1963. See also Vita Activa - The Spirit of Hannah Arendt, documentary film by Ada Ushpiz, 2016, <https://zeitgeistfilms.com/film/vitaactivathespiritofhannaharendt>.

<sup>388</sup> Lindner, 2015b.

<sup>389</sup> Diamond, 2005, Chapter 10: Malthus in Africa: Rwanda's Genocide, pp. 326–327. I thank Yves Musoni for making me aware of this quote. It is a privilege to have Yves Musoni as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>390</sup> Sustainability is yet another term that has been hijacked by economism throughout the past years. Within the international legal system, "a resource economics definition of sustainability encourages development, while granting dispensation to public choice that sacrifices human and environmental integrity for instrumental economic objectives" writes philosopher John Martin Gillroy in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy," March 3, 2017, in response to Barrington-Leigh, 2017.

<sup>391</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>392</sup> Listening into-voice is explained by Linda Hartling as follows in a personal communication on June 4, 2009:

The expression "listening into voice" draws our attention to the fact that human communication is a bi-directional experience. It is a phrase that encourages us to attune to the fundamental relational nature of speaking. It reminds us to look beyond the individualist myth that speaking is a one-way experience in which the speaker is solely responsible for communicating effectively. Speaking is interactive. It is a two-way experience in which both (or all) people participating in the relationship can choose to listen and engage in a way that will help others to effectively express and clarify their ideas.

<sup>393</sup> Edmondson, 1999, p. 354. See also "New Research Reveals Surprising Truths about Why Some Work Groups Thrive and Others Falter," by Charles Duhigg, New York Times, February 25, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/02/28/magazine/what-google-learned-from-its-quest-to-build-the-perfect-team.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>394</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 55.

<sup>395</sup> Fernbach, et al., 2013, p. 945. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>396</sup> Kruger and Dunning, 1999.

<sup>397</sup> Nickerson and Salovey, 1998.

<sup>398</sup> Lord, et al., 1979, Ross, 2012.

<sup>399</sup> Lazarsfeld and Merton, 1954.

<sup>400</sup> Van Boven, et al., 2012.

<sup>401</sup> "The U.S. Media's Problems Are Much Bigger than Fake News and Filter Bubbles," by Bharat N. Anand, Harvard Business Review, January 05, 2017, <https://hbr.org/2017/01/the-u-s-medias-problems-are-much-bigger-than-fake-news-and-filter-bubbles?curator=MediaREDEF>:

Three forces combine to create the media coverage of political campaigns we observe today: connected media, which spreads messages faster than traditional media; fixed costs and advertising-reliant business models in traditional media, which amplify sensational messages; and viewers' news consumption patterns, which leads to people sorting across media outlets based on their beliefs and makes messages they already agree with far more effective. Each reinforces the others. Without these enabling factors, even the best marketing campaign would go nowhere, and fake news or leaked information from cyberattacks would have little effect.

I thank Seymour M. (Mike) Miller for making Linda and me aware of this article.

<sup>402</sup> "Farewell, America," by Neal Gabler, Moyers, November 10, 2016, <http://billmoyers.com/story/farewell-america/#.WFS69xeyis0.facebook>, written after November 8, 2016, when Donald Trump was voted in to lead the United States. Gabler writes that no matter how the rest of the world looked at America on November 7, 2016, this will now change:

This country has survived a civil war, two world wars and a Great Depression. There are many who say we will survive this, too. Maybe we will, but we won't survive unscathed. We know too much about each other to heal. No more can we pretend that we are exceptional or good or progressive or united. We are none of those things. Nor can we pretend that democracy works and that elections have more-or-less happy endings. Democracy only functions when its participants abide by certain conventions, certain codes of conduct and a respect for the process. The virus that kills democracy is extremism because extremism disables those codes. Republicans have disrespected the process for decades. They have regarded any Democratic president as illegitimate. They have proudly boasted of preventing popularly elected Democrats from effecting policy and have asserted that only Republicans have the right to determine the nation's course. They have worked tirelessly to make sure that the government cannot govern and to redefine the purpose of government as prevention rather than effectuation. In short, they haven't believed in democracy for a long time, and the media never called them out on it.

Democracy can't cope with extremism. Only violence and time can defeat it. The first is unacceptable, the second takes too long. Though Trump is an extremist, I have a feeling that he will be a very popular president and one likely to be re-elected by a substantial margin, no matter what he does or fails to do. That's because ever since the days of Ronald Reagan, rhetoric has obviated action, speechifying has superseded governing.

<sup>403</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 55.

<sup>404</sup> Horgan and Braddock, 2010, p. 280:

At the very least, it might be more appropriate to collectively refer to these programs as "risk reduction" initiatives – regardless of the operational differences, resources, and expected outcomes (let alone terminology), attempting to reduce re-engagement in terrorism is the one unambiguous common thread between these initiatives.

See also Horgan, 2009, Bjørge and Horgan, 2009, Bokhari, et al., 2009, Horgan and Braddock, 2011, Canna, 2013.

<sup>405</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 53.

<sup>406</sup> Fenstermacher and Leventhal, 2011, Executive Summary, p. 10.

<sup>407</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 56. Schmid writes further, p. 53:

There has been a gradual realization in some quarters (e.g. in the UK) that it is not enough to focus on those attracted to those who advocate violence; instead it is mandatory to broaden the focus of counter-radicalization measures and target all who oppose Western-style democracy, secular rule and other core values of our societies. However, as the number of violent extremists has grown in recent years, capacities of governments to deal with all extremists have often become overstretched. As a consequence, in practice many so-called non-violent extremists still get away with virulent anti-Western rhetoric and subversive activities.

<sup>408</sup> McCauley and Moskalenko, 2011, pp. 95–148, and pp. 149–192. It is a privilege to have Clark McCauley as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See for his most recent publication on that topic McCauley, 2017, Abstract:

Humiliation is often cited in attempts to understand the origins of asymmetric conflicts, especially conflicts involving terrorism. This article reviews common usage, expert opinion, and experiences in interpersonal and intergroup conflicts to suggest a construct definition of humiliation as a combination of anger and shame. Following appraisal theory, this definition distinguishes between the situational appraisals associated with humiliation (insult and injury; failure to retaliate) and the emotional experience of humiliation (in which the combination of anger and shame may be more synergism than summation). Research on humiliation has barely begun and focuses on interpersonal relations; a crucial issue is whether interpersonal humiliation is the same experience as the intergroup humiliation salient in accounts of terrorism and terrorists. Also important is the prediction that the targets of terrorist attack will experience humiliation if the terrorists are unknown or unreachable; thus failure to retaliate may humiliate the strong as well as the weak in asymmetric conflict. Better understanding of humiliation may be useful for understanding both terrorist violence and government reactions to this violence.

<sup>409</sup> "First Report of the Working Group on Radicalisation and Extremism that Lead to Terrorism," by the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force (CTITF), 2008, www.un.org/en/terrorism/pdfs/radicalization.pdf.

<sup>410</sup> Elaine Pressman, 2009, Table 7, p. 24, quoted in Schmid, 2013, p. 47:

De-radicalization, Disengagement, and Protective Factors:

DR De-Radicalization Factors

DR.1 Rejection of rigid ideology

DR.2 Rejection of violence

DR.3 Evidence of replacement of non-violent goals

DR.4 Motivation to de-radicalize present

DR.5 Community support for de-radicalization present

DE Disengagement Factors

DE.1 Belief that violence is a failing strategy

DE.2 Disillusionment with spiritual leadership

DE.3 Shift in ideology

DE.4 Disillusionment with organization experiences

DE.5 Grown away from movement

P Protective Factors

P.1 Family, girlfriend, spouse influence relating to rejection of violence

P.2 Community public opinion moved away from support for violence

P.3 Change of vision of enemy and desired outcome

P.4 Reversal of social alienation

P.5 Non-violent views of significant others

<sup>411</sup> Schmid, 2013, pp. 41–42. See also Bjørge and Horgan, 2009, and Horgan and Braddock, 2011. As to the last point, Schmid writes, p. 49:

Perhaps most important is to prevent teaming up with foreign and domestic partners in the fight against terrorism who lack credibility and legitimacy in the eyes of those who are in need of de-radicalization, the radical milieu, the wider constituency which the terrorists try to appeal to, and other relevant domestic and foreign audiences.

<sup>412</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 50.

<sup>413</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 55.

<sup>414</sup> The United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, Resolution 60/288, adopted by the General Assembly on September 8, 2006, www.un.org/ga/search/view\_doc.asp?symbol=A/RES/60/288.

<sup>415</sup> Schmid, 2013, pp. 58–59. See also “The Revised Academic Consensus Definition of Terrorism” at www.terrorismanalysts.com/pt/index.php/pot/article/view/schmid-terrorism-definition/html, and “Interview with Professor Alex Schmid about Defining Terrorism,” by Edwin Bakker, Leiden University, September 9, 2014, <https://youtu.be/eRLvBooAm8o>.

<sup>416</sup> “Human Rights and Humanitarianism: Contradictory or Co-Dependent?” conference at Columbia University’s School of International and Public Affairs, October 30, 2012:

Humanitarian action is notoriously unequal. In some crises aid is abundant, in others horrifically inadequate. What, then, should be the driving forces of humanitarian action? Compassion? Political calculations? Religious imperatives? And is it helpful to insist on neutrality, independence and impartiality as the sole paths to effective aid in the face of so much evidence to the contrary? Is there any common ground at all for the multitude of humanitarian actors, ranging from international organizations and the traditional Western NGOs to fundamentalist activists and commercial entrepreneurs?

This conference will invite reflections on the role that a human rights-based approach can play in creating a common set of humanitarian norms and values that bridge these divides. And if that makes sense, should some rights prevail, and others be placed on hold? The speakers at this conference will come from widely different backgrounds, and the positions they will take may not be harmonious, but the discussion is necessary ? the more so since the humanitarian community currently faces a rapidly changing environment, requiring a fundamental revision of old certainties.

Panel 1: “Human rights in the humanitarian arena,” explored the experiences of three different organizations and how they brought their own rights-based norms and values into their field work. Among others, Jason Cone, director of Communications, Doctors without Borders USA, shared his organization’s experiences. See also the Speaking Out Case Studies website (www.speakingout.msf.org) with a series of studies from Médecins Sans Frontières that openly examine and analyze the organization’s actions and decision-making process during humanitarian emergencies that have motivated it to speak out.

<sup>417</sup> “Cross Roads or Cross Purposes? Tensions Between Military and Humanitarian Providers,” by Solomon Major, The Strategic Studies Institute (the U.S. Army’s Institute for Geostrategic and National Security Research and Analysis), 2012, <http://strategicstudiesinstitute.army.mil/pubs/parameters/Articles/2012summer/Major.pdf>, p. 86:

In October 2001, then-Secretary of State Colin Powell addressed a conference of humanitarian nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) in Washington, DC. There, he remarked “I want you to know that I have made it clear to my staff here and to all of our ambassadors around the world that I am serious about making sure we have the best relationship with the NGOs who are such a force multiplier for us, such an important part of our combat team.”<sup>1</sup> Although his purpose in this address was undoubtedly to build a foundation for a whole-of-nation effort to promote democracy, respect for human rights, and the elimination of terrorism, the secretary’s speech had the opposite effect, angering many of the conference’s participants who felt that the US Government was seeking to co-opt their organizations by making them mere ancillaries to the war effort.

<sup>418</sup> Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>419</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 7: Humiliation Addiction, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict. See also the conceptualization of the post victim ethical exemption syndrome as an outgrowth of humiliation, by James Edward Jones, 2006. See, furthermore, Lewis Coser, 1956, and his differentiation of realistic and un-realistic conflict. First and foremost, conflict simply presupposes a relationship and social interaction. Not all hostile impulses lead to social conflict, and not every conflict is accompanied by aggressiveness. Realistic conflicts are those that arise from frustration of specific demands and are pursued toward the attainment of specific results. Other pathways than conflict are taken if available. Realistic conflict is thus a means, unlike non-realistic conflict, which is an end in itself. It is fed by one antagonist's need to release tension. The main point is the release of aggressiveness, and the target of hostility can easily change. Clearly, realistic conflicts can also be accompanied by distorted sentiments. Conflict may be motivated by both, realistic conflict issues and parties' affective investment in the conflict. See a summary of Coser, 1956, by the University of Colorado's Conflict Research Consortium Staff, at www.colorado.edu/conflict/peace/example/coser.htm.

<sup>420</sup> BCE stands for "Before the Common Era," and is equivalent to BC, which means "Before Christ."

<sup>421</sup> Aristotle, 1980.

<sup>422</sup> Kidder, 1994.

<sup>423</sup> Norway has emerged from the current economic crisis relatively unscathed, not least due to its artful moderation. Philosopher Henrik Syse, 2009, has advised Norwegian banks and explains his view on moderation. Syse refers to the work of Clor, 2009. I am immensely thankful for his support since we first met in Dagfinn Føllesdal's Ethics Programme of the Norwegian Research Council in 1995. It is a privilege to have Henrik Syse as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its inception. See for another Norwegian voice calling for moderation, for example, Vetlesen, 2008.

<sup>424</sup> Miller, 1976/1986.

<sup>425</sup> Francisco Gomes de Matos is a pillar of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies from their inception, and a founding member of our World Dignity University initiative.

Section One

<sup>1</sup> BCE stands for "Before the Common Era," and is equivalent to BC, which means "Before Christ."

<sup>2</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>3</sup> "Nicht durch Reden und Majoritätsbeschlüsse werden die großen Fragen der Zeit entschieden – das ist der große Fehler von 1848 und 1849 gewesen – sondern durch Eisen und Blut." Otto von Bismarck was a conservative Prussian statesman who dominated German and European affairs from the 1860s until 1890. This quote is taken from his speech to the Budget Commission of the Prussian Diet on September 30, 1862, published in Böhm, 1866, p. 12.

<sup>4</sup> "The Soldier's Faith," by Oliver Wendell Holmes, leading US intellectual and Supreme Court associated jurist, addressing the Harvard 1895 graduating class, <http://people.virginia.edu/~mmd5f/holmesfa.htm>.

<sup>5</sup> "Understanding Hitler's Anti-Semitism," by Edward Delman, The Atlantic, September 9, 2015, www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2015/09/hitler-holocaust-antisemitism-timothy-snyder/404260/:

Timothy Snyder: So what Hitler does is he inverts; he reverses the whole way we think about ethics, and for that matter the whole way we think about science. What Hitler says is that abstract thought – whether it's normative or whether it's scientific – is inherently Jewish. There is in fact no way of thinking about the world, says Hitler, which allows us to see human beings as human beings. Any idea which allows us to see each other as human beings – whether it's a social contract; whether it's a legal contract; whether it's working-class solidarity; whether it's Christianity – all these ideas come from Jews. And so for people to be people, for people to return to their essence, for them to represent their race, as Hitler sees things, you have to strip away all those ideas. And the only way to strip away all those ideas is to eradicate the Jews. And if you eradicate the Jews, then the world snaps back into what Hitler sees as its primeval, correct state: Races struggles against each other, kill each other, starve each other to death, and try and take land.

See also Snyder, 2010, 2015, 2017.

<sup>6</sup> The slogan "The War for Peace" was coined in 1991 by Svetozar Marović, when he was the vice president of the ruling Democratic Party of Socialists (DPS) in Montenegro, to justify the Montenegrin reservists' assault on Dubrovnik and Konavle in 1991. Later Marović became the president of Serbia and Montenegro (until June 2006, when Montenegro declared its independence). Historian Nikola Samardžić, in his testimony at the trial of Slobodan Milošević 2002–2005, pointed out that the onslaught on Dubrovnik "was an unjust war against Croatia, and a war in which Montenegro disgraced itself by putting itself in the service of the Yugoslav army and Slobodan Milošević," see Pavlović, 2006. On September 10, 2003, Marović delivered a public apology for "all evils done by any citizen of Montenegro and Serbia to anyone in Croatia," see "Marović i Mesić razmenili izvinjenja građanima Hrvatske i SCG," B92, September 9, 2003, www.b92.net/info/vesti/index.php?yyyy=2003&mm=09&dd=10&nav\_id=119131.

<sup>7</sup> Stover and Weinstein, 2004.

<sup>8</sup> “Fear Thy Neighbor as Thyself: Antinomies of Tolerant Reason” was the title of the lecture that philosopher Slavoj Žižek held at the Institute for Human Sciences at Boston University on November 26, 2007, where he addressed perception, identity, and the “other.” See www.egs.edu/faculty/slavoj-zizek/videos/fear-thy-neighbor-as-thyself/.

Introduction to Section One

<sup>1</sup> Altemeyer, 1981. See the archive of the original Global Change Game Website, <http://web.archive.org/web/20020805124207/www.mts.net/~gcg/index.html>.

<sup>2</sup> Altemeyer, 1996, Altemeyer, 2003.

<sup>3</sup> See for a discussion of layers of complexity, for instance, Lindner, 2001e. And see my explanations of the Weberian ideal-type approach.

<sup>4</sup> See, among others, Niemi and Young, 2016, Abstract:

Why do victims sometimes receive sympathy for their suffering and at other times scorn and blame? Here we show a powerful role for moral values in attitudes toward victims. We measured moral values associated with unconditionally prohibiting harm (“individualizing values”) versus moral values associated with prohibiting behavior that destabilizes groups and relationships (“binding values”: loyalty, obedience to authority, and purity). Increased endorsement of binding values predicted increased ratings of victims as contaminated (Studies 1-4); increased blame and responsibility attributed to victims, increased perceptions of victims’ (versus perpetrators’) behaviors as contributing to the outcome, and decreased focus on perpetrators (Studies 2-3). Patterns persisted controlling for politics, just world beliefs, and right-wing authoritarianism. Experimentally manipulating linguistic focus off of victims and onto perpetrators reduced victim blame. Both binding values and focus modulated victim blame through victim responsibility attributions. Findings indicate the important role of ideology in attitudes toward victims via effects on responsibility attribution.

I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this research. “Caring” and “fairness” are called “individualizing values” in this article, versus “loyalty-binding values.” I concur with Linda Hartling to call them “connectedness-compassion values” versus “loyalty-binding values.” See also “Who Blames the Victim?” by Laura Niemi and Liane Young, New York Times, June 24, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/06/26/opinion/sunday/who-blames-the-victim.html.

<sup>5</sup> I appreciate this article: “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

See also Ann Mische, professor at the Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies, and her contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” November 2, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016. Like me, she observes “a troubling anti-institutionalism in some sectors of the counter-hegemonic left,” or “a certain tendency in some critical-emancipatory approaches to dismiss the reform of governance institutions as simply the development of ‘new forms of governmentality’” aimed at social disciplining and (self-)control.” Mische admits that there is certainly truth to this, but “some institutional arrangements are better than others, in terms of inclusion, accountability, conflict resolution and effective and fairly distributed service provision,” and “these differences in governance structures matter for both local and global futures”:

While I’m deeply sympathetic with the radical autonomism and horizontalism of much of contemporary global justice activism, I’m skeptical of approaches that imagine building up alternative sources of “people’s power” completely outside of the state and thereby removing ourselves from attempts to engage or reform or participate in electoral and policy-making processes. This self-exclusion risks leaving the state in the hands of the neoliberals and the populist demagogues – thus intensifying the market forces/barbarism conjoined pathways.... we need to pay more attention to the combination of insider and outsider approaches in a social movement field that directly engages the state (among other actors). In fact there is substantial evidence in the social movement literature that it’s exactly this combination of insider and outsider approaches that generates durable change...

<sup>6</sup> Admiration for Nelson Mandela’s path, clearly, stands in contrast to the revulsion at the brutal concentration camps that his fellow brothers had implemented. See Trehwela, 2009.

<sup>7</sup> See, among others, Bourdieu, 1977, or Bourdieu, 1991. See also Bernstein, 1971, 1973, 1975, 1990, 2000. I thank Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of Bernstein’s work and that Bernstein introduced the concept of framing to describe how control of mental frames is used to regulate thinking and behavior in educational contexts. Bernstein describes framing as a mental process and a technique to exclude certain aspects of reality from entering the communication.

<sup>8</sup> When Kamran Mofid changed from an “economist as usual” into “an economist for the common good,” he was criticized and told if he could not remain a “good” economist, then, he should consider becoming a priest or a social worker. See his blog “Thank You Archbishops for Speaking Truth to Power,” by economist Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), February 1, 2015, www.gcgi.info/index.php/kamran-s-blog/660-thank-you-archbishops-for-speaking-truth-to-power. It is a privilege to have Kamran Mofid as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>9</sup> Coates, 2015, p. 146. See also Midiohouan, 1991.

<sup>10</sup> The first paragraph of Article 1 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on December 10, 1948, www.un.org/en/documents/udhr/.

<sup>11</sup> See also my planned book on human nature.

<sup>12</sup> Rosa, 2005, 2010. Hartmut Rosa is a professor of Sociology at the Friedrich Schiller University of Jena in Germany, and the head of the Max-Weber center of advanced cultural and social studies of the University of Erfurt. See also Why Are We Stuck Behind the Social Acceleration? TED talk by Hartmut Rosa, March 11, 2015, <https://youtu.be/7uG9OFGId3A>. The lead question is: How to have a good life in light of rapid social acceleration? Rosa’s argument is that modern societies are subjected to too close-meshed time regimes that regulate, coordinate, and control them outside of any ethical concepts.

<sup>13</sup> Neuroendocrinologist Robert Sapolsky, 2017, wrote about the context-dependency of behavior. Social psychologist, psychoanalyst, sociologist, and humanistic philosopher Erich Fromm, 1963, wrote an essay titled War within Man: A Psychological Enquiry into the Roots of Destructiveness, followed by commentaries by Jerome Frank, Paul Tillich, Hans Morgenthau, Roy Menninger, Pitirim Sorokin, and Thomas Merton. Fromm’s essay first discusses whether human nature is good or evil. Fromm describes two basic personality types, the biophile and necrophile. The necrophile is a perverted personality attracted to death, while the biophile is an optimistic personality attracted to life. Sigmund Freud developed a similar concept, that of the life instinct Eros and the death instinct Thanatos. Yet, like me, Fromm hypothesizes that these are not innate personality traits but that the necrophile is a secondary potentiality, when the primary, life-favoring potentialities cannot develop, either due to being hindered or failing. When a child is born into a social context of love, security, justice, and freedom, it will be able to unfold the biophilic personality. The last part of the essay warns that the necrophilous attraction to death, war, and destruction is intensified through being mechanized in modern industrial society.

<sup>14</sup> Pettit, 1997a, 2014.

<sup>15</sup> Riane T. Eisler, social scientist and activist, has developed a cultural transformation theory through which she describes how otherwise widely divergent societies followed what she calls a dominator model rather than a partnership model during the past millennia. See Eisler, 1987, and her most recent book Eisler, 2007. Eisler describes how, from the samurai of Japan to the Aztecs of Meso-America, people lived in very similar hierarchies of domination and under a rigidly male-dominant “strongman” rule, both in the family and state. Hierarchies of domination were maintained by a high degree of institutionalized and socially accepted violence, ranging from wife- and child-beating within the family to aggressive warfare at the larger tribal or national level.

<sup>16</sup> Fuller, 2003, Fuller and Gerloff, 2008.

<sup>17</sup> “The Foreign Policy Essay: The Prisms Through Which Americans View the Middle East,” by Shibley Telhami and Katayoun Kishi, Lawfare: Hard National Security Choices, February 1, 2015, www.lawfareblog.com/2015/02/the-foreign-policy-essay-the-prisms-through-which-americans-view-the-middle-east/. Shibley Telhami is the Anwar Sadat Professor for Peace and Development of the University of Maryland and a non-resident senior fellow at the Brookings Institution. It is a privilege to have Shibley Telhami as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Katayoun Kishi is a Ph.D. candidate in the department of government and politics at the University of Maryland. They found that two clusters of prisms, or worldviews, or core identities are explanatory, namely, human rights versus on the right:

A plurality of Americans is most concerned about protecting human rights when it comes to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict – more than worrying about U.S. or Israeli interests. This human rights prism helped cluster a set of attitudes on a number of issues: Those most concerned about human rights tend to oppose sending ground troops to fight ISIS (62 percent) and do not support fighting Assad in Syria (74 percent) – larger percentages than the rest of the population. This prism also results in more even-handed stances toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Few of those who are most concerned about human rights want the United States to lean toward Israel (17 percent vs. 38 percent for others) and also heavily favor Israel’s democracy over its Jewishness (88 percent vs. 64 percent for others). Only 7 percent of this group think that Muslims support ISIS (compared to 16 percent of others) and compared to the rest of the population, they are relatively unworried about ISIS recruiting Americans for attacks at home and abroad. Again, all of these attitudes seem to have a tangential relationship to each other but are part of a worldview centered on human rights....

On the right, we also find a clustering of views that are not necessarily causally linked. For example, Americans who would favor sending ground troops to fight ISIS are also much more likely than their counterparts to think that most Muslims support ISIS (20 percent vs. 9 percent, respectively), and are somewhat more concerned that Americans would join ISIS and carry out attacks on American soil. Those who support sending ground troops to fight ISIS also tend to hold more hardline attitudes toward the Israeli-Palestinian issue. If a two-state solution were not possible in the conflict, 14 percent would support Israeli annexation of the Palestinian territories without equal citizenship for Palestinians, versus only 8 percent of those who oppose sending ground troops. They also tend to favor Israel's Jewishness more than its democracy, with 32 percent favoring its Jewishness versus 18 percent of their counterparts. Perhaps most telling is this: Of the people who favor sending ground troops to fight ISIS, 46 percent want the United States to lean toward Israel when mediating the Israeli-Palestinian conflict – compared to 21 percent among those who oppose sending ground troops. These numbers suggest that support for Israel is part of this cluster of ideologies, along with attitudes toward Muslims and support for military excursions in the Middle East. Each idea reinforces the other, with no clear start and end point of causality.

<sup>18</sup> Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c. See the work by political scientist Stanley Feldman, for instance, Feldman, 2003. Read more in “The Rise of American Authoritarianism,” by Amanda Taub, Vox, March 1, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/3/1/11127424/trump-authoritarianism#change.

In the early 1990s, political scientist Stanley Feldman did innovative research. Feldman, a professor at SUNY Stony Brook, believed authoritarianism could be an important factor in American politics in ways that had nothing to do with fascism, but that it could only reliably be measured by unlinking it from specific political preferences. For Feldman, authoritarianism was a personality profile rather than a political preference, and in his questionnaires he therefore asks about parenting goals. He developed the definitive measurement of authoritarianism by asking four simple questions that appear to focus on parenting but are in fact designed to reveal how highly the respondent values hierarchy, order, and conformity over other values. This were his questions: Please tell me which one you think is more important for a child to have:

- independence or respect for elders?
- obedience or self-reliance?
- to be considerate or to be well-behaved?
- curiosity or good manners?

<sup>19</sup> Bond and Lun, 2013b, p. 83. I had the privilege of meeting cross-cultural psychologist Michael Harris from Hong Kong, when he taught at a Sommerakademie Friedens- und Konfliktforschung, July 11–16, 1999, in Clemenswerth, Germany. Michael Bond is an esteemed member from the first moment in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See for an explanation of the dimensions found Bond and Lun, 2013b, p. 79:

For the Self-directedness versus Other-directedness dimension, the qualities of determination, perseverance; a feeling of responsibility; independence; and imagination marked the Self-directedness end, which goes opposite to the Other-directedness end consisting of the qualities, religious faith and obedience. For the Civility versus Practicality dimension, the qualities of tolerance and respect for other people and unselfishness marked the Civility end of the dimension, whereas the quality of thrift, saving money and things marked the Practicality end of the dimension.

<sup>20</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber's three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

See also Karlberg, 2013. He explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality, see Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>21</sup> Adolf Hitler's words, on November 27, 1941, to the Danish foreign minister Scavenius and the Croat foreign minister Lorkowitsch were: "I am also here ice cold. If the German people are no longer strong enough and ready to sacrifice their own blood for their existence, then they must disappear and be destroyed by another, stronger power... I will not shed a tear for the German people," translated by Lindner from the German original, Haffner, 1978, p. 139.

<sup>22</sup> National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States and Kean, 2004, p. 39:

President Bush's motorcade departed from the school he had visited on September 11, 2001, at 9:35, and arrived at the airport between 9:42 and 9:45. "During the ride the President learned about the attack on the Pentagon. He boarded the aircraft, asked the Secret Service about the safety of his family, and called the Vice President [Dick Cheney]. According to notes of the call, at about 9:45 the President told the Vice President: "Sounds like we have a minor war going on here, I heard about the Pentagon. We are at war ... somebody's going to pay." Footnote: On the motorcade, see USSS record, shift log, Sept. 11, 2001 (departing 9:35, arriving 9:45); USSS record, Command Post Protectee Log, Sept. 11, 2001 (departing 9:36, arriving 9:42). Fleischer deduced from his notes that the President learned about the Pentagon while in the motorcade. Ari Fleischer interview (Apr. 22, 2004). For the President's actions and statements to the Vice President, see Ari Fleischer interview (Apr. 22, 2004); White House notes, Ari Fleischer notes, Sept. 11, 2001.

I thank psychology professor Hroar Klempe for reminding me on January 24, 2015. He followed the 9/11 attacks' live coverage on CNN and observed how it was first interpreted as an accident, and then, half an hour later, became a case of terror. It is a privilege to have Hroar Klempe as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>23</sup> The Norwegian original of this sentence is as follows: "Hvis en person kan lage så mye hat, hvor mye kjærlighet kan vi da ikke lage sammen." This was said by Helle Gannestad, a member of AUF of Møre og Romsdal in a CNN interview (AUF is the Workers' Youth League, Norway's largest political youth organization and affiliated with the Norwegian Labour Party), who survived the attack by Anders Behring Breivik, who shot dead 69 participants of a Workers' Youth League (AUF) summer camp on the island of Utøya. Gannestad's utterance spread and even became a Facebook page. See "Kjærlighetsbudskapet sprer seg i alle kanaler," VG, July 24, 2011, www.vg.no/nyheter/innenriks/terrorangrepet-22-juli-politikk-og-samfunn/kjaerlighetsbudskapet-sprer-seg-i-alle-kanaler/a/10080708/. VG, Verdens Gang (the course of the world), is a Norwegian tabloid newspaper. Norwegian Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg took this sentence up and said on July 22, 2011: "Om én mann kan vise så mye hat, tenk hvor mye kjærlighet vi alle kan vise sammen." CNN was involved in broadcasting both 9/11 and the Norwegian reaction to terror ten years later. Both sentences were uttered by individuals and became historical markers, thus underlining the role and responsibility of individuals and how they can trigger the attitude that follows.

<sup>24</sup> Sociologist and philosopher Theodor Adorno is known for having shed light on authoritarianism. Three core components were originally listed by Adorno, et al., 1950, p. 148:

- authoritarian submission (submissive, uncritical attitude toward idealized moral authorities of the in-group)
- authoritarian aggression (a general aggressiveness, directed against various persons, which is perceived to be sanctioned by the established authorities)
- conventionalism (adherence to conventional, middle-class values)

See also Altemeyer, 1981, 1996, 2003, 2009, and the archive of Altemeyer's original Global Change Game Website, <http://web.archive.org/web/20020805124207/www.mts.net/~gcg/index.html>. See Stenner, 2005, for more recent work on authoritarianism, as being latent until activated by a perception of threat (social threat theory), or Hetherington and Weiler, 2009, on authoritarian views being expressed under threat. See Suhay, 2015, for the insight that an increase in threat may trigger political behavior, and that physical threats such as terrorism may even lead non-authoritarians to behave like authoritarians, while more abstract social threats, such as the erosion of social norms or demographic changes, do not have that effect. See for a readable summary, "The Rise of American Authoritarianism," by Amanda Taub, Vox, March 1, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/3/1/11127424/trump-authoritarianism#change, where Jonathan Haidt speaks of a button being pushed that says: "In case of moral threat, lock down the borders, kick out those who are different, and punish those who are morally deviant." The article goes on to describe the five policies that authoritarians generally and Donald Trump voters specifically were likely to support:

- using military force over diplomacy against countries that threaten the United States
- changing the Constitution to bar citizenship for children of illegal immigrants
- imposing extra airport checks on passengers who appear to be of Middle Eastern descent in order to curb terrorism
- requiring all citizens to carry a national ID card at all times to show to a police officer on request, to curb terrorism
- allowing the federal government to scan all phone calls for calls to any number linked to terrorism

I thank William M. Lafferty for making me aware of this article.

See also "The Best Predictor of Trump Support Isn't Income, Education, or Age. It's Authoritarianism," by Matthew MacWilliams, Vox, February 23, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/2/23/11099644/trump-support-authoritarianism.

In his 2016 campaign to become president of the United States, Donald Trump skillfully targeted the fears related to terrorism and immigration among authoritarians, focusing less on topics such as abortion or small government, thus following the path to success scripted in Hetherington and Suhay, 2011.

See, furthermore, Hardisty, 1999, or “Donald Trump’s Presidential Run Began in an Effort to Gain Stature,” by Maggie Haberman and Alexander Burns, March 12, 2016, New York Times, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/13/us/politics/donald-trump-campaign.html?smprod=nytcore-ipad&smid=nytcore-ipad-share. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article, and of Hardisty’s work already many years ago.

See also an article highlighting that supporters of Donald Trump are average middle class, “Dangerous Idiots: How the Liberal Media Elite Failed Working-Class Americans,” by Sarah Smarsh, The Guardian, October 13, 2016, www.theguardian.com/media/2016/oct/13/liberal-media-bias-working-class-americans.

Interestingly, views on parenting styles are the strongest predictors of authoritarianism; see the work on parenting styles by Feldman, 2003, 2013, or Hetherington and Weiler, 2009, and compare it with the work by Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c. The rise of ideals of equal dignity creates alternatives that were not present in the past, when, for instance, spanking was universally accepted as proper pedagogy, and erodes boundaries that once were fixed. It seems that authoritarians have stronger gag reflexes than liberals and react with strong disgust, among others, to homosexual orientations. See Terrizzi, et al., 2010. After 9/11, “the disgusting terrorist” was constructed using the performativity of disgust, see, for instance, Sara Ahmed, 2004. Ideologies are being experienced and embodied, they are not simply ideas or concepts, see Wilce, 2009.

Listen to The United States of Anxiety, Episode 7: This Is Your Brain on Politics, WNYC (nonprofit, noncommercial, public radio stations located in New York City), November 3, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/united-states-of-anxiety-podcast-episode-7. In this WNYC broadcast the field of biopolitics is being explored, the biology of political differences, see, among others, French, et al., 2014, Hibbing, et al., 2014, Wagner, et al., 2015. Biological information systems seem to play a role in forming differences between conservatives and liberals. Conservatives respond differently to fear than liberals and lock onto negative images more, while liberals seek novelty, new and pleasurable stimuli. In short: conservatives are scared, liberals are creative. The journalists collaborated with researchers for a pilot study that showed that those higher on the stress hormone cortisol voted less, while the cortisol baseline for Trump voters was twice as high as compared to Hillary Clinton voters.

<sup>25</sup> Duckitt, et al., 2010, p. 687. The traditional view was that Right-Wing Authoritarianism (RWA) is a personality dimension, however, “new approaches have begun to suggest that RWA might be better conceptualized as social attitudes and values. A second issue, which arises partly out of this personality versus social attitude issue, is that of whether RWA is a unidimensional or multidimensional construct,” John Duckitt, et al., 2010, pp. 686–687. “Right-Wing Authoritarianism (RWA) has been conceptualized and measured as a unidimensional personality construct comprising the covariation of the three traits of authoritarian submission, authoritarian aggression, and conventionalism,” John Duckitt, et al., 2010, Abstract. However, so the authors continue, “new approaches have criticized this conceptualization and instead viewed these three ‘traits’ as three distinct, though related, social attitude dimensions.”

See for more, among others, Duckitt and Fisher, 2003, or Mavor, et al., 2010. See also Duckitt, 1989, Feldman, 2003, Kreindler, 2005, Stellmacher and Petzel, 2005, Stenner, 2005. Duckitt and Fisher, 2003, Abstract:

Research has shown that social threat correlates with ideological authoritarianism, but the issues of causal direction and specificity of threat to particular ideological attitudes remain unclear. Here, a theoretical model is proposed in which social threat has an impact on authoritarianism specifically, with the effect mediated through social worldview. The model was experimentally tested with a sample of undergraduates who responded to one of three hypothetical scenarios describing a future New Zealand that was secure, threatening, or essentially unaltered. Both threat and security influenced social worldview, but only threat influenced authoritarianism, with differential effects on two factorially distinct subdimensions (conservative and authoritarian social control attitudes) and with the effects of threat mediated through worldview. There was a weak effect of threat on social dominance that was entirely mediated through authoritarianism. The findings support the proposed theoretical model of how personal and social contextual factors causally affect people’s social worldviews and ideological attitudes.

Chapter 1

<sup>1</sup> “The Worst Mistake in the History of the Human Race,” by Jared Diamond, Discover Magazine, May 1987, pp. 64–66, www.ditext.com/diamond/mistake.html:

Archaeologists studying the rise of farming have reconstructed a crucial stage at which we made the worst mistake in human history. Forced to choose between limiting population or trying to increase food production, we chose the latter and ended up with starvation, warfare, and tyranny.

See also Manning, 2004, Hemenway, 2009, or Harari, 2014, who also share the view that the agricultural revolution was history's "biggest fraud." See, furthermore, "Is Sustainable Agriculture an Oxymoron?" Toby Hemenway, Permaculture Activist, Number 60, May, 2006, www.patternliteracy.com/203-is-sustainable-agriculture-an-oxymoron.

<sup>2</sup> See, among others, Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and "The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?" by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>3</sup> Dennis, 2006. See also Kroglund, 2016.

<sup>4</sup> Gepts, et al., 2012.

<sup>5</sup> See the website of agricultural machinery manufacturer Claas, www.norway.claas.com/fascination-claas/history/product-history/combine-harvesters/dominator-mega:

With the DOMINATOR, combine harvester manufacture at CLAAS took on a whole new dimension. In those early days, the sizes of farms and the surface areas processed became ever larger, harvesting yields increased and for many smaller farms, it became clear that grain crops did not necessarily have to be harvested by the farms themselves. This industry demanded higher-performance combine harvesters and greater comfort for operators. In 1970, CLAAS launched a machine in the five-straw-walker class with the DOMINATOR 100, followed one year later by a machine in the six-straw-walker class with the DOMINATOR 100. The 1.32-metre-wide threshing drum on the DOMINATOR 80 (1.58 meters on the DOMINATOR 100) became the basis for establishing new performance dimensions.

<sup>6</sup> Charles Franklin Kettering (1876 – 1958) was an American inventor, engineer, businessman, and the holder of many patents. Two of his ideas contributed to large-scale damage of the environment; the first was leaded gasoline, and the second was the invention of the Freon refrigerant for refrigeration and air conditioning systems. The CFCs in Freon are implicated in the depletion of the ozone layer, as human-made halocarbon refrigerants, solvents, propellants, and foam-blowing agents (CFCs, HCFCs, freons, halons) are the source of photodissociation in the stratosphere.

<sup>7</sup> "Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society," writes Johan Galtung. See "Sociocide, Palestine and Israel," by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, October 8, 2012, www.transcend.org/tms/2012/10/sociocide-palestine-and-israel/ (italics in original):

Sociocide, the killing of a society's capacity to survive and to reproduce itself, should become equally and prominently a crime against humanity. A society is a self-reproducing social system. So are human beings, with our basic needs for survival, wellness, identity, freedom. Society is also an organism, with a lifespan far beyond that of individuals. For humans to survive as humans their basic needs have to be met. For that to happen the society has to survive. For the society to survive the basic social prerequisites must be met:

- for security, against violence, killing, wounding the members
- for economic sustainability, against their starvation, illness
- for identity culturally, a meaning with life, against alienation
- for autonomy politically, to be a master of their own house

As society unfolds so do humans, and vice versa. Life breeds life.

This also holds for nomadic societies based on hunter-gatherers. Monasteries are incapable of self-reproduction biologically when based on one gender, but are highly viable societies based on recruitment.

Under modernity, identity is carried by the nation, with four characteristics: an idiom, a religion-world view, a history – of the past, present and future – and geographical attachment. Time, Space, with the means to communicate and something to believe is crucial.

Under modernity the state is the key executor of all the above.

Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society.

Sociocide molests the human members. In the longer run, lethally. Sociocide is what Western, and not only Western, colonialism has done for centuries, denying others their autonomy, imposing their own identity – language and world-view – moving others out of their own historical dialectic and into history as Western periphery, denying them the land they are attached to with their hearts and minds. And their bodies for security and sustenance, for food, water, health.

See also Cormann, 2015.

<sup>8</sup> Higgins, 2016. See a precursor to the concept of ecocide in Christopher Stone, 1972, and for "a look back forty years later," Anna Gear, 2012. See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016. Consider the sustainability principle in the Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia. In September 2016, the International Criminal Court added environmental disasters and destruction, even land grabs, to the definition of Crimes Against Humanity, which shows that real international legal instrument now follow soft law (Earth Charter) or symbolic language (ecocide, where the mens rea required cannot be demonstrated).

There are voices, however, that warn that introducing a crime of ecocide in the International Criminal Court (ICC) can ultimately be undesirable, because the vehicle of an international crime overreaches and is insufficient at the same time. See Capra and Mattei, 2015. See also Ugo Mattei of the Hastings College of Law at the University of California, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 5, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. The ICC, because of the lack of international centralized power or independence, is just a mockery of an institution, writes Mattei, and continues:

Ecocide is too serious of an issue to be entangled with such a spectacle of an international institution that never worked to reach the actual powerful culprits. Moreover, even if we were to take seriously international criminal law in a world of dramatic power imbalance, a crime of ecocide would necessarily require a level of culpability that is most probably absent in all the major episodes of devastation of the environment. Disasters such as Fukushima, Chernobyl, or even the Gulf spill would clearly fall below that. There are issues of corporate responsibility, of criminal consequences of recklessness, of sufficiency, of omissions, or of causality that handled by any good criminal attorney would let wealthy corporate actors be immune from responsibility.

It is hard to believe that any powerful wrongdoer will be deterred by such a crime, and, as consequence, the very idea of ecocide will suffer prestige and credibility.

We live in a world in which very few people have any awareness of the disasters of the Anthropocene, so we need diffused ecological literacy. We live in a world in which people believe that the only concept of law is that of a vertical model in the hands of governments, so we need diffused legal literacy.

In seeking a legal solution for problems of such ecological relevance, involving so many non-human interests traditionally and presently ignored and massively violated by the very structure of extractive capitalism, we need (if at all available) the best not the worst part of legal systems. We need to culturally transform the perception of law, to disentangle it with notions of power-concentration, to give it back to communities as a decentralized cultural and legitimate tool to share problems and solutions. Nothing is further away from people and social movements than an appeal to jails, cops, and police to solve our ecological problems. Would such a move increase international ecological legal literacy?

It is an honor for me to be part in Anna Grear’s network, as well as Paul Raskin’s GTN discussions.

<sup>9</sup> Wijdekop, 2016. The strategy is “to add ecocide to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC) as the fifth crime against peace (along with genocide, crimes of aggression, crimes against humanity, and war crimes), and to have ecocide law introduced in the national jurisdictions of the member states of the ICC.”

<sup>10</sup> See also “Uttarakhand HC Declares Air, Glaciers, Forests, Springs, Waterfalls Etc. As Legal Persons,” LiveLaw News Network, April 1, 2017, www.livelaw.in/uttarakhand-hc-declares-air-glaciers-forests-springs-waterfalls-etc-legal-persons/. We thank Anna Grear for making us aware of these news.

<sup>11</sup> Linda Sheehan, Executive Director of the Earth Law Center in Redwood City, CA, in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 31, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016:

We have taken great strides in the last century to recognize the inherent rights and dignity of people. The next step is to expand our recognized community further, to embrace the inherent rights and dignity of the natural world. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 1 recognizes that “All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.” As articulated by the Declaration’s Drafting Committee, “the supreme value of the human person...did not originate in the decision of a worldly power, but rather in the fact of existing.” Just as we protect humans’ inherent rights from the excesses of potentially harmful governing bodies, so too should we protect our partners on Earth from the excesses of humans and human governance systems. The rights of all beings, including our own, are limited to the extent necessary to maintain the integrity, balance and health of the larger whole.

<sup>12</sup> I use quotation marks to highlight that I do not mean these nouns to mean rigidly separate entities. In my view, commonalities and processual approaches would characterize the phenomena in question more appropriately.

<sup>13</sup> See Anderson, 2006, for imagined communities.

<sup>14</sup> See, for the correspondence bias, among others, Gilbert, 1998, and Gawronski, 2004, Gawronski and Bodenhausen, 2006.

<sup>15</sup> Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>16</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>17</sup> William Ury: The Walk from “No” to “Yes,” TEDxMidwest, 2010, www.ted.com/talks/william\_ury.html. See his foundational books, Fisher, et al., 2011, Ury, 2000, 2007. William Ury helped found the Abraham Path project, a long-distance walking trail across the Middle East which connects the sites visited by the patriarch Abraham as recorded in ancient religious texts and traditions. It is a privilege to have William Ury as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>18</sup> Robert Leonard Carneiro, in a personal meeting at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City, November 6, 2013. It is a privilege to have Robert Carneiro as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>19</sup> See also Witt and Schwesinger, 2013. Groups that grow larger and want to fission and migrate into a separate territory need unoccupied land.

<sup>20</sup> Rowen Sivertsen, 2011. It is a privilege to have Barbara Rowen Sivertsen as esteemed member in the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>21</sup> See an interesting recent overview over the “big questions” related to the origin of the Universe, our galaxy, our Solar System, and life, along with the process by which scientists explore new concepts, in Randall, 2015.

<sup>22</sup> The Higgs boson was discovered in July 2012 in the Large Hadron Collider in Switzerland, and its mass is 126 giga-electron-volts. See a very accessible description in “New Physics Complications Lend Support to Multiverse Hypothesis,” by Natalie Wolchover, Quanta Magazine, May 24, 2013, www.simonsfoundation.org/quanta/20130524-is-nature-unnatural/.

<sup>23</sup> “New Physics Complications Lend Support to Multiverse Hypothesis,” by Natalie Wolchover, Quanta Magazine, May 24, 2013, www.simonsfoundation.org/quanta/20130524-is-nature-unnatural/.

<sup>24</sup> Heisenberg, 1969/1971. See also episode 6, Werner Heisenberg: Der Teil und das Ganze, produced by BR-alpha, ARD-alpha, by Eva Maria Steimle, www.br.de/mediathek/video/sendungen/werner-heisenberg/teil-und-das-ganze100.html#filterEntireBroadcast=false&moreMoreCount=0&tab=bcastInfo&jump=tab. ARD-alpha is a German television station owned by regional broadcaster Bayerischer Rundfunk, BR. See also Alexander Wendt’s work, for instance, Wendt, 2015. I am thankful for having had the chance to communicate with Alexander Wendt, for the first time in 2005.

<sup>25</sup> See Kolbert, 2014, for an accessible description of how the present-day atmosphere evolved.

<sup>26</sup> See, among others, Montagu, 1989.

<sup>27</sup> “Oldest Homo Sapiens Fossil Claim Rewrites Our Species’ History,” by Ewen Callaway, Nature, June 7, 2017, www.nature.com/news/oldest-homo-sapiens-fossil-claim-rewrites-our-species-history-1.22114. Remains from Morocco dated to 315,000 years ago push back our species’ origins by 100,000 years — and suggest we didn’t evolve only in East Africa.

<sup>28</sup> The Holocene is the current geological epoch which started approximately 11,700 years ago, when the glaciers began to retreat, and the Neolithic Revolution unfolded. Some also call it the Anthropocene, because it is the epoch, when human activities started to have a significant global impact on Earth’s ecosystems, see, for instance Zalasiewicz, et al., 2010. The reasons for and circumstances of the rise of agriculture are hotly discussed, see, among many others, Richerson, et al., 1999, Richerson, et al., 2001, Richerson and Boyd, 2001, Boyd and Richerson, 2009. See also recent findings that farming in the Fertile Crescent did not begin in a single population, but rather was tried out all over the Fertile Crescent, a region in the Middle East including modern-day Iraq, Jordan, Syria, Israel, Palestine, southeastern Turkey and western Iran. The descendants of the early farmers from the Zagros Mountains on the border between Iraq and Iran probably migrated east, taking their farming techniques to that part of the world, while those from the Turkey region migrated north into Europe and introduced farming there. See the work of the palaeogenetics team around Joachim Burger, Broushaki, et al., 2016. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of these new findings.

<sup>29</sup> In the case of territorial circumscription, it is landscape that stands “in the way,” while social circumscription means that other people “stand in the way.” Circumscription theory has been developed by anthropologist and curator of the American Museum of Natural History in New York City, Robert Leonard Carneiro. See, among others, Carneiro, 1970, 1988, 2000, 2010, 2012. See, furthermore, Sanderson, 2007, and Schacht, 1988. It is a privilege to have Robert Carneiro as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>30</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 12.

<sup>31</sup> See, for instance, The Limits to Growth, a 1972 book about the computer simulation of exponential economic and population growth with finite resource supplies, updated in Meadows, et al., 2005.

<sup>32</sup> John Bellamy Foster wrote about cleric and scholar Thomas Robert Malthus in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Marxism and Ecology: Common Fonts of a Great Transition,” October 9, 2015:

His treatment of the population-food problem was directed at justifying class hierarchy and poverty. It had nothing to do with an ecological perspective, which, as Eric Ross has shown, only came to be associated with his thought with the rise of neo-Malthusianism in the 1940s, and even then lacked any scholarly basis.

<sup>33</sup> Malthus, 1798.

<sup>34</sup> Tim Jackson of the Centre for Environmental Strategy at the Faculty of Engineering and Physical Sciences, University of Surrey in the UK, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Marxism and Ecology: Common Fonts of a Great Transition,” October 1, 2015. See also Jackson, 2009.

<sup>35</sup> “The Next Genocide,” by Timothy Snyder, New York Times, September 12, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/09/13/opinion/sunday/the-next-genocide.html?\_r=0. See also Snyder, 2010, 2015, 2017.

<sup>36</sup> See, among others, Carneiro, 1970, 1988, 2000, 2010, 2012. See, furthermore, Sanderson, 2007, or Schacht, 1988. It is a privilege to have Robert Carneiro as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>37</sup> Chase-Dunn and Hall, 2002, and Chase-Dunn and Hall, 1997.

<sup>38</sup> See a “A philosophical interpretation of ubuntu” in Metz, 2012. I thank Francisco Gomes de Matos for making me aware of Thaddeus Metz’ work. Philosopher Thaddeus Metz is a humanities research professor at the University of Johannesburg. Desmond Tutu used ubuntu as foundation for his Truth Commissions in South Africa, see Battle, 1997. I am profoundly grateful to Archbishop Desmond Tutu for contributing with the Foreword to the book Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security. See Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. See also note 162 and 163 in Chapter 5.

<sup>39</sup> Ingrid Fuglestad in a personal communication on October 17, 2011. See also Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?” by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>40</sup> See Catherine Odora Hoppers and her brother George in conversation on June 7, 2013, at www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/videos.php#SARChI. It is a privilege to have Catherine Odora Hoppers and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>41</sup> Richards, 2016a. Nyerere, 1968.

<sup>42</sup> Bazaara, 1992, p. 8, quoted in Okuku, 2006.

<sup>43</sup> See, among others, Armstrong, 1981.

<sup>44</sup> Grossman, 2006.

<sup>45</sup> Mielants, 2007.

<sup>46</sup> Foucault, 1961/2006.

<sup>47</sup> “Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Four,” video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 8, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, http://youtu.be/pwDiTMUpJ\_Q. See the text also on www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/Richards04EarlyFoucaultPartFour8May2013.pdf. Richards, et al., 2015a, is the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also note 196 in the Introduction.

<sup>48</sup> Foucault, 1961, p. 90.

<sup>49</sup> Inspired by Howard Richards’ presentation “Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Four,” Catherine Odora Hoppers and Evelin Lindner engaged in a dialogue with Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 8, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, <http://youtu.be/XvMWdPoNVvo>. Richards, et al., 2015a, is the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues. It is a privilege to have Catherine Odora Hoppers and Howard Richards as esteemed members in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>50</sup> “Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies: Transdisciplinarity in Practice,” talk given by Evelin Lindner at the Programme for the Enhancement of Research Capacity (PERC) Workshop, University of Cape Town, South Africa, convened by PERC coordinator Robert Morrell. July 4, 2013.

<sup>51</sup> “The Very Survival of Africa’s Indigenous Peoples ‘Seriously Threatened,’” by Baher Kamal, Inter Press Service (IPS), May 3, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/05/the-very-survival-of-africas-indigenous-peoples-seriously-threatened/.

<sup>52</sup> Lindner, 2012e. See also the Thirty-First Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 5, 2011, in New York City

(www.neweconomicsinstitute.org), where I learned from the panel “Voices of Today’s Youth: Occupy Wall Street and Youth for a New Economy” that Harvard University owns ten percent of the endowments of U.S. universities and that they have bought land in Africa the size of France. See, furthermore, “US Universities in Africa ‘Land Grab,’” by John Vidal and Claire Provost, The Guardian, June 8, 2011, www.theguardian.com/world/2011/jun/08/us-universities-africa-land-grab. The authors report that institutions including Harvard and Vanderbilt use hedge funds to buy land in deals that may force local farmers off their land.

Then watch the documentary film Our Man in Sudan, by Shuchan Tan, Al Jazeera, May 30, 2013, www.aljazeera.com/programmes/witness/2013/05/2013528142234495531.html. This film follows former Wall Street banker Phil Heilberg, who reveals what goes on behind the scenes in the modern-day version of land grabs. Heilberg explains that he has learned from the oligarchs in Russia who got rich when the Soviet Union broke up. When Heilberg asked himself how they made their wealth, he observed that wealth is shifted when states break up or new states emerge. The lesson he drew was to have his eye on state break-ups and nearly emergent states, such as South Sudan, or Somaliland. The film shows how he forms an alliance with a local warlord, who is now close to the president, who can sign leases for land. So, the warlord, inspired by Heilberg, now “encourages” the president to lease land to Heilberg. Heilberg has never visited this land himself, jokingly remarking that he cannot even keep alive a plant in his apartment. The film reveals, shockingly, that Heilberg believes the land to be “empty,” oblivious of the fact that people live there since generations and regard this as their land, from which they derive their livelihood.

See also Machtfaktor Erde. Beutezüge im Klimawandel, a documentary film by Angela Andersen und Claus Kleber, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, <http://machtfaktorerde.zdf.de/#home>. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. In a remote region of Ethiopia, the ZDF team finds a Saudi Arabian investor group which has seized land for the cultivation of rice and has evicted thousands of small farmers. “No mega-project, a giga-project,” is how the responsible manager describes this project.

<sup>53</sup> See, among others, Harvey, 2003, Federici, 2004.

<sup>54</sup> Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay discusses the “T-treaty trinity,” the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), Trade in Services Agreement (TiSA), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP). See “Barack Obama’s Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?” by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016, www.thecodeforglobalethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY:

Such agreements, negotiated in near complete secrecy, pursue geopolitical objectives. They are an attempt to build a worldwide economic and financial order that supersedes national states and they represent also an effort to protect the corporate and banking elites – the establishment 1 percent – against national governments. In the case of the TTIP, its geopolitical objective is to prevent European countries from developing comprehensive trade agreements with Russia. In the case of TPP, the objective is to isolate China. In the eyes of Washington D.C. neocon planners, they are part of ongoing economic warfare.

See also Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

See also “Lessons from the Demise of the TPP,” by Jomo Kwame Sundaram and Anis Chowdhury, Inter Press Service (IPS), January 5, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/01/lessons-from-the-demise-of-the-tpp/.

<sup>55</sup> Robinson, 2017.

<sup>56</sup> Robinson, 2017:

This corporate-driven globalization has brought a vast new round of global enclosures as hundreds of millions of people have been uprooted and converted into surplus humanity.

<sup>57</sup> Robinson, 2017.

<sup>58</sup> Active SETI, also known as messaging to extraterrestrial intelligence (METI), consists of sending signals into space in the hope that they will be picked up by an alien intelligence. Stephen Hawking made a documentary series for the Discovery Channel, and he advises, “If aliens visit us, the outcome would be much as when Columbus landed in America, which didn’t turn out well for the Native Americans,” see “Stephen Hawking Takes a Hard Line on Aliens,” by Leo Hickman, The Guardian, April 26, 2010, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2010/apr/26/stephen-hawking-issues-warning-on-aliens. See also Gerritzen, 2016.

<sup>59</sup> Betanzos, et al., 1996.

<sup>60</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013. Groups that grow larger and want to fission and migrate into a separate territory need unoccupied land.

<sup>61</sup> Ury, 1999.

<sup>62</sup> Intensification means domesticating plants and animals, and developing agricultural systems. See, among others,

Boserup, 1965, Cohen, 1977, 2009, Richerson, et al., 1999, Richerson, et al., 2001, Richerson and Boyd, 2001, Boyd and Richerson, 2009. See also Ury, 1999.

I thank Merle Lefkoff for reminding me of the work of economist Ester Boserup, 1970, who studied economic and agricultural development and suggested that men have an advantage in farming over women as soon as plough agriculture is practiced, since, unlike the hoe or digging stick, the plough requires more upper body strength, grip strength, and burst of power. Recent research supports her suggestion that traditional plough-use is positively correlated with attitudes of gender inequality, see “Women and the Plough,” by Alberto Alesina, Paola Giuliano, and Nathan Nunn, VoxEU.org, policy portal of the Centre for Economic Policy Research (CEPR), July 2, 2011, <http://voxeu.org/article/modern-gender-roles-and-ancient-farming>.

<sup>63</sup> Lindner, 2000c. Farmers who plant crops are bound to be more sedentary than, for example, livestock farmers. The latter become more mobile when the size of their flock increases, but this is not to be confused with the mobility of foragers. There is no direct transition from foraging to mobile livestock farming, except for in Africa, explains, for example, Parzinger, 2015.

<sup>64</sup> See Suhay, 2015. See for a readable summary, “The Rise of American Authoritarianism,” by Amanda Taub, Vox, March 1, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/3/1/11127424/trump-authoritarianism#change, where Jonathan Haidt is quoted as saying that a button is pushed that says, “In case of moral threat, lock down the borders, kick out those who are different, and punish those who are morally deviant.” The article goes on to describe the five policies that authoritarians generally and Donald Trump voters specifically were likely to support:

- Using military force over diplomacy against countries that threaten the United States
- Changing the Constitution to bar citizenship for children of illegal immigrants
- Imposing extra airport checks on passengers who appear to be of Middle Eastern descent in order to curb terrorism
- Requiring all citizens to carry a national ID card at all times to show to a police officer on request, to curb terrorism
- Allowing the federal government to scan all phone calls for calls to any number linked to terrorism.

<sup>65</sup> “Why Steven Pinker, Like Jared Diamond, Is Wrong,” by Stephen Corry, Truthout, June 11, 2013, <http://truthout.org/opinion/item/16880-the-case-of-the-brutal-savage-poirot-or-clouseau-or-why-steven-pinker-like-jared-diamond-is-wrong>. See also Corry, 2010.

<sup>66</sup> The controversies surrounding anthropologist Napoléon Chagnon, 2013, may serve as an illustration of the heated debate about human nature. I thank Robert Carneiro for sharing with me his deep insights into this debate.

<sup>67</sup> There is a large amount of literature on ontological security that infers emotions onto states by ascribing “personhood” to states and assuming that states can act out of fear, shame, or anxiety. See, among others, Mitzen, 2006, Steele, 2007a, Krolkowski, 2008, or Pratt, 2016. Ontological security is a mental state that steers clear of existential fear by avoiding dissonance and creating a cocoon of continuity and certainty. Sociologist Anthony Giddens, 1991, links ontological security to a meaningful life of positive and stable emotions, insulated from chaos and anxiety. Sociologist Norbert Elias, 1985, and his work on death is related. See also Stanley and Wise, 2011. Relevant is also terror management theory, as proposed by Jeff Greenberg, Sheldon Solomon, and Tom Pyszczynski. See the first complete formal statement of terror management theory including epistemological assumptions and proposal for an experimental existential psychology in Solomon, et al., 1991, and more recent publications related to the events of September 11, 2001, Pyszczynski, et al., 2003. I had the privilege of being invited, together with Tom Pyszczynski, one of the fathers of terror management theory, to the NATO Advanced Research Workshop “Indigenous Terrorism: Understanding and Addressing the Root Causes of Radicalisation among Groups with an Immigrant Heritage in Europe,” in Budapest, Hungary, in March 7–9, 2008, see Lindner, et al., 2009, in the proceedings.

<sup>68</sup> See Herz, 1950. Under the conditions of the security dilemma, the Hobbesian fear of surprise attacks from outside one’s nation’s borders reigns. Barry Posen and Russell Hardin discuss the emotional aspects of the security dilemma and how they play out between ethnic groups as much as between states, see Posen, 1993, and Hardin, 1995, or Rose, 2000. See also Collins, 2004, Hansen, 2000, Jervis, 1978, Job, 1992, Musah and Fayemi, 2000, Posen, 1993, Snyder, 1985, Snyder and Walters, 1999, or Schweller, 2011. See for the critical turn in international relations theory, the notion of positive security and the so-called Copenhagen School, for example, Roe, 1999, 2005. I appreciate political scientist Jack S. Levy’s 2016 course “Theories of War And Peace” at Rutgers University, <http://home.uchicago.edu/~mjreese/CurrentStudents/LevyPS522.pdf>. He recommends, among others, Glaser, 1997, Montgomery, 2006, Schweller, 1996, Snyder and Jervis, 1999, Tang, 2011. See also an interview that Alexandros Koutsoukis conducted with Steven C. Roach on November 2, 2016, as part of a series of interviews under the motto “Resurrecting IR Theory,” where Roach discusses affective values in international relations, the value of resilience, and how to theorize emotional actions, www.e-ir.info/2016/11/02/interview-steven-c-roach/. Roach acknowledges the influence of Alexander Wendt, 2015, and his quantum mind approach to IR, which reaches beyond the materialist problems of social inquiry, including the mind-body duality/problem. Wendt seeks to unify quantum theory and social ontology, thus mapping the imaginary contours of a global human consciousness (note also Lindner’s communication with Wendt in 2005). Roach also acknowledges Andrew Linklater, 2005, and his work on dialogical ethics, the ethics of harm in world politics, and the moral possibilities of producing dialogue across states. Furthermore, he points at Sara Ahmed, 2004, and her book The Cultural Politics of Emotion, where she describes how emotions can “stick,” how they can structure social relations by attaching themselves to values and anchor judgments and beliefs relating to justice, peace, cooperation, resilience, or tolerance. Roach also draws on Gilles Deleuze and Félix Guattari’s texts on the micropolitics of desire and sees affects as social and relational phenomena that resonate with unconscious feelings, and that it may take several decades for affects to become norms. He follows Guattari and Deleuze and Guattari, 1972/1977, in seeing the body of being capable of producing “assemblages” with other bodies to form collective identities: “Our feelings challenge authority unconsciously. They ‘circulate’ within and through these assemblages or functional structures.” Lyotard, 1974/1983, offers a related perspective on the micropolitics of desire. Roach, 2017, is working on a book on decency and diversity, where he touches upon the volatile politics of the International Criminal Court, global terrorism, and human rights abuses. Inspired by the writings of William Connolly, 2010, on pluralism, Roach explores the moral possibility of cultural pluralism in world politics and asks which role decency can play for global pressures on cultural movements. He is critical of idealist assumptions of fixed absolute points in our moral understanding of a good society, such as presented, for instance, in Political Emotions by Martha Nussbaum, 2013, where she emphasizes love, and how love needs to transcend one’s circumstances.

<sup>69</sup> Ralph K. White, a former U.S. Information Agency official, later a political scientist and psychologist at George Washington University, was the foremost advocate of what he called realistic empathy in foreign affairs. White contends that only through empathy can one accurately tell the story adversaries are telling themselves about “us,” about themselves, or about the situation they believe they face. See also James Blight and Lang, 2010, pp. 38–39. I thank John McFadden for making me aware of this work. White makes a clear distinction between empathy and sympathy. White, 1984, pp. 160–161, emphasis in original:

Empathy is the great corrective for all forms of war-promoting misperception... It [means] simply understanding the thoughts and feelings of others. It is distinguished from sympathy, which is defined as feeling with others – as being in agreement with them. Empathy with opponents is therefore psychologically possible even when a conflict is so intense that sympathy is out of the question... We are not talking about warmth or approval, and certainly not about agreeing with, or siding with, but only about realistic understanding.

...

How can empathy be achieved? It means jumping in imagination into another person’s skin, imagining what it might be like to look out at his world through his eyes, and imagining how you might feel about what you saw. It means being the other person, at least for a while, and postponing skeptical analysis until later... Most of all it means trying to look at one’s own group’s behavior honestly, as it might appear when seen through the other’s eyes, recognizing that his eyes are almost certainly jaundiced, but recognizing also that he has the advantage of not seeing our group’s behavior through the rose-colored glasses that we ourselves normally wear. He may have grounds for distrust, fear and anger that we have not permitted ourselves to see. That is the point where honesty comes in. An honest look at the other implies an honest look at oneself.

White identified three critical mistakes in foreign policymaking that prevent empathy from occurring: (1) not seeing an opponent’s longing for peace; (2) not seeing an opponent’s fear of being attacked; and (3) not seeing an opponent’s understandable anger, see White, 1984, pp. 162–163.

See also the work of psychotherapist Charles Truax, et al., 1970, on accurate empathy. I thank John McFadden also here for making me aware of this work.

<sup>70</sup> Lindner, 2017.

<sup>71</sup> 2009 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “World Peace Through Humiliation-Free Global Human Interactions,” in Honolulu, Hawai’i, August 20–22, 2009, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/13.php.

<sup>72</sup> “Japan Broke U.S. Code Before Pearl Harbor, Researcher Finds,” by Valerie Reitman, Los Angeles Times, December 7, 2001, <http://articles.latimes.com/2001/dec/07/news/mn-12562>.

<sup>73</sup> Ibid.

<sup>74</sup> “Historian Seeks to Clear Embassy of Pearl Harbor ‘Sneak Attack’ Infamy,” by Tai Kawabata, Japan Times, December 9, 2014, www.japantimes.co.jp/news/2014/12/09/national/history/historian-seeks-to-clear-embassy-of-pearl-harbor-sneak-attack-infamy/#.VIg4Ho0cR9A. See also Seconds From Disaster: Pearl Harbor, documentary film series 4, 2011, featuring scholar Toshihiro Minohara, <http://natgeotv.com/uk/seconds-from-disaster>, and <https://youtu.be/7bok8TLtz40>. Seconds from Disaster is an American documentary television series that first began broadcasting in 2004 on the National Geographic Channel. See also Kimura and Minohara, 2013.

<sup>75</sup> McNamara and Blight, 2001.

<sup>76</sup> Translated from German by Lindner from Suttner, 1889, pp. 110.

<sup>77</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 12.

<sup>78</sup> Bauman, 1992, wrote on p. x–xi:

...the world of nature... had to be beheaded and deprived of autonomous will and power of resistance... The world was an object of willed action: a raw material in the work guided and given form by human designs... Left to itself, the world had no meaning. It was solely the human design that injected it with a sense of purpose. So the earth became a repository of ores and other “natural resources,” wood turned into timber and water – depending on circumstances – into an energy source, waterway or the solvent of waste.

<sup>79</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 13.

<sup>80</sup> “How to Protect Nuclear Plants from Terrorists,” by Allison Macfarlane, Phys.org, April 14, 2016, <http://phys.org/news/2016-04-nuclear-fromterrorists.html>.

<sup>81</sup> Summy, 2006.

<sup>82</sup> “As a Vote on Entering World War I Approached, the Only Woman in Congress Faced an Agonizing Choice,” by Will Englund, Washington Post, April 6, 2017, www.washingtonpost.com/news/retropolis/wp/2017/04/06/as-a-vote-on-entering-world-war-i-approached-the-u-s-entry-into-world-war-i-the-only-woman-in-congress-faced-an-agonizing-choice/?utm\_term=.61e64f4e05cb. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>83</sup> Røed-Larsen and Hjort-Larsen, 2012.

<sup>84</sup> See, for instance, political scientist Simon Koschut’s overview over relevant publications: Åhäll and Gregory, 2015; Bially Mattern, 2011; Edkins, 2003; Fattah and Fierke, 2009; Hall and Ross, 2015; Hutchinson, 2016; Koschut, 2014; Leep, 2010; Ross, 2013; Solomon, 2014; Van Rythoven, 2015; Wilcox, 2015. The narrative of humiliation in the Middle East, for instance, shows the intertextuality of emotions: “emotions have a history,” Fattah and Fierke, 2009, p. 70.

See also an interview that Alexandros Koutsoukis conducted with Steven C. Roach on November 2, 2016, as part of a series of interviews under the motto “Resurrecting IR Theory,” where Roach discusses affective values in international relations, the value of resilience, and how to theorize emotional actions, www.e-ir.info/2016/11/02/interview-steven-c-roach/.

See, furthermore, Elina Penttinen, 2013, on how “the mechanistic-deterministic worldview derived from the Newtonian model has influenced the epistemology and methodology of IR (i.e., the idea that the world is constituted of independent fragments), and seeks ways to develop a new methodology for IR by drawing on the potential of a non-fragmented worldview”:

The author argues that it is this modern Western view of human beings (or societies) as isolated and separate from the world that prevents IR from finding new solutions to the questions of war and conflict. Drawing upon case studies, testimonies and examples from film, this book instead proposes joy as an alternative methodology for studying IR, exploring the possibility of self-healing in physical and emotional trauma in extreme violent conditions. The author also discusses how posthumanism contributes to positive psychology in understanding happiness and empowerment, and demonstrates how these findings can further widen the study of IR.

<sup>85</sup> “Stanford Expert Describes How the U.S. And China Can Manage Their Relationship and Avoid Conflict,” by Clifton B. Parker, Stanford Report, August 20, 2014, <http://news.stanford.edu/news/2014/august/us-china-relations-082014.html>. See also, “Thucydides Trap,” by Karl Eikenberry, American Review, August 4, 2014, <http://americanreviewmag.com/stories/Thucydides-Trap>. See, furthermore, Syse, 2003.

<sup>86</sup> Kelly, 2005.

<sup>87</sup> Thucydides, 431 BCE, Chapter I.

<sup>88</sup> “The Neuroscience Guide to Negotiations With Iran,” by Nicholas Wright and Karim Sadjadpour, The Atlantic, January 14, 2014, www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2014/01/the-neuroscience-guide-to-negotiations-with-iran/282963/. I thank Karmit Zysman for making me aware of this article.

<sup>89</sup> The leaders of Egypt (Hosni Mubarak), the Palestinian Authority (Yasser Arafat), Libya (Muammar Gaddafi), Syria (Bashar al-Assad), Iran (Mohamed Khatami) and Pakistan (Pervez Musharraf), strongly denounced the 9/11 attacks on the Twin Towers immediately, later also Iraq’s president Saddam Hussein.

<sup>90</sup> “2002 State of the Union Address – President George W. Bush,” January 29, 2002, <http://georgewbush-whitehouse.archives.gov/news/releases/2002/01/print/20020129-11.html>.

<sup>91</sup> The Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, is an international agreement on the nuclear program of Iran reached in Vienna on July 14, 2015, between Iran, the P5+1 (the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council

– China, France, Russia, United Kingdom, United States – plus Germany), and the European Union.

<sup>92</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>93</sup> See, among others, Gilbert, 1998. Social psychology describes different types of attribution biases. Just to name a few, when assessing other people's behavior, we tend to commit the correspondence bias and fundamental attribution error, as well as the ultimate attribution error vis-à-vis out-groups, and then commit the actor-observer bias when we look at ourselves. Social psychologist Morton Deutsch, "father" of the field of conflict resolution, has written about the attribution error very early. Social psychologist Lee Ross is one of those whose name is crucially connected with research on the fundamental attribution error, which, according to him, is no less than the conceptual bedrock for the field of social psychology. Correspondent inference theory indicates that we infer that other people's actions correspond to their underlying personality and disposition. Some psychologists have used the terms correspondence bias and fundamental attribution error interchangeably. See, among others, Gilbert, 1998. Others theorize that they are independent phenomena, with the correspondence bias resulting from a much wider range of processes. See, among others, Gawronski, 2004, Gawronski and Bodenhausen, 2006.

<sup>94</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 177. German original in Suttner, 1889, pp. 108–109:

Mit Spannung folgte ich nunmehr der Entwicklung der politischen Ereignisse und den darüber in Zeitungen und Gesprächen kursierenden Meinungen und Vorhersagungen. "Rüsten" "rüsten" war jetzt die Lösung. Preußen rüstet im Stillen. Österreich rüstet im Stillen. Die Preußen behaupten, daß wir rüsten, und es ist nicht wahr – sie rüsten. Sie leugnen – nein, es ist nicht wahr: wir rüsten. Wenn jene rüsten, müssen wir auch rüsten. Wenn wir abrüsten, wer weiß, ob jene abrüsten? So schlug die Rüsterei in allen möglichen Varianten an mein Ohr. – Aber wozu denn dieses Waffengeklirre, wenn man nicht angreifen will? fragte ich, worauf mein Vater den alten Spruch vorbrachte: Sie vis pacem, para bellum: Wir rüsten ja doch nur aus Vorsicht. – Und die Andern? – In der Absicht, uns zu überfallen. – Jene sagen aber auch, daß sie sich nur gegen unseren Überfall vorsehen. – Das ist Heimtücke. – Und sie sagen, daß wir heimtückisch seien. – Das sagen sie nur als Vorwand, um besser rüsten zu können.

<sup>95</sup> Hobbes, 1651.

<sup>96</sup> Carl Schmitt, 1922, p. 11: "Souverän ist, wer über den Ausnahmezustand entscheidet."

<sup>97</sup> Hans Joachim Morgenthau, when he was director of the Center for the Study of American Foreign Policy at the University of Chicago from 1950 – 1968, see, among others, Morgenthau, 1948, 1951.

<sup>98</sup> Tunander, 2009. I thank Kimberly Eriksen for having drawn my attention to this chapter. This is its conclusion:

The above examples show that the "sovereign" – the "security state" or what some would call the "deep state" – is able not to just limit the range of the democratic discourse but also to manipulate or "fine tune" such discourse.

- First, the secret armies of the "sovereign" (the Stay-Behinds and the "parallel Stay-Behinds" or NDS) were recruited from the defeated fascist forces of Southern Europe in France, Italy, Spain, Portugal and Greece. In Northern Europe, hundreds of Nazi SS officers were recruited for a similar purpose. Fascist leader Prince Junio Valerio Borghese was rescued and recruited by the later CIA liaison to Italy, James Jesus Angleton, at the very end of the war, and Angleton's man, Federico Umberto D'Amato, was given the task of recruiting forces from the fascist Republic of Saló to the Ministry of Interior, the army and the secret armies in order to combat the Italian communists. The brutal "black" terrorist, Stefano delle Chiaie, collaborated with both Borghese and D'Amato. These secret fascist and Nazi armies were recruited and developed as part of a "historical compromise" between the winning Anglo-Saxon democrats and the losing autocrats of the Axis powers. But, more importantly, the "sovereign," as it developed after the Second World War, turned these secret armies into a sophisticated military arm for PSYOPs to limit the range of democratic discourse and to "fine tune," calibrate and manipulate that discourse.
- Second, by letting fascist forces carry out the preliminary stages of military coups, the "sovereign" was able to force governments to resign or accept a change of policy on a number of occasions. Once a change of policy had been accepted, as during all the Italian "coup attempts" in the 1960s and 1970s, the "sovereign" then aborted the military coup and the use of extra-legal measures was no longer considered necessary. The Borghese-delle Chiaie "coup" of December 1970, for example, was allegedly aborted after interventions by General Vito Miceli – or, according to Remo Orlandini, a close collaborator with Borghese, by US President Richard Nixon himself. In each case, the Italian government was presented with a fait accompli, giving the "sovereign" a de facto veto over policy. The elected government, the "democratic state," was forced either to yield to the "sovereign," the "security state," or to confront it by mobilizing popular support and legitimacy – something the "security state" is only able to do through the introduction of its "game" of fear and protection. In the final analysis, with the exception of Aldo Moro, Italian prime ministers always chose to back down.
- Third, the "sovereign" may decide to carry through a military coup in order to take over government responsibility, as in Greece in 1967. To a certain extent, the same CIA network (including the CIA station chief and the leader of the Italian Ordine Nuovo) was involved both in Italy and in the 1967 coup in Greece. In the Greek case, the “sovereign” was able to veto the anti-NATO policy of Greek Prime Minister Georgios Papandreou. However, it later proved to be more difficult to return to democratic politics, and over time US officials grew less happy with the Greek generals. For the “sovereign,” fascist or military rule was never a goal in itself. The “coup” was rather an instrument to re-establish order in accordance with the Machiavellian formula of fear and protection: first, let a “cruel and efficient governor” eliminate all opposition; then, publically eliminate the same governor to regain legitimacy. In comparison with Greece, the return to regular politics was always more smooth in the Turkey, where the army had widespread legitimacy and military coups have been more or less institutionalized. However, in most of Europe, the overt coup d’état appears to have been too clumsy an instrument for controlling domestic politics.

- Fourth, the “sovereign” may raise the “security temperature” through the use of “indiscriminate terrorism” – dramatizing politics, as happened during the bombing campaign in Italy. Fear of bomb attacks has enormous psychological impact, compelling people to turn to the state for protection and to blame the perceived enemy. In the event of such attacks, mass media will often respond hysterically, blaming whomever the authorities say is responsible. Such an instrument is thus ideal for calibrating government policy, in other words as a means to “fine tune” democratic politics and to “securities” what used to be open to public debate, bringing the democratic political sphere more into line with the political vision of the “security state.” Through the use of a brutal bombing campaign, it is possible to create events that the mass media will interpret as an “enemy attack,” that will enable the “sovereign” to externalize conflicts to provide internal stability. The Strategy of Tension, as it was developed in Italy, was used to discredit critics and to “correct” the political line of the democratic state. Most important was the exercise of control over domestic Italian politics in a way that could not be achieved through the use of legal means.
- Fifth, if necessary, the “sovereign” may turn to “selective terrorism” to take out a political leader, either as a way of vetoing the policies of that leader or to blame anti-US forces for such “terrorist” actions. In the case of Aldo Moro’s murder in 1978, both of these goals were achieved. Moro’s wife accused the Americans of responsibility for her husband’s death, claiming that they had previously threatened to kill him, and Moro himself was given a private funeral. Moro’s murder enabled the “sovereign” to veto his “historical compromise,” and at the same time to blame left-wingers – the so-called Red Brigades – for the operation. Both General Maletti and secret service chief D’Amato have confirmed that the Red Brigades had been penetrated at the top. Indeed, Maletti has even confirmed that the top echelon of the Red Brigades was run by Western intelligence. Until 1974, the “sovereign” could rely on the assassination squads of Aginter Press, but when it began using the Red Brigades it needed special forces support. The killing of Aldo Moro was a special forces operation, involving the use of ammunition from special forces supplies.

- Sixth, the “sovereign” may use specifically tasked units (army or navy special forces) to attack its own forces or allied or friendly forces throughout the Western world in order to increase readiness and raise public awareness of a common threat. Such dramatic operations are conducted as realistic exercises (“train as you fight”), but in the mass media they are presented as enemy attacks or intrusions, which thus shape and influence the mindset of the general public and local military forces and even the policies of the host country government. Such attacks create fear and demands for protection; they externalize conflicts to provide internal stability; and they may force governments to back away from particular policies. The “enemy attacks,” as they are reported in the mass media, are turned into PSYOPs that alter world opinion and influence decisions in international forums such as the UN. Such a strategy gives the “sovereign” an ideal instrument for calibrating the ruling mass media discourse as well as government policy in various countries.

- Seventh, the “sovereign” spans the entire Western world. By this is meant that the dual state divide between the “democratic state” and the “security state” seemingly corresponds to a divide between democratic nation-states and a protective central power – or, to use Carl Schmitt’s terminology, between the states of the Western Grossraum and the US Reich. In every state, US intelligence has recruited loyal officers and civil servants that have acted as direct liaisons to US authorities – such as General de Lorenzo and General Miceli in Italy. Licio Gelli set up P2 as a parallel “security state” or shadow government, and in practice it was a high-level US–Italian network “authorized” by Henry Kissinger and Alexander Haig. A similar picture is emerging in other European states. These local “US elites” played the game of fear and protection to set the agenda, to influence local governments and even to veto policies or individuals in conflict with US interests. This presence of the Reich in various host countries gives the hegemonic power, in this case the US, an even more dominating role than Schmitt had anticipated. The central actors of the Western informal security network appear as the real “sovereign,” in a Schmittian sense, that decides on the exception in the NATO area or Grossraum.

- Eighth, in the world of democracies, the “sovereign” – the “deep state” – has always to implement its game of fear and protection covertly and its very existence is always denied in public. Thus, the problem with liberalism in political science and legal theory is not its ambition to defend the public sphere, political freedoms and human rights, but rather its claim that these freedoms and rights define the Western political system. Liberal political science has been turned into an ideology of the “sovereign,” because undisputable evidence for the “sovereign” – what Vinciguerra simply calls the “state” – is brushed away as pure fantasy or “conspiracy.” Schmitt has been described as an apologist for the autocratic emergency state in Germany, but when we look closer he rather emerges as a scholar unveiling the dual state – the hidden autocratic security force parallel to the democratic state. Some might argue that this dual state is defensible, others not, but we should be aware that the liberal denial of its very existence is based on an illusion.

See also note 15 in the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>99</sup> See also Rashid, 2008.

<sup>100</sup> A listed presentation of these thoughts may look as follows:

(1) No war, (2) unavoidable war in defense, and (3) war as livelihood through raiding or “bellum se ipsum alet”):

- Belligerent raiding culture of tribal peoples (2, circumscription causes terror)
- Agriculture (2, terrorists can be raiders who need to be stopped, or freedom fighters who need to find and learn non-violent pathways to undo domination)
- Raiding (3, raiding is a culture of terror that must be stopped)
- Pre-12,000 years and trade (no war, 1, raiders are terrorists who need to be stopped).

<sup>101</sup> Kelly, 2005.

<sup>102</sup> Flannery and Marcus, 2003.

<sup>103</sup> Active SETI, also known as messaging to extraterrestrial intelligence (METI), consists of sending signals into space in the hope that they will be picked up by an alien intelligence. Stephen Hawking made a documentary series for the Discovery Channel, and he advises, “If aliens visit us, the outcome would be much as when Columbus landed in America, which didn’t turn out well for the Native Americans.” See “Stephen Hawking Takes a Hard Line on Aliens,” by Leo Hickman, The Guardian, April 26, 2010, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2010/apr/26/stephen-hawking-issues-warning-on-aliens. See also Gerritzen, 2016.

<sup>104</sup> Sedentary populations cannot flee as easily as nomad populations. And even their armies were often fashioned on rather rigid models. In contrast, many nomadic armies had an overall command structure that was more flexible. For instance, while Mongol civil, social, and military structure was built on obedience and firm discipline, leaders on each level were free to execute their orders in the way they considered best. In the case of the Mongols, particularly hardy steeds allowed for a particularly superior degree of mobility, as their horses provided both transport and food. See Morris, 1994. Mongol warriors could survive by only drinking from their mare’s blood and their milk, since they could digest milk, unlike, for instance, their Chinese foes. In societies with milk-producing animals and pastoralism, the ability to digest fresh milk through adulthood, which is genetically coded for by LCT variants, provides a nutritional advantage. See Gerbault, et al., 2011. See for a recent publication on the Mongol conquests in the context of world history, May, 2012. See also “Why Nomads Win: What Ibn Khaldun Would Say About Afghanistan,” by Gerard Russell, Huffington Post, April 11, 2010, www.huffingtonpost.com/gerard-russell/why-nomads-win-what-ibn-k\_b\_447878.html.

<sup>105</sup> “Why Nelson Mandela Was on a Terrorism Watch List in 2008,” by Caitlin Dewey, Washington Post, December 7, 2013, www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-fix/wp/2013/12/07/why-nelson-mandela-was-on-a-terrorism-watch-list-in-2008/.

<sup>106</sup> “Chinese Fans Angered After Lady Gaga Meets with Dalai Lama,” Australian Broadcasting Corporation, www.abc.net.au/news/2016-06-28/chinese-fans-angered-as-lady-gaga-meets-dalai-lama/7549044.

<sup>107</sup> See, among others, Reichberg, et al., 2006, or Syse, 2003.

<sup>108</sup> Scheff, 2010.

<sup>109</sup> Scheff, 1994.

<sup>110</sup> Elias, 1983/1987.

<sup>111</sup> “The World’s First Multinational,” by Nick Robins, New Statesman, December 13, 2004, www.newstatesman.com/politics/politics/2014/04/worlds-first-multinational.

<sup>112</sup> “Whose Side is God, god, g_d On?,” by Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, January 7, 2013, www.transcend.org/tms/2013/01/whose-side-is-god-god-g\_d-on/:

In 1877 and 1878, as Britain struggled to expand its imperialistic global empire spanning six continents, two men – dramatically different from one another in political ambitions and moral values – were pitted against each other in a fierce election struggle to become prime minister. At the time, Britain and Russia were at war against each other in Afghanistan, in what was euphemistically called the “Great War.” The two nations were fighting over the division of Afghanistan by an equal line. Little concern was given to the wishes of the Afghan people, who were considered by both sides to be war-like uncivilized hill tribes.

One man, Benjamin Disraeli (1804 – 1881), believed Britain should continue to expand its colonial wars and occupations. He argued that the pursuit of “empire” reflected Britain’s destiny to lead the world, and its moral responsibilities to civilize the world. He also pointed out the extensive economic wealth brought by empire as evidenced by the emerging profits of the industrial age.

The other man, William Gladstone (1809 – 1898), leader of the opposition Liberal Party, argued in favor of re-considering Britain's imperialistic expansion because of its social and moral consequences for both the people colonized, and for moral standing of Britain's citizens. Gladstone considered the colonial wars a "criminal assaults on innocent people," Porch, 2000, p. 42. He appealed to conscience at a time when Western imperialism was colonizing Africa, Asia, and South America, exploiting natural and human resources, and killing conquered people with impunity.

The results of the election would have profound implications for the entire world. Amidst the accusations, character insults, and personal attacks, fundamental questions emerged regarding the morality of wars, colonial domination and exploitation, and national economic growth and development.

<sup>113</sup> On November 16, 2011, writer and peace scholar Janet Gerson took me to Zuccotti Park and The Atrium in New York City, where most of the Occupy Wall Street activities took place. I thank Janet for sharing with me her insights into the Occupy movement. See #OWS.

<sup>114</sup> Dreyer, 2007. Zheng He presented gifts of gold, silver, porcelain, and silk, and received novelties such as ostriches, zebras, camels, and ivory.

<sup>115</sup> Charles Mann, 2005, wrote a well-written book that offers a broad overview.

<sup>116</sup> Lindner, 2009e. See also "Curriculum Reviewer Barry Spurr Mocks 'Abos, Mussies, Women, Chinky-Poos,'" New Matilda, October 16, 2014, <https://newmatilda.com/2014/10/16/curriculum-reviewer-barry-spurr-mocks-abos-mussies-women-chinky-poos/>. Professor of English, Barry Spurr, referred to Aboriginal Australians as "human rubbish tips."

<sup>117</sup> "'Country Belonging to Me': Land and Labour on Aboriginal Missions and Protectorate Stations, 1830–1850," by Jessie Mitchell, Eras Journal, Edition Six – November 2004, www.arts.monash.edu.au/publications/eras/edition-6/mitchellarticle.php.

<sup>118</sup> Thieves by Law (Ganavim Ba Hok), documentary film by Alexander Gentelev, 2010, charts the rise of Russian organized crime in the wake of the fall of the Soviet Union. In the film, several noted crime figures are being interviewed, a number of which are currently wanted by Interpol. See the film with English subtitles Real Russian Mafia, published on October 28, 2012, <https://youtu.be/imNE5CEjZW4>.

According to Satter, 2003, p. 46: "what drove the process was not the determination to create a system based on universal values but rather the will to introduce a system of private ownership, which, in the absence of law, opened the way for the criminal pursuit of money and power."

<sup>119</sup> "UN Senior Officials Urge Countries to Boost Their Efforts to Combat Human Trafficking," United Nations News Centre, April 3, 2012, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=41696#.VSEgx-HICOY:

At any given time across the globe, some 2.4 million people are victims of human trafficking, a crime that generates $32 billion annually, rivalling the profits reaped by the illicit trade in arms and drugs. Every year, thousands of people fall into the hands of traffickers, in their own countries and abroad, with women comprise two thirds of trafficking victims.

<sup>120</sup> Theodor De Bry was the first to prepare detailed copper plate engravings of travels to the Americas that exhibited any accuracy of detail or scope, see <http://bancroft.berkeley.edu/Exhibits/nativeamericans/lgl3.html>.

<sup>121</sup> Lindner, 2012e.

<sup>122</sup> Nilsen and Øgrim, 2015. See also "Norwegian Authors: Norway Should not Apologize to China in China," by Maria Andreasdottir, Scandasia, September 9, 2015, <http://scandasia.com/norwegian-authors-norway-should-not-indulge-china/>:

A new book by the former NTB-journalist Kjell Arild Nilsen and foreign correspondent Helge Øgrim sends alert to Norway to stop soften up by China. The book Kina vs. Norge – den ukjente historien fra Maos nei til dagens krise ("China vs. Norway – the Unknown Story from Mao's No to the Crisis of Today's Crisis") gives huge attention to the Noble Peace Prize 2010 where the Chinese dissident Liu Xiaobo was awarded the famous prize. Liu Xiaobo is one of the most famous Chinese activists and shows huge critic to the Chinese regime. China now demands Norway to apologize for awarding Xiaobo with the Noble Prize.

"The price of lying on our knees to China is too big. There is nothing Norway can do except breaking their principles into thousand pieces" says Helge Øgrim. Helge Øgrim and Kjell Nilsen fear an official apology from Norway like China has demanded. They believe it will give Norway an untrustworthy international image of not standing up for human rights. The world will notice if Norway adjusts to China's demands. The authors of the book meet great support from professor Andrew J. Nathan from Columbia University. According to him an apology from Norway can lead other countries to not dare to challenge the regime of China in the future.

"It will ruin the image of Norway of being a protector of democracy, integrity and independency," he says.

The three men think Norway makes a better choice of holding on to their principles.

"It's better to suffer scolds and reprisals than yielding to the pressure," the two authors agree.

Meanwhile the book also contains information of the connections between Norway and China after the communists overwhelmed in 1949. The first big crisis came the year after. Since have the Tibet-revolution in 1959, the hunger in China during the 60's and the issues in Taiwan caused disunity between Norway and China.

Regardless have the two authors concluded the Noble Prize in 2010 has no doubt caused the worst crisis in history between Norway and China since the crisis in 1950.

This book is published in the wake of China denying the Norwegian Chinese-professor Harald Bøckman was denied a visa to enter China after his criticism to the Chinese regime.

<sup>123</sup> Lindner, 2006a, pp. 103–104.

<sup>124</sup> Social scientist and social activist Riane Eisler developed a cultural transformation theory where she describes how otherwise widely divergent societies all around the globe employ what she has named the dominator model of society, rather than the partnership model. See Eisler, 1987. See her most recent book, Eisler, 2007.

<sup>125</sup> Sociologist and philosopher Georg Simmel (1858 – 1918) taught that within groups, conflicts are tests of leadership and solidarity, and between groups, they create boundaries and gaps, see Simmel, 1955. See also Caplow, 1968. I thank Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of this literature.

<sup>126</sup> Michael Tomasello, 2016, a developmental and comparative psychologist, describes two key evolutionary steps, shaping two kinds of "we," one human-to-human, and the other in-group versus out-group. Prior to the Neolithic revolution, humans foraged together and shared the resources as equally deserving partners, based on shared senses of trust, respect, and responsibility. This changed when distinct cultural groups emerged and morals became legitimate only for those who were part of "us." Contemporary humans possess therefore two kinds of morals, one based on direct face-to-face encounters with other individuals, and another one that is based on one's in-group's prescription of loyalty, conformity, and cultural identity, connected with certain moral rules of right and wrong.

<sup>127</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>128</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 48.

<sup>129</sup> Taylor, et al., 2000.

<sup>130</sup> See evidence in the massacre mass grave of Schöneck-Kilianstädten that reveals new insights into collective violence in Early Neolithic Central Europe, Meyer, et al., 2015.

<sup>131</sup> See the section "How the 'art of domination' was perfected in systems of ranked honor" in Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 5: How History and Culture Can Humiliate, in the book Emotion and Conflict, pp. 60–64.

<sup>132</sup> Pratto and Stewart, 2011, Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See an overview in "Power Inequities," by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities.

<sup>133</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Jost, et al., 2009, Jost, et al., 2002, Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>134</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, "Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change," by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board and as supporters of our work.

<sup>135</sup> Lindner, 2012d. See also Whose Freedom, by George Lakoff, 2006b, where he addresses freedom, "this most beloved of American political ideas":

Since September 11, 2001, the Bush administration has relentlessly invoked the word "freedom." Al-Qaeda attacked us because "they hate our freedom." The U.S. can strike preemptively because "freedom is on the march." Social security should be privatized in order to protect individual freedoms. The 2005 presidential inaugural speech was a kind of crescendo: the words "freedom," "free," and "liberty," were used forty-nine times in President Bush's twenty-minute speech.

See also note 211 in the Introduction.

<sup>136</sup> Ambedkar, 1948. Ambedkar argued that the "broken" tribes of ancient India had suffered oppression partly because of their allegiance to Buddhism, and partly because of their beef-eating.

<sup>137</sup> Lindner, 2000c, pp. 253–264.

<sup>138</sup> Anthropologist and Somalia-expert Ioan Lewis, 1998, p. 52: “...the Somali themselves... and various writers... consider these outcaste peoples to be the remnants of previous populations indigenous to Somaliland whom the Hamites conquered.” I had the great privilege of meeting Ioan Lewis at his home in London and learn from him on May 31, 1999, together with Dennis Smith.

<sup>139</sup> Lewis, 1998, p. 51: “They hunt with bow and arrow poisoned with an alkaloidal extract (wabayo) obtained from a species of euphorbia.”

<sup>140</sup> This informant referred to the Madiban, which is the name of one of those minorities, but they are not the only ones to incite fear. Lewis, 1998, p. 53: “The Yibir are despised by all Somali, who never speak to them if they can avoid doing so, and are feared for their skill in witchcraft. Whenever a son is born to a noble Somali the first Yibir who approaches the family has the right to a gift, samanyo.”

My low caste interlocutors offered me their views in January 1999 in Nairobi:

Somalis are killers; we minorities are not killers. We Midgan made a secret poison for hunting, a secret that we never revealed, because we knew that they [the Somalis] would start killing people if they knew how to make this poison... We are skilled professionals, we are the forerunners of modern scientists, we know how to work [as opposed to “free” nomads who somehow just wait for their animals to eat by themselves], and we renounce violence; altogether, we represent the seeds of modern civilization within Somali society... We are low castes, but in our hearts we feel superior and think that we deserve higher respect and recognition... But they will learn. Until recently a young Somali man would brag about his father and say: “My father has killed ninety-nine men!” Today increasingly more people would ask: “Why do you sit with this person??? He has killed people, he is a criminal!”

<sup>141</sup> Jingyi Dong, 2015, p. 87:

Two events in the 1950s could serve as milestones in the process: First, the system began an “institution and discipline adjustment” (yuanxi tiaozheng 院系调整) in 1952, which gradually phased out some of the former national universities, all the private or church funded universities and terminated some liberal arts disciplines such as law, political science and sociology (Haibo Wang, 2006). The new system was mainly composed of technology and engineering colleges that were oriented towards economic development. Second, the Anti-rightist Campaign in 1957 marginalized academic authorities and expelled a great number of the top teachers and students from the campus (S. Ding 1993, 2007). Intellectuals not only lost the freedom to research and teach, but faced the potential threat of arrest without recourse to the law (Y. Gao, 2007). These two events are important indicators: The former meant the reconstruction of the university by government ordinance; the latter meant the implementation, aided with the reshaped structure, of more severe state policies that were often manifested in the form of political campaigns.

<sup>142</sup> Kuan, 2015, p. 98–99.

<sup>143</sup> “SA finally African, all thanks to Zuma,” by Prince Mashele, Sowetan, May 9, 2016, www.sowetanlive.co.za/news/2016/05/09/sa-finally-african-all-thanks-to-zuma. Prince Mashele is the executive director of the Centre for Politics and Research and co-author of The Fall of the ANC. We thank Hélène Opperman Lewis for making us aware of this article.

<sup>144</sup> Martin, 2010, p. 166.

<sup>145</sup> Robinson, 2017.

<sup>146</sup> Martin, 2010, p. 166. Glen T. Martin is the President of the World Constitution and Parliament Association (www.worldparliament-gov.org), President of the Institute on World Problems (www.earth-constitution.org), and professor of philosophy at Radford University (www.radford.edu/gmartin). It is a privilege to have Glen Martin as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>147</sup> Martin, 2010, p. 166. Smith, 2005.

<sup>148</sup> Seligman, 1974.

<sup>149</sup> United States Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, 2014.

<sup>150</sup> Black, 1997. I thank also Michelle Fine for sharing with me her experiences with her African-American students in New York City on November 20, 2004.

<sup>151</sup> In a meeting in New York City on December 14, 2014, Gay Rosenblum-Kumar kindly shared with me the stories that are being told in her family, stories of the Shtetl where women would call on their men in despair: “Why do you not defend us?”

In his blog “Schlemiel in Theory,” Menachem Matthew Feuer discusses how Jewish males typically were ridiculed in the media, as if their emasculation reflected their real nature and was not forced upon them (the so-called correspondence error), see <http://schlemielintheory.com/>. See also Berger, 1996. It is a privilege to have Gay Rosenblum-Kumar as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>152</sup> I thank Michelle Fine for explaining to me, in New York City in 2002, her experiences with her African-American students. See also Fine and Halkovic, 2014. We were very privileged to have Michelle Fine in our very first workshop on humiliation and violent conflict, at Columbia University, convened by Morton Deutsch, in 2003.

<sup>153</sup> Robert J. Burrowes has a lifetime commitment to understanding and ending human violence. He has done extensive research since 1966 in an effort to understand why human beings are violent and has been a nonviolent activist since 1981. He is the author of Why Violence?, Burrowes, 2011. See also <http://robertjburrowes.wordpress.com>, <http://thepeoplesnonviolencecharter.wordpress.com> (Charter), <http://tinyurl.com/flametree> (Flame Tree Project), and <http://anitamckone.wordpress.com> (Songs of Nonviolence).

<sup>154</sup> “Thousands Hold Vigil As UC Santa Barbara Reacts to Shootings,” by Valerie Strauss, Washington Post, May 25, 2014, www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/answer-sheet/wp/2014/05/25/thousands-hold-vigil-as-uc-santa-barbara-reacts-to-shootings.

<sup>155</sup> “Inside the ‘Manosphere’ that Inspired Santa Barbara Shooter Elliot Rodger,” by Caitlin Dewey, Washington Post, May 27, 2014, www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-intersect/wp/2014/05/27/inside-the-manosphere-that-inspired-santa-barbara-shooter-elliott-rodger/.

<sup>156</sup> Kimmel, 2013. It is a privilege to have Michael Kimmel as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also “What Is the Manosphere?” by “Dalrock,” Dalrock blog, May 15, 2013, <http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2013/05/15/what-is-the-manosphere/>. See, furthermore:

- “The Sexodus, Part 1: The Men Giving Up On Women And Checking Out Of Society,” by Milo Yiannopoulos, Breitbart, December 4, 2014, www.breitbart.com/Breitbart-London/2014/12/04/The-Sexodus-Part-1-The-Men-Giving-Up-On-Women-And-Checking-Out-Of-Society, and
- “The Sexodus, Part 2: Dishonest Feminist Panics Leave Male Sexuality In Crisis,” by Milo Yiannopoulos, Breitbart, December 9, 2014, www.breitbart.com/Breitbart-London/2014/12/09/The-Sexodus-Part-2-Dishonest-Feminist-Panics-Leave-Male-Sexuality-In-Crisis. I thank Camilla Hsiung for making me aware of this article.

Read in Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security, about my reflections after many years of psychotherapeutic work and social psychological inquiry, p. 38:

Throughout my almost four decades of experience as a counselor, psychotherapist, and social psychologist, I have noticed a dynamic in families that seems to be duplicated in what is called the manosphere. When children grow up, parents ought to protect them. It is not easy, however, even for the best intentioned parent, to offer protection without being oppressive or at least appearing to be oppressive. Children might at times accuse their parents of undue domination, rightly or wrongly, and some parents might respond with accusing their children of ingratitude. In traditional family settings, when a mother has built her identity on protecting children, she might lose her anchoring when they grow up, and she might be particularly prone to feeling disrespected by her children. Committing the correspondence error, she might even infer that her children intentionally hold her in contempt, while they in reality only wish to become independent adults. I observe some men reacting in similar ways, in their relationships with their children, however, also with respect to women. By committing the correspondence bias, they accuse women of intending to hurt men, while the women simply wish to emancipate themselves, and might do so at times as unsteadily and tentatively as adolescents. “Under the laws of the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum – the ancient foundation of Roman law – the head of the family, pater familias, had vitae necisque potestas, or the ‘power of life and death,’ over his children and his slaves, often also over his wife. He had the power to kill or sell into slavery those he had ‘under his hand’ or sub manu (emancipation is the deliverance out of the hand of pater familias).”

<sup>157</sup> “The Shootings Are Not Senseless,” by Jim Dowd, The Gloucester Clam, October 4, 2015, <http://gloucesterclam.com/?s=shootings>. I thank Nora Femenia for making me aware of this blog and for her support for Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

<sup>158</sup> “‘Cultural Marxism’: A Uniting Theory for Rightwingers Who Love to Play the Victim,” by Jason Wilson, The Guardian, January 19, 2015, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2015/jan/19/cultural-marxism-a-uniting-theory-for-rightwingers-who-love-to-play-the-victim. We read that the theory of Cultural Marxism

...allows those smarting from a loss of privilege to be offered the shroud of victimhood, by pointing to a shadowy, omnipresent, quasi-foreign elite who are attempting to destroy all that is good in the world. It offers an explanation for the decline of families, small towns, patriarchal authority, and unchallenged white power: a vast, century-long left wing conspiracy. And it distracts from the most important factor in these changes: capitalism, which demands mobility, whose crises have eroded living standards, and which thus, among other things, undermines the viability of conventional family structures and the traditional lifestyles that conservatives approve of.

<sup>159</sup> Asal, et al., 2013: Overall, locations where lone-actor terrorism occurs tend to share more demographic similarities with the locations of violent hate crime offending than with the locations of group-based terrorism.

<sup>160</sup> “Saving Passengers of the Good Ship ‘Titan... Earth,’” by Robert J. Burrowes, Human Wrongs Watch, April 8, 2015, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/04/08/saving-passengers-of-the-good-ship-titan-earth/>:

Why weren’t there more watertight compartments in the hull of the “Titanic”? Fear (of the cost). Why weren’t there more lifeboats? Fear (again, of the cost).

Many business decisions are based on fear although businesspeople have developed a substantial language to obscure this fact (mainly from themselves): emphasizing the importance of “maximizing short-term shareholder profits” (at the expense of socially or environmentally desirable outcomes) is an obvious example.

Why was the “Titanic” travelling at high speed? Fear. In the conditions, the speed was clearly foolish but the owner couldn’t feel this because it was overshadowed by his focus on “showing off” the ship’s speed and the ship’s captain was too frightened to refuse the owner’s request for greater speed even though he was well aware of the danger of hitting an iceberg.

What caused the failure in telegraph communications? Fear (of losing their jobs). The Telefunken-employed radio operators on the “Californian,” which was just a few miles away, were not allowed to communicate with the Marconi-employed radio operators on the “Titanic.”

Why did officers prioritize the access of wealthy passengers to the lifeboats (by locking many “lower deck” passengers below deck)? Fear (of disobeying orders and overloading lifeboats).

Why were many lifeboats launched before they were full? Fear (on the part of passengers already in lifeboats who wanted to get away from the sinking ship quickly).

Why did virtually all lifeboat occupants not row back the short distance necessary to rescue passengers stranded in the water after the ship had sunk? Fear (of being swamped and ending in the water themselves, although this could be easily avoided).

Of course, most of the time when people seek to explain dysfunctional human behavior, they come up with an explanation that is more palatable. But when I observe dysfunctional human behavior, I always see the fear, irrespective of other superficial justifications that are offered.

And that is what I see when I observe elite and most other responses to our current epidemic of violence whether in the form of war, exploitation of countries in the global “South,” environmental destruction, domestic violence or otherwise.

I see their (unconscious) fear lead them away from insightful analyses and visionary solutions because they are compelled by their fear to live in delusion (which requires no action). ...

There is still just enough time to save most of the passengers on the Good Ship “Earth” but we must be courageous and resolute. If we let the cowardice and delusion of elites and their agents guide us, we will join the dead passengers of the “Titanic.”

<sup>161</sup> Lyons, 1980. Consider the sustainability principle in The Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia. In Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy, I refer to the work of Elinor Ostrom, who received the Nobel Prize for Economics 2009. She is considered one of the leading scholars in the study of common pool resources. Her work emphasizes the multifaceted nature of human-ecosystem interaction and argues against any singular “panacea” for individual social-ecological system problems. See, among others, Poteete, et al., 2010.

<sup>162</sup> Gaertner and Dovidio, 1999, Gaertner, et al., 1999.

<sup>163</sup> In 2009, we held our annual HumanDHS conference in Hawai’i, and Linda Hartling, Rick Slaven, and Evelin Lindner met with Princess Lehuani, member of the original royal Hawai’ian family, on Maui on August 29, 2009. In 2011, we held our annual HumanDHS conference in New Zealand, and Carmen Hetaraka, of Maori background, participated. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php. It is a privilege to have Carmen Hetaraka and Michelle Brenner, who brought Carmen to us, as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>164</sup> Hardin, 1968, 1998, 2007.

<sup>165</sup> Hardin, 2007.

<sup>166</sup> Braunstein, 1990.

<sup>167</sup> Trow, 1958.

<sup>168</sup> “Martin Trow, Leading Scholar in Higher Education Studies, Dies at 80,” by Sarah Yang, Media Relations, March 2, 2007, http://berkeley.edu/news/media/releases/2007/03/02\_trow.shtml.

<sup>169</sup> See, among others, Heitmeyer, 2010, Heitmeyer, et al., 2011, Mansel and Heitmeyer, 2009.

<sup>170</sup> Wainwright and Calnan, 2002.

<sup>171</sup> Depression is the second most common cause of disability worldwide after back pain, according to a review of research, see Ferrari, et al., 2013. See also Lane, 2001. See, furthermore, “What if Sociologists Had as Much Influence as Economists?” by Neil Irwin, New York Times, March 17, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/03/17/upshot/what-if-sociologists-had-as-much-influence-as-economists.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. According to the World Health Organisation (WHO, www.who.int/), major depression (i.e. severe depressed mood that is episodic in nature and recurs in 75–80 percent of cases) is now the leading cause of disability worldwide with a lifetime prevalence of 17 percent in the Western world, thus ranking fourth among the ten leading causes of global disease burden. In addition, the WHO states that depression is the most common mental disorder leading to suicide and they project that, at its present rate of growth, depression will be the second leading contributor to global disease burden by 2020. See also notes 90, 91, and 92 in the Introduction.

<sup>172</sup> “Terrorism: Ultimate Weapon of the Global Elite,” by Robert J. Burrowes, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 16, 2015, www.transcend.org/tms/2015/02/terrorism-ultimate-weapon-of-the-global-elite/.

<sup>173</sup> Robinson, 2017.

Chapter 2

<sup>1</sup> “Is Critique Secular? The Renouncers,” by Robert N. Bellah, Social Science Research Council Blog “The Immanent Frame,” August 11, 2008, <http://blogs.ssrc.org/tif/2008/08/11/the-renouncers/>. The Immanent Frame was founded in October 2007 in conjunction with the U.S. Social Science Research Council’s program on Religion and the Public Sphere. It publishes interdisciplinary perspectives on religion, secularism, and the public sphere. See also Bellah, 2011, Bellah and Joas, 2012, and Bellah and Hammond, 2013, where Bellah expresses the hope that American civil religion can make an essential contribution to a “global order of civility and justice.”

<sup>2</sup> Christopher Boehm, 1993, 1999, 2012. See also Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S38:

Dominance and submission were characteristics of the social interactions of our primate ancestors, a pattern that had been overcome by the egalitarian hunter-gatherer groups, and now re-emerged. Egalitarian sentiments still present as part of the genetic endowment of those who now found themselves in a subordinate position must, by necessity, have been frustrated. This may explain the frequent violent upheavals against the ruling hierarchy and the dominators’ use of draconian, public punishment of insurgents to deter and suppress such sentiments.

<sup>3</sup> Mark D. Whitaker, 2008, studied Environmental Sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA. In his 2008 doctoral dissertation, he argues that environmental movements are not a novel feature of world politics, but a durable feature of a degradative political economy. He has analyzed China, Japan, and Europe over 2,500 years and shows how religio-ecological movements arose against state-led environmental degradation:

As a result, origins of our large scale humanocentric “axial religions” are connected to anti-systemic environmental movements. Many major religious movements of the past were “environmentalist” by being health, ecological, and economic movements, rolled into one. Since ecological revolutions are endemic to a degradation-based political economy, they continue today.

I thank Michael Bauwens for making me aware of Whitaker’s research.

<sup>4</sup> Stadtwald, 1992, Abstract:

Despite the fact that modern historians know the episode to be apocryphal, Alexander’s step on Fredric Barbarossa’s neck was as neuralgic for many sixteenth-century German political commentators as it was widely believed. The incident is the production of humanists, who were impressed with and encouraged by Emperor Maximilian and who interpreted a twelfth-century confrontation between pope and emperor in light of the current turn-of-the-century tug-of-war. “The step on the neck legend” lived on into the 1520s and 1530s as an image of papal tyranny in the political commentaries of such humanists as Jakob Ziegler. Martin Luther used the incident and the humanist notion of papal tyranny in his own pamphlet The Pope’s Threat (1545).

Islam-critical political scientist and author Hamed Abdel-Samad sees in Luther a parallel to the Salafist movement insofar as they advocate a return to the letters of original religious texts. See Warum Luther feiern? – Zweifel an einem deutschen Mythos; Über die Gründe der Spiritualität – Wozu glauben?; Helfen oder schaden Religionen? – Eine Gegenwartsdiagnose Aspekte, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, April 7, 2017, with theologian Margot Käßmann, Friedrich C. Delius, Hamed Abdel-Samad, and singer Adel Tawil, moderated by Katty Salié and Jo Schück. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>5</sup> Habermas, 1973.

<sup>6</sup> Bellah, 2011, p. 573.

<sup>7</sup> BCE stands for “Before the Common Era,” and is equivalent to BC, which means “Before Christ.”

<sup>8</sup> Jaspers, 1949. See also Bellah, 2011. The list of names is long: Confucius and Laozi in China, Buddha’s teachings in India, Israel’s biblical prophets, Zoroaster in Iran, in Greece the epic poems Iliad and Odyssey, the natural philosophers (such as Thales, Anaximander, and Anaximenes), and Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle.

<sup>9</sup> The egalitarian message is still difficult to bring forward today. See, among others, Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?” by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>10</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S38: dominators used “draconian, public punishment of insurgents to deter and suppress” egalitarian sentiments.” See also the work of historian of religion Wilfred Smith, 1962, on the reification of religion.

<sup>11</sup> Religious Factors in the Diplomacy of Violent Conflicts, by Raymond G. Helmick, Conference on “International Politics, Diplomacy and Religion,” European University Institute, Florence, Italy, May 5, 2015. Priest of the New England Jesuit Province, Raymond Helmick has worked with conflict since 1972, and it is a privilege to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid.

<sup>13</sup> Freud, 1939/2010.

<sup>14</sup> Wilson, 2002a.

<sup>15</sup> Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See also Pratto and Stewart, 2011. See an overview in “Power Inequities,” by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities.

<sup>16</sup> Kaufman, 2001, p. 212.

<sup>17</sup> Bischof, 2004. In their research on extremism, Bischof and his colleagues found that the father played no role in psychological motivation, only the mother. In his conceptualization, Bischof relates the mother figure in a child’s development with Tiamat, a primordial goddess of Mesopotamian religion, and with Marduk, who stands for a child’s healthy development in building stable boundaries of the self (Ich-Grenzen), while he sees two ways of failing, namely, the way of Anu and Kingu. Bischof connects leftist extremists with Anu and a failed revolt against the mother. As a result, they see everything that is foreign as desirable and “good,” generating a preference for concepts such as multiculturalism. Leftist extremists would see the father as too weak. They would profess: “When I look in the mirror, I see my mother, and I wish to throw up.” In contrast, Bischof associates right-wing extremists with Tiamat’s son Kingu, who wishes to fight for his mother, yet, also he without success. Bischof points at Adolf Hitler and his idolization of his mother. Blood and Soil (German: Blut und Boden) is their ideology. For them, the mother did not deserve the father. I had the privilege of learning from Norbert Bischof on October 9, 2015, at the Symposium “Gehirne zwischen Liebe und Krieg – Menschlichkeit in Zeiten der Neurowissenschaften,” Fürth, Germany, October 9–11, 2015, www.turmdersinne.de/de/symposium/symposium-2015/programm. See the abstract of his talk, translated by Lindner:

Mythical stories of the origin of the world have amazing cross-cultural parallels. This resonance requires some explanation. They obviously have nothing to do with any scientific cosmology. Which “world” is it then that is being described in myths? In fact, the origin of the world’s cosmogony myths win unexpected plausibility, when read as a memory of the awakening of the social world in the child’s awareness. Clearly, this interpretation was never intended by the myths. Rather, what distressed humanity, has always been the question of the objective foundations of our existence. As long as science had no answer, the way in which awareness has developed in each of us once, give hidden meaning to cosmological explanations of the world. In modern times, myth certainly can no longer offer this function, yet, it has not disappeared, but only degenerated. Political ideologies and utopias have now taken over its function, wherein we still can watch their origin. This approach provides a way to the understanding both left- and right-wing radicalism.

German original:

Mythische Erzählungen von der Entstehung der Welt weisen erstaunliche kulturübergreifende Parallelen auf. Dieser Gleichklang bedarf einer Erklärung. Mit der wissenschaftlichen Kosmologie haben sie offenkundig nichts zu tun; von welcher “Welt” ist da also die Rede? Tatsächlich gewinnen die Weltentstehungsmythen unerwartete Plausibilität, wenn man sie als Erinnerung an das Erwachen der sozialen Welt im kindlichen Bewusstsein liest. Dieses zu deuten war freilich nie ihre Funktion. Was die Menschheit beunruhigte, war immer die Frage nach den objektiven Fundamenten unserer Existenz. Solange die Wissenschaft hierauf aber noch keine Antwort wusste, konnte die Weise, in der sich bei jedem von uns einst das Bewusstsein entfaltet hat, auch zum verborgenen Sinngeber kosmologischer Welterklärungen werden. In der Moderne kann der Mythos diese Aufgabe freilich nicht mehr leisten. Er ist gleichwohl nicht verschwunden, sondern nur degeneriert – zu politischen Ideologien und Utopien, die jetzt seine Funktion übernommen haben, wobei man ihnen ihre Herkunft aber noch ansehen kann. Diese Betrachtungsweise bietet eine Handhabe zum Verständnis des linken und rechten Radikalismus.

<sup>18</sup> Morris, 2009. Morris argues that worship of an ancient mythical god has produced distorted political and social systems, which is now the foundation of present-day values and worldviews among general populations in a world controlled by a few small powerful groups in the area of religion, politics, and commerce, who use fear and greed to gain wealth and power for their particular limited group, rather than for the common good. We read about the author's background on www.civilisationhijacked.com/#!/bio/c1ktj:

Albert's parents and family background is Middle Eastern (Sephardic) Jewish. From a small village in Mesopotamia, between Baghdad and Basra on the Tigris River. The village is known as Al-Azair and is the Tomb of Ezra, (Judge and Scribe in the Torah and Old Testament). It is a holy site for Christian, Muslim and Jews, accommodating pilgrims of the three faiths. His family, were for generations, the caretakers and administrators of the Tomb, until 1948 when the Jews were banished from Iraq, and now dispersed in Israel, America and Australia. Albert is a grandson of the last Jewish caretaker of the Tomb. Born in Shanghai, and came to Australia as a babe-in-arms in 1925. Among his early childhood memories was his fascination of his father's remarkable religious knowledge and ability to recite large sections of the five books of the Torah in Aramaic memorized from the first to last word (year after year) until the age of thirteen.

<sup>19</sup> Steinsland, 2007. See the research group on "The Power of the Ruler and the Ideology of Rulership in Nordic Culture 800–1200," at the Centre for Advanced Study, 2007/2008, www.cas.uio.no/research/0708rulership/index.php. Because Christianity arrived relatively late in the North, the transition of ideologies in this region is well documented. Steinsland analyzes, for example, the eddic poem Skirnismál and its depiction of the so-called myth of the sacred marriage (the Greek technical term is hieros gamos), or the erotic alliance between a god and a giant woman, which rendered the ruler special and gave him and his lineage a unique position with regard to other people. With Christianity, a related, medieval ideology of rulership was imported, namely, the depiction of the king as an image of the Heavenly God. See also Lindner, 2009a, p. 63.

<sup>20</sup> Pratto and Stewart, 2011.

<sup>21</sup> See Volkan, 1997, 2004, 2006, 2013.

<sup>22</sup> Volkan, 2004.

<sup>23</sup> Vallacher, et al., 2010, 269.

<sup>24</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Jost, et al., 2009, Jost, et al., 2002, Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>25</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Abstract:

Most theories in social and political psychology stress self-interest, intergroup conflict, ethnocentrism, homophily, in-group bias, out-group antipathy, dominance, and resistance. System justification theory is influenced by these perspectives – including social identity and social dominance theories – but it departs from them in several respects. Advocates of system justification theory argue that (a) there is a general ideological motive to justify the existing social order, (b) this motive is at least partially responsible for the internalization of inferiority among members of disadvantaged groups, (c) it is observed most readily at an implicit, nonconscious level of awareness and (d) paradoxically, it is sometimes strongest among those who are most harmed by the status quo. This article reviews and integrates 10 years of research on 20 hypotheses derived from a system justification perspective, focusing on the phenomenon of implicit outgroup favoritism among members of disadvantaged groups (including African Americans, the elderly, and gays/lesbians) and its relation to political ideology (especially liberalism-conservatism).

<sup>26</sup> Pratto and Stewart, 2011, Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See an overview in "Power Inequities," by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities.

<sup>27</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Jost, et al., 2009, Jost, et al., 2002, Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>28</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, "Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change," by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

<sup>29</sup> Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>30</sup> Kendall, 2007, p. 569. See also Weber, 1904-1905.

<sup>31</sup> Smith, 1759. I thank Howard Richards for his summary. The phrase “invisible hand” appears only once in Smith’s book on the wealth of nations and this moreover in a different context. It seems that it was taken out of its context later, and suffered a fate similar of Darwin’s “survival of the fittest.” See a concise and accessible presentation in Capitalism, a documentary series in six episodes, by documentary filmmaker Ilan Ziv, www.tamouzmedia.com/in-production.htm.

<sup>32</sup> Acres of Diamonds, was delivered by Russell Conwell over 5000 times at various times and places from 1900 to 1925. See audio and text on www.americanrhetoric.com/speeches/rconwellacresofdiamonds.htm. His view of poverty was in resonance with defenders of the Indian caste system:

Some men say, “Don’t you sympathize with the poor people?” of course I do, or else I would not have been lecturing these years. I won’t give in but what I sympathize with the poor, but the number of poor who are to be with is very small. To sympathize with a man whom God has punished for his sins, thus to help him when God would still continue a just punishment, is to do wrong, no doubt about it, and we do that more than we help those who are deserving. While we should sympathize with God’s poor—that is, those who cannot help themselves – let us remember that is not a poor person in the United States who was not made poor by his own shortcomings, or by the shortcomings of someone else. It is all wrong to be poor, anyhow. Let us give in to that argument and pass that to one side.

See also “Trump’s Success Shows Many Americans Believe only in America,” by Giles Fraser, The Guardian, March 3, 2016, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/belief/2016/mar/03/donald-trump-success-shows-many-americans-believe-only-in-america:

When the Pilgrim Fathers got in their little boats and sailed to the new world, they took with them a narrative that had begun to build in England, that the protestant English were actually the chosen people. America, then, was to be the new Israel. The pilgrims had landed safe on Cannan’s side, the promised land. The original 13 colonies in North America “were nothing other than a regeneration of the twelve tribes of Israel” as one American newspaper put it in 1864.

In other words, America became its own church and eventually its own god. Which is why the only real atheism in America is to call into question the American dream – a dream often indistinguishable from capitalism and the celebration of winners. This is the god Trump worships. He is its great high priest. And this is why evangelicals vote for him. But the God of Jesus Christ it is not. The death of God comes in many diverse and peculiar forms. In America, it is the flag and not the cross that takes pride of place in the sanctuary.

<sup>33</sup> Figgis, 1914.

<sup>34</sup> Jameson, 1994. Quoted in McMaster, 2013. See also Harvey, 2005, or the case of China taken up in Hansen and Svarverud, 2010, describing how globalization and neoliberalism create new hybrid cultural, political, and economic practices on top of prevailing Confucian ethics and communist practices.

<sup>35</sup> “A Short History of Neo-liberalism: Twenty Years of Elite Economics and Emerging Opportunities for Structural Change,” by Susan George, Conference on Economic Sovereignty in a Globalising World, Bangkok, Thailand, March 24–26, 1999, www.globalexchange.org/resources/econ101/neoliberalismhist. Quoted in McMaster, 2013. See also George, 2015.

<sup>36</sup> Hirschman, 1977. See also Adelman, 2013, and “Understanding Society – Innovative Thinking About a Global World: Hirschman on the Passions” by Daniel Little, May 14, 2013, <http://understandingsociety.blogspot.no/2013/05/hirschman-on-passions.html>.

<sup>37</sup> Social mobility has been found to be extremely slow, across countries and eras, see, for example, Clark, 2014.

<sup>38</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S39.

<sup>39</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S40.

<sup>40</sup> Droge and Tabor, 1992, p. 136.

<sup>41</sup> Whitehead and Abufarha, 2008. See also Strathern, et al., 2006.

<sup>42</sup> Whitehead and Abufarha, 2008, p. 395.

<sup>43</sup> Mona Eltahawy explained her views on January 30, 2015, at “World Woman,” an event organized by Deeyah Khan and Fuuse at Riksscenen in Oslo, Norway, January 30–31, 2015, <http://fuuse.net/world-woman/about/>.

<sup>44</sup> Aslan, 2005, 2009.

<sup>45</sup> “What I Want to Be Thankful for on Thanksgiving: An Ode to Edward Snowden,” by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/what-i-want-to-be-thankfu\_b\_6216182.html. It is a privilege to have Carol Smaldino as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>46</sup> “Religious Fundamentalism-Extremism-Violence,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 8, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/02/religious-fundamentalism-extremism-violence/:

The three Abrahamic and Hinduism with divine forces; and Buddhism, Daoism-Confucianism and Shinto without? Where do we find religious extremism as defined above; and where not? Obviously, some of it everywhere, nothing somewhere, but generally speaking?

Judaism has religious extremism as right and duty to conquer and defend the Promised Holy Land (Genesis 15:18, wrath of divine forces in Deuteronomy, for structural violence Isaiah 2:1–4).

Christianity has religious extremism built as violence against non-believers (Luke 19:26)–hence also to spread Christianity–but has rules against retribution (turning the other cheek).

Islam has norms against spreading Islam by the sword, but uses violence against infidels, particularly against apostates, and uses violence for “retribution with moderation.”

Summary: Judaic religious extremism is territorial, Christian is missionary, Islamic is punitive. SUM: ex occidente bellum.

Hinduism has internal structural violence built into the caste system, with a history of direct violence to establish it and keep it. Nonviolence to cows serves as an opening to nonviolence in general.

Buddhism has violence in obscure texts but generally prescribes nonviolence. If Buddhists are violent (Sri Lanka, Myanmar, Thailand) it is not qua Buddhists, but as defenders of a state with Buddhism.

Daoism is ambiguous: every human holon has forces-counterforces, not necessarily violent; but a rising yin or yang may be “helped.”

Confucianism deplores “bad emperor” violence, but is feudal structural violence, with rights and duties both high up and low down. Shinto is peaceful, but state Shinto was a construction inspired by Christian state religions justifying warfare external violence under Sun Goddess Amaterasu-o-mikami and Her offsprings, the Emperors.

Conclusion: not good enough to declare ex oriente pax.

How about the secular counterparts to religions, the ideologies, the isms? Backed by human forces of rationality and compassion, and by social forces across the domestic and global fault lines nature-gender-generation-race-class-nation-territory. Religions see them as parts of the divine order; secularism sees them as changeable, for worse (slavery, colonialism, war), for better (human rights, Art 28).

Enlightenment came with capitalist growth against nature and the working classes; with the rule of Men, Old/middle-aged, White; class with competitive mobility; nationalism and statism. Isms emerged, as dualist-manichean as God vs Satan, promising Paradise vs Hell, pitting Self-good vs Other-evil, with mechanisms for picking winners-losers.

Nature fights back, now possibly winning. Women, young and old, non-whites struggle nonviolently for parity. Afterlife Paradise and Hell no longer available, political parties fight for paradise=upper class rewards from capitalist growth against hell=poverty-misery; meaningful only if inequality prevails over distribution. Nationalism and statism struggle for parity and dominance, even globally; the mechanisms being war by the military and negotiation by the diplomats.

<sup>47</sup> “Religious Fundamentalism-Extremism-Violence,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 8, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/02/religious-fundamentalism-extremism-violence/:

How about the secular counterparts to religions, the ideologies, the isms? Backed by human forces of rationality and compassion, and by social forces across the domestic and global fault lines nature-gender-generation-race-class-nation-territory. Religions see them as parts of the divine order; secularism sees them as changeable, for worse (slavery, colonialism, war), for better (human rights, Art 28).

Enlightenment came with capitalist growth against nature and the working classes; with the rule of Men, Old/middle-aged, White; class with competitive mobility; nationalism and statism. Isms emerged, as dualist-manichean as God vs Satan, promising Paradise vs Hell, pitting Self-good vs Other-evil, with mechanisms for picking winners-losers.

Nature fights back, now possibly winning. Women, young and old, non-whites struggle nonviolently for parity. Afterlife Paradise and Hell no longer available, political parties fight for paradise=upper class rewards from capitalist growth against hell=poverty-misery; meaningful only if inequality prevails over distribution. Nationalism and statism struggle for parity and dominance, even globally; the mechanisms being war by the military and negotiation by the diplomats.

Secular fundamentalism means strong attachment to one side in the one fault line seen as fundamental: with this issue (gender, race, class, nation, state) solved, the others will follow automatically!

Secular extremism, fundamentalist or not, uses violence against the Other in gender, race, class, nation, state; if fundamentalist for the salvation of humanity, with paradise on earth around the corner. Secularism is Western. It is rejected by Islam and Hinduism. Buddhism focuses on means: nonviolence; China on process: yin-yang. Only Japan under Abe follows US war logic. Western secularism may actually turn out to be an episode, yielding to religious revivalism.

<sup>48</sup> Karlberg, 2013, p. 7. Michael Karlberg is a professor of communication studies at Western Washington University. His research and activism focus on the need to move beyond the prevailing culture of conflict and competition in order to establish a more just and sustainable social order based on recognition of the organic oneness of humanity.

<sup>49</sup> Walter Benjamin to Ludwig Strauss in his letter of November 21, 1912, quoted in Ott, 2016.

<sup>50</sup> See, among others, Cohen, 2009, Cohen and Crane-Kramer, 2007, or Armelagos, et al., 1991, Lipton and De Kadt, 1988.

<sup>51</sup> Manning, 2004.

<sup>52</sup> Warner, 2014a. See also Warner, 2009, 2014c, b.

<sup>53</sup> Consider the sustainability principle in The Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia.

<sup>54</sup> See the work of Alexander Wendt, 2015, as one example among many. I am thankful for having had the chance to communicate with Alexander Wendt, for the first time in 2005.

<sup>55</sup> Bruce Schuman in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Meaning, Religion, and a Great Transition,” November 12, 2014, in response to Karlberg, 2014.

<sup>56</sup> Heard, 1963.

<sup>57</sup> Hollick, 2006, Hollick and Connelly, 2011. I thank Sigurd Støren for making me aware of this work. Sigurd Støren, Malcolm Hollick, and Christine Connelly are esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>58</sup> See the list of the Laureates of the Planetary Consciousness Award 1996 – 2004 on www.clubofbudapest.org/laureats-planet-consc.php.

<sup>59</sup> Karlberg, 2014. See also Karlberg, 2004, 2008, 2012.

<sup>60</sup> Paul Nieuwenhuis, Cardiff Business School, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 19, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016.

Chapter 3

<sup>1</sup> Miller, 1976/1986, p. 72. I thank Linda Hartling for recommending this quote as an introduction into this chapter.

<sup>2</sup> I am working on a book on what we call “human nature,” where I will discuss the themes of this section in more depth.

<sup>3</sup> See, among others, Barrington-Leigh, 2017, Helliwell and Barrington-Leigh, 2011. Already in the early 1970s, economist Richard Easterlin, et al., 2010, discovered a paradox, namely, that while happiness was strongly correlated with income within each country and varied widely across countries, a country did not necessarily become any happier on average when it became richer.

<sup>4</sup> Barrington-Leigh, 2017, and Barrington-Leigh, 2010: “The main finding is that in countries where subjective well-being depends more strongly on one’s rank in the income distribution, people are less happy across the entire income distribution.”

<sup>5</sup> Fuchs and Flügge, 2014, Abstract:

Within the last four decades, our view of the mature vertebrate brain has changed significantly. Today it is generally accepted that the adult brain is far from being fixed. A number of factors such as stress, adrenal and gonadal hormones, neurotransmitters, growth factors, certain drugs, environmental stimulation, learning, and aging change neuronal structures and functions. The processes that these factors may induce are morphological alterations in brain areas, changes in neuron morphology, network alterations including changes in neuronal connectivity, the generation of new neurons (neurogenesis), and neurobiochemical changes. Here we review several aspects of neuroplasticity and discuss the functional implications of the neuroplastic capacities of the adult and differentiated brain with reference to the history of their discovery.

I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>6</sup> Fuglestad, 2010, Goldhahn, et al., 2010. See also Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?" by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>7</sup> Nowak and Highfield, 2012.

<sup>8</sup> Social psychologist Morton Deutsch was the director emeritus of the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR) at Teachers College, Columbia University, in New York City. He is one of the founders of the study of cooperation, and emphasizes the advantages of cooperation, for instance cooperation's superiority to competition. It was a privilege to have Morton Deutsch as esteemed member in the board of directors of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. He was the honorary convener of our annual Workshop on Transforming Humiliation and Violent Conflict, hosted by the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR), as part of the Advanced Consortium on Cooperation, Conflict, and Complexity (AC4), Columbia University, New York City. Morton Deutsch passed away on March 13, 2017, 97 years old, and we will honor his legacy by continuing with this workshop series. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php.

<sup>9</sup> Tomasello, 2014, Tomasello, et al., 2005. Michael Tomasello found two core dimensions: reading intentions, and socially interacting with others.

<sup>10</sup> Crespi and Yanega, 1995. Several different levels of sociality are differentiated including presociality (solitary but social), subsociability, parasocial (including communal, quasisocial, and semisocial), and eusocial. The term eusocial originally includes organisms (originally, only invertebrates) with the following features: 1. Reproductive division of labor (with or without sterile castes), 2. Overlapping generations, 3. Cooperative care of young.

<sup>11</sup> Wilson, 2013. See also "Interview with Edward O. Wilson: The Origin of Morals," by Philip Bethge and Johann Grolle, Spiegel Online International, February 26, 2013, www.spiegel.de/international/spiegel/spiegel-interview-with-edward-wilson-on-the-formation-of-morals-a-884767.html.

See, furthermore, Edward O. Wilson on the Human Condition, FORA.tv., April 20, 2012, http://fora.tv/2012/04/20/Edward\_O\_Wilson\_The\_Social\_Conquest\_of\_Earth.

<sup>12</sup> Wilson and Wilson, 2007, <https://pdfs.semanticscholar.org/7694/67447fc718c5c0069391958c77df93af7882.pdf>, p. 27. See David Sloan Wilson, 2015, for why both between-group selection and within-group selection may be important, rather than only the latter. See also Wilson's science blog, beginning with "Truth and Reconciliation for Group Selection I: Why It Is Needed," October 23, 2009, <http://scienceblogs.com/evolution/2009/10/23/truth-and-reconciliation-for-g/>. It was a privilege to meet David Sloan Wilson in March 2016 in Oslo, Norway, and to learn from him in the context of "Kontrapunkt," an event organized by Nina Witoszek, Alida Boye, and Helge Iberg.

<sup>13</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>14</sup> "A Failed State that Is Succeeding in Parts," The Economist, August 29, 1999, www.economist.com/node/234829.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid.

<sup>16</sup> Ibn Khaldun, 1377/1958, is a historiographer, historian, and a forerunner of the contemporary disciplines of sociology and demography, who addressed themes such as politics, urban life, economics, and knowledge. I studied him when I lived and worked as a clinical psychologist in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984–1991. I saw him describe the very contrast between sedentary life and nomadic life that was very apparent for me while living in Cairo. Ibn Khaldun described how desert warriors lose power when they conquer a city. Ibn Khaldun's central concept was that of aşabiyyah, or "social cohesion," or "group solidarity," arising in tribes and other small kinship groups, sometimes intensified by religious ideology, therefore also identifiable as "tribalism." I observed the workings of clan cohesion later first hand during my doctoral research in Somaliland in 1998. According to Ibn Khaldun, this cohesion has two sides: while it helps groups to accumulate power, it also contains within itself psychological, sociological, economic, and political seeds of the group's downfall, when a new group arrives with more vigorous cohesion.

See also, "Why Nomads Win: What Ibn Khaldun Would Say About Afghanistan," by Gerard Russell, Afghanistan and Middle East specialist, Huffington Post, April 11, 2010, www.huffingtonpost.com/gerard-russell/why-nomads-win-what-ibn-k\_b\_447878.html.

<sup>17</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013. See also Deci and Ryan, 1985, for the argument that an egalitarian group structure creates a prosocial attitude, and motivates group members to identify with the group and to attend to an assigned task, particularly when the task is based on a consensus. In this way, an intrinsic work motivation is created.

<sup>18</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013.

<sup>19</sup> See more in Lindner, 2016e.

<sup>20</sup> The Late Pleistocene is a geochronological age of the Pleistocene Epoch beginning 127,000/126,000 years ago and ending 11,784 ( $\pm$  69) years ago. The age represents the end of the Pleistocene epoch and is followed by the Holocene epoch.

<sup>21</sup> See, for instance, Fuglestad, 2005, and Fuglestad, 2008. BCE stands for “Before the Common Era,” and is equivalent to BC, which means “Before Christ.”

<sup>22</sup> See a readable popular presentation in “Neanderthals Were People, Too,” by Jon Mooallem, New York Times, January 11, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/01/11/magazine/neanderthals-were-people-too.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. I am proud of having 2.8 percent DNA from Neanderthals!

<sup>23</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013.

<sup>24</sup> Jaynes, 1976. I thank Finn Tschudi for making me aware of this book.

<sup>25</sup> McGilchrist, 2009. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of this book.

<sup>26</sup> Kornhuber and Deecke, 1965, Libet, et al., 1983, Kühn and Brass, 2009.

<sup>27</sup> The potential implications of this research for free will, highly relevant for conflict studies, have been discussed at great length in the literature, see, for instance, Roskies, 2010, or Gazzaniga, 2011.

<sup>28</sup> Devine, 1989, Fazio, 1990. I am indebted to Nils Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of this research.

<sup>29</sup> See also Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 2: How Emotions Affect Conflict, in the book Emotion and Conflict.

<sup>30</sup> Passer, et al., 2011. I thank Nils Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of the work of Michael Passer and his colleagues. Karen Barad earned her doctorate in theoretical physics, building on insights from Niels Bohr, and is known for her theory of agential realism, and she writes, in Barad, 2003, p. 810:

Indeed, there is a host of material-discursive forces – including ones that get labeled “social,” “cultural,” “psychic,” “economic,” “natural,” “physical,” “biological,” “geopolitical,” and “geological” – that may be important to particular (entangled) processes of materialization.

<sup>31</sup> Berkowitz, 1990.

<sup>32</sup> Berkowitz and Harmon-Jones, 2004. Leonard Berkowitz sadly passed away on the very day that I write these lines, in January 2016, almost ninety years old.

<sup>33</sup> Milgram, 1974. A replication of the Milgram experiments in 2017 showed that even today, people are still willing to harm others in pursuit of obeying authority, see Doliński, et al., 2017.

See also Curiosity: How Evil are You? Authority and Obedience: The Milgram Experiment, by Eli Roth, 2011, reproducing results similar to the original Milgram experiment, though the highest-voltage punishment used was 165 volts, rather than 450 volts, https://curiosity.com/playlists/authority-and-obedience-the-milgram-experiment-BOON2XVU/?utm\_source=dsc&utm\_medium=rdr&utm\_campaign=rdrwork.

See also a book by Steven Bartlett, 2011, where he seeks to understand, among others, the psychology of people who possess what the author has called “moral intelligence,” which allow a person to resist when asked to participate in abusive behavior. It is a privilege to have Steven Bartlett as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>34</sup> 60 Minutes: What the Last Nuremberg Prosecutor Alive Wants the World to Know, CBS-TV News, May 7, 2017, www.cbsnews.com/news/what-the-last-nuremberg-prosecutor-alive-wants-the-world-to-know/. At 97, Ben Ferencz is the last Nuremberg prosecutor alive and he has a far-reaching message for today’s world. I thank Libby and Len Traubman for reminding me of this quote.

<sup>35</sup> Bauman, 1989.

<sup>36</sup> Isdal, 2000. Per Isdal is a psychotherapist working with violent men. I thank Nils Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of Isdal’s work.

<sup>37</sup> A young Palestinian man told me that he felt triumph when he was beaten and humiliated by the military – he was almost killed – because this was proof that he resisted oppression (personal communication, 2004). He would have felt unbearable shame and guilt had he accepted humiliation and not stood up to it, he said. There is a Somali proverb: “A man deserves to be killed, not humiliated.”

See also Hartling, et al., 2013, where we discuss studies of Palestinians living in Gaza and the West Bank. Ginges and Atran, 2008, found that humiliation leads to an “inertia effect” (p. 281), which suppresses violent action, a finding supported by research carried out by Leidner, et al., 2012, indicating that humiliation is accompanied by feelings of powerlessness and a decreased likeliness to engage in violence. In their study of over 7000 twins, also Kendler, et al., 2003, described depressogenic effect of humiliation. Elison and Harter, 2007, noted a history of depression and signs of depression in the school shooters they studied.

In conclusion, as it seems, under certain conditions, humiliation inhibits violent action, at least in the short term, yet, the chronic and cumulative effect of humiliation may lead to violence in the long term. While scholars continue to investigate how humiliation may have the power to change individuals into ticking time bombs, so Harter et al., 2003, and Torres and Bergner, 2010, we must also explore what happens when political leaders, terrorist leaders, or entire nations “lit the fuse of humiliation,” Fattah, 2013.

<sup>38</sup> Hewstone, et al., 2006, Passer, et al., 2011.

<sup>39</sup> Sherif, 1961.

<sup>40</sup> Tajfel, 1970.

<sup>41</sup> Galtung, 1978.

<sup>42</sup> Ryan, 1995.

<sup>43</sup> Hermans, et al., 2014. I had the privilege of learning from Guillén Fernández on October 10, 2015, at the Symposium “Gehirne zwischen Liebe und Krieg – Menschlichkeit in Zeiten der Neurowissenschaften,” Fürth, Germany, October 9–11, 2015, www.turmdersinne.de/de/symposium/symposium-2015/programm. Fernández’ research shows the influence of a wide range of factors, from neurotransmitters such as noradrenaline that initiate the stress reaction to corticosteroids restoring homeostasis by normalizing/desensitizing brain processing in the aftermath of stress. See Hermans, et al., 2011, Henckens, et al., 2010, Vogel, et al., 2015. Also genetics play a role, see Cousijn, et al., 2010, as does childhood trauma, see Everaerd, et al., 2015, and Vrijnsen, et al., 2015. Stress increases existing vulnerabilities, see van Wingen, et al., 2012b, van Wingen, et al., 2012a. Kroes, et al., 2014, show that food with a favorable tryptophan/LNAA ratio can lift mood. To gain a stable psychic balance, everything from experience and feedback, to genetic protection, to food and neurotransmitters such as corticosteroids and serotonin can help, while persistence of noradrenaline, together with genetic risk, childhood trauma, and stress can lead to an enduring imbalance that may be associated with PTSD, social phobia, specific phobia, and generalized anxiety disorder.

<sup>44</sup> Holbrook, et al., 2015. Innovative experiments using transcranial magnetic stimulation, a method to incapacitate specific regions of the brain temporarily, appear to show that both belief in God and prejudice towards immigrants can be reduced by directing magnetic energy into the brain, in this case, the posterior medial frontal cortex, a part of the brain associated with detecting problems and triggering responses.

See also “Research that Is Simply Beyond Belief,” by Alistair Keely, University of York, October 14, 2015, www.york.ac.uk/news-and-events/news/2015/research/psychologist-brian-magnetic/:

Dr. Colin Holbrook, from UCLA and the lead author of the paper, added: “These findings are very striking, and consistent with the idea that brain mechanisms that evolved for relatively basic threat-response functions are repurposed to also produce ideological reactions. However, more research is needed to understand exactly how and why religious beliefs and ethnocentric attitudes were reduced in this experiment.” The scientists say that whether we’re trying to clamber over a fallen tree that we find in our path, find solace in religion, or resolve issues related to immigration, our brains are using the same basic mental machinery.

<sup>45</sup> See, among others, Gilbert, 1998.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid.

<sup>47</sup> Koenigs, et al., 2007.

<sup>48</sup> The sadistic personality disorder appeared in an appendix of the revised third edition of the APA’s Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM-III-R), but the later versions of the DSM (DSM-IV, DSM-IV-TR and DSM-5) do not include it. Yet, the term is used in common language and is grappled with in professional circles. See, among others, Fromm, 1973, Lewis, 1987, Morrison and Gilbert, 2001, Kring, 2001, Gilbert, 2001, Hare, 2003, Dutton, et al., 2005, Kendler and Prescott, 2006, Babiak and Hare, 2006, Myers, et al., 2006, Kitayama and Cohen, 2007, Hervé and Yuille, 2007, Millon, et al., 2009, Marsella and Yamada, 2007, Watters, 2010, Millon, et al., 2010, Katz, 2010, Reidy, et al., 2011, Walker and Knauer, 2011, O’Meara, et al., 2011, Buckels, et al., 2013, Millon and Blaney, 2014. Israel W. Charny proposes to include “A Personality Disorder of Excessive Power Strivings” in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders IV (DSM-IV), see Charny, 1997, see also Charny, 2014. Charny “insists that the DSM-IV does not address conditions in which a person harms others, and he “posits that a political leader ought to be deemed disturbed when he defines a target population as ‘undeserving,’ ‘inferior,’ or ‘enemies of the people,’ forces a murderous population transfer; calls on followers or coerces them to commit mass murder-suicide; or is prepared to send people who oppose him to psychiatric hospitals, work camps, concentration camps, and killing fields,” see “A New Diagnosis for the Power Hungry,” by Judy Siegel, Jerusalem Post, August 20, 1997,” quoted in Lindner, 2006, pp. 133–134. Clearly, a person, rather than being born sadistic, might have suffered abuse as a child or adult. Or, it might be the mere absence of something during childhood that could lead to this. Different children might need different parenting styles, and different timings to grow up into a loving human being.

<sup>49</sup> Roth, et al., 2010, Wiswede, et al., 2014. I had the privilege of learning from Gerhard Roth on October 11, 2015, at the Symposium “Gehirne zwischen Liebe und Krieg – Menschlichkeit in Zeiten der Neurowissenschaften,” Fürth, Germany, October 9–11, 2015, www.turmdersinne.de/de/symposium/symposium-2015/programm.

<sup>50</sup> Fonagy, et al., 2015, Fonagy, et al., 2004. I had the privilege of learning from Svenja Taubner, who works with Peter Fonagy, on October 10, 2015, at the Symposium “Gehirne zwischen Liebe und Krieg – Menschlichkeit in Zeiten der Neurowissenschaften,” Fürth, Germany, October 9–11, 2015, www.turmdersinne.de/de/symposium/symposium-2015/programm. Mentalization is being defined as the ability of a person to envision mental states in her own self and in others. The “alien self” arises when caregivers fail to adequately have their infant’s “mind in mind.” Clinical psychologist John Auerbach suggests to use the term “alien identity” rather than “alien self,” see his review of Fonagy’s Affect Regulation, Mentalization, and the Development of the Self, Winter 2005, pp. 35–38, www.apadivisions.org/division-39/publications/reviews/affect.aspx.

<sup>51</sup> Koestler, 1974.

<sup>52</sup> See, among others, Fisher, 1930, Haldane, 1932, Watson, et al., 1936, or Hamilton, 1963, 1964a, b. For more recent explanations, see, among others, “Richard Dawkins, Edward O. Wilson, and the Consensus of the Many,” by David Sloan Wilson, January 1, 2015, <https://evolution-institute.org/article/richard-dawkins-edward-o-wilson-and-the-consensus-of-the-many/>. See also “Human Nature: An Evolutionary Paradox,” by John Scales Avery, Human Wrongs Watch, August 15, 2016, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2016/08/17/human-nature-an-evolutionary-paradox/>.

<sup>53</sup> “Human Nature: An Evolutionary Paradox,” by John Scales Avery, Human Wrongs Watch, August 15, 2016, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2016/08/17/human-nature-an-evolutionary-paradox/>.

<sup>54</sup> See, among others Ardrey, 1961, Lee and DeVore, 1968, or Tiger, 1984. See also Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?” by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>55</sup> See, for instance, Zihlman, 2009, or Wilbanks, 2008. Sally Linton, 1974, was possibly the first to write a feminist reaction to Man the Hunter in her 1974 chapter “Woman the Gatherer.” Baskets and slings may have been the first tools invented, tools for carrying infants and gathered food. Early hominin groups were rather centered around the mother-infant relationship than the mate relationship, see Slocum, 1975, Leacock, et al., 1978, Tanner, 1981, Fedigan, 1986, Zihlman, et al., 1997, Sussman, 1999, Hart and Sussman, 2009, Ward and Edelstein, 2009.

<sup>56</sup> Parzinger, 2015.

<sup>57</sup> “The Worst Mistake in the History of the Human Race,” by Jared Diamond, Discover Magazine, May 1987, pp. 64–66, www.ditext.com/diamond/mistake.html:

Archaeologists studying the rise of farming have reconstructed a crucial stage at which we made the worst mistake in human history. Forced to choose between limiting population or trying to increase food production, we chose the latter and ended up with starvation, warfare, and tyranny.

See also Manning, 2004, Hemenway, 2009, or Harari, 2014, who also share the view that the agricultural revolution was history’s “biggest fraud.” See, furthermore, “Is Sustainable Agriculture an Oxymoron?” Toby Hemenway, Permaculture Activist, Number 60, May, 2006, www.patternliteracy.com/203-is-sustainable-agriculture-an-oxymoron.

<sup>58</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013.

<sup>59</sup> Boserup, 1965; Cohen, 1977.

<sup>60</sup> Bowles and Gintis, 2011b).

<sup>61</sup> Cohen, 2009, Cohen and Crane-Kramer, 2007, or Armelagos, et al., 1991, Lipton and De Kadt, 1988.

<sup>62</sup> See an overview in Witt and Schwesinger, 2013. The emergence of hierarchically stratified society began with the figure of the locum tenens (Latin for “one holding a place”), then, with the delegation of power governorship and fiefdom emerged, eventually giving rise to feudal state systems. See early work by Fried, 1967, Harner, 1970, or Jones and American Council of Learned, 1993.

<sup>63</sup> Heller, 1984.

<sup>64</sup> See for a discussion of terror, panic, and polarization Renos Papadopoulos, 2006, who draws on his expertise in the Greek roots of notions such as terror and panic, and combines it with his Jungian orientation.

<sup>65</sup> Holbrook, et al., 2015. This research shows that the experience of threat increases ideological responses. Innovative experiments using transcranial magnetic stimulation, a method to incapacitate specific regions of the brain temporarily, appear to show that both belief in God and prejudice towards immigrants can be reduced by directing magnetic energy into the brain, in this case, the posterior medial frontal cortex, a part of the brain associated with detecting problems and triggering responses.

See also “Research that Is Simply Beyond Belief,” by Alistair Keely, University of York, October 14, 2015, www.york.ac.uk/news-and-events/news/2015/research/psychologist-brian-magnetic/:

Dr. Colin Holbrook, from UCLA and the lead author of the paper, added: “These findings are very striking, and consistent with the idea that brain mechanisms that evolved for relatively basic threat-response functions are repurposed to also produce ideological reactions. However, more research is needed to understand exactly how and why religious beliefs and ethnocentric attitudes were reduced in this experiment.” The scientists say that whether we’re trying to clamber over a fallen tree that we find in our path, find solace in religion, or resolve issues related to immigration, our brains are using the same basic mental machinery.

<sup>66</sup> Whitson and Galinsky, 2008.

<sup>67</sup> Bartoschek, 2015.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid.

<sup>69</sup> Twain, 1916, Chapter 9.

<sup>70</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 171–172. The last paragraph is translated by Lindner. This is the German original, Suttner, 1889, pp. 105–106:

Da hatte mein Vater so ein paar Lieblingsbeweise zu Gunsten des Krieges, die nicht umzubringen waren.

1. Kriege sind von Gott – dem Herrn der Heerscharen – selber eingesetzt, siehe die heilige Schrift.

2. Es hat immer welche gegeben, folglich wird es auch immer welche geben.

3. Die Menschheit würde sich ohne diese gelegentliche Dezimierung zu stark vermehren.

4. Der dauernde Friede erschlaft, verweichlicht, hat – wie stehendes Sumpfwasser – Fäulnis, nämlich den Verfall der Sitten zur Folge.

5. Zur Bethätigung der Selbstaufopferung, des Heldenmuts, kurz zur Charakterstählung sind Kriege das beste Mittel.

6. Die Menschen werden immer streiten, volle Übereinstimmung in allen Ansprüchen ist unmöglich – verschiedene Interessen müssen stets aneinanderstoßen, folglich ewiger Friede ein Widersinn.

...

Und so nimmt der Streit kein Ende. Der Kriegerische behält immer recht; sein Raisonement bewegt sich in einem Kreise, wo man ihm stets nachlaufen, ihn aber nie erreichen kann. Der Krieg ist ein schreckliches Übel, aber er muß sein. – Er muß zwar nicht sein, aber er ist ein hohes Gut. Diesen Mangel an Folgerichtigkeit, an logischer Ehrlichkeit...

<sup>71</sup> Military psychology addresses this topic. See, for example, Grossman, 1995. See also Cushman, et al., 2012. I thank Ulrich Spalthoff for making me aware of this research.

<sup>72</sup> “Suicide Rate Spikes Among Young Veterans,” by Leo Shane III, Stars and Stripes, January 9, 2014, www.stripes.com/report-suicide-rate-spikes-among-young-veterans-1.261283. Researchers found that the risk of suicide for veterans is 21 percent higher when compared to civilian adults. From 2001 to 2014, as the civilian suicide rate rose about 23.3 percent, the rate of suicide among veterans jumped more than 32 percent. See the “VA Suicide Prevention Program Facts about Veteran Suicide,” U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, July 2016, www.va.gov/opa/publications/factsheets/Suicide\_Prevention\_FactSheet\_New\_VA\_Stats\_070616\_1400.pdf.

<sup>73</sup> I admire veteran Drew Pham’s analysis of his need to kill as a path to gaining respect, see “The Long March Ahead: A Veteran’s Place in Resistance,” by Drew Pham, November 22, 2016, www.wrath-bearingtree.com/2016/11/the-long-march-ahead-a-veterans-place-in-resistance/. It is a great privilege for me to know Drew Pham personally, in his capacity of working at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR) at Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City.

<sup>74</sup> Lee, 2015.

<sup>75</sup> Kimmel, 2013. It is a privilege to have Michael Kimmel as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

See also “What Is the Manosphere?” by “Dalrock,” Dalrock blog, May 15, 2013,

<http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2013/05/15/what-is-the-manosphere/>. See also “The Sexodus, Part 1: The Men Giving Up On Women And Checking Out Of Society,” by Milo Yiannopoulos, Breitbart, December 4, 2014,

www.breitbart.com/Breitbart-London/2014/12/04/The-Sexodus-Part-1-The-Men-Giving-Up-On-Women-And-Checking-Out-Of-Society, and “The Sexodus, Part 2: Dishonest Feminist Panics Leave Male Sexuality In Crisis,” by Milo Yiannopoulos, Breitbart, December 9, 2014, www.breitbart.com/Breitbart-London/2014/12/09/The-Sexodus-Part-2-Dishonest-Feminist-Panics-Leave-Male-Sexuality-In-Crisis. I thank Camilla Hsiung for making me aware of this article.

Read in Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security, about my reflections after many years of psychotherapeutic work and social psychological inquiry, p. 38:

Throughout my almost four decades of experience as a counselor, psychotherapist, and social psychologist, I have noticed a dynamic in families that seems to be duplicated in what is called the manosphere. When children grow up, parents ought to protect them. It is not easy, however, even for the best intentioned parent, to offer protection without being oppressive or at least appearing to be oppressive. Children might at times accuse their parents of undue domination, rightly or wrongly, and some parents might respond with accusing their children of ingratitude. In traditional family settings, when a mother has built her identity on protecting children, she might lose her anchoring when they grow up, and she might be particularly prone to feeling disrespected by her children. Committing the correspondence error, she might even infer that her children intentionally hold her in contempt, while they in reality only wish to become independent adults. I observe some men reacting in similar ways, in their relationships with their children, however, also with respect to women. By committing the correspondence bias, they accuse women of intending to hurt men, while the women simply wish to emancipate themselves, and might do so at times as unsteadily and tentatively as adolescents. “Under the laws of the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum – the ancient foundation of Roman law – the head of the family, pater familias, had vitae necisque potestas, or the ‘power of life and death,’ over his children and his slaves, often also over his wife. He had the power to kill or sell into slavery those he had ‘under his hand’ or sub manu (emancipation is the deliverance out of the hand of pater familias).”

<sup>76</sup> “Women Are Incapable of Love, Period,” comment 9518 by “fgsfdf,” to the question “Are the vast majority of women truly incapable of experiencing reciprocal love and attraction?” Dalrock blog, June 8, 2011, <http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2011/06/08/are-the-vast-majority-of-women-truly-incapable-of-experiencing-reciprocal-love-and-attraction/#comment-9518>. The author of the Dalrock blog identifies himself as follows: “I’m a happily married man living with my sexy wife and our two wonderful kids in the Dallas/Fort Worth area. I’m very interested in how the post-feminist world impacts myself and my family, and am using this blog to explore these kinds of issues.”

<sup>77</sup> “Why Invest in Women?” The United States Agency for International Development (USAID), <http://50.usaid.gov/infographic-why-invest-in-women/>. See also “An Economy for the 99 Per Cent,” Oxfam International Briefing Paper, January 16, 2017, www.oxfam.org/sites/www.oxfam.org/files/file\_attachments/bp-economy-for-99-percent-160117-en.pdf. See, furthermore, “Inequality (II): ‘It Will Take 170 Years for Women to Be Paid as Men Are,’” by Baher Kamal, Inter Press Service (IPS), January 17, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/01/inequality-ii-it-will-take-170-years-for-women-to-be-paid-as-men-are/.

<sup>78</sup> Darimont, et al., 2015.

<sup>79</sup> Global wildlife populations have fallen by 58 percent since 1970, and if the trend continues the decline could reach two-thirds among vertebrates by 2020, according to World Wildlife Fund (WWF), et al., 2016. See also Ceballos, et al., 2015, Kolbert, 2006, Spufford and Kolbert, 2007, and Kolbert, 2014. See, furthermore, Davis, 2009, and The Wayfinders, the 2009 Massey Lecture by Wade Davis, Convocation Hall, Toronto, uploaded November 20, 2011, on <https://youtu.be/KfbGdoTQKuM>. See also philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>80</sup> See a statistical overview over foreign fighters in Iraq and Syria, updated on January 29, 2015, on www.rferl.org/content/infographics/infographics/26584940.html.

<sup>81</sup> Wang and Aamodt, 2011.

<sup>82</sup> Carveth, 2013. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this book. Also Maria Montessori followed a similar line in her educational theory, when she called on instructors to “give priority to the inner teacher who animated” the child. The trope of the wisdom of the inner teacher that sits at our hearts is also to be found, for instance, in Tibetan Buddhists. Psychoanalyst Susie Orbach, 2009, observed that parental and societal pressure leads to a false self in the sense of a skewed self, where certain aspects of the self are overemphasized, at the expense of others, making the person distrust herself, thus an inner splitting of mind and body leading to a falsified sense of one’s own body. Sociologist David Riesman, et al., 1950/2001, may have had similar dynamics in mind when he identified three main cultural types: tradition-directed, inner-directed, and other-directed. The tradition-directed and other-directed types may tend to Carveth’s category of “unconscionable superego,” while the inner-directed person may have access to sympathetic identification.

<sup>83</sup> Carveth, 2013, see the book description at www.karnacbooks.com/product/the-still-small-voice-psychoanalytic-reflections-on-guilt-and-conscience/33543/:

Whereas Freud himself viewed conscience as one of the functions of the superego, in The Still Small Voice: Psychoanalytic Reflections on Guilt and Conscience, Carveth argues that superego and conscience are distinct mental functions and that, therefore, a fourth mental structure, the conscience, needs to be added to the psychoanalytic structural theory of the mind. He claims that while both conscience and superego originate in the so-called pre-oedipal phase of infant and child development they are comprised of contrasting and often conflicting identifications. The primary object, still most often the mother, is inevitably experienced as, on the one hand, nurturing and soothing and, on the other, as frustrating and persecuting. Conscience is formed in identification with the nurturer; the superego in identification with the aggressor. There is a principle of reciprocity at work in the human psyche: for love received one seeks to return love; for hate, hate (the talion law).

Like Franz Alexander and Sandor Ferenczi before him, Carveth views the therapeutic task as the disempowerment of the superego. But unlike his forebears he does not propose its replacement by the rational ego for, in his view, rationality cannot serve as the source of values. Following Jean-Jacques Rousseau, he finds the roots of morality not in reason but in feeling, in sympathetic identification or “pity.” With Pascal, he holds that “the heart has reasons reason cannot know.” Such “reasons of the heart” form the core of conscience. Unlike the torments inflicted by the demonic superego that merely uses transgression as an excuse to do what it wants – punish and torment the ego – the conscience, what Winnicott called “the capacity for concern,” is genuinely troubled by failures to love. The author claims we must face our bad conscience, acknowledge and bear genuine (depressive) guilt, and through contrition, repentance and reparation come to accept reconciliation and forgiveness, or be forced to suffer the torments of the damned – persecutory guilt inflicted by the sadistic internal persecutor and saboteur, the superego. It is the author’s view that in human history the damage done by id-driven psychopaths amounts to nothing compared to that brought about by superego-driven ideologists. Freud and subsequent psychoanalysis has largely whitewashed the superego while demonizing the id, the alleged “beast” in man, when in reality animals are seldom beastly, at least not in the ways humans often are. While aware of its destructiveness in the clinical realm, psychoanalysts have largely ignored the ideologies of domination – the sexism, racism, heterosexism, classism and childism – that are internalized from unconscionable societies into the unconscionable superego. In the penultimate chapter, drawing on the work of Hannah Arendt, Terry Eagleton and others, Carveth critically reviews the concepts of psychopathy and evil. In the final chapter, he advocates a de-mythologizing, de-literalizing or deconstructive approach to the Bible as metaphor, but one that escapes Freud’s derogation of this approach by acknowledging, with Hegel at his most honest, that its result is a humanistic ethic no longer to be equated with religion.

<sup>84</sup> Inner child therapy was developed by John Bradshaw, 1990, and others, loosely building on both Freudian and Jungian psychoanalysis. Recovery work invites into emotionally charged “regression” for an active “reparenting” process to heal from being “stuck at various earlier developmental stages” when one’s “necessary narcissistic needs were not lovingly met,” Ivy, 1993, p. 236.

<sup>85</sup> See for a discussion of the significance of rationality versus emotions my reflections on emotion and conflict in Lindner, 2009a, 2014c.

<sup>86</sup> “Word of the Year 2016 Is...,” Oxford Dictionaries, <https://en.oxforddictionaries.com/word-of-the-year/word-of-the-year-2016>.

<sup>87</sup> Sundararajan, 2015, p. 168. See also Pritzker, 2016. See the network of indigenous psychologists that Louise Sundararajan gathers, of which I have the honor of being a member. See also Sundararajan, 2012. See a scathing critic of the journey of the field of indigenous psychology by Gustav Jahoda, 2016. Jahoda’s article has elicited efforts to rebut his negative evaluation, see, among others, Marsella, 2009, and more on www.indigenouspsych.org/Discussion/forum/Archives/PDF/Jahoda%20on%20IP%20and%20rebuttals.pdf.

<sup>88</sup> Bell, 2008.

<sup>89</sup> Hsuan-Ying Huang, 2014, explains that private for-profit companies offer expensive two to seven days psychological counseling courses promising that participants will learn to master the methods of self-adjustment, “by which you can enhance your quality of life, increase your working efficiency, educate your children more successfully and better handle your family relationships,” Huang, 2014, p. 195. It is part of a multibillion dollar industry of the self in China that feeds on a frantic search for greater health and happiness through individual self-cultivation.

<sup>90</sup> Kipnis, 2012, p. 7.

<sup>91</sup> Yang, 2015, p. 6.

<sup>92</sup> Kuan, 2015, p. 98–99.

<sup>93</sup> Buber, 1923/1937.

<sup>94</sup> Miller, 2008a. “True self” and “false self” are concepts introduced into psychoanalysis in 1960 by Donald Winnicott, 1965.

<sup>95</sup> Dower, 1999, p. 157.

<sup>96</sup> Ibid.

<sup>97</sup> Grothe, 2017, p. 212. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this quote.

<sup>98</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>99</sup> Psychologist Carol Dweck, 1999, found that the challenges of life can be approached with an ego-oriented performance orientation or a task-oriented learning-mastery orientation, or as Linda Hartling would express it, a fixed mindset versus a growth mindset. Those with an ego orientation entertain an implicit entity theory of intelligence, they regard intelligence as fixed and try to look smart and avoid mistakes. Others think that intelligence is malleable, they adhere to an incremental theory of intelligence, and have an intrinsic motivation to achieve mastery in a task, desire to learn new things, even if they might get confused, make mistakes, and not look smart. Students with mastery goals are basically more successful. See also Dweck, 2007.

Psychologist David Yeager, et al., 2013, examined how holding a fixed mindset versus holding a growth mindset influenced interpretations of other people's hostile intent. In a meta-analytic study of eight independent samples that included 1,128 students, Yeager and his colleagues found that a fixed mindset predicted hostile attributions equally for males and females, and for students from communities with higher and lower levels of violence. "In a following study, Yeager found that by experimentally changing implicit theories to a more incremental growth mindset substantially reduced attributions of hostile intent in both urban and suburban schools. In a final study, Yeager found that a short-term intervention (two class sessions) could result in more benign intent attributions over an eight-month school year," in Hartling and Lindner, forthcoming.

<sup>100</sup> Dweck, 2007, or Yeager, et al., 2013.

<sup>101</sup> "Islamic State 'Demolishes' Ancient Hatra Site in Iraq," BBC News, March 7, 2015, www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-31779484.

<sup>102</sup> "Who You Really Are: DNA Ancestry Tests May Be Marketed as the Key to Your Genetic Fate, but the Truth Is That a Myriad of Environmental Factors Influence the Way Your DNA Is Expressed and Inherited," by Robert Pollack and Patricia Williams, Columbia University, www.columbia.edu/cu/biology/faculty-data/robert-pollack/resources/2014%20GeneWatch.pdf:

...epigenetic reflections of socialized life are, for better and for worse, sometimes passed on to the next generation as well, we now have a data-driven mechanism to explain why, for example, kindness can repair the damage done by cruelty, both in one generation and through the generations. We have, in other words, good science to document how governments, corporations, oligarchies, syndicates or other formations can propagate – or not – the fate of millions: whether by maintenance of civil society or by acts of outright war; whether by comprehensive education or by refusing to fund reparative safety-nets of food and shelter for all young children; whether by ethics of fairness and respect or by the perpetuation of racial hatred or gendered indignity. Regardless of epigenetic burden, we now understand that social structure has a significant role in the remediation of even organic trauma. Human development assures that with regard to the most interesting aspects of a person's identity – those that attach to hope – DNA versions are not at all as important as the luck of life with others. This luck is not encoded, but it is imposed by others as if it were.

See also "Interplay Between Social Experiences and the Genome: Epigenetic Consequences for Behavior," by Frances A. Champagne, Department of Psychology, Columbia University, New York, USA, <http://champagnelab.psych.columbia.edu/docs/Adv%20Genetics%202012.pdf>.

<sup>103</sup> Lindner, 2009a, Lindner, 2014c, Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>104</sup> Huntington, 1996.

<sup>105</sup> "UN Security Council Seats Taken by Arms Exporters," by Lyndal Rowlands, Inter Press Service (IPS), November 28, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/11/un-security-council-seats-taken-by-arms-exporters/:

Just two permanent members, the United States with 33 percent and Russia with 25 percent, accounted for 58 percent of total global arms exports in 2015, according to SIPRI data. China and France take up third and fourth place with much smaller shares of 5.9 percent and 5.6 percent respectively.

<sup>106</sup> Neuro-warfare would include electromagnetic warfare (electric field, magnetic field, microwaves), acoustic warfare (infrasound, ultrasound), and light warfare (ultraviolet, flashing, strobe), see Marsella, 2012. See also, among others, Phillips, et al., 2006:

This research explores the current capabilities of the US military to use electromagnetic (EMF) devices to harass, intimidate, and kill individuals and the continuing possibilities of violations of human rights by the testing and deployment of these weapons. To establish historical precedent in the US for such acts, we document long-term human rights and freedom of thought violations by US military/intelligence organizations. Additionally, we explore contemporary evidence of on-going government research in EMF weapons technologies and examine the potentialities of continuing human rights abuses.

<sup>107</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 48.

<sup>108</sup> Pritzker, 2016, p. 167.

<sup>109</sup> Pieterse, 2001, Abstract. I thank Jan for the very enriching meeting we had in Paris on September 23, 2002.

<sup>110</sup> Pieterse, 2001, Abstract.

<sup>111</sup> Anthony Marsella, in a personal communication on January 25, 2014. Anthony Marsella is a past president of Psychologists for Social Responsibility, emeritus professor of psychology at the University of Hawaii, and past director of the World Health Organization Psychiatric Research Center in Honolulu. He is known nationally and internationally as a pioneer figure in the study of culture and psychopathology who has challenged the ethnocentrism and racial biases of many assumptions, theories, and practices in psychology and psychiatry. In more recent years, he has been writing and lecturing on peace and social justice. He has published 15 edited books, and more than 250 articles, chapters, book reviews, and popular pieces. It is a privilege to have Anthony Marsella as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>112</sup> Leighton, 1959.

<sup>113</sup> Mark Granovetter did research on whether people find jobs through strong or weak social ties. Granovetter builds on Tönnies' differentiation of Gemeinschaft versus Gesellschaft, see Tönnies, 1887/1955, and Granovetter, 1973, 2002.

<sup>114</sup> According to Francis Hsu, different relationships are privileged in different societies: In China, the dominant dyad is father-son, in India mother-son, in Africa siblings. In Japan it is father-son, with mother-son as subdominant dyad, in America husband-wife. See Hsu, 1948, 1953, 1963, Hsu, 1965, Marsella, et al., 1985. I thank Jacqueline Howell Wasilewski for being the first to make me aware of Hsu's concept of dominant dyads.

<sup>115</sup> Marsella, 2012.

<sup>116</sup> Lee, 1995.

<sup>117</sup> See the network of indigenous psychologists that Louise Sundararajan gathers, of which I have the honor of being a member. See also Sundararajan, 2012, 2015, or Pritzker, 2016. See a scathing critic of the journey of the field of indigenous psychology by Gustav Jahoda, 2016. Jahoda's article has elicited efforts to rebut his negative evaluation, see, among others, Marsella, 2009, and more on www.indigenousspsych.org/Discussion/forum/Archives/PDF/Jahoda%20on%20IP%20and%20rebuttals.pdf.

<sup>118</sup> Gergen, et al., 1996.

<sup>119</sup> Nagel, 1986.

<sup>120</sup> Taylor in Lowman, 2013, pp. 52–53.

<sup>121</sup> Lindner, 2007d.

<sup>122</sup> Gergen, et al., 1996, quoted in Marsella, 2015. Marsella warns that North American psychology is wrongly driven by a commitment to the following:

1. Individuality – The individual is the focus of behavior. Determinants of behavior reside in the individual's brain/mind, and interventions must be at this level rather than the broader societal context.
2. Reductionism – Small, tangible units of study that yield well to controlled experimentation are favored.
3. Experiment-based Empiricism – An emphasis on experiments with controls and experiment group comparisons and uses of ANOVA analyses that often account for 5–10 percent of the variance, and this is considered “science.” Lab studies are often favored over field studies.
4. Scientism – The belief that methods of the physical sciences can be applied similarly to social and behavioral phenomena, which results in spurious methods and conclusions that are inappropriate to the subject under study or that avoid studying certain subjects.
5. Quantification/Measurement – “If something exists, it can be measured, said Edward Thorndike. Unless something under study can be quantified, it is not acceptable for study. This, of course, leads to “operationalism” as the standard for assessing concepts.
6. Materialism – Favors variables for study that have a tangible existence rather than higher order constructs – I can see it and touch it under a microscope.
7. Male Dominance – Years of male dominance favors particular topics, methods, and populations for study – remember “involutional melancholia,” the psychiatric disease of middle-aged women, or the labeling of transgender as an illness. While this is changing, we must be alert to its legacy.
8. “Objectivity” – Assumption that we can identify and understand immutable aspects of reality in a detached way, unbiased by human senses and knowledge.
9. Nomothetic Laws – Search for generalized principles and “laws” that apply to widespread and diverse situations and populations because of an identification and admiration for the physical sciences.

10. Rationality – Presumes a linear, cause-effect, logical, material understanding of phenomena and prizes this approach in offering and accepting arguments and data generation.

<sup>123</sup> Lindner, 2009f.

<sup>124</sup> Neuroendocrinologist Robert Sapolsky, 2017, wrote about the context-dependency of behavior. Social psychologist, psychoanalyst, sociologist, and humanistic philosopher Erich Fromm, 1963, wrote an essay titled War within Man: A Psychological Enquiry into the Roots of Destructiveness, followed by commentaries by Jerome Frank, Paul Tillich, Hans Morgenthau, Roy Menninger, Pitirim Sorokin, and Thomas Merton. Fromm's essay first discusses whether human nature is good or evil. Fromm describes two basic personality types, the biophile and necrophile. The necrophile is a perverted personality attracted to death, while the biophile is an optimistic personality attracted to life. Sigmund Freud developed a similar concept, that of the life instinct Eros and the death instinct Thanatos. Yet, like me, Fromm hypothesizes that these are not innate personality traits but that the necrophile is a secondary potentiality, when the primary, life-favoring potentialities cannot develop, either due to being hindered or failing. When a child is born into a social context of love, security, justice, and freedom, it will be able to unfold the biophilic personality. The last part of the essay warns that the necrophilous attraction to death, war, and destruction is intensified through being mechanized in modern industrial society.

<sup>125</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

Chapter 4

<sup>1</sup> Verseuil, 1946.

<sup>2</sup> Nye, 2004.

<sup>3</sup> See more on the notion of misrecognition in Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 5 and 8 of the book Emotion and Conflict, pp. 129–137. Concepts such as méconnaissance (misrecognition) and naturalization were used by Roland Barthes, Pierre Bourdieu, and Michel Foucault (among others). They address how power structures use the concealed nature of habitus to manipulate not just overtly but covertly and stealthily, making it much more difficult to rid oneself of these manipulations.

<sup>4</sup> Eagleton, 1991, p. 111. Theorist and politician Antonio Gramsci uses the phrase hegemony for when a ruling class manipulates society to the point that elite views become the reigning Weltanschauung. While authoritarian rule is openly dominating, cultural hegemony works through cooption.

<sup>5</sup> See “The Ties That Bind Captive to Captor,” by Frank M. Ochberg, Los Angeles Times, April 8, 2005, <http://articles.latimes.com/2005/apr/08/opinion/oe-ochberg8>. Frank M. Ochberg is co-founder of the National Center for Critical Incident Analysis and former associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health. See the book that one of the hostages, Kristin Enmark, 2015, wrote more than four decades after the event. Read about an interview with her: “Hun er opphavet til begrepet stockholmsyndromet,” by Odvin Aune, NRK, September 18, 2015, www.nrk.no/kultur/hun-er-opphavet-til-begrepet-stockholmsyndromet-1.12561167. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation. See also Lindner, 2009a, p. 133.

<sup>6</sup> Carveth, 2013.

<sup>7</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 199.

<sup>8</sup> Roman law was introduced for this purpose. See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>9</sup> The contact hypothesis, or the hope that contact will foster friendship, was proposed by Gordon Allport, 1954, suggesting that relations between groups can be improved through positive intergroup contact. However, this hypothesis proved not to work in all cases, only under certain conditions, namely, the following four: equal status, cooperation, common goals, institutional support. The hypothesis is valid at the aggregate level, though, as shown by a meta-analysis by Pettigrew and Tropp, 2006. Intergroup contact can also have “ironic” effects:

...there is mounting evidence that nurturing bonds of affection between the advantaged and the disadvantaged sometimes entrenches rather than disrupts wider patterns of discrimination. Notably, prejudice reduction interventions may have ironic effects on the political attitudes of the historically disadvantaged, decreasing their perceptions of injustice and willingness to engage in collective action to transform social inequalities,” Dixon, et al., 2012, Abstract.

I thank Sigrun Marie Moss for making me aware of this research on the “ironic” effects of intergroup contact.

<sup>10</sup> See for social identity theory Tajfel and Turner, 1979, and for self-categorization theory Turner, et al., 1987.

<sup>11</sup> Kinnvall, 2004, p. 756. I thank Sigrun Marie Moss for making me aware of Kinnvall’s work.

<sup>12</sup> “I Know Why Poor Whites Chant Trump, Trump, Trump,” by Jonna Ivin, STIR, April 1, 2016, www.stirjournal.com/2016/04/01/i-know-why-poor-whites-chant-trump-trump-trump/. See also Thandeka, 1998.

<sup>13</sup> Fanon, 1952/1967. See also Midiohouan, 1991.

<sup>14</sup> Bourdieu and Passeron, 1990, p. 159.

<sup>15</sup> Thandeka, 1998.

<sup>16</sup> See Müller, 2016, for a discussion of how populists pit “ordinary people,” “decent people,” and “real people” against those who are neither ordinary nor decent, nor even real.

<sup>17</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>18</sup> Lindner, 2000h, or Lindner, 2000i, f, d, 2001g, or Lindner, 2001k, 2006d.

<sup>19</sup> If one searches for personal experiences of humiliation in the private life of Adolf Hitler, one of the most widely mentioned relevant experiences is that Hitler was rejected by the prestigious Vienna Academy of Fine Arts in 1907. Many other hypotheses have been considered, for example, that he suffered from the humiliation of having a micropenis. See Craigie and Mayo, 2015. Hitler was born, not in Germany, but in Austria, to a strong sense of humiliation among the Germans in Austria that their “fatherland,” namely, Germany, shamefully neglected them. Others, such as Marbach, et al., 2007, have suggested that Hitler simply suffered from psychosis. See also Langer, 1972, or Fromm, 1973. Fritz Redlich, 1999, however, rejected such an interpretation. Or did Hitler project his wish to save his mother from his father onto world politics? Psychotherapist George Victor, 1998, in searching for sources for Hitler’s antisemitism, suggested that his self-loathing and especially his hatred of Jews had their origin in the abuse that he suffered as a child at the hands of his father, who, as Hitler may have believed, had descended from Jews.

I personally find it interesting to consider the extreme contrast Hitler was exposed to in his relationship with his mother and his father. Indeed, it has been confirmed that Hitler had a brutal father and that his mother overprotected him. She had lost four of her six children, only Adolf and his sister Paula survived. He more than adored his mother. When she died, her personal physician Dr. Bloch reported that he had never seen anybody grieve as much as her son Adolf, see Kershaw, 1998, 2000. If his father had, or was thought of having, a Jewish background, and his father abused Adolf, combined with the fact that his mother idolized him and vice versa, also given the strong sense that Germany shamefully neglected them, Hitler’s mission could indeed have been to save his mother (Germans in Austria) from the abuse of his father (Germany + Jews). This would illuminate the astonishing fact that Hitler seemed satisfied with the German people perishing if they failed his expectations. Hitler reportedly said on November 27, 1941, to the Danish foreign minister Scavenius and the Croat foreign minister Lorkowitsch: “I am also here ice cold. If the German people are no longer strong enough and ready to sacrifice their own blood for their existence, then they must disappear and be destroyed by another, stronger power... I will not shed a tear for the German people,” translated by Lindner from the German original, Haffner, 1978, p. 139.

See also Hitler privat – Das Leben des Diktators, documentary film by Michael Kloft, 2010, which attempts to come closer to the personality of Adolf Hitler. This documentary asks: Who was Hitler privately, beyond him being a symbol of violence and inhumanity, fanatical racism and perverted nationalism, war and genocide, the incarnation of evil, a monster of history?

Psychiatrist Renato D. Alarcón and his colleagues observe that Hitler’s henchmen were tried at Nuremberg by victors who incinerated hundreds of thousands of civilians in Dresden, Tokyo, Nagasaki, and Hiroshima, and, to defeat Hitler, had cooperated with Josef Stalin, whose crimes had begun a decade earlier than Hitler’s and, unlike Hitler’s concentration camps, had long been well-known in the West. Alarcón, et al., 1998, ask the crucial question (excerpt from a draft, www.vakkur.com/hx/hit\_len\_stal.html):

So was Hitler suffering from a true personality disorder or was he simply the epitome of the evil of which his society of origin, including those who fought him, is capable? Or is the entire concept of personality disorder simply a medicalization of many behaviors and attitudes that most cultures traditionally label as evil?

Hitler privat – Das Leben des Diktators, www.zdf.de/dokumentation/zdfinfo-doku/hitler-privat-das-leben-des-diktators-100.html, or www.fernsehserien.de/hitler-privat/episodenguide/0/22470:

- Part 1: Der Künstler. See also Hamann, 1996, and Gortemaker, 2010.
- Part 2: Der Soldat.
- Part 3: Der “Führer.”
- Part 4: Der Kriegsherr.

<sup>20</sup> “Did WHCD [White House Correspondents’ Dinner] Humiliation Drive Trump to Run for President?” by Mark Joyella, Adweek, September 22, 2016, <http://adweek.it/2dnOeyF>:

In a new Frontline special airing next week, Donald Trump adviser Roger Stone says the most unlikely presidential campaign in modern times was born in 2011, at the White House Correspondents’ Dinner, when President Obama humiliated Trump with a withering series of jokes about Trump’s support of birtherism – and Trump himself. “I think that is the night he resolves to run for president,” Stone says. “I think he is kind of motivated by it. ‘Maybe I’ll just run. Maybe I’ll show them all.’”

In a preview of the Frontline report released Thursday, Trump supporter Omarosa Manigault says it’s Trump that will have the last laugh. “Every critic, every detractor, will have to bow down to President Trump. It’s everyone who’s ever doubted Donald, whoever disagreed, whoever challenged him. It is the ultimate revenge to become the most powerful man in the universe.”

I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See also President Obama Roasts Donald Trump at White House Correspondents’ Dinner! Video uploaded on April 30, 2011, at <https://youtu.be/k8TwRmX6zs4>

<sup>21</sup> “Trump: World Won’t Laugh Any More,” BBC News, www.bbc.com/news/av/world-us-canada-40128556/trump-world-won-t-laugh-any-more: “In explaining why he is pulling out of the Paris climate deal, President Trump says the world will no longer take advantage of the US.” I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of the attention this part of Trump’s argument received in the media outside of the U.S.

<sup>22</sup> Farrington, 1993. I thank Vidar Vambheim for making me aware of Farrington’s work, see Vambheim, 2016.

<sup>23</sup> See, among many other relevant publications, Sebag Montefiore, 2003, 2016.

<sup>24</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 14.

<sup>25</sup> Schattschneider, 1960, p. 36, see also Schattschneider, 1969. Neumann, 1942, Mills, 1956. See also Putnam, 1976.

<sup>26</sup> Neumann, 1942. See also Mills, 1956, Dye, et al., 2015.

<sup>27</sup> Fraenkel, 1941.

<sup>28</sup> Tunander, 2009, p. 56. I thank Kimberly Eriksen for making me aware of Tunander’s work. See also note 15 in the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>29</sup> Concepts such as méconnaissance (misrecognition) and naturalization were used by Roland Barthes, Pierre Bourdieu, and Michel Foucault (among others). They address how power structures use the concealed nature of habitus to manipulate not just overtly but covertly and stealthily, making it much more difficult to rid oneself of these manipulations.

<sup>30</sup> Pierre Bourdieu gave much thought to honor,<sup>30</sup> connecting it to the concept of méconnaissance (misrecognition). He describes honor as a game of challenge and counterchallenge. Bourdieu, 1977, pp. 11–12:

- to challenge a person is to accord him a certain dignity, for it connotes a recognition of equality
- to challenge a person incapable of responding is to dishonor oneself only a challenge coming from an equal deserves to be taken up.

<sup>31</sup> See more in the section “How the ‘art of domination’ was perfected in systems of ranked honor” in Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 5: How History and Culture Can Humiliate, in the book Emotion and Conflict, pp. 60–64.

<sup>32</sup> This was what influential author Ayn Rand decried. I have studied Ayn Rand, who came to America from Russia, and, in her interviews, praises the 1917 February Revolution in Russia and the spirit of liberation from oppression that carried it. See, for instance, the Ayn Rand biography by Jennifer Burns, 2009. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing documentary material about Ayn Rand with me. See, among others, Love and Power, the first in a BBC2 documentary series by Adam Curtis, May 23, 2011, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b011k45f. It explores the idea that humans have been colonized by the machines they have built. “The New Age of Ayn Rand: How She Won over Trump and Silicon Valley,” by Jonathan Freedland, The Guardian, April 10, 2017, www.theguardian.com/books/2017/apr/10/new-age-ayn-rand-conquered-trump-white-house-silicon-valley?CMP=Share\_iOSApp\_Other. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See, furthermore, a review of the series “All Watched Over by Machines of Loving Grace,” by Sam Wollaston, The Guardian, May 23, 2011, www.guardian.co.uk/tv-and-radio/2011/may/23/review-machines-of-loving-grace. Read more in Chapter 4: When Scarcity and Environmental Degradation Become Systemic, in Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy, pp. 57–58:

Then came the October Revolution, which hijacked the process and coopted people back into oppression. It did so, among other methods, by abusing the argument of altruism and asking people to offer themselves to the state. This is why Ayn Rand came to reject altruism and highlight the virtue of uninhibited self-interest. And her philosophy became “mainstream” due to her influence on some of the most powerful shapers of frames for human endeavor on the globe, including people like Alan Greenspan. Clearly, Ayn Rand was a highly intelligent woman. When she speaks, she seems to replay her resistance to a painfully oppressive mother, something that might have made her somewhat defensive, hard, even arrogant, and opposed to and disdainful not just of oppression, but also of warmth and solidarity. Her arrogance may have been misperceived as mastery by her followers. When “mainstreamed,” this misperception might have helped lend legitimacy to coldness throughout society.

<sup>33</sup> The phrase “possessive individualism” was the best-known contribution to political philosophy by Crawford Brough Macpherson, 1962 (1911 – 1987). The theory of “possessive individualism” describes an individual who conceives of herself as the sole proprietor of his or her skills and owes nothing to society.

See also Lakoff, 2006b, asking Whose Freedom? The description of his book with the same title:

Since September 11, 2001, the Bush administration has relentlessly invoked the word “freedom.” Al-Qaeda attacked us because “they hate our freedom.” The U.S. can strike preemptively because “freedom is on the march.” Social security should be privatized in order to protect individual freedoms. The 2005 presidential inaugural speech was a kind of crescendo: the words “freedom,” “free,” and “liberty,” were used forty-nine times in President Bush’s twenty-minute speech.

In Whose Freedom?, Lakoff, 2006b, surveys the political landscape and offers an essential map of the Republican battle plan that has captured the hearts and minds of Americans – and shows how progressives can fight to reinvigorate this most beloved of American political ideas.

See also note 211 in the Introduction.

<sup>34</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more pressing and widely discussed. See Lindner, 2012d. Already when I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson’s and Kate Pickett’s work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk. Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Stiglitz, 2012, Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality.

<sup>35</sup> Robinson, 2017. See also Rothkopf, 2008, or Jakobs, 2016.

<sup>36</sup> Foucault, 1979, 1991, Foucault and Gordon, 1980. See also Lutz and Abu-Lughod, 1990, Rancière, 2004, Fierke, 2004 or Barnett and Raymond, 2005, and “Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Four,” video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 8, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, http://youtu.be/pwDiTMUpJ\_Q. See the text also on www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/Richards04EarlyFoucaultPartFour8May2013.pdf. Richards, et al., 2015a, is the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>37</sup> Easterly, 2013, recommended in “Communitarian Observations: The Moon, Facebook, and Iraq,” by Amitai Etzioni, Institute for Communitarian Policy Studies, July 30, 2014.

<sup>38</sup> Moss, 2013, recommended in “Communitarian Observations: The Moon, Facebook, and Iraq,” by Amitai Etzioni, Institute for Communitarian Policy Studies, July 30, 2014, where he refers to his article “Facebook’s Experiment: Trivial Pursuit,” by Amitai Etzioni, Huffington Post, July 8, 2014, www.huffingtonpost.com/amitai-etzioni/facebook-experiment-triv\_b\_5567519.html:

If you need reminding about how this is done, regularly, while people fuss about the trivial experiment of Facebook, turn to the pages of a very carefully researched, richly documented study by Michael Moss called Salt Sugar Fat: How the Food Giants Hooked Us. The book reveals the ways in which various major corporations that market foods have spent scores of millions to study our urges and to design, package, and advertise foods that are bad for us but good for corporate profits. Sugar, salt, and fats are laced into products that seem to include none because they make them more addictive (e.g. salt in chocolate). Labels on products are carefully framed so that the information is read in ways that are misleading (e.g. instead of telling us the number of calories in the box, it tells us the number per serving). Small items are put into large boxes (e.g. toys) to make them seem more valuable. Boxes are given bright colors because studies show these colors illicit impulse buying. Lobbying is used to bend regulations in favor of the industries rather than customers (e.g. the definition of “lean” meat has been changed so meat that used to be considered fat is now characterized as lean).

<sup>39</sup> “Spirit and Place” is an essay by David Tacey based on Chapter 4: Spirit and Place, in David Tacey, 2000. It is republished in “Food for the Journey,” E News, Number 84, April 30, 2015. We read there about contemplation:

Aboriginal spirituality, then, is a spirituality of deep seeing, deep listening, bush receptivity. Miriam-Rose Ungunmerr describes this, using a word from Ngangikurungkurr language, as dadirri, and says this “is something like what you [white people] call ‘contemplation.’” The celebrant has to conjure up the right mood, perform a kind of trick on the separate self, so that it will not create a barrier between the celebrant and the spirit of the land. This kind of receptive spirituality is very hard for us Westerners to achieve, because we come from a “conquering” consciousness which forever strives to impose our own mental and psychological life upon the reality of the world. Aboriginal spirituality does not impose a metaphysical machinery upon the landscape; it sees through the landscape to the mythic forms and spirits behind it.

I thank Hilarie Roseman for sharing this essay with me, and for her ongoing support for Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

See also philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>40</sup> Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001.

<sup>41</sup> Grossman, 2006. Mielants, 2007.

<sup>42</sup> Becker and Wößmann, 2007. The centuries-old Judaic rule that male Jews had to read the Torah in the synagogue, and to teach it to their sons, may account for Jewish economic prosperity as merchants,<sup>42</sup> and, similarly, Protestant regions economic progressiveness relative to Catholic regions may stem from higher literacy in Protestant regions, encouraged by Martin Luther’s emphasis on everyone reading the Gospel.

<sup>43</sup> McCloskey, 2006–2016.

<sup>44</sup> Fiske, 2004. See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article.

Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

<sup>45</sup> Scheler, 1914–1916/1957. Scheler states that the human being, before she can be an ens cogitans (a “thinking being”) or an ens volens (a “volitional being”), is an ens amans, a loving being.

<sup>46</sup> Ferdinand Tönnies (1855 – 1936) was a major contributor to sociological theory and field studies. Tönnies is best known for his distinction between two types of social groups – Gemeinschaft and Gesellschaft (Tönnies, 1887/1955). He explains that community is based on family life, rests on harmony, and is developed and ennobled by folkways, morals, and religion, with morality being an expression of religious beliefs and forces, intertwined with family spirit and folkways.

<sup>47</sup> Szirtes, 2012, p. 139.

<sup>48</sup> Sundararajan, 2012.

<sup>49</sup> Graeber, 2011.

<sup>50</sup> In a recent article, social philosopher Nancy Fraser, 2014, explores the strengths and weaknesses of the classic 1944 book The Great Transformation by Karl Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001, where he traced the roots of capitalist crisis to efforts to create “self-regulating markets” in land, labor and money. Fraser, 2014, Abstract:

The effect was to turn those three fundamental bases of social life into “fictitious commodities.” The inevitable result, Polanyi claimed, was to despoil nature, rupture communities and destroy livelihoods. This diagnosis has strong echoes in the twenty-first century: witness the burgeoning markets in carbon emissions and biotechnology in child-care, schooling and the care of the old and in financial derivatives. In this situation, Polanyi’s idea of fictitious commodification affords a promising basis for an integrated structural analysis that connects three dimensions of the present crisis: the ecological, the social and the financial.

I thank Mai-Bente Bonnevie for reminding me of Fraser’s work in this context!

<sup>51</sup> “How the Internet Is Transforming from a Tool of Liberation to One of Oppression,” by Astra Taylor, Huffington Post, June 5, 2014, www.huffingtonpost.com/astra-taylor/internet-oppression-liberation\_b\_5449838.html.

<sup>52</sup> Sugarman, et al., 2015, p. 113. Sundararajan quotes Sugarman as saying that when rationality of the economic order prevails over that of democracy, we have neoliberalism, or, as Solovey and Cravens, 2012, would say, we have capitalistic democracy.

<sup>53</sup> Standing, 2011. I thank David Calderoni in São Paulo for introducing me to Guy Standing’s work in 2012. It is a privilege to have David Calderoni as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>54</sup> Yogi Hendlin in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Struggle for Meaningful Work,” January 17, 2017, in response to Klitgaard, 2017. Agamben, 1995/1998.

<sup>55</sup> Richards, 2016a. See also historian Philipp Ther, 2014/2016, p. x, and his summary of the main pillars of neoliberal ideology:

Blind belief in the market as an adjudicator in almost all human affairs, irrational reliance on the rationality of market participants, disdain for the state as expressed in the myth of “big government,” and the uniform application of the economic recipes of the Washington Consensus.

See also “Is Europe Disintegrating?” by Timothy Garton Ash, The New York Review of Books, January 19, 2017, www.nybooks.com/articles/2017/01/19/is-europe-disintegrating/. I thank Elenor Richter-Lyonette for making me aware of this article.

<sup>56</sup> Piketty, 2013/2014.

<sup>57</sup> See, among others, Barth and Moene, 2015. See also Lerner, 1980.

<sup>58</sup> See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also Jakobsen, 2017.

<sup>59</sup> Lindner, 2009a, p. 85.

<sup>60</sup> “The Mission Creep of Dignity: Dignity Has Less to Do with Autonomy or Independence Than with Intrinsic Worth and the Ability to Flourish,” by Mark Regnerus, MercatorNet, January 20, 2015, www.mercatornet.com/articles/view/the\_mission\_creep\_of\_dignity. I thank Hilarie Roseman for making me aware of this article.

<sup>61</sup> Dignity 2.0 might have started earlier than Regnerus suggests, already in 1948, when political rights first were emphasized. Western-liberal political philosophy sees the forms of dignity that can be legally respected and protected by a state as the right to self-determination, autonomy, and agency (Rosen, 2012).

<sup>62</sup> Smith, 2010.

<sup>63</sup> Archer, 2011. See also Rosen, 2012.

<sup>64</sup> See also Duffy and Gambatese, 1999.

<sup>65</sup> See also McCrudden, 2013, and his analysis of Siegel, 2012, where she discusses the use of dignity terminology by the Catholic Church in relation to abortion and same-sex marriage, where she differentiates “dignity as autonomy,” from “dignity as equality,” and “dignity as life.” McCrudden rejects any monolithic representation of Catholic thought and highlights that there “is an intense discussion currently occurring within the community of Catholic theologians and within communities of Catholics more generally about human rights, the role of women, and gay rights, with a wide variety of different viewpoints being expressed and debated.”

I also thank Francisco Gomes de Matos for sending me “Human Dignity is the Right of All,” by Fr. Shay Cullen, The People’s Recovery Empowerment and Development Assistance (PREDA) Foundation, November 4, 2016, www.preda.org/fr-shays-articles/human-dignity-is-the-right-of-all/.

<sup>66</sup> Smith, 1991.

<sup>67</sup> See the work of international law expert Alfred Verdross (1890–1980), who, in his legal philosophy, drew on the common good purpose of the state laid out by Augustine of Hippo and Thomas Aquinas, see, among others Verdross and Gorby, 1979, Verdross and Simma, 1984.

<sup>68</sup> Bischöfliches Hilfswerk MISEREOR, 2015, and Reder, et al., 2015.

<sup>69</sup> Karlberg, 2013. The concept of dignity-as-autonomy is consistent with the social contest frame of dignity:

When human nature is conceived largely in terms of self-interested motives playing out within competitive social arenas, then the autonomy of individuals and groups to pursue their own interests, within a set of rules that apply equally to all, takes on paramount importance

<sup>70</sup> “How Everyone Can Win,” Bahá’í World News Service, Bahá’í International Community, May 10, 2005, <http://news.bahai.org/story/370>.

<sup>71</sup> Karlberg, 2013, p. 12.

<sup>72</sup> Ibid.

<sup>73</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000. Social scientists Paul H. Ray and Sherry Ruth Anderson, through their surveys, identified three main cultural trends. First, the moderns, the cultural movement that started about 500 years ago and that endorses the “realist” worldview of either big business, big government, or big media, or past socialist, communist, or fascist movements. Then, the first countermovement against the moderns are the traditionals, the religious right and rural populations. The most recent countermovement are the cultural creatives, who value strong ecological sustainability for the planet, support women’s issues, personal growth, authenticity, and are wary of big business. The cultural creatives movement is currently flowing together from two branches that both started out around 1960 and initially antagonized each other, namely, the consciousness movement, an inward-oriented movement, focusing on the inner state of the psyche, and the social movement, an outward-oriented movement, focusing on action for peace in the streets. When Ray and Anderson published their work in 2000, in the United States, traditionals comprised about 24 to 26 percent of the adult population (approximately 48 million people), moderns about 47 to 49 percent (approximately 95 million), and cultural creatives are about 26 to 28 percent (approximately 50 million). In the European Union, the cultural creatives were about 30 to 35 percent of the adult population. I thank Steve Halls for giving me Ray and Anderson’s book in Osaka, Japan, in 2004, when he was leaving his post as director of International Environmental Technology Centre (IETC) in Osaka and cleared his desk.

<sup>74</sup> Taylor, 1989, Heelas, 1996, 2008, Wilce, 2009. This trend is now being introduced from the West, for instance, to China, see Pritzker, 2016, p. 152: “Inner child workshops in China can be said to function in much the same way. Indeed, salons geared towards the inner child in this Beijing center consist of adaptations of exercises developed by a European psychologist who leads longer inner child workshops, variably focused on ‘transforming emotions,’ ‘transforming beliefs,’ and ‘meeting true self,’ when he is in town.” “Emotion pedagogies” are taught, which means teaching the self “as a reflexive object to be cultivated and improved through voluntary effort under expert guidance,” Wilce and Fenigsen, 2016, p. 89.

<sup>75</sup> “The Torture Colony,” by Bruce Falconer, The American Scholar, Essays – Autumn 2008, September 1, 2008, <https://theamericanscholar.org/the-torture-colony/>. In a remote part of Chile, an German evangelist cult leader built a utopia community whose members helped the Pinochet regime torture and kill dissidents. When I was in Chile in 2012, due to time pressure, I failed realizing my plan to visit this community to attempt getting a sense of how such indignity was possible under the banner of dignity. See also Fröhling, 2012.

<sup>76</sup> Kirk Schneider, 2004, writes in the Introduction to his book on the “rediscovery of awe”: “The starting point of consciousness is awe. We humans first experience the world (cosmos) as overwhelming. From the moment we are aware, we are aware of our meagerness. From the moment we reflect on the world, we sense how hopeless, helpless, and vulnerable we are. And yet, close on the heels of this shuddering despair is a riveting sense of possibility.”

<sup>77</sup> “Gandhi’s Strategy for Success – Use More than One Strategy,” by Mark Engler and Paul Engler, Waging Nonviolence, March 17, 2017, <http://wagingnonviolence.org/feature/gandhi-strategy-success/>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>78</sup> Kant, 1784.

<sup>79</sup> Adorno and Horkheimer, 1944/2002, p. 1. See a concise summary of Adorno’s work in the Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy, first published May 5, 2003, with substantive revision October 10, 2011, <http://plato.stanford.edu/entries/adorno/>.

<sup>80</sup> Adorno and Horkheimer, 1944/2002, p. 1.

<sup>81</sup> Dialectic of Enlightenment by Adorno and Horkheimer, 1944/2002, German original Dialektik der Aufklärung: Philosophische Fragmente, 1944/1947; Madness and Civilization by Foucault, 1961/2006, French original Histoire de la folie à l’âge classique – Folie et déraison, 1961; and “What is Enlightenment?” by Foucault, 1984.

<sup>82</sup> Held, 1980.

<sup>83</sup> Habermas, 1983.

<sup>84</sup> Dialektik der Aufklärung is a collection of essays by Max Horkheimer und Theodor Adorno that is regarded as one of the fundamental works on the critical theory of the Frankfurt School, first published in 1944. See the English translation, Dialectic of Enlightenment, Adorno and Horkheimer, 1944/2002.

<sup>85</sup> Habermas and Dews, 1992, p. 187, as quoted in Outhwaite, 1994.

<sup>86</sup> Habermas, 1983.

<sup>87</sup> See, among others, Wilkerson and Paris, 2001. First-generational critical theorists of the Frankfurt School were followed by a second generation, such as Jürgen Habermas. Third generation critical theories incorporate postmodernism, poststructuralism, social constructionism, and neopragmatism. While the sociology of culture regards factors outside of culture as independent variable, such as economical and political interests, impacting on culture, cultural sociology sees ideas and symbolic processes as independent impacts on social institutions, on politics, and on culture itself, see Alexander, 1995, or for a recent publication, Alexander, et al., 2012. Culture is no longer identified with a single concept, but include both social sciences and humanities, see Bennett and Frow, 2008.

<sup>88</sup> Collins, 1990.

<sup>89</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 25.

<sup>90</sup> Bauman, 1992, wrote on p. x–xi:

...the world of nature ... had to be beheaded and deprived of autonomous will and power of resistance... The world was an object of willed action: a raw material in the work guided and given form by human designs... Left to itself, the world had no meaning. It was solely the human design that injected it with a sense of purpose. So the earth became a repository of ores and other “natural resources,” wood turned into timber and water – depending on circumstances – into an energy source, waterway or the solvent of waste.

<sup>91</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 25.

<sup>92</sup> Raskin, et al., 2002. See also Raskin, 2008, and Brangwyn and Hopkins, 2008.

<sup>93</sup> BCE stands for “Before the Common Era,” and is equivalent to BC, which means “Before Christ.”

<sup>94</sup> Paul Raskin, in “When Hope and History Can Rhyme,” a personal communication to the Great Transition Initiative (GTI) Announcements List, December 30, 2011.

<sup>95</sup> Foucault, 1979, 1991, Foucault and Gordon, 1980. See also Lutz and Abu-Lughod, 1990, Rancière, 2004, Fierke, 2004 or Barnett and Raymond, 2005, and “Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Four,” video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 8, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, http://youtu.be/pwDiTMUpJ\_Q. See the text also on www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/Richards04EarlyFoucaultPartFour8May2013.pdf. Richards, et al., 2015a, is the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>96</sup> See, among others, Tripathi, 2011, 2013a, b. It is a privilege to have Deepak Tripathi as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>97</sup> Tripathi, 2013a, p. 80.

<sup>98</sup> Ibid.

<sup>99</sup> Said, 1978.

<sup>100</sup> Tripathi, 2013a, p. 80, Said, 2003, p. 206.

<sup>101</sup> Stephen James Purdey in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Economics for a Full World,” May 15, 2015. See also Purdey, 2010, and <http://stephenpurdey.com/>.

<sup>102</sup> Kurt Grimm in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Meaning, Religion, and a Great Transition,” November 24, 2014, in response to Karlberg, 2014.

<sup>103</sup> Lindner, 2008a.

<sup>104</sup> “2013 Nobel Prize in Economics: An Opportunity Missed,” by economist Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), October 16, 2013, www.gcgi.info/blog/475-2013-nobel-prize-in-economics-an-opportunity-missed:

Greed, selfishness, individualism and short-termism were conflated with freedom and democracy and elevated to the status of moral philosophy. The fatal flaws of this ideology have fueled the reckless risk-taking, greed and arrogance that led to Wall Street’s downfall and the loss of confidence in financial/banking sectors the world over.

It is a privilege to have Kamran Mofid as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>105</sup> Broken Treaties: An Oral History Tracing Oregon’s Native Population, documentary film by Eric Cain and John Rosman, OPB, March 20, 2017, www.opb.org/artsandlife/series/brokentreaties/oregon-tribes-oral-history-broken-treaties/. I thank Linda Hartling for showing me this documentary.

<sup>106</sup> Dunlap, et al., 2016. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of Dunlap's work.

<sup>107</sup> "The Year of Microterrorism," by Fareed Zakaria, Time, December 15, 2010, http://content.time.com/time/specials/packages/article/0,28804,2036683\_2037181\_2037470,00.html:

Another essay in Inspire catalogs what it cost to launch Operation Hemorrhage, the printer-cartridge attack: two phones, two printers and shipping costs. Total: $4,200. As the name implies, the webzine's purpose is largely to seduce and recruit young men in the West, especially America, to become operatives – that is, suicide bombers.

<sup>108</sup> "Terror on the Cheap: Financing Lone Actor and Small Cell Attacks," by Tom Keatinge, director of the Centre for Financial Crime and Security Studies (RUSI), RUSI Analysis, August 17, 2015, www.rusi.org/go.php?structureID=commentary&ref=C55D1C7FA31DB6#.Vdmz4JfICOY.

<sup>109</sup> "Why Drones Work: The Case for Washington's Weapon of Choice," by Daniel Byman, Foreign Affairs, July/August 2013, www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/somalia/2013-06-11/why-drones-work.

<sup>110</sup> "Terror from Above: Will ISIS Launch a Mass Drone Attack on a Stadium?" by Clive Irving, The Daily Beast, February 24, 2016, www.thedailybeast.com/articles/2016/02/24/will-isis-launch-a-mass-drone-attack-on-a-stadium.html.

Chapter 5

<sup>1</sup> BCE stands for "Before the Common Era," and is equivalent to BC, which means "Before Christ."

<sup>2</sup> Hafez, 2007b, Lankford, 2013.

<sup>3</sup> In 2017, the scientists in charge of the Doomsday Clock set the clock at just two and a half minutes from the apocalypse, considering that the Earth is now closer to oblivion than it has ever been since 1953, at the height of the nuclear confrontation between the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union. See <http://thebulletin.org/timeline>. See also the William J. Perry Project (www.wjperryproject.org) that was created by the former U.S. secretary of defense to work toward a world in which nuclear weapons are never used again.

<sup>4</sup> Porter, 2004.

<sup>5</sup> Forbes, 2008, p. xvi.

<sup>6</sup> Howard Richards in his upcoming book Economic Theory and Community Development.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

<sup>8</sup> Stille Reserven, 2016 film by Valentin Hitz., www.stillereserven.at/.

<sup>9</sup> Plato (circa 428 – 348 BCE) recommended justice, wisdom, courage, and moderation (or sophrosyne, a sense of limit, moral sanity, self-control, and moderation guided by true self-knowledge). Faith, hope, and love were added later, together constituting the seven cardinal virtues. Aristotle highlighted phronesis (Latin prudentia), or "practical wisdom." Norway is a place where moderation is still being highlighted today: philosopher Henrik Syse, 2009, has advised Norwegian banks on moderation. It is a privilege to have Henrik Syse as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>10</sup> When I was a psychology student in Hamburg, Germany (1974 – 1978), one of my professors was Friedemann Schulz von Thun, 2007, who has developed his thoughts on values by building on Aristotle, philosopher Nicolai Hartmann (1926), and psychologist Paul Helwig (1936).

<sup>11</sup> Willms, 2015.

<sup>12</sup> Taylor, 1955.

<sup>13</sup> Schivelbusch, 2001.

<sup>14</sup> Göring, 1943.

<sup>15</sup> Allyn, 1970.

<sup>16</sup> "Tredje verden-prosjektets død skaper et monster: Sekter uten grenser" (The Third World Project's Death Creates a Monster: Sects Without Borders), by Yohan Shanmugaratnam, Klassekampen, July 3, 2014, p. 2. Shanmugaratnam refers to Prashad, 2007. I thank Gerdelin Bodvin for making me aware of this article. It is a privilege to have Gerdelin Bodvin as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>17</sup> Prashad, 2007.

<sup>18</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 7: Humiliation Addiction, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict. See also the conceptualization of the post victim ethical exemption syndrome as an outgrowth of humiliation, by James Edward Jones, 2006. See, furthermore, Lewis Coser, 1956, and his differentiation of realistic and un-realistic conflict. First and foremost, conflict simply presupposes a relationship and social interaction. Not all hostile impulses lead to social conflict, and not every conflict is accompanied by aggressiveness. Realistic conflicts are those that arise from frustration of specific demands and are pursued toward the attainment of specific results. Other pathways than conflict are taken if available. Realistic conflict is thus a means, unlike non-realistic conflict, which is an end in itself. It is fed by one antagonist's need to release tension. The main point is the release of aggressiveness, and the target of hostility can easily change. Clearly, realistic conflicts can also be accompanied by distorted sentiments. Conflict may be motivated by both, realistic conflict issues and parties' affective investment in the conflict. See a summary of Coser, 1956, by the University of Colorado's Conflict Research Consortium Staff, at www.colorado.edu/conflict/peace/example/coser.htm.

<sup>19</sup> "Terrorism: Ultimate Weapon of the Global Elite," by Robert J. Burrowes, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 16, 2015, www.transcend.org/tms/2015/02/terrorism-ultimate-weapon-of-the-global-elite/.

<sup>20</sup> "Why Elites Love Drones," by Robert J. Burrowes, Human Wrongs Watch, May 25, 2015, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/05/25/why-elites-love-drones/>. See also Cockburn, 2015.

<sup>21</sup> Lindner, 2012e.

<sup>22</sup> "Rio+20 Ends in Failure, Corporate Capture," posted by Pratap Chatterjee, CorpWatch Blog, June 27, 2012, www.corpwatch.org/article.php?list=class&type=104&class=21.

<sup>23</sup> "Social Forum Calls for Fight Against Corruption, to Defend the Amazon," by Milagros Salazar, Inter Press Service (IPS), May 3, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/05/social-forum-calls-for-fight-against-corruption-to-defend-the-amazon/.

<sup>24</sup> Femke Wijdekop, in her reply to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth," August 5, 2016. Wijdekop, 2016, formed the basis for this discussion. See also the project "Defending Environmental Defenders," a collaborative project of IUCN Netherlands, Friends of the Earth and Global Witness, www.iucn.nl/en/recent/dutch-postcode-lottery-helps-improve-safety-of-environmental-defenders.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. The Ecological Law and Governance Association (ELGA), a new global network of scholars, practitioners and students of environmental law, has been officially launched in Siena, Italy, October 13-15, 2017. See www.elga.world/.

<sup>26</sup> The name "dry hair" comes from the observation that the hair of Africans is so tightly coiled that it does not get wet when bathing in the river.

<sup>27</sup> See <http://planetsave.com/2011/05/29/outrag-grows-over-new-brazilian-rain-forest-law/>.

<sup>28</sup> See "Agrarian Reform in Brazil," Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), 2000, first published on www.fao.org/righttofood/KC/downloads/vl/docs/AH264.pdf, now available at www.fian.org/fileadmin/media/publications/Agrarian-Reform-in-Brazil-2000.pdf.

<sup>29</sup> Daniel Baron and Manoela Souza worked closely with art educator Maria do Espírito Santo da Silva, who was killed together with José Claudio Ribeiro in rural New Ipixuna, www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/BaronCohenArtEducatorMariaSilva.pdf.

<sup>30</sup> On the April 27, 2013, Evelin Lindner wrote to Daniel Baron from the 2013 Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies conference "In Search for Dignity," in Stellenbosch, South Africa, April 24–27, 2013, where Dan spoke via Skype from the Amazon in Brazil:

Dear Dan, We still are deeply touched by your account of the dramatic events in Cabelo Seco, including the violence experienced by a young artist-leader from the Latinhas de Quintal (Backyard Drums). "We" includes the participants of the 2013 conference "In Search for Dignity," held April 24–27, 2013, in Stellenbosch, South Africa. Please receive our message of solidarity with the young Afro-Indigenous musicians of the band "Backward Drums." Their decision not to participate in the centenary celebrations funded by the multinational mining company Vale, presently threatening the Amazon, is a bold protest and gives us hope that more and more people will resist against further destruction of our world's most rich and vulnerable ecosystems.

At our conference we acknowledge and applaud the brave fight of these young people. We like to confirm our solidarity to them.

Signed: Participants of the 2013 Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies conference "In Search for Dignity."

<sup>31</sup> "Chile Must Stop Using Anti-Terrorism Law against Mapuche Indigenous Group – UN expert," United Nations News Centre, July 13, 2013, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=45538#.U-zr2GOTKNw.

<sup>32</sup> "UN Experts Urge Ethiopia to Halt Violent Crackdown," ECADF Ethiopian News, January 21, 2016, <http://ecadforum.com/2016/01/21/un-experts-urge-ethiopia-to-halt-violent-crackdown/>.

See also “UN Experts Urge Ethiopia to Stop Using Anti-terrorism Legislation to Curb Human Rights,” The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), September 18, 2014, www.ohchr.org/en/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=15056&LangID=E.

The protesters oppose the Government’s “Addis Ababa Integrated Development Master Plan” to expand the capital’s municipal boundaries, which would lead to deforestation, to mass evictions, and the seizure of agricultural land in the Oromia region. Many Oromos fear that the Tigray and Amhara intend to uproot them from their fertile lands under the pretense of development.

<sup>33</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more pressing and widely discussed. See Lindner, 2012d. Already when I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson’s and Kate Pickett’s work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk. Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Stiglitz, 2012, Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality.

<sup>34</sup> Sarotte, 2014.

<sup>35</sup> Die sieben Irrtümer der Deutschen Einheit: Glücksfall oder Milliardengrab? ZDF-History, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, September 19, 2010, www.zdf.de/zdf-history/die-sieben-irrtuemer-der-deutschen-einheit-5443030.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. In this documentary film Nikolaj Sergeevič Portugalov very calmly explains how the national humiliation of Russia through American arrogance is almost intolerable to him. American foreign minister James Baker and German chancellor Helmut Kohl had promised to refrain from moving NATO’s borders closer to Russia, and they broke that promise.

<sup>36</sup> Sarotte, 2014. Promises were given, for example, by United States Secretary of State James Baker.

<sup>37</sup> Zubok, 2014.

<sup>38</sup> “NATO Agrees Russian Deterrent but Avoids Cold War Footing,” by Robin Emmott and Phil Stewart, Brussels, Reuters, February 10, 2016, www.reuters.com/article/us-nato-russia-idUSKCN0VJ1J5.

<sup>39</sup> See the warnings of the German diplomat Wolfgang Ischinger: “The risk that warlike hostilities arise, is now greater than in the last 25 years” (Die Gefahr, dass sich kriegerische Kampfhandlungen ergeben, ist heute größer als in den letzten 25 Jahren), in Panorama, Das Erste, June 23, 2016, <http://daserste.ndr.de/panorama/Ischinger-2-fuer-panode,panorama6390.html>. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters. See also Haugevik, et al., 2015. See, furthermore, “NATO Mission Creep in Eastern Europe Fomenting Cold War II,” by Robert Bridge, RT (originally Russia Today), February 10, 2016, www.rt.com/op-edge/332059-nato-mission-creep-eastern-europe/. See also “How NATO Is Becoming a Threat to Europe,” by Harry Blain, Open Democracy, January 27, 2017, www.opendemocracy.net/can-europe-make-it/harry-blain/how-nato-is-becoming-threat-to-europe.

<sup>40</sup> “The Cool War,” by David Rothkopf, Foreign Policy, February 20, 2013, <http://foreignpolicy.com/2013/02/20/the-cool-war/>.

<sup>41</sup> Rödder, 2011. See also Geheimakte Einigung, ZDF History, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, September 27, 2015, www.zdf.de/zdf-history/zdf-history-5989332.html, <https://youtu.be/3YYcraBgNIg>. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>42</sup> Krone-Schmalz, 2007.

<sup>43</sup> “Solve the Ukraine Crisis Now,” by Jonathan Power, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF) PressInfo # 298, December 30, 2014, <http://blog.transnational.org/2014/12/a-way-out-of-the-ukrainian-imbroglio/>:

The late George Kennan, architect of Cold War containment, said that to expand NATO would result in “a new Cold War, probably ending in a hot one.” As I found in Moscow, during my visits in October and November, nuclear war doctrines are being dusted off by a regime which has no experience of how to deal with the art of nuclear brinkmanship. Zbigniew Brzezinski, a former presidential national security advisor, said earlier this month that Ukraine should have a policy of “non-involvement with NATO” – as Finland practices and did during all the years of the Cold War. Finland kept its geopolitical distance from the West while, at the same time, forging a strong democracy and close Western economic links. Whilst critical of what Russia has done, Brzezinski understands that Russia is in the process of trying to regain its own national pride after the shattering of the USSR. He is optimistic for the future. He believes that Putin now does realize that the Ukraine imbroglio should be solved without the use of force, although if it becomes apparent that he doesn't Ukraine should be provided with offensive weaponry. Henry Kissinger wrote earlier in the year that "the West must understand that, to Russia, Ukraine can never be just a foreign country. Russian history began with Kievan-Rus. The Russian religion spread from there. Ukraine has been part of Russia for centuries. The Russian Black Sea Fleet – Russia's means of projecting power in the Mediterranean – is based in Sevastopol, Crimea (with Ukraine's longtime agreement). Even such famed dissidents as Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn and Joseph Brodsky insisted that Ukraine was an integral part of Russia." He adds, "Ukraine should not join Nato." What good does it do for the US Congress to take the opposite tack? The Ukraine Freedom Support Act, as Jeffrey Tayler wrote last week in Foreign Policy, "is short on common sense and long on belligerent ultimatums and misstatements of recent history."

<sup>44</sup> "As Germany Marks Fall of the Berlin Wall, Gorbachev Warns of New Cold War," Philip Oltermann in Berlin, The Guardian, November 9, 2014, www.theguardian.com/world/2014/nov/08/gorbachev-cold-war-threat-berlin-wall-25th-anniversary. See also Gorbachev, 2014/2016.

<sup>45</sup> "Nobel Peace Winners Fear 'New, More Dangerous Cold War,'" by AFP, The Times of Israel, www.timesofisrael.com/nobel-peace-winners-fear-new-more-dangerous-cold-war/#ixzz3Lug5Sq00. See, furthermore, "New Nuclear Arms Race Underway," by Mark Blackwood and Paul Mitchell, World Socialist Web Site, December 6, 2014, www.wsws.org/en/articles/2014/12/06/nucl-d06.html:

According to Hugh Chalmers, an analyst at the London-based Royal United Services Institute, "All nuclear states are undergoing some form of nuclear modernization at the moment, or will very soon be going through that process... You can look around the world and see new missiles being developed, new submarines, new cruise missiles..."

<sup>46</sup> "Much Stronger Than During the First Cold War. Why Is NATO so Irrational?" by Jan Øberg, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF) PressInfo # 381, June 29, 2016, <http://blog.transnational.org/2016/06/tff-pressinfo-381-much-stronger-than-during-the-first-cold-war-why-is-nato-so-irrational/>.

<sup>47</sup> "Cold War Warnings 1998 – 2014," by Jan Øberg, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF), August 11, 2014, <http://blog.transnational.org/2014/08/tff-pressinfo-cold-war-warnings-1998-2014/>:

At the end of the Cold War, NATO/the West got everything it could ever wish – and without war. But it wanted more: keeping Russia down, making NATO bigger and "peace-making" as well as finding new enemies to keep its Military-Industrial-Media-Academic Complex (MIMAC) alive and well: Saddam, Milosevic, the Muslim world, terrorism and – now re-cycling – Russia...

<sup>48</sup> "How Did Western Europe Cope with a Much Stronger Soviet Union and Warsaw Pact?" by Jan Øberg, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF) Press Info # 385, TFF Series "The New Cold War" # 6, August 29, 2016, <http://blog.transnational.org/2016/08/tff-pressinfo-385/>.

<sup>49</sup> Quoted in "Trump and the Deep State," by John Scales Avery, Human Wrongs Watch, February 19, 2017, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2017/02/20/trump-and-the-deep-state/>, referring to Lofgren, 2016. See also "Gefährliche Propaganda," by Christoph Schult and Klaus Wiegrefe, Der Spiegel, 30/16, July 23, 2016, pp. 42-43, https://magazin.spiegel.de/SP/2016/30/145947650/?utm\_source=spon&utm\_campaign=centerpage: A network around NATO Commander Philip Breedlove tried to push for weapons supplies to Ukraine from the West with dubious information.

<sup>50</sup> Journalist Guy Mettan, 2017, describes the historical, religious, ideological, and geopolitical roots of the antipathy toward Russia in various European nations over thirteen centuries since Charlemagne competed with Byzantium for the title of heir to the Roman Empire.

<sup>51</sup> "Brisbane: A Show of Western Weakness," by Jan Øberg, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF) Press Info, www.icontact-archive.com/uY4CWN-9Ks3n5LBkjUdhzbfttz5G3il?w=4.

<sup>52</sup> "Truth to Power," by Noam Chomsky and David McNeill, Japan Times, February 22, 2014, www.japantimes.co.jp/news/2014/02/22/world/noam-chomsky-truth-to-power/:

Question to Chomsky: The recent tension over the Senkaku Islands has raised the threat of military conflict between China and Japan. Most commenters still think war is unlikely, given the enormous consequences and the deep finance and trade links that bind the two economies together. What's your view? Chomsky: The confrontations taking place are extremely hazardous. The same is true of China's declaration of an air defense identification zone in a contested region, and Washington's immediate violation of it. History has certainly taught us that playing with fire is not a wise course, particularly for states with an awesome capacity to destroy. Small incidents can rapidly escalate, overwhelming economic links...

Chomsky: Hardly. The U.S. is surrounding China with military bases, not conversely. U.S. strategic analysts describe a "classic security dilemma" in the region, as the U.S. and China each perceive the other's stance as a threat to their basic interests. The issue is control of the seas off China's coasts, not the Caribbean or the waters off California. For the U.S., global control is a "vital interest."

<sup>53</sup> "The Coming War on China," by John Pilger, Transcend Media Services, December 5, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/12/the-coming-war-on-china/:

Professor Ted Postol was scientific adviser to the head of US naval operations. An authority on nuclear weapons, he told me, "Everybody here wants to look like they're tough. See, I got to be tough... I'm not afraid of doing anything military, I'm not afraid of threatening; I'm a hairy-chested gorilla. And we have gotten into a state, the United States has gotten into a situation where there's a lot of saber-rattling, and it's really being orchestrated from the top." ... The designated chief propagandist is Admiral Harry Harris, the US military commander in Asia and the Pacific. "My responsibilities," he told The New York Times, "cover Bollywood to Hollywood, from polar bears to penguins." ... In Los Angeles in September, Harris declared he was "ready to confront a revanchist Russia and an assertive China... If we have to fight tonight, I don't want it to be a fair fight. If it's a knife fight, I want to bring a gun. If it's a gun fight, I want to bring in the artillery... and all our partners with their artillery." ... We – or many of us – remain in thrall to the US, which has intervened violently in the affairs of a third of the members of the United Nations, destroying governments, subverting elections, imposing blockades. In the past five years, the US has shipped deadly weapons to 96 countries, most of them poor. Dividing societies in order to control them is US policy, as the tragedies in Iraq and Syria demonstrate.

See also The Coming War on China, documentary film by John Pilger, 2017, <http://johnpilger.com/videos/trailer-the-coming-war-on-china>.

<sup>54</sup> Gefährliche Verbindungen: Donald Trump und seine Geschäftspartner, documentary film by Johannes Hano und Alexander Sarovic, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, May 24, 2017, www.heute.de/zdfzoom-dokumentation-gefaehrliche-verbindungen-trump-und-seine-geschaeftpartner-47232790.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>55</sup> "Global Tide of Nuclear Abolition Has Ebbed Causing Tensions Among Nations, Ban Warns," United Nations News Centre, April 28, 2015, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=50720#.VWLjtkbICOZ.

<sup>56</sup> Bailey, 2012, p. 6.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid.

<sup>58</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>59</sup> The project "Digitisation historical heritage (Sachsenspiegel online)" is a joint project of the Herzog August Bibliothek Wolfenbüttel and the University of Applied Sciences Braunschweig / Wolfenbüttel. See www.hab.de/en/home/research/projects/sachsenspiegel-online.html.

<sup>60</sup> "A Special Relationship: The United States Is Teaming Up with Al Qaeda, Again," by Andrew Cockburn, Harper's Magazine, Letter from Washington, January 2016 issue, <https://harpers.org/archive/2016/01/a-special-relationship/1/>. The Egyptian preacher Abu Hamza, now serving a life sentence on terrorism charges, visited Saudi Arabia in 1986, and later recalled the constant public injunctions to join the jihad: "You have to go, you have to join, leave your schools, leave your family." The whole Afghanistan enterprise, he explained, "was meant to actually divert people from the problems in their own country." It was "like a pressure-cooker vent. If you keep [the cooker] all sealed up, it will blow up in your face, so you have to design a vent, and this Afghan jihad was the vent." See also Cockburn, 2015.

<sup>61</sup> Bitter Lake, BBC documentary film by Adam Curtis, 2015, <https://youtu.be/VRbq63r7rys>. I thank Drew Pham for making me aware of this film. See also Martin, 2014.

<sup>62</sup> “Enormous Sense of Hopelessness and Anger,” by Noam Chomsky and Melissa Parker, Smashing Interviews Magazine, January 21, 2016, <http://smashinginterviews.com/interviews/newsmakers/noam-chomsky-interview-enormous-sense-of-hopelessness-and-anger-reflected-in-appeal-of-trump-and-sanders>.

<sup>63</sup> “The War Has Reached Damascus, But For Now It Is Not A Warzone,” by Robert Fisk, The Independent, April 12, 2013, www.independent.co.uk/voices/comment/robert-fisk-the-war-has-reached-damascus-but-for-now-it-is-not-a-warzone-8569212.html.

<sup>64</sup> “A Special Relationship: The United States Is Teaming Up with Al Qaeda, Again,” by Andrew Cockburn, Harper’s Magazine, Letter from Washington, January 2016 issue, <https://harpers.org/archive/2016/01/a-special-relationship/1/>.

<sup>65</sup> During my time as a psychotherapist in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984 to 1991, I had the privilege of having many American clients, who were so generous to open up to me and give me deep insights into the transgenerational historical traumas that inflict many families in the United States. Not only slavery was a historical trauma, also people who came from Europe to America carry deep traumas.

<sup>66</sup> See a review of Stephen Holmes, 2007, in “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, TomDispatch.com, October 22, 2007, www.alternet.org/story/65838/bush%27s\_response\_to\_9\_11\_was\_deadlier\_than\_the\_attacks\_themselves. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this essay. Chalmers Ashby Johnson (1931 – 2010) was an American author and professor emeritus of the University of California, San Diego, who had served in the Korean War, and was a consultant for the C.I.A. from 1967 to 1973. He is the author of the Blowback Trilogy: Blowback (Johnson, 2000), The Sorrows of Empire (Johnson, 2004), and Nemesis: The Last Days of the American Republic (Johnson, 2006). See also, Johnson, 2010. Stephen Holmes builds his argument, among others, on James Mann, 2004a, who describes the Bush administration’s Cold War thinking.

<sup>67</sup> “Enormous Sense of Hopelessness and Anger,” by Noam Chomsky and Melissa Parker, Smashing Interviews Magazine, January 21, 2016, <http://smashinginterviews.com/interviews/newsmakers/noam-chomsky-interview-enormous-sense-of-hopelessness-and-anger-reflected-in-appeal-of-trump-and-sanders>.

<sup>68</sup> See the documentary film TERRA X: Imperium – Der letzte Kampf der Ritter, Geburtsstunde einer neuen Elite, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, July 10, 2011, www.zdf.de/terra-x/imperium-der-letzte-kampf-der-ritter-geburtsstunde-einer-neuen-elite-5366426.html for a succinct overview. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. The English summary is an adaptation of the German original by Lindner:

Anfang des 8. Jahrhunderts sehen sich die Menschen des Abendlands von einer Gefahr bedroht: Reiterheere aus dem Morgenland überrennen in kaum zwei Jahren ganz Spanien und das Grenzgebiet zum Frankenreich, die Pyrenäen. Mit Feuer und Schwert wollen die moslemischen Glaubenskämpfer den Islam in die Welt tragen. Die fränkischen Herrscher schicken eine militärische Elite in den Krieg, die Europas Kultur prägen wird: die Ritter. Es ist kein gewöhnlicher Feldzug, der die Verteidiger Westeuropas auf breiter Front in Bedrängnis bringt. Es ist ein “Dschihad,” ein “Heiliger Feldzug” moslemischer Araber, die als hochmotivierte Glaubenskämpfer den Islam verbreiten wollen. Doch den flinken Blitzangriffen dieser berittenen Bogenschützen aus dem Süden sind die langsamen Fußtruppen des Frankenreichs in keiner Weise gewachsen.

Neue Kriegsführung:

Die fränkischen Herrscher begreifen schnell den Ernst der Lage – und reagieren auf die lebensgefährliche Herausforderung mit einer genialen Erfindung: mit der Entwicklung einer neuen Waffengattung, den “Fränkischen Panzerreitern.” Deren Rüstung schützt wirkungsvoll gegen die tödlichen Pfeile der Angreifer, und auf ihren Pferden entdecken auch die Franken alle Möglichkeiten blitzschneller Kriegsführung.

Der militärische Geniestreich markiert die Geburtsstunde einer neuen Elite, durch die Europas Kultur über Jahrhunderte hinweg nachhaltig geprägt wurde und deren legendärer “Way of life” tatsächlich noch bis in die heutige Zeit ausstrahlt.

Gefahr fürs eigene Land:

Doch bevor die berittenen Kämpfer im 11. Jahrhundert zu Vorbildern vieler nachfolgender Generationen werden sollten, entpuppten sich die neuen Soldaten in Friedenszeiten erst einmal als Gefahr für das eigene Land: Brutal und einzelkämpferisch sind diese frühen Reiter – und zumeist durch Treueschwur an lokale Lehnsherrn gebunden, die sich in ihrer Machtgier und Streitlust kaum von der schwächelnden Zentralmacht des Kaisers einschränken lassen. Sobald die außenpolitische Gefahr gemeistert ist, werden die frühen Ritter zur marodierenden Bedrohung für die eigene Bevölkerung und zum Auslöser manch blutiger Fehde unter Dutzenden von konkurrierenden Adelsgeschlechtern. Zeitgenössische Berichte beklagen die völlige Verwilderung der fränkischen Haudegen im 10. Jahrhundert: Non militia, sed malitia – nicht Soldaten sind sie, sondern eine Seuche.

Kämpfer für Gerechtigkeit:

In dieser Situation geschieht das geradezu Unfassbare: Aus brutalen Kriegern werden plötzlich edelmütige Kulturträger und selbstlose Streiter für Gerechtigkeit und Glauben. Diese überraschende Wendung ist vor allem auf den massiven Einfluss der christlichen Mönche und anderer Kleriker zurückzuführen, besonders aber auf den Kreuzzugsaufruf von Papst Urban II., der den hochgerüsteten Kämpfern im Jahr 1095 ein gemeinsames Ziel vorgibt und ihre schwärmerische Einsatzfreude kirchenpolitisch kanalisiert.

Aus dem Kampf gegen die Ungläubigen und die Befreiung des christlichen Jerusalems entsteht eine einzigartige Ritter-Kultur, in der wilde Kampfbereitschaft, christlicher Glaube und edle Verhaltensnormen eine faszinierende Verbindung eingehen. Kämpferischer Mut, Tapferkeit und aufopfernde Treue zählen ebenso viel wie Weltgewandtheit, Bildung, Sinn für Poesie und Musik – und nicht zuletzt die keusche, aber umso hingebungsvollere Frauenverehrung, die “Hohe Minne.”

<sup>69</sup> Bailey, 2012.

<sup>70</sup> “Child Immigrant Turned Rotterdam Mayor Aids Refugees,” by Jo Biddle, Agence France Press (AFP), October 20, 2015, news.yahoo.com/child-immigrant-turned-rotterdam-mayor-aids-refugees-063943009.html. I thank PL de Silva for making me aware of this article. As the son of a Sunni Muslim imam, Rotterdam mayor Ahmed Aboutaleb, Holland’s first Muslim immigrant mayor, tackles what he sees as a deep lack of knowledge and misconceptions about Islam: “Jihadist is the completely wrong word. I am a jihadist. I’m doing the right thing for the city the entire day. I’m a jihadist... There are 68 definitions of jihad, if you remove a spike from the street or a piece of glass ... to prevent a bicycle being harmed by the spike, you are a jihadist.”

<sup>71</sup> Bernard of Clairvaux, 1977, Chapter One. The date of the Liber de laude is uncertain; it must have been written between 1120, when the Templars were founded, and 1136, when Hugh of Payens, the first Master of the Templars, died, to whom it was addressed.

<sup>72</sup> King Philip IV of France, 2002, in his “Order to Arrest the Templars” of September 14, 1307.

<sup>73</sup> “Mass Migration, EU, European Nationalisms,” by Johan Galtung, Transcend Media Service, 12 May 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/05/mass-migration-eu-european-nationalisms/:

To tilt the WWI power balance in their favor one century ago, the four colonies they created—instead of freedom for the Arabs – have been at the root of most Middle East problems.

Take Syria as example, an artificial state constructed by Paris, with 7 built-in conflicts: with Israel-USA blocking for Eretz Israel (Golan is one aspect); with Russia if a government should deny Russia their only base (as opposed to at least 800 US bases); between minority Shia-Alawite dictatorship with tolerance for others and a majority Sunni dictatorship without; between Arab Muslims and others like Kurds, Turks, Christians, Jews; between Shia and Sunni and their countries, the Shia living in the Fertile Crescent; between Al Qaeda+ and foreigners; and between all of the above and the Islamic State.

IS wants to undo Sykes-Picot and to recreate the Ottoman Empire and their Caliphate without Istanbul; and see themselves as Islamic responses to the EU and the Vatican.

In so doing IS has a decisive advantage relative to “all of the above” who reify Syria as something sustainable with basic changes. IS relates to a reality where today’s Syria is located that lasted four centuries, 1516–1916. They want to reconstruct a past based on provinces and proceed accordingly. This author would be surprised if Iraq as a state survives beyond 2020 and Syria as a state beyond 2025.

<sup>74</sup> IS, also known as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) and the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS). I resonate with those who use “Da’esh” – the Arabic acronym for the Islamic State in Iraq and Levant – to avoid the word “Islamic” when referring to the militants, see the open letter by Muslim scholars and religious authorities to Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, the leader of IS in Iraq, pointing out in theological terms why his group’s actions are un-Islamic, www.lettertobaghdadi.com. See also “IS: Neither Islamic Nor State, But Is It a Caliphate?” by Mamoon Alabbasi, Middle East Eye, July 24, 2015, www.middleeasteye.net/in-depth/features/neither-islamic-nor-state-it-caliphate-2004595104.

<sup>75</sup> Bostock, 1960, p. 212.

<sup>76</sup> Bostock, 1960, p. 203.

<sup>77</sup> Bostock, 1960, p. 202.

<sup>78</sup> Bostock, 1960, p. 212.

<sup>79</sup> Ibid.

<sup>80</sup> Göring, 1943.

<sup>81</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 51.

<sup>82</sup> Rockström, 2015. See also Wijkman and Rockström, 2012. Johan Rockström is professor in environmental science at Stockholm University and executive director of Stockholm Resilience Centre. His research has focused on global water resources and strategies to build resilience in water scarce regions of the world. Since 2010, he has played a leading role in developing the Planetary Boundaries framework. He served as co-chair of the Future Earth transition team and is the vice-chair of the science advisory board of the Potsdam Institute for Climate Impact research (PIK).

The first Planetary Boundaries analysis was published in 2009 after a two-year research and consultation exchange among global change scientists. The analysis suggested that humanity had transgressed three of the nine planetary boundaries: biodiversity loss, climate change, and nitrogen loading. The researchers focused on nine planetary boundary processes and systems that are needed to sustain a Holocene-like state of the planet. For seven of them they proposed quantitative boundaries, whereof three had relatively robust scientific support (climate change, stratospheric ozone depletion, and ocean acidification), while four carried large uncertainties (land use change, freshwater use, rate of loss of biodiversity, and interference with nitrogen and phosphorous cycles). For the other two (aerosol loading and chemical pollution), information was too limited to permit the determination of quantified boundaries.

A new round of PB research was conducted and the update published in January 2015. The new analysis treats climate change and biosphere integrity as “core boundaries,” which means high-order manifestations of how breaching the other boundaries by can disrupt the Earth system. The new analysis concludes that four out of nine boundaries have already been transgressed. Two are in the high risk zone (biosphere integrity and interference with the nitrogen and phosphorous cycles), and two others are in the danger zone (climate change and land use change).

The original nine PBs remain relevant, but the revised analysis includes several improvements: to include the release of radioactive materials and nanomaterials, chemical pollution has been renamed “introduction of novel entities.” The biodiversity boundary is now referred to as “biosphere integrity” and it now has two dimensions: genetic diversity (as before) and functional diversity, which means using the “biosphere intactness index,” a measure of species abundance. The land use change boundary no longer simply uses the proxy of maximum cropland, but considers now minima for rainforests, temperate forests, and boreal forest cover. The nitrogen boundary now also includes human-induced reactive nitrogen from modern cultivation. The phosphorous boundary is now defined in two ways, first for oceans, as originally, and the other for freshwater systems. The uncertainty range for the climate change boundary has been narrowed to 350 to 450 ppm CO<sub>2</sub> (from 350 to 550 ppm CO<sub>2</sub>).

<sup>83</sup> Sustainable development expert Gwendolyn Hallsmith, in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 31, 2014.

<sup>84</sup> Neuroscientist Peter Sterling in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Marxism and Ecology: Common Fonts of a Great Transition,” September 18, 2015. See also Sterling, 2016. Remember also Leiss, 1976.

<sup>85</sup> See also Wijkman and Rockström, 2012. See note 82 in this Chapter 5.

<sup>86</sup> Richard Heinberg in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Bounding the Planetary Future: Why We Need a GT,” March 20, 2015.

<sup>87</sup> Global wildlife populations have fallen by 58 percent since 1970, and if the trend continues the decline could reach two-thirds among vertebrates by 2020, according to World Wildlife Fund (WWF), et al., 2016. See also Ceballos, et al., 2015, Kolbert, 2006, Spufford and Kolbert, 2007, and Kolbert, 2014. See, furthermore, Davis, 2009, and The Wayfinders, the 2009 Massey Lecture by Wade Davis, Convocation Hall, Toronto, uploaded November 20, 2011, on <https://youtu.be/KfbGdoTQKuM>. See also philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>88</sup> World Wildlife Fund (WWF), 2014. See note 87 above.

<sup>89</sup> Ted Trainer in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “The Degrowth Alternative,” January 26, 2015:

Our enormous (and probably insoluble) problem is to get them to shift to what I term The Simpler Way. We will make little or no progress while the supermarket shelves remain well-stocked. Our chances will begin to improve when the crunches start impacting in rich countries, the multi-faceted “peaks” in oil, energy, materials supply, the accelerating ecological impacts, the financial turmoil, and the social breakdown fueled by the inequality and deprivation neo-liberal doctrine inevitably inflicts. Our task is to work hard during the short window of opportunity we have to get local alternative communities up and running as best we can, so that when people start to realize that the consumer-capitalist system will not provide for them they can see around them at least indicators of the kind of alternative they need to help build in their towns and suburbs.

See also Alexander, 2009, Doherty and Etzioni, 2003, Trainer, 2014. Ted (F.E.) Trainer is an Australian academic, and an advocate of economic de-growth, simple living, and “conserver” lifestyles. Trainer is on the faculty of the Simplicity Institute, Office of Environmental Programmes, Melbourne University, Australia, see <http://simplicityinstitute.org/ted-trainer>. He works with the Simpler Way project, which has primarily been about trying to show that the required alternative ways would be easily, cheaply, and quickly built if people wanted to do that. See www.socialsciences.arts.unsw.edu.au/tsw/TheAltSoc.Ing.html for a detailed sketch. Trainer shows that the “decoupling claim” is not feasible. It claims that economic growth can be separated from demand for materials and energy, thus enabling these to be kept down to sustainable levels. Trainer presents evidence from about thirty studies, which all indicate that little or no decoupling is taking pace, let alone on the scale that ecomodernists assume is possible. See “Decoupling: The Issue, and Collected Evidence,” July 8, 2016, <http://thesimplerway.info/DECOUPLING.htm>, “But Can’t Technical Advance Solve the Problems?,” April 9, 2016, <http://thesimplerway.info/TECHFIX.htm>, “The Extreme Implausibility of Ecomodernism,” March 16, 2016, <http://thesimplerway.info/ECOMODERNISMcrit.htm>.

See also “History Has Knocked Very Loudly on Our Door. Will We Answer?” World Future Forum 2016 – Opening Speech by Jakob von Uexküll, March 15, 2016, www.worldfuturecouncil.org/2016/03/15/world-future-forum-2016-opening-speech-jakob-von-Uexküll/.

See, furthermore, “Consume More, Conserve More: Sorry, But We Just Can’t Do Both,” by George Monbiot, The Guardian, November 24, 2015, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2015/nov/24/consume-conserve-economic-growth-sustainability.

<sup>90</sup> Neuroscientist Peter Sterling in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Marxism and Ecology: Common Fonts of a Great Transition,” September 18, 2015.

<sup>91</sup> United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), 2014.

<sup>92</sup> Ibid.

<sup>93</sup> See a description of Naseer Memon’s background on the website of the Center for Peace and Civil Society (CPCS) at www.cpcs.org.pk/aboutus/resourcepersons.php.

<sup>94</sup> “Human insecurity: A recent UNDP report paints a grim picture of human development in the country,” by Naseer Memon, The News on Sunday (Pakistan), November 2, 2014, <http://tns.thenews.com.pk/undp-report-and-human-insecurity/#.VF-AUSn4phU>.

<sup>95</sup> Dong, 2015, Chapter 4, from pp. 84–111.

<sup>96</sup> Bourdieu defines the field of power as a “... field of forces structurally determined by the state of the relations of power among forms of power, or different forms of capital... [In this field, the] objective is no longer the accumulation of or even the monopoly on a particular form of capital... but rather the determination of the relative value and magnitude of the different forms of power that can be wielded in the different fields,” Bourdieu, 1996, pp. 264–265.

<sup>97</sup> See, among others, the book by Deresiewicz, 2014, Excellent Sheep, see www.billderesiewicz.com/books/excellent-sheep:

Excellent Sheep takes a sharp look at the high-pressure conveyor belt that begins with parents and counselors who demand perfect grades and culminates in the skewed applications Deresiewicz saw firsthand as a member of Yale’s admissions committee. As schools shift focus from the humanities to “practical” subjects like economics and computer science, students are losing the ability to think in innovative ways. Deresiewicz explains how college should be a time for self-discovery, when students can establish their own values and measures of success, so they can forge their own path. He addresses parents, students, educators, and anyone who’s interested in the direction of American society, featuring quotes from real students and graduates he has corresponded with over the years, candidly exposing where the system is broken and clearly presenting solutions.

See also Bloom, 1987, Wilshire, 1990, Putnam, 1995, Readings, 1996, Schmidt, 2000, Giroux and Paulo Freire (Foreword), 2001, Bok, 2003, Giroux and Giroux, 2004, Hersch and Merrow, 2005, Karabel, 2005, Levine, 2006, Lewis, 2006, Kronman, 2007, Donoghue, 2008, Newfield, 2008, Gornitzka and Langfeldt, 2008, Folbre, 2009, Nussbaum, 2010, Taylor, 2010, Osler, 2010, Hacker and Dreifus, 2010, Richards, 2011, Riley, 2011, Arum and Roksa, 2011, Ginsberg, 2011, Jensen, 2012, Giroux, 2014b, or Frank, 2016. See, furthermore, “Schooling Ourselves in an Unequal America,” by Rebecca Strauss, New York Times, June 16, 2013, <http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/06/16/schooling-ourselves-in-an-unequal-america/?src=me&ref=general>. As to the UK, see “Coalition of Thinkers Vow to Fight Marketisation of Universities,” by Shiv Malik, The Guardian, November 8, 2012, www.guardian.co.uk/education/2012/nov/08/coalition-thinkers-fight-marketisation-universities, where we read that the purpose of university is being “grossly distorted by the attempt to create a market in higher education.” See also “Why I am Not a Professor OR the Decline and Fall of the British University,” by Mark Tarver, 2007, www.lambdassociates.org/blog/decline.htm.

For Germany, see Münch, 2011. See also how the corporate sector in Germany has developed a “master plan” for how to change the educational system, in “Die Hochschule der Zukunft: Das Leitbild der Wirtschaft,” by Dieter Hundt, Präsident, Bundesvereinigung der Deutschen Arbeitgeberverbände e. V. (BDA), and Hans-Peter Keitel, Präsident, Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie e. V. (BDI), Berlin, February 2010, www.arbeitgeber.de/www%5Carbeitgeber.nsf/res/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf/\$file/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf. I thank Ines Balta for making me aware of this publication.

<sup>98</sup> Sean Cannady in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” May 2, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016.

<sup>99</sup> Ibid.

<sup>100</sup> Sean Cannady, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” May 2, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016:

Here is the USA’s federal definition of research, from the Department of Health and Human Services, which is the standard taken for IRB (Institutional Review Board) assessments of research projects. If it doesn’t fit this definition, your average IRB will not just not approve the project, they’ll label it as not being research at all. Note that this definition was developed specifically for the protection of human research subjects in medical experiments, but is now applied broadly to all research, often including humanities research: “A systematic investigation, including research development, testing and evaluation, designed to develop or contribute to generalizable knowledge. Activities which meet this definition constitute research for purposes of this policy, whether or not they are conducted or supported under a program which is considered research for other purposes. For example, some demonstration and service programs may include research activities.”

<sup>101</sup> “The Great Divide: College, the Great Uneveler,” by Suzanne Mettler, New York Times, March 1, 2014, http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2014/03/01/college-the-great-uneveler/?\_php=true&\_type=blogs&src=me&ref=general&r=0.

<sup>102</sup> 2014 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Returning Dignity,” in Chiang Mai, Thailand, March 8–12, 2014, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/23.php.

<sup>103</sup> See the videos that we made to document the important hours of learning at www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/videos.php#thailand.

<sup>104</sup> The Lazy School’s First Student Peter Dering, video recorded by Evelin Lindner on March 14, 2014, in the Pgak’ Nyau (Karen) village Ban Nong Thao, on our post-conference excursion, March 13–14, 2014. See the high density version edited by Mark Petz, <http://youtu.be/ek4lGpSQgpk>.

<sup>105</sup> Sahlberg, 2011. See also “Finland Education Success,” <https://youtu.be/qRJ1hgN7uAU>. I thank Adair Linn Nagata for making me aware of this link. It is a privilege to have Adair Linn Nagata as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>106</sup> Alexander Laszlo in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Struggle for Meaningful Work,” January 28, 2017, in response to Klitgaard, 2017. I thank Dino Karabeg for connecting me with Alexander Laszlo.

<sup>107</sup> It was a privilege to have Morton Deutsch as esteemed member in the board of directors of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. He was the honorary convener of our annual Workshop on Transforming Humiliation and Violent Conflict, hosted by his Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR), as part of the Advanced Consortium on Cooperation, Conflict, and Complexity (AC4, ac4.ei.columbia.edu) at Columbia University in New York City. Morton Deutsch passed away on March 13, 2017, 97 years old, and we will honor his legacy by continuing with this workshop series. See www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeetings.php.

<sup>108</sup> Turchin, 2006. I thank Lene Auestad for making me aware of Turchin’s work. See Auestad, 2012. See also Auestad, 2014, 2015.

<sup>109</sup> See also Lee, 2015.

<sup>110</sup> See, for instance, Heffernan, 2011, and Heffernan, 2014. I thank Brian Ward for making us aware of Heffernan’s work. This is the book description:

The Olympics. X-Factor. The Rich List. The Nobel Prize. Everywhere you look: competition – for fame, money, attention, status. Being top seems to be everything – but what is it costing all of us? We depend on competition and expect it to identify the best, make complicated decisions easy and to motivate the lazy and inspire the dreamers. But, as Margaret Heffernan shows in this eye-opening look at competition, competition regularly produces just what we don’t want: rising levels of fraud, cheating, stress, inequality and political stalemate. Siblings won’t speak to each other. Children burn out at school. Doping proliferates among athletes. Auditors and fund managers go to jail for insider trading. Winners seem to take all while the desire to win consumes all, inciting panic and despair. We now know that competition often doesn’t work, that the best do not always rise to the top and the so-called efficiency of competition creates a great deal of waste. So what are our alternatives? What are the skills needed for creative collaboration and how do we hone them? Talking to scientists, musicians, athletes, entrepreneurs and executives, in the follow-up to her bestselling Willful Blindness, Margaret Heffernan has discovered that, around the world, individuals and organizations are finding creative, cooperative ways to work that don't pit people against each other but support them in their desire to work together. While the rest of the world remains mired in pitiless sniping, racing to the bottom, the future belongs to the people and companies who have learned that they are greater working together than against one another. Some call that soft but it's harder than anything they've done before. They are the real winners, sharing a bigger prize.

<sup>111</sup> Raskin, 2014, 2016, Raskin, et al., 2002.

<sup>112</sup> Christoph Bals from Germanwatch in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Meaning, Religion, and a Great Transition," December 1, 2014, in response to Karlberg, 2014.

<sup>113</sup> Gilad and Junginger, 2010. The German title of this book is Strategische Kriegsführung für Manager, English: Strategic Warfare for Managers. See also www.clausewitz.org. Also for sociologist Weber, war was a kind of natural phenomenon of political history, a form of unavoidable "eternal struggle of nations" (ewiges Ringen der Nationen) comparable to economic competition, only that economic war is conducted with "peaceful ammunition" (friedliche Kampfmittel), see Bruhns, 2014, p. 63.

<sup>114</sup> The Corporation, documentary film by law professor Joel Bakan, directed by Mark Achbar and Jennifer Abbott, 2003, see www.bibliotecapleyades.net/sociopolitica/sociopol\_globalelite08.htm. See also Bakan, 2004, The Corporation: The Pathological Pursuit of Profit and Power. I thank ecological economist, environmental scientist and futurist Richard Sanders for making me aware of this work.

<sup>115</sup> John B. Fullerton, founder and president of the Capital Institute, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "The Church of Economism and Its Discontents," on November 30, 2015, in response to Norgaard, 2015. He writes:

As some readers of this thread know, I am trained as a finance practitioner, not an academic. One observation I can offer to those deep in the inquiry of how to transition our economic system to one that "works" is that in the field of "high finance" (oxymoron if there ever was one), economists are not at the top of the food chain at all. When I worked at JPMorgan for nearly two decades (ending 2001 I hasten to add), the economists were "staff," and I'm confident that remains true today. They were used primarily for two purposes: (1) input (one of many factors and becoming less important over time) for trading and market risk management decisions of the bank and its trading clients (these decisions were made by people rarely trained as economists, at least beyond a bachelor's degree like I was), and (2) to be rolled out in front of corporate or sovereign clients to sound smart and make long term forecasts of economic conditions – essentially for entertainment and relationship building. High finance is about one thing today: making money in the financial system. Financial statesmanship is so 1970s and 1980s. Very few in high finance (I'm tempted to say no one, but I could always be surprised) are even aware that questions about fatal flaws of neoliberalism exist (beyond the well-worn issues of liberal/conservative debates). And much to my surprise over the past decade since I've been wrestling with these questions, few are even curious once I place the issues of economic system design flaws under their nose. "I must be a liberal or something worse"...

Of course this lack of curiosity holds true for the "economists" (or otherwise) teaching finance inside business schools in my experience, who are largely immersed in questions about the financial system, how to beat the market, how to lower trading costs (when did trading become a legitimate "business"?), how to improve the performance of hedging strategies for options, etc. Some exceptions exist like Frank Werner who teaches finance at Fordham, but they are few and far between. Nearly all of my invitations to speak at business schools come from departments outside finance. And finance is generally the top of the food chain in business schools.

A couple of years ago, I participated with Frank in the Academy of Management annual conference (business school management professors) and the equivalent conference for finance professors as part of a panel challenging the "religion" of shareholder value (the purpose of a corporation is to optimize shareholder value and the rest will take care of itself). What amazed me most was that even in post-crash 2013, and even when the AMA bravely titled the conference "Capitalism in Question," it took work to get the conference organizers to accept the question we were asking, and from what I could tell, we were one of the few truly heretic panels at the conference. The conference was held at Disney World – fitting.

My point? There is a denomination of the Church of Economism, perhaps called "Finance ism" (Wendell Berry I am not!), which is more dangerous even than its parent Church for three reasons.

(1) Ignorance: It is largely ignorant even of the doctrine of the Church of Economism and has certainly never invited Richard Norgaard as a guest minister to explore it thoughtfully. It is ignorant of much of what those on this thread would generally consider important if one is to influence society. For example, I doubt 10 percent – make that 5 percent – of this parish of finance ism would have any idea why the "Anthropocene" is important, or even heard of the word. At this parish, they pray to a far simpler God. The God of "does it make money?" Well trained for sure, degrees from prestigious universities, but not that well educated in the true sense of the word. And certainly not curious. Smug ignorance feels like bliss in this parish.

(2) Competition: The players of this game value competition as the great qualifier (other values exist in most, but are for after work). The best man (usually a man) wins. The measure is the ranking in the Forbes 400 and the machismo of lending one's private jet to a "friend" in need. But of course the logical extreme of competition is war. Wall Street today is like war – violence but without the guns.

(3) Entitlement: The winning creates a sense of entitlement – not just for stuff, but to influence society at all scales of winning. We see this steering our politics (at the national level of course but also at the state level – see New York Times today about the race for Governor of Illinois (www.nytimes.com/2015/11/30/us/politics/illinois-campaign-money-bruce-rauner.html?\_r=0), and in our communities) and affecting pretty much all our institutions. Think about metrics (teach to the test) in the Charter School movement as just one example, driven in part by all the (well meaning) finance honchos on Charter School boards (part of the after work values that exist but are corrupted by the religion and its narrow, reductionist set of values). And what's most concerning, our culture appears willing to grant that entitlement. In part because the institutions need the money – this is a design flaw of our system but few in the church of finance ism will ever see it that way. But in part because we somehow believe as a culture that "success" (regardless of whether it comes from leveraged securities speculation, real estate speculation, or something socially useful) connotes wisdom and therefore entitles one to influence.

<sup>116</sup> Berry, 2009, p. 476.

<sup>117</sup> The Great Divide: Inequality Is Not Inevitable," by Joseph E. Stiglitz, New York Times, June 27, 2014, <http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2014/06/27/inequality-is-not-inevitable/>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>118</sup> Buffett: "There Are Lots of Loose Nukes Around the World," interview with Lou Dobbs, CNN, May 25, 2005, <http://edition.cnn.com/2005/US/05/10/buffett/index.html>.

See also "In Class Warfare, Guess Which Class Is Winning," by Ben Stein, New York Times, November 26, 2006, www.nytimes.com/2006/11/26/business/yourmoney/26every.html?\_r=0, with a similar quote: "There's class warfare, all right, but it's my class, the rich class, that's making war, and we're winning."

See, furthermore, "Socialism? The Rich Are Winning the US Class War: Facts Show Rich Getting Richer, Everyone Else Poorer," by Bill Quigley, CommonDreams.org, October 25, 2010, www.commondreams.org/views/2010/10/25/socialism-rich-are-winning-us-class-war-facts-show-rich-getting-richer-everyone. Bill Quigley is associate director of the Center for Constitutional Rights and a law professor at Loyola University New Orleans:

The rich talk about the rise of socialism to divert attention from the fact that they are devouring the basics of the poor and everyone else. Many of those crying socialism the loudest are doing it to enrich or empower themselves. They are right about one thing – there is a class war going on in the US. The rich are winning their class war, and it is time for everyone else to fight back for economic justice.

Nick Hanauer is another among the extremely wealthy, who believes that the super-rich need to wake up and realize that life in fortress-like ghettos is not worth living, see Beinhocker and Hanauer, 2014. Hanauer foresees pitchforks coming for his "fellow .01 percenters" just as during the French Revolution in the eighteenth century, if the super-rich do not address the issue of increasing wealth inequality: "The Pitchforks Are Coming... For Us Plutocrats," by Nick Hanauer, Politico Magazine, July/August 2014, www.politico.com/magazine/story/2014/06/the-pitchforks-are-coming-for-us-plutocrats-108014.

In Germany, a group of wealthy individuals calls for higher taxes for the wealthy. Retired physician Dieter Lehmkuhl, for example, says that it is time the wealthy came to the aid of their country. Lehmkuhl "reckons that if the 2.2 million Germans who have personal fortunes of more than €500,000 ($750,000) paid a tax of five percent this year and next, it would provide the state with €100 billion," in "Wealthy Germans Launch Petition For Higher Taxes," The Local, October 22, 2009, www.thelocal.de/money/20091022-22755.html.

<sup>119</sup> Buffett: Debt Politics like "Nuclear" Bomb, CNN, October, 4, 2013,

<http://money.cnn.com/video/news/2013/10/04/n-warren-buffett-charlie-munger-debt-ceiling.fortune>: "Billionaire Warren Buffett says fighting over the debt ceiling 'ought to be banned as a weapon' like 'nuclear bombs, too horrible to use.' His partner Charlie Munger says Buffett 'understated how awful it is' calling the practice 'deeply immoral.'"

<sup>120</sup> Ferdinand Tönnies (1855 – 1936) was a major contributor to sociological theory and field studies. Tönnies is best known for his distinction between two types of social groups – Gemeinschaft and Gesellschaft (Tönnies, 1887/1955). He explains that community is based on family life, rests on harmony, and is developed and ennobled by folkways, morals, and religion, with morality being an expression of religious beliefs and forces, intertwined with family spirit and folkways.

<sup>121</sup> Durkheim, 1897.

<sup>122</sup> Weber, 1919.

<sup>123</sup> "Ein 'stahlhartes Gehäuse' ist kein 'Iron Cage': Über Forscher, die kein Deutsch können," by Dirk Kaesler, Literaturkritik, Number 1, January 2012, Glosse, www.literaturkritik.de/public/rezension.php?rez\_id=16239:

Fangen wir mit einem einzigen, einigermaßen banalen Wort an: Wie sattem bekannt sein dürfte, stammt von Max Weber jenes schreckeinföhlende Sprachbild, demzufolge sich ein "stahlhartes Gehäuse" um uns heutige Menschen im Zeichen des Kapitalismus gelegt habe. Im Original heißt es bei Weber 1904 und 1920: "Nur wie 'ein dünner Mantel, den man jederzeit abwerfen könnte', sollte nach Baxters Ansicht die Sorge um die äußeren Güter um die Schultern seiner Heiligen liegen. Aber aus dem Mantel ließ das Verhängnis ein stahlhartes Gehäuse werden. Indem die Askese die Welt umzubauen und in der Welt sich auszuwirken unternahm, gewannen die äußeren Güter dieser Welt zunehmende und schließlich unentrinnbare Macht über den Menschen, wie niemals zuvor in der Geschichte. Heute ist ihr Geist – ob endgültig, wer weiß es? – aus diesem Gehäuse entwichen. Der siegreiche Kapitalismus jedenfalls bedarf, seit er auf mechanischer Grundlage ruht, dieser Stütze nicht mehr."

So weit, so schrecklich, so bekannt! Von diesem legendären Text liegen bis zum heutigen Tag drei Übersetzungen ins Englische vor: Die erste stammt von Talcott Parsons aus dem Jahr 1930, sie vor allem begründete jenen Ruhm Max Webers, der ihn heute zu dem bedeutendsten Klassiker der Soziologie weltweit gemacht hat. Parsons, der die deutsche Sprache nur sehr rudimentär beherrschte, übersetzte "stahlhartes Gehäuse" mit "iron cage." Diese Metapher wird heute weltweit – auch in Deutschland – als Synonym für alle jene schrecklichen Gefahren eingesetzt, die uns durch Kapitalismus und Bürokratie bedrohen. Natürlich kann man nun als Deutscher auftreten und darauf hinweisen, dass Eisen, das rostet, kein Stahl sei, der eben nicht zerstört werden kann, und dass Weber sehr wohl zu seiner Zeit um eben diesen Unterschied wusste, und sein Sprachbild mit Bedacht wählte; und man kann es endlos wiederholen, dass ein "Gehäuse" kein Käfig sei, und dass Weber auch darüber nachgedacht haben dürfte. Es nutzt alles nichts: Der "Iron Cage" ist in der Begriffswelt der Menschen und hat es sogar zu Lexikoneinträgen gebracht, zumeist mit dem Hinweis auf Max Weber. Auch die sehr viel besseren neueren Übersetzungen von Stephen Kalberg ("steel-hard casing"), Peter Baehr und Gordon C. Wells ("shell as hard as steel") werden daran nichts mehr ändern können. Selbst Peter Ghosh wird das "stahlharte Gehäuse" mit seiner ganzen Bedeutung im Kopf eines Wilhelminers um die Wende vom 19. zum 20. Jahrhundert nicht in heutiges Englisch transportieren können. Man könnte dieses legendäre Beispiel um zahllose weitere vermehren, so etwa an der tatsächlichen Unübersetzbarkeit der spezifisch Weber'schen Begriffe wie "Beruf/Berufung," "Triebwerk," "innerweltlich," "Wahlverwandtschaften." "die letzten Menschen."

<sup>124</sup> Sassen, 2014.

<sup>125</sup> In a recent article, social philosopher Nancy Fraser, 2014, explores the strengths and weaknesses of the classic 1944 book The Great Transformation by Karl Polanyi, where he traced the roots of capitalist crisis to efforts to create "self-regulating markets" in land, labor and money, see Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001. Fraser, 2014, Abstract:

The effect was to turn those three fundamental bases of social life into "fictitious commodities." The inevitable result, Polanyi claimed, was to despoil nature, rupture communities and destroy livelihoods. This diagnosis has strong echoes in the twenty-first century: witness the burgeoning markets in carbon emissions and biotechnology in child-care, schooling and the care of the old and in financial derivatives. In this situation, Polanyi's idea of fictitious commodification affords a promising basis for an integrated structural analysis that connects three dimensions of the present crisis: the ecological, the social and the financial.

I thank Mai-Bente Bonnevie for reminding me of Fraser's work in this context!

<sup>126</sup> Hartling, 2008a.

<sup>127</sup> Heatherly and Heritage Foundation, 1981.

<sup>128</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 49.

<sup>129</sup> "Mrs. Thatcher: The First Two Years," by Ronald Butt, The Sunday Times, May 3, 1981, www.margaretthatcher.org/document/104475.

<sup>130</sup> Twenge, 2014, Deresiewicz, 2014.

<sup>131</sup> "Unless It Changes, Capitalism Will Starve Humanity by 2050," by Drew Hansen, Forbes, February 9, 2016, www.forbes.com/sites/drewhansen/2016/02/09/unless-it-changes-capitalism-will-starve-humanity-by-2050/#20716d4f4a36.

<sup>132</sup> "History Has Knocked Very Loudly on Our Door. Will We Answer?" World Future Forum 2016 – Opening Speech by Jakob von Uexküll, March 15, 2016, www.worldfuturecouncil.org/2016/03/15/world-future-forum-2016-opening-speech-jakob-von-Uexküll/. Uexküll offers the WFC Global Policy Action Plan (GPACT) as a new manual for responsible leadership, a new consensus, which may become known as the Hamburg consensus. Even the UN SDG strategy suffers from dangerous religious dogma, says Uexküll, as it will take 207 years to eliminate poverty with the proposed strategy, and the global economy would have to grow 175 times of its present size" – an obvious impossibility.

<sup>133</sup> “Washington Rules Change, Again,” by Jomo Kwame Sundaram, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 16, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/02/washington-rules-change-again/. Jomo Kwame Sundaram, a former economics professor, was United Nations Assistant Secretary-General for Economic Development, and received the Wassily Leontief Prize for Advancing the Frontiers of Economic Thought in 2007.

<sup>134</sup> “4 Questions for Fathali M. Moghaddam,” by Sara Martin, APA Monitor on Psychology, April 2017, pp. 25-26, www.apamonitor-digital.org/apamonitor/201704?pg=40#pg40:

In the late 1970s, Fathali M. Moghaddam was studying inter-group relations in England when the Iranian revolution broke out. He immediately returned to his native country to join those pushing for greater openness, justice and democracy through teaching and writing in the popular press. Despite such efforts, Islamic fundamentalists used brute force to take over the country. “There were bombings, assassinations, imprisonment, torture,” Moghaddam says. “They terrorized the entire population, particularly women who had to go back under the hijab and move out of the public sphere.” By the end of 1979, Iran had become “a corrupt dictatorship again, with a religious cover,” he says. After watching his fellow citizens so quickly and violently lose their freedoms, and sometimes their lives, Moghaddam was driven to study the psychology of terrorism, dictatorship and democracy. Today, he is a professor of psychology at Georgetown University, editor of the APA journal Peace and Conflict: Journal of Peace Psychology, and author of 26 books, including “The Psychology of Democracy” and “The Psychology of Dictatorship.” The Monitor asked him about current threats to democracy and what psychologists can do about them.

I thank Louise Sundararajan for making me aware of this article.

<sup>135</sup> “Why Authoritarians Attack the Arts,” by Eve L. Ewing, New York Times, April 6, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/04/06/opinion/why-authoritarians-attack-the-arts.html?action=click&pgtype=Homepage%2%AEion=CCcolumn&module=MostEmailed&version=Full&src=me&WT.nav=MostEmailed:

American observers shook their heads in disapproval when the performance artist Danilo Maldonado was arrested and jailed for criticizing the Castro regime, and when the Chinese sculptor and photographer Ai Weiwei was placed under house arrest and had his studio demolished by the government. But closer to home, it is imperative that we understand what Trump’s attack on the arts is really about. It’s not about making America a drab and miserable place, nor is it about a belief in austerity or denying resources to communities in need. Much like the disappearance of data from government websites and the exclusion of critical reporters from White House briefings, this move signals something broader and more threatening than the inability of one group of people to do their work. It’s about control. It’s about creating a society where propaganda reigns and dissent is silenced.

I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>136</sup> See, among others, Carroll, 2001. See also “‘Je suis français, je suis juif, je suis musulman. Je suis Charlie’: On the trail of Convivencia,” by Raja Sakrani, Käte Hamburger Kolleg “Recht als Kultur,” January 2015, www.recht-als-kultur.de/de/aktuelles/diskurs/:

James Carroll made this concept a corner stone in European history due to the important role it played in the passage of Greek philosophical heritage to Europe thanks to Arabic, Hebrew and Latin translations... Beyond the individual stories that make up this French drama, beyond historical, religious, sociological and political considerations specific to France that were not presently analyzed, beyond the debate on the ramifications of this event on the judicial system, as well as the security and political agenda, beyond how the events will be taken up or politically instrumentalized by right-wing nationalists in Europe or even competing Israeli and Palestinian factions – beyond all that, the spirit of Convivencia absolutely needs to be explored, studied, analyzed and understood even in an atmosphere of mourning, menace and doubt.

I thank Hinnerk Bruhns for making me aware of this article. It is a privilege for me to be associated with the Maison des Sciences de l’Homme in Paris since 2001, first through social psychologist Serge Moscovici. The first two conferences of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies were inspired and hosted by Hinnerk Bruhns, and supported by Michel Wieviorka, at the Maison des Sciences in 2003 and 2004, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php. It is a privilege to have Hinnerk Bruhns and other renowned colleagues from France as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>137</sup> Tripathi, 2013a.

<sup>138</sup> In Chapter 7: Iraq Under Occupation and Dictatorship, Tripathi, 2013a, p. 95, quotes {Karsh, 2007 #52406}, p. 90:

The terrified [Abbasid] caliph, Mu’tasim, accompanied by his sons, ministers and other members of his coterie, produced himself to Hulagu. He was forced to disclose his treasures and was ridiculed for having failed to put them to good use in the city's defense. Ten days later the hapless suzerain was taken to a neighboring village and executed, apparently by being rolled in a carpet and trampled to death by horses, as the Mongols would not shed royal blood by the sword. Meanwhile, Baghdad was thoroughly ravaged and plundered, with most of its inhabitants brutally slaughtered.

See also Tripp, 2007.

<sup>139</sup> BCE stands for "Before the Common Era," and is equivalent to BC, which means "Before Christ."

<sup>140</sup> Ex-chief editor of the German magazine Der Spiegel, Stefan Aust, and Frank Gensthaler, explain in their 2014 documentary film Bedingt abwehrbereit: Die Geschichte hinter der "Spiegel"-Affäre (Limited Defense Capability: The Story Behind the Spiegel-Scandal) the rearmament of Americans and Russians during the Cold War of the sixties, using sovereign archival material and comments of witnesses, see more on http://programm.ard.de/TV/daserste/bedingt-abwehrbereit/eid\_2810612072468149.

<sup>141</sup> "Beeindruckend aktuell," by Daland Segler, Frankfurter Rundschau, May 8, 2014, www.fr-online.de/tv-kritik/tv-kritik---bedingt-abwehrbereit--beeindruckend-aktuell,1473344,27061446.html:

Wer sich vor Augen führt, dass Bundeswehr und US-Armee bereit waren, Deutschland dem Erdboden gleich zu machen, wird seine Überzeugung, Wahn sei ein Wesensmerkmal des Militärs, nie mehr ändern.

<sup>142</sup> Original German text translated by Lindner. Helmut Schmidt in the documentary film Bedingt abwehrbereit: Die Geschichte hinter der "Spiegel"-Affäre: "Die sovjetischen Generale wussten, wer immer anfängt, es wird ein atomarer Weltkrieg. Davor hatten sie Schiss, mit Recht!"

<sup>143</sup> "Mass Shooters, Firearms, and Social Strains: A Global Analysis of an Exceptionally American Problem," by Adam Lankford, paper presented at the American Sociological Association's 110th Annual Meeting in Chicago on August 23, 2015.

<sup>144</sup> "Al Qaeda Without Bin Laden: How Terrorists Cope With their Leader's Death," Brynjar Lia, ForeignAffairs.com and CNN.com, May 11, 2011, www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/67846/brynjar-lia/al-qaeda-without-bin-laden. See also other publications by Brynjar Lia and co-authors, Bokhari, 2006, Hegghammer, 2006, Lia, 2006, Nesser, 2006, Tønnessen, 2006.

<sup>145</sup> Jones and Libicki, 2008. I thank Nils Vidar Vambheim for making me aware of this monograph. See Vambheim, 2016, p. 114.

<sup>146</sup> Jones and Libicki, 2008, report that in forty percent of overall cases of terrorist groups, violence ends when leaders are eliminated due to efficient intelligence, local informers, and local police investigation.

<sup>147</sup> "What Orwell Can Teach Us About the Language of Terror and War," by Rowan Williams, The Guardian, December 12, 2015, www.theguardian.com/books/2015/dec/12/words-on-war-a-summons-to-writers-orwell-lecture. I thank Ken Pope and Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>148</sup> See Tajfel and Turner, 1986, for a review of social identity theory.

<sup>149</sup> Serres, 1997.

<sup>150</sup> "The Case for Contamination," by Kwame Anthony Appiah, New York Times Magazine, January 1, 2006, www.nytimes.com/2006/01/01/magazine/the-case-for-contamination.html?\_r=0.

<sup>151</sup> Lévinas, 1961/1969, 1982, 1985b, a.

<sup>152</sup> Wintersteiner, 1999.

<sup>153</sup> "Winning the War of Ideas," by Robert R. Reilly, The Claremont Institute, Volume VII, Number 3 – Summer 2007, www.claremont.org/crb/article/winning-the-war-of-ideas/. The Claremont Institute is an American conservative think tank based in Claremont, California. I thank Nils Vidar Vambheim for making me aware of this monograph. See Vambheim, 2016, p. 117.

<sup>154</sup> Jackson, 2011, quoted in Lakhani, 2013, p. 2.

<sup>155</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 8. Schmid describes the concept of radicalism as entailing two main elements, reflecting thought/attitude on one side, and action/behavior on the other side:

1. Advocating sweeping political change, based on a conviction that the status quo is unacceptable while at the same time a fundamentally different alternative appears to be available to the radical;
2. The means advocated to bring about the system-transforming radical solution for government and society can be non-violent and democratic (through persuasion and reform) or violent and non-democratic (through coercion and revolution).

Radicals then are not per se violent and while they might share certain characteristics (e.g. alienation from the state, anger over a country's foreign policy, feelings of discrimination) with (violent) extremists, there are also important differences (such as regarding the willingness to engage in critical thinking).<sup>38</sup> It does not follow that a radical attitude must result in violent behavior – a finding well established by decades of research.

<sup>156</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 7:

“Radical” was, at least in the second half of nineteenth century England, “almost as respectable as ‘liberal.’” In fact, the term was used at times to describe a wing of the Liberal Party. Many of the radicals, like the suffragettes in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century were mostly non-violent activists. Their demonstrative public direct actions in support of women being allowed to vote were often illegal but not illegitimate, certainly not by today's standards. In fact, some of the nineteenth century radical demands have become mainstream entitlements today. In other words, the content of the concept “radical” has changed quite dramatically in little more than a century: while in the nineteenth century, ‘radical’ referred primarily to liberal, anti-clerical, pro-democratic, progressive political positions, contemporary use – as in “radical Islamism” – tends to point in the opposite direction: embracing an anti-liberal, fundamentalist, anti-democratic and regressive agenda.

<sup>157</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 10.

<sup>158</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 8. See also Moghaddam, 2009, p. 280.

<sup>159</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 4:

Causes for radicalization that can lead to terrorism ought to be sought not just on the micro level but also on meso and macro levels:

1. Micro level, i.e. the individual level, involving e.g. identity problems, failed integration, feelings of alienation, marginalization, discrimination, relative deprivation, humiliation (direct or by proxy), stigmatization and rejection, often combined with moral outrage and feelings of (vicarious) revenge;
2. Meso level, i.e. the wider radical milieu – the supportive or even complicit social surround – which serves as a rallying point and is the ‘missing link’ with the terrorists’ broader constituency or reference group that is aggrieved and suffering injustices which, in turn, can radicalize parts of a youth cohort and lead to the formation of terrorist organizations;
3. Macro level, i.e. role of government and society at home and abroad, the radicalization of public opinion and party politics, tense majority – minority relationships, especially when it comes to foreign diasporas, and the role of lacking socio-economic opportunities for whole sectors of society which leads.

<sup>160</sup> Howard Richards reported this conclusion from his historical readings in 2013 in Pretoria, South Africa, during his lectures “Against Foucault,” in Pretoria, South Africa, developed further for publication, see Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>161</sup> Kwenda, 2003.

<sup>162</sup> Odora Hoppers, 2008.

<sup>163</sup> See also the work by Margaret Archer, 2011, and Mark Regnerus. See, for instance, “The Mission Creep of Dignity: Dignity Has Less to Do with Autonomy or Independence Than with Intrinsic Worth and the Ability to Flourish,” by Mark Regnerus, MercatorNet, January 20, 2015, www.mercatornet.com/articles/view/the\_mission\_creep\_of\_dignity. I thank Hilarie Roseman for making me aware of this article.

<sup>164</sup> Metz, 2010, 2011, 2012. Metz summarizes anthropological and sociological findings from a variety sources, including, Fortes and Evans-Pritchard (1940), Forde (1954), Abraham (1962), Carlston (1968), Mbiti (1990), Gyekye (1996) and Wiredu (2008). See also note 38 in Chapter One. I thank Francisco Gomes de Matos for making us aware of Metz’ work.

<sup>165</sup> Botman, 2000; see also Bujo, 2001, p. 88. Quoted in Metz, 2012.

<sup>166</sup> Metz, 2012.

<sup>167</sup> Metz, 2007.

<sup>168</sup> Metz, 2012.

<sup>169</sup> Gbadegesin, 1991, p. 65.

<sup>170</sup> Mokgoro, 1998, p. 3.

<sup>171</sup> Gyekye, 2004, p. 16.

<sup>172</sup> Iroegbu, 2005, p. 442.

<sup>173</sup> Mimi Stokes-Katzenbach, Sustainable Creatives ([www.dramatic sustainability.com](http://www.dramatic sustainability.com)), in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GNT) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 31, 2014. Mimi Stokes-Katzenbach has a focus on Sustainability as an Art. See also Kagan, 2011. See, furthermore, the work of Gilbert, 2006.

<sup>174</sup> Ibid.

<sup>175</sup> Richard Heinberg, educator and senior fellow at the Post Carbon Institute, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Bounding the Planetary Future: Why We Need a Great Transition (GT),” March 3, 2015.

<sup>176</sup> See among many other publications, for instance, Webster, 2002. See also Olson, 1982, Tainter, 1988, or Diamond, 2005. Particular emphasis to climate change as reason for demise is given by Weiss and Bradley, 2001, and Gill, 2000.

<sup>177</sup> Climate change as reason for demise is emphasized by Buckley, et al., 2010. I had the privilege of spending time in Siem Reap and Angkor in 2014, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/videos.php#angkor.

<sup>178</sup> In a recent article, social philosopher Nancy Fraser, 2014, explores the strengths and weaknesses of the classic 1944 book The Great Transformation by Karl Polanyi, where he traced the roots of capitalist crisis to efforts to create “self-regulating markets” in land, labor and money, see Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001. Fraser, 2014, Abstract:

The effect was to turn those three fundamental bases of social life into “fictitious commodities.” The inevitable result, Polanyi claimed, was to despoil nature, rupture communities and destroy livelihoods. This diagnosis has strong echoes in the twenty-first century: witness the burgeoning markets in carbon emissions and biotechnology in child-care, schooling and the care of the old and in financial derivatives. In this situation, Polanyi’s idea of fictitious commodification affords a promising basis for an integrated structural analysis that connects three dimensions of the present crisis: the ecological, the social and the financial.

I thank Mai-Bente Bonnevie for reminding me of Fraser’s work in this context!

<sup>179</sup> Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay discusses the “T-treaty trinity,” the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), Trade in Services Agreement (TiSA), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP):

Such agreements, negotiated in near complete secrecy, pursue geopolitical objectives. They are an attempt to build a worldwide economic and financial order that supersedes national states and they represent also an effort to protect the corporate and banking elites – the establishment 1 percent – against national governments. In the case of the TTIP, its geopolitical objective is to prevent European countries from developing comprehensive trade agreements with Russia. In the case of TPP, the objective is to isolate China. In the eyes of Washington D.C. neocon planners, they are part of ongoing economic warfare.

See also Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>180</sup> In Hidden Persuaders, social critic Vance Packard, 1957, explains the sophisticated creation of needs by the advertising industry. In The Status Seekers, Packard, 1959, describes Americans’ struggle to climb the ladder within the society’s social stratification. In Waste Makers, Packard, 1960, criticizes planned obsolescence, illustrating Karl Marx’s saying, “The production of too many useless things results in too many useless people.” In A Nation of Strangers, Packard, 1972, chronicles the wearing down of communal structure through frequent geographical transfers of corporate executives. In The People Shapers, Packard, 1977, highlights how human behavior is manipulated by the use of psychological and biological testing. In Our Endangered Children, Packard, 1983, warns of the dangers with American preoccupation with money, power, status, and sex. In The Ultra Rich: How Much Is Too Much? Packard, 1989, examines the lives of thirty American multimillionaires and their debaucheries. With regard to Hidden Persuaders, also the work of Allan Schnaiberg is still relevant, who described three theories of consumption: 1) the Pure Consumption Model, suggesting consumer sovereignty, the neoclassical model; 2) the Distorted Consumption Model, where corporations create needs and demand; 3) the Structured Consumption Model, where government infrastructure shapes our consumption patterns. See, for instance, Schnaiberg, 1980, or Gould, et al., 1996.

I thank Sheldon Krinsky for reminding me of the work of Packard and Schnaiberg, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Why We Consume: Neural Design and Sustainability,” January 29, 2016.

See also the work of psychologist Martin Textor, 1992, working in Germany, and warning, since many years, that the social fabric of society is being worn down.

<sup>181</sup> John Barry in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Economics for a Full World,” May 18, 2015:

Indeed, and taking inspiration from authors such as Daly and other contemporary “heterodox political economists” such as Tim Jackson, Molly Scott-Cato, Juliet Schor, Peter Victor and Giorgos Kallis (as well as older thinkers like Nicholas Georgescu-Roegen, Ivan Illich, Karl Polanyi and E.F. Schumacher), my own suggestion for moving beyond undifferentiated economic growth as a permanent feature of the economy rests on the following three criterion or tests for any economic policy or strategy:

1. does it increase or decrease carbon intensity, resource use, and pollution?
2. does it increase or decrease socio-economic inequalities?
3. does it increase or decrease qualitative measures of human flourishing? See Barry, 2012.

And this is why Daly's essay and others point out the neoclassical economic growth "emperor has no clothes" are an invitation for economics to return to its roots in "political economy" and integrate political, democratic as well as ethical and normative dimensions within how we think about and design policies and institutions for the creation and sustaining of the human metabolism with nature that is the human economy.

A significant issue at the heart of our problems is measurement and the use and dominance of GDP. After all, what gets measured gets done. Apart from the well-known problems of GDP as a measure of social welfare (not differentiating "goods" from "bads" primary amongst them), GDP since its creation in the mid war and post-war period has enabled thinking about the economy to become separated from the "real fundamentals" of the human economy, namely, the natural world. As GDP is just a monetary figure (after all, it measures the monetary value of exchanges in a given year), one could be seduced into thinking that as monetary measures can grow infinitely ("angelic" in Daly's or "noumenal" in the older language of Immanuel Kant), economic growth can equally infinitely grow beyond the biophysical limits of the planet. But, given that money is a claim on resources/goods, unless we can eat inflation, and unless we simply view monetary increases in the value of economic activity as the object of economic growth, this monetized conception of GDP is a form of double think. It presents the phenomenal (in Kantian terms) or "throughput / resources / energy / pollution" (in Daly's) as noumenal.

<sup>182</sup> John Barry in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Economics for a Full World," May 18, 2015.

<sup>183</sup> Barry, 2012.

<sup>184</sup> Howard Richards in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Economics for a Full World," May 26, 2015.

<sup>185</sup> In 1975, the Law Enforcement Assistant Administration in the United States formed the National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals. One of the five volumes that the committee wrote was on Disorders and Terrorism, Task Force on Disorders and Terrorism, 1976. The Task Force classified terrorism into six categories.

<sup>186</sup> Buffett: "There Are Lots of Loose Nukes Around the World," interview with Lou Dobbs, CNN, May 25, 2005, <http://edition.cnn.com/2005/US/05/10/buffett/index.html>. See also, "Socialism? The Rich Are Winning the US Class War: Facts Show Rich Getting Richer, Everyone Else Poorer," by Bill Quigley, CommonDreams.org, October 25, 2010, www.commondreams.org/views/2010/10/25/socialism-rich-are-winning-us-class-war-facts-show-rich-getting-richer-everyone. Bill Quigley is associate director of the Center for Constitutional Rights and a law professor at Loyola University New Orleans: "The rich talk about the rise of socialism to divert attention from the fact that they are devouring the basics of the poor and everyone else. Many of those crying socialism the loudest are doing it to enrich or empower themselves. They are right about one thing – there is a class war going on in the US. The rich are winning their class war, and it is time for everyone else to fight back for economic justice."

<sup>187</sup> In 1975, the Law Enforcement Assistant Administration in the United States formed the National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals. One of the five volumes that the committee wrote was on Disorders and Terrorism, Task Force on Disorders and Terrorism, 1976. The Task Force classified terrorism into six categories.

<sup>188</sup> Admiration for Nelson Mandela's path, clearly, stands in contrast to the revulsion at the brutal concentration camps that his fellows had implemented, see Trehwela, 2009.

<sup>189</sup> In 1975, the Law Enforcement Assistant Administration in the United States formed the National Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals. One of the five volumes that the committee wrote was on Disorders and Terrorism, Task Force on Disorders and Terrorism, 1976. The Task Force classified terrorism into six categories.

<sup>190</sup> See, among others, the work of the Vienna group on material flow analysis and the long durée of civilizational metabolic transitions, Fischer-Kowalski and Haberl, 2007. Or the group in Barcelona on ecological distribution conflicts at the frontiers of an expanding global metabolism, Hornborg, et al., 2007, Martinez-Alier and Röpke, 2008.

<sup>191</sup> Purpura, 2011.

<sup>192</sup> See, among others, Nicolson, 2010, and Holtzworth-Munroe and Meehan, 2004.

<sup>193</sup> See, among others, Raskin, et al., 2002. See also Ruben Nelson, director of Foresight Canada, in a personal communication on the Great Transition Network list in a discussion on the topic of “Marxism and Ecology: Common Fonts of a Great Transition,” September 3, 2015, on the comparison between the Great Transformation we need today and the earlier transformations in the form of human civilization – from nomadic-tribal to settled communities and from settled communities to Modern/Industrial. He writes:

On the one hand, the earlier transitions were long (over at least a millennia), unconscious (in the sense of not deliberately intended and planned), regional in scope, and optional (those who chose the then known way of living were not penalized by death). On the other hand, we today appear to face a Great Transition that is short (by any historical standard), must be consciously intentional, must be scale to global and is not optional (death is the alternative).

<sup>194</sup> See, among others, Fry, 2007, 2009, 2013.

<sup>195</sup> Lindner, 2007d.

<sup>196</sup> Nussbaum, 1998, Sen, 2001.

<sup>197</sup> Admiration for Nelson Mandela’s path, clearly, stands in contrast to the revulsion at the brutal concentration camps that his fellows had implemented, see Trehwela, 2009.

<sup>198</sup> John Fullerton, now a new member of the Club of Rome, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 31, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016:

I particularly liked Paul’s near dismissal of the “Conventional Worlds” scenarios – both Market Forces and Policy Reform variations, what Paul calls “the false god of moderation that invites us to passively drift down the garden path to barbarization.” Of course, this is precisely the path we (collectively) are on, with all the well-meaning focus on “green growth,” internalizing “externalities” (an oxymoron), calls for greater market transparency with Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) metrics (our idolatry of markets and their ability to guide us is a deadly confusion of means and ends), Divest/Invest campaigns, quantifying in monetary terms ecosystem services offered by vital and priceless ecosystem function, circular economy manufacturing processes, impact investing, carbon demand-side reduction targets, more progressive taxation regimes, and on and on. ALL are essential incremental change, part of any ultimate solution. All are important work. But mostly what they accomplish is the extension of our runway, not systemic change, because they do not involve a fundamental change in the way we think. They could lull us into false confidence that we are on the right track. Collectively, they are the result of our intellectually lazy or simply ignorant preference to worship what Paul calls the “false god of moderation,” or simply represent the only way we can have our voices heard. We must see this for what it is, our ongoing 500-year-old Modern Era (and thus deeply ingrained literally into our DNA) reductionist mindset of treating symptoms like carbon emissions rather than seeking and then addressing root causes, holistically understood.

<sup>199</sup> Raskin, 2016, Raskin, et al., 2002.

<sup>200</sup> It is important to note that a global citizens movement, or global civil society, does not mean NGOs that are funded by interests that stand against the creation of global dignity for all. Anthropologist David Harvey, scholar of critical geography, for instance, speaks of “co-revolution,” “co-evolution,” “subversion,” “the movement,” the “Party of Indignation,” or a “slow movement across the spheres.” In his book The Enigma of Capital, Harvey, 2011, introduces seven “activity spheres” – such as technologies and organizational forms; social relations; institutional and administrative arrangements; production and labor processes; relations to nature; human reproduction; and mental conceptions of the world – and describes how capital “revolves through” these spheres “in search of profit”:

Perhaps we should just define the movement, our movement, as anti-capitalist or call ourselves the Party of Indignation, ready to fight and defeat the Party of Wall Street and its acolytes and apologists everywhere, and leave it at that, Harvey, 2011, p. 260.

<sup>201</sup> Michael Bauwens, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 31, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016. Bauwens points at macro-historian Kojin Karatani, 2010/2014, as one voice among others providing maps of civilizational transitions. Karatani suggests that a key element of such transitions is a reconfiguration of modes of exchange, and that a future civilization will have to return to both the commons and reciprocity mechanisms as key drivers for the exchange of human value and natural resources. For the past years, Bauwens has also built on Alan Page Fiske, 1991, and his Structures of Social Life, and on David Ronfeldt, 1996, and his TIMN framework (Tribes, Institutions, Markets, and Networks). Bauwens writes:

Karatani takes a multi-modal approach. This means he recognizes and shows that at least four modes of exchange have existed throughout history and throughout all regions of the world, but what matters is their internal configuration, and especially, what is the dominant mode of exchange in any given system, which acts as an “attractor” for the others. Karatani starts with describing the dominance of pooling in early nomadic societies based on kinship bands, the dominance of reciprocity and the gift economy in tribal federations; the dominance of state and rank-based redistribution (“Authority Ranking”) in pre-capitalist class formations and finally, the dominance of the capitalist market. This means that civilizational transitions, marked by the evolution of one dominant exchange system to another, are regular occurrences in world history, and they are quite systematically described in Karatani’s remarkable synthesis. On the European continent, the two last of such transitions were the 10th transition of the post-Roman plunder economy into the feudal land-based economy, brilliantly described in Robert Moore’s First European Revolution, and the 15th century start of the transition to a market-based economy.

<sup>202</sup> “The Worst Mistake in the History of the Human Race,” by Jared Diamond, Discover Magazine, May 1987, pp. 64–66, www.ditext.com/diamond/mistake.html.

<sup>203</sup> Author Charles Eisenstein in a personal communication on July 26, 2014. The ideas of consensus decision-making, participatory democracy, and prefigurative politics was current in the Occupy movement.

<sup>204</sup> Huntington, 1996.

<sup>205</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 48.

<sup>206</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>207</sup> The missing equipment accounts for around $419.5 million in losses, according to a report, which was issued in late October 2014, and marked “for official use only,” see United States Department of Defense, 2014.

<sup>208</sup> IS, also known as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) and the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS). I resonate with those who use “Da’esh” – the Arabic acronym for the Islamic State in Iraq and Levant – to avoid the word “Islamic” when referring to the militants, see the open letter by Muslim scholars and religious authorities to Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, the leader of IS in Iraq, pointing out in theological terms why his group’s actions are un-Islamic, www.lettertobaghdadi.com/. See also “IS: Neither Islamic Nor State, But Is It a Caliphate?” by Mamoon Alabbasi, Middle East Eye, July 24, 2015, www.middleeasteye.net/in-depth/features/neither-islamic-nor-state-it-caliphate-2004595104.

<sup>209</sup> “Letter from Iraq: What We Left Behind: An Increasingly Authoritarian Leader, a Return of Sectarian Violence, and a Nation Worried for Its Future,” by Dexter Filkins, New Yorker, April 28, 2014, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2014/04/28/what-we-left-behind:

American diplomats in Iraq sent a rare dissenting cable to Washington, complaining that the U.S., with its combination of support and indifference, was encouraging Maliki’s authoritarian tendencies. “We thought we were creating a dictator”...

<sup>210</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>211</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 48.

<sup>212</sup> Greenfeld, 1992, 1996, 2006. See also Hechter, 1992. See more in Lindner, 2009b.

<sup>213</sup> “Erdogan: Sick, Collapsing Europe Will Pay for Humiliating Turkey,” by Selwyn Duke, Observer, April 14, 2017, <http://observer.com/2017/04/recep-tayyip-erdogan-europe-will-pay-for-humiliating-turkey/>.

<sup>214</sup> “Why Turkish Germans Are So Attached to Recep Erdogan,” by Serdar Somuncu, Spiegel Online International, April 22, 2016, www.spiegel.de/international/world/why-turkish-germans-are-so-attached-to-recep-erdogan-a-1088732.html.

<sup>215</sup> Lindner, 2000c, and Lindner, 2000a. See also Smith, 1996, or Greenfeld, 1996. See an illustration of my point in “Arab Women on the Move: Trends - Countertrends,” by Raouf Ebeid, Political Islam Online, November 1, 2009, <http://politicalislam.org/Articles/PI%20570%20Arab%20Women%20on%20the%20Move%20-%20Trends%20-%20Countertrends.pdf>.

<sup>216</sup> Richards, 2016b.

<sup>217</sup> Paul Nieuwenhuis, Cardiff Business School, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 19, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016.

Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions to Section One

<sup>1</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>2</sup> “The World is Over-Armed and Peace Is Under-Funded,” by Ban Ki-moon, United Nations Office for Disarmament

Affairs (UNODA), August 30, 2012, www.un.org/disarmament/update/20120830/. I thank Ingeborg Breines for making me aware of this quote. It is a privilege to have Ingeborg Breines as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

See also the Yearbook by the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), 2016, which confirms the evaluation of the previous year, namely, that the relatively positive trend of the past ten years toward less violence and a more effective conflict management, seems broken.

See “World Military Spending: Increases in the USA and Europe, Decreases in Oil-Exporting Countries,” Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), April 24, 2017, www.sipri.org/media/press-release/2017/world-military-spending-increases-usa-and-europe:

Total world military expenditure rose to $1686 billion in 2016, an increase of 0.4 per cent in real terms from 2015, according to new figures from the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI). Military spending in North America saw its first annual increase since 2010, while spending in Western Europe grew for the second consecutive year. World military expenditure rose for a second consecutive year to a total of $1686 billion in 2016 – the first consecutive annual increase since 2011 when spending reached its peak of $1699 billion. Trends and patterns in military expenditure vary considerably between regions. Spending continued to grow in Asia and Oceania, Central and Eastern Europe and North Africa. By contrast, spending fell in Central America and the Caribbean, the Middle East (based on countries for which data is available), South America and sub-Saharan Africa.

<sup>3</sup> The Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, is an international agreement on the nuclear program of Iran reached in Vienna on July 14, 2015, between Iran, the P5+1 (the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council – China, France, Russia, United Kingdom, United States – plus Germany), and the European Union.

<sup>4</sup> “Truth to Power,” by Noam Chomsky and David McNeill, Japan Times, February 22, 2014, www.japantimes.co.jp/news/2014/02/22/world/noam-chomsky-truth-to-power/.

<sup>5</sup> International Peace Bureau, Geneva, Switzerland, 2016, www.ipb2016.berlin/congress/. I thank the Bureau’s former co-president, Ingeborg Breines for having included me into her work as far back as 1995, when she was the Director of Women and a Culture of Peace at UNESCO, and Special Adviser to the Director-General on Women, Gender and Development. It is a privilege to have Ingeborg Breines as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its inception.

<sup>6</sup> “Disarm! For a Climate of Peace: Creating an Action Agenda,” The International Peace Bureau (IPB) World Congress 2016 on Military and Social Spending, Berlin, September 30, 2016, www.ipb2016.berlin/.

<sup>7</sup> International Peace Bureau, Geneva, Switzerland, 2016, www.ipb2016.berlin/congress/.

<sup>8</sup> See also Storaker, 2016, and Ingeborg Breines’ contribution.

<sup>9</sup> “Hva er en feministisk utenrikspolitikk, temahefte forklart,” by Elisabeth Kristiansen, Fred og frihet, Number 1, 2016, WILPF Norge – Internasjonal kvinneliga for fred og frihet, www.ikff.no/wp-content/uploads/2012/05/Fred-og-frihet-nr-1-2016.pdf, pp. 12–14. I thank Trine Eklund for making me aware of the renewed focus in Scandinavia on establishing a fredsdepartement in Scandinavia. It is a privilege to have Trine Eklund as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>10</sup> As for the United States of America, the idea of a Department of Peace was introduced already for America’s first government in the 1700s by Benjamin Rush. See also hearings before the United States House Committee on Foreign Affairs, United States Congress, 1945. More recently, congressman Dennis Kucinich has kept the idea alive in his political campaigns. For an overview over early peace psychologists, see Rudmin, 1991. It is a privilege to have Floyd Rudmin as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>11</sup> “Commas to Prevent Misunderstanding,” www.ucalgary.ca/uofc/eduweb/grammar/course/punctuation/3\_4j.htm.

<sup>12</sup> See the third of the five axioms of communication by Gregory Bateson, 1972, drawn on by Watzlawick, et al., 1967: The sender and the receiver of information structure the communication flow differently, each seeing their own behavior as a reaction to the other’s behavior.

When I was a psychology student in Hamburg, Germany (1974 – 1978), one of my professors was Friedemann Schulz von Thun, 1981, who built his four-sides model of communication on Watzlawick’s insights and on the three sides of the Organon model by Karl Bühler, 1934/1990. The four sides of communication begin with the “matter layer” pertaining to data and facts, second, there is the layer of self-revealing or self-disclosure of the speaker – intended or not – pertaining to motives, values, or emotions, third, there is the “relationship layer” as it is intended or understood, and, fourth, the “appeal layer” points at what the speaker is aiming at. Every layer can be misunderstood separately. For example, a wife may have prepared a meal and eats it with her husband, when he says: “There is something green in the soup.” On the matter layer he points at something being green, on the self-revealing layer he discloses that he does not know what it is, on the relationship layer he indicates that she certainly knows what it is, and on the appeal layer he asks her to let him know what it is. His wife may understand, on the matter layer, that there is something green, and might infer, at the self-revealing layer, that this makes her husband feel uncomfortable. On the relationship layer she may hear him saying that, in his eyes, she is a bad cook, and, on the appeal layer, that she should leave the green out next time. Ultimately, the wife may reply, irritated: “My God, if you do not like it here, you can eat somewhere else!” Schulz von Thun, 1981, p. 62.

<sup>13</sup> Social anthropologist Paul Connerton, 1989, pp. 2–3:

Concerning memory as such, we may note that our experience of the present largely depends upon our knowledge of the past. We experience our present world in a context which is causally connected with past events and objects, and hence with reference to events and objects which we are not experiencing when we are experiencing the present... our experiences of the present largely depend upon our knowledge of the past, and that our images of the past commonly serve to legitimate a present social order.

See also Connerton, 2009, 2011. I thank Jasna Jozelic, 2006, for reminding me of Connerton’s work.

<sup>14</sup> Connerton, 1989, p. 17: “The production of more or less informally told narrative histories turns out to be a basic activity for characterization of human actions. It is a feature off all communal memory.”

<sup>15</sup> Anderson, 1991.

<sup>16</sup> Connerton, 1989, p. 15.

<sup>17</sup> Raskin, 2016, in resonance with books such as More, 1516–18/2012, Morris, 1890, Fuller, 1981, Berry, 1999, Korten, 2006, Morin, 2011. Also writers such as Peter Frase, 2016, make typologies of possible future – in his case it is communism, rentism, socialism, or exterminism – using two intersecting spectrums, one ranging from inequality to hierarchy and the other from scarcity to abundance. Frase resonates with Walter Benjamin, 1940/1974, and his warning that, as history is controlled by the victors, we are moving backwards into the future, a move that is illusionary. He is joined in these warnings by many others, among them journalists such as Owen Hatherley, 2015, who writes on architecture, politics, and culture.

<sup>18</sup> The noosphere, sometimes written as noösphere, is the sphere of human thought, from the Greek νοῦς, nous, or mind, and σφαῖρα, sphaira, or sphere, in lexical analogy to atmosphere and biosphere. Presumably, it was introduced by mineralogist and geochemist Vladimir Ivanovich Vernadsky (1863 – 1945), and developed further by Jesuit priest-theologian and a distinguished geologist-paleontologist, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin (1881 – 1955) and philosopher Édouard Le Roy (1870 – 1954). Teilhard de Chardin, 1920–1952/1959, taught that humanity, through collective cooperation, can achieve the noosphere, where people refrain from thinking only of themselves, and instead contribute to a universal heightening of consciousness. See “The Cosmic Plenum: Teilhard’s Gnosis: Cosmogenesis,” by Beatrix Murrell, Stoa del Sol, San Diego, CA, www.bizint.com/stoa\_del\_sol/plenum/plenum\_2.html.

<sup>19</sup> Adapted from Lindner, 2006a, pp. 43–44, italics and quotation marks simplified.

<sup>20</sup> Snyder, 2000.

<sup>21</sup> Keen, 1986.

<sup>22</sup> See the Theater Review: “Ulysses as an American Slave,” by Charles Isherwood, New York Times, October 28, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/10/29/theater/father-comes-home-from-the-wars-by-suzan-lori-parks-at-the-public-theater.html?\_r=0.

<sup>23</sup> In Whose Freedom, George Lakoff, 2006b, addresses freedom, “this most beloved of American political ideas”:

Since September 11, 2001, the Bush administration has relentlessly invoked the word “freedom.” Al-Qaeda attacked us because “they hate our freedom.” The U.S. can strike preemptively because “freedom is on the march.” Social security should be privatized in order to protect individual freedoms. The 2005 presidential inaugural speech was a kind of crescendo: the words “freedom,” “free,” and “liberty,” were used forty-nine times in President Bush’s twenty-minute speech.

See also note 211 in the Introduction.

<sup>24</sup> “Human Security in Theory and Practice: An Overview of the Human Security Concept and the United Nations Trust Fund for Human Security, United Nations Human Security Unit, www.un.org/humansecurity/sites/www.un.org/humansecurity/files/human\_security\_in\_theory\_and\_practice\_english.pdf. I am proud of my connection with the Boutros-Boutros Ghali family through Katrina Vrebalovich, daughter of Britt Boutros-Boutros-Ghali.

<sup>25</sup> The Bibliotheca Alexandrina (English: Library of Alexandria) is a major library and cultural center located on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea in the Egyptian city of Alexandria, commemorating the Library of Alexandria that was lost in antiquity. See www.bibalex.org. Ambassador Aly Maher El Sayed is an advisor and official spokesman. I had the privilege of meeting him in Alexandria in 2007. I was invited to give a lecture as part of the pilot course “Young Swedish Muslim Peace Agents,” at the Swedish Institute in Alexandria, Egypt, by its director Jan Henningsson, January 19–27, 2007. See Lindner, 2007c. It is a privilege to have also Jan Henningsson as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>26</sup> Ambassador Aly Maher El Sayed in a personal communication on January 28, 2014. It was a privilege to have Ambassador Aly Maher El Sayed as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. We will always honor his memory.

Appendix

<sup>1</sup> Lindner, 2012e.

<sup>2</sup> Lindner, 2014a.

<sup>3</sup> Lindner, 2013, Lindner and Morrell, 2013, Lindner and Sewchurran, 2013, Richards, et al., 2015a, Lindner, 2015b.

<sup>4</sup> Lindner, 2016a.

<sup>5</sup> Erik Solheim was Minister of International Development when our conversation on humiliation and terrorism took place in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Oslo, Norway, on January 10, 2011. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian:

- A high Norwegian diplomat, an ambassador, once said to me: “You must never humiliate anyone! You make enemies for life. Whatever you think about a person, never humiliating them!” Common sense suggests the very same thing. Being humiliated in the family, for instance, is the most negative disruption that can occur; it hampers any dialogue afterwards.
- What does it mean to humiliate anyone? The answer is that it varies from person to person and culture to culture. However, the feeling is always the same, and this is central!
- In Sri Lanka, in the 1950s, Sinhalese politicians introduced Sinhalese language as the only official language. This was perceived as humiliation on the Tamil side, not least since the Tamil culture sees itself as more important. Tamils look at their culture as the mother culture of all South Indian languages. All other languages are versions of Tamil. Tamils were indeed better educated and more successful in colonial times, and better off. And then suddenly came the Sinhalese and said: “We are the majority! We’ll take over!” There is this famous quote: “A country and two languages, or one language and two countries.”
- Apartheid was systemic humiliation. When Gandhi was not allowed to sit in the first class on the train, it was about humiliation, not the third class’s poor conditions. He was not afraid of simple life, it was the humiliation that was at stake.
- Interestingly enough, the colonial period was perceived as humiliation at the end of the colonial era, at a point when those who had been colonized already were much better off, particularly in Africa (with China and India as exceptions, since they were already wealthier before).
- Tibet is another example. It would be much poorer without China. Tibet would be the poorest place in the region without China. Yet, it perceives it as humiliating to be “forced” into prosperity by China.

<sup>6</sup> Abid Raja is a Norwegian lawyer and politician for the Liberal Party (Venstre). He was born in Oslo into a family of Pakistani descent in 1975. In 2010, he was awarded the Fritt Ord Honorary Award of Freedom of Speech. Our conversation on humiliation and terrorism took place in Oslo on January 10, 2011. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian:

If we reflect on humiliation, then we can say the following:

- First, there are personal experiences of humiliation in the family during childhood and adolescence:

Most youths of immigrant origin who were brought up in Norway, experience violence at home. Research (by the Norsk institutt for forskning om oppvekst, velferd og aldring, NOVA, one of the largest social research institutes in Norway), found that migrant children are beaten at home more than other children. This is a psychological injury that these youths carry. And since it is a collectivist context, one cannot show aggression towards one’s parents, since this is shameful. Therefore these youths hold this aggression within themselves. On top of this comes then humiliation from society at large: Discrimination, racism, at school, everywhere. To top this, there comes rhetoric from politicians that is dis-identifying and leading them away from the community, for example, when politicians suggest that all Muslims should be monitored, or when they claim that Islam is trying to sneak into Norway.

- Second, poverty:

Half of immigrant children in Norway live below the poverty line. Most of their mothers are illiterate. And then there is domestic violence. This represents a potential for deviation. Deviation sociology enters here. Boys fall behind more than girls. It is not just poverty, but relative deprivation: “Here I live in the best country of the world and I feel damn bad!” In other words, his reality is different from that of the others around him.

- Third, religion:

Then comes Islamic rhetoric, such as: “You can repay the humiliation that you as a human being were collectively exposed to (since all Muslims in the world are like your family, your sister, your brother), you see the way we have been humiliated around the world! Now you have God who comes to see you! You can set the accounts straight!” Result: We have potential deviance, combined with Islamic rhetoric, plus the foreign policy reality of the Balkans, Chechnya, Kashmir, Palestine, Iraq, Afghanistan, or wherever Western power can be seen as having oppressed Muslims.

- When these young people radicalize, they “use” the feelings of humiliation that grew in them when they were exposed to poverty and violence during their childhood and to the dis-identifying debates of society at large. When force is used against a person, then this person will show counter-force. Mandela was superhuman in not doing so, but most people will retaliate. It is an experience of powerlessness, which one cannot pay back to one’s family or God or Islam. Retaliation can only be meted out to society.

- Modern politicians do not see this. And researchers have done themselves a disservice in not shouldering the responsibility that they have. Nils Christie, Thomas Matissen, indeed, they are among the few scholars who have highlighted causes, they talk about forgiving and that prison is an industry. At the same time, deviation sociology and criminology have created a distance from society.

Scientists could contribute so much, but have left the arena to other players, as there is the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment, to the research foundation Fafo, or the Norwegian Institute of International Affairs (NUPI). Very few, such as Thomas Hegghammer, have stepped in. Sociology of law, criminology, psychology, sociology of deviance: why are not they involved? The analysis of crime and terrorism must be linked more. Furthermore, just looking at social causes is too simple, the individual has a role in this as well. Individuals who preach radicalization, who run a madrassah, or an equivalent on the Internet, they know about humiliation as a potential resource. One should not be naive! They instrumentalize youths’ humiliation experiences for their purposes.

- There are now many channels for radicalization, one no longer needs to travel to madrassahs in Pakistan, one can radicalize oneself over the Internet, and preachers are brought also to Norway from other countries. See Fahad Qureishi, for example, and islamnet.no. They claim to have 2,000 paying members. They believe that to be for democracy is to be against Islam, since Islam offers divine law and democracy is not Islamic. They hold controversial seminars in university colleges, where they say, for instance, that Jews stood behind September 11, that moderate and symbolic violence against women is permissible, or that for homosexuals the death penalty is needed.

- No child is born evil. But some become evil. It may be that other people have made them evil, not society. A mullah, for example, is not society at large, but a small segment. It means to trivialize crime if it is relativized. And those who have the most expertise, where are they? Where is the Institute of Criminology, for instance? People read newspapers and the “temperature” of fear in society rises. Researchers would have the influence to lower the temperature of the debate, bringing new concepts and de-stigmatize a large group.

- Raja Abid has founded, along with others, minotenk.no. He received the Freedom of Expression award of Fritt Ord. He asks: What does freedom of speech in a society of open debate mean? His reply: We have not explained this well enough to the minority communities. Democracy is not being explained. Equality is overdue for Pakistani women. They arrived forty years ago and are the group that is least integrated. Seven out of ten of these women are not part of the work force. Second-generation women have a higher education, more than average Norwegians, yet, then they have children and may not return to work.

- Many say, “but the number of radicalized people is small!” No! Many Muslims expose Jews to hatred, for instance.

Four values must be emphasized to them:

1. tolerance (for example with respect to homosexuals)
2. equality, and respect for it
3. democracy (as opposed to divine laws)
4. a society of open debate, with freedom of expression.

The Danish cartoon drawings create hatred only because a common platform for conversational dialogue is lacking. The drawings were seen as a slap against Muslims, as warfare by way of the intellectual pen, with the strong reaction that it triggered being instrumentalized as “confirmation” of Islamic “barbarism.” Those who made these drawings, knew about the consequences in Pakistan. If you think that the drafters did not know this, you’re naive. They knew that in Pakistan, most people are illiterate, they cannot react with the pen, just with the sword. And respect for the Prophet is more important for them than even respect for God, since they have a more personal relationship with the Prophet. First, they experience personal and then social humiliation, and then come these drawings on top of this humiliation, as a sophisticated form of terror.

Social democratic moral relativism causes scientists to be too afraid! They suffer from an inferiority complex! They need to shoulder their responsibility!

<sup>7</sup> Sageman, 2008.

<sup>8</sup> Here Aase alluded to the failure of the self-esteem movement, see psychologists Twenge and Campbell, 2009, and their book with the telling title The Narcissism Epidemic: Living in the Age of Entitlement. Psychoanalyst Heinz Kohut has worked on narcissistic injury, see Kohut, 1973, p. 380:

One sees the need for revenge, for righting a wrong, for undoing the hurt by whatever means, and a deeply anchored, unrelenting compulsion in the pursuit of all these aims which gives no rest to those who have suffered a narcissistic injury – these are features which are characteristic for the phenomenon of narcissistic rage in all its forms and which sets it apart from other kinds of aggression.

I thank David Lotto, 2016, for reminding me of this quote.

<sup>9</sup> Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006. See also a qualitative study of biographies of extremists, recommended to me by the security police in Hamburg: Die Sicht der Anderen: Eine qualitative Studie zu Biographien von Extremisten und Terroristen, by Saskia Lützing, 2010, https://haskala.de/wp-content/uploads/2010/09/band40\_die\_sicht\_der\_anderen.pdf.

<sup>10</sup> See also Chowdhury Fink and El-Said, 2011, p. 28.

<sup>11</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 49.

<sup>12</sup> Temarapport: Hvilken bakgrunn har personer som frekventerer ekstreme islamistiske miljøer i Norge før de blir radikaliseret? ekstern rapport, Politets sikkerhetstjeneste (Norwegian Police Security Service, PTS), Oslo, Norway, September 12, 2016, www.pst.no/media/82236/2016\_09\_08\_radikaliseringsprosjektets-rapport\_ugradert.pdf.

<sup>13</sup> Saïda Keller-Messahli expressed this view in the magazine PARDONNEZ-MOI, in TV5Monde, August 6, 2016.

<sup>14</sup> Kepel, 2015. See also Kepel, 2006, 2008, 2016, Kepel and Milelli, 2008.

<sup>15</sup> See, for instance, Bokhari, 2006, Hegghammer, 2006, Lia, 2006, Nesser, 2006, Tønnessen, 2006.

<sup>16</sup> Bokhari, 2006. See also Bokhari, 2010, Cohen and Bokhari, 2011.

<sup>17</sup> Petter Nesser is a senior researcher with the Terrorism Research Group at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI). See Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006. I thank him for sharing his very deep, nuanced, and differentiated insights in Oslo on June 17, 2011. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian:

- The Muslim Brotherhood was inspired by Nazi Germany: According to Muslim apocalypticism, the battles preceding the Day of Judgment will take place in modern Syria, with a final showdown in the year 1500 of the Islamic Hijra calendar, or A.D. 2076. See also Utvik, 2006, and how the Muslim Brotherhood was inspired by Nazi Germany.

Clearly, there are differences between terrorist organizations such as Al-Qaeda and the path of Adolf Hitler. Hitler was without power at first, however, he was able to get into a position of power: “Al-Qaeda will never be in such a position,” explained Nesser.

- The Salafi movement is very diverse, comprising everything from introverted mystics to groups that are political in thinking and action. Al-Qaeda rhetoric may be against politics, but they do want political change. The groups that Nesser studies are very much opposed to the Muslim Brotherhood because they look at them as impure, since they compromise themselves for politics. Original Saudi Arabian Salafist thought combines now with ideologies of violent struggle from the Egypt of the sixties and seventies and the so-called Afghan Arabs.

- There is an interesting merger of two lines of thought, on one side Salafist purity of thought, combined with anti-imperialist theory on the other side. When bin Laden and other ideologists of the movement speak, they sometimes sound like peace researcher Johan Galtung laying out anti-imperialist theory. Yet, as solution they offer Salafist purity of thought, including its most brutal expressions, which entail not just beheadings, but also the usage of more modern tools to be used against infidels, such as nuclear weapons. Even though their rhetoric is anti-globalization, they very pragmatically use globalization mechanisms, saying that being weak justifies the use of all available means.

- Nesser studies the patterns and processes that are needed to form an effective movement. He looks at the roles in a network, how its members met, who took the initiative, how they talked to each other. Nesser differentiates “entrepreneurs,” “protégés,” “misfits,” and “drifters.”

1. The entrepreneurs differ from the rest with respect to several background variables. They are more resourceful and usually older than the others. Osama bin Laden, for instance, was knowledgeable, and, like him, other entrepreneurs give the impression of being learned, particularly about religion. They are skillful speakers, charismatic personalities, and able to control their environment. Some have a higher education.

Tunisian Serhane bin Abdelmajid Fakhed, for instance, the leader of the group that committed the 2004 Madrid train bombings that killed 192 people and injured around 2,000, had a university education, obtained a Spanish government scholarship to pursue a doctorate in economics at one of the best universities in Spain, and was employed in a real estate business, where he was one of the best salesmen in the company.

Djamel Beghal was blessed by Osama Bin Laden; he was a gifted organizer. Nesser read Djamel Beghal's interrogation documents and saw how he was looked up to and admired, how he was seen as a religious authority, how he therefore could convert many to Islam and initiate mass activities. Beghal was inspired by Salafi cleric Abu Qatada from the Four Feathers center in London and took followers to the Al-Qaeda affiliated Derunta training camp in Afghanistan. In March 2005, French authorities convicted Beghal, and during his time in prison he met and mentored fellow prisoner Chérif Kouachi, one of the two brothers who committed the 2015 Charlie Hebdo shooting, as well as Amedy Coulibaly, who carried out the Fontenay-aux-Roses shooting and Porte de Vincennes siege. Or, yet another example, also London's Mohamed Sidique Khan, believed to be the leader responsible for the 2005 London bombings, was a resourceful person with considerable influence. On July 7, 2005, bombs were detonated on three London Underground trains, and on a bus in central London, killing 52 people including the attackers and injuring over 700. Khan himself bombed the Edgware Road train, killing himself and five other people. Or, also Omar Khyam was a good student at school. In 2004, he spearheaded a fertilizer bomb plot in the United Kingdom.

If one looks at the entrepreneurs' psychological motivations, then they seem to have experienced a "moral shock." Such a shock can be elicited in manifold ways, for instance, by graphic film images about injustices committed, altogether movies that provide the opportunity to immerse oneself into injustices and atrocities committed against those one identifies with, be these images real or used for propaganda. Such a shock represents an experience of inner upheaval of indignation, a reaction that presupposes a strong ability to empathize. In the case of Muslims, such images may stem from Bosnia or Palestine or Iraq. (Incidentally, an image from the infamous Abu Ghraib prison in Iraq is on the cover of my book on humiliation in international conflict in 2006.)

Such a moral shock, however, is only the beginning. Many may simply stop there. Political scientist Quintan Wiktorowicz has looked into the process of radicalization that follows, from having a shattering experience to coming into contact, perhaps through social networks, with a culture and a system that transforms one's feelings of anger and frustration, and gives them direction. Once a person has reached this point, and if she shows leadership abilities, she may become a leader.

2. Entrepreneurs have a protégé, explains Nesser, and a protégé is a "small version" of the entrepreneur. Both are intelligent and form the nucleus of a cell. They maintain a close relationship, for instance, they may go on leisure trips together, of which the rest of the group is not part. The entrepreneur will use the protégé to recruit others. When they are arrested, they will not waver. They will hold their ideological position. They have no regrets and will continue fighting no matter what.

3. A third category are the "misfits." They form the bulk of terrorist networks. They are the reason for why the impression has emerged that the core problem of terrorism is unsuccessful integration. In media coverages one reads about those misfits and how they had been subjected to racism, had been looked down on, had altogether a difficult life, which made them vulnerable to sliding into drug abuse and criminality. They are the ones who are being recruited by the entrepreneurs. For the misfits, this will be experienced as a healing process. Group psychology will work for providing them with a sense of belonging. They will enjoy being shown respect by being given tasks, important tasks, such as obtaining weapons or committing violence. When they are arrested, they will explain in which way this process evolved and how they regret it. They will profess that they did not know what they got themselves into, they will bemoan how they were blinded and seduced by being in the presence of those holy warriors, how they were fascinated, and how exciting it was. They will not have a strong ideologically anchoring.

4. The fourth category are the "drifters." It may be that the brother-in-law knows someone who is further connected, with whom one shares social characteristics. Drifters will not have their own agendas, but simply follow their friends. When they are intercepted and interrogated, they will have a propensity to distance themselves: They should have realized what they became part of, yet, they closed their eyes, as they liked to think the best of their friends. They will get low prison sentences, since they were on the periphery, without any strictly relevant information.

- The story of Mohammed Bouyeri illustrates the intricate interplay of all factors. He is a young Dutch-Moroccan man who brutally killed Dutch film director Theo Van Gogh in 2004, after Van Gogh's film Submission had been aired, a film about Islam and its violence against women. Bouyeri first shot Van Gogh eight times, and then, while Van Gogh already was on the ground and called for mercy, Bouyeri walked up to him, calmly shot him several more times at close range, cut Van Gogh's throat and tried to decapitate him with a large knife. Then, just before fleeing, he stabbed him into his chest and attached a note to the body with a smaller knife, a note threatening Ayaan Hirsi Ali, a Somali refugee, who was a Dutch member of parliament at the time and had co-produced the film. Bouyeri had practiced decapitation with sheep before, since he saw it as an important sacred act he needed to perform. A friend reported: "Mohammed Bouyeri became virtually ecstatic when he watched horrifying snuff films."

Now comes the question that Nesser asks: Is this young man a callous brute, no longer a human being, acting beyond comprehension? Or, do we see here a young man who was concerned about the well-being of his social community, who wanted to start a youth club, who lobbied the city council of Amsterdam only to be rejected? This is what Albert Benschop, 2005, found out about him. In other words, we may ask: Do we have here a young man who was keen to achieve something, was repeatedly disappointed, and then lost it? Understanding is not condoning, but understanding may help society plan better prevention.

<sup>18</sup> Tore Bjørgo is professor at the University of Oslo and Director at “Center for Research on Extremism: Right-Wing Extremism, Hate Crime and Political Violence” (CREX). He is also adjunct professor at the Norwegian Police University College (PHS), where he has been professor of police science (since 2004) and research director (2005-2007). I was introduced to him in 1995 by J. Bayo Adekanye, researcher at the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO). It was a privilege to speak with him in his office in Oslo on February 13, 2012. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian:

In his work, Tore Bjørgo describes five main paths into extremism (be it right-wing, left-wing, religious, or otherwise sectarian):

1. victims of mobbing
2. seekers of action and thrill
3. people with a sense of injustice
4. people with a need for belonging and friendship
5. people who identify with the ideology

Ad 1. As to victims of mobbing, they suffer from being humiliated and feeling humiliated, and they are empowered when they wear the outfit of extremists and thus also signal that they are not alone. Second, victims of mobbing also need protection in praxis, something they receive from their extremist peer-group. Third, victims of mobbing, excluded elsewhere, are being included in extremist peer-groups.

Jo-Erling Jahr is a young man who committed a racist motivated murder (Holmlia-drapet) in Norway and was sentenced to 18 years of imprisonment. Jahr had himself been a victim of violence. When he was 14 years old, he was attacked in the train by a group of youth with Somali background who robbed children. As it seems that this event motivated him to seek out a right-wing milieu.

Ad 2. As to seekers of thrill and action, the case of Andrew Wenham in Australia can illustrate it.

Ad 3. As to people with a sense of injustice, some react with right-wing radicalization when they see that asylum seekers receive privileges, for instance, on the housing market or in the health service.

Ad 4. For people with a need for belonging and friendship it is important that extremist peer-groups include them, even though they may be excluded elsewhere.

Ad 5. People who identify with the ideology are the smallest group.

<sup>19</sup> Benjamin Hermansen (1985 – 2001) was a Norwegian-born Ghanaian boy whose father was born in Ghana, his mother was Norwegian. He was stabbed to death at Holmlia in Oslo, Norway, on January 26, 2001, by people from the Neo-Nazi group Boot Boys. Joe Erling Jahr (born 1981) and Ole Nicolai Kvisler (born 1979) were convicted of the murder and sentenced to 16 and 15 years in prison respectively, later this was increased to 18 and 17 years. A third defendant, a young woman, was convicted on a lesser charge.

<sup>20</sup> “Aussie ‘Jihadist’ Andrew Ibrahim Wenham in Norway Mosque Battle,” by Sally Neighbour, The Australian, November 04, 2010, www.theaustralian.com.au/national-affairs/aussie-jihadist-andrew-ibrahim-wenham-in-norway-mosque-battle/story-fn59niix-1225947543380.

<sup>21</sup> Hamed El-Said is professor and chair of International Business and Political Economy at the Manchester Metropolitan University, UK, and has published extensively on the Middle East and North Africa and undertook a secondment to the UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI), where he worked as an Associate Expert on Radicalisation and Extremism. In 2008, he led the research team of the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force’s Working Group on Addressing Radicalisation and Extremism that Lead to Terrorism. His works include El-Said, 2015, Chowdhury Fink and El-Said, 2011, Harrigan and El-Said, 2010, Harrigan and El-Said, 2009. See more on <http://hamedelsaid.co.uk>.

<sup>22</sup> Second Chance in Saudi Arabia – Saudi’s Rehab, documentary film by Francis Mead, United Nations Television, 2011, as part of a series of films made for the UN looking at how and why people leave terror groups. See <http://vimeo.com/23135636>. We thank Ariel Lublin for making me aware of this film by her partner Francis Mead and bringing him to our 2009 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 10-11, 2009. It is a privilege to their support for the work of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

<sup>23</sup> Dr. Hameed Khalil i. Al-Shaygi, <http://faculty.ksu.edu.sa/alshaijy/Pages/cve.aspx>.

<sup>24</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, the section “Children, madmen, criminals, enemies, or subhumans? Which interpretation fits terrorists best?” in Chapter 5: Humiliation and Conflict, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 96–98.

<sup>25</sup> Koenigs, 2007. For those who wish to acquire a feel for the pathways of radicalization, Koenigs recommends Updike, 2006.

<sup>26</sup> Koenigs, 2007, p. 2.

<sup>27</sup> Koenigs, 2007, p. 15:

Al-Qaeda deliberately timed Massoud's assassination to precede the attacks in the United States. Anticipating a US military response, Al-Qaeda assassinated Mullah Omar's arch foe in order both to secure Osama bin Laden's relations with his Taliban protectors, and to eliminate the United States' most obvious partner in any retaliation that they might carry out on Afghan soil.

<sup>28</sup> Norbert Müller is on the board of Schura Hamburg (SCHURA – Rat der islamischen Gemeinschaften in Hamburg e.V.), a merger of mosque associations in Hamburg, Germany. The conversation on humiliation and terrorism with Norbert Müller took place in Hamburg on October 22, 2010. I have summarized and translated our conversation from German:

- One has to understand terrorists, understand “what makes them tick,” rather than demonize them. Forty years ago, Horst Herold (1971 to 1981 president of the Bundeskriminalamt, the Federal Criminal Police Office of Germany), began with profiling and with Rasterfahndung (mass data collection). At that time, he still met criticism with some politicians; today this approach is generally accepted.
- American Muslims are better integrated than German Muslims. In the United States, they are part of the middle class, and the conflict with Islam is purely political. In Europe, the conflict is primarily social, but has been culturalized.
- Migration of Muslims to Germany began forty years ago, starting with the Gastarbeiter (foreign guest workers), and until 1989, the foreigners' issue was discussed only as a social one. Migration research explored working and living conditions, the lack of education, and social disadvantages. Religion did not matter. Islam was not an issue. It was expected that Islam would soon no longer play a role. Islam was seen as part of a “village culture” that would fade. Research was influenced by Marxist perspectives, interpreting conflicts as arising from social conditions. Then, in 1989, Marxism was discredited in science, nobody wanted to be identified as Altlinker (old leftist), or suspected to be paid by the Stasi. One began to look for alternative theoretical approaches. For a while, Francis Fukuyama and his notion of the end of history was in the focus, but then, in the middle of the 1990s, Samuel Huntington came with his notion of the clash of civilizations. This had a major impact. Culture and religion were “discovered.”

Until the 1990s, the understanding in Germany was that it was not an country for immigration and that, therefore, integration was not needed. Those foreign workers would return back home anyway. Today, this view is regarded as a mistake. It is understood that the reality on the ground had been suppressed and denied.

Then, in the 1990s, the SPD-Green coalition (the social democratic and the environmental party coalition) came to power, and it became politically accepted that integration policies were needed. Suddenly, Islam was an issue. “How much Islam can Germany tolerate?” was a heading in the popular magazine Bild. Then came the headscarf conflict, with Mrs. Ludin. All this happened before September 11, 2001, an event that does not have the same impact on Germany as it has on the U.S.

Actually, in hindsight, the early researchers were closer to reality. Today, everything is interpreted and researched through the lens of religion, with at times absurd results. To put it extremely, if a Turk violates a red traffic light, one wonders whether Islam causes the rejection of German traffic regulations.

- In Europe, immigrants came from the rural lower classes, while in the U.S.A., they came from the educated classes. It was costly to let one's children study in the U.S. Those migrants to the United States easily merged into the middle class. Therefore, the conflict with Islam is political in the United States, and not social.

In Germany many Turks arrived from eastern Anatolia. Until the 1970s, they were part of the work force, but with the disappearance of the traditional factory workers, they have lost their economic foundation. When that happened, their educational deficits ought to have been addressed and remedied. Yet, also many immigrants from Turkey themselves believed that they would return to their homeland. They did therefore not endeavor to make it into the middle class, for instance, through education. And their host countries, Germany and France, and other relevant countries in Europe, did nothing to improve this situation either. Therefore, in the 1980s and 1990s, they were left behind economically, together with the German underclass who lives on welfare and without any perspective. These two sub-layers in society have more in common than either has with the German middle class.

- With respect to humiliation, two types can be observed in the jihadist scene in Germany:

1. Those who came from Hamburg and participated in the 9/11 attacks in New York, were highly educated and academically successful. They did not experience social, but discursive humiliation. As academics, they had success, but as people of faith, they felt: “I can make a good career here, but only if I abrogate my heritage and my religion, for my Muslim identity is always degraded. There is a dominant culture here that is Western, and if I am living my religious identity, I experience condescension. And I feel this disdain all the more, since I see myself as a successful graduate.” In this way, humiliation is amplified: “I expect recognition and respect, but experience degradation.”

Müller has friends among Muslim academics from this small group, a Turkish lawyer, for example, thus upper middle class. She feels most alarmed and injured by the Sarrazin debate (Thilo Sarrazin is an author in Germany, who insinuates that German Muslims are of lesser intelligence and capabilities). Müller's friends say: “Sarrazin pulls the life achievement of my parents into the dirt. He says Muslims are incapable whatever they do. Their performance is devalued. I can be a lawyer, business consultant, what profession whatsoever, successfully, still, I am not like the others. I will be reduced and lowered to my origins." Clearly, this applies less to lower class Turks in Germany, because they do not experience the same expectation gap.

2. Then there are the outsiders with criminal backgrounds, petty criminals who were once in jail, young men who then discover religion for themselves and find a holding point there. This is a new-islamization, a re-conversion, just like there are born-again Christians and Muslims, where religion is used as identity reinforcement.

<sup>29</sup> Wolfgang Kaleck is a civil rights attorney and the general secretary for the European Center for Constitutional and Human Rights. I had the privilege of learning from him in Berlin on May 17, 2011. See, among other publications, Kaleck, et al., 2007, and Kaleck, 2016. I have summarized and translated our conversation from German:

- A few years ago, there were only few publications on the topic of transitional justice, now, however, this has changed, and publications are now streaming in. Wolfgang Kaleck's conclusion of his work, and his message, is that justice heals. Legal action does have an effect on the individual and the community. Kaleck works with victims who are either suffering themselves, or their family members, and there are, roughly speaking, two types of reactions he observes: Some victims are grateful and feel that their human dignity has been restituted through legal action, if ever so partial, that they again became a human subject. In Uzbekistan, for instance, the mothers of the disappeared were grateful even though the legal procedures had been stopped. Then, there are victims who continue feeling unsatisfied. In Argentina, for instance, dignity given to the political identity of the individual has increased, in other words, interim results have been achieved, still, there is a strong sense that this is not enough.

- Kaleck recommends looking at the International Center for Transitional Justice (<http://ictj.org/>) with their motto "Justice, Truth, Dignity." This is their vision: "We strive for societies to regain humanity in the wake of mass atrocity. For societies in which impunity is rejected, dignity of victims is upheld, and trust is restored; where truth is the basis of history. We believe that this is an ethical, legal, and political imperative and the cornerstone of lasting peace."

- Kaleck reported that there is no standard model for dealing with the past, but a number of precedents have been established through the work of special rapporteurs and experts of the United Nations on issues of impunity, reparations, and best practices in transitional justice. Principles against impunity were initially formulated by Louis Joinet in 1997, and later revised by Diane F. Orentlicher in 2005. Louis Joinet was a longtime UN expert and one of the main architects behind the Convention against Enforced Disappearances, while Diane Orentlicher is professor of international law and co-director of the Center for Human Rights and Humanitarian Law at Washington College of Law. The "Joinet/Orentlicher" principles are based on the precepts of state responsibility and the inherent right of redress for individual victims of grave human rights violations. See the reports submitted by Theo Van Boven (E/CN.4/Sub.2/1993/8), Louis Joinet (E7CN.4/Sub.2/1997/20/Rev.1), Diane Orentlicher (E/CN.4/2005/102/Add.1), and Cherif Bassiouni (E/CN.4/2000/62). See also Orentlicher, 2016.

- Kaleck also pointed to the work of Beatriz Brinkmann, 1999. Brinkmann's experience in prison in Chile becomes palpable in the article "Belagerungszustand in Chile: Wer ist ein Terrorist?" by Freimut Duve, in Die Zeit, October 31, 1986, <http://pdf.zeit.de/1986/45/wer-ist-ein-terrorist.pdf>. (I thank Freimut Duve for his support for the Global Responsibility Festival "Hamburger Ideenketten" that I organized in Hamburg, Germany, in 1993, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/03.php.) Brinkmann works with the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims (CINTRAS) in Chile, a center for mental health and human rights, that works to alleviate the physical and emotional suffering of persons affected by torture or other forms of political repression. See www.ircct.org.

- Kaleck concluded that, of course, legal tools are not the only means to bring healing, they cannot achieve everything, as they are too limited. What is needed is an interplay between political, cultural, legal means. When the overall goal is human dignity, then criminal law has a door-opening function on two levels. First, if impunity prevails due to political and economic upheavals on the national level, second, international law is often more evolved than law at national levels. In Uruguay and Brazil, for example, previous regimes have announced amnesties to make peace with the military. They are now prompted to rethink these decisions, as these amnesties violated international law.

- Terrorism is a category that is rather discredited in the legal environment, because it is too open to political manipulation: there is the terrorist, then there is the freedom fighter, and there is state terrorism. It makes little sense to continue to expand the concept of terrorism. It is preferable to address relevant events with existing legal instruments. At the national level, this would be arson, homicide, or damage to property, and at the international level, we speak of war crimes and crimes against humanity. Such categories apply to all sides, be it the Taliban, for instance, or Western forces in Afghanistan; in all cases, civilians ought not be harmed.

<sup>30</sup> Aurangzaib Khan, journalist in North Pakistan, in a personal communication on May 3, 2011. I thank Ikhlāq Hussein for having introduced me to Aurangzaib Khan. It is a privilege to have Judit Révész and later also her husband Ikhlāq Hussein as core pillars of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its very inception.

<sup>31</sup> “Pakistan’s Swat Valley: ‘The Land of The Terrorists,’” by Nick Schiffrin, ABC News, January 26, 2008, <http://abcnews.go.com/International/story?id=6731636>.

<sup>32</sup> I thank Shahid Kamal and his wife for receiving me most graciously in their home in Berlin. It is a privilege to have Shahid Kamal as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>33</sup> Lindner, 2000c. It is a privilege to have Gary Page Jones as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>34</sup> See for discussions, among others, Lindner, 2001f, or Lindner, 2015b.

<sup>35</sup> Rogers, 1962.

<sup>36</sup> Prochaska, et al., 1992.

<sup>37</sup> Bandura, 1977.

<sup>38</sup> “Theories of Behavior Change,” Communication for governance and accountability program (Commgap), a global program at the World Bank, Washington, DC, <http://siteresources.worldbank.org/EXTGOVACC/Resources/BehaviorChangeweb.pdf>.

<sup>39</sup> “Participatory Action-Research in Post-Conflict Situations: The Example of the War-Torn Societies Project,” by Agneta M. Johannsen, Berghof Handbook for Conflict Transformation, March 30, 2001, www.berghof-foundation.org/fileadmin/redaktion/Publications/Handbook/Articles/johannsen\_hb.pdf. It is a privilege to be able to benefit from the insights of Norbert Ropers and his colleagues of the Berghof Foundation since 1994.

<sup>40</sup> I thank Matt Bryden for sharing his immense knowledge, experience, and insights with me. It is a privilege to have Matt Bryden as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See for the War-torn Societies Project (1994–1998), www.unrisd.org/unrisd/website/projects.nsf/\(httpProjects\)/0ABD701FB4400BA880256B64003D053B?OpenDocument/0ABD701FB4400BA880256B64003D053B?OpenDocument) :

The War-torn Societies Project aimed to assist the international community and national and local actors to better understand and respond to the complex challenge of rebuilding war-torn societies in post-conflict situations. It encouraged main external and internal actors in these societies to collectively analyze the complex interactions between peace-keeping, relief, rehabilitation and development activities, and between local, national and external actors. Participatory action-research was used as a tool to jointly define policies that could lead to a better integration of different forms of international assistance – humanitarian, economic, political, military – and to a better alignment of such assistance with local and national efforts.

The project was a joint activity of UNRISD and the Programme for Strategic and International Security Studies (PSIS) of the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva. It worked at the country level with Country Project Groups made up of representatives of main internal and external actors, and at the central level with a group of experienced policy makers and operational actors who constitute the project’s stakeholders. The project also worked in close collaboration with national and international research organizations which pursue similar objectives, and operated within the wider network of organizations concerned with post-conflict and peace-building issues. The project is no longer affiliated with UNRISD.

<sup>41</sup> O’Neill, 2007. Maggie O’Neill is based in Criminology and Social Policy at Loughborough University, UK, and it is a privilege to have her as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>42</sup> “Brighton Bombing 25 Years on: Making Friends with My Father’s Killer,” by Chris Hall, The Guardian, October 10, 2009, www.theguardian.com/lifeandstyle/2009/oct/10/brighton-bomb-conservative-anniversary. I am very grateful to Jo Berry for sharing her deep-felt experiences with me.

<sup>43</sup> It is a privilege to have Jo Berry as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. We had our Skype meeting on May 5, 2011, and met again at the Cardozo Law School’s Journal of Conflict Resolution Annual Symposium titled “Negotiating the Extremes: Impossible Political Dialogues in the 21st Century,” in New York City on November 5, 2012.

<sup>44</sup> See also Brown, 2012a.

<sup>45</sup> Arne Næss explained his point at length at the 2nd Annual Meeting of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, September 12–13, 2003, Maison des Sciences de l’Homme de l’Homme, Paris, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting02.php. Næss described in rich detail how he would invite convicted murderers from prison into his philosophy class at Oslo University to demonstrate to his students that even murderers deserve and need to be dignified. He was adamant that only individuals who feel secure in their connection to humanity can admit to a crime, feel guilty, and show remorse. As long as people feel less than fully human, there is no reason for them to care that they have hurt others or society.

<sup>46</sup> Daniel Bar-On, 1989, interviewed children of Nazi criminals and wrote the book titled Legacy of Silence: Encounters with Children of the Third Reich. It was a privilege to have Dan Bar-On as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, and we hold his memory dear.

<sup>47</sup> It is a privilege to have Annette Engler as one of the “Nurturers of Dignity” in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>48</sup> Ford, 2017.

Section Two

<sup>1</sup> Camus, 1951.

<sup>2</sup> “A Question of Honour,” by Suzanne Goldenberg, The Guardian, May 27, 1999, www.theguardian.com/world/1999/may/27/gender.uk1.

<sup>3</sup> “Humiliation Is the Root of All Terrorism,” by Tikkun editor at large Peter Gabel, TruthOut, December 16, 2015, www.truth-out.org/speakout/item/34062-humiliation-is-the-root-of-all-terrorism. I thank Seymour M. (Mike) Miller and Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>4</sup> “The Humiliation Factor,” by Thomas Friedman, New York Times, November 9, 2003, section 4, p. 11, www.nytimes.com/2003/11/09/opinion/the-humiliation-factor.html. See also “Connect the Dots,” by Thomas L. Friedman, New York Times, September 25, 2003, www.nytimes.com/2003/09/25/opinion/connect-the-dots.html:

Sure, poverty doesn’t cause terrorism – no one is killing for a raise. But poverty is great for the terrorism business because poverty creates humiliation and stifled aspirations and forces many people to leave their traditional farms to join the alienated urban poor in the cities—all conditions that spawn terrorists.

<sup>5</sup> A young man in France, of Arab background talks to anthropologist Scott Atran, one of the few experts who spoke directly with Al-Qaeda fighters. In “The Arena: What drives Westerners to fight for ISIL?” Al Jazeera, September 11, 2015, www.aljazeera.com/programmes/upfront/2015/09/arena-drives-westerners-fight-isil-150911150353299.html. I thank Sultan Somjee for making me aware of this interview. It is a privilege to have Sultan Somjee as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>6</sup> Faisal Shahzad, the suspect in the failed car bombing in New York’s Times Square, Pakistani-born naturalized U.S. citizen, was frustrated with the state of the Muslim world and sought a way to “fight back.” CNN obtained two e-mails, he sent to a large group of recipients in February 2006. Read the full e-mail at <http://i2.cdn.turner.com/cnn/2010/images/05/17/shahzad.pdf>. See “E-Mails Paint Times Square Suspect As Frustrated Muslim,” by Susan Candiotti, CNN, May 18, 2010, <http://edition.cnn.com/2010/CRIME/05/17/times.square.suspect.emails/>.

<sup>7</sup> “When Generosity Hurts: Bill Gates, Public School Teachers and the Politics of Humiliation,” by Henry A. Giroux, TruthOut, October 5, 2010, <http://truth-out.org/archive/component/k2/item/92120:when-generosity-hurts-bill-gates-public-school-teachers-and-the-politics-of-humiliation>. I thank Brian Ward for having made us aware of this article. See for Giroux’s other publications, among others: Di Leo, et al., 2013, Giroux, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014b, a, Nikolakaki, 2012. It is a privilege to have Brian Ward as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I very much thank him and his family for hosting me during our 2011 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Enlarging the Boundaries of Compassion,” in Dunedin, New Zealand, August 29 – September 1, 2011, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/17.php

Introduction to Section Two

<sup>1</sup> Banaz: A Love Story, documentary film directed and produced by Deeyah Khan, 2012, <https://youtu.be/VepuyvHYdM>. The film chronicles the life and death of Banaz Mahmod, a young British Kurdish woman killed in 2006 in South London on the orders of her family in a so-called honor killing. It is a privilege to have Deeyah Khan as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>2</sup> Ahmad Manour Vis-à-vis, Talk with Frank A. Meyer, 3sat, February 1, 2016, www.3sat.de/mediathek/?mode=play&obj=56762. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe. See also Mansour, 2015. See also Lindner, 2000a.

<sup>3</sup> Hafez, 2007b, pp. 111–112. See also Hafez, 2003, 2007a. See, furthermore, Garber, et al., 2011, Lankford, 2009, 2013.

<sup>4</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 34–36. German original in Suttner, 1889, pp. 12–13:

Das war nun eine aufgeregte Zeit. Der Krieg “ist ausgebrochen.” Man vergißt, daß es zwei Haufen Menschen sind, die miteinander raufen gehen, und faßt das Ereignis so auf, als wäre es ein erhabenes, waltendes Drittes, dessen “Ausbruch” die beiden Haufen zum Raufen zwingt. Die ganze Verantwortung fällt auf diese außerhalb des Einzelwillens liegende Macht, welche ihrerseits nur die Erfüllung der bestimmten Völkerschicksale herbeigeführt. Das ist so die dunkle und ehrfürchtige Auffassung, welche die meisten Menschen vom Kriege haben... Diese gehobene, wichtigkeitsüberströmende Stimmung war übrigens die allgemeine herrschende. Man sprach von nichts Anderem in den Salons und auf den Gassen; las von nichts Anderem in den Zeitungen, betete für nichts Anderes in den Kirchen: wo man hinkam, überall dieselben aufgeregten Gesichter und die gleichen lebhaften Besprechungen der Kriegseventualitäten. Alles Übrige, was sonst das Interesse der Leute wach hält: Theater, Geschäfte, Kunst –, das wurde jetzt als ganz nebensächlich betrachtet. Es war einem zu Mute, als hätte man gar kein Recht, an etwas Anderes zu denken, während dieser große Weltschicksalsauftritt sich abspielte. Und die verschiedenen Armeebefehle mit den bekannten siegesbewußten und ruhmverheißenden Phrasen; und die unter klingendem Spiel und wehenden Standarten abmarschierenden Truppen; und die in loyalstem und patriotisch glühendstem Tone gehaltenen Leitartikel und öffentlichen Reden; dieser ewige Appell an Tugend, Ehre, Pflicht, Mut, Aufopferung; diese sich gegenseitig gemachten Versicherungen, daß man die bekannt unüberwindlichste, tapferste, zu hoher Machtausdehnung bestimmte, beste und edelste Nation sei: alles dies verbreitet eine heroische Atmosphäre, welche die ganze Bevölkerung mit Stolz erfüllt und in jedem Einzelnen die Meinung hervorruft, er sei ein großer Bürger einer großen Zeit.

<sup>5</sup> Fromm, 1941.

<sup>6</sup> Terror management theory was originally proposed by Jeff Greenberg, Sheldon Solomon, and Tom Pyszczynski. See the first complete formal statement of terror management theory including epistemological assumptions and proposal for an experimental existential psychology in Solomon, et al., 1991, and more recent publications related to the events of September 11, 2001, Pyszczynski, et al., 2003.

<sup>7</sup> Cultural anthropologist Ernest Becker, 1973, wrote about this in his book The Denial of Death.

<sup>8</sup> I had the privilege of being invited, together with Tom Pyszczynski, one of the fathers of terror management theory, to the NATO Advanced Research Workshop “Indigenous Terrorism: Understanding and Addressing the Root Causes of Radicalisation among Groups with an Immigrant Heritage in Europe,” in Budapest, Hungary, in March 7–9, 2008, see Lindner, et al., 2009, in the proceedings.

<sup>9</sup> Pyszczynski, et al., 2006.

<sup>10</sup> Moghaddam, 2004, p. 112.

<sup>11</sup> Shay, 1995, 2002, 2014. See also Herman, 2001. Listen to Shay’s talk at the Narrative Medicine VA Workshop, Columbia University Medical Center, March 9, 2012, “Dr. Jonathan Shay – “Moral Injury,” published on April 27, 2012, https://youtu.be/XBkCg6\_ISpQ. I thank Mark Singer for reminding me of Jonathan Shay’s work.

<sup>12</sup> Jonathan Shay in his talk at the Narrative Medicine VA Workshop, Columbia University Medical Center, March 9, 2012, “Dr. Jonathan Shay – “Moral Injury,” published on April 27, 2012, https://youtu.be/XBkCg6\_ISpQ.

<sup>13</sup> “Suicide Rate Spikes Among Young Veterans,” by Leo Shane III, Stars and Stripes, January 9, 2014, www.stripes.com/report-suicide-rate-spikes-among-young-veterans-1.261283. Researchers found that the risk of suicide for veterans is 21 percent higher when compared to civilian adults. From 2001 to 2014, as the civilian suicide rate rose about 23.3 percent, the rate of suicide among veterans jumped more than 32 percent. See the “VA Suicide Prevention Program Facts about Veteran Suicide,” U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, July 2016, www.va.gov/opa/publications/factsheets/Suicide\_Prevention\_FactSheet\_New\_VA\_Stats\_070616\_1400.pdf.

<sup>14</sup> Shay, 2011, p. 181.

<sup>15</sup> “The Salem Award for Human Rights and Social Justice: Dr. Jonathan Shay: Advocating for Veterans,” <http://salemaward.org/jonathan-shay-97.html>.

<sup>16</sup> Litz, et al., 2009.

<sup>17</sup> Shay, 2014.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid.

<sup>19</sup> James Edward Jones, 2006, paper presented at the 2006 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 14–15, 2006:

Persons affected by the PVEE syndrome often defend, minimize and/or rationalize the most outrageous attitudes held and acts carried out by themselves or members of their particular group. When you talk to such people, you will quickly find that the reason that they take such a usually untenable position is because “their people” either are or have been victimized by one or more other groups. This is the golden rule turned on its head: “Do bad unto others because they (or someone else) did something bad to you.” It is a deceptively simple and somewhat pervasive point of view...

It is a privilege to have James Edward Jones as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>20</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>21</sup> Alex Schmid, 2013, p. 1:

The popularity of the concept of “radicalization” stands in no direct relationship to its actual explanatory power regarding the root causes of terrorism. It was brought into the academic discussion after the bomb attacks in Madrid and London in 2004 and 2005 by European policymakers who coined the term “violent radicalization.” It has become a political shibboleth despite its lack of precision.

See also The Routledge Handbook of Terrorism Research edited by Schmid, 2011. See also Hansen, 2012, who indeed found radical rhetoric among people in Pakistan, which was, however, not accompanied by a desire for extremist action. David Hansen holds a Ph.D. in South Asian Studies from the University of Oslo in Norway, and foresees that the terror threat from the Taliban will get people to acknowledge that the Taliban’s version of Islam is not theirs.

<sup>22</sup> John Horgan at the START conference at the University of Maryland, College Park, September 1, 2011, quoted in Schmid, 2013, p. 17.

<sup>23</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 37. See also Kundnani, 2012.

<sup>24</sup> McCauley and Moskalenko, 2011. It is a privilege to have McCauley as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>25</sup> Kundnani, 2012, p. 20, Schmid, 2013, p. 4.

<sup>26</sup> Schmid, 2013, footnote 10. See also Awan, et al., 2011, p. 1.

<sup>27</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>28</sup> See Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>29</sup> Leo Tolstoy (1828 – 1910), in Tolstoy, 1894.

<sup>30</sup> Ury, 1999, p. 108. It is a privilege to have William Ury as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>31</sup> Homo sapiens might have appeared even earlier, as far back as 300,000 years ago. See “Oldest Homo Sapiens Fossil Claim Rewrites Our Species’ History,” by Ewen Callaway, Nature, June 7, 2017, www.nature.com/news/oldest-homo-sapiens-fossil-claim-rewrites-our-species-history-1.22114. Remains from Morocco dated to 315,000 years ago push back our species’ origins by 100,000 years — and suggest we didn’t evolve only in East Africa.

<sup>32</sup> Pettit, 1997a.

<sup>33</sup> Riane T. Eisler, social scientist and activist, has developed a cultural transformation theory through which she describes how otherwise widely divergent societies followed what she calls a dominator model rather than a partnership model during the past millennia. See Eisler, 1987, and her most recent book Eisler, 2007.

<sup>34</sup> In his cultural dimensions theory, Hofstede, 2001, describes national cultures along six dimensions: power distance, individualism, uncertainty avoidance, masculinity, long term orientation, and indulgence versus restraint. I resonate with Anthony Marsella who warns that Hofstede’s dimensions are Western constructions and do not capture the dimensions of indigenous peoples: “The oppositional dimensions are often a continuum,” Anthony Marsella, in a personal communication to Louise Sundararajan’s indigenous psychology group on February 11, 2017. I also appreciate Michael Harris Bond’s cautionary words: “As for teaching and learning, I have always appreciated Hofstede’s attempt to apply his initial four dimensions to the instructional dynamic that he wrote in 1986 for the International Journal of Intercultural Relations. No data beyond his wide personal experience, but lots of testable hypotheses on offer. As for whether the “Western” approach of dimensionalizing [rating along a scale the degree of an operationalized construct] makes sense or whether it defeats any attempt to scientize indigenous constructs, I would be eager to hear what the alternative approach might be if we are doing social science...” Michael Harris Bond, in a personal communication to Louise Sundararajan’s indigenous psychology group on February 15, 2017. See Bond, 1986, Hofstede, 1986. It is a privilege to have Anthony Marsella and Michael Harris Bond as esteemed members in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship from its inception.

<sup>35</sup> Hafez, 2007b, pp. 111–112. See also Hafez, 2003, 2007a.

Chapter 6

<sup>1</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, p. 118. German original, Suttner, 1889, p. 68:

Glauben Sie denn, Baronin, daß es unseres Amtes ist, den ewigen Frieden zu erhalten? Das wäre allerdings eine schöne Mission – aber unausführbar. Wir sind nur da, über die Interessen unserer respektiven Staaten und Dynastien zu wachen, jeder drohenden Verringerung ihrer Machtstellung entgegenzuarbeiten und jede mögliche Suprematie zu erringen trachten, eifersüchtig die Ehre des Landes hüten, uns angethanen Schimpf rächen –.

<sup>2</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 254–255. German original, Suttner, 1889, pp. 153:

Der Krieg wird als ein notwendiges Übel hingestellt (also doch Übel – ein Zugeständnis dem Geiste der Zeit), zugleich aber als der vorzüglichste Erwecker der schönsten menschlichen Tugenden, die da sind: Mut, Entsagungskraft und Opferwilligkeit, als der Spender des größten Ruhmesglanzes, und schließlich als der wichtigste Faktor der Kulturentwicklung. Die gewaltigen Eroberer und Gründer der sogenannten Weltreiche – die Alexander, Cäsar, Napoléon – werden als die erhabensten Beispiele menschlicher Größe angeführt und der Bewunderung empfohlen; die Erfolge und Vorteile des Krieges werden auf das lebhafteste herausgestrichen, während man die in seinem Gefolge unabweisbar eintretenden Nachteile – Verrohung, Verarmung, moralische und physische Entartung – gänzlich mit Stillschweigen übergeht.

<sup>3</sup> German original: On September 23, 1916, Max Weber wrote in a letter to Hans Schnitger, uncle of Marianne Weber: “Der Tod für das Vaterland ist der einzige, bei dem der Mensch sicher ist, für ein irdisches Gut zu sterben, welches Dessen wert ist... Der Krieg ist ‘die dunkle Erhabenheit dieser größten aller Prüfungen,’” quoted in Bruhns, 2014, p. 61, translated from German by Lindner.

<sup>4</sup> Bruhns, 2014.

<sup>5</sup> Bruhns, 2014, p. 63. See also Gilad and Junginger, 2010, or www.clausewitz.org.

<sup>6</sup> Kissinger, 1957. See also “Ich, Sohn des Glücks,” by Michael Stürmer, Die Welt, October 29, 2005, www.welt.de/print-welt/article174042/Ich-Sohn-des-Gluecks.html:

Österreichs Staatskanzler Metternich den Kaiser in Dresden auf. Metternich wollte Österreich, ausgeblutet und bankrott, einen weiteren Krieg ersparen und bot an, Ausgleich zu vermitteln. Der Kaiser aber wollte davon nichts wissen und enthüllte, wie nebenbei, das Geheimnis seiner Macht: “Eh bien, was will man von mir. Daß ich mich entehre? Nimmermehr! Ich werde zu sterben wissen, aber ich trete keine Handbreit Boden ab. Eure Herrscher, geboren auf dem Throne, können sich zwanzig Mal schlagen lassen und kehren doch immer wieder in ihre Residenzen zurück. Das kann ich nicht, ich, der Sohn des Glücks. Meine Herrschaft überdauert den Tag nicht, an dem ich aufgehört habe, stark und folglich gefürchtet zu sein.”

See also Neues vom Wiener Kongress, documentary film by Roswitha und Ronald P. Vaughan, 2014, <http://tv.orf.at/orf3/stories/2674402/>.

<sup>7</sup> See, among others, Kissinger, 1957, Price, 2012, Mühler, 2015.

<sup>8</sup> Déroulede, 1872, quoted in Rutkoff, 1981, p. 161. I thank Thomas Scheff for making me aware of this work.

<sup>9</sup> This treaty included the now infamous war-guilt clause imposing complete responsibility for the war on the Germans and demanding that they “make complete reparation for all... loss and damage” caused: “The Allied and Associated Governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the Allied and Associated Governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies,” Versailles Treaty 1919, part VIII, section I, article 231. See also Haffner, 1978, and Elias, 1996, or Mann, 2004b.

<sup>10</sup> “Responses: The Humiliation Myth: Humiliation Doesn’t Explain Terrorism; the Spread of Political Islam Does. A Response to Peter Bergen and Michael Lind,” by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Spring 2007, Number 4, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/4/the-humiliation-myth/>.

<sup>11</sup> “Humiliation and Terrorism: Goldhagen’s Analysis,” by Richard Landes, The Augean Stables, March 27, 2007, www.theaugenstables.com/2007/03/27/humiliation-and-terrorism-goldhagens-analysis/.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid.

<sup>13</sup> On January 25, 1932, Adolf Hitler wrote an open letter to Heinrich Brüning (1885 – 1970), a German Center Party politician and academic, who served as Chancellor of Germany during the Weimar Republic from 1930 to 1932. The letter was published in Völkischer Beobachter, Number 29, January 29, 1932:

Die unerbittliche Handhabung aber dieses Vertrages, die, wie Sie meinen, in den ersten fünf Jahren jeden deutschen Wiederaufbau zerstörte, wäre ganz unmöglich gewesen, wenn nicht gewisse "deutsche" Parteien zu jeder Erpressung, Schmach und Schande ihre Zustimmung gegeben hätten.

<sup>14</sup> Historian Ian Kershaw, 2011, describes how the German refusal to surrender and to accept defeat would eventually lead to the deaths of millions.

<sup>15</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 210–211. See also "Carriers of Cosmology," by Johan Galtung, Princeton University, Center of International Studies, November 1986, www.transcend.org/galtung/papers/Carriers%20of%20Cosmology.pdf.

<sup>16</sup> Kaufman, 2001, p. 212.

<sup>17</sup> Lindner, 2000c, Lindner, 2006a, Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, quoted in Vambheim, 2016, p. 20. Peace researcher Vidar Vambheim draws on the notion of memes, introduced by evolutionary biologist Richard Dawkins, 2006, analogous to genes, to characterize cultural codes. Memes are seen as cultural replicators that survive, reproduce and proliferate in a meme pool. It is a privilege to have Nils Vidar Vambheim as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>18</sup> Galtung, 1996, Galtung, et al., 2000. See also Galtung's description of the Dichotomy-Manicheism-Armageddon (DMT) syndrome at "Cultural Peace: Some Characteristics," by Johan Galtung, Transcend articles, October 12, 2003, www.transcend.org/files/article121.html. See also "Expert Colloquy – Dialogue Serving Intercultural and Inter-Religious Communication – Strasbourg," Council of Europe, October 7–9, 2002, interview with Johan Galtung, www.coe.int/T/E/Com/Files/Events/2002-10-Intercultural-Dialogue/Interview\_galtung.asp. See, furthermore, LeShan, 1992.

<sup>19</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 20. Peace researcher Vambheim describes Galtung's work on civilization and violence as an "impressionistic" approach to the problem, see Galtung, 1996, pp. 197–274. Vambheim also points at Alice Miller's insights of how direct and indirect violence in childhood may spawn the projection of evil mental content onto others and violence later in adulthood, resulting in atrocities like mass-murder in war, see Miller, 1980/2002, Miller, 2006a.

<sup>20</sup> Jihad: A Story of the Others, documentary film by Deeyah Khan, 2015, <http://fuuse.net/jihad-a-story-of-the-others/>. See also "Popstjernen som slo tilbake," by Hanne Skartveit, VG, September 19, 2015, www.vg.no/nyheter/meninger/islam-debatten/popstjernen-som-slo-tilbake/a/23527457/. VG, Verdens Gang (the course of the world), is a Norwegian tabloid newspaper. See the debate after the Norwegian premiere of the film on August 25, 2015, on <https://youtu.be/AfyweFfQA-w>.

See also Ein Sommer im Dschihad, documentary film by Panorama, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, July 28, 2015, www.daserste.de, <https://youtu.be/7eDbRhP5Ky4>. Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg. Ebrahim B. is a young man from Wolfsburg in Germany and he is the first German Da'esh-returnee who talks openly in front of a camera. He now distances himself from Da'esh. He explains, translated from the German original by Lindner:

"When you go there, you're dead," says Ebrahim B. "I want to explain," says Ebrahim B., "not only in my city, not just in Germany and not only in Lower Saxony, not only in Europe, but worldwide, I wish that the truth becomes known." The truth about what he has experienced, the truth about the IS, the terror of the 'Islamic State'. Ebrahim B. has seen it. He was in Syria and Iraq and has voluntarily reported as suicide bomber according to the German Federal Attorney General. He is one of about 700 Germans who have joined the IS so far. But at some point it has probably done "click" for him, and has turned around.

German original text:

"Wenn du dahin gehst, bist Du tot," sagt Ebrahim B. Der Wolfsburger ist der erste deutsche IS-Rückkehrer, der offen vor einer Kamera spricht. Er distanziert sich vom IS. "Ich habe das Bedürfnis, vieles zu erklären," sagt Ebrahim B. "Nicht nur in meiner Stadt, nicht nur in Deutschland und nicht nur in Niedersachsen, nicht nur in Europa, sondern weltweit möchte ich, dass die Wahrheit ankommt." Die Wahrheit über das, was er erlebt hat, die Wahrheit über den IS, den Terror des 'Islamischen Staats'. Ebrahim B. hat ihn erlebt. Er war in Syrien und im Irak und hat sich laut Erkenntnissen der Bundesanwaltschaft freiwillig als Selbstmordattentäter gemeldet. Er ist einer von etwa 700 Deutschen, die sich bislang dem IS angeschlossen haben. Doch irgendwann hat es wohl Klick gemacht, und er ist umgekehrt.

<sup>21</sup> Read about the psychology of terrorism in Post, 2007, and on its history in Blin and Chaliand, 2007, White, 2014, and on research on terrorism in Schmid, 2011.

<sup>22</sup> See, among others, the work done by Ted Gurr, 1970, 1993, 2000.

<sup>23</sup> See, among others, Stewart, 2008. Stewart explains the difference between relative deprivation and horizontal inequalities (HI), in “Horizontal Inequalities As a Cause of Conflict: A Review of CRISE Findings,” by Frances Stewart, Centre for Research on Inequality, Human Security and Ethnicity, <http://r4d.dfid.gov.uk/pdf/outputs/inequality/crise-overview-1.pdf>:

...the HI hypothesis differs from relative deprivation in its view that the relatively rich, as well as the relatively poor, may initiate conflict. In Burundi, for example, the Tutsi have attacked the poorer Hutu; and the relatively rich area of Biafra initiated the Nigerian Civil War of the late 1960s. Such incidents seem to be motivated by fear that an existing situation is not sustainable without force and that the relative prosperity of the group is, or may be, subject to attack.

<sup>24</sup> Kennedy, 2007. See also Khalidi, 2004.

<sup>25</sup> “Defending Islamofascism: It’s a Valid Term. Here’s Why,” by Christopher Hitchens, Slate, October 22, 2007, www.slate.com/articles/news\_and\_politics/fighting\_words/2007/10/defending\_islamofascism.html.

<sup>26</sup> Holmes, 2007, p. 63.

<sup>27</sup> Nietzsche, 1887/2013.

<sup>28</sup> Holmes, 2007, p. 64.

<sup>29</sup> Thomas Scheff, in a personal communication, in Oslo, Norway, on October, 23, 2002. Lower classes adopted dueling as an expression of equality in the United States by the Jacksonian Era, see Steward, 2000.

<sup>30</sup> Gottman, et al., 1997. Wilce, 2009.

<sup>31</sup> Etzioni, 2013.

<sup>32</sup> Singer, et al., 2006, in their research on empathic neural responses shows that “empathy-related responses were significantly reduced in males when observing an unfair person receiving pain.” Abstract:

This effect was accompanied by increased activation in reward-related areas, correlated with an expressed desire for revenge. We conclude that in men (at least) empathic responses are shaped by valuation of other people’s social behavior, such that they empathize with fair opponents while favoring the physical punishment of unfair opponents, a finding that echoes recent evidence for altruistic punishment.

<sup>33</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>34</sup> Volkan, 2004. See also Volkan, 1997.

<sup>35</sup> See anthropologist and Somalia expert Ioan Lewis, 1961. I had the great privilege of meeting Ioan Lewis at his home in London and learn from him on May 31, 1999, together with Dennis Smith.

<sup>36</sup> “Neighbour Quarrels Hit New Extreme,” by Nina Berglund, News in English, April 11, 2014, www.newsinenglish.no/2014/04/11/neighbour-quarrels-hit-new-extreme/. See also Lindner, 2011, or Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>37</sup> Matsumoto, 1988, and Ide, 1989. It is a privilege to have David Matsumoto as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>38</sup> Ho, 1976. It is a privilege to have David Yau Fai Ho as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also his book published by our Dignity Press, Ho, 2014.

<sup>39</sup> Victoria Fontan at the 2003 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, September 12–13, 2003, at the Maison des Sciences de l’Homme de l’Homme, in Paris; see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting02.php. She discusses sharaf, ihitiram, and ird also in Chapter 1 in Fontan, 2008. See also Johnson, 2001. Victoria Fontan hosted the 2006 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, September 6–9, 2006, at the United Nations-mandated University for Peace in San José, Costa Rica; see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting07.php. It is a privilege to have Victoria Fontan as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>40</sup> Sociologist Wilhelm Heitmeyer defines three dimensions in which recognition can be attained, dimensions that follow a similar path of differentiation as that described by Victoria Fontan in Iraq, formulating them, however, in a Western context: the sociostructural dimension of material goods can generate opportunities for positional recognition, the institutional dimension of fairness and justice can offer opportunities for moral recognition, while the personal dimension can provide opportunities for emotional recognition. See, among others, Heitmeyer, et al., 2011.

<sup>41</sup> “The Effects of Humiliation on The Economic, Socio-Cultural Rights and Access to Justice of Muslim Women in Mindanao,” by Imelda Deinla, Jessica Los Baños, contribution to Terrorism and Humiliation: Why People Choose Terrorism, envisioned as a large research project in 2005, prepared by Evelin Lindner and Paul Stokes, invited by Ramesh Thakur, United Nations University (UNU), Tokyo, with nine research teams of young scholars and their academic advisors. Due to lack of finances, this project could not be realized.

I would like to thank Lourdes Quisumbing and Patricia Licuanan for their insights at the UNESCO expert meeting “Towards a Women’s Agenda for a Culture of Peace,” April 25–18, 1995, invited by Ingeborg Breines and supported by Betty Reardon. See also Lindner, 1999. It is a privilege to have Ingeborg Breines and Lourdes Quisumbing as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I also thank Betty Reardon for her untiring support for our dignity work.

<sup>42</sup> Schwartz, et al., 1984, Kingston and Wright, 2010, Appiah, 2010.

<sup>43</sup> Alexander Hamilton, whose portrait appears on ten dollar notes, died in a duel in 1804, and Andrew Jackson, who adorns the 20 dollar bill, was seriously wounded in two duels.

<sup>44</sup> Steward, 2000.

<sup>45</sup> Steward, 2000.

<sup>46</sup> Kagan, 1997. See also Hooper, 2001.

<sup>47</sup> Goffman, 1955, Goffman, 1967.

<sup>48</sup> Social psychologist Bert R. Brown, 1968, carried out experiments which showed that “when bargainers have been made to look foolish and weak before a salient audience, they are likely to retaliate against whoever caused their humiliation. Moreover, retaliation will be chosen despite the knowledge that doing so may require the sacrifice of all or large portions of the available outcomes,” Brown, 1968, p. 119.

<sup>49</sup> Lévinas, 1961/1969, 1982, 1985b, a.

<sup>50</sup> “Albania’s Young Blood Feud ‘Hostages,’” BBC News, news.bbc.co.uk/go/pr/fr/-/2/hi/europe/7727658.stm, November 11, 2008. See other evidence relating to blood feuds in Boehm, 1987, Malcolm, 1998, or Rodina, 1999.

<sup>51</sup> Benedict, 1946. See also Tangney, 1990, Tangney and Dearing, 2002, Tangney, et al., 1992.

<sup>52</sup> Doi, 1973/2001.

<sup>53</sup> Lindner, 2007d. See also Creighton, 1990, or Behrens, 2004.

<sup>54</sup> Scholars who analyzed slavery note that sometimes a very special accommodation-resistance dialectic of obeying but not necessarily complying evolved, which allowed slaves to carve out a degree of autonomous and very distinctive culture, which eschewed the values embraced by the master class. See, for instance, Engerman and Genovese, 1975, and Smith, 1998.

<sup>5555</sup> Dower, 1999, p. 157.

<sup>56</sup> See, among others, Patai, 1983, De Atkine, 2004. Raphael Patai’s book on the Arab Mind allegedly inspired US military officials responsible for the torture and abuse of prisoners at Abu Ghraib that “Arabs are particularly vulnerable to sexual humiliation.” See “The Gray Zone: How a secret Pentagon program came to Abu Ghraib,” by Seymour M. Hersh, New Yorker, Annals of National Security May 24, 2004, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2004/05/24/the-gray-zone.

<sup>57</sup> Roland Muller, 2001, uses the Bible to introduce honor, shame, and fear-based cultures:

- guilt-innocence: mostly in the Western world.
- shame-honor: mostly in non-Western areas, such as Asia, South America and the Middle East.
- fear-power: mostly associated with Africa, and parts of South America and Asia.

See “Fear, Shame and Guilt,” by Mark Naylor, Cross Cultural Impact for the 21st Century, Articles on cross-cultural issues, Bible translation etc., August 1, 2010, <http://impact.nbseminary.com/89-fear-shame-and-guilt/>:

...believers who seek to communicate the significance of the cross of Christ across cultural barriers will need to be aware of the cultural values and perspectives of the people they are addressing in order to discover appropriate metaphors that reveal the gospel message in a way that speaks to their felt needs. In this article, I use Roland Muller’s three cultural dichotomies as a model towards analyzing cultures for the purpose of discovering an explanation of the atonement that will connect with the hearers.

<sup>58</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber’s three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

See also Karlberg, 2013. He explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality, see Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>59</sup> See, among others, the work of social anthropologist and historian Anton Blok, 1972, Blok, 2001. See also “Lunch with the FT: Elisabetta Tripodi,” by John Lloyd, Financial Times, January 10, 2014, <https://next.ft.com/content/d41e19ce-785e-11e3-a148-00144feabdc0>.

See, furthermore, Die Frauen der Mafia (Women of Ndrangheta), documentary film by Barbara Conforti, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, 2016, www.zdf.de/ZDFmediathek/beitrag/video/2646728/Die-Frauen-der-Mafia?bc=svp;sv0#/beitrag/video/2646728/Die-Frauen-der-Mafia, uploaded onto many YouTube channels, among others, on <https://youtu.be/XDc2DHIRQ6g>. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>60</sup> This theory has been rejected by the Antimafia Commission “Commissione parlamentare di inchiesta sul fenomeno della criminalità organizzata mafiosa o similar,”

www.camera.it/\_bicamerale/nociosco.asp?pagina=/\_bicamerale/leg15/antimafia/home.htm.

<sup>61</sup> “Terror on Trial: First Hand Report on the Hofstadgroup Trial,” by Emerson Vermaat, Militant Islam Monitor, December 12, 2005, www.militantislammonitor.org/article/id/1400, italics in original. I thank Petter Nesser for recommending this article to me. A young woman, Malika Shabi, wanted to testify at the Hofstadgroup trial. But then she and members of her family began to receive serious threats. A letter addressed to her arrived in the mailbox of her parents, who hated Nouredine el Fatmi and his friends. The letter ordered Shabi to change or withdraw her statement to the police. “It is not allowed for Muslims to collaborate with unbelievers, especially if it is directed against Muslims,” the letter said. “Don’t you fear the curse of Allah? May Allah lead you or break your back.” Shabi, now only 17 years old, and her family were terrified. Although she denied it, it was a clear death threat. In court, Shabi did not want to look at the other defendants, keeping silent all the time and refusing even to answer introductory questions by the judge such as: “Is your name Malika Shabi?”

<sup>62</sup> Hobsbawm, 2000. See also Anton Blok, <http://noblebandits.asu.edu/Bio/Blok.html>.

<sup>63</sup> See an analysis of the intricacies, by Blok, 1988, with a Foreword by Charles Tilly.

<sup>64</sup> Miller, 1993, p. 175, italics in original.

<sup>65</sup> Miller, 1993, p. 177.

<sup>66</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>67</sup> Miller, 1993, endnote 3 of Chapter 5.

<sup>68</sup> Miller, 1993, p. 177, see Elias, 1939/1994.

<sup>69</sup> Translated by Lindner.

<sup>70</sup> Fulbeck, 1602, p. 20, see <http://babel.hathitrust.org/cgi/pt?id=osu.32437121569947;view=1up;seq=67>.

<sup>71</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>72</sup> See anthropologist and Somalia expert Ioan Lewis, 1961. I had the great privilege of meeting Ioan Lewis at his home in London and learn from him on May 31, 1999, together with Dennis Smith.

<sup>73</sup> Sahih Muslim. Kitab al-Hajj: Hadith 159, <http://sunnah.com/muslim/15/159>.

<sup>74</sup> Armstrong, 2007.

<sup>75</sup> Scheff, 2000.

<sup>76</sup> Emotions “are the very means by which the power game is played,” Heaney, 2013, p. 358, and there are “feeling rules,” which govern how to feel in different social contexts, Hochschild, 1979.

See also the work of Robert Burrowes, 2011. He writes about socialization within the dominator context in “Most Attitudes and Beliefs are Outcomes of Fear,” by Robert Burrowes, Human Wrongs Watch, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/07/08/most-attitudes-and-beliefs-are-outcomes-of-fear/>:

Human socialization is essentially a process of terrorizing children into “thinking” and doing what adults want (irrespective of the functionality of this thought and behavior in evolutionary terms). Hence, the attitudes, beliefs, values and behaviors that most humans exhibit are driven by fear and the self-hatred that accompanies this fear... However, because this fear and self-hatred are so unpleasant to feel consciously, most people suppress these feelings below conscious awareness and then project them onto “legitimized” victims (that is, those people “approved” for victimization by their parents or society generally). That is, the fear and self-hatred are projected as fear of, and hatred for, particular social groups (whether people of another sex, nation, race or class). This all happens because virtually all adults are (unconsciously) terrified and self-hating, so they unconsciously terrorize children into accepting the attitudes, beliefs, values and behaviors that make the adults feel safe. A child who thinks and acts differently is frightening and is not allowed to flourish.

<sup>77</sup> Bourdieu, 1977.

<sup>78</sup> Bourdieu, 1977, pp. 11–12.

<sup>79</sup> Hebrews 12:6, revised English version. Epistle to the Hebrews, or Letter to the Hebrews, is a text of the New Testament.

<sup>80</sup> Steward, 2000.

<sup>81</sup> Frank, 1984. The blood eagle was a method of execution for “worthy” enemies that is sometimes mentioned in poetry and the Norse sagas, believed to have been perpetrated on King Ælla of Northumbria, Halfdan son of King Haraldr Hárfagri of Norway, King Maelgualai of Munster, and possibly Archbishop Ælfheah of Canterbury. It was performed by cutting the skin of the victim by the spine, breaking the ribs so they resembled blood-stained wings, and pulling the lungs out through the wounds in the victim’s back. Salt was sprinkled in the wounds

<sup>82</sup> Caliph Al-Musta’sim, Abbasid ruler of Baghdad, died in 1258 at the hands of Mongol Hulagu Khan, see Strange, 1900. Some accounts claim that he died by being rolled up in a rug and trampled to death by horses – rather than being beheaded – due to the belief that spilling royal blood would bring bad luck. See also Muir, 1924.

<sup>83</sup> The Asante (Ashanti) Empire was an African Empire located in present day Ghana, Togo, and Ivory Coast, in the latter part of the 1600s, see Collins and Burns, 2007. Practitioners of sorcery and witchcraft received death not by decapitation, for their blood was not to be shed.

<sup>84</sup> The master-slave dialectic is a famous passage by Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, 1807/1967, in his Phenomenology of Spirit/Mind (Geist in German means both, “spirit” and “mind”). Herrschaft und Knechtschaft in German can also be translated into lordship and bondage.

<sup>85</sup> Lira, 2001, Lykes, 2001.

<sup>86</sup> White, 1984.

<sup>87</sup> Oberschall, 2001.

<sup>88</sup> Wagner, 2006.

<sup>89</sup> See also Tønnessen, 2006, or Lindner, 2006c.

<sup>90</sup> “How Liberian Women Delivered Africa’s First Female President,” by Helene Cooper, New York Times, March 5, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/03/05/world/africa/liberia-president-ellen-johnson-sirleaf-women-voters.html. In her book on the rise of President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf of Liberia, Helene Cooper, 2017, tells the story of Liberian women waking up to the fact that their vote could liberate their country from the unimaginable brutality and all-out destructiveness of the male supremacy in their country.

<sup>91</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>92</sup> See, among others, “Khat in the Horn of Africa: A Scourge or Blessing?” by James Jeffrey, Inter Press Service (IPS), March 12, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/03/khat-in-the-horn-of-africa-a-scourge-or-blessing/.

<sup>93</sup> “Seven Scary Facts About Widening Gender Gap,” by IPS World Desk, Inter Press Service (IPS), March 3, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/03/seven-scaring-facts-about-widening-gender-gap/, reporting that “women still carry out between two to 10 times more unpaid care work than men”:

Women across the globe are facing new threats, which risk dismantling decades of hard-won rights and derailing the effort to end extreme poverty, an international confederation of civil society organizations has revealed ahead of International Women’s Day on March 8, 2017.

<sup>94</sup> See a study by Alan Krueger, 2016, former chairman of the President’s Council of Economic Advisers, of the opioid epidemic in America, where roughly 7 million men, nearly half of all prime working-age male labor-force dropouts, currently take pain medication on a daily basis. According to American Time Use Surveys by the Bureau of Labor Statistics (www.bls.gov/tus/) the majority of these prime-age un-working men do not contribute to civil society work either: “Their routine, instead, typically centers on watching – watching TV, DVDs, Internet, hand-held devices, etc. – and indeed watching for an average of 2,000 hours a year, as if it were a full-time job.” See “Our Miserable 21st Century,” by Nicholas N. Eberstadt, Commentary Magazine, February 15, 2017, www.commentarymagazine.com/articles/our-miserable-21st-century/. See also Eberstadt, 2016:

Some of these gnawing problems are by no means new: A number of them (such as family breakdown) can be traced back at least to the 1960s, while others are arguably as old as modernity itself (anomie and isolation in big anonymous communities, secularization and the decline of faith). But a number have roared down upon us by surprise since the turn of the century – and others have redoubled with fearsome new intensity since roughly the year 2000.

<sup>95</sup> As the phrase “status zero,” or “Status Zer0,” has negative connotation, it became replaced by “NEET,” or “neet,” meaning a young person who is “Not in Education, Employment, or Training.” See, among others, Attewell and Newman, 2010.

<sup>96</sup> “America’s ‘Quiet Catastrophe’: Millions of Idle Men,” by George F. Will, Washington Post, October 5, 2016, www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/americas-quiet-catastrophe-millions-of-idle-men/2016/10/05/cd01b750-8a57-11e6-bff0-d53f592f176e\_story.html.

<sup>97</sup> “Fundamentalism and Populism Pose Deepening Threat to Women Human Rights Defenders, UN Experts Warn,” United Nations News Centre, November 25, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=55645#.WDniRH2OWgx

<sup>98</sup> I saw Guillaume Tell at the Metropolitan Opera in New York City, see the program on www.metopera.org/metoperafiles/season/2016-17/operas/guillaume\_tell/programs/102916%20Tell.pdf.

<sup>99</sup> The libretto of Guillaume Tell by Gioachino Rossini in English: www.murashev.com/opera/Guillaume\_Tell\_libretto\_English\_Act\_2. See the French original at <http://opera.stanford.edu/Rossini/GuillaumeTell/acte2.html>:

Mathilde: “Dans celle qui t’aime, Oui, c’est l’honneur même Qui dicte sa loi.” Arnold: “Dans celle que j’aime, Oui, c’est l’honneur même Qui dicte sa loi.”

<sup>100</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>101</sup> Composer Giacomo Puccini (1858 – 1924) based his opera Turandot on Friedrich Schiller’s 1801 adaptation of an earlier text by Carlo Gozzi, with the original story going back to twelfth-century Persian poet Nizami.

<sup>102</sup> Göle, 2013, book description:

Göle sees the best hope for a modern and European Islam in the Muslim women who--in contrast to the men--demonstrate their commitment to their heritage by wearing head scarfs while participating in modern Western life. In manifesting their professional and public experience in their own communities, they become the agents of change and modernism. Göle thus sees European Islam as “feminine,” in contrast to the male-dominated traditional Islam.

<sup>103</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>104</sup> I saw Aida at the Metropolitan Opera in New York City several times, among others, on November 5, 2016. See the program on www.metopera.org/metoperafiles/season/2016-17/operas/aida/programs/110516\_Aida.pdf.

<sup>105</sup> According to Helen Fisher, 2009, “explorers” express dopamine and tend to be risk-taking, curious, creative, impulsive, optimistic and energetic, while “builders” express the serotonin system and tend to be cautious but not fearful, calm, traditional, community-oriented, persistent and loyal. “Directors” express the testosterone system and tend to be analytical, decisive, tough-minded, debate-oriented, possibly aggressive, while “negotiators,” both men or women, express the estrogen system and tend to be broadminded imaginative, compassionate, intuitive, verbal, nurturing, altruistic and idealistic.

<sup>106</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. According to primatologist Frans de Waal, bonobos “make love, not war,” in contrast to chimpanzees, who “use violence to get sex, while bonobos use sex to avoid violence.” Bonobos, previously known as “pygmy chimpanzees,” are among the most sexual of all living animals. Sexual activity connects not just males and females, more importantly, females build coalitions among themselves, which enable them to contain male supremacy and aggressiveness. The fundamental difference between Homo sapiens’ two closest relatives, bonobos and chimpanzees, is “that one resolves sexual issues with power, while the other resolves power issues with sex,” de Waal, 2005, p. 19. De Waal suggests that bonobo females are able to contain males because bonobos live in ecological niches that offer more resources, while female chimpanzees tend to be alone when they come across males. See Clay, et al., 2016, and also Ryan and Jethá, 2010. I highly appreciated meeting Frans de Waal, and listening to his talk Empathy and Emotional Communication: Primate Origins, in Freie Universität Berlin, April 11, 2011. See also “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?” by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>107</sup> Howard Richards in Lecture Twelve of Beyond Foucault: The Rise of Indigenous Subjugated Knowledges, given in Pretoria, South Africa, May 26, 2013, <http://youtu.be/voUdwSZPAR0>. See for more Richards, et al., 2015a. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>108</sup> “Hanzai rosire no chishiki” (I.e. savoir comme crime), interview with Shugi Terayama, translated by Ryoji Nakamura from Japanese into French, Jyôkyô, April 1976, pp. 43–50, reprinted in Foucault, 1994a, pp. 79–86, p. 85. Translated from French by Lindner. French original:

To detail the idea that one cannot make revolution through terror, we can say this: we cannot create inspiration for the revolution by sowing terror among the people,” from “Pour détailler l’idée selon laquelle on ne peut pas faire de révolution par la terreur, on peut dire ceci: on ne peut pas susciter d’aspiration à la révolution en semant la terreur chez les gens.

See also Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>109</sup> “Technologies of the Self” (Les techniques de soi), University of Vermont, October 1982, translated by F. Durant-Bogaert, in Hutton, et al., 1988, pp. 16–49, translated into French and reprinted in Foucault, 1994b, pp. 783–813, p. 785. See also Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>110</sup> “L’éthique du souci de soi comme pratique de la liberté,” interview with H. Becker, R. Fornet-Betancourt, A. Gomez-Müller, January 20, 1984, Concordia. Revista Internacional de Filosofía, Number 6, July–December 1984, pp. 99–116. Translated and reprinted in Foucault, 1994b, pp. 708–729, p. 727. Translated by Howard Richards and Evelin Lindner from the French original, italics in original:

Le problème n’est donc pas d’essayer de les dissoudre dans l’utopie d’une communication parfaitement transparente, mais de se donner les règles de droit, les techniques de gestion et aussi la morale, l’ethos, la pratique de soi, qui permettront, dans ces jeux de pouvoir, de jouer avec le minimum possible de domination.

See also Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>111</sup> Weininger, 1903. In Weininger’s last diary entries he wrote: “Der Haß gegen die Frau ist nichts anderes als der Haß gegen die eigene, noch nicht überwundene Sexualität.” Or, “The hatred of women is none other than the hatred of one’s own, not yet overcome sexuality.” In other words, in the spirit of the correspondence bias, amorality is attributed by Weininger to women without considering that they may only appear to him to be “anti-moral” due to the systemic pressures they had to adapt to for centuries. Weininger’s own sexuality (together with his Jewish background) falls thus prey to a sad misattribution unnecessarily, one may conclude.

<sup>112</sup> Nietzsche, 1883–1891, www.gutenberg.org/cache/epub/7205/pg7205.txt:

Alles am Weibe ist ein Räthsel, und Alles am Weibe hat Eine Lösung: sie heisst Schwangerschaft. Der Mann ist für das Weib ein Mittel: der Zweck ist immer das Kind. Aber was ist das Weib für den Mann? Zweierlei will der ächte Mann: Gefahr und Spiel. Deshalb will er das Weib, als das gefährlichste Spielzeug. Der Mann soll zum Kriege erzogen werden und das Weib zur Erholung des Kriegers: alles Andre ist Thorheit... “Du gehst zu Frauen? Vergiss die Peitsche nicht!” – Also sprach Zarathustra.

<sup>113</sup> “Negative Religious Views of Women,” compiled by Eva Maria Ræpple, professor of philosophy and religious studies at College of DuPage, Glen Ellyn IL, www.cod.edu/PEOPLE/FACULTY/raepple/Religion%20Global/Negative%20Religious%20Views%20of%20Women.htm:

- Hinduism: It is the nature of women to seduce men in this (world); for that reason, the wise are never unguarded in the (company of) females. For women are able to lead astray in (this) world not only a fool, but even a learned man, and (to make) him a slave of desire and anger. (When creating them) Manu allotted women (a love of their) bed (of their) seat and (their) ornaments, impure desires, wrath, dishonesty, malice, and bad conduct. See Laws of Manu, translator G. Buhler. Sacred books of the East, volume 25. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1886, 2:213, p. 69; 9:14, p. 330.

- Theravada Buddhism: “How are we to conduct ourselves, Lord, with regard to womankind?” “As not seeing them, Ananda.” “But if we should see them, what should we do?” “No talking, Ananda.” “But if they should speak to us, Lord, what are we to do?” “Keep wide awake, Ananda.” See Maha Parinibbana Suttana, 5:9, Digha Nikaya 2:141, in Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddha, Volume 2, p. 154.

- Mahayana Buddhism: You should know that when men have close relationships with women, they have close relationships with evil ways... Fools lust for women like dogs in heat... Women can ruin the precepts of purity. They can also ignore honor and virtue. Causing one to go to hell, they prevent rebirth in heaven. Why should a wise delight in them? See the Speech of the Buddha to King Udayana, from the Mahratnakuta, quote in Paul, Women in Buddhism, pp. 30, 31, 41–42.
- Christianity: Do you not all know that each of you (Women) is also an Eve? ...You are the Devil's gateway, you are the unsealer of the forbidden tree, you are the first deserter of the divine law, you are the one who persuaded him who the devil was too weak to weak to attack. How easily you destroyed man, the image of God! Because of the death which you brought upon us, even the Son of God had to die. See Tertullian, Church Father, in De Cultu Feminarum 1:1, quote in D. Bailey, The Man Woman Relation.
- Islam: Men are the maintainers of women because Allah has made some of them to excel others and because they spend out of their property; the good women are therefore obedient, guarding the unseen as Allah has guarded; and (as to) those on whose part you fear desertion, admonish them, and leave them alone in the sleeping-places and beat them; then if they obey you, do not seek a way against them; surely Allah is High, Great. See the Koran, translator M. H. Shakir; Electronic Text Center, University of Virginia (10/19/01), <http://etext.virginia.edu/koran.html>, 4:34.

See also Räßple, 2010.

<sup>114</sup> Translated from German from German by Lindner, see the original German text in Bruhns, 2014, p. 68:

Statt nach alter Weiber Art nach einem Kriege nach dem "Schuldigen" zu suchen – wo doch die Struktur der Gesellschaft den Krieg erzeugte – wird jede männliche und herbe Haltung dem Feinde sagen: "Wir verloren den Krieg, – ihr habt ihn gewonnen. Das ist nun erledigt: nun laßt uns darüber reden, welche Konsequenzen zu ziehen sind entsprechend den sachlichen Interessen, die im Spiel waren, und – die Hauptsache – angesichts der Verantwortung vor der Zukunft, die vor allem den Sieger belastet." Alles andere ist würdelos und rächt sich. Verletzung ihrer Interessen verzeiht eine Nation, nicht aber Verletzung ihrer Ehre, am wenigsten eine solche durch pfäffische Rechthaberei.

<sup>115</sup> "Where Are the Women? How the UN is Falling Short on Gender and Conflict," by Louise Bosetti and Hannah Cooper, United Nations University, Centre for Policy Research, November 17, 2015, <http://cpr.unu.edu/where-are-the-women-how-the-un-is-falling-short-on-gender-and-conflict.html>. See also "Preventing Conflict, Transforming Justice, Securing the Peace: Global Study on UNSC Resolution 1325," by Radhika Coomaraswamy, UN Women, <http://wps.unwomen.org/~media/files/un%20women/wps/highlights/unw-global-study-1325-2015.pdf>:

Fifteen years ago, in 2000, the Security Council adopted the ground-breaking resolution 1325 on Women, Peace and Security – the first resolution to link women's experiences of conflict to international peace and security. In October 2015 in New York, the Security Council convened a High-level Review to assess 15 years of progress at the global, regional and national levels. To inform this discussion, the Secretary-General commissioned a Global Study – led by independent lead author Radhika Coomaraswamy – on the implementation of resolution 1325 and recommendations on the way forward for women, peace and security.

<sup>116</sup> "Women's Progress Uneven, Facing Backlash – UN Rights Chief," by the IPS World Desk, Inter Press Service (IPS), www.ipsnews.net/2017/03/womens-progress-uneven-facing-backlash-un-rights-chief/.

<sup>117</sup> Kimmel, 2013. It is a privilege to have Michael Kimmel as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also "What Is the Manosphere?" by "Dalrock," Dalrock blog, May 15, 2013, <http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2013/05/15/what-is-the-manosphere/>. See also "The Sexodus, Part 1: The Men Giving Up On Women And Checking Out Of Society," by Milo Yiannopoulos, Breitbart, December 4, 2014, www.breitbart.com/Breitbart-London/2014/12/04/The-Sexodus-Part-1-The-Men-Giving-Up-On-Women-And-Checking-Out-Of-Society, and "The Sexodus, Part 2: Dishonest Feminist Panics Leave Male Sexuality In Crisis," by Milo Yiannopoulos, Breitbart, December 9, 2014, www.breitbart.com/Breitbart-London/2014/12/09/The-Sexodus-Part-2-Dishonest-Feminist-Panics-Leave-Male-Sexuality-In-Crisis. I thank Camilla Hsiung for making me aware of this article.

Read in Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security, about my reflections after many years of psychotherapeutic work and social psychological inquiry, p. 38:

Throughout my almost four decades of experience as a counselor, psychotherapist, and social psychologist, I have noticed a dynamic in families that seems to be duplicated in what is called the manosphere. When children grow up, parents ought to protect them. It is not easy, however, even for the best intentioned parent, to offer protection without being oppressive or at least appearing to be oppressive. Children might at times accuse their parents of undue domination, rightly or wrongly, and some parents might respond with accusing their children of ingratitude. In traditional family settings, when a mother has built her identity on protecting children, she might lose her anchoring when they grow up, and she might be particularly prone to feeling disrespected by her children. Committing the correspondence error, she might even infer that her children intentionally hold her in contempt, while they in reality only wish to become independent adults. I observe some men reacting in similar ways, in their relationships with their children, however, also with respect to women. By committing the correspondence bias, they accuse women of intending to hurt men, while the women simply wish to emancipate themselves, and might do so at times as unsteadily and tentatively as adolescents. “Under the laws of the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum – the ancient foundation of Roman law – the head of the family, pater familias, had vitae necisque potestas, or the ‘power of life and death,’ over his children and his slaves, often also over his wife. He had the power to kill or sell into slavery those he had ‘under his hand’ or sub manu (emancipation is the deliverance out of the hand of pater familias.”

<sup>118</sup> Rush: NFL Wearing Pink For Breast Cancer Proves There’s A National Assault On Masculinity. Limbaugh: “The Chickification Of Everything Is Taking Place... Feelings Are Triumphing Over Common Sense,” in the October 24 edition of Premiere Radio Networks’ The Rush Limbaugh Show, 2013, <http://mediamatters.org/video/2013/10/24/rush-nfl-wearing-pink-for-breast-cancer-proves/196580>.

<sup>119</sup> “Violence Against Women: Positive Peace,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, March 27, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/03/violence-against-women-positive-peace/.

<sup>120</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Goldstein, 2001.

<sup>121</sup> Hartmann and Burkart, 2007.

<sup>122</sup> See also Islamist im Staatsauftrag, documentary film, 2015, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, www.zdf.de/zdfinfo/islamist-im-staatsauftrag-40414950.html. This documentary features Irfan Peci, once one of the main Salafist propagandists in Germany, before he was imprisoned and persuaded to become one of the main informants of the intelligence agency. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>123</sup> Ein Sommer im Dschihad, documentary film by Panorama, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, July 28, 2015, www.daserste.de, <https://youtu.be/7eDbRhP5Ky4>. Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg.

<sup>124</sup> Bourdieu, 1998.

<sup>125</sup> Lindner, 2004b.

<sup>126</sup> Phang, 2008. For Greek, Persian, or Roman troops, for instance, if a town refused to surrender through negotiations and had to be taken by force, mass rape, not only of women, was often felt to be a rightful punishment.

<sup>127</sup> “Stop Rape Before India Becomes a Replica of the Middle Ages,” by Stephen Gill, January 11, 2013, <http://journalismandwomen.blogspot.no/2013/01/stop-rape-before-india-becomes-replica.html>. See also www.stephengill.ca; stephengillcriticism.info.

<sup>128</sup> “Denis Mukwege: It Is Time We All Acknowledged Rape as War Weapon Destroys Humanity,” by Ludovica Iaccino, International Business Times, February 11, 2016, www.ibtimes.co.uk/denis-mukwege-it-time-we-all-acknowledged-rape-war-weapon-destroys-humanity-1542629. See, furthermore, “Sexual Violence in Conflict ‘Legitimate Threat’ to Peace and Security – UN Deputy Chief,” United Nations News Centre, May 15, 2017, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=56758#.WRuz2OvygkI.

<sup>129</sup> Taylor, et al., 2000.

<sup>130</sup> Tacitus, 1942. Senator and a historian of the Roman Empire Publius (or Gaius) Cornelius Tacitus circa 56 – after 117 CE) wrote two major works, the Annals and the Histories, that span the history of the Roman Empire from the death of Augustus in CE 14 to the years of the First Jewish–Roman War in CE 70.

<sup>131</sup> I have also frequently heard, for instance, in Somalia, that female circumcision began with the pharaohs of Egypt, as early as the Third Dynasty (3000 – 2800 BCE), that a princess forced this practice on her potential rival females to protect her position with the pharaoh by making it more difficult for him to access those rivals. The term “pharaonic circumcision” is used throughout the Middle East and it describes a full infibulation which means the total removal of the external genitalia, and suturing to a tiny hole which allows for urination, but must then be cut open for sex. See also I min mors navn, documentary film by Hilde Merete Haug, featuring Farhia Luul Makerow, NRK, 2017, www.nrk.no/presse/programmtaler/i-min-mors-navn-1.13333391. See, furthermore, The Dream of Knowledge, a documentary film by Gerd Inger Polden, NRK, 1999, which documents how the discontinuation of the practice of female genital cutting in a number of Senegalese villages is being achieved not as a result of applying pressure or punishment, but voluntarily. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation. It is a privilege to have Gerd Inger Polden as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>132</sup> For mate guarding and sperm competition, see, among others, Wigby and Chapman, 2004, or Elias, et al., 2014.

<sup>133</sup> Seyran Ateş, 2009, is a German lawyer and Muslim feminist born in Istanbul, Turkey, of Kurdish descent. She received death threats for her work in Germany, and had to go into hiding for certain periods.

<sup>134</sup> Lindner, 2000c, p. 149.

<sup>135</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, pp. 84–88. Honor killings have been reported in many parts of the world, including Bangladesh, Britain, Brazil, Ecuador, Egypt, India, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Pakistan, Morocco, Sweden, Turkey, and Uganda. There is a vast amount of literature addressing honor killing. See, for instance, a summary and evaluation of qualitative research about honor killings, United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), 2005. Many prefer to use the term femicide rather than honor killing, since the main focus is on killing women.

<sup>136</sup> See Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security, p. 79:

Indeed, for a woman, being alone with an unrelated man is expected to risk leading to unfaithfulness almost by design. Zina, in Islam, means extramarital and premarital sex, for which Islamic law prescribes harsh punishments. In the Islamic state of Mauritania, for instance, rape is not defined in the country's law. Victims of rape remain silent, because, for a woman to allege she has been raped is to run the risk of imprisonment for zina. She will be accused of having provoked the situation and having tempted the man into sex. If she gets pregnant, this will be taken as proof that she consented, because it is regarded to be biologically impossible to become pregnant through rape. Although their legality is disputed, punishments for zina are still practiced. The documentary film Women on the Frontline provides an impressive account of this practice.

See also Karamah – Muslim Women Lawyers for Human Rights, 2008.

<sup>137</sup> Fontan, 2001, p. 7. See also Al-Khayyat, 1990.

<sup>138</sup> “Saudi Blood Money Ruling Angers Activists,” Al Jazeera, February 4, 2013, www.aljazeera.com/news/middleeast/2013/02/201323223618362435.html.

<sup>139</sup> See, among others, Gilbert, 1998.

<sup>140</sup> James Edward Jones, 2006, paper presented at the 2006 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 14–15, 2006:

Persons affected by the PVEE syndrome often defend, minimize and/or rationalize the most outrageous attitudes held and acts carried out by themselves or members of their particular group. When you talk to such people, you will quickly find that the reason that they take such a usually untenable position is because “their people” either are or have been victimized by one or more other groups. This is the golden rule turned on its head: “Do bad unto others because they (or someone else) did something bad to you.” It is a deceptively simple and somewhat pervasive point of view...

It is a privilege to have James Edward Jones as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>141</sup> First step: her body represents his honor. Second step: if her body is severed, his honor is severed. Third step: the correspondence bias makes him believe that she is the source of this violation, therefore she must have intended it. Fourth step: punishing her. Fifth step: punishing her beyond all limits, in the spirit of Jimmy Jones' ethical exemption syndrome.

<sup>142</sup> “State Department: Sexual Abuse of Boys on the Rise in Afghanistan,” by Melanie Hunter, CNS News, March 19, 2014, <http://cnsnews.com/news/article/melanie-hunter/state-department-sexual-abuse-boys-rise-afghanistan>. See also U.S. Army Human Terrain Team (HTT) AF-6, 2009, and Afghanistan 2013 Human Rights Report, U.S. Department of State, Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, Washington, DC, www.state.gov/documents/organization/220598.pdf.

<sup>143</sup> Afghanistan 2013 Human Rights Report, U.S. Department of State, Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, Washington, DC, www.state.gov/documents/organization/220598.pdf, p. 44.

<sup>144</sup> “Bacha Bazi: An Afghan Tragedy,” by Chris Mondloch, Foreign Policy Magazine, October 28, 2013, http://southasia.foreignpolicy.com/posts/2013/10/28/an\_afghan\_tragedy\_why\_rampant\_pedophilia\_is\_a\_hurdle\_to\_peace.

<sup>145</sup> Human Terrain Team (HTT) AF-6: Research Update and Findings, Pashtun Sexuality, U.S. Army, with personal field notes by Human Terrain Team AF-6, which was assigned to the 2nd Marine Expeditionary Battalion and co-located with British forces in Lashkar Gah, dated May 15, 2009, <https://info.publicintelligence.net/HTT-PashtunSexuality.pdf>, p. 4.

<sup>146</sup> Ibid., p. 13.

<sup>147</sup> The Malala Fund, www.malala.org.

<sup>148</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 32.

<sup>149</sup> “The ISIS Crackdown on Women, by Women,” by Kathy Gilsinan, The Atlantic, July 25, 2014, www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2014/07/the-women-of-isis/375047/.

<sup>150</sup> Deeyah Khan’s witness account is illustrative, see “Deeyah Khan: Solidarity Doesn’t Cost Anything,” published on October 31, 2014, on YouTube (unlisted), where Deeyah Khan, born in Norway to immigrant parents from Afghanistan and Pakistan, shares how she was targeted by members of her own immigrant community in Norway and then also in the UK, as a young musician. And she explains her motivation for telling the story of Banaz, a young girl, who was killed, see her documentary film Banaz: A Love Story, 2012, at <https://youtu.be/VepuyvhHYdM>.

<sup>151</sup> “Online Harassment of Women Isn’t Just a Gamer Problem,” by Noah Berlatsky, Pacific Standard: The Science of Society, September 15, 2014, www.psmag.com/navigation/books-and-culture/online-harassment-women-isnt-just-gamer-problem-90518/:

Feminista Jones, a (pseudonymous) writer and activist who works on issues of street harassment, especially as they affect black women, has been targeted by one man with a large platform since last October. As a result, she says, she has had “dozens and dozens of his followers coming to attack me on a daily basis,” using misogynist and racial slurs. She’s also had multiple credible threats against both her and her son.

See also “‘Legitimate Rape’ Rarely Leads to Pregnancy, Claims US Senate Candidate,” by Matt Williams, The Guardian, August 19, 2012, www.theguardian.com/world/2012/aug/19/republican-todd-akin-rape-pregnancy. Republican U.S. Senate candidate Representative Todd Akin of Missouri stated that pregnancy rarely occurs as a result of what he called “legitimate rape.”

<sup>152</sup> Rune Øygard (born 1959) represented the Norwegian Labour Party, and served as Mayor of Vågå from 1995 to 2012. On December 17, 2012, he was found guilty of child sexual abuse, including sexual intercourse with a 13-year old girl, and sentenced to 4 years imprisonment.

<sup>153</sup> El-Zanaty, et al., 1996. See the graphical presentation of the statistical results of women accepting beatings also at www.unfpa.org/swp/2005/english/ch7/index.htm#fig5. See, furthermore, “Violence Against Women in Egypt,” a report prepared for the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, 24th session, January 15–February 2, 2001, by Carin Benninger-Budel, www.omct.org/pdf/VAW/EgyptEng2001.pdf. See also “Social Statistics in Egypt,” presented by Bothaina El Deeb at the Expert Group Meeting on Setting the Scope of Social Statistics, convened by the United Nations Statistics Division, in collaboration with the Siena Group on Social Statistics, May 6–9, 2003, unstats.un.org/unsd/Demographic/meetings/egm/Socialstat\_0503/docs/no\_32.pdf.

<sup>154</sup> “UN Sounds Alarm to End ‘Global Pandemic’ of Violence Against Women,” UN News Centre, November 25, 2014, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=49443#.VHaVQ8l5VhW.

<sup>155</sup> “Jimmy Carter Addresses Issues of Human Rights,” by Annie Schugart, The Crimson, November 20, 2014, www.thecrimson.com/article/2014/11/20/carter-discusses-human-rights/.

<sup>156</sup> Lindner, 2012d, p. 192.

<sup>157</sup> Anderson, 2008.

<sup>158</sup> “Berkshire Hathaway’s Annual Report to Shareholders” in 2002, www.berkshirehathaway.com/2002ar/2002ar.pdf.

<sup>159</sup> “Re-define,” keynote speech by Sony Kapoor, May 14, 2009, Deutscher Gewerkschaftsbund (DGB)-Kapitalismuskongress, Berlin, Germany, May 14–15, 2009. Sony Kapoor is a former investment banker and derivatives trader in India, the UK, and the United States. See his witness accounts in various media. Re-Define is a non-partisan, international think tank, of which Kapoor is the managing director, see <http://re-define.org>. See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 56. See, furthermore, Anderson, 2008, and “Share Traders More Reckless Than Psychopaths, Study Shows,” Spiegel Online International, September 26, 2011, www.spiegel.de/international/Zeitgeist/0,1518,788462,00.html.

<sup>160</sup> Martin Husamuddin Mayer is an ethnologist and Islamic scholar from Germany, who, through long journeys through North and West Africa converted to the Muslim faith. He has worked among others as a pastor for the Muslims in the youth detention center in Wiesbaden.

<sup>161</sup> “Vom deutschen Jugendknast in den Heiligen Krieg: Als Versager und Krimineller hinein, als Fundamentalist wieder raus: Deutsche Gefängnisse bieten einen Nährboden für religiösen Radikalismus,” by Marina Kormbaki, Hannoversche Allgemeine, September 24, 2014, www.haz.de/Nachrichten/Politik/Deutschland-Welt/Terrorismus-Vom-deutschen-Jugendknast-in-den-Heiligen-Krieg: “Strafgefangene sind die ideale Klientel für religiös-extremistische Rekrutierer, weil sie die Hemmschwelle zur Gewalt schon überschritten haben.”

<sup>162</sup> Ibid.:

“Es kommen Jungs zu mir und erzählen, dass sie für die Einführung der Scharia sind. Wenn ich denen dann einen Gebetsteppich gebe, zucken die mit den Schultern und sagen, sie beten nicht. Sie haben keine Ahnung von der Religion, sie fallen rein auf die Parolen der Radikalen... Die stellen sich gern als besonders konsequente Muslime dar, als die einzig wahren Vertreter des Islam – diese Haltung der Stärke macht sie für viele Gefangene so attraktiv... Gestern haben die Jungs noch Drogen verkauft, heute finden sie zu Allah, morgen ziehen sie nach Syrien,” sagt Imam Meyer. “Diese jungen Männer sind vieles. Nur ernsthaft religiös – das sind sie nicht.”

<sup>163</sup> Violence Prevention Networks, Berlin, Germany, www.violence-prevention-network.de/home.

<sup>164</sup> “Extremisten sind antireligiös,” Thomas Mücke, interviewed by Stefanie Reulmann, heute.de, September 19, 2014, www.heute.de/interview-mit-thomas-muecke-vom-violence-prevention-network-ueber-die-zunehmende-radikalisierung-muslimischer-jugendlicher-35059684.html. See the original German text:

Was sind die Gründe für eine Radikalisierung? Mücke: Dahinter stecken sehr oft Problemlagen der Jugendlichen. Was wir als Gemeinsamkeit immer feststellen können, ist eine gewisse Vater-Abwesenheit. Die Jugendlichen suchen nach Vaterfiguren oder nach einem Familienersatz. Sie kommen oft aus so genannten bildungsfernen Schichten, sind häufig sehr vereinzelt, hatten in ihrem Leben selten Erfolgserlebnisse, und haben das Gefühl, gescheitert zu sein. Sie suchen eine Form von Zugehörigkeit und möchten bei einer großen Sache dabei sein.

<sup>165</sup> In German: “prekäre Anerkennungsverhältnisse,” see also Mansel and Heitmeyer, 2009.

<sup>166</sup> Heitmeyer, et al., 1997. See also Kaddor, 2015, who dissects the motives of the about 550 German “foreign fighters,” the youngest of them thirteen years old, who have left Germany until 2015, mainly to join Da’esh.

<sup>167</sup> Mansour, 2015.

<sup>168</sup> Gary Barker has carried out research on engaging men and boys in the Balkans, Brazil, South Asia, Sub-Saharan Africa, Central America, the Caribbean and the US, including in post-conflict settings. He holds a doctorate in child and adolescent development and a master’s degree in public policy. He has been awarded an Ashoka Fellowship and a fellowship from the Open Society Institute for his work. Read more of his biographical background here:

Gary Barker, PhD, is a leading voice on engaging men and boys in achieving gender equality and ending violence against women. He is international director and founder of Promundo, an international NGO with offices in the United States, Brazil and Portugal, and representatives in Rwanda and Burundi, that works to promote gender justice. Dr. Barker is also co-chair and co-founder of MenEngage, a global alliance of more than 400 NGOs and UN agencies working to engage men and boys in gender equality. He has been awarded an Ashoka Fellowship and a fellowship from the Open Society Institute for his work. He is coordinator of the multi-country survey on men, IMAGES (the International Men and Gender Equality Survey), one of the largest ever surveys on men’s attitudes and behaviors related to violence, fatherhood and gender equality. He is also co-founder of MenCare, a global campaign to promote men’s involvement as equitable, non-violent caregivers, www.un.org/en/women/endviolence/GaryBarker.shtml.

<sup>169</sup> Barker, 2005.

<sup>170</sup> Juergensmeyer, 2000, p. ix. See also Vambheim, 2011.

<sup>171</sup> “Gender, Class, and Terrorism,” by Michael Kimmel, XY (a website focused on men, masculinities, and gender politics), July 10, 2009, www.xyonline.net/content/gender-class-and-terrorism. It is a privilege to have Michael Kimmel as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>172</sup> Galtung, 1996, Galtung, et al., 2000. See also Galtung’s description of the Dichotomy-Manicheism-Armageddon (DMT) syndrome at “Cultural Peace: Some Characteristics,” by Johan Galtung, Transcend articles, October 12, 2003, www.transcend.org/files/article121.html.

See also “Expert Colloquy – Dialogue Serving Intercultural and Inter-Religious Communication – Strasbourg,” Council of Europe, October 7–9, 2002, interview with Johan Galtung, www.coe.int/T/E/Com/Files/Events/2002-10-Intercultural-Dialogue/Interview\_galtung.asp. See, furthermore, LeShan, 1992.

<sup>173</sup> “Jihad Masculinity,” by Deeyah Khan, Huffington Post, July 10, 2015, www.huffingtonpost.co.uk/deeyah-khan/jihad-deeyah-khan\_b\_7770578.html?utm\_hp\_ref=uk. It is a privilege to have Deeyah Khan as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>174</sup> Refsdal, 2010.

<sup>175</sup> Urx spesial: Dugma – knappen til paradise, Aktualitetsmagasin fra NRKs utenriksredaksjon (Actuality Magazine from NRK’s foreign editorial), NRK2, March 16, 2016, <https://tv.nrk.no/program/NNFA53031616/urix-spesial-dugma->

knappen-til-paradiset. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation. Translated from Norwegian by Lindner:

The Norwegian director Pål Refsdal takes us into Al-Qaeda's world. At the front in Syria, we meet people who are on a waiting list to give their lives for Allah in the fight against the Syrian government forces. Their weapons are simple and brutal. They are preparing to drive a truck heavily laden with bombs into enemy lines. Refsdal tells a story we never fully understand or accept, but that gives us an insight we would not otherwise get.

<sup>176</sup> "The Science Behind ISIL's Savagery," by Ian Robertson, The Telegraph, September 14, 2014, www.telegraph.co.uk/comment/11041338/The-science-behind-Isils-savagery.html. Ian Robertson is professor of psychology at Trinity College Dublin, and was the founding director of Trinity College Institute of Neuroscience.

<sup>177</sup> De Dreu, et al., 2011.

<sup>178</sup> Ibid.

<sup>179</sup> Fraiman, 2003.

<sup>180</sup> Fraiman, 2003, xi, xii.

<sup>181</sup> Jones, 2009. See also "When Nothing Is Cool," by Lisa Ruddick, Criticism, The Point, 2015, <http://thepointmag.com/2015/criticism/when-nothing-is-cool>, an abridged version of an article in Bammer and Boetcher Joeres, 2015. See also Jameson, 1991, and Latour, 2004. Ruddick asks why academia has not been able "to shift away from norms that make ruthlessness look like sophistication," and she writes:

Some years ago Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick touched on this complex in her well-known essay on paranoid reading, where she identified a strain of "hatred" in criticism. Also salient is a more recent piece in which Bruno Latour has described how scholars slip from "critique" into "critical barbarity," giving "cruel treatment" to experiences and ideals that non-academics treat as objects of tender concern. Rita Felski's current work on the state of criticism has reenergized the conversation on the punitive attitudes encouraged by the hermeneutics of suspicion. And Susan Fraiman's powerful analysis of the "cool male" intellectual style favored in academia is concerned with many of the same patterns I consider here.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

<sup>182</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>183</sup> See Krueger, 2017. And see an endorsement of the argument that terrorism does not follow from poverty, but from lack of freedom, in "The Roots of Terrorism," by Sultan Mehmood, Dawn, March 3, 2016, www.dawn.com/news/796177/the-roots-of-terrorism:

A cursory analysis of the START Global Terrorism Database reveals that over the past decade, Pakistan has had the highest number of terrorism-related deaths in the world. In fact, the death toll exceeds the combined terrorism-related deaths for both Europe and North America. Hence, an understanding of terrorism, its dynamics, its causes, the reasons for its escalation and de-escalation is of utmost importance to Pakistan... To understand what causes terrorism, one need not ask how much of a population is illiterate or in abject poverty. Rather one should ask who holds strong enough political views to impose them through terrorism. It is not that most terrorists have nothing to live for. Far from it, they are the high-ability and educated political people who so vehemently believe in a cause that they are willing to die for it. The solution to terrorism is not more growth but more freedom.

<sup>184</sup> "Overcompensation Nation: It's Time to Admit that Toxic Masculinity Drives Gun Violence," by Amanda Marcotte, Salon, June 13, 2016, www.salon.com/2016/06/13/overcompensation\_nation\_its\_time\_to\_admit\_that\_toxic\_masculinity\_drives\_gun\_violence/. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>185</sup> Lee, 2015.

<sup>186</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>187</sup> Ahmed, 2013.

<sup>188</sup> See also "Terror: The Hidden Source," by Malise Ruthven, The New York Reviews of Books, October 24, 2013, www.nybooks.com/articles/archives/2013/oct/24/terror-hidden-source/.

<sup>189</sup> See also de Ste. Croix, et al., 2004.

<sup>190</sup> Donald J. Trump tweeted from his account @realDonaldTrump: "The concept of global warming was created by and for the Chinese in order to make U.S. manufacturing non-competitive." See <https://twitter.com/realdonaldtrump/status/265895292191248385?lang=en>.

<sup>191</sup> Jean-Paul Sartre, 1960, in his book Critique of Dialectical Reason, develops a philosophy of revolution in terms of the wills of subjective consciousness. See also Discussion 8 in Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>192</sup> Watching the 2002 film Die SS, by Christian Deick and Annette von der Heyde, makes palpable the depth of dedication and feeling of empowerment that the SS mustered to elicit in some of its members, who were proud of being important fighters, rather than mere cannon fodder: “Wir waren Hitleristen! Meine Ehre heißt Treue!” See www.new-video.de/film-guido-knopp-ss/.

<sup>193</sup> See also Petersen, 2002.

<sup>194</sup> See, among others, Berlant, 2005, or Laclau, 2005.

<sup>195</sup> Zehnpfennig, 2016, Abstract. See also Forschungsobjekt “Mein Kampf,” talk by Barbara Zehnpfennig, BR-alpha, ARD-alpha, December 12, 2016, www.br.de/fernsehen/ard-alpha/sendungen/logos/forschungsprojekt-mein-kampf-100.html. ARD-alpha is a German television station owned by regional broadcaster Bayerischer Rundfunk, BR. See, furthermore, the new commented edition of Hitler’s Mein Kampf, Hartmann, et al., 2016.

<sup>196</sup> “Demütigung ohne Scham, als Rächer! ‘Morden im Rampenlicht,’” by Martin Altmeyer, Spiegel Online, 31/2016, July 30, 2016, www.spiegel.de/spiegel/inszenierung-von-groessenwahn-essay-von-martin-altmeyer-a-1105637.html: Was treibt Amokläufer, und woher kommt der Hass der Islamisten? Psychoanalytiker Martin Altmeyer über die öffentliche Inszenierung von Allmacht und Größenwahn.

<sup>197</sup> “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, TomDispatch.com, October 22, 2007, www.alternet.org/story/65838/bush%27s\_response\_to\_9\_11\_was\_deadlier\_than\_the\_attacks\_themselves, a review of Stephen Holmes (2007). I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this essay. Chalmers Ashby Johnson (1931 – 2010) was an American author and professor emeritus of the University of California, San Diego, who had served in the Korean War, and was a consultant for the C.I.A. from 1967 to 1973. He is the author of the Blowback Trilogy: Blowback (Johnson, 2000), The Sorrows of Empire (Johnson, 2004), and Nemesis: The Last Days of the American Republic (Johnson, 2006). See also, Johnson, 2010. Stephen Holmes builds his argument, among others, on James Mann, 2004a, who describes the Bush administration’s Cold War thinking.

<sup>198</sup> Peace psychologist Daniel J. Christie, in a personal communication to peace linguist Francisco Gomes de Matos, December 28, 2012. Both are esteemed members in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>199</sup> See also Chapter 13. I highly respect the depth of Bolton’s conviction. The following email was sent out by Former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, John Bolton, on March 12, 2014:

Dear XXX (name of the recipient),

Here’s the truth:

Our biggest national security threat is Barack Obama.

This is a president who does not believe in American exceptionalism, a president who is uninterested in national security and America’s place in the world, who considers our strength part of the problem, and who believes that America is the cause of international tension.

This is like looking at the world through the wrong end of a telescope, but that is Obama’s world. I won’t stand for this, and you shouldn’t either.

I formed John Bolton PAC for one purpose – to see that our leaders remain committed to restoring American economic and national security. And Barack Obama is so disinterested in protecting American interests, I sometimes even wonder what team he’s even playing for.

XXX, will you help me defeat Barack Obama’s defeatist vision for America with an immediate contribution of $25, $50, $100 or more right away to Bolton PAC?

Consider this – we’re talking about a president who did absolutely nothing to avenge the murder of our Ambassador Chris Stevens in Benghazi, Libya, at the hands of Al-Qaeda terrorists.

This is a terrible lesson for our adversaries to learn: that under Barack Obama you can murder his personal representative and get away scot-free. And, if it wasn’t tragic enough, our nation’s top diplomat went and screamed at Congress that it doesn’t matter.

We will be happy to tell Hillary Clinton in unmistakable terms ‘We know what difference it makes’ even if you don’t. Mrs. Clinton will not escape her responsibility for what happened in Benghazi.

Conservatives need to take this year to mobilize the vast majority of Americans who believe as we do – that America is the greatest nation on earth and that our leaders should start acting like it.

- We do not accept an America that is weak and declining.
  - We do not accept an American military that is weak and poorly equipped.
  - In particular, we do not accept an American president who is weak, indecisive, and apologetic about our country.
- We must return national security to the center of the political debate throughout 2014 and replace the Obama/Clinton/Kerry/Biden doctrine of drift, decline, and defeatism with a strong Reaganite foreign policy.

 So, XXX, will you help me end the Obama/Clinton doctrine of defeat and fight for American greatness by making an immediate contribution of $25, $50, $100 or more right away to Bolton PAC?
 Working together, we will successfully ensure America's freedom and security in the years ahead.
 So, XXX, will you join me? I need your help today.
 Sincerely,
 John Bolton
 Former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations
 John Bolton PAC

<sup>200</sup> The concept of locus of control was developed by Julian B. Rotter in 1954, see Rotter, 1954.

<sup>201</sup> One example among many is described in "The New and Ancient Story: Reflections on Damanhur (Part 1)," by Charles Eisenstein, Charles' Main Website, August 2, 2015, www.thenewandancientstory.net/home/reflections-on-damanhur-part-1.

<sup>202</sup> The tradition of painfully twisted deformed feet began late in the Tang Dynasty (618 – 906) and flourished until it was finally outlawed in the 1911 Revolution of Sun Yat-Sen. It began as a luxury among the rich but soon spread throughout society. For an entire millennium, millions of young Chinese women paid with a painful life to serve the honor of their husbands. The women were reduced to the status of dependent and helpless toys through this practice, while their husbands gained honorable status by imitating their elite. Howard Levy, 1992, describes the torturous details of feet bones being repeatedly broken, their growth stunted, to fit into the desired lotus shape.

<sup>203</sup> Christopher K. Chung and Samson J. Cho, 2006.

<sup>204</sup> Ninnemann, 2015.

<sup>205</sup> "That Other School Shooting," by Jay Caspian Kang, New York Times, March 28, 2013, www.nytimes.com/2013/03/31/magazine/should-it-matter-that-the-shooter-at-oikos-university-was-korean.html?pagewanted=all&\_r=0. See also "Korean Rage: Stereotype or Real Issue?" by Winston Chung MD, April 10, 2012, <http://blog.sfgate.com/wchung/2012/04/10/korean-rage-stereotype-or-real-issue/>.

<sup>206</sup> "Examining Anger in 'Culture-Bound' Syndromes," by Sandra L. Somers, Psychiatric Times, January 01, 1998, www.psychiatrictimes.com/cultural-psychiatry/examining-anger-culture-bound-syndromes.

<sup>207</sup> Lindner, 2009a, pp. 26–27.

<sup>208</sup> The (MAOA) gene (also called "warrior gene") is located on the X chromosome. A meta-study shows that both the serotonin transporter gene (5HTTLPR) and the 30 base pair variable number of tandem repeats of the monoamine oxidase A gene (MAOA-uVNTR) were significantly associated with antisocial behavior, see Ficks and Waldman, 2014.

<sup>209</sup> Demas, et al., 1999, Stevenson and Rillich, 2015.

<sup>210</sup> For the link between masculinity and violence, see, for example, Breines, et al., 2000, Connell, 1996, Connell, 2005, Goldstein, 2001, Whitehead, 2002, Wrangham and Peterson, 1996, Zalewski and Parpat, 1998. Connell and Messerschmidt, 2005 have recently refined their presentation of the nature of gender hierarchy, the geography of masculine configurations, the process of social embodiment, and the dynamics of masculinities. See also "Reducing Men's Violence: The Personal Meets the Political," by Michael S. Kimmel, paper presented at the expert group meeting "Male Roles and Masculinities in the Perspective of a Culture of Peace," Oslo, Norway, September 24–28, 1997. It was a great privilege for me to be invited by Ingeborg Breines to this the expert group meeting and meet in person eminent scholars such as Michael Kimmel and Robert W., later Raewyn Connell. It is a privilege to have many scholars working in this field as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>211</sup> Harter, et al., 2003, p. 312. Harter, et al., 2003, investigated 12 high-profile school shooters, all of whom described having experienced profound humiliation; they had been ridiculed, taunted, teased, harassed, and bullied by peers, spurned by someone they had been romantically interested in, put down publicly by a teacher or school administrator. I thank Clark McCauley, 2017, for making me aware of this study.

<sup>212</sup> Langman, 2015. On July 22, 2016, a teenage shooter killed nine people and injured 27 in a mass shooting in Munich, Germany. He was impressed by Norwegian mass shooter Anders Behring Breivik. Langman's book was found at his home, which he seemed to have studied in preparation for his deed, see "Munich Shooting," by Amber Jamieson, The Guardian, July 23, 2016, www.theguardian.com/world/2016/jul/23/munich-shooter-why-kids-kill-book-psychologist-peter-langman.

<sup>213</sup> "Die Auswirkungen von Armut, Hunger und psycho-sozialer Not auf die pränatale und frühkindliche Gehirnentwicklung," by Peter Boppel, 2008, http://amnesty-heilberufe.de/wp-content/uploads/n2008-boppel.armut\_gehirn.pdf. See the summary:

The results of hunger and psychological stress for the brain of the child are presented, as they are described in literature, which can influence the mother and the growing child prenatally as well as in early childhood. It shows that the worst damage takes place within the phase of growth and combination of dendrites, which is the time between descent and the third/fourth year of life. These damages can be very drastic and even irreversible in some cases. It is discussed, whether malnutrition and psychological stress can rather lead to depressive disorder zones in female bodies while in male bodies they could rather lead to borderline disorder zones. For men, these could display an evolutive process of adaption to warrior personalities in conflict areas, while women are handicapped in their development, and, at the same time, social sorrow and misery are perpetuated.

<sup>214</sup> See for a vivid introduction the BBC documentary film Ancient Worlds, part 3, “The Greek Thing,” www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b00w8pwp. I thank Lasse Moer for making me aware of this documentary.

<sup>215</sup> Furor Teutonicus (Teutonic fury) is a Latin phrase generally attributed to the Roman poet Marcus Annaeus Lucanus, see Diamond, 1996.

<sup>216</sup> Male culture, often characterized by pride of the “rational” male mind, ironically, tufts its honorable male courage on what could safely be called “irrational” abandon of this very mind. I discuss this inconsistency in my book Emotion and Conflict.

<sup>217</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 7: The Humiliation Addiction, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict.

<sup>218</sup> “How We Learned to Kill,” by Timothy Kudo, New York Times, February 27, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/03/01/opinion/sunday/how-we-learned-to-kill.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See also Grossman, 1995.

<sup>219</sup> United States Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, 2014.

<sup>220</sup> In Seligman’s original experiments, dogs “learned helplessness.” See “Architects of C.I.A. Interrogation Drew on Psychology to Induce ‘Helplessness,’” by Benedict Carey, New York Times, December 10, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/12/11/health/architects-of-cia-interrogation-drew-on-psychology-to-induce-helplessness.html?\_r=0:

Nearly a half-century later, a pair of military psychologists became convinced that the theory provided a basis for brutal interrogation techniques, including waterboarding, that were supposed to eliminate detainees’ “sense of control and predictability” and induce “a desired level of helplessness,” the Senate report said.

See also Seligman, 1974. See also Hoffman, et al., 2015.

<sup>221</sup> “The Psychologists Who Taught the C.I.A. How to Torture (and Charged $180 Million),” by Katherine Eban, Vanity Fair, December 10, 2014, www.vanityfair.com/online/daily/2014/12/psychologists-cia-torture-report:

The psychologists had previously been Air Force trainers in a program called SERE (Survival Evasion Resistance Escape), which subjected military members to mock interrogations mimicking those “used against American servicemen during the Korean war to produce false confessions.”

<sup>222</sup> “Psychologist Defends Harsh CIA Interrogations,” by Ken Dilanian, Huffington Post, December 25, 2014, www.huffingtonpost.com/2014/12/10/psychologist-james-mitchell-cia-torture\_n\_6302526.html.

<sup>223</sup> “Two Psychologists’ Role in CIA Torture Program Comes into Focus,” by Joseph Tanfani and W.J. Hennigan, Los Angeles Times, December 14, 2014, www.latimes.com/world/afghanistan-pakistan/la-fg-torture-psychologists-20141214-story.html#page=1:

In the “Salt Pit,” a then-secret CIA prison in Afghanistan, John “Bruce” Jessen watched carefully in late 2002 as five agency officers rushed into a darkened cell and grabbed an Afghan detainee named Gul Rahman. “It was thoroughly planned and rehearsed,” Jessen later explained, according to a CIA investigator’s report. “They dragged him outside, cut off his clothes and secured him with Mylar tape,” before beating him and forcing him to run wearing a hood. When he fell, they dragged him down dirt passageways, leaving abrasions up and down his body. Jessen added a critique. “After something like this is done, interrogators should speak to the prisoner to give [him] something to think about,” he told the investigator. On Nov. 20, 2002, Rahman was found dead in his unheated cell. He was naked from the waist down and had been chained to a concrete floor. An autopsy concluded that he probably froze to death...On April 15, 2002, they [Jessen and Mitchell] were at a secret CIA prison in Thailand supervising an interrogation of the CIA’s first Al Qaeda prisoner, Abu Zubaydah, who had been captured in Pakistan. The early interrogation was relatively benign. Zubaydah, who was recovering from gunshot wounds, was put in an all-white room with bright lights. Guards wore all black uniforms, including gloves, ski masks and goggles, and communicated only by hand signals. Loud rock music was played to “enhance his sense of hopelessness.”

<sup>224</sup> “New Poll Finds Majority of Americans Think Torture Was Justified After 9/11 Attacks,” by Adam Goldman and Peyton Craighill, Washington Post, December 16, 2014, www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/new-poll-finds-majority-of-americans-believe-torture-justified-after-911-attacks/2014/12/16/f6ee1208-847c-11e4-9534-f79a23c40e6c\_story.html.

<sup>225</sup> “How U.S. Torture Left Legacy of Damaged Minds,” by Matt Appuzzo, Sheri Fink, and James Risen, New York Times, October 9, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/10/09/world/cia-torture-guantanamo-bay.html: Beatings, sleep deprivation, menacing and other brutal tactics have led to persistent mental health problems among detainees held in secret C.I.A. prisons and at Guantánamo. I thank Linda Hartling for making us aware of this article. See also the Guantánamo Testimonials Project, the Center for the Study of Human Rights in the Americas (CSHRA), with Chief investigator Professor Almerindo Ojedo, <http://humanrights.ucdavis.edu/projects/the-guantanamo-testimonials-project/index>. I thank Francisco Gomes de Matos for making me aware of this project. See, furthermore, “Washington Buries the CIA Torture Report,” by Patrick Martin, World Socialist Web Site, January 8, 2015, www.wsws.org/en/articles/2015/01/08/pers-j08.html:

Far from being shamed or humiliated by the detailed exposure of their criminality, those most implicated in the establishment and operation of the torture chambers have brazenly defended their conduct... From former Vice President Dick Cheney to ex-CIA directors George Tenet, Michael Hayden and Porter Goss, to the operational head of the interrogation program, Jose Rodriguez, they have displayed a well-justified confidence that the Obama administration will protect them from any consequences.

<sup>226</sup> O’Mara, 2015.

<sup>227</sup> “C.I.A. First Planned Jails Abiding by U.S. Standards,” by Matt Apuzzo and James Risen, New York Times, December 10, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/12/11/us/politics/cia-first-planned-jails-abiding-by-us-standards-.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>228</sup> Altemeyer, 1996.

<sup>229</sup> Ibid.

<sup>230</sup> “The Psychologists Who Taught the C.I.A. How to Torture (and Charged $180 Million),” by Katherine Eban, Vanity Fair, December 10, 2014, www.vanityfair.com/online/daily/2014/12/psychologists-cia-torture-report.

<sup>231</sup> See Megyn Kelly on Exclusive Interview with Dr. James Mitchell, Fox News, December 16, 2014, <http://video.foxnews.com/v/3946118068001/megyn-kelly-on-exclusive-interview-with-dr-james-mitchell/?#sp=show-clips>. Mitchell describes his fear, as he feels suddenly turned into a scapegoat. He describes his patriotism, for he has done everything because he wanted to protect America. He rejects the torture report with the argument that he was not asked. And he is a “mild torturer,” who found some conditions overdone, for example, the Ministry of Justice’s waterboarding. The requirements said that every twenty seconds water must be poured over the prisoner’s head under a cloth. Then the tortured could breathe once, then followed the next twenty seconds. This then goes on for twenty minutes or so. Mitchell, originally a psychologist who has done “research” on such techniques, and in the secret hideouts of the CIA applied them so frequently that no longer remembers the details, according to an interview. He now prides itself on the show to have relaxed rules: at twenty second intervals, the patient suffocates, Mitchell said, so he changed it to ten second intervals. So in a session there were ten seconds of water, then a deep breath, ten seconds of water, plus he found after careful consideration, twice twenty seconds, and only once forty seconds. Only with Sheikh Mohammed, whom Mitchell called evil and arrogant, nothing worked. He had the talent, said Mitchell, during waterboarding, to absorb the water over the nose and spit it out directly from the mouth.

<sup>232</sup> “Scars of Bangladesh Independence War 40 Years On,” by Shahzeb Jillani, South Asia Editor, BBC World Service, December 13, 2011, www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-asia-16111843.

<sup>233</sup> Ibid.

<sup>234</sup> Ibid.

<sup>235</sup> The 2001 Indian Parliament attack in New Delhi on December 13, 2001, was carried out by the Lashkar-e-Taiba (LeT) and Jaish-e-Mohammed (JeM) terrorist groups. Though formally banned as terrorist organization by Pakistan, experts believe that Pakistan’s main intelligence agency, the Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI), continues to give LeT help and protection.

<sup>236</sup> “Pervez Musharraf’s Mixed Legacy,” by Chris Morris, BBC News, Islamabad, August 18, 2008, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/south\_asia/7567592.stm.

<sup>237</sup> Shahab Ahmed and Zeb, 2016. It is a privilege to have Zahid Shahab as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>238</sup> In 2016, Zahid Shahab Ahmed has joined the Alfred Deakin Institute for Citizenship and Globalization of Deakin

University in Australia as a postdoctoral fellow. See, for instance, Shahab Ahmed and Zeb, 2016. See also Krueger, 2017. And see an endorsement of the argument that terrorism does not follow from poverty, but from lack of freedom, in “The Roots of Terrorism,” by Sultan Mehmood, Dawn, March 3, 2016, www.dawn.com/news/796177/the-roots-of-terrorism:

To understand what causes terrorism, one need not ask how much of a population is illiterate or in abject poverty. Rather one should ask who holds strong enough political views to impose them through terrorism. It is not that most terrorists have nothing to live for. Far from it, they are the high-ability and educated political people who so vehemently believe in a cause that they are willing to die for it. The solution to terrorism is not more growth but more freedom.

<sup>239</sup> Petter Nesser is a senior researcher with the Terrorism Research Group at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI). I thank him for sharing his very deep, nuanced, and differentiated insights in a thoroughly informative conversation in Oslo on June 17, 2011. It was very enriching for me to also share with him my experiences with young clients during my years as psychological counselor in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984 to 1991. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian. See also Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006. See more in the Appendix to Section One.

<sup>240</sup> “The Five Found Guilty Yesterday: Portrait of an Extremist Cell,” The Guardian, May 1, 2007, www.theguardian.com/uk/2007/may/01/politics.terrorism.

<sup>241</sup> Allyn, 1970.

<sup>242</sup> Göring, 1943.

<sup>243</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>244</sup> Holmes, 2007, p. 82. See a review of this book in “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, Asia Times Online, October 22, 2007, www.atimes.com/atimes/Middle\_East/IJ24Ak01.html. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this essay. Chalmers Ashby Johnson (1931 – 2010) was an American author and professor emeritus of the University of California, San Diego, who had served in the Korean War, and was a consultant for the C.I.A. from 1967 to 1973. He is the author of the Blowback Trilogy: Blowback (Johnson, 2000), The Sorrows of Empire (Johnson, 2004), and Nemesis: The Last Days of the American Republic (Johnson, 2006). See also, Johnson, 2010. Stephen Holmes builds his argument, among others, on James Mann, 2004a, who describes the Bush administration’s Cold War thinking.

<sup>245</sup> Kaeuper and Kennedy, 1996.

<sup>246</sup> Ayton and Preston, 2005.

<sup>247</sup> I had the privilege of supporting Jan Brøgger with the interviews he carried out in Egypt for his book on culture, Brøgger and Halvorsen, 1993. See, among others of Foda’s (or Fawda’s) publications, Fawda, 1985, or Fawda, 1988. See also Soage, 2007.

<sup>248</sup> Hamdan, 2014. See also “Inventing the Geography of Egyptian Nationalism (Watanīya): A Review of Gamal Hamdan’s The Personality of Egypt and his Personal History,” by Eiji Nagasawa, www2.econ.hit-u.ac.jp/~areastd/mediterranean/mw/pdf/18/16.pdf.

<sup>249</sup> “Inventing the Geography of Egyptian Nationalism (Watanīya): A Review of Gamal Hamdan’s The Personality of Egypt and his Personal History,” by Eiji Nagasawa, www2.econ.hit-u.ac.jp/~areastd/mediterranean/mw/pdf/18/16.pdf.

<sup>250</sup> “Awraq Jamāl Hamdān” (Gamal Hamdan’s Papers), Al-Musawwar, April 15, 1994, quoted in “Inventing the Geography of Egyptian Nationalism (Watanīya): A Review of Gamal Hamdan’s The Personality of Egypt and his Personal History,” by Eiji Nagasawa, www2.econ.hit-u.ac.jp/~areastd/mediterranean/mw/pdf/18/16.pdf.

<sup>251</sup> Reza Pankhurst belongs to Hizb ut Tahrir, an organization founded in the 1950s to campaign for the restoration of the caliphate, while confirming to be opposed to terrorist violence, see “LSE Tutor Says He Is Victim of McCarthyite Witch-Hunt over Hizb ut-Tahrir membership,” by Owen Bowcott, The Guardian, January 17, 2010, www.theguardian.com/uk/2010/jan/17/reza-pankhurst-mccarthyite-witchhunt.

<sup>252</sup> Pankhurst, 2013.

<sup>253</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 54.

<sup>254</sup> Ibid.

<sup>255</sup> Ibid.

<sup>256</sup> Ibid.

<sup>257</sup> Buffett: “There Are Lots of Loose Nukes Around the World,” interview with Lou Dobbs, CNN, May 25, 2005,

<http://edition.cnn.com/2005/US/05/10/buffett/index.html>. See also, “Socialism? The Rich Are Winning the US Class War: Facts Show Rich Getting Richer, Everyone Else Poorer,” by Bill Quigley, CommonDreams.org, October 25, 2010, www.commondreams.org/views/2010/10/25/socialism-rich-are-winning-us-class-war-facts-show-rich-getting-richer-everyone. Bill Quigley is associate director of the Center for Constitutional Rights and a law professor at Loyola University New Orleans: “The rich talk about the rise of socialism to divert attention from the fact that they are devouring the basics of the poor and everyone else. Many of those crying socialism the loudest are doing it to enrich or empower themselves. They are right about one thing – there is a class war going on in the US. The rich are winning their class war, and it is time for everyone else to fight back for economic justice.” See also note 118 in this Chapter 5.

<sup>258</sup> “Fighting for Next Generation, Kids File Climate Suit Against US Government,” by Deirdre Fulton, Common Dreams, August 13, 2015, www.commondreams.org/news/2015/08/13/fighting-next-generation-kids-file-climate-suit-against-us-government. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

See also the first book by climate scientist James Hansen, 2009, and “Scientists Warn of Perilous Climate Shift Within Decades, Not Centuries,” by Justin Gillis, New York Times, March 22, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/23/science/global-warming-sea-level-carbon-dioxide-emissions.html?\_r=0.

<sup>259</sup> Historian Eric Hobsbawm, 1994, as quoted on the New Humanist blog, October 1, 2012, <http://blog.newhumanist.org.uk/2012/10/eric-hobsbawm-1917-2012.html>. Eric Hobsbawm was an honorary associate of the Rationalist Association and a friend to New Humanist. He contributed the quoted passage to a feature marking the 10th anniversary of 9/11.

<sup>260</sup> I thank sociologist Dennis Smith for coining the words conquest/relegation/reinforcement/inclusion humiliation. See Smith, 2001. It is a privilege to have Dennis Smith as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, since its inception, being among the major initial nurturers of this idea even prior to its further manifestation.

<sup>261</sup> Bourdieu, 1991, p. 51.

<sup>262</sup> Lindner, 2001j.

<sup>263</sup> Hellestveit, 2017.

<sup>264</sup> I thank my friends in Crimea for their deep sharing in 2016, and honor their wish not to expose their names.

<sup>265</sup> Marshall, 2002, pp. 2–3. It is a privilege to have Monty Marshall as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>266</sup> Marshall, 2002, pp. 2–3.

<sup>267</sup> Hoffman, 1998, p. 43.

<sup>268</sup> Wolfgang Kaleck is a civil rights attorney and the general secretary for the European Center for Constitutional and Human Rights. I had the privilege of learning from him in Berlin on May 17, 2011. See, among other publications, Kaleck, et al., 2007, and Kaleck, 2016. Kaleck’s reflections are summarized and translated from German by Lindner:

A few years ago, there were few publications on the topic of transitional justice, now, however, this has changed since, and publications are now streaming in. Wolfgang Kaleck’s first message is that justice heals. Legal action does have an effect on the individual and the community. Kaleck works with victims who are either suffering themselves, or with their family members, and there are, roughly speaking, two types of reactions he observes: Some victims are grateful and feel that their human dignity has been restituted through legal action, if ever so partial, that they again became a subject. In Uzbekistan, for instance, the mothers of the disappeared were grateful even though the procedures had been stopped. Then, there are victims who continue feeling unsatisfied. In Argentina, for instance, the dignity extended to the political identity of the individual has increased, in other words, there are interim results, yet, there is a sense that this is not enough.

Kaleck recommends looking at the International Center for Transitional Justice (<http://ictj.org/>) with their motto “Justice, Truth, Dignity.” This is their vision: “We strive for societies to regain humanity in the wake of mass atrocity. For societies in which impunity is rejected, dignity of victims is upheld, and trust is restored; where truth is the basis of history. We believe that this is an ethical, legal, and political imperative and the cornerstone of lasting peace.”

There is no standard model for dealing with the past, but a number of precedents have been established through the work of special rapporteurs and experts of the United Nations on the issues of impunity, reparations, and best practices in transitional justice. Principles against impunity were initially formulated by Louis Joinet in 1997 and later revised by Diane F. Orentlicher in 2005. Louis Joinet was a longtime UN expert and one of the main architect behind the Convention against Enforced Disappearances, and Diane Orentlicher is professor of international law and co-director of the Center for Human Rights and Humanitarian Law at Washington College of Law. The ‘Joinet/Orentlicher’ principles are based on the precepts of state responsibility and the inherent right of redress for individual victims of grave human rights violations. See the reports submitted by Theo Van Boven (E/CN.4/Sub.2/1993/8), Louis Joinet (E7CN.4/Sub.2/1997/20/Rev.1), Diane Orentlicher (E/CN.4/2005/102/Add.1), and Cherif Bassiouni (E/CN.4/2000/62). See also Orentlicher, 2016.

Kaleck points also at the work of Beatriz Brinkmann, 1999. Brinkmann's experience in prison in Chile becomes palpable in "Belagerungszustand in Chile: Wer ist ein Terrorist?" by Freimut Duve, Die Zeit, October 31, 1986, <http://pdf.zeit.de/1986/45/wer-ist-ein-terrorist.pdf>. (I thank Freimut Duve for his support for the Global Responsibility Festival "Hamburger IdeenKette" that I organized in Hamburg, Germany, in 1993, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/03.php.) Brinkmann works with the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims (CINTRAS), in Chile, a center for mental health and human rights, that works to alleviate the physical and emotional suffering of persons affected by torture or other forms of political repression. See www.ircrt.org.

Of course, legal tools are not the only means, they cannot achieve everything, they are too limited. What is needed is an interplay between political, cultural, legal means.

When the overall goal is human dignity, then criminal law has a door opening function on two levels. First, if impunity prevails due to political and economic upheavals on the national level, then criminal law may have a door opening function. Second, international law is often more evolved than at the national level. In Uruguay and Brazil, for example, previous regimes have announced amnesties to make peace with the military. They were now prompted to rethink these decisions, since these amnesties violated international law.

Chapter 7

<sup>1</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>2</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 52.

<sup>3</sup> Syrische Flüchtlinge: Kein Asyl für Kriegsdienstverweigerer, by Arnd Henze, Das Erste, May 10, 217, www.tagesschau.de/inland/asyl-muenster-urteil-101.html:

Belehrung über "soldatische Pflicht": Der Soldat muss die menschliche Regung der Furcht überwinden. (...) Furcht vor persönlicher Gefahr entschuldigt eine Tat nicht, wenn die soldatische Pflicht verlangt, die Gefahr zu bestehen.

<sup>4</sup> Remy, 2002. See also Mythos Rommel, documentary film in three parts by Maurice Philip Remy, Das Erste, 2002, Der Krieger; Der Verlierer; Der Verschwörer, June 2005, <https://web.archive.org/web/20031005133534/>. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>5</sup> Mythos Rommel, 2002 documentary film.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid.

<sup>7</sup> Mythos Rommel, 2002 documentary film. See a summary in German by Lindner:

Manfred Rommel berichtet, dass sein Vater Hitler einmal Ende 1943 sagte, dass ein Endsieg "eigentlich nicht mehr machbar ist." Rommel glaubte nicht mehr an einen Endsieg und wollte einen annehmbaren Frieden durch Verhandlungen. Hitler habe geantwortet, "so dumm sei er auch nicht, das wisse er auch. Aber "merken Sie sich, mit mir schließt niemand Frieden!" Rommel hoffte immer auf Hitlers Einsicht. Manfred: "Mein Vater hat nur gehofft, dass, wenn der Hitler merkt, dass es aus ist, dass er die Konsequenzen zieht und geht, und den Weg zu einem einigermaßen erträglichen Frieden freimacht."

Im Februar 1944 hört Rommel zum ersten Mal von dem Töten der Juden, von Gaskammern, und zwar von Karl Strölin, dem Oberbürgermeister von Stuttgart. Admiral Friedrich Ruge, ein Offizier aus seinem Stab, notiert die Reaktion von Rommel in seinem Tagebuch: "Gerechtigkeit – unentbehrliche Grundlage des Staates. Oben leider nicht sauber. Abschlachtungen. Große Schuld."

Ein britischer Soldat, George Lane, der den Verteidigungswall der Deutschen auskundschaften sollte, fiel den Deutschen in die Hände. Er wurde auf La Roche-Guyon zu Rommel gebracht. Rommel sagte, dass es doch schade sei, dass die Engländer und die Deutschen nicht Seite an Seite gegen den wirklichen Feind, die Russen, kämpften. Lane entgegnete, dass es da einige Hindernisse gäbe, unter anderem könnten die Engländer nicht das den Juden antun, was ihnen die Deutschen antun. Rommel antwortete: "Oh, aber das sind politische Dinge! Wir sind Soldaten, wir sind Krieger, wir haben mit Politik nichts zu tun!" Lane: "Genau das ist es! Deshalb könnten wir nicht Seite an Seite (side by side) kämpfen!"

Rommel wurde von den Verschwörern um Stauffenberg angesprochen. Er verriet sie nicht, lehnte aber ein Attentat auf Hitler ab. Philipp Freiherr von Böselager, vom Militärischen Widerstand, erklärt: "Von ihrer Erziehung her, von ihrer Herkunft her, war ein Putsch oder ein Attentat auf das Staatsoberhaupt außerhalb des Denkungsvermögens. Sie waren soldatisch geschult, aber nicht politisch." Rommel hoffte, dass Hitler zurücktreten würde. Er wusste, dass die Invasion nicht zu verhindern war, trotz seiner Maßnahmen. Zu Plänen im Westen eine Offensive zu planen, sagte er, in Manfred Rommels Worten: “Das ist Wahnsinn! Jeder Schuss, den wir im Westen noch abgeben, der trifft uns selber!” Für die Propaganda sagte er allerdings das Gegenteil.

Zu den Gestapo Männern, die ihm die Zyankalikapsel brachten, sagte er “Ich habe den Führer geliebt, und liebe ihn noch.”

Rommel war ein Mann, der Hitler beseitigen wollte und sich trotzdem nicht von ihm lösen konnte.

<sup>8</sup> Hoffmann, 1995.

<sup>9</sup> Verräterkinder – Die Töchter und Söhne des Widerstands, documentary film by Christian Weisenborn, Das Erste, 2014, see the trailer at <https://youtu.be/vmsQNMeShbI>, and see also www.ardmediathek.de/tv/Dokumentationen-und-Reportagen/Verr%C3%A4terkinder/hr-fernsehen/Video?bcastId=26131780&documentId=35557026. In 1942, Weisenborn’s parents (Günther and Margarete Weisenborn) were sentenced as members of the Rote Kapelle and escaped execution only by sheer luck. See <https://de.wikipedia.org/wiki/Verr%C3%A4terkind>. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>10</sup> Matthias Erzberger sagte im Salongwagen zu einem Franzosen. “Wir werden hier nicht wie Feinde behandelt, sondern wie Abschaum.” Der Franzose: “Das seid Ihr auch für mich!” See Gewaltfrieden: Die Legende vom Dolchstoß und der Vertrag von Versailles, documentary film by Bernd Fischerauer, 2010, part 1: https://youtu.be/A\_6WBSL6xKc, part 2: <https://youtu.be/T9owJ1wp2KA>.

<sup>11</sup> Malinowski, 2005.

<sup>12</sup> Gilbert, 1947, Manvell and Fraenkel, 1962.

<sup>13</sup> The exhibition “Verbrechen der Wehrmacht” created heated protests; see www.verbrechen-der-wehrmacht.de/docs/home\_e.htm.

<sup>14</sup> Internationaler Militärgerichtshof Nürnberg, 1989.

<sup>15</sup> Posen speech, October 4, 1943, Internationaler Militärgerichtshof Nürnberg, 1989, p. 145:

“Ich meine jetzt die Judenevakuierung, die Ausrottung des jüdischen Volkes. Es gehört zu den Dingen, die man leicht ausspricht. – ‚Das jüdische Volk wird ausgerottet‘, sagt ein jeder Parteigenosse, “ganz klar, steht in unserem Programm, Ausschaltung der Juden, Ausrottung, machen wir.” [...] Von allen, die so reden, hat keiner zugesehen, keiner hat es durchgestanden. Von Euch werden die meisten wissen, was es heißt, wenn 100 Leichen beisammen liegen, wenn 500 daliegen oder wenn 1000 daliegen. Dies durchgehalten zu haben, und dabei – abgesehen von Ausnahmen menschlicher Schwächen – anständig geblieben zu sein, das hat uns hart gemacht und ist ein niemals geschriebenes und niemals zu schreibendes Ruhmesblatt unserer Geschichte. Denn wir wissen, wie schwer wir uns täten, wenn wir heute noch in jeder Stadt – bei den Bombenangriffen, bei den Lasten und bei den Entbehrungen des Krieges – noch die Juden als Geheimsaboteure, Agitatoren und Hetzer hätten. Wir würden wahrscheinlich jetzt in das Stadium des Jahres 1916/17 gekommen sein, wenn die Juden noch im deutschen Volkskörper säßen.”

<sup>16</sup> Translated from German from German by Lindner, see the original German text in Bruhns, 2014, p. 65:

Die Probe darauf, ob wir ein großes Kulturvolk sind, haben wir abgelegt: Menschen, die inmitten einer raffinierten Kultur leben, die dann trotzdem draußen dem Grausen des Krieges gewachsen sind (was für einen Senegal-Neger keine Leistung ist!), und die dann trotzdem so zurückkommen, so grundanständig, wie die große Mehrzahl unserer Leute, – das ist echtes Menschentum.

<sup>17</sup> “When History Humiliates Former Enemies,” by Jennifer Lind, CNN, <http://edition.cnn.com/2014/01/03/opinion/lind-japan-war-memories/>.

<sup>18</sup> Terror in Mumbai, documentary film by Dan Reed for England’s Channel 4 Dispatches, 2009, www.quicksilvermedia.tv/productions/production/terror-in-mumbai. Reed’s reflections on his own reading of the transcripts are quoted in Kolås, 2010, p. 86.

<sup>19</sup> Kolås, 2010, p. 85.

<sup>20</sup> Kolås, 2010, p. 96.

<sup>21</sup> “Proposed new Indian anti-terror laws would violate human rights,” Amnesty International, December 23, 2008, www.amnesty.org/en/latest/news/2008/12/proposed-new-indian-anti-terror-laws-would-violate-human-rights-20081223/.

<sup>22</sup> A series of coordinated terrorist attacks occurred in Paris and its northern suburb, Saint-Denis, on the evening of 13 November 2015. In the weeks leading up to the Paris attacks, Da’esh and its branches had claimed responsibility for the downing of Metrojet Flight 9268 on October 31 and the suicide bombings in Beirut on November 12, 2015

<sup>23</sup> “Beirut, Also the Site of Deadly Attacks, Feels Forgotten,” by Anne Barnard, New York Times, November 15, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/11/16/world/middleeast/beirut-lebanon-attacks-paris.html.

<sup>24</sup> The suicide bombing on Sultan Ahmet Square on January 12, 2016, killed 10 people, all of them German citizens.

<sup>25</sup> “In Outcry Over Siege, Two Indias Emerge,” by Emily Wax, Washington Post, December 8, 2008, www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/12/08/AR2008120803685.html?sid=ST2008120900105/.

<sup>26</sup> See Böckler, et al., 2013, and “A Study of Active Shooter Incidents in the United States Between 2000 and 2013, Unclassified,” by the U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington Navy Yard, Washington, DC, September 16, 2013, www.fbi.gov/about-us/office-of-partner-engagement/active-shooter-incidents/a-study-of-active-shooter-incidents-in-the-u.s.-2000-2013. See, furthermore, “New FBI Report Casts Doubt on NRA’s ‘Good Guy Stops Bad Guy’ Nonsense,” by Mike Weisser, Huffington Post, September 29, 2014, www.huffingtonpost.com/mike-weisser/fbi-report-active-shooters\_b\_5900748.html:

More than half (56 percent) were terminated by the shooter who either took his or her own life, simply stopped shooting or fled the scene. Another 26 percent ended in the traditional Hollywood-like fashion with the shooter and law enforcement personnel exchanging gunfire and in nearly all of those situations the shooter ended up either wounded or dead. In 13 percent of the shooting situations, the shooter was successfully disarmed and restrained by unarmed civilians, and in 3 percent of the incidents the shooter was confronted by armed civilians, of whom four were on-duty security guards and one person was just your average “good guy” who happened to be carrying a gun.

<sup>27</sup> “Forget the Sex and Violence; Shame Is the Ratings Leader” by Alessandra Stanley, New York Times, November 20, 2002, www.nytimes.com/2002/11/20/arts/television/20BACH.html?pagewanted=all. I thank Carol Smaldino for reminding me of this article.

<sup>28</sup> “Is Virtual Reality Show Addiction a Gateway Drug to the Election of Donald Trump?” by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, June, 28, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/is-virtual-reality-show-a\_b\_10682194.html.

<sup>29</sup> Lindner, 2009d, pp. 138–139.

<sup>30</sup> Lindner, 2009d, pp. 268–269.

<sup>31</sup> Lindner, 2000h.

<sup>32</sup> “Marsh Arab Rebellion: Grievance, Mafias and Militias in Iraq,” by Juan Cole, Fourth Wadie Jwaideh Memorial Lecture, Department of Near Eastern Languages and Cultures, Indiana University, Bloomington, 2008, www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/iraq/iraqtribes4.pdf.

“The ‘Garden of Eden’ Becomes a UNESCO World Heritage Site,” by J. Weston Phippen, The Atlantic, July 18, 2016, www.theatlantic.com/news/archive/2016/07/unesco-iraq-marsh/491801/.

<sup>33</sup> “The Iraqi Campaign against the Marsh Arabs: Ecocide as Genocide,” by Joseph W. Dellapenna, Jurist: The Legal Education Network, January 31, 2003, <http://jurist.law.pitt.edu/forum/forumnew92.php>. See also Thesiger, 1964.

<sup>34</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 67.

<sup>35</sup> Hendrix, 2008.

<sup>36</sup> “The Lessons of Anwar al-Awlaki,” by Scott Shane, New York Times, August 27, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/08/30/magazine/the-lessons-of-anwar-al-awlaki.html?\_r=0. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See also Arrigo and Wagner, 2007, or Shane, 2015.

<sup>37</sup> Saif Allah (pseudonym), “jihadi” analyst on the Risalat al-Umma forum in 2005; McCauley and Moskalenko, 2011, p. 157, Schmid, 2013, p. 3.

<sup>38</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 32, Hartling, et al., 2013.

<sup>39</sup> Seligman, 1972.

<sup>40</sup> “The Psychologists Who Taught the C.I.A. How to Torture (and Charged $180 Million),” by Katherine Eban, Vanity Fair, December 10, 2014, www.vanityfair.com/online/daily/2014/12/psychologists-cia-torture-report.

<sup>41</sup> “Architects of C.I.A. Interrogation Drew on Psychology to Induce ‘Helplessness,’” by Benedict Carey, New York Times, December 10, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/12/11/health/architects-of-cia-interrogation-drew-on-psychology-to-induce-helplessness.html?\_r=0. See also Seligman, 1974.

<sup>42</sup> “Two Psychologists’ Role in CIA Torture Program Comes into Focus,” by Joseph Tanfani and W.J. Hennigan, Los Angeles Times, December 14, 2014, www.latimes.com/world/afghanistan-pakistan/la-fg-torture-psychologists-20141214-story.html#page=1.

<sup>43</sup> Lex Duodecim Tabularum, more informally simply Duodecim Tabulae. See an international survey over contemporary family law in Bainham and International Society of Family Law, 2006.

<sup>44</sup> The Dalit Mushar (a rat-eating caste) in Bihar, or the so-called minorities in Somalia, are just two very concrete extreme contemporary examples of many, both during history and in present times.

<sup>45</sup> “Why Is There peace?,” by Steven Pinker, Greater Good Magazine, April 2009, http://greatergood.berkeley.edu/article/item/why\_is\_there\_peace.

<sup>46</sup> The argument of cost is relevant even nowadays. In 2009, New Mexico has outlawed executions as the 15th State in the United States. The director of the ACLU Capital Punishment Project, John Holdridge, explains that economic reasoning stood behind the ban, citing “the exorbitant cost to the taxpayers of maintaining the death penalty.” This quote is to be found widely on the Internet, see, among others, at news.yahoo.com/s/afp/20090326/ts\_alt\_afp/usexecutionjustice.

<sup>47</sup> Wood, 1994

<sup>48</sup> Quataert, 2000.

<sup>49</sup> In the classic tripartite representation, Jesus is presented as the one who judges, the one who blesses, and the one who teaches.

<sup>50</sup> “Mann mit dem Schwert? Das Relief an der Marktkirche sorgt bei Betrachtern für Fragezeichen,” Maike Schaper, Dewezet, October 17, 2014, p. 22:

Der Pastor der Marktkirche Sankt Nikolai, Thomas Risel, weiß mehr über die steinerne Abbildung: “Das Relief heißt ‘Jesus als Weltenrichter’ und ist eine von mehreren Christusdarstellungen an der Marktkirche. Anfang des 14. Jahrhunderts war es eine alte mittelalterliche Tradition, Jesus so abzubilden. Ähnliche Darstellungen finden sich in sehr vielen Kirchen dieser Zeit. Neben der Illustration von Jesus als Richter findet man ihn in der klassischen Dreierdarstellung noch oft als Segnenden und als Lehrenden...” Das Relief ist vollständig und einer der ältesten erhaltenen Steine der Kirche, dessen Alter auf Anfang des 14. Jahrhunderts geschätzt wird. Nach dem Zweiten Weltkrieg musste die zerstörte Marktkirche zum großen Teil neu aufgebaut werden. Das Relief zeigt Jesus als Weltenrichter, von dessen Mund zwei Schwerter ausgehen. Die beiden Schwerter sollen die weltliche und die geistliche Gewalt symbolisieren. Jesus wird von Engeln mit Marterwerkzeugen begleitet, mit denen auch schon er selbst zu Lebzeiten gefoltert wurde. Häufige Interpretationen für Darstellungen vom Jüngsten Gericht beziehen sich auf Jesus, der als Weltenrichter in der Mitte thronend beide Hände hochhält und seine Wundmale zeigt. In anderen Darstellungen kann er zu sehen sein, wie er mit der linken Hand die Sünder zurückweist. Ihn umgeben oft Engel mit den Leidenswerkzeugen Christi oder Posaunen sowie Maria und Johannes der Täufer, die als Fürbitter für die sündige Menschheit beten. Darunter sitzen in Abbildungen oftmals die 12 Apostel als Zeugen des Gerichts. In spätmittelalterlichen Darstellungen wird das Schwert des Gerichtes durch die Lilie der Gnade auf der anderen Seite ergänzt, statt eines zweiten Schwertes. Detailreichere Bilder stellen stets links vom Betrachter die Seligen dar, die in den Himmel auffahren und rechts die Verdammten, die zur Hölle herabstürzen, was der Ankündigung des Weltgerichts im Matthäus-Evangelium entspricht. Oft begegnet man auch dem Erzengel Michael mit Seelen-Waage und Schwert. Das Jüngste Gericht spielte im mittelalterlichen Europa eine große Rolle. Da zu dieser Zeit die Menschen in dem Glauben lebten, es stünde als wirkliches Ereignis kurz bevor, bemühten sie sich, Gott ihre Frömmigkeit zu zeigen und somit in den Himmel aufzufahren. Nach Tod und Auferstehung wird Jesus zur Rechten Gottes sitzend zum Richter der Welt, wie es im christlichen Glauben heißt: “Er kommt zu Richten die Lebenden und die Toten.” Der Glaube daran findet sich jedoch auch im Judentum und Islam wieder. “Das Bildnis am Eingangsportal der Marktkirche soll mahnen, dass jeder Mensch am Ende seines Lebens einmal Rechenschaft gegenüber Gott ablegen muss. Doch durch Christus wissen die Christen auch, dass Gott die Liebe, die Gnade und die Barmherzigkeit ist,” so Pastor Risel.

<sup>51</sup> “Recovering the Doctrine of the Vengeance of God,” by Thomas Dalton, January 9, 2015, www.daltonthomas.org/blog/2015/1/7/recovering-the-doctrine-of-the-vengeance-of-god.

<sup>52</sup> Special Latin America Issue of the Peace and Conflict Monitor: Violence in Latin America and the Caribbean, April 01, 2012, see www.internationalpeaceandconflict.org/forum/topic/show?id=780588%3ATopic%3A723987&xgs=1&xg\_source=msg\_share\_topic#.VfQ2SJfICOb. This special collection of articles was compiled for the Peace and Conflict Monitor of the United Nations mandated University for Peace (UPEACE) in Costa Rica, highlighting the problem of violence in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC).

<sup>53</sup> Cardenas, 2009, p. 59. See also Paley, 2014.

<sup>54</sup> “‘War on Terror’ Has Indigenous People in Its Sights,” by Gustavo González, Inter Press Service (IPS), June 6, 2005, www.ipsnews.net/2005/06/latin-america-war-on-terror-has-indigenous-people-in-its-sights/.

<sup>55</sup> Cardenas, 2009, p. 60.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid.

<sup>58</sup> Cardenas, 2009, p. 62.

<sup>59</sup> In the documentary film Porn On The Brain, aired on Channel 4 on September 30, 2013, presenter Martin Daubney, journalist and father of a boy of four, asks neuroscientists, therapists and educators, and also young people: Is pornography really harmful to children and young people? What scientific evidence is there? The results are that particularly young people risk not just being traumatized but having their very brain structure affected. The trauma can then be so difficult to bear that others are being hurt. Channel 4 is a British public-service television broadcaster. See also Daubney, 2015, Abstract:

Martin Daubney is an award-winning journalist and broadcaster. He was the longest-ever serving editor of the men's magazine Loaded. However, when he became a father, he found himself reassessing his attitude to lads' magazines and pornography. The journey led to his involvement in the Channel 4 documentary Porn on the Brain, where he investigated how teenagers' pornography habits have changed, and the effect that modern pornography — its content and accessibility — is having on their brains.

See, furthermore, "Experiment that convinced me online porn is the most pernicious threat facing children today," by Martin Daubney, Daily Mail Online, September 25, 2013, www.dailymail.co.uk/femail/article-2432591/Porn-pernicious-threat-facing-children-today-By-ex-lads-mag-editor-MARTIN-DAUBNEY.html.

See, furthermore, Nur Porno im Kopf, 3sat, October 16, 2014, www.3sat.de/page/?source=/wissenschaftsdoku/sendungen/178675/index.html. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe.

<sup>60</sup> "Teen Girls Gang-Raped and Hanged from a Tree – Police," by Nita Bhalla, Reuters, May 29, 2014, <http://in.reuters.com/article/2014/05/29/uk-india-killings-idINKBN0E91AI20140529>.

<sup>61</sup> Lindner, 2000h.

<sup>62</sup> Bruce, 2010.

<sup>63</sup> ZDF-History: Operation "Zersetzung" – Der geheime Terror der Stasi, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, <http://history.zdf.de/ZDF/zdfportal/programdata/c5479add-a5dd-35ff-99cf-ca2843da6ec4/20189842?generateCanonicalUrl=true>, see also <https://youtu.be/vHJAFWtyeOo>. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. Translated by Lindner from the German original:

Warum in ihrem Leben auf einmal alles schief lief, war für die meisten Opfer unerklärlich: eine Anstellung, die ohne Grund gekündigt wurde, Bewerbungsschreiben, auf die nie eine Antwort kam, zerrüttete Ehen wegen angeblicher Affären. Viele Betroffene erfuhren erst nach der Wiedervereinigung, dass nicht Pech, sondern das Ministerium für Staatssicherheit hinter dem vermeintlichen Unglück steckte.

Tatsächlich arbeitete die Stasi seit 1976 an einer geheimen Strategie mit dem Decknamen "Operation Zersetzung," die einzig darauf zielte, den Opfern größtmöglichen Schaden zuzufügen. Nicht selten verursachte der staatlich sanktionierte Psychoterror existentielle Lebenskrisen, die bei manchen zu Depressionen und Selbstmord führten. Bis heute gelten Tausende ehemalige DDR-Bürger als "nachhaltig geschädigt." "ZDF-History" gewährt erstmals umfassend Einblick in das menschenverachtende Terrorinstrument des Ministeriums für Staatssicherheit.

See also Pingel-Schliemann, 2004, and Trobisch-Lütge, 2004, 2011.

<sup>64</sup> McLuhan, 1972, p. 92.

<sup>65</sup> Berit Ås, in a personal conversation in her home in Asker, Norway, May 31, 2014. See also Ås, 2008. See the video on Male Master Suppression Techniques that we created on May 31, 2014, in the home of Berit Ås at <http://youtu.be/mRASpCi8hk>. Berit Ås explains how she started out with five master suppression techniques and later extended them.

<sup>66</sup> Berit Ås is professor of social science, the first female party leader in Norway (Democratic Socialists, AIK), a peace activist and feminist. She has been a Member of Parliament and founder of the Norwegian Women's University. Her areas of research are accident and consumer research and in-depth women's studies. She is a Knight of the Order of St. Olav first class. She is best known for her theory of five male master suppression techniques. Of these, she has lectured in more than forty countries on four continents. Among others, she refers to Robert Merton (damned if you do and damned if you don't), Ingjald Nissen, and her mentor Harriet Holter. It was a privilege to have Berit Ås as opponent when I defended my doctoral dissertation in 2001 at the University of Oslo, and to have her as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>67</sup> “Neighbour Quarrels Hit New Extreme,” by Nina Berglund, News in English, April 11, 2014, www.newsinenglish.no/2014/04/11/neighbour-quarrels-hit-new-extreme/.

<sup>68</sup> Leidner, et al., 2012.

<sup>69</sup> See, among others, Sarraj, 2002, Sayler, 2004, Giacaman, et al., 2007, Elison and Harter, 2007, Walker and Knauer, 2011.

<sup>70</sup> See for research on inertia, for instance, Leidner, et al., 2012. According to anthropologist Scott Atran, humiliation is a negative predictor for terrorism, since those who feel humiliated become submissive. However, it is a different case to act on behalf of others’ exposure to humiliation, such as the second or third generation of Muslims in Britain who believe that their parents were humiliated. See, among others, Ginges and Atran, 2008.

Canada’s indigenous populations demonstrate the deleterious effect of continuous humiliation. See “Wave of Indigenous Suicides Leaves Canadian Town Appealing for Help,” by Liam Stack, New York Times, March 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/19/world/americas/canada-youth-suicide.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. Hartling commented in a personal communication on March 21, 2016:

Canada’s indigenous populations demonstrate the deleterious effect of continuous humiliation: they are driven into waves of suicide as an outflow of “cumulative humiliation,” of a lingering trauma of colonialism and prejudice, of “cultural genocide.”

<sup>71</sup> Galtung, 1969.

<sup>72</sup> “Wave of Indigenous Suicides Leaves Canadian Town Appealing for Help,” by Liam Stack, New York Times, March 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/19/world/americas/canada-youth-suicide.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. Hartling writes in a personal communication on March 21, 2016:

Canada’s indigenous populations demonstrate the deleterious effect of continuous humiliation: they are driven into waves of suicide as an outflow of “cumulative humiliation,” of a lingering trauma of colonialism and prejudice, of “cultural genocide.”

<sup>73</sup> Lewis, 1971.

<sup>74</sup> See, among others, Sarraj, 2002, Sayler, 2004, Giacaman, et al., 2007, Elison and Harter, 2007, Walker and Knauer, 2011.

<sup>75</sup> Ahmed, personal communication, 2004. I heard accounts similar to that of Ahmed in many variations many times also from other people. They all tell me that living in perpetual despair forces one into experiences one would have thought to be impossible before. See Lindner, 2009b, p. 36, also Lindner, 2007b, or Lindner, 2012f.

<sup>76</sup> Accounts like this led me to doubt that humiliation and shame are always connected: feelings of humiliation can occur without shame. Torturers inflict humiliation to create deep shame, however, as I have learned from torture victims, they can succeed in insulating themselves from such onslaughts or they may even feel humiliation as a triumph.

<sup>77</sup> “Demütigung ohne Scham, als Rächer! ‘Morden im Rampenlicht’,” by Martin Altmeyer, Spiegel Online, 31/2016, July 30, 2016, www.spiegel.de/spiegel/inszenierung-von-groessenwahn-essay-von-martin-altmeyer-a-1105637.html: Was treibt Amokläufer, und woher kommt der Hass der Islamisten? Psychoanalytiker Martin Altmeyer über die öffentliche Inszenierung von Allmacht und Größenwahn.

<sup>78</sup> I had several conversations with members of security police in different countries. Trond Hugubakken is communications director at Politiets sikkerhetstjeneste, PST (the Norwegian Police Security Service is the police security agency of Norway, comparable to the British MI5 Security Service), and Josefine Aase was a senior advisor, when our conversation took place in the Oslo headquarters on February 4, 2011. See more in the Appendix to Section One.

<sup>79</sup> David Cook is a historian at Rice University, Texas, U.S.A., who studies Muslim apocalypticism, see, among others, Cook, 2010. According to Muslim apocalypticism, the battles preceding the Day of Judgment will take place in modern Syria, with a final showdown in the year 1500 of the Islamic Hijra calendar, or A.D. 2076. See also Utvik, 2006, and how the Muslim Brotherhood was inspired by Nazi Germany. Clearly, there are differences between terrorist organizations such as Al-Qaeda and the path of Adolf Hitler. Hitler was without power at first, however, he was able to get into a position of power: “Al-Qaeda will never be in such a position,” explained Petter Nesser, senior researcher with the Terrorism Research Group at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI), during our thoroughly informative conversation in Oslo on June 17, 2011. It was very enriching for me to also share with him my experiences with young clients during my years as psychological counselor in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984 to 1991. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian. See also Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006.

<sup>80</sup> Badie, 2014. I thank Yves Musoni and Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this book. See also “L’Occident face à la revanche des humiliés,” by Yidir Plantade, Le Monde, April 2, 2014, www.lemonde.fr/idees/article/2014/04/02/l-occident-face-a-la-revanche-des-humilies\_4394400\_3232.html.

<sup>81</sup> I am extremely appreciative of the meeting with Bertrand Badie on December 15, 2015, and his generosity in including me into his thinking. I have summarized and translated his words from French. It is a privilege to have Bertrand Badie as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>82</sup> James Madison (1751 – 1836), Father of the U.S. Constitution, 4th American President, in a letter to Thomas Jefferson, May 13, 1798. I thank Rodrigue Tremblay for making me aware of this quote.

<sup>83</sup> Miller, 1988, p. 5. See also Miller, 2008b, and Hartling, 2008b.

<sup>84</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 199.

<sup>85</sup> Elias, 1939/1994. See also Elias, 2000. With respect to gender, see also Smith, 1997, 1999.

<sup>86</sup> “Trump’s Political Lesson: Humiliate, or Be Humiliated,” by Alex Shephard and Laura Reston, New Republic, December 6, 2016, <https://newrepublic.com/article/139176/trumps-political-lesson-humiliate-humiliated>.

<sup>87</sup> See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, Gender, Humiliation, and Global Security.

<sup>88</sup> Audun Bjørlo Lysbakken and Kristian Norheim on Dagsnytt Atten (Daily News Eighteen), NRK, August 13, 2014. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation. Audun Bjørlo Lysbakken is the leader of the Socialist Left Party (SV). Kristian Norheim is a member of the conservative Progress Party (FrP) and its expert on international relations.

<sup>89</sup> On Dagsnytt Atten (Daily News Eighteen), NRK, September 14, 2015. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation.

<sup>90</sup> Helge Lurås is the founder and director of the Centre for International and Strategic Analysis (SISA). He has experience from the Norwegian Institute of International Affairs (NUPI), Norwegian Armed Forces, NATO, the UN and from private sector consultancy, www.strategiskanalyse.no/index.php/en/employee-detail?contact\_id=3. See, among others, Lurås, 2015.

<sup>91</sup> Håvard Mokleiv Nygård is a senior research at the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO). See, among others, his work on the “conflict trap,” where low levels of development lead to conflict and conflict leads to yet lower levels of development, see Hegre and Nygård, 2015, Nygård, 2014. See, furthermore, Collier, 2013, or “States of Fragility 2015: Meeting Post-2015 Ambitions,” Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), March 26, 2015, www.oecd.org/dac/governance-peace/publications/documentuploads/SOF2015.pdf. Please note that the Editorial of this report is co-signed by Erik Solheim, a supporter of the World Dignity University Initiative (see <https://youtu.be/XfzrteRAyzM?list=ULXfzrteRAyzM>). See an introduction to the report on www.oecd.org/dac/states-of-fragility-2015-9789264227699-en.htm:

The 2015 report differs markedly from previous editions as it seeks to present a new understanding of fragility beyond fragile states. It assesses fragility as an issue of universal character that can affect all countries, not only those traditionally considered “fragile” or conflict-affected. To do so, it takes three indicators related to targets of SDG 16 and two from the wider SDG framework: violence, access to justice, accountable and inclusive institutions, economic inclusion and stability, and capacities to prevent and adapt to social, economic and environmental shocks and disasters. It applies them to all countries worldwide, and identifies the 50 most vulnerable ones in all five dimensions. The group of countries most challenged on all five fronts differs little from the traditional list of fragile states and economies. Still, several middle-income countries with disproportionately high levels of crime-related violence, sub-national conflict or poor access to justice move into the spotlight.

The report concludes that making headway on the targets will require building a new portfolio of tools and interventions, and an understanding of the role the international community should and can play in assisting this process.

<sup>92</sup> “‘Is ethnicity the root cause of conflict in Africa?’ ‘Does ethnicity kill?’ Why do some multi-ethnic states disintegrate into civil war and others, despite ethnic pluralism, have not faced wars and armed conflicts? Are all conflicts not in some ways about identity or the contesting of identities?” these are questions asked, for instance, in McCandless and Karbo, 2011.

Note also the Centre for Research on Inequality, Human Security and Ethnicity (CRISE), whose primary objective is to understand why some multi-ethnic countries are peaceful while others experience violent conflict. See “Horizontal Inequalities As a Cause of Conflict: A Review of CRISE Findings,” by Frances Stewart, Centre for Research on Inequality, Human Security and Ethnicity, 2010, <http://r4d.dfid.gov.uk/pdf/outputs/inequality/crise-overview-1.pdf>.

<sup>93</sup> Anthony Marsella, in a personal communication on June 26, 2013. See also “Lifeism: Beyond Humanity,” Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, March 17, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/03/lifeism-beyond-humanity/.

<sup>94</sup> In their book on trauma and healing under state terrorism, Agger and Jensen, 1996, differentiates four categories of mechanisms of psychological warfare: direct repression, indirect repression, social marginalization and individual marginalization. Each of these methods tends to diminish human dignity, cultural dignity and personal sense of worth.

<sup>95</sup> Jackman, 1994. I thank Arie Nadler for reminding me of Jackman’s work.

<sup>96</sup> Foucault, 1975, p. 166–175. See also Lecture 13 of Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>97</sup> Foucault, 1975, p. 175–183. See also Lecture 13 of Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>98</sup> Foucault, 1975, p. 217–227. See also Lecture 13 of Richards, et al., 2015b, a.

<sup>99</sup> Foucault, 1975, p. 215. See also Lecture 13 of Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>100</sup> “Stir Crazy,” by Clifford Geertz, book review of Discipline and Punish, New York Review of Books, January 26, 1975, www.nybooks.com/articles/archives/1978/jan/26/stir-crazy/.

<sup>101</sup> See Richards, 1995, Richards, 2004, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, Richards and Swanger, 2013, Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. Richards recommends also Searle, 1995, Harré and Secord, 1972, Taylor, 1971, MacIntyre and Bell, 1967, and other works by the same authors. I would assume that Richards has also read George, 1879, on public revenue from land rent, an idea that obtained its greatest popularity in the U.S. in the late 1800s, see also Foldvary, 2006. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>102</sup> Maine, 1861.

<sup>103</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>104</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>105</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>106</sup> After the commons were enclosed in England, starting during the sixteenth century, what sociologist Eric Mielants, 2007, calls “terroristic” laws were introduced that criminalized idleness, thus pushing people into early capitalist manufacturing.

<sup>107</sup> East Germany, formally the German Democratic Republic or GDR (German: Deutsche Demokratische Republik or DDR), was a state within the Eastern Bloc during the Cold War period.

<sup>108</sup> Günther Jauch, Sunday evening political television talk show on Das Erste. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>109</sup> Lewis, 1989. See also The Colbert Report, October 28, 2014, <http://thecolbertreport.cc.com/videos/c7wjzg/michael-lewis>.

<sup>110</sup> “Let’s Get This Class War Started,” by Chris Hedges, Truthdig, October 20, 2013, www.truthdig.com/report/item/lets_get_this_class_war_started_20131020.

<sup>111</sup> Cather, 1913.

<sup>112</sup> Lane, 2001. According to the World Health Organisation (WHO), major depression (i.e. severe depressed mood that is episodic in nature and recurs in 75–80 percent of cases) is now the leading cause of disability worldwide with a lifetime prevalence of 17 percent in the Western world, thus ranking fourth among the ten leading causes of global disease burden. In addition, the WHO states that depression is the most common mental disorder leading to suicide and they project that, at its present rate of growth, depression will be the second leading contributor to global disease burden by 2020. See also “What if Sociologists Had as Much Influence as Economists?” by Neil Irwin, New York Times, March 17, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/03/17/upshot/what-if-sociologists-had-as-much-influence-as-economists.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See also notes 90, 91, and 92 in the Introduction.

<sup>113</sup> “How the Pursuit of Happiness Has Made Us Nervous Wrecks,” by Ruth Whippman, Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, December 8, 2016, <http://knowledge.wharton.upenn.edu/article/how-the-pursuit-of-happiness-has-made-us-nervous-wrecks/>. I thank Ulrich Spalthoff and Linda Hartling for making me aware of Whippman, 2016.

<sup>114</sup> “Leader’s Edge,” interview with Charles Handy by Stephen Bernhut, Ivey Business Journal, March/April 2004, Reprint # 9B04TB06, pp. 1–7, www.iveybusinessjournal.com, p. 4:

Here we are, we’re supposed to be great, prosperous and successful countries and people are unhappy, not because they’re badly treated, not because they’re badly managed, but because they’re actually not using their lives in the way that I think is fully productive. And I call this a sort of “corporate sin.”

<sup>115</sup> Deming, 1986.

<sup>116</sup> This information has already found its way into the public eye, see, for instance, “On the happy trail,” by Mark Honigsbaum, The Guardian, April 4, 2004, www.guardian.co.uk/society/2004/apr/04/mentalhealth.observermagazine.

<sup>117</sup> Holt-Lunstad, et al., 2010. I had the privilege of learning from Roman Wittig about his work on the role of friendship for chimpanzees, on October 10, 2015, at the Symposium “Gehirne zwischen Liebe und Krieg – Menschlichkeit in Zeiten der Neurowissenschaften,” Fürth, Germany, October 9–11, 2015, www.turmdersinne.de/de/symposium/symposium-2015/programm.

<sup>118</sup> Dierksmeier, 2015, Dierksmeier, 2016. I thank Heidtraut von Weltzien Høivik for keeping me in the loop of publications in the field of business ethics. It is a privilege to have thank Heidtraut von Weltzien Høivik as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>119</sup> Marmot, 2015. I thank Linda Hartling for suggesting to replace Marmot’s term of “degree of control” with the term “sense of influence.”

<sup>120</sup> Grünewald, 2013.

<sup>121</sup> “Clinical Depression Costs Economy up to 22 Billion Euros Each Year,” New Report from Allianz Deutschland AG und RWI, www.allianz.com/en/press/news/studies/news\_2011-04-13.html:

Depression is not just a major cause of disability and early retirement – it costs some 9.3 billion euros because of lower productivity by depressed employees on the job. Researcher Florian Holsboer foresees individualized therapy for each case in the future. Allianz Deutschland AG: Munich, Apr 13, 2011 Four million Germans suffer from depression. Each year, depression drives some 7,000 people to suicide. And at the same time it costs the German economy as much as 22 billion euros. That’s the result of a current health report from Allianz Deutschland AG and the Rhineland-Westphalian Institute for Economic Research (RWI), titled “Depression – How an Illness Weighs on our Souls.” Christian Molt: “Emotional stress, burnout and depression will thus become a cost factor that can no longer be ignored.” Depression as a cost factor: According to a WHO projection, by 2030 depression will be the most common illness in industrialized nations. “Emotional stress, burnout and depression will thus become a cost factor that can no longer be ignored,” says Christian Molt, member of the Board of Management of health insurer Allianz Private Krankenversicherungs-AG. Allianz too is seeing substantial cost increases for benefits for emotional illness, a significant portion of them for treating depression. It commissioned RWI to calculate how much the illness costs Germany as a whole. The direct and indirect costs of depression in Germany are between 15.5 and 22 billion euros each year. From 2002 to 2008 alone, direct costs of the illness increased one-third, to 5.2 billion euros. Indirect costs are incomparably higher, at 10.3 to 16.7 billion euros. Of that cost, 9.3 billion euros is because depressed people go to work instead of staying home and getting treatment. The cost of reduced productivity from depressed employees on the job (known as “presenteeism”) thus does by far the greatest economic damage.

See also notes 90, 91, and 92 in the Introduction.

<sup>122</sup> “Innere Kündigung: Statisten am Schreibtisch, 17. Mai 2010, Süddeutsche Zeitung, www.sueddeutsche.de/karriere/innere-kuendigung-statisten-am-schreibtisch-1.375928-2:

Widerspruchslose Anpassung: Der Gallup-Engagement-Index: Waren im Jahr 2001 noch 16 Prozent der Arbeitnehmer hochmotiviert, sind es heute nur noch 13 Prozent. Weil innerlich Gekündigte viel daran setzen, nicht aufzufallen, bemerken Kollegen und Vorgesetzte häufig nicht, was sich abspielt. Betroffene Mitarbeiter werden zu Mitläufern, die sich widerspruchslos anpassen. “Sie kündigen den ‘psychologischen Arbeitsvertrag’, der die unausgesprochenen Erwartungen, Hoffnungen und Wünsche des Arbeitnehmers gegenüber dem Arbeitgeber beinhaltet,” sagt Ralf Brinkmann, der an der Fachhochschule Heidelberg Wirtschafts- und Arbeitspsychologie lehrt und das Phänomen der inneren Kündigung untersucht. “Sie sind sie nicht mehr bereit, sich gegen die Mehrheit mit der eigenen Meinung zu stellen und entwickeln sich zum Ja-Sager, der vieles abnickt und keine neuen Ideen, Vorschläge und Kritik mehr einbringt.”

Glaubt man den Marktforschern von Gallup, kostet dieses Verhalten die Wirtschaft Milliarden: Allein durch höhere Fehlzeiten der innerlich Gekündigten entstehen Unternehmen Kosten in Höhe von 16,2 Milliarden Euro im Jahr. Hinzu kommen Einbußen durch unnötig hohe Fluktuation, schlechten Kundenservice, negative Mundpropaganda und Innovationsfeindlichkeit. Wer schlägt seinem Chef schon tolle Ideen vor, wenn er nur noch als Statist am Schreibtisch sitzt? Gallup schätzt, dass sich die Kosten durch solches Verhalten auf bis zu 109 Milliarden Euro pro Jahr summieren.

Laut Psychologe Brinkmann können als Ursachen für die innere Kündigung vier Faktoren für solches Verhalten in Frage kommen:

Die Gesellschaft: Vertritt das Unternehmen Werte, die gesellschaftlich nicht oder nicht mehr akzeptiert sind, fällt es Mitarbeitern schwer, sich dauerhaft mit der Firma zu identifizieren. Ebenso problematisch ist es, wenn der Beruf zwar extrem hohe Anforderungen an den Arbeitnehmer stellt, er dafür aber keinerlei Anerkennung erhält, sondern im Gegenteil mit einem schlechten Image zu kämpfen hat.

Die Organisation: Fehlt es einem Unternehmen an einer Vision, fühlen sich Mitarbeiter häufig alleingelassen und vermissen klare Leitlinien. Frustrierend wirken auch eine Kultur des Misstrauens, geringe Entscheidungskompetenzen, hohe Kontrolle, eine starre Organisationsstruktur und ausgeprägtes Hierarchie- und Statusdenken.

<sup>123</sup> Brinkmann and Stapf, 2005. See also “Innere Kündigung,” www.innerekuendigung.de/.

<sup>124</sup> “Fra målstyrer mistillit til kvalitetsorientert samarbeid og ledelse,” by Johan Nygaard, Helsetjenesten aksjonen, June 2, 2015, <http://helsetjenesteaksjonen.no/V01/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/%C3%85PENT-BREV.02.06.2015.pdf>.

<sup>125</sup> “The End of Performance Management (As We Know It),” by Bjarte Bogsnes – Vice President – Performance Management Development at Statoil, June 12, 2012, www.managementexchange.com/hack/end-performance-management-we-know-it.

<sup>126</sup> Mennoniten – Alleine im Paradies? documentary film by Mercedes Ibaibarriaga, 3sat, April 10, 2013, www.3sat.de/programm/?d=20130410, see also <https://youtu.be/eLB7VT9ITJ8>. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe. The documentary film “Mennonites” presents the faith community in Bolivia:

In Bolivien, im Herzen Südamerikas, liegt der letzte Rückzugsort einer besonders strengen und rückwärtsgewandten religiösen Gruppe: der Mennoniten. Die Anhänger dieser Glaubensgemeinschaft leben ähnlich wie die Amish People in radikaler Schlichtheit: Elektrizität, Handys, Autos und andere technische Annehmlichkeiten lehnen sie strikt ab. Sie leben allein nach den strengen Regeln, die ihnen ihre Glaubensführer vorgeben. Eine nur scheinbare Idylle: Nicht alle Mennoniten sind mit diesem Lebensstil einverstanden, vor allem die Jugend rebelliert.”

<sup>127</sup> Mennoniten – Alleine im Paradies?, documentary film by Mercedes Ibaibarriaga, 3sat, April 10, 2013, www.3sat.de/programm/?d=20130410, see also <https://youtu.be/eLB7VT9ITJ8>. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe.

<sup>128</sup> See, among others, the book by Deresiewicz, 2014, Excellent Sheep, see www.billderesiewicz.com/books/excellent-sheep:

Excellent Sheep takes a sharp look at the high-pressure conveyor belt that begins with parents and counselors who demand perfect grades and culminates in the skewed applications Deresiewicz saw firsthand as a member of Yale’s admissions committee. As schools shift focus from the humanities to “practical” subjects like economics and computer science, students are losing the ability to think in innovative ways. Deresiewicz explains how college should be a time for self-discovery, when students can establish their own values and measures of success, so they can forge their own path. He addresses parents, students, educators, and anyone who’s interested in the direction of American society, featuring quotes from real students and graduates he has corresponded with over the years, candidly exposing where the system is broken and clearly presenting solutions.

See also Bloom, 1987, Wilshire, 1990, Putnam, 1995, Readings, 1996, Schmidt, 2000, Giroux and Paulo Freire (Foreword), 2001, Bok, 2003, Giroux and Giroux, 2004, Hersh and Merrow, 2005, Karabel, 2005, Levine, 2006, Lewis, 2006, Kronman, 2007, Donoghue, 2008, Newfield, 2008, Gornitzka and Langfeldt, 2008, Folbre, 2009, Nussbaum, 2010, Taylor, 2010, Osler, 2010, Hacker and Dreifus, 2010, Richards, 2011, Riley, 2011, Arum and Roksa, 2011, Ginsberg, 2011, Jensen, 2012, Giroux, 2014b, or Frank, 2016. See, furthermore, “Schooling Ourselves in an Unequal America,” by Rebecca Strauss, New York Times, June 16, 2013,

<http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/06/16/schooling-ourselves-in-an-unequal-america/?src=me&ref=general>. As to the UK, see “Coalition of Thinkers Vow to Fight Marketisation of Universities,” by Shiv Malik, The Guardian, November 8, 2012, www.guardian.co.uk/education/2012/nov/08/coalition-thinkers-fight-marketisation-universities, where we read that the purpose of university is being “grossly distorted by the attempt to create a market in higher education.” See also “Why I am Not a Professor OR the Decline and Fall of the British University,” by Mark Tarver, 2007, www.lambdassociates.org/blog/decline.htm.

For Germany, see Münch, 2011. See also how the corporate sector in Germany has developed a “master plan” for how to change the educational system, in “Die Hochschule der Zukunft: Das Leitbild der Wirtschaft,” by Dieter Hundt, Präsident, Bundesvereinigung der Deutschen Arbeitgeberverbände e. V. (BDA), and Hans-Peter Keitel, Präsident, Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie e. V. (BDI), Berlin, February 2010, www.arbeitgeber.de/www%5Carbeitgeber.nsf/res/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf/\$file/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf. I thank Ines Balta for making me aware of this publication.

<sup>129</sup> Linda Hartling, in a personal communication on September 8, 2015.

<sup>130</sup> For the Thirty-First Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 5, 2011, in New York City, see www.neweconomicsinstitute.org. Juliet Schor was one of the speakers, in addition to speakers such as Gar Alperovitz, and “Voices of Today’s Youth: Occupy Wall Street and Youth for a New Economy,” a panel comprised of Occupy Wall Street participants and other student activists.

<sup>131</sup> See also McDonald, 2017. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing her notes of this book with me. See, furthermore, “How Economics Became a Science: A Forgotten Episode in the Discipline’s History Reveals How Diversity Was Killed in Economics,” by Giorgos Kallis, Adbuster, April 2, 2014, www.adbusters.org/magazine/112/battle-soul-economics.html, where environmental scientist Giorgos Kallis asks:

The economic crisis has supposedly started a soul-searching process in the economics profession. Five years into the crisis and economists still offer more of the same in response. “Create new.” “Cut red-tape.” “Liberalize finance in the rest of the world.” Why do economists keep getting it so wrong? Innovation feeds on diversity, but diversity is scarce in economics.

Kallis points at a Ph.D. thesis written by Jorge Fernandes Mata, 2006, on how radical economists were purged from US campuses following the student movement against the war in Vietnam. Kallis explains the story in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “The Church of Economism and Its Discontents,” on November 3, 2015, in response to Norgaard, 2015:

This is an incredible story of faculty battles with documented intervention and harassment from the FBI. And it included the purge of today famous, then deemed too radical, economists like Sam Bowles or Herbert Gintis from Harvard leading, directly or indirectly, to the departure of even more moderate progressives, such as Leontief, Galbraith, or Hirschmann. This ideological purge of alternative voices from economics departments was part and parcel of the neo-liberal transformation of Reagan and Thatcher that followed, and it explains why the belief system of economism is so entrenched today and so hard to change. We know today (and this is no conspiracy, but well documented academic knowledge) that neo-liberalism did not just happen; it was partly planned by think-tanks, economic and political interests. Controlling academia, and especially the powerful field of economics, was part of the project.

<sup>132</sup> Juliet Schor is the Co-founder of the Center for a New American Dream, www.newdream.org, and author of several books, see Schor, 2010, Schor, 1993, 1999, 2004, Schor and Thompson, 2014. An animation provides a vision of what a post-consumer society could look like, with people working fewer hours and pursuing re-skilling, homesteading, and small-scale enterprises that can help reduce the overall size and impact of the consumer economy, see www.julietschor.org/2011/08/video-new-dream-mini-views-visualizing-a-plenitude-economy/.

<sup>133</sup> “Harvard Students Demand Alternative Economics,” by Dan DiMaggio, Dollars and Sense Magazine, July/August 2003 issue, www.dollarsandsense.org/archives/2003/0703dimaggio.html.

<sup>134</sup> “An Innovative Approach to Terror Propaganda Through Social Media,” by Joe Charlaiff, Homeland Security Today (HSToday), August 3, 2015, www.hstoday.us/briefings/daily-news-analysis/single-article/an-innovative-approach-to-terror-propaganda-through-social-media/75326fa89080f75ddfb4a7ec72ee7b9e.html.

<sup>135</sup> Quilligan, 2013.

<sup>136</sup> “The CIA and the Media: How Americas Most Powerful News Media Worked Hand in Glove with the Central Intelligence Agency and Why the Church Committee Covered It Up,” by Carl Bernstein, October 20, 1977, www.carlberstein.com/magazine\_cia\_and\_media.php:

In 1953, Joseph Alsop, then one of America’s leading syndicated columnists, went to the Philippines to cover an election. He did not go because he was asked to do so by his syndicate. He did not go because he was asked to do so by the newspapers that printed his column. He went at the request of the CIA... Alsop is one of more than 400 American journalists who in the past twenty-five years have secretly carried out assignments for the Central Intelligence Agency, according to documents on file at CIA headquarters. Some of these journalist’s relationships with the Agency were tacit; some were explicit. There was cooperation, accommodation and overlap. Journalists provided a full range of clandestine services – from simple intelligence gathering to serving as go-betweens with spies in Communist countries... Reporters shared their notebooks with the CIA. Editors shared their staffs. Some of the journalists were Pulitzer Prize winners, distinguished reporters who considered themselves ambassadors without portfolio for their country. Most were less exalted: foreign correspondents who found that their association with the Agency helped their work; stringers and freelancers who were as interested in the daring do of the spy business as in filing articles; and, the smallest category, full-time CIA employees masquerading as journalists abroad... In many instances, CIA documents show, journalists were engaged to perform tasks for the CIA with the consent of the managements of America’s leading news organizations.

<sup>137</sup> “Google Is Not What It Seems,” by Julian Assange, Newsweek, October 24, 2014, www.newsweek.com/assange-google-not-what-it-seems-279447:

Scan the memberships of the biggest U.S. think tanks and institutes and the same names keep cropping up... As the self-described “radical centrist” New York Times columnist Tom Friedman wrote in 1999, sometimes it is not enough to leave the global dominance of American tech corporations to something as mercurial as “the free market”: The hidden hand of the market will never work without a hidden fist. McDonald’s cannot flourish without McDonnell Douglas, the designer of the F-15. And the hidden fist that keeps the world safe for Silicon Valley’s technologies to flourish is called the U.S. Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps. If anything has changed since those words were written, it is that Silicon Valley has grown restless with that passive role, aspiring instead to adorn the hidden fist like a velvet glove. Writing in 2013, Schmidt and Cohen stated, What Lockheed Martin was to the twentieth century, technology and cyber-security companies will be to the twenty-first.

<sup>138</sup> Pantham, 2009, p. 184.

<sup>139</sup> Pantham, 2009, p. 185.

<sup>140</sup> Acres of Diamonds, by Russell Herman Conwell, first given in 1913, see www.americanrhetoric.com/speeches/rconwellacresofdiamonds.htm.

See also “Trump’s Success Shows Many Americans Believe only in America,” by Giles Fraser, The Guardian, 3 March 2016, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/belief/2016/mar/03/donald-trump-success-shows-many-americans-believe-only-in-america:

When the Pilgrim Fathers got in their little boats and sailed to the new world, they took with them a narrative that had begun to build in England, that the protestant English were actually the chosen people. America, then, was to be the new Israel. The pilgrims had landed safe on Cannan’s side, the promised land. The original 13 colonies in North America “were nothing other than a regeneration of the twelve tribes of Israel” as one American newspaper put it in 1864.

In other words, America became its own church and eventually its own god. Which is why the only real atheism in America is to call into question the American dream – a dream often indistinguishable from capitalism and the celebration of winners. This is the god Trump worships. He is its great high priest. And this is why evangelicals vote for him. But the God of Jesus Christ it is not. The death of God comes in many diverse and peculiar forms. In America, it is the flag and not the cross that takes pride of place in the sanctuary.

<sup>141</sup> See, among others, Goldstone, et al., 2010, Goldstone, et al., 1991, Gurr, 1970, Marshall and Gurr, 2005. See also the related concept of horizontal inequalities, see, for instance, the work by international development expert Frances Stewart, 2008. Stewart explains the difference between relative deprivation and horizontal inequalities (HI) in “Horizontal Inequalities As a Cause of Conflict: A Review of CRISE Findings,” by Frances Stewart, Centre for Research on Inequality, Human Security and Ethnicity, <http://r4d.dfid.gov.uk/pdf/outputs/inequality/crise-overview-1.pdf>:

...the HI hypothesis differs from relative deprivation in its view that the relatively rich, as well as the relatively poor, may initiate conflict. In Burundi, for example, the Tutsi have attacked the poorer Hutu; and the relatively rich area of Biafra initiated the Nigerian Civil War of the late 1960s. Such incidents seem to be motivated by fear that an existing situation is not sustainable without force and that the relative prosperity of the group, is, or may be, subject to attack.

<sup>142</sup> Goldstone and Ulfelder, 2005, p. 9. Jack Goldstone is an esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, together with Monty Marshall, who brought Jack to us. See also Goldstone, et al., 2010.

<sup>143</sup> See Krueger, 2017. And see an endorsement of the argument that terrorism does not follow from poverty, but from lack of freedom, in “The Roots of Terrorism,” by Sultan Mehmood, Dawn, March 3, 2016, www.dawn.com/news/796177/the-roots-of-terrorism:

A cursory analysis of the START Global Terrorism Database reveals that over the past decade, Pakistan has had the highest number of terrorism-related deaths in the world. In fact, the death toll exceeds the combined terrorism-related deaths for both Europe and North America. Hence, an understanding of terrorism, its dynamics, its causes, the reasons for its escalation and de-escalation is of utmost importance to Pakistan... To understand what causes terrorism, one need not ask how much of a population is illiterate or in abject poverty. Rather one should ask who holds strong enough political views to impose them through terrorism. It is not that most terrorists have nothing to live for. Far from it, they are the high-ability and educated political people who so vehemently believe in a cause that they are willing to die for it. The solution to terrorism is not more growth but more freedom.

<sup>144</sup> Goldstone and Ulfelder, 2005, pp. 19–20.

<sup>145</sup> Goldstone and Ulfelder, 2005, p. 20.

<sup>146</sup> Lindner, 2012d, p. 136.

Chapter 8

<sup>1</sup> “The Money Exchange Dealers of Kabul: A Study of the Hawala System in 2003 Afghanistan,” by Samuel Munzele Maimbo, World Bank working paper series, Number 13, <http://documents.worldbank.org/curated/en/2003/08/2613565/money-exchange-dealers-kabul-study-hawala-system-afghanistan>.

<sup>2</sup> Tong, et al., 2016. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this study.

<sup>3</sup> See Lindner, 2016b. Around 1750, for the first time, travelers began to insert themselves as subjects with a personal perspective into their travel reports, I thank Barnett Pearce for making me aware of Lyons, 1978. I thank Jon Elster for making me aware that the “birth of the self” began much earlier, with Michel de Montaigne, 1575, in his Essays. See, furthermore, Bloom, 1999, on Shakespeare and “the invention of the human,” or the Baudelairean flâneur, or the emigrant of W. G. Sebald, 1992/1996, or, more recently, Cole, 2011. It was a privilege to have Barnett Pearce as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship until his passing, and we will always honor his spirit.

<sup>4</sup> Kingsley, 1867, p. 1, www.pagebypagebooks.com/Charles\_Kingsley/The\_Ancien\_Regime/Lecture\_I\_Caste\_p1.html.

<sup>5</sup> “Vatican Admits Galileo Was Right,” New Scientist, November 7, 1992, www.newscientist.com/article/mg13618460-600-vatican-admits-galileo-was-right/.

<sup>6</sup> International relations specialist and research affiliate of the Waterloo Institute for Complexity and Innovation at the University of Waterloo in Ontario, Canada, Stephen Purdey, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 24, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016.

<sup>7</sup> Siebert and Ott, 2016, p. 6.

<sup>8</sup> See, among others, the work of historian of science, Ernst Peter Fischer, 2009.

<sup>9</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>10</sup> See a few examples for relevant literature, for instance, Lasch, 1991, Putnam, 2000, Baumeister, et al., 1996, Bushman and Baumeister, 1998, Baumeister, et al., 2003, Baumeister, 2005, Levine, 2007, Twenge and Campbell, 2009, Wood, et al., 2009, Ehrenreich, 2010, Twenge, et al., 2012, Twenge and Kasser, 2013, Twenge, 2014. See also how Howard Richards includes Foucault, 1961/2006, and Frank, 1961, in his chapter in Richards, 2013. See “Column: This Is What Happens When You Take Ayn Rand Seriously,” by Denise Cummins, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), February 16, 2016, www.pbs.org/newshour/making-sense/column-this-is-what-happens-when-you-take-ayn-rand-seriously/. Cummins presents two case studies that show the disastrous consequences of following Ayn Rand’s philosophy, namely, the company Sears, and the country Honduras. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See also note 32 in Chapter 4. Also psychoanalyst Heinz Kohut has worked on narcissistic injury, see

Kohut, 1973, p. 380:

One sees the need for revenge, for righting a wrong, for undoing the hurt by whatever means, and a deeply anchored, unrelenting compulsion in the pursuit of all these aims which gives no rest to those who have suffered a narcissistic injury – these are features which are characteristic for the phenomenon of narcissistic rage in all its forms and which sets it apart from other kinds of aggression.

I thank David Lotto, 2016, for reminding me of this quote.

<sup>11</sup> Galtung, 1969.

<sup>12</sup> Christoph Bals from Germanwatch in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Meaning, Religion, and a Great Transition,” December 1, 2014, in response to Karlberg, 2014:

In my eyes, religion is not a knowledge system, but a system which searches for cooperative goals (sense) and motivates people to strive towards this end. Different religions have developed very strong pictures to motivate people. And one role of spirituality is to integrate cooperative objectives into personal structures – as we know today inscribed into the own brain.

Look at three different language systems:

Morality can tell us why we have to limit climate change and stop mass extinction.

Science can tell us (based on probabilities) what the consequences will be if we don’t act. It cannot tell us why we should limit global warming and stop mass extinction. But it can inform us how we can do so.

Religion can motivate many actors who will not be motivated by morality (why) and science (how) alone.

<sup>13</sup> Quoted by Christoph Bals from Germanwatch in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Meaning, Religion, and a Great Transition,” December 1, 2014, in response to Karlberg, 2014.

<sup>14</sup> It is a privilege to have Catherine Odora Hoppers and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, together with Howard Richards.

<sup>15</sup> Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. See a review in Cultural and Pedagogical Inquiry, 2014, 6 (1, Special Issue), pp. 67–69, <https://ejournals.library.ualberta.ca/index.php/cpi/article/download/22935/17082>.

<sup>16</sup> “Indigenous Knowledge Systems: An Invisible Resource in Literacy Education,” by Catherine Odora Hoppers. SGI Quarterly: A Buddhist Forum for Peace, Culture and Education, January 2003, www.sgiquarterly.org/feature2003Jan-4.html. See also Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012, Richards, et al., 2015a. See, furthermore, Richards, 2015, Haavelsrud, 2015, Sewchurran and McDonogh, 2015, and Soudien, 2015, in the International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning, Volume 7, Number 2, 2015, edited by Odora Hoppers. Soudien recommends drawing on the concept of the transaction in John Dewey for a new approach to knowing while Haavelsrud uses Odora Hoppers’ term of transformation by enlargement for the academy, by scientific methodologies inspired by forms of transdisciplinarity, praxis, and trilateral science as described by Johan Galtung, 1977, see Haavelsrud, 2015, pp. 54–55:

Central to his concept of trilateral science is the relationship between three worlds. The world as it is (the data or facts positively given), the world as it will be (the world as predicted or theorized) and the world as it ought to be (values). He argues that all three can be changed and adapted to each other through scientific work implying that the gaps and differences between the three worlds (the empirical, the foreseen, and the ideal) are reduced through transformations in all three. The three worlds may become more similar with the contribution of this kind of transformative scientific knowledge production. So science aims at consonance among the three. The world as it is can be changed, and if so the foreseen world will also be changed. Values may be modified.”

See also Odora Hoppers, 2002, and her article “Indigenous Knowledge Systems: An Invisible Resource in Literacy Education,” The Soka Gakkai International (SGI) Quarterly: A Buddhist Forum for Peace, Culture and Education, January 2003, www.sgiquarterly.org/feature2003Jan-4.html.

See also Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012, Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>17</sup> See, among others, Boyer, 2001, Boyer and Wertsch, 2009. The recurrent properties of religious concepts and norms in different cultures are “parasitic upon standard cognitive systems that evolved outside of religion, such as agency-detection, moral intuition, coalitional psychology and contagion-avoidance,” <http://artsci.wustl.edu/~pboyer/PBoyerHomeSite/index.html>.

<sup>18</sup> Barrett, 2011, p. 230. I thank cross-cultural psychologist Michael Harris Bond for making me aware of Barrett’s work. See Bond’s involvement in the project Is Religion Natural? The Chinese Challenge, <http://thethrivecenter.org/research/is-religion-natural-the-chinese-challenge/>. I had the privilege of meeting Michael Harris Bond when he taught at a Sommerakademie Friedens- und Konfliktforschung, July 11–16, 1999, in Clemenswerth, Germany. Michael Bond is an esteemed member from the first moment in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See more in note 19 in the Introduction to Section One.

<sup>19</sup> In the year 2001, I wrote an article titled “The Concept of Humiliation: Its Universal Core and Culture-Dependent Periphery,” Lindner, 2001e, see the Abstract:

This article argues that the concept of humiliation may be deconstructed into seven layers, including a) a core that expresses the universal idea of “putting down,” b) a middle layer that contains two opposed orientations towards “putting down,” treating it as, respectively, legitimate and routine, or illegitimate and traumatizing, and c) a periphery whose distinctive layers include one pertaining to cultural differences between groups and another four peripheral layers that relate to differences in individual personalities and variations in patterns of individual experience of humiliation.

<sup>20</sup> 2015 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Toward A Life of Dignity for All,” in Kigali, Rwanda, June 2–5, 2015, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/25.php. I had the privilege of living in a Catholic convent in Kigali, see photos on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/pics15.php.

<sup>21</sup> “For Rwandans, the Pope’s Apology Must be Unbearable,” by Martin Kimani, The Guardian, March 29, 2010, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/belief/2010/mar/29/pope-catholics-rwanda-genocide-church.

<sup>22</sup> Dusengumuremy, 2015.

<sup>23</sup> Elias, 1939/1994. See also Elias, 2000. With respect to gender, see also Smith, 1997, 1999.

<sup>24</sup> See Smith, 2001.

<sup>25</sup> McCullough, 2008.

<sup>26</sup> Webb, 2009, p. 16.

<sup>27</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>28</sup> Gress, 1985.

<sup>29</sup> Müller, 2009.

<sup>30</sup> “Secession Divides Texas Republicans,” by Chris Cillizza, Washington Post, April 23, 2009, <http://voices.washingtonpost.com/thefix/republican-party/secession-divides-texas-republ.html?wprss=thefix>.

<sup>31</sup> The Act of Killing (2012) and The Look of Silence (2014), are documentary films by Joshua Oppenheimer. The Act of Killing is a portrait of the perpetrators of the 1965 Indonesian genocide, in which perhaps a million people suspected of being Communists were killed. In The Look of Silence the focus is on the murder of a single victim, Ramli Rukun. In 2014, after a screening of The Act of Killing for US Congress members, Oppenheimer called on the U.S. to acknowledge its role in the killings.

<sup>32</sup> “Joshua Oppenheimer Won’t Go Back to Indonesia,” interview by Adam Shatz, New York Times, July 9, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/07/12/magazine/joshua-oppenheimer-wont-go-back-to-indonesia.html?\_r=1. Oppenheimer states that the West shares considerable responsibility for the mass killings in Indonesia. Particular the United States “provided the special radio system so the Army could coordinate the killings over the vast archipelago.”

<sup>33</sup> In 1991, Shaka Senghor, 2016, shot and killed a man. He was, he says, “a drug dealer with a quick temper and a semi-automatic pistol.” He spent nineteen years in jail, seven of which in solitary confinement. His message is that people are indeed redeemable. See his memoir published in 2016, and his TED talk Why Your Worst Deeds Don’t Define You, 2014, www.ted.com/talks/shaka\_senghor\_why\_your\_worst\_deeds\_don\_t\_define\_you?language=en. See also Thomas Galli, 2016, a German prison governor, who calls in question the usefulness of the concept of the current prison system. Its purpose was to replace historical practices of cruel corporal punishment with making criminals fit to return into society. However, argues Galli, far from being helped, this aim is even undermined by the current prison system. Those who enter prison, rather than being made fit for freedom in society at large, are integrated into a community of fellow prison inmates who might even be more bent toward crime and violence than they are. See, furthermore, the work of psychiatrist James Gilligan. Unable to tolerate disrespect, violent criminals chose to become enraged and violent rather than feel humiliated. The remedy is not to fight back at them, but to help them build a more constructive substance for their sense of worth. Acquiring a college education, for instance, provides such substance. See, among others, Gilligan, 2000, or Gilligan, 2003.

See, furthermore, Cainkar and Maira, 2005. See also the sub-section “Children, madmen, criminals, enemies, or subhumans? Which interpretation fits terrorists best?” in Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 5: Humiliation and Conflict, in my book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 96–98.

<sup>34</sup> Barrett and Bokhari, 2009.

<sup>35</sup> “How a Danish Town Helped Young Muslims Turn Away from ISIS,” by Hanna Rosin, National Public Radio (NPR), July 15, 2016, www.npr.org/sections/health-shots/2016/07/15/485900076/how-a-danish-town-helped-young-muslims-turn-away-from-isis?utm\_campaign=storyshare&utm\_source=npr1. I thank Deb Reich for making me aware of this article.

<sup>36</sup> Algeria: The Terrorist Who Came Home, documentary film by Francis Mead, United Nations Television, 2010, www.unmultimedia.org/tv/21stcentury/2010/10/quitting-terrorism-in-algeria.html. See the script here: www.un.org/webcast/pdfs/21century46.pdf. We thank Ariel Lublin for making me aware of this film by her partner Francis Mead and bringing him to our 2009 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 10–11, 2009. It is a privilege to their support for the work of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

<sup>37</sup> Second Chance in Saudi Arabia – Saudi’s Rehab, documentary film by Francis Mead, United Nations Television, 2011, <http://vimeo.com/23135636>. See also Dr. Hameed Khalil i. Al-Shaygi, <http://faculty.ksu.edu.sa/alshaiji/Pages/cve.aspx>.

<sup>38</sup> The script of Algeria: The Terrorist Who Came Home, www.un.org/webcast/pdfs/21century46.pdf. See also Barrett and Bokhari, 2009.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid.

<sup>40</sup> “Saudi Initiatives in Countering Terrorism: ICPVTR Visit to Saudi Arabia,” International Centre for Political Violence and Terrorism Research (ICPVTR), S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS), Nanyang Technological University (NTU) Singapore, February 6–14, 2010, www.rsis.edu.sg/wp-content/uploads/2015/04/Report-Saudi-Initiatives-in-Countering-Terrorism.pdf.

<sup>41</sup> Hamed El-Said is professor and chair of International Business and Political Economy at the Manchester Metropolitan University, UK, and has published extensively on the Middle East and North Africa and undertook a secondment to the UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI), where he worked as an Associate Expert on Radicalisation and Extremism. In 2008, he led the research team of the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force’s Working Group on Addressing Radicalisation and Extremism that Lead to Terrorism. His works include El-Said, 2015, Chowdhury Fink and El-Said, 2011, Harrigan and El-Said, 2010, Harrigan and El-Said, 2009. See more on <http://hamedelsaid.co.uk>.

<sup>42</sup> Ebrahim, 2014. I thank Annette Anderson-Engler for making me aware of this young man’s work. It is a privilege to have Annette Engler as one of the “Nurturers of Dignity” in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>43</sup> Sundberg and Huor, 2016. See also Anna Sundberg var gift med en global terrorist: – Det tok to uker å radikaliseres meg, Anna Sundberg interviewed by Fredrik Skavlan, NRK, March 4, 2016, www.side2.no/aktuelt/anna-sundberg-sluttet-seg-til-jihad-som-ung---det-tok-to-uker-a-radikaliseres-meg/3423199527.html. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation.

<sup>44</sup> “An Internal Struggle: Al Qaeda’s Syrian Affiliate Is Grappling with Its Identity,” by Charles Lister, Brookings Institute, May 31, 2015, www.brookings.edu/blogs/markaz/posts/2015/05/31-syria-isis-lister.

<sup>45</sup> Schmitz, 2016.

<sup>46</sup> “How Do You Deradicalise Returning Isis Fighters?” by Jon Henley, The Guardian, November 12, 2014, www.theguardian.com/world/2014/nov/12/deradicalise-isis-fighters-jihadists-denmark-syria.

<sup>47</sup> “Denmark De-Radicalization Program Aims to Reintegrate, Not Condemn,” by Kelly Cobiella, NBC News, www.nbcnews.com/storyline/isis-terror/denmark-de-radicalization-n355346.

<sup>48</sup> See two documentaries made in France:

- La chambre vide, documentary film by Jasna Krajinovic, Arte France, 2015, www.arte.tv/guide/fr/058864-000-A/la-chambre-vide#details-description. Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network.

• Djihad, les contre-feux, documentary film by Laetitia Moreau, Arte France, 2015, www.arte.tv/guide/fr/060819-000-A/djihad-les-contre-feux?autoplay=1#details-description. In this film, a mother in Marseilles is presented who lost her young son in Syria. This is the letter he wrote to her before his death translated by Lindner from the French original:

When you read these words, then I have left life on this toilsome world behind me, this very troublesome world, especially since I left you. I hope you understand why I did all this, why I left everything, even though I lived in a stable situation, a wonderful family, and had a job. Why all these sacrifices? Because the community of Mohammed was humiliated. Allah has rewarded us with the reconstruction of the Caliphate. Finally, Muslims have regained their pride. A successful life is not only work, having a house, a car, a wife and children. A successful life is to worship Allah and to have his blessing.

French original:

Si tu lis ces mots, ce que j'ai quitté cette vie sur terre, éprouvante, très éprouvante, surtout depuis que je suis vous quitté. J'espère que tu as compris pourquoi j'ai fait tout ça, pourquoi avoir tout quitté, alors que j'avais une situation stable, une famille merveilleuse, un travail. Pourquoi tous ces sacrifices? Parce que la Communauté de Mohammed est humilié. Allah nous a honoré avec la reétablissement du Califat, ou les musulmans retrouvé enfin la fierté. Reussier sa vie c'est pas juste travailler, avoir une maison, une voiture, une femme et des enfants. Reussier sa vie c'est adorer Allah et avoir sa satisfaction.

See also the work by French anthropologist Dounia Bouzar, 2016, and how she dissects how vulnerable teenagers are recruited into a desire to sacrifice themselves in "holy war" by way of professionally organized integration methodologies that are also known from sects in general.

<sup>49</sup> Hénin, 2015. It is interesting that the German translation of this book highlights its critical view on the role of the West in the very title: Der IS und die Fehler des Westens: Warum wir den Terror militärisch nicht besiegen können (Zürich, Switzerland: orell füssli), while the English translation does not do so: Jihad Academy: The Rise of Islamic State (New Delhi: Bloomsbury).

Chapter 9

<sup>1</sup> See "The Ties That Bind Captive to Captor," by Frank M. Ochberg, Los Angeles Times, April 8, 2005, <http://articles.latimes.com/2005/apr/08/opinion/oe-ochberg8>. Frank M. Ochberg is co-founder of the National Center for Critical Incident Analysis and former associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health. See also Lindner, 2009a, p. 133.

<sup>2</sup> Kristin Enmark, 2015, wrote a book more than four decades after the event. Read about the interview with her: "Hun er opphavet til begrepet stockholmsyndromet," by Odvin Aune, NRK, September 18, 2015, www.nrk.no/kultur/hun-er-opphavet-til-begrepet-stockholmsyndromet-1.12561167. NRK is an abbreviation of Norsk rikskringkasting AS, generally expressed in English as the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation.

<sup>3</sup> The term méconnaissance was first introduced by psychologist Henri Wallon (1879 – 1962).

<sup>4</sup> Kant, 1784.

<sup>5</sup> Kuhn, 1962.

<sup>6</sup> Negating a frame activates that frame, as explained, among others, by Lakoff, 2002, 2004, 2016. Listen also to On The Media: Normalize This! How Talking About Trump Makes Him Normal in Your Brain, Brooke Glastone speaks with George Lakoff, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 2, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/george-lakoff/: "According to George Lakoff, a cognitive linguist and author of Don't Think Of An Elephant! Know Your Values and Frame the Debate, the very fundamentals of journalism should be redefined in order to stave off normalizing Trump. Lakoff and Brooke discuss the unconscious effects that Trump's language, image, and name have on the brain." Listen also to On The Media: Normalize This! Masha Gessen on the "Impulse to Normalize," Brooke Glastone speaks with Masha Gessen, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 2, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/masha-gessen-impulse-normalize/. Gessen calls on the media to focus on the gap between facts and the truth and to bridge the gap between reporting the facts and telling the truth. See also Gessen, 2013. Listen, furthermore, to On The Media: Normalize This! Left Language, Right Language, Brooke Glastone speaks with John McWhorter, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 2, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/left-language-right-language/, and see McWhorter, 2016, to reflect on ways to avoid obscuring the truth.

Psychotherapy uses the fact that negation activates what is negated in the form of paradox intervention, see Watzlawick, et al., 1967, and paradox intention, see Viktor Frankl, 1946.

<sup>7</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: "According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>8</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>9</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>10</sup> “A Special Relationship: The United States Is Teaming Up with Al Qaeda, Again,” by Andrew Cockburn, Harper’s Magazine, Letter from Washington, January 2016 issue, <https://harpers.org/archive/2016/01/a-special-relationship/1/>. See also Cockburn, 2015.

<sup>11</sup> “Obama Weighing Talks With Putin on Syrian Crisis,” by Peter Baker and Andrew E. Kramer, New York Times, September 15, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/09/16/world/middleeast/white-house-split-on-opening-talks-with-putin.html?\_r=0.

<sup>12</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 119–120. German original in Suttner, 1889, p. 69:

“Auch Tilling, der doch kein Freund des Krieges ist, gibt zu, ein Freund des Duells zu sein.” “Ein Freund? Das habe ich nie behauptet. Ich sagte nur, daß ich gegebenen Falls selbstverständlich zum Duell greifen würde – wie ich es übrigens auch schon ein und das andere Mal gethan; gerade so selbstverständlich, wie ich schon mehreremale in den Krieg gezogen, und bei dem nächsten Anlaß wieder ziehen werde. Ich füge mich den Satzungen der Ehre. Damit will ich aber keineswegs gesagt haben, daß diese Satzungen, wie sie unter uns bestehen, meinem sittlichen Ideal entsprechen. Nach und nach, wenn dieses Ideal die Herrschaft gewinnt, wird der Begriff der Ehre auch eine Wandlung erfahren: einmal wird eine erhaltene Injurie, wenn sie unverdient ist, nicht auf den Empfänger, sondern auf den rohen Geber als Schmach zurückfallen; zweitens wird das Selbstträgeramt auch in Sachen der Ehre ebenso außer Gebrauch kommen, wie in kultivierter Gesellschaft die Selbstjustiz in anderen Dingen thatsächlich schon verschwunden ist.”

<sup>13</sup> Ohnuki-Tierney, 2002.

<sup>14</sup> See also Melber, 2011.

<sup>15</sup> See Sergei Stepanovich Chakhotin, 1940, as one of the first thinkers to describe the effect of propaganda on the psychology of masses and warning against the techniques used by the Nazi Party.

<sup>16</sup> “Für seinen unermüdlichen Kampf: Die Verleihung der Ehrenbürgerwürde an Adolf Hitler durch die Stadt Hameln,” by Bernhard Gelderblom, Dewezet, April 18, 2017, www.dewezet.de/hintergrund/hintergrund-seite\_artikel,-die-verleihung-der-ehrenbuergerwuerde-an-adolf-hitler-durch-die-stadt-hamel-n-\_arid.2365469.html, p. 16, German original of the honorary citizen letter that was presented to Adolf Hitler by the city of Hameln on the Bückeberg on his birthday on April 20, 1933. German original translated by Lindner:

The city of Hamelin has on April 20, 1933, presented the Reich Chancellor Adolf Hitler, the creator of the Third Reich, the leader of the German people united in national socialism, in gratitude for his tireless struggle and as a special expression of the national socialist attitude of its citizenry, with the honorary citizenship of Hamelin. The entire citizenry pledges loyal allegiance for all time.

German original:

Die Stadt Hameln hat am 20. April 1933, dem Herrn Reichskanzler Adolf Hitler, dem Schöpfer des dritten Reiches, dem Führer des im Nationalsozialismus geeinten deutschen Volkes, in Dankbarkeit für seinen unermüdlichen Kampf und als besonderen Ausdruck der nationalsozialistischen Gesinnung ihrer Bürgerschaft das Ehrenbürgerrecht der Stadt Hameln verliehen. Die gesamte Bürgerschaft gelobt treue Gefolgschaft für alle Zeiten.

<sup>17</sup> In 1976, I did a school psychology internship on the training ship Kariba of the German Africa Lines, DAL, during its journey from Europe along the coast of West Africa: from Senegal to Sierra Leone, to Ivory Coast, Ghana, Togo, Benin, and finally to Cameroon.

<sup>18</sup> Beah, 2007.

<sup>19</sup> “In an IS Training Camp, Children Told: Behead the Doll,” by Zeina Karam and Bram Janssen, Associated Press, July 19, 2015, <http://bigstory.ap.org/article/fcc0fe9b92bb49a2a5bc0f3bd401cc13/training-camp-children-told-behead-doll>.

<sup>20</sup> “We Can Defeat ISIS,” by Amitai Etzioni, Huffington Post, August 4, 2015, www.huffingtonpost.com/amitai-etzioni/we-can-defeat-isis\_b\_7933364.html.

<sup>21</sup> “Facts About Child Soldiers,” Human Rights Watch, December 3, 2008, www.hrw.org/news/2008/12/03/facts-about- child-soldiers.

<sup>22</sup> Wang and Aamodt, 2011.

<sup>23</sup> “We Should Have Listened to the Broken Teenagers, BBC News, May 16, 2017, www.bbc.com/news/magazine-39924586. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this article.

<sup>24</sup> Kindesmissbrauch – Und kein Ende, by Gert Scobel, 3sat, September 17, 2015, www.3sat.de/page/?source=/scobel/182692/index.html. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe. See also Amann and Wipplinger, 2005.

<sup>25</sup> Generation Jihad, documentary film in three episodes by Peter Taylor, 2010, http://thewatchseries.to/serie/generation\_jihad:

Peter Taylor has worked for a year investigating who these young Muslim extremists are and how they become radicalized and tracked their networks around the world. He clarifies how teenagers were recruited via the internet and finds out why some of Britain’s young extremists are prepared to support violence against their fellow citizens.

See also Taylor, 2011. See, furthermore, Taylor, 1980, 1993b, 1996, 1997a, b, 2000.

<sup>26</sup> Bourdieu and Wacquant, 1992, p. 24.

<sup>27</sup> Die Sprache von Al-Qaida (The language of Al-Qaeda), documentary film by Abdelasim Hassan El Difraoui and Mark Johnston, Arte/WDR, 2008, see, among others, <https://youtu.be/zj5v5hb5cOE>. Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network. Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, WDR, West German Broadcasting Cologne, is a German public-broadcasting institution based in the Federal State of North Rhine-Westphalia with its main office in Cologne. This documentary gives the floor to a number of terrorism experts:

- Brynjar Lia is a historian and professor of Middle East Studies at Department of Culture Studies and Oriental Languages at the University of Oslo, Norway.
- Tom Quiggin is a Senior Researcher at the Canadian Centre of Intelligence and Security Studies at Carleton University, and an expert on radicalization. The 2006 Ontario terrorism case was the first case of “sudden jihad.” On June 2, 2006, 18 people (the “Toronto 18”) were arrested, accused of planning to detonate truck bombs, to open fire in a crowded area, and to storm the Canadian Broadcasting Centre, the Canadian Parliament building, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) headquarters, and the parliamentary Peace Tower to take hostages and to behead the Prime Minister and other leaders. See “Life Term for Terror Ringleader,” by Isabel Teotonio, The Star, January 19, 2010, www.thestar.com/news/crime/2010/01/19/life\_term\_for\_terror\_ringleader.html: “The architect of an Al Qaeda-inspired terror plot to cripple Canada’s economy and unleash mass carnage by blowing up buildings in downtown Toronto has been sentenced to life in prison.”
- Brian Fishman is a Counterterrorism Research Fellow at the New America Foundation and a Research Fellow with the Combating Terrorism Center (CTC) at West Point.
- Jarret Brachman is a terrorism expert, and a consultant to several government agencies about terrorism, see his book Brachman, 2008.

<sup>28</sup> Neumann, 2015. See also “ISIS Defectors Reveal Disillusionment,” by Kimiko de Freytas-Tamura, New York Times, September 20, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/09/21/world/europe/isis-defectors-reveal-disillusionment.html?\_r=0. See also Husain, 2007, or Baker, 2009.

<sup>29</sup> “Report on the Investigation of the Peasant Movement in Hunan,” by Mao Zedong, March 1927, http://afe.easia.columbia.edu/ps/china/mao\_peasant.pdf. See also Mitter, 2004.

<sup>30</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 75.

<sup>31</sup> Dong, 2015.

<sup>32</sup> Bourdieu and Passeron, 1990.

<sup>33</sup> Galtung, 1990, p. 294.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid.

<sup>35</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 73, where Dong quotes Galtung, 1969, p. 170.

<sup>36</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 80. Dong refers to the following source: Fangyi Huang, 2012. 黄方毅忆父文集：黄炎培与毛泽东周率对话 (In Memory of My Father: A Conversation between Huang Yanpei and Mao on “Historical Periodicity”). Beijing: People’s Publishing House.

<sup>37</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 73.

<sup>38</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 74.

- <sup>39</sup> Fred Magdoff in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Marxism and Ecology: Common Founts of a Great Transition,” September 12, 2015. Magdoff is professor emeritus of plant and soil science at the University of Vermont and a longtime commentator on political-economic topics. See also Magdoff and Foster, 2011.
- <sup>40</sup> See Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 8: How We Can Reinvent Our Contexts, in the book Emotion and Conflict, pp. 129–137.
- <sup>41</sup> Cromby, 2012.
- <sup>42</sup> Gottman, et al., 1997.
- <sup>43</sup> Deci and Ryan, 2002.
- <sup>44</sup> Becker, 1973, pp. X-Y, quoted in Bond and Lun, 2013a, p. 8.
- <sup>45</sup> Bond and Lun, 2013a, p. 8.
- <sup>46</sup> Lewin, 1941, Lewin and Cartwright, 1951.
- <sup>47</sup> Bourdieu, 1977.
- <sup>48</sup> Foucault, 1966/1970.
- <sup>49</sup> Foucault, 1979, 1991, Foucault and Gordon, 1980.
- <sup>50</sup> Bourdieu, 1977, p. 17. Many other thinkers use the term habitus as well, among them sociologist Norbert Elias, for whom a particular habitus is a psychic structure that is embedded in the broader social relationships of what we experience as “civilization,” see Elias, 1939/1994.
- <sup>51</sup> Anderson, 2006.
- <sup>52</sup> Giddens, 1984.
- <sup>53</sup> “Truth and Reconciliation for Group Selection,” blog by David Sloan Wilson, <http://evolution.binghamton.edu/dswilson/wp-content/uploads/2010/01/Truth-and-Reconciliation.pdf>. It was a privilege to meet David Sloan Wilson in March 2016 in Oslo, Norway, and to learn from him in the context of “Kontrapunkt,” an event organized by Nina Witoszek, Alida Boye, and Helge Iberg.
- <sup>54</sup> Linda Hartling builds on relational-cultural theory, as developed by her mentor Jean Baker Miller and colleagues, see, among others, Hartling, et al., 2008. Linda Hartling is the former Associate Director of the Jean Baker Miller Training Institute, and it is an immense privilege to have her now as the director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. Relational-cultural theory (CRP) evolved from the work of Jean Baker Miller, M.D., pioneer in women’s psychology. It assumes that humans have a natural drive toward relationships, and it applies a growth-in-connection model of human growth and development to organizational settings. See Miller, 1976/1986, and for an overview, among others, Hartling, et al., 2008, and Jordan, 2010.
- <sup>55</sup> Cultural-historical activity theory builds on the work by Lev Vygotsky, 1978, and Aleksei Leontiev, 1975/1978. Its philosophical premise is that human physical and mental activity is integrally connected to large-scale cultural and historical processes and vice versa. It studies the culturally and historically situated, materially, and socially mediated process by which humans purposefully transform natural and social reality, including themselves. Community is seen to be central to all forms of learning, communicating, and acting, which means that community is central to the process of learning-by-doing, of making tools of all kinds, of communicating, and of making meaning and acting. The term cultural-historical activity theory (CHAT) was coined by Michael Cole and used by Yrjö Engeström for the various lines of work that had been inspired by Vygotsky. See for recent publications, for instance, Kaptelinin and Nardi, 2006, Roth, et al., 2012. See also Richards and Andersson, 2015. I am indebted to Howard Richards and Gavin Andersson for bringing me to South Africa in 2013, and to the Organization Workshop (OW), a CHAT-based organizational learning method developed by Gavin Andersson, et al., 2016, as summarized in this Abstract:
- Cultural-Historical Activity Theory (CHAT), is a theoretical framework which traces its roots to activity theory approaches first developed in Russian Psychology (by Vygotsky and Leontiev, in particular). The Organization Workshop (OW) is a CHAT-based organizational learning method with its roots, unusually, in the global South. Among the many scholarly applications of CHAT-related approaches of the last two decades, the OW stands out – together with the Finnish Change Laboratory (CL) and the French Clinique de l’Activité/Activity Clinic (AC) – as a field praxis-oriented laboratory method specifically geared to the world of work. OW is a large-group capacitation method. Organization is not taught. Participants achieve organization. It was initiated in the 1960s by the Brazilian lawyer, sociologist, and political activist Clodomir Santos de Moraes, who discovered, in his own experience, that a large group facing common challenges, given freedom of organization, access to a common resource pool and appropriate support from facilitators, could learn to organize itself. From Brazil, the “laboratorios organizacionais” spread out in the seventies to most of Latin America where they were applied at times on a national scale. The method was transferred in the eighties to English-speaking southern Africa where most of the theoretical work exploring its CHAT roots originated. Recently this eminently southern CHAT-based laboratory method has started to find applications in the North.

It is a privilege to have Howard Richards and Gavin Andersson as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>56</sup> See, for example, Janis and Mann, 1977, Jervis, et al., 1985, Lebow, 1981.

<sup>57</sup> Kuhn, 1962.

<sup>58</sup> Strawson, 1959. See also his thoughts on resentment, Strawson, 1974.

<sup>59</sup> Etzioni, 2013, p. 333.

<sup>60</sup> Searle, 1983.

<sup>61</sup> Polanyi, 1967.

<sup>62</sup> Bem, 1970.

<sup>63</sup> Mackay, 1994.

<sup>64</sup> Rogers, et al., 1992.

<sup>65</sup> Zajonc, 1980.

<sup>66</sup> Lakoff, 2006a, p. 25. See also www.rockridgeinstitute.org.

<sup>67</sup> Lakoff, 2006b, p. 12. In Whose Freedom, George Lakoff, 2006b, addresses freedom, “this most beloved of American political ideas”:

Since September 11, 2001, the Bush administration has relentlessly invoked the word “freedom.” Al-Qaeda attacked us because “they hate our freedom.” The U.S. can strike preemptively because “freedom is on the march.” Social security should be privatized in order to protect individual freedoms. The 2005 presidential inaugural speech was a kind of crescendo: the words “freedom,” “free,” and “liberty,” were used forty-nine times in President Bush’s twenty-minute speech.

See also note 211 in the Introduction.

<sup>68</sup> Bernstein, 1975, 1990, pp. 16, 36–39. See also Bernstein, 2000. Basil Bernstein (1924 – 2000) was a linguist and researcher at the Institute of Education, University of London. I thank Vidar Vambheim for making me aware of Bernstein’s work.

<sup>69</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 210–211.

<sup>70</sup> Nathanson, 1996. Donald L. Nathanson, MD, is the founding executive director emeritus of the Tomkins Institute.

<sup>71</sup> Berne, 1972.

<sup>72</sup> Bargh and Williams, 2006.

<sup>73</sup> Gladwell, 2005.

<sup>74</sup> Strack and Deutsch, 2004.

<sup>75</sup> Fazio, et al., 1986, Devine, 1989.

<sup>76</sup> The “associative-propositional evaluation” model (APE) describes how implicit and explicit attitude change is guided by a distinction between associative and propositional processes, see Gawronski and Bodenhausen, 2006.

<sup>77</sup> Geertz, 1983, p. 75.

<sup>78</sup> Berger and Luckmann, 1966.

<sup>79</sup> Parsons integrates not only sociological concepts, but also psychological, economic, political, and religious or philosophical components, see Parsons, 1951.

<sup>80</sup> American television comedian Stephen Colbert is said to have coined the word “truthiness.” See “Truthiness or Trustiness?” by Benjamin Zimmer, Language Log, October 26, 2005, <http://itre.cis.upenn.edu/~myl/language-log/archives/002586.html>.

<sup>81</sup> Palincsar, 1998.

<sup>82</sup> Berger, 1969, quoted in Bond and Lun, 2013a. See Bond's involvement in the project Is Religion Natural? The Chinese Challenge, <http://thethrivecenter.org/research/is-religion-natural-the-chinese-challenge/>. It is a privilege to have Michael Harris Bond as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>83</sup> Stephan Feuchtwang in a personal communication on November 14, 2002. See also Feuchtwang, 2011.

<sup>84</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 60.

<sup>85</sup> Stephan Feuchtwang in a personal communication on November 14, 2002.

<sup>86</sup> Clive Stafford Smith in The Secret War on Terror, documentary film by Peter Taylor, 2011, http://docuwiki.net/index.php?title=The\_Secret\_War\_on\_Terror.

<sup>87</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>88</sup> Miller, 2006b. See her first, seminal book, Miller, 1976/1986.

<sup>89</sup> Coleman, 2003, p. 17. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

See also Holbrook, et al., 2015, whose research shows that the experience of threat increases ideological responses. Innovative experiments using transcranial magnetic stimulation, a method to incapacitate specific regions of the brain temporarily, appear to show that both belief in God and prejudice towards immigrants can be reduced by directing magnetic energy into the brain, in this case, the posterior medial frontal cortex, a part of the brain associated with detecting problems and triggering responses.

See also "Research that Is Simply Beyond Belief," by Alistair Keely, University of York, October 14, 2015, www.york.ac.uk/news-and-events/news/2015/research/psychologist-brian-magnetic/:

Dr Colin Holbrook, from UCLA and the lead author of the paper, added: "These findings are very striking, and consistent with the idea that brain mechanisms that evolved for relatively basic threat-response functions are repurposed to also produce ideological reactions. However, more research is needed to understand exactly how and why religious beliefs and ethnocentric attitudes were reduced in this experiment." The scientists say that whether we're trying to clamber over a fallen tree that we find in our path, find solace in religion, or resolve issues related to immigration, our brains are using the same basic mental machinery.

<sup>90</sup> See, for example, Fisher, et al., 1991. We learn there that we need to focus on interest and not on position to attain an optimal outcome. If two people fight over an orange, for example, sharing it equally would solve the conflict, however, not optimally. The optimal solution would be to ask more detailed questions and consider, for example, that one person wishes to use the skin of the orange for a cake while the other wants to extract the juice from the fruit meat. As a result, the outcome would be that both have 100 percent of their interest served, not just 50 percent of their initial positions. Not that such a positive outfall can be guaranteed – sometimes a situation simply does not entail the potential for win-win solutions – but by not searching for such potential win-win solutions, those solutions are overlooked and untapped.

<sup>91</sup> Moore, 2016, p. 212. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book.

<sup>92</sup> Weininger, 2005.

<sup>93</sup> Bourdieu, 1990b, p. 135.

<sup>94</sup> Wacquant, 1991, Bourdieu, 1991.

<sup>95</sup> Elliott Weininger refers to Bourdieu, 1984a, 1990a, 1991, and writes:

The upshot of Bourdieu's approach is that the endless debate between proponents of nominalist and realist views of class is shown to be misguided. The opposition between these views must not be understood as an epistemological alternative that confronts the class analyst. To the contrary, nominalism and realism amount to what might be described as distinct moments of the social process... Social actors, it must be insisted, are distributed across an objective structure of positions which conditions the probability that any particular set of individuals will share the same lifestyle, the same collective name, or an organizational membership.

<sup>96</sup> Richards and Swanger, 2009.

<sup>97</sup> See Richards, 1995, Richards, 2004, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012, Richards and Swanger, 2013. Richards builds on, among others, Searle, 1995, Harré and Secord, 1972, Taylor, 1971, MacIntyre and Bell, 1967, and other works by the same authors. It is a privilege to have Howard Richards, Catherine Odora Hoppers, and her brother George as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>98</sup> Critical realism is being associated with names such as Roy Bhaskar, Rom Harré, Margaret Archer, Heikki Patomäki, and others. See for an overview over critical realism, Archer, et al., 1998. See also the book description of Porpora, 2015:

Critical realism is a philosophy of science that positions itself against the major alternative philosophies underlying contemporary sociology... Douglas V. Porpora argues that sociology currently operates with deficient accounts of truth, culture, structure, agency, and causality that are all better served by a critical realist perspective. This approach argues against the alternative sociological perspectives, in particular the dominant positivism which privileges statistical techniques and experimental design over ethnographic and historical approaches. However, the book also compares critical realism favorably with a range of other approaches, including poststructuralism, pragmatism, interpretivism, practice theory, and relational sociology.

<sup>99</sup> Richards and Swanger, 2009.

<sup>100</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>101</sup> Dilas, 1957.

<sup>102</sup> Herman Daly in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Marxism and Ecology: Common Founts of a Great Transition,” September 14, 2015.

<sup>103</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 90.

<sup>104</sup> See the letter on

www.jumbomail.me/en/Downloads.aspx?sid=645A457974395655476744464B3342347436653838673D3D. See also “Pardon Plea by Adolf Eichmann, Nazi War Criminal, Is Made Public,” by Isabel Kershner, New York Times, January 27, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/01/28/world/middleeast/israel-adolf-eichmann-holocaust.html?\_r=0.

<sup>105</sup> Paul Nieuwenhuis, Cardiff Business School, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 19, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016.

Chapter 10

<sup>1</sup> Tocqueville, 1856. See also “The Future by Al Gore – Review,” by John Gray, The Guardian, January 31, 2013, www.theguardian.com/books/2013/jan/31/the-future-al-gore-review. See also Gore, 2013. See, furthermore, Pratto and Stewart, 2011, or Jost, et al., 2009. See also “Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can’t Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden,” by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>. See for a recent publication, Bergen, 2016.

<sup>2</sup> “Suicide Is Now the Biggest Killer of Teenage Girls Worldwide. Here’s Why,” by Nisha Lilia Diu, The Telegraph, May 25, 2015, www.telegraph.co.uk/women/womens-health/11549954/Teen-girls-Suicide-kills-more-young-women-than-anything.-Heres-why.html#comment-2045825875. Vikram Patel was the founding director of the Centre for Global Mental Health at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine and now spends much of the year in Delhi, where he works for the Public Health Foundation of India.

<sup>3</sup> Erik Solheim was Minister of International Development when the interview took place in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Oslo, Norway, on January 10, 2011. Until being appointed minister, he was as a diplomat and a participant in the Norwegian delegation that worked to resolve the Sri Lankan Civil War before the outbreak of Eelam War IV. On May 3, 2016, United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon announced that Solheim takes over the post of executive director of UNEP, the United Nations’ Environment Programme, in June 2016.

<sup>4</sup> Le Bon, 1895/1896. Edward Louis Bernays, 1928, the nephew of Sigmund Freud, combined Freud’s psychoanalytical concepts with the work of Gustave Le Bon on crowd psychology, and with Wilfred Trotter, 1916, and his ideas on the instincts of the “herd.” See also Clark, 1988. Bernays was among the first to influence the market, for instance, the market of cigarettes, by luring women into smoking by manipulating images of women smokers as torches of freedom. I thank Diane Summer for being the first to make me aware of this manipulation, in 2007, in Brisbane, Australia.

<sup>5</sup> Riesman, et al., 1950/2001.

<sup>6</sup> A sense of deprivation or inequality, both in relation to others or in relation to expectations, can drive social movements. When expectations have outgrown actual material situations, the “J-curve” model developed by James Chowning Davies, 1969, is thought to be appropriate to explain political revolutions. See also Gurr, 1970, Davies, 1971.

<sup>7</sup> Benford and Snow, 2000, Snow and Benford, 1988.

<sup>8</sup> In Theories of Political Protest and Social Movements, sociologist Karl-Dieter Opp, 2009, presents his version of rational choice theory, where he includes a number of cultural concepts and shows that several other approaches rely on rational-choice assumptions without being aware of it, or making it explicit.

<sup>9</sup> Sociologist Alain Touraine focuses on social and political conflict in his work. I would have liked to attend the debate moderated by Michel Wieviorka in Paris in 2014, see Castells, et al., 2014. It is a privilege for me to be associated with the Maison des Sciences de l'Homme in Paris since 2001, first through social psychologist Serge Moscovici. The first two conferences of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies were inspired and hosted by Hinnerk Bruhns, and supported by Michel Wieviorka, at the Maison des Sciences in 2003 and 2004, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeetings.php. It is a privilege to have Hinnerk Bruhns and other renowned colleagues from France as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

I follow sociologist Alain Touraine, when he asks how a transnational economy can be reconciled with the reality of introverted communities, and when he replies that a few social rules of mutual tolerance and respect for personal freedom are not sufficient, that deeper bonds must and can be forged. Touraine argues that people can and should create a personal life-project and construct an active self or “subject,” with the ultimate aim to form meaningful social and political institutions. See Touraine, 2000, and Touraine, 2003. See, furthermore, Lindner, 2014b, 2017.

<sup>10</sup> The motivation for movement participation is seen as a form of post-material politics and newly created identities, particularly those from the “new middle class.” See the work of Ronald Inglehart, for instance, the Inglehart–Welzel Cultural Map – World Values Survey wave 6 (2010 – 2014) on www.worldvaluessurvey.org/images/Cultural\_map\_WVS6\_2015.jpg, explained on www.worldvaluessurvey.org/WVSContents.jsp. Note also Inglehart and Welzel, 2005, and Norris and Inglehart, 2011.

<sup>11</sup> Sociologist and philosopher Jürgen Habermas advocates public deliberation and hopes that in the future, a deliberative democracy can evolve, based on equal rights and obligations of citizens, see, among others, Habermas, 1962, 1981, 1985–1987, 1989. See also Alberto Melucci, et al., 1989, and Melucci, 1996.

<sup>12</sup> The work of sociologist and political scientist Charles Tilly (1929 – 2008) spanned several decades, see McAdam, et al., 2001, Tilly, 1978. Tilly distinguishes between three kinds of claims for social movements: Identity claims declare that “we” constitute a unified force, such as “we, the Cherokees,” standing claims assert ties to other political actors, for example excluded minorities, while program claims support or oppose actual or proposed actions. See Tilly, 2004. Tilly argues that regimes shape contentious repertoires by determining zones of prescribed, tolerated, and forbidden repertoires, by constituting potential claimants and potential objects of claims, and by producing issues, events, and governmental actions around which social movements rise and fall. See Tilly, 2010.

<sup>13</sup> Jasper, 2011, p. 290. See also Shultziner, 2013. Jasper, 1997, sees four dimensions play distinct roles in social protest movements, namely, resources, strategy, biography, and culture. See also Cefai, 2007.

<sup>14</sup> Jasper, 1997, p. 106.

<sup>15</sup> “Elie Wiesel’s Acceptance Speech,” on the occasion of the award of the Nobel Peace Prize in Oslo, December 10, 1986, www.nobelprize.org/nobel\_prizes/peace/laureates/1986/wiesel-acceptance\_en.html. I thank Linda Hartling for alerting when Elie Wiesel had passed away on July 2, 2016, and pointing out his important words on humiliation.

<sup>16</sup> See Sherif, 1936, Festinger, 1954, 1957, 1980, Deutsch and Gerard, 1955.

<sup>17</sup> Kim and Ruben, 1988.

<sup>18</sup> Hayashi, 2003.

<sup>19</sup> See, for example, Mezirow, 2000. See also Fisher-Yoshida, et al., 2009. Beth Fisher-Yoshida is the academic director of a Master of Science in Negotiation and Conflict Resolution at the School of Continuing Education at Columbia University, ce.columbia.edu/Negotiation-and-Conflict-Resolution/Beth-Fisher-Yoshida-Biography?context=974. It is a privilege to have her as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies network, together with Adair Linn Nagata, and also Barnett Pearce (whom we so tragically lost much too early). See also Alagic, et al., 2009, Nagata, 2006, 2007.

<sup>20</sup> Lindner, 2009a, pp. 130–137.

<sup>21</sup> In a series of experiments in a lab at the University of Pennsylvania, dogs were given a series of mild shocks and learned that they could do nothing to stop them. Later, the shocks were repeated, yet, this time, only a small barrier hindered the dogs to avoid them: they simply had to leap over this small barrier. Yet, they sat in their boxes passively whining. They had given up trying. In the words of the scientists, they had “learned helplessness.” See Seligman, 1974.

<sup>22</sup> Jervis, 2006.

<sup>23</sup> Carveth, 2013.

<sup>24</sup> See more on the notion of misrecognition in Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 5 and 8 of the book Emotion and Conflict, pp. 129–137. Concepts such as méconnaissance (misrecognition) and naturalization were used by Roland Barthes, Pierre

Bourdieu, and Michel Foucault (among others). They address how power structures use the concealed nature of habitus to manipulate not just overtly but covertly and stealthily, making it much more difficult to rid oneself of these manipulations.

<sup>25</sup> The term méconnaissance was first introduced by psychologist Henri Wallon (1879 – 1962).

<sup>26</sup> Kant, 1784.

<sup>27</sup> I sense that the security dilemma's most recent cultural product, Western individualism, has usurped the English translation. Maturity is an individualistic concept, and it has something to do with growing up. My point is that this Unmündigkeit is not an individual psychological problem, nor general human forgetfulness. It is the result of large-scale social pressure and it would be a category mistake to seek solutions at the wrong level of analysis and action.

<sup>28</sup> Adorno, et al., 1950.

<sup>29</sup> Miller, 1980/2002.

<sup>30</sup> Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c. See the work by political scientist Stanley Feldman, for instance, Feldman, 2003. Read more in "The Rise of American Authoritarianism," by Amanda Taub, Vox, March 1, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/3/1/11127424/trump-authoritarianism#change.

In the early 1990s, political scientist Stanley Feldman did innovative research. Feldman, a professor at SUNY Stony Brook, believed authoritarianism could be an important factor in American politics in ways that had nothing to do with fascism, but that it could only reliably be measured by unlinking it from specific political preferences. For Feldman, authoritarianism was a personality profile rather than a political preference, and in his questionnaires he therefore asks about parenting goals. He developed the definitive measurement of authoritarianism by asking four simple questions that appear to focus on parenting but are in fact designed to reveal how highly the respondent values hierarchy, order, and conformity over other values. This were his questions: Please tell me which one you think is more important for a child to have:

- independence or respect for elders?
- obedience or self-reliance?
- to be considerate or to be well-behaved?
- curiosity or good manners?

<sup>31</sup> "Why Trump?" by George Lakoff, Huffington Post, March 3, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/george-lakoff/why-trump\_1\_b\_9372450.html:

Direct causation is dealing with a problem via direct action. Systemic causation recognizes that many problems arise from the system they are in and must be dealt with via systemic causation. Systemic causation has four versions: A chain of direct causes. Interacting direct causes (or chains of direct causes). Feedback loops. And probabilistic causes. Systemic causation in global warming explains why global warming over the Pacific can produce huge snowstorms in Washington DC: masses of highly energized water molecules evaporate over the Pacific, blow to the Northeast and over the North Pole and come down in winter over the East coast and parts of the Midwest as masses of snow. Systemic causation has chains of direct causes, interacting causes, feedback loops, and probabilistic causes – often combined.

Direct causation is easy to understand, and appears to be represented in the grammars of all languages around the world. Systemic causation is more complex and is not represented in the grammar of any language. It just has to be learned.

Empirical research has shown that conservatives tend to reason with direct causation and that progressives have a much easier time reasoning with systemic causation. The reason is thought to be that, in the strict father model, the father expects the child or spouse to respond directly to an order and that refusal should be punished as swiftly and directly as possible.

Many of Trump's policy proposals are framed in terms of direct causation.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

<sup>32</sup> Festinger, 1954, 1957, 1980.

<sup>33</sup> Adler, 1993, 2004, Adler, et al., 2009. I had the privilege of being introduced to Nanci Dale Adler's research in 2008, through her talk "The Communist Within: Narratives of Loyalty to the Party Before, During, and After the Gulag," at the Center for Studies of Holocaust and Religious Minorities in Norway, October 1, 2008. See also Højdestrand, 2009. Adler builds her interpretation on the work on cognitive dissonance by Leon Festinger, 1954, 1957.

<sup>34</sup> Miller and Stiver, 1997.

<sup>35</sup> Eldridge, et al., 2003, p. 2.

<sup>36</sup> "Why Trump?" by George Lakoff, Huffington Post, March 3, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/george-lakoff/why-trump\_1\_b\_9372450.html:

There is no middle in American politics. There are moderates, but there is no ideology of the moderate, no single ideology that all moderates agree on. A moderate conservative has some progressive positions on issues, though they vary from person to person. Similarly, a moderate progressive has some conservative positions on issues, again varying from person to person. In short, moderates have both political moral worldviews, but mostly use one of them. Those two moral worldviews in general contradict each other. How can they reside in the same brain at the same time? Both are characterized in the brain by neural circuitry. They are linked by a commonplace circuit: mutual inhibition. When one is turned on the other is turned off; when one is strengthened, the other is weakened.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

<sup>37</sup> Van Dijk, 2001.

<sup>38</sup> Phillips and Hardy, 2002, p. 15. See also Karlberg, 2013.

<sup>39</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 199.

<sup>40</sup> Guha and Spivak, 1988.

<sup>41</sup> See, among others, Chaturvedi, 2000, Mignolo, 2000, Verdesio, 2005. I thank Magnus Haavelsrud for making me aware of the latter publications. See also Haavelsrud, 2015.

<sup>42</sup> Habermas, 1985–1987.

<sup>43</sup> Collins, 1990.

<sup>44</sup> See “The Ties That Bind Captive to Captor,” by Frank M. Ochberg, Los Angeles Times, April 8, 2005, <http://articles.latimes.com/2005/apr/08/opinion/oe-ochberg8>. Frank M. Ochberg is co-founder of the National Center for Critical Incident Analysis and former associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health. See the book that one of the hostages, Kristin Enmark, 2015, wrote more than four decades after the event. See also Lindner, 2009a, p. 133.

<sup>45</sup> Reber, 1995.

<sup>46</sup> Kuhn, 1962.

<sup>47</sup> Etzioni, 2013, p. 334.

<sup>48</sup> Kaufman, 2001, p. 212.

<sup>49</sup> Volkan, 2004.

<sup>50</sup> See Volkan, 1997, 2004, 2006, 2013.

<sup>51</sup> Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See also Pratto and Stewart, 2011. See an overview in “Power Inequities,” by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities.

<sup>52</sup> Sidanius and Pratto, 1999, p. 44.

<sup>53</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Jost, et al., 2009, Jost, et al., 2002, Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>54</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Abstract:

Most theories in social and political psychology stress self-interest, intergroup conflict, ethnocentrism, homophily, in-group bias, outgroup antipathy, dominance, and resistance. System justification theory is influenced by these perspectives – including social identity and social dominance theories – but it departs from them in several respects. Advocates of system justification theory argue that (a) there is a general ideological motive to justify the existing social order, (b) this motive is at least partially responsible for the internalization of inferiority among members of disadvantaged groups, (c) it is observed most readily at an implicit, nonconscious level of awareness and (d) paradoxically, it is sometimes strongest among those who are most harmed by the status quo. This article reviews and integrates 10 years of research on 20 hypotheses derived from a system justification perspective, focusing on the phenomenon of implicit outgroup favoritism among members of disadvantaged groups (including African Americans, the elderly, and gays/lesbians) and its relation to political ideology (especially liberalism-conservatism).

See also What's the Matter with Kansas? How Conservatives Won the Heart of America, by Thomas Frank, 2004, where the author asks why working class populations voted against their best economic interests: they tended to vote conservative despite Conservatives not being equitable when it came to the rights of working class people.

<sup>55</sup> Pratto and Stewart, 2011, Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See an overview in “Power Inequities,” by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities.

<sup>56</sup> Jost, et al., 2004, Jost, et al., 2009, Jost, et al., 2002, Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>57</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, “Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change,” by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

<sup>58</sup> Such as Kuhn, Sidanius, Pratto, and Jost.

<sup>59</sup> Lerner, 1980.

<sup>60</sup> See, for example, Janis and Mann, 1977, Jervis, et al., 1985, or Lebow, 1981.

<sup>61</sup> “Mental Health Awareness Month in a Climate of Denial,” by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, May 11, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/mental-health-awareness-m\_b\_9895080.html.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> James Edward Jones, 2006, paper presented at the 2006 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 14–15, 2006:

Persons affected by the PVEE syndrome often defend, minimize and/or rationalize the most outrageous attitudes held and acts carried out by themselves or members of their particular group. When you talk to such people, you will quickly find that the reason that they take such a usually untenable position is because “their people” either are or have been victimized by one or more other groups. This is the golden rule turned on its head: “Do bad unto others because they (or someone else) did something bad to you.” It is a deceptively simple and somewhat pervasive point of view...

It is a privilege to have James Edward Jones as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>65</sup> “Why an Assassinated Psychologist – Ignored by US Psychologists – Is Being Honored,” by Bruce E Levine, Truthout, November 16, 2014, www.truth-out.org/opinion/item/27244-why-an-assassinated-psychologist-ignored-by-us-psychologists-is-being-honored. I thank Salman Türken for making me aware of this article.

<sup>66</sup> “Psychiatric Views on the 2014 News,” by Steven Moffic, Psychiatric Times, December 30, 2014, www.psychiatrictimes.com/blogs/couch-crisis/psychiatric-views-2014-news:

By 2006, the American Psychiatric Association approved a Position Statement declaring that psychiatrists should not participate in such interrogation, whether in the military or in civilian life, essentially because it would likely cause harm to the detainees. The American Psychological Association did not follow this lead. With what seems to be a tortuous (if you’ll excuse the term) route, this association in 2005 endorsed that psychologists could be involved in such military interrogations. Finally, in 2009, organized psychology made a conclusion similar to organized psychiatry, when its Ethics Committee concluded that there is “no defense to torture.” A New York Times editorial examined the role of psychologists, including the fact that the CIA outsourced the overview of the interrogations, from how to do them successfully to the effects on detainees, to a group of psychologists from 2005 to 2009. The end of this contract in 2009 marked the year of the new ethics policy.”

See also “The Senate Report on the C.I.A.’s Torture and Lies,” Editorial Board, New York Times, December 9, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/12/10/opinion/the-senate-report-on-the-cias-torture-and-lies.html. Accessed December 30, 2014.

<sup>67</sup> See the network of indigenous psychologists that Louise Sundararajan gathers, of which I have the honor of being a member. See also Sundararajan, 2012, 2015, or Pritzker, 2016. See a scathing critic of the journey of the field of indigenous psychology by Gustav Jahoda, 2016. Jahoda’s article has elicited efforts to rebut his negative evaluation, see, among others, Marsella, 2009, and more on www.indigenousspsych.org/Discussion/forum/Archives/PDF/Jahoda%20on%20IP%20and%20rebuttals.pdf.

<sup>68</sup> Dong, 2015.

<sup>69</sup> Koenigs, 2007. For those, who wish to acquire a feel for the pathways of radicalization, Koenigs recommends Updike, 2006.

<sup>70</sup> Koenigs, 2007, p. 2.

<sup>71</sup> Koenigs, 2007, p. 15:

Al-Qaeda deliberately timed Massoud's assassination to precede the attacks in the United States. Anticipating a US military response, Al-Qaeda assassinated Mullah Omar's arch foe in order both to secure Osama bin Laden's relations with his Taliban protectors, and to eliminate the United States' most obvious partner in any retaliation that they might carry out on Afghan soil.

<sup>72</sup> Generation Jihad, documentary film in three episodes by Peter Taylor, 2010, http://thewatchseries.to/serie/generation\_jihad:

Peter Taylor has worked for a year investigating who these young Muslim extremists are and how they become radicalized and tracked their networks around the world. He clarifies how teenagers were recruited via the internet and finds out why some of Britain's young extremists are prepared to support violence against their fellow citizens.

See also Taylor, 2011. See, furthermore, Taylor, 1980, 1993b, 1996, 1997a, b, 2000.

<sup>73</sup> Arendt, 1963.

<sup>74</sup> Van Vuuren and Liebenberg, 1994. I thank Zuzana Luckay for making me aware of these authors. It is a privilege to have Zuzana Luckay in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>75</sup> Le Bon, 1895/1896.

<sup>76</sup> Trotter, 1916. See also Clark, 1988.

<sup>77</sup> Bernays, 1928. I thank Diane Summer for being the first to make me aware of these events, in 2007, in Brisbane, Australia.

<sup>78</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 96–97.

<sup>79</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 96–97. German original in Suttner, 1889, pp. 52–53:

“Das beste, um Sie aufzurütteln, lieber Tilling,” sagte mein Vater, “wäre wohl ein frischer, fröhlicher Krieg – aber leider ist jetzt gar keine Aussicht dazu vorhanden; der Friede droht sich unabsehbar auszudehnen.”

“Was das doch für sonderbare Wortzusammensetzungen sind,” konnte ich mich nicht enthalten zu bemerken: “Krieg und – fröhlich; Friede und – drohen.”

“Allerdings,” bestätigte der Minister, “der politische Horizont zeigt vor der Hand noch keinen schwarzen Punkt; doch es steigen Wetterwolken mitunter ganz unerwartet rasch auf, und die Chance ist niemals ausgeschlossen, daß eine – wenn auch geringfügige – Differenz einen Krieg zum Ausbruch bringt. Das sage ich Ihnen zum Trost, Herr Oberstlieutenant. Was mich anbelangt, der ich kraft meines Amtes die inneren Angelegenheiten meines Landes zu verwalten habe, so müssen meine Wünsche allerdings nur nach möglichst langer Erhaltung des Friedens gerichtet sein; denn dieser allein ist geeignet, die in meinem Ressort liegenden Interessen zu fördern; doch hindert dies mich nicht, die berechtigten Wünsche derer anzuerkennen, welche vom militärischen Standpunkt allerdings –”

“Gestatten Sie mir, Excellenz,” unterbrach Tilling, “für meine Person gegen die Zumutung mich zu verwahren, daß ich einen Krieg herbeiwünsche. Und auch gegen die Unterstellung zu protestieren, als dürfe der militärische Standpunkt ein anderer sein, als der menschliche. Wir sind da, um, wenn der Feind das Land bedroht, dasselbe zu schützen, geradeso wie die Feuerwehr da ist, um, wenn ein Brand ausbricht, denselben zu löschen. Damit ist weder der Soldat berechtigt, einen Krieg, noch der Feuerwehrmann, einen Brand herbeizuwünschen. Beides bedeutet Unglück, schweres Unglück, und als Mensch darf keiner am Unglück seiner Mitmenschen sich erfreuen.”

“Du guter, teurer Mann!” redete ich im Stillen den Sprecher an. Dieser fuhr fort:

“Ich weiß wohl, daß die Gelegenheit zu persönlicher Auszeichnung dem einen nur bei Feuersbrünsten dem anderen nur bei Feldzügen geboten wird; aber wie kleinherzig und enggeistig muß ein Mensch nicht sein, damit sein selbstisches Interesse ihm so riesig erscheine, daß es ihm den Ausblick auf das allgemeine Weh verrammelt. Oder wie hart und grausam, wenn er es dennoch sieht und nicht als solches mitempfindet. Der Friede ist die höchste Wohlthat – oder vielmehr die Abwesenheit der höchsten Übelthat, – er ist, wie Sie selber sagten, der einzige Zustand, in welchem die Interessen der Bevölkerung gefördert werden können, und Sie wollten einem ganzen großen Bruchteil dieser Bevölkerung – der Armee – das Recht zuerkennen, den gedeihlichen Zustand wegzuwünschen und den verderblichen zu ersinnen? Diesen ‘berechtigten’ Wunsch großziehen, bis er zur Forderung anwächst, und dann vielleicht sogar erfüllen? Krieg führen, damit die Armee doch beschäftigt und befriedigt werde – Häuser anzünden, damit die Löschmannschaft sich bewähren und Lob ernten könne?”

<sup>80</sup> “Bitter Memories of War on the Way to Jail,” by Chris Hedges, Truthdig, December 20, 2010, www.truthdig.com/report/item/bitter\_memories\_of\_war\_on\_the\_way\_to\_jail\_20101220.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid.

Chapter 11

<sup>1</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more prominent. See Lindner, 2012d. When I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson's and Kate Pickett's work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk.

Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014. See also Stiglitz, 2012, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also "An Economy for the 99 Per Cent," Oxfam International Briefing Paper, January 16, 2017, www.oxfam.org/sites/www.oxfam.org/files/file\_attachments/bp-economy-for-99-percent-160117-en.pdf: "It's time to build a human economy that benefits everyone, not just the privileged few." See, furthermore, a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality. Evidence has accumulated that "inequality damages family life by higher rates of child abuse, and increased status competition is likely to explain the higher rates of bullying confirmed in schools in more unequal countries," see "The Spirit Level Authors: Why Society Is More Unequal Than Ever: Five Years after the Spirit Level, Authors Richard Wilkinson and Kate Pickett Argue That Research Backs Up Their Views on the Iniquity of Inequality," by Kate Pickett and Richard Wilkinson, The Guardian, March 9, 2014, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2014/mar/09/society-unequal-the-spirit-level. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for drawing my attention to this article, where Kate Pickett and Richard Wilkinson look back on their path-breaking publication from 2009. See also Eckenrode, et al., 2014, and Due, et al., 2009. Wilkinson and Pickett write further:

...human beings have deep-seated psychological responses to inequality and social hierarchy. The tendency to equate outward wealth with inner worth means that inequality colors our social perceptions. It invokes feelings of superiority and inferiority, dominance and subordination – which affect the way we relate to and treat each other.

If we are to believe scholar and strategist David Rothkopf, 2008, a small number (circa 6,000) of largely unelected powerful people around the globe have shaped the world during the past decades in ways that made the financial meltdown possible. See for a more recent account of "who owns the world," Jakobs, 2016, and see also Robinson, 2017, on how the transnational capitalist class (TCC) made up of the owners and managers of transnational capital, has emerged as the agent of global capitalism.

As to the U.S.A., recent research has shed light on the influence of elite anti-tax advocacy groups, who hijack the conservative agenda, even though their interests are not necessarily aligned, for instance, with other conservative interests, such as business interests, or the interests of angry, culturally fearful conservative populists. The most significant elite anti-tax advocacy effort seems to be that of the US nationwide, multipurpose political federation called Americans for Prosperity (AFP), as part of "weaponized" conservative philanthropy. See Theda Skocpol and Hertel-Fernandez, 2016, as well as Jane Mayer, 2016, and her book on Dark Money. I thank Glyn Rimmington for making me aware of book by Mayer. See also "Who Owns the GOP?" by Theda Skocpol, Dissent, February 3, 2016, www.dissentmagazine.org/online\_articles/jane-mayer-dark-money-review-koch-brothers-gop:

Research by political scientist Christopher Parker and Barreto, 2013, at the University of Washington reinforces our conclusion that ordinary Tea Party activists and sympathizers are worried about sociocultural changes in the United States, angry and fearful about immigration, freaked out by the presence in the White House of a black liberal with a Muslim middle name, and fiercely opposed to what they view as out of control "welfare spending" on the poor, minorities, and young people. Many Tea Partiers benefit from Social Security, Medicare, and military veterans' programs, and do not want them to be cut or privatized. About half of Tea Party activists or sympathizers are also Christian conservatives intensely concerned with banning abortion and repealing gay marriage....

according to our research, angry, culturally fearful conservative populists not controlled from above are a major force in the early twenty-first-century United States.

When I try to look at the situation through the lens of dignity and humiliation, then people who until now felt dejected and shameful seem to be increasingly willing to develop a burning sense of victimhood they did not deserve, of sense of humiliation strong enough to cry out for action (I have studied this dynamic in depth in Nazi Germany). Politicians such as Bernie Sanders attempt to identify factual root causes, while populists first bundle and instigate anger and then channel it toward scapegoats, those they mistake for humiliators, wittingly or unwittingly giving cover to the actual humiliators. Organizations such as the AFP could be described as Trojan Horses that cannibalize and dominate their hosts by way of what I call "the art of humiliation."

See, furthermore, The Super-Rich and Us, documentary film by Jacques Peretti, 2015, Episode 1, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b04xw2x8, Episode 2, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b04yn2yq. Jacques Peretti brings together a wide range of sources in his documentary film, among others, Johnson, et al., 2012, or Beinhocker and Hanauer, 2014, or Chang, 2010. The Black-Scholes-Merton model is a mathematical model of a financial market containing derivative investment instruments, which has been identified as one element in a detrimental economical development, see "The Mathematical Equation that Caused the Banks to Crash," by Ian Stewart, The Guardian, February 12, 2012, www.theguardian.com/science/2012/feb/12/black-scholes-equation-credit-crunch. Robert F. Dall, an investment banker who pioneered the mortgage bond market on Wall Street, added another element, see "Robert F.

Dall, Mastermind of Mortgage-Backed Bonds, Dies at 81,” by Landon Thomas Jr., New York Times, November 18, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/11/19/business/dealbook/robert-f-dall-mastermind-of-mortgage-backed-bonds-dies-at-81.html?\_r=0.

Historian Yuval Harari, 2014, makes the point that in the past, inequality in society was accepted, while today everybody is promised to have a chance, the American Dream. As soon as this promise turns out to be false, “the middle classes could become a revolutionary class, taking the role envisaged for the proletariat by Marx.” A report envisions the “future strategic context” likely to face Britain’s armed forces by Rear Admiral Chris Parry, head of the MoD’s Development, Concepts and Doctrine Centre, see “Revolution, Flashmobs, and Brain Chips. A Grim Vision of the Future,” Richard Norton-Taylor, The Guardian, April 9, 2007, www.theguardian.com/science/2007/apr/09/frontpagenews.news.

See also Wie solidarisch ist Deutschland? – Warum Arme arm bleiben und die Reichen reicher werden, documentary film by Eva Schötteldreier, Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, 2016, www.daserste.de/information/reportage-dokumentation/dokus/wie-solidarisch-ist-deutschland-100.html. Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, WDR, West German Broadcasting Cologne, is a German public-broadcasting institution based in the Federal State of North Rhine-Westphalia with its main office in Cologne.

Journalist Nikil Saval, 2014, investigates the relationship between office design and human happiness and productivity, and describes the advent of the cubicles where 60 percent of Americans now work, with 93 percent of them disliking it.

<sup>2</sup> See Herz, 1950. Under the conditions of the security dilemma, the Hobbesian fear of surprise attacks from outside one’s nation’s borders reigns. Barry Posen and Russell Hardin discuss the emotional aspects of the security dilemma and how they play out between ethnic groups as much as between states, see Posen, 1993, and Hardin, 1995, or Rose, 2000. See also Collins, 2004, Hansen, 2000, Jervis, 1978, Job, 1992, Musah and Fayemi, 2000, Posen, 1993, Snyder, 1985, Snyder and Walters, 1999, or Schweller, 2011. See for the critical turn in international relations theory, the notion of positive security and the so-called Copenhagen School, for example, Roe, 1999, 2005. I appreciate political scientist Jack S. Levy’s 2016 course “Theories of War And Peace” at Rutgers University, <http://home.uchicago.edu/~mjreese/CurrentStudents/LevyPS522.pdf>. He recommends, among others, Glaser, 1997, Montgomery, 2006, Schweller, 1996, Snyder and Jervis, 1999, Tang, 2011.

See also an interview that Alexandros Koutsoukis conducted with Steven C. Roach on November 2, 2016, as part of a series of interviews under the motto “Resurrecting IR Theory,” where Roach discusses affective values in international relations, the value of resilience, and how to theorize emotional actions, www.e-ir.info/2016/11/02/interview-steven-c-roach/. Roach acknowledges the influence of Alexander Wendt, 2015, and his quantum mind approach to IR, which reaches beyond the materialist problems of social inquiry, including the mind-body duality/problem. Wendt seeks to unify quantum theory and social ontology, thus mapping the imaginary contours of a global human consciousness (note also Lindner’s communication with Wendt in 2005). Roach also acknowledges Andrew Linklater, 2005, and his work on dialogical ethics, the ethics of harm in world politics, and the moral possibilities of producing dialogue across states. Furthermore, he points at Sara Ahmed, 2004, and her book The Cultural Politics of Emotion, where she describes how emotions can “stick,” how they can structure social relations by attaching themselves to values and anchor judgments and beliefs relating to justice, peace, cooperation, resilience, or tolerance. Roach also draws on Gilles Deleuze and Félix Guattari’s texts on the micropolitics of desire and sees affects as social and relational phenomena that resonate with unconscious feelings, and that it may take several decades for affects to become norms. He follows Guattari and Deleuze and Guattari, 1972/1977, in seeing the body of being capable of producing “assemblages” with other bodies to form collective identities: “Our feelings challenge authority unconsciously. They ‘circulate’ within and through these assemblages or functional structures.” Lyotard, 1974/1983, offers a related perspective on the micropolitics of desire. Roach, 2017, is working on a book on decency and diversity, where he touches upon the volatile politics of the International Criminal Court, global terrorism, and human rights abuses. Inspired by the writings of William Connolly, 2010, on pluralism, Roach explores the moral possibility of cultural pluralism in world politics and asks which role decency can play for global pressures on cultural movements. He is critical of idealist assumptions of fixed absolute points in our moral understanding of a good society, such as presented, for instance, in Political Emotions by Martha Nussbaum, 2013, where she emphasizes love, and how love needs to transcend one’s circumstances.

<sup>3</sup> See also Robinson, 2017.

<sup>4</sup> Left-leaning American political analyst and historian Thomas Frank confirmed in a BBC news hour that his views on globalized capitalism are very similar to those voiced, for instance, by Stephen Bannon. Listen to What Does Steve Bannon Think? BBC Newshour Extra with Frances Sellers, senior writer at Washington Post, Christopher Caldwell, from the right leaning Weekly Standard, and Thomas Frank, February 3, 2017, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/p04qx7vv.

<sup>5</sup> Heath-Kelly, et al., 2016, write about terrorism and neoliberalism as connected in multiple, complex, and often camouflaged ways.

<sup>6</sup> Wise, 2015. I thank John Bilorusky for making me aware of this book. See also “Barack Obama’s Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?” by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016,

www.thecodeforglobalethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY. Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay discusses the “T-treaty trinity,” the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), Trade in Services Agreement (TiSA), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP):

Such agreements, negotiated in near complete secrecy, pursue geopolitical objectives. They are an attempt to build a worldwide economic and financial order that supersedes national states and they represent also an effort to protect the corporate and banking elites – the establishment 1 percent – against national governments. In the case of the TTIP, its geopolitical objective is to prevent European countries from developing comprehensive trade agreements with Russia. In the case of TPP, the objective is to isolate China. In the eyes of Washington D.C. neocon planners, they are part of ongoing economic warfare.

See also Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>7</sup> See, for example, Lair, et al., 2005.

<sup>8</sup> McGoey, 2012. See also “What Will Future Generations Condemn Us For?” by Kwame Anthony Appiah, Washington Post, September 26, 2010, www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/09/24/AR2010092404113.html.

<sup>9</sup> Matt Taibbi about the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), which, to him, appeared “somehow worse than corrupt – it’s hard to find the right language, but ‘aggressively clueless,’” quoted in Elizabeth Warren, 2017, p. 87. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing her notes on Warren’s book with me.

<sup>10</sup> Mark McElroy in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” August 2, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid.

<sup>12</sup> Guy Dauncey contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” March 2, 2017, in response to Barrington-Leigh, 2017. Guy Dauncey currently works on his next book, titled The Economics of Kindness: The End of Capitalism and the Birth of a New Cooperative Economy.

<sup>13</sup> See, among others, Paley, 2014.

<sup>14</sup> Kogon, 1946/1950, p. 19. See also Siebert and Ott, 2016.

<sup>15</sup> Siebert and Ott, 2016, p. 2. Leo Löwenthal, a first generation member of Max Horkheimer’s Institute for Social Research, stated that Benjamin’s work ought to be heard as an “alarm clock that in each minute rings for sixty seconds” “to awaken people out of their soporific and hopeless enchantment and melancholic conformity to the catastrophic, life-threatening danger from the very same system that was further unfolding in the 19th fin de siècle European society due to the developing crises of the capitalist social production system that manifested itself in the horror of World War I, the Great Depression and the rise of fascism,” Ott, 2016, p. 5.

<sup>16</sup> Wainwright, 2016. Wainwright points out that societies have the choice between a drug business controlled by the state, or by organized crime, and that the state would be the preferable actor. See also Paley, 2014.

<sup>17</sup> Watch, for instance, Wie korrupt ist Deutschland?, a documentary film by Steffen Mayer and Chris Humbs, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, 2016, www.zdf.de/zdfzeit/korruption-42796414.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. The analysis that the investigators of the documentary conclude with, is that corruption in Germany is widespread and structurally ingrained. It is not just a matter of money being exchanged, it is also that the quality of materials used, for instance in building projects, is being thinned out and diminished. At the end, only the visible facade of a project looks intact, while the substance is precarious. The Volkswagen emissions scandal of 2015 shows how the thinning out of quality turns into fraud.

<sup>18</sup> “FKI Asks Assembly to Revise Anti-Corruption Law,” by Kim Yoo-chul, Korea Times, July 29, 2016, www.koreatimes.co.kr/www/news/tech/2016/07/133\_210689.html.

<sup>19</sup> The German military, for instance, is creating a new cyberwar section with 13 500 employees: “Ursula von der Leyen: Bundeswehr rüstet gegen Attacken aus dem Internet,” Die Zeit, 26. April 2016, www.zeit.de/politik/deutschland/2016-04/ursula-von-der-leyen-bundeswehr-aufruestung-cyberkrieg-angriffe-internet.

<sup>20</sup> Lawson, 2015. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of this book.

<sup>21</sup> “The Future of the United States of America,” by Howard Richards, TRANSCEND Media Service, January 2, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/01/the-future-of-the-united-states-of-america/:

Consequences of the basic social structure: 1A. There is a chronic insufficiency of inducement to invest. It is not only the case that the bread and butter of the people, their employment and their dignity, depend on the confidence of investors. It is also the case that investor confidence perpetually flags, lags, and threatens to collapse... 2A. There is a chronic insufficiency of effective demand. This is no small matter because profits depend on sales, while investment, and therefore output and employment, depend on expectations of profit.

<sup>22</sup> Harvey, 1990. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of this book.

<sup>23</sup> See note 21 above.

<sup>24</sup> "Corruption Perceptions Index 2016," Transparency International (TI), Berlin, January 25, 2017, http://files.transparency.org/content/download/2089/13368/file/2016\_CPIReport\_EN.pdf. José Ugaz, chair of TI: "In too many countries, people are deprived of their most basic needs and go to bed hungry every night because of corruption, while the powerful and corrupt enjoy lavish lifestyles with impunity."

<sup>25</sup> "Steve Bannon: 'We're Going to War in the South China Sea ... No Doubt,'" by Benjamin Haas, The Guardian, February 2, 2017, www.theguardian.com/us-news/2017/feb/02/steve-bannon-donald-trump-war-south-china-sea-no-doubt.

<sup>26</sup> Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>27</sup> See, among others, Pérouse de Montclos, 2015, or Apard, 2015. Watch also Boko Haram: The Origins of Evil, documentary film by Xavier Muntz, 2016, www.javafilms.fr/spip.php?article2103.

<sup>28</sup> Mohammed Yusuf founded Boko Haram in 2002, and following its July 2009 uprising, he was captured by the Nigerian military who handed him over to the Nigerian police force, who then summarily executed him in public view.

<sup>29</sup> Lüders, 2015.

<sup>30</sup> Peter Lundberg, UN Deputy Humanitarian Coordinator Nigeria, see "Nigeria's humanitarian crisis 'can no longer be ignored,' UN says, launching $1 billion appeal," United Nations News Centre, December 2, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=55702#.WERbjX2OWgx.

<sup>31</sup> Akilu, 2015.

<sup>32</sup> "Brexit: The Key Lessons – Now is the Time for Hope to Build on the Ruins," by economist Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), June 29, 2016, www.gcgi.info/index.php/blog/799-brexit-the-key-lessons-now-is-the-time-for-hope-to-build-on-the-ruins. It is a privilege to have Kamran Mofid as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>33</sup> See the work on loneliness by John Cacioppo and colleagues. Perceived social isolation has increased in industrialized countries, and in the U.S., loneliness now affects over forty percent of older adults. "The development of effective interventions for loneliness is still needed," so Cacioppo, et al., 2014, p. 1497. Loneliness not only has numerous negative health effects, it also leads to self-centeredness, see Cacioppo, et al., 2017. See also Cacioppo, et al., 2009, Cacioppo and Patrick, 2008.

See, furthermore, "The Swedish Theory of Love: Why Swedes Are So Lonely," by John-David Ritz, Vice, November 10, 2015, www.vice.com/en\_se/read/the-swedish-theory-of-love-or-why-we-swedes-are-so-lonely-234. I thank Guri Lorentzen Østbye for making me aware of the film and the article.

<sup>34</sup> See, for instance, the "Conclusions of the Council of the European Union and the Member States Meeting Within the Council on Enhancing the Criminal Justice Response to Radicalisation Leading to Terrorism and Violent Extremism," by the Council of the European Union, Press release 845/15 Justice Home Affairs, November 20, 2015, www.consilium.europa.eu/en/meetings/jha/2015/11/20/.

See also Generation Dschihad, documentary film by Albrecht Knechtel, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, 2016, www.arte.tv/guide/de/060207-000-A/generation-dschihad. Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg. See also Steinberg, 2015.

<sup>35</sup> Ellis, et al., 2012.

<sup>36</sup> Graeber, 2001.

<sup>37</sup> On June 5, 2008, more than one thousand representatives from indigenous communities across the Americas gathered in Lima, Peru, and agreed on a new social system, called Living Well. See, among others, www.villageearth.org/pages/Projects/Peru/perublog/2008/06/living-well-development-alternative.html#. See also the Journal of Indigenous Wellbeing, <http://journalindigenousewellbeing.com>. Consider also the sustainability principle in The Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia.

<sup>38</sup> Schumacher, 1973, p. 4.

<sup>39</sup> After the commons were enclosed in England, starting during the sixteenth century, what sociologist Eric Mielants, 2007, calls "terroristic" laws were introduced that criminalized idleness, thus pushing people into early capitalist manufacturing.

<sup>40</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005, or Hudson, 2003. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>41</sup> Chris Barrington-Leigh on the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” April 17, 2017, in response to the list members’ comments to Barrington-Leigh, 2017.

<sup>42</sup> “Responses: The Humiliation Myth: Humiliation Doesn’t Explain Terrorism; the Spread of Political Islam Does. A Response to Peter Bergen and Michael Lind,” by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Spring 2007, Number 4, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/4/the-humiliation-myth/>:

Indeed, the “myth of deprivation” is so manifestly inadequate that it is worth asking whether its supporters actually believe it...

<sup>43</sup> Hardin, 1998. Elinor Ostrom received the Nobel Prize for Economics 2009. She is considered one of the leading scholars in the study of common pool resources. Her work emphasizes the multifaceted nature of human–ecosystem interaction and argues against any singular “panacea” for individual social-ecological system problems. See, for example, Poteete, et al., 2010.

<sup>44</sup> Rousseau, 1762.

<sup>45</sup> Chris Barrington-Leigh on the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” April 17, 2017, in response to the list members’ comments to Barrington-Leigh, 2017.

<sup>46</sup> Hobson, 1902, explained what he saw, namely, that imperial expansion is driven by a search for new markets and investment opportunities overseas. His book gained Hobson an international reputation, and influenced people such as Vladimir Lenin and Leon Trotsky, as well as The Origins of Totalitarianism by Hannah Arendt, 1951. See also the Military-Industrial Complex Speech by Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, on January 17, 1961, Public Papers of the Presidents, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960, pp. 1035–1040, <http://coursesa.matrix.msu.edu/~hst306/documents/indust.html>, see also <https://youtu.be/8y06NSBBRtY>. In this farewell speech Eisenhower warns of the military industrial complex. See, furthermore, “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/, where Avery describes how the military-industrial complex involves a circular flow of money, like the electrical current in a dynamo, driving a diabolical machine. It started with unequal distribution that neither the rich nor the poor could buy back the total output of their society:

The incomes of the poor were insufficient, and rich were too few in number. The rich had finite needs, and tended to reinvest their money. As Hobson pointed out, reinvestment in new factories only made the situation worse by increasing output. Hobson had been sent as a reporter by the Manchester Guardian to cover the Second Boer War. His experiences had convinced him that colonial wars have an economic motive. Such wars are fought, he believed, to facilitate investment of the excess money of the rich in African or Asian plantations and mines, and to make possible the overseas sale of excess manufactured goods. Hobson believed imperialism to be immoral, since it entails suffering both among colonial peoples and among the poor of the industrial nations. The cure that he recommended was a more equal distribution of incomes in the manufacturing countries.

See more in note 127 in Chapter 14, and note 199 in Chapter 18.

<sup>47</sup> Korten 2006, private communication to Riane Eisler, cited in Eisler, 2007, p. 16. Economist Richard T. Carson, 2010, explains that economists have “lost a decade or more” on believing in the false promise of the wealth-pollution argument. They erroneously assumed that increases in wealth will automatically translate into improved environmental conditions.

<sup>48</sup> “Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society,” writes Johan Galtung. See “Sociocide, Palestine and Israel,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, October 8, 2012, www.transcend.org/tms/2012/10/sociocide-palestine-and-israel/ (italics in original):

Sociocide, the killing of a society’s capacity to survive and to reproduce itself, should become equally and prominently a crime against humanity. A society is a self-reproducing social system. So are human beings, with our basic needs for survival, wellness, identity, freedom. Society is also an organism, with a lifespan far beyond that of individuals. For humans to survive as humans their basic needs have to be met. For that to happen the society has to survive. For the society to survive the basic social prerequisites must be met:

- for security, against violence, killing, wounding the members
- for economic sustainability, against their starvation, illness
- for identity culturally, a meaning with life, against alienation

- for autonomy politically, to be a master of their own house

As society unfolds so do humans, and vice versa. Life breeds life.

This also holds for nomadic societies based on hunter-gatherers. Monasteries are incapable of self-reproduction biologically when based on one gender, but are highly viable societies based on recruitment.

Under modernity, identity is carried by the nation, with four characteristics: an idiom, a religion-world view, a history – of the past, present and future – and geographical attachment. Time, Space, with the means to communicate and something to believe is crucial.

Under modernity the state is the key executor of all the above.

Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society.

Sociocide molests the human members. In the longer run, lethally. Sociocide is what Western, and not only Western, colonialism has done for centuries, denying others their autonomy, imposing their own identity – language and world-view – moving others out of their own historical dialectic and into history as Western periphery, denying them the land they are attached to with their hearts and minds. And their bodies for security and sustenance, for food, water, health.

See also Cormann, 2015.

<sup>49</sup> Higgins, 2016. See a precursor to the concept of ecocide in Christopher Stone, 1972, and for “a look back forty years later,” Anna Grear, 2012. See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016. Consider the sustainability principle in the Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia. In September 2016, the International Criminal Court added environmental disasters and destruction, even land grabs, to the definition of Crimes Against Humanity, which shows that real international legal instrument now follow soft law (Earth Charter) or symbolic language (ecocide, where the mens rea required cannot be demonstrated). See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016.

There are voices, however, that warn that introducing a crime of ecocide in the International Criminal Court (ICC) can ultimately be undesirable, because the vehicle of an international crime overreaches and is insufficient at the same time. See Capra and Mattei, 2015. See also Ugo Mattei of the Hastings College of Law at the University of California, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 5, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. The ICC, because of the lack of international centralized power or independence, is just a mockery of an institution, writes Mattei, and continues:

Ecocide is too serious of an issue to be entangled with such a spectacle of an international institution that never worked to reach the actual powerful culprits. Moreover, even if we were to take seriously international criminal law in a world of dramatic power imbalance, a crime of ecocide would necessarily require a level of culpability that is most probably absent in all the major episodes of devastation of the environment. Disasters such as Fukushima, Chernobyl, or even the Gulf spill would clearly fall below that. There are issues of corporate responsibility, of criminal consequences of recklessness, of sufficiency, of omissions, or of causality that handled by any good criminal attorney would clear let wealthy corporate actors immune from responsibility.

It is hard to believe that any powerful wrongdoer will be deterred by such a crime, and, as consequence, the very idea of ecocide will suffer prestige and credibility.

We live in a world in which very few people have any awareness of the disasters of the Anthropocene, so we need diffused ecological literacy. We live in a world in which people believe that the only concept of law is that of a vertical model in the hands of governments, so we need diffused legal literacy.

In seeking a legal solution for problems of such ecological relevance, involving so many non-human interests traditionally and presently ignored and massively violated by the very structure of extractive capitalism, we need (if at all available) the best not the worst part of legal systems. We need to culturally transform the perception of law, to disentangle it with notions of power-concentration, to give it back to communities as a decentralized cultural and legitimate tool to share problems and solutions. Nothing is further away from people and social movements than an appeal to jails, cops, and police to solve our ecological problems. Would such a move increase international ecological legal literacy?

It is an honor for me to be part in Anna Grear’s network, as well as Paul Raskin’s GTN discussions.

<sup>50</sup> Oppenlander, 2011. See also Cowspiracy: The Sustainability Secret, a 2015 environmental documentary film following filmmaker Kip Andersen as he shows that animal agriculture is the leading cause of deforestation, water consumption and pollution, is responsible for more greenhouse gases than the transportation industry, and is a primary driver of rainforest destruction, species extinction, habitat loss, topsoil erosion, ocean “dead zones,” and virtually every other environmental ill. See www.cowspiracy.com, <https://youtu.be/S-XP79o8gqQ>.

<sup>51</sup> Expert on corporate sustainability management, Mark W. McElroy, Center for Sustainable Organizations, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 22, 2014.

<sup>52</sup> See for recent discussions, “Monetizing Nature: Taking Precaution on a Slippery Slope,” by Barbara Unmüssig, President of the Heinrich Böll Foundation in Berlin, Germany, www.greattransition.org/document/monetizing-nature-taking-precaution-on-a-slippery-slope. See also Costanza and Kubiszewski, 2014, or Rotering, 2013. See also Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>53</sup> Richard Sanders, founder of Quest 2025 (www.quest2025.net), in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 25, 2014.

<sup>54</sup> “The Free-Trade Regime: Oligarchy in Action,” by Moritz Laurer, originally published by Foreign Policy in Focus, May 13, 2014, www.resilience.org/stories/2014-05-13/the-free-trade-regime-oligarchy-in-action. See, furthermore, “Neoliberalism: Oversold?” by Jonathan D. Ostry, Prakash Loungani, and Davide Furceri, The International Monetary Fund (IMF), Finance and Development, June 2016, Volume 53, Number 2, www.imf.org/external/pubs/ft/fandd/2016/06/pdf/ostry.pdf:

Instead of delivering growth, some neoliberal policies have increased inequality, in turn jeopardizing durable expansion. Milton Friedman in 1982 hailed Chile as an “economic miracle.” Nearly a decade earlier, Chile had turned to policies that have since been widely emulated across the globe. The neoliberal agenda – a label used more by critics than by the architects of the policies – rests on two main planks. The first is increased competition – achieved through deregulation and the opening up of domestic markets, including financial markets, to foreign competition. The second is a smaller role for the state, achieved through privatization and limits on the ability of governments to run fiscal deficits and accumulate debt.

<sup>55</sup> See, for instance, “Wir haben euch gewarnt,” Präsident Idriss Déby Itno interviewed by Susanne Koelbl, Der Spiegel 42/2016, October 15, 2016, p. 86.

<sup>56</sup> “‘Corporate Trojan Horse’: Obama Pushes Secretive TPP Trade Pact, Would Rewrite Swath of U.S. Laws,” with Lori Wallach, director of Public Citizen’s Global Trade Watch, Democracy Now, as guest, October 04, 2013, www.democracynow.org/2013/10/4/a\_corporate\_trojan\_horse\_obama\_pushes:

The agreement has 29 chapters, and only five of them have to do with trade. The other 24 chapters either handcuff our domestic governments, limiting food safety, environmental standards, financial regulation, energy and climate policy, or establishing new powers for corporations.

See also note 54 in Chapter 1.

<sup>57</sup> Geld regiert die Welt: Die Macht der Finanzkonzerne – Reportage, documentary film by Tilman Achtnich and Hanspeter Michel, Das Erste, 2014, http://programm.ard.de/TV/daserste/die-story-im-ersten--geld-regiert-die-welt/eid\_2810611333298235. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>58</sup> Alliance Development Works/Bündnis Entwicklung Hilft (BEH), 2013.

<sup>59</sup> “Hungary Says Donald Trump Inspired Its Latest Policy to Detain All Asylum Seeker,” by Aamna Mohdin, Quartz, February 07, 2017, <https://qz.com/904689/hungary-says-donald-trump-inspired-its-latest-policy-to-detain-all-migrants/>.

<sup>60</sup> Rodrik, 2011.

<sup>61</sup> Mann, 2000.

<sup>62</sup> Terreblanche, 2014. I thank Michael Britton for reminding me Terreblanche’s work.

<sup>63</sup> “Just Peace in Past and Present Context: Climate Change as Threat to Peace and Future,” talk given by Raymond G. Helmick, S.J., at the University of Iceland, May 3, 2014, in preparation of a conference of the World Council of Churches on the Just Peace theme to be held in Iceland in 2015:

The nations, prompted largely by my own United States, fell into deadly assumptions, during that decade, that the proper response to any threat they faced was military. In the strategically pace-setting nations of the NATO alliance the dominance of corporate interests that profited from military production had never abandoned their program even through the period after the Cold War when world peace seemed most within reach. Andrew Bacevich, 2013, of Boston University, has been our best teacher on that score, detailing the ways that American policy has been built on war preparations, without interruption, ever since World War II... The early 21st century has seen a dominance of the concept of a “war on terror.” Somehow, we needed a new enemy after the end of the Cold War. The United States, traumatized by the attacks of September 11, 2001, spent the next years seeking for villains to be punished, even against the reluctance and often open opposition of its closest allies... Much of the Western world has fallen into the hands of a plutocracy which has no long-term interests but only a demand for short-term profit, and has turned over management of policy to the military-industrial interests and the fear-mongers. That constitutes problems in itself which we have been slow to address, but we are now seeing in addition a reluctance to engage in more wars, more from tiredness and disappointment than from principal. Justice is not a primary concern of this hesitancy about war. Tiredness is not a real way to build peace. We can rejoice that the impetus to military adventurism has declined, but neglect of justice will only guarantee that the divisive issues that have wounded the peace will return more disruptive than ever. This is the genius of JustPeace. The concept has not yet developed into the detailed list of criteria we can cite for theories of Just War. It is newer, and we have less experience in wielding it.

See also Bacevich, 2010, George, 2015.

<sup>64</sup> “Refugee Crisis: Brought to You by Western Imperialism,” by André Vltchek, Human Wrongs Watch, September 20, 2015, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/09/21/refugee-crisis-brought-to-you-by-western-imperialism/>.

<sup>65</sup> “What if Sociologists Had as Much Influence as Economists?” by Neil Irwin, New York Times, March 17, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/03/17/upshot/what-if-sociologists-had-as-much-influence-as-economists.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>66</sup> Maureen O’Hara in a personal communication to Louise Sundararajan’s Indigenous Psychology Network list on December 6, 2013. Maureen O’Hara, 2010, uses the term psychosphere to refer to the holistic, “interconnected, interpenetrated mutually influential system of narratives, symbols, images, representations, languages, metaphors, patterns of life, values, epistemologies, cognitive habits, rituals, religions, power relationships, sports, forms of commerce, governance, metaphysics, art, and technologies” that delineates the psychological context of individual and group life. O’Hara concludes that in her view, Malcolm Gladwell, Daniel Kahneman, and Martin Seligman in the U.S., and Lord Richard Layard in the United Kingdom “represent a new round of scientism and self-colonialization in the West. Their non-reflexive ‘econothink’ brilliantly serves the interests of corporatization and the interests of the established power elites who wish to decontextualize wellbeing from the economic and political circumstances.” See also O’Hara and Leicester, 2012, O’Hara and Lyon, 2014.

<sup>67</sup> Anthony Marsella in his response to Maureen O’Hara on Louise Sundararajan’s Indigenous Psychology Network list on January 14, 2014.

<sup>68</sup> See Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 8: How We Can Reinvent Our Contexts, in the book Emotion and Conflict.

<sup>69</sup> Educator and consultant David Hutchins, DH International Quality College, in a personal communication on June 14, 2013. Hutchins was responsible for the inspiration and organization of the event “The Japanese Approach to Product Quality,” held at the Institute of Directors in 1979, which Kaoru Ishikawa attended for his only visit to Europe.

<sup>70</sup> Juran, 1964.

<sup>71</sup> Philosopher John Gray reviews Moral Tribes by Joshua Greene, 2013, in The Guardian, January 17, 2014, www.theguardian.com/books/2014/jan/17/moral-tribes-joshua-greene-review, where Gray writes:

If you think some version of Darwinism provides the best available account of humankind’s place in the world (as I do) you will accept that morality has evolved along with the human animal. That doesn’t mean morality can be understood using Green’s fashionable mix of game theory and sociobiology. How human beings think and feel about morality is integral to what it means to them, but Greene tends to displace these culturally accreted understandings by clever-sounding theoretical notions – including ideas borrowed from the prevailing versions of market economics.

When he defends utilitarianism as a universal “meta-morality” that can regulate “trade-offs” among tribal moralities, it’s no accident that he describes this super-morality as a common currency. This is an author who assures the reader that “participation in modern market economies, far from turning us into selfish bean counters, has expanded the scope of human kindness.” For Greene and thinkers like him, market exchange seems to be a model for moral life.

See also Gray, 2002.

<sup>72</sup> Lerner, 1980. See also Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>73</sup> “Islam and the West: Roads toward Peace,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 14, 2015, www.transcend.org/tms/2015/09/islam-and-the-west-roads-toward-peace/.

<sup>74</sup> See, for example, Lair, et al., 2005.

<sup>75</sup> Strategische Kriegsführung für Manager (Strategic Warfare for Managers) is the title of a “guide” book for managers by Gilad and Junginger, 2010. Also for sociologist Max Weber war was a kind of natural phenomenon of political history, a form of unavoidable “eternal struggle of nations” (ewiges Ringen der Nationen), comparable to economic competition, only that economic war is conducted with “peaceful ammunition” (friedliche Kampfmittel), see Bruhns, 2014, p. 63.

The result is a quasi-military business culture. The Aldi concern in Germany, for instance, is organized like a military campaign; its founders, the brothers Karl and Theodor Albrecht, learned military logistics in WWII. Another result is that managers are expected to hide all vulnerabilities, to distance themselves from their very own humanity. They learn to appear to be in control even if their life falls apart. The choice is between total control or suicide. On January 26, 2014, the former Deutsche Bank manager William Broeksmit hanged himself in his apartment in London. On the same day, Tata Motors CEO Karl Slym jumped from the twenty-second floor of a luxury hotel in Bangkok. In August 2013, the financial director of Zurich Insurance, Pierre Wauthier, hanged himself in his home in Switzerland. One month earlier, Carsten Schlöter, head of the Swisscom telecommunications company, was found dead at home. The former Siemens financial director and former showcase manager Heinz-Joachim Neubürger took his own life on February 5, 2015. His daughters spoke at his funeral to the managers who had gathered and asked them to change their culture. See “Siemens: Tod eines Managers,” by Kerstin Bund, Die Zeit, June 18, 2015, www.zeit.de/2015/23/siemens-heinz-joachim-neubuerger-selbstmord/komplettansicht.

<sup>76</sup> “Immer mehr Menschen kaufen eine Waffe,” by Martin Schneider, Süddeutsche Zeitung, December 6, 2015, www.sueddeutsche.de/bayern/boom-immer-mehr-menschen-kaufen-eine-waffe-1.2769959.

<sup>77</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 140:

Psychologist and journalist Susan Pinker, 2008, points out that women – unlike men – tend to prefer people-oriented careers, or, more precisely, careers oriented toward living organism (not things). Pinker created uproar and was attacked for betraying the feminist cause. Indeed, if the feminist struggle’s success is framed within the paradigm of traditional male life designs, her reflections do undermine the feminist struggle. However, Pinker’s story may also reflect success: women are in the process of not only rising to visibility in a male public sphere, but of redesigning the world to make it more sustainable for all.

<sup>78</sup> Stevenson and Wolfers, 2009.

<sup>79</sup> See, among others, Bentall, 2009, Cushman, 1995, and Pope and Vasquez, 2007. I thank Linda Hartling for these links.

<sup>80</sup> Fujiwara and Kawachi, 2008. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this seminal study.

<sup>81</sup> “The Rise of Chronic Noncommunicable Diseases: an Impending Disaster,” Margaret Chan, director-general of the World Health Organization, April 27, 2011, www.who.int/dg/speeches/2011/global\_forum\_ncd\_20110427/en/.

<sup>82</sup> See, for instance, Angell, 2004. See also videos.med.wisc.edu/videos/940. For a historical perspective on how medicine evolved in the United States and from there informed many other parts of the world, see, among others, Duffy, 2011. I thank Inge Lindseth for making me aware of this article.

<sup>83</sup> Gibson, 2007.

<sup>84</sup> “Child Food Adverts ‘Misleading,’” BBC News, December 14, 2008, news.bbc.co.uk/go/pr/fr/-/2/hi/health/7779438.stm.

<sup>85</sup> “This Is How Much Celebrities Get Paid To Endorse Soda And Unhealthy Food,” by Allison Aubrey, National Public Radio (NPR), June 7, 2016, www.npr.org/sections/thesalt/2016/06/07/481123646/this-is-how-much-celebrities-get-paid-to-endorse-soda-and-unhealthy-food. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>86</sup> See, among others, “Psychiatrists Revise the Book of Human Troubles,” by Benedict Carey, New York Times, December 18, 2008, www.nytimes.com/2008/12/18/health/18psych.html. See also Cosgrove, et al., 2006, or Paris, 2008. I thank Eugenia Tsao for the last two references.

<sup>87</sup> Eugenia Tsao in a personal communication on July 3, 2009.

<sup>88</sup> Wasem, et al., 2009.

<sup>89</sup> See Dr. Aryeh Shander on RBC Transfusions I, where Aryeh Shander, MD, FCCM, FCCP, and clinical professor of anesthesiology, medicine and surgery at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine, speaks at the Patient Safety Science and Technology Summit on January 14, 2013, <https://youtu.be/7SpOWDUXq7M>.

<sup>90</sup> Böses Blut – Kehrtwende in der Intensivmedizin, documentary film by Ulrike Gehring, Südwestrundfunk, 2014, www.daserste.de/information/reportage-dokumentation/dokus/videos/boeses-blut-kehrtwende-in-der-intensivmedizin-100.html. Südwestrundfunk, SWR, “Southwest Broadcasting,” is a regional public broadcasting corporation serving the southwest of Germany, specifically the federal states of Baden-Württemberg and Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>91</sup> Hannah, 2015.

<sup>92</sup> People are living longer throughout the world, partly due to lower rates of cardiovascular disease deaths in high-income countries and child deaths in low-income countries, while disparities remain among regions. See Amare, 2014.

<sup>93</sup> “Inequality and Democracy,” by Roberto Savio, Other News, May 17, 2014, www.other- news.info/2014/05/inequality-and-democracy/. See note 353 above, and also note 177 in Chapter 11.

<sup>94</sup> “The Cost of Inequality: How Wealth and Income Extremes Hurt Us All,” Oxfam, January 18, 2013, www.oxfam.org/sites/www.oxfam.org/files/cost-of-inequality-oxfam-mb180113.pdf.

<sup>95</sup> “Annual Income of Richest 100 People Enough to End Global Poverty Four Times Over,” Oxfam, January 19, 2013, www.oxfam.org/en/pressroom/pressrelease/2013-01-19/annual-income-richest-100-people-enough-end-global-poverty-four-times.

<sup>96</sup> See www.oxfam.org/en/pressroom/pressrelease/2013-01-19/annual-income-richest-100-people-enough-end-global-poverty-four-times.

<sup>97</sup> See, among many others, Colander, et al., 2009, or Lewis, 2010.

<sup>98</sup> Stiglitz, 2012. See also Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009, Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality. See, furthermore, Herrmann, 2013, in Wie solidarisch ist Deutschland? – Warum Arme arm bleiben und die Reichen reicher werden, documentary film by Eva Schötteldreier, Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, 2016, www.daserste.de/information/reportage-dokumentation/dokus/wie-solidarisch-ist-deutschland-100.html. Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, WDR, West German Broadcasting Cologne, is a German public-broadcasting institution based in the Federal State of North Rhine-Westphalia with its main office in Cologne.

<sup>99</sup> See Lindner, 2012d. The list of relevant references would be extremely long. Here are only a few references in the place of many, ranging from Crouch, 2013, to Rifkin, 2014, or Mason, 2015. See also “Yet Another Nobel Prize in Economics: An Affront to Humanity and Truth,” by economist Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), October 12, 2015, <http://gcgi.info/index.php/kamran-s-blog/735-yet-another-nobel-prize-in-economics-an-affront-to-humanity-and-truth>. See also Der Banker: Master of the Universe, a documentary film by Marc Bauder, 2013, <https://youtu.be/NaRb5wRYnW4>.

<sup>100</sup> “Democracy v. Concentrated Wealth: In Search of a Louis D. Brandeis Quote,” by Peter Scott Campbell, The Green Bag 2D, Spring 2013, pp. 251–256, http://greenbag.org/v16n3/v16n3\_articles\_campbell.pdf.

<sup>101</sup> “Working for the Few: Political Capture and Economic Inequality,” Oxfam Briefing Paper, January 20, 2014, www.oxfam.org/sites/www.oxfam.org/files/bp-working-for-few-political-capture-economic-inequality-200114-en.pdf.

<sup>102</sup> Ibid.

<sup>103</sup> See, among others, Akerlof and Shiller, 2009, Evanoff, et al., 2012, Glimcher and Fehr, 2014, Rolls, 2014, Reyna and Wilhelms, 2015. Wu, et al., 2012, write:

More recently, although traditional economic theorists have endorsed the rationally grounded “Efficient Markets Hypothesis” (Samuelson, 1965; Fama, 1970), unpredicted and rapid rises and crashes of the market valuation of technology and housing sectors have raised new questions about investor rationality. Critics of the Efficient Markets Hypothesis have contended that investors consistently exhibit irrational tendencies including overconfidence (Barber and Odean, 2001; Gervais and Odean, 2001), loss aversion (Kahneman and Tversky, 1979; Shefrin and Statman, 1985; Odean, 1998), herding (Huberman and Regev, 2001), psychological accounting (Tversky and Kahneman, 1981), miscalculation of probabilities (Lichtenstein et al., 1981), and regret (Bell, 1982; Clarke et al., 1994). These “irrational” biases have been attributed to psychological factors with emotional overtones – including fear, greed, and other affective reactions to price fluctuations and shocks to wealth. In an attempt to explain individual and market anomalies, an expanding field of research has begun to examine links between emotion and “irrational” decision-making (Loewenstein, 2000).

<sup>104</sup> Knutson, et al., 2008:

Viewing erotic pictures for 15 heterosexual men increased their financial risk taking, partially mediated by increases in nucleus accumbens (NAcc) activation.

See also Wu, et al., 2012.

<sup>105</sup> Inside Job transcript, September 2010, www.sonyclassics.com/awards-information/insidejob\_screenplay.pdf.

<sup>106</sup> A Cambridge University study found a direct link between the amount of money traders make and testosterone levels. See Coates and Herbert, 2008.

<sup>107</sup> Mussel, et al., 2015, Abstract:

We investigated whether greed would predict risky decision-making and recorded neural responses during a monetary gambling task using the electroencephalogram. We found that individuals high in trait-greed took higher risks to maximize monetary outcome. Furthermore, this relation was moderated by state-greed; specifically, trait-greed had a stronger impact on risky decision-making when activated by situational characteristics. On the neural level, greedy individuals showed a specific response to favorable and unfavorable outcomes. Specifically, they had a reduced feedback-related negativity-difference score to these events, indicating that they might have difficulty in learning from experience, especially from mistakes and negative feedback. It is concluded that greed may explain risky and reckless behavior in diverse settings, such as investment banking, and may account for phenomena such as stock market.

<sup>108</sup> David Schwartzman, 2016, explained that not just peace with each other, but also peace with the planet depends on dismantling the military-industrial complex (the “MIC”); see his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 25, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016:

The MIC is responsible for a colossal waste of energy and material resources that should be going to meet the needs of humans and ecosystems around the world. Nearly $2 trillion is spent annually on global military expenditures, with the US spending about half the total amount. Furthermore, the nuclear industry is integrated into the MIC, and the threat of nuclear attack is a long-standing instrument of imperial policy. The possibility of a nuclear war continues, with nuclear weapons now being possessed by nine nations. Fulfilling Eisenhower’s 1961 warning, the MIC plays the dominant role in setting the domestic/foreign policy agenda of the big powers, in particular the US. But most relevant to the threat of catastrophic climate change is the role of the Pentagon as the “global oil-protection service” of the MIC. The U.S.’s imperial agenda actively blocks the global cooperation and equity required for a successful prevention program on climate change. This is the critical obstacle posed by the MIC, not the sizable, but widely exaggerated greenhouse gas emissions of the Pentagon itself. We should recognize that critical contradictions within capital regarding energy policy exist, and a Global Green New Deal (GGND) strategy must capture the “solar” faction of capital into a multi-class alliance to force demilitarization and termination of the perpetual war dynamic.

See the Military-Industrial Complex Speech by Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, on January 17, 1961, Public Papers of the Presidents, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960, pp. 1035–1040, <http://coursesa.matrix.msu.edu/~hst306/documents/indust.html>, see also <https://youtu.be/8y06NSBBRtY>. In this farewell speech Eisenhower warns of the military industrial complex. See more in note 46 in Chapter 11, in note 127 in this Chapter 14, and in note 199 in Chapter 18.

<sup>109</sup> See a first-hand account in “Juno Dawson: Can We Stop Twitter Trolls Making Money out of Hate?” by Juno Dawson, Glamour, August 3, 2016, www.glamourmagazine.co.uk/features/living-travel/2016/08/juno-dawson-on-online-trolls.

<sup>110</sup> “Gefährden Meinungsroboter die Demokratie?” by Adrian Lobe, Spektrum der Wissenschaft, October 14, 2016, www.spektrum.de/news/gefaehrden-meinungsroboter-die-demokratie/1426157. An Internet bot is a software application that runs automated tasks (scripts) over the Internet.

<sup>111</sup> Miller, 2006b.

<sup>112</sup> Eisler, 2007.

<sup>113</sup> Smith, 1776.

<sup>114</sup> Sustainable development expert Gwendolyn Hallsmith, in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Monetizing Nature,” July 31, 2014.

<sup>115</sup> Loewenstein, 2015.

<sup>116</sup> “It Is Profitable to Let the World Go to Hell,” by Jo Confino, The Guardian, January 19, 2015, www.theguardian.com/sustainable-business/2015/jan/19/davos-climate-action-democracy-failure-jorgen-randers, an article in the Davos 2015 series that covers news and views from the World Economic Forum meeting in January 2015 at Davos-Klosters, Switzerland.

<sup>117</sup> von Braun, 2012. See also Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>118</sup> See also 85 Jahre Weltwirtschaftskrise 1929, documentary film by Peter Beringer, 3sat, 2014, www.3sat.de/page/?source=/dokumentationen/178822/index.html. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe.

<sup>119</sup> The Confederated Tribes of Grand Ronde in Oregon, USA, www.grandronde.org/ikanum/index.html, see under “Traditional Lifeways,” and “Traditional Land Management.”

<sup>120</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>121</sup> Anthropologist Alan Page Fiske describes basic relational models. Fiske found that people, most of the time and in all cultures, use just four elementary and universal forms or models for organizing most aspects of sociality. These models are: (1) communal sharing, CS, (2) authority ranking, AR, (3) equality matching, EM, and (4) market pricing, MP. See Fiske, 1991, Fiske and Fiske, 2007, and an introduction on www.sscnet.ucla.edu/anthro/faculty/fiske/reimodov.htm.

<sup>122</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>123</sup> See Buber, 1923/1937.

<sup>124</sup> See a few examples for relevant literature, for instance, Lasch, 1991, Putnam, 2000, Baumeister, et al., 1996, Bushman and Baumeister, 1998, Baumeister, et al., 2003, Baumeister, 2005, Levine, 2007, Twenge and Campbell, 2009, Wood, et al., 2009, Ehrenreich, 2010, Twenge, et al., 2012, Twenge and Kasser, 2013, Twenge, 2014. See also how Howard Richards includes Foucault, 1961/2006, and Frank, 1961, in his chapter in Richards, 2013. See “Column: This Is What Happens When You Take Ayn Rand Seriously,” by Denise Cummins, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), February 16, 2016, www.pbs.org/newshour/making-sense/column-this-is-what-happens-when-you-take-ayn-rand-seriously/. Cummins presents two case studies that show the disastrous consequences of following Ayn Rand’s philosophy, namely, the company Sears, and the country Honduras. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. See also note 32 in Chapter 4. Also Psychoanalyst Heinz Kohut has worked on narcissistic injury, see Kohut, 1973, p. 380:

One sees the need for revenge, for righting a wrong, for undoing the hurt by whatever means, and a deeply anchored, unrelenting compulsion in the pursuit of all these aims which gives no rest to those who have suffered a narcissistic injury – these are features which are characteristic for the phenomenon of narcissistic rage in all its forms and which sets it apart from other kinds of aggression.

I thank David Lotto, 2016, for reminding me of this quote.

<sup>125</sup> Richards, 2010.

<sup>126</sup> See, among others, Dewey, 1905.

<sup>127</sup> Critical realism is being associated with names such as Roy Bhaskar, Rom Harré, Margaret Archer, Heikki Patomäki, and others. See for an overview over critical realism, Archer, et al., 1998. See also the book description of Porpora, 2015:

Critical realism is a philosophy of science that positions itself against the major alternative philosophies underlying contemporary sociology... Douglas V. Porpora argues that sociology currently operates with deficient accounts of truth, culture, structure, agency, and causality that are all better served by a critical realist perspective. This approach argues against the alternative sociological perspectives, in particular the dominant positivism which privileges statistical techniques and experimental design over ethnographic and historical approaches. However, the book also compares critical realism favorably with a range of other approaches, including poststructuralism, pragmatism, interpretivism, practice theory, and relational sociology.

<sup>128</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>129</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>130</sup> Giddens, 1990. I was very impressed when listening to Giddens talking at the 1984 World Congress of the International Sociological Organization that took place in Bielefeld, Germany, and attracted 3,678 participants. I am still thankful to Inge Wonneberger-Reichert for sending me to this congress. Radicalized modernity grew out of industrial modernity with its focus on order, calculability, science, and instrumental rationality, as well as social control by institutions. Radicalized modernity lays bare its negative after-effects: consumerism and individualism breaking down the family and other socializing institutions, time-space distancing leading to social contact becoming impersonal, and mutual trust diminishing. See also Zygmunt Bauman, 2000, and his notion of a liquid modern world.

<sup>131</sup> Richards, 2013.

<sup>132</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005, or Hudson, 2003. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>133</sup> Wood, 2003.

<sup>134</sup> Mies, 1986.

<sup>135</sup> Howard Richards refers to Vivienne Jabri, 2007, director of the Centre for International Relations and Senior Lecturer in International Relations in the Department of War Studies, King’s College London.

<sup>136</sup> Richards, 2013.

<sup>137</sup> Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001.

<sup>138</sup> Morais, 1979.

<sup>139</sup> Granovetter, 1973.

<sup>140</sup> Tönnies, 1887/1955.

<sup>141</sup> Schirmacher, 2006. I thank Axel Rojczyk for making me aware of this book. Linda Hartling commented on August 14, 2016: “People in America primarily remember the Donner Party incident as cannibalism, rather than as example of survival through family cohesion.”

<sup>142</sup> McCauley, et al., 2013.

<sup>143</sup> Richards, 2013.

<sup>144</sup> Howard Richards and Catherine Odora Hoppers have been referred to previously in this book, and their insistence that more regulatory rules are not enough, what is needed are new constitutive rules. It was an important moment for me to hear political economist Gar Alperovitz in the Thirty-First Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 5, 2011, in New York City (www.neweconomicsinstitute.org), when he explained how he had lost faith, after decades of working for reform, after decades of hoping that the format of cooperatives, for instance, would provide the hoped-for break-through. He now calls for much more comprehensive and far-reaching new orientations. These are, clearly, only three of a myriad similar voices. See also my 2012 book on A Dignity Economy. Ted Trainer, of the limits to growth movement in Australia, sees capitalism as “the problem and no reforms within it or version of it can enable a sustainable and just world,” in “A Critique of No Local, the Book Arguing that Localism Can’t Save the Planet,” by Ted Trainer, September 1, 2016, shared in a personal communication, where he critiques Greg Scherer, 2011. Trainer explains in this text how neither a myopic localist approach is feasible, nor is the leftist globalist idea that “the class in control of the industrial affluence and growth system” should be replaced so that a new central power could “redirect the system to more just outcomes.” The latter is not feasible, Trainer argues, because we have entered the era of limits.

<sup>145</sup> Richards and Swanger, 2006a.

<sup>146</sup> Capitalism, a documentary series in six episodes, by documentary filmmaker Ilan Ziv, www.tamouzmedia.com/in-production.htm. A global selection of experts is given the floor, such as Nicholas Phillipson, 2010, and Robert and Edward Skidelsky and Skidelsky, 2012, from Britain, together with Ha-Joon Chang, 2010, who has a background from Korea, then Robert Boyer, 2004, and Philippe Norel, 2009, from France, Anton Wilhelm Amo, 1968, from Ghana, and Lewis Gordon, 2008, working on Africana Studies. Yuval Noah Harari, 2014, is from Israel, Kari Levitt, 2002, from Canada. Voices from the United States are Elizabeth and Stuart Ewen and Ewen, 2009, Michael Hudson, 2012, David Graeber, 2011, David Harvey, 2014, Noam Chomsky and Vltchek, 2013, as well as Eric Mielants, 2007, together with Ho-fung Hung, 2009, working on China.

In the documentary, French economist Robert Boyer explains that for intellectuals, Adam Smith and David Ricardo founded capitalism, yet, capitalism emerged much earlier. For Boyer, it came with the merchants of Venice and Bruges. Capitalism is not the manifestation of a scientific concept, but a historical process, with Smith simply providing a post-hoc ideology.

According to anthropologist David Graeber and historian Yuval Harari, it was the discovery of the Americas that was the key moment for capitalism. Hernán Cortés, the Spanish Conquistador, who caused the fall of the Aztec Empire, was a gambler and hazardeur, who had to pay huge returns to those who had invested money in his endeavors, so much so, that he could not even share his booty with his soldiers, but had to turn them into debtors as well for their medical care and their weapons: he sent them out to become plundering governors for themselves. David Graeber explains that this is the basis of the money system still today: investors expect returns and send out conquerors to plunder. Also scientific discoveries joined this dynamic, as Yuval Harari adds; it always proceeds from investors providing funds and expecting profit.

Gold and silver were extracted from the Americas in such quantities that this changed the economies in the rest of the world. China benefited insofar as the silver from South America led to an expansion of its trade. Farmers and craftsmen sold their goods, and, interestingly, they did so directly, without middle men. This impressed people in Europe, including Adam Smith. Yet, while the precious metal boom of the Americas inspired China's small producers, in England, they were ruined. The gold boom in Spain increased the demand for wool from England, so that sheep-breeding there became more profitable. The lords closed off land for that purpose and evicted the small farmers.

Sociologist Eric Mielants describes how poverty now was being criminalized and how the brutality of this flood of what he calls "terroristic" laws produced very particular kinds of markets. The Scottish investors and merchants lived on a "triangle" business model, namely, they sent goods on their ships to Africa, there they filled the ships with slaves for the Caribbean, and from where the ships returned home with raw material. Liverpool became the leading port for the slave trade.

As Yuval Harari explains, racism is the product and not the prerequisite of slavery, slavery was entirely profit-driven. Economist Kari Polanyi Levitt, daughter of Karl Polanyi, adds: first they plundered and traded, then, with the plantages, they settled; the plantages were entirely capitalistic, insofar as profit was the main issue, yet, with the exception that work was not salaried but forced. Smith biograph Nicholas Phillipson explains: "The blind spot in The Wealth of Nations is slavery!" Smith's followers think of capitalism as something civilized, yet, it has its roots in the colonization of South America and the Caribbean.

Philosophers David Hume and Adam Smith were very closely connected, and the film describes how both thought to explain the world scientifically, outside of religion. The natural sciences, with reason and structure as pillars, took the place of religion as foundation for truth, with an equally absolutist logic, a new divine order that needed to be preserved. Carl von Linné, the Swedish botanist, had developed a system of nature using monarchy as model, where he described a kingdom of plants, and a kingdom of animals, for example, and thus depicted hierarchy into a phenomenon given by nature.

Economist Michael Hudson puts forward the thesis in the film that, in fact, two medical doctors – William Petty in England and François Quesnay in France – founded classical economics. They modelled it on the circulation of blood in the body, namely, as the circulation of goods between producers and consumers. Adam Smith spent time in Paris and was influenced by François Quesnay, while Quesnay, in turn, was an admirer of Chinese Confucianism.

Anthropologist David Graeber explains how Smith thought that the use of money arose because exchanging cows and chicken, as it were, became too difficult, and that money was invented to facilitate such exchanges of goods. Yet, there is a problem, Graeber warns: this never happened in history! What happened in indigenous communities was not exchange but reciprocity: "I share with you my harvest today, and whenever you are able to, you will share with me." The film demonstrates to what extent "capitalism" is a social construction rather than a scientific necessity, as can be seen by the present-day rejection of slavery, for instance, or the rejection of child labor. It was once regarded as a "good" rather than an "evil," when children had work that earned their keep. See Defoe, 1715.

The film includes important voices from Asia, for instance, Ha-Joon Chang, 2010, who criticizes the glorification of self-interest, as promoted, for instance, by Paul Ryan, Republican Party nominee for Vice President of the United States in the 2012 election. Ryan professes having learned from Ayn Rand, and defends democratic capitalism, individualism, and freedom, as the moral foundations of America. (See note 32 in Chapter 4 for my attempts to understand Ayn Rand.) The key terms associated with Adam Smith are division of labor, self-interest, and the invisible hand, even though the latter phrase appears only once in his book on the wealth of nations and this moreover in a different context, namely, that the "home bias" of its investors will, like an invisible hand, save England from free capital flow. The film documents the moments of truth for Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of the United States from 1987 to 2006, when he admitted, when the economic crisis of 2007/2008 broke, that he was shocked that he had falsely believed that the invisible hand was an inherently trustworthy steering force of the market. Greenspan had the stature to admit that this dogma was flawed, and that a whole intellectual edifice had collapsed. Scholar David Harvey, 2014, formulated it as follows: "The internal contradictions within the flow of capital that have precipitated recent crises contain the seeds of systemic catastrophe."

The third episode of the documentary features two friends, economist David Ricardo (1772 – 1823) and cleric, demographer, and economist Thomas Robert Malthus (1766 – 1834). Their ideals are the base of present day's capitalism. The episode begins with showing the city of Flint in Michigan, U.S.A., once proud of hosting General Motor's production, now largely abandoned. Yet, the film argues, it was not Ricardo's fault or the fault of free trade that General Motor has given up their production plant in Flint, but the search for cheaper labor. Malthus lived during the times of the French Revolution and when the expectation was fueled that the future would be one of misery and revolution. He expected that by 1890 world population could no longer be fed (Malthus, 1798). In that gloomy situation, Ricardo offered a remedy, namely, the promotion of the market and private entrepreneurship. "Wer tauscht, gewinnt!" proclaims Pascal Lamy, director-general of the World Trade Organization (WTO) from 2005–2013, “Whoever engages in exchange, wins!” Lamy explains Ricardo’s core idea: “if I do something better than you, and you something else better than me,” we should make free exchange possible. It is the idea of the comparative advantage (Ricardo, 1817).

Economist Robert Boyer remarks that some cynics turned the idea of exchange into a misguided dogma. Economist Matías Vernengo explains that Ricardo was opposed to free flow of capital (Epstein, et al., 2014). Ricardo used the following example: if Portugal can produce wine, and England fabric, they should specialize in these activities, and those producing fabric in Portugal should rather find a job in the wine production, and all those producing wine in England should turn to producing fabric. Ricardo assumed that everybody would find a job. He disapproved of those with capital moving their activities and technology to Portugal due to salaries being lower there. In other words, Ricardo cannot be held responsible for General Motor having given up their production plant in Flint in Michigan in search for cheaper labor. It is rather the rhetoric of freedom and the free market, a rhetoric that claims that this situation represents scientific knowledge.

Economist Ho-Fung Hung, 2009, based in the U.S.A., working on China, makes the point that capitalism was created by imperialism, with gunboats. At the beginning of the free market stood the Opium Wars (1839 – 1842, and 1856 – 1860). In Hung’s view, the globalization of the past twenty to thirty years resembles this pattern.

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) was founded to promote Ricardo’s free market idea and achieve peace through trade being preferable to war (Simon Johnson, former IMF Chief Economist). Yet, plunder was what happened, as anthropologist David Graeber explains: loans were given with conditions that exposed the recipient country to being plundered by transnational corporations. Ghana is being shown as one of the victims of the so-called structural adjustment programs (SAPs), which opened countries to foreign investors.

Also former President of the United States, Bill Clinton is given the floor in the film. Clinton says that since 1981, the U.S.A. has produced cheap food for developing countries to enable them to leap toward the industrial era. Yet, he admits, it has not worked. On the contrary, countries such as South Korea, Japan, and China have increased productivity, not because of the presence of foreign investment, but because of its absence.

Economist Michael Hudson explains that always, throughout the past 1,000 years, one group of economists represented the financial sector, while another represented the interests of national industry and agriculture. Ricardo could be described as a bank lobbyist, who lived after the Napoleonic wars, when he and his colleagues were worried about large amounts due to be paid for obligations, and he was trying to argue that his banking interests coincided with the common good. He initiated the mathematization of economics, which, on the surface, attempts to show that all elements are in balance, a model, however, that does not conform with reality. Robert Boyer summarized it as follows: Ricardo tried to prove theses that are false with the aim to justify a model.

Ricardo found support in Malthus in his effort to no longer hinder workers to move. Malthus agitated against poor people getting help from their local parishes, because, this was the reasoning, this would enable them to have children they could not feed and it would remove their motivation to work. In sum, for Ricardo public welfare hurt the laws of the market. As a result, workhouses were built. Malthus felt, furthermore, that the Poor Law ought to be abolished, since it limited the mobility of labor. He conceded that if there had been no Poor Laws, there would be “a few more instances of severe distress,” yet, he still felt that “the aggregate mass of happiness among the common people would have been much greater than it is at present,” Malthus, 1798, Chapter 5. However, he was one of the first to advocate so called “indoor relief” in workhouses for the poor as opposed to handouts.

Workers were now freer to move and make contracts to sell themselves, no longer receiving welfare support: this is the modern market. Sociologist Dennis Hodgson explains that when land that was a commons is turned into private property, even if in the beginning everybody gets a piece, soon there will be larger plots and smaller plots, and some will have no land anymore and this then will provide the workforce for factories. This is also what happened in China. China is a good present-day example. Robert Boyer concludes: while Adam Smith made a connection with the law and with authorities, Ricardo separated economics from the other social sciences; this could be considered an act of violence.

In the fourth episode of the documentary, historian and British Labour Party politician Tristram Hunt, author of a book on Friedrich Engels, describes how after the recent unfolding of economic crises, Marx is now being re-discovered and acknowledged as having been the first to chart the destructive nature of capitalism, or as The Communist Manifesto puts it: “It has pitilessly torn asunder the motley feudal ties that bound man to his ‘natural superiors,’ and has left remaining no other nexus between man and man than naked self-interests, than callous ‘cash-payment,’” see Hunt, 2010, Preface. Professor of anthropology and geography, David Harvey, explains that for Marx, the beginning of the industrial capitalism brought significant changes; the term of living labor (lebendige Arbeit) is important, and the market veils who has produced a product.

Marx also described how capitalism pushes toward transforming nature into a commodity. The commodity fetishism (Warenfetischismus), according to Marx, obscures the impact on society. Vandana Shiva is given the floor in the documentary to describe the painful consequences: 260,000 farmers have committed suicide in India; they were caught in a debt trap due to seeds having been turned into a commodity. Biotechnology patent lawyer Kevin Noonan concludes: life has become a product. And this happens increasingly so. Prior to this trend taking over, vaccines such as the polio vaccine were still not being patented, and Dr. Salk explained why: “can you patent the sun? The patent belongs to humankind!”

David Harvey concludes that the biggest fetish, of course, is money, and the credit system, the insatiability for return on notional capital. Environmental economist Aseem Shrivastava speaks about the so-called emerging markets, a term coined at the end of 1980s by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund for economies that were expected to grow fast. Harvey asks: why were these countries so interesting? The explanation: when the real economy grows, then the return (Rendite) for investors grows even more. Alan Greenspan mentions creative destruction, a term coined by Joseph Schumpeter. Its motor is the entrepreneur, who lets new things appear and old ones disappear. Schumpeter agrees with Marx that in capitalism there is no balance, there is continuous imbalance, yet Schumpeter adds to Marx's thinking on accumulation insofar as he points out that it is capitalism itself that destroys the value of older investments. Why has capitalism not yet collapsed? Tristram Hunt explains: capitalism has not yet collapsed because governments have been forced to bail out the so-called free market. In other words, the forces of collectivism have saved capitalism. Yanis Varoufakis, political economist with a Greek-Australian background, summarizes: in 1991 socialism died, at least the communism of the East Bloc, while in 2008 capitalism died. When he was young, there was a debate between representatives of planned economy and defenders of classical liberalism following Friedrich Hayek and the "miracle" of the market economy. The latter was seen as an evolutionary Darwinian struggle, where the fittest would win. The bailouts after 2008 represent inverted Darwinism, where the unfittest wins: Bankrottokratie, the victory of bankrupt banks.

<sup>147</sup> Mielants, 2007.

<sup>148</sup> The Poor Law Amendment Act was an important piece of social legislation in 1834. Its principles and the workhouse system dominated attitudes to welfare provision for the next eighty years. The Royal Commission on the Poor Laws and Relief of Distress 1905 – 1909, was a body set up by the British Parliament in order to investigate how the Poor Law system should be changed, and it produced two conflicting reports, the Majority Report that confirmed the established Zeitgeist, and the Minority Report that opposed it in saying that society should not expect the poor to be responsible for their affliction alone. David Englander, 2013, explores the changing ideas on poverty over this period and assesses current debates on Victorian attitudes to the poor.

<sup>149</sup> Graeber, 2011, p. 334. See also Graeber, 2001.

<sup>150</sup> Smith, 1759. I thank Howard Richards for his concise summary.

<sup>151</sup> See the concise and accessible presentation in Capitalism, a documentary series in six episodes, by documentary filmmaker Ilan Ziv, www.tamouzmedia.com/in-production.htm.

<sup>152</sup> Acres of Diamonds, by Russell Herman Conwell, first given in 1913, see www.americanrhetoric.com/speeches/rconwellacresofdiamonds.htm.

See also "Trump's Success Shows Many Americans Believe only in America," by Giles Fraser, The Guardian, March 3, 2016, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/belief/2016/mar/03/donald-trump-success-shows-many-americans-believe-only-in-america:

When the Pilgrim Fathers got in their little boats and sailed to the new world, they took with them a narrative that had begun to build in England, that the protestant English were actually the chosen people. America, then, was to be the new Israel. The pilgrims had landed safe on Cannan's side, the promised land. The original 13 colonies in North America "were nothing other than a regeneration of the twelve tribes of Israel" as one American newspaper put it in 1864.

In other words, America became its own church and eventually its own god. Which is why the only real atheism in America is to call into question the American dream – a dream often indistinguishable from capitalism and the celebration of winners. This is the god Trump worships. He is its great high priest. And this is why evangelicals vote for him. But the God of Jesus Christ it is not. The death of God comes in many diverse and peculiar forms. In America, it is the flag and not the cross that takes pride of place in the sanctuary.

<sup>153</sup> International Labour Office (ILO), 2014. Kevin B. Bales is a co-founder and previously president of Free the Slaves. See, among others, Bales, 2012. See also documentaries on specific areas:

- The Dark Side of Chocolate, documentary film by Miki Mistrati and U. Roberto Romano, Bastard Film and TV, 2010, <https://youtu.be/7Vfbv6hNeng>. The film shows the exploitation and slave trading of African children to harvest chocolate, still occurring nearly ten years after the cocoa industry pledged to end it.
- Blood in the Mobile, documentary film by Frank Piasecki Poulsen, 2010, <https://youtu.be/wQhLUbW0tE>. The film addresses the issue of conflict minerals such as Coltan by examining illegal cassiterite mining in the North-Kivu province in eastern DR Congo, in particular, in Bisie.

<sup>154</sup> I thank Linda Hartling for sharing documentary material about Ayn Rand with me. See, among others, Love and Power, the first in a BBC2 documentary series by Adam Curtis, May 23, 2011, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b011k45f. It explores the idea that humans have been colonized by the machines they have built. See also a review of the series "All Watched Over by Machines of Loving Grace," by Sam Wollaston, The Guardian, May 23, 2011, www.guardian.co.uk/tv-and-radio/2011/may/23/review-machines-of-loving-grace. See also note 32 in Chapter 4.

<sup>155</sup> “Financial Crisis ‘Like a Tsunami,’” BBC News, October 10, 2008, news.bbc.co.uk/go/pr/fr/-/2/hi/business/7687101.stm.

<sup>156</sup> Harvey, 2014.

<sup>157</sup> Indeed, the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa explains in 2014 that illicit financial flows are a major drain on Africa’s resources for development. See “Tracking Africa’s Stolen Billions,” The United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA), October 14, 2014, www.uneca.org/stories/tracking-africa%E2%80%99s-stolen-billions:

International coordination is needed to slow the flow of stolen assets... The use of anonymous trust companies shields individuals responsible for illicit capital flows from attention or prosecution. Added to this, weak corporate governance codes have created space for transnational corporations to operate with a degree of impunity, Charles Abugre Akelyira, a Ghanaian economist and the African regional director of the United Nations’ Millennium Campaign, says: “This laxity of corporate governance was largely created in the 1980s, 1990s structural adjustment programmes. They date back to this period where, under the weight of indebtedness, the international financial institutions basically pushed these governments to dismantle strong corporate governance regimes in the name of encouraging private sector investments and expanding the market,” he says. “In that sense, governments or the elites that run the state also found a way to arrange these corporate governance structures around their petty personal advantages.”

This is the final report: Illicit Financial Flows: Report of the High Level Panel on Illicit Financial Flows from Africa, commissioned by the AU/ECA Conference of Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development, Addis Abeba: United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA), February 26, 2015, www.uneca.org/sites/default/files/PublicationFiles/iff\_main\_report\_26feb\_en.pdf.

<sup>158</sup> Leach, 1993.

<sup>159</sup> The Century of the Self, British television documentary series by filmmaker Adam Curtis, 2002, www.imdb.com/title/tt0432232/.

<sup>160</sup> “The New Age of Ayn Rand: How She Won over Trump and Silicon Valley,” by Jonathan Freedland, The Guardian, April 10, 2017, www.theguardian.com/books/2017/apr/10/new-age-ayn-rand-conquered-trump-white-house-silicon-valley?CMP=Share\_iOSApp\_Other. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>161</sup> Ibid. See also the Ayn Rand biography by Jennifer Burns, 2009.

<sup>162</sup> See also de Graaf, et al., 2001.

<sup>163</sup> Robert F. Kennedy Speeches, Remarks at the University of Kansas, March 18, 1968, www.jfklibrary.org/Research/Research-Aids/Ready-Reference/RFK-Speeches/Remarks-of-Robert-F-Kennedy-at-the-University-of-Kansas-March-18-1968.aspx. I thank Sandra Waddock for making me aware of this quote, in her reply to Great Transition Network Discussion “The Degrowth Alternative,” January 7, 2015.

<sup>164</sup> “Eurokrise: Die Troika: Macht ohne Kontrolle,” by Harald Schumann, Der Tagesspiegel, February 24, 2015, www.tagesspiegel.de/politik/eurokrise-die-troika-macht-ohne-kontrolle/11406286.html.

<sup>165</sup> “End ‘Gross Indignity,’ Greek FM Varoufakis Tells Germany,” BBC News, 5 February 2015, www.bbc.com/news/world-europe-31147112. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>166</sup> “We Need an Alternative to Trump’s Nationalism. It Isn’t the Status Quo,” by Yanis Varoufakis, The Guardian, January 22, 2017, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2017/jan/22/trumps-nationalism-response-not-globalization. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this article.

<sup>167</sup> “End ‘Gross Indignity,’ Greek FM Varoufakis Tells Germany,” BBC News, 5 February 2015, www.bbc.com/news/world-europe-31147112. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>168</sup> Takis Ioannides, in a personal communication on April 13, 2014. Takis Ioannides is an esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>169</sup> Takis Ioannides, in a personal communication on October 20, 2014.

<sup>170</sup> Atuahene, 2016, p. 796:

Involuntary property loss is ubiquitous. During conquest and colonialism, European powers robbed native peoples of their lands; wars and civil conflicts have undermined and rearranged ownership rights; communist regimes have upended existing ownership rights in attempts to usher in a more egalitarian property distribution; and most constitutional democracies sanction the forced taking of property as long as the state pays just compensation and it is for a public purpose. In some of these examples, state or nonstate actors have taken property from an individual or a group and material compensation is an appropriate remedy. In other instances, however, the property confiscation resulted in the dehumanization or infantilization of the dispossessed, and so providing material compensation is not enough because they lost more than their property – they were also deprived of their dignity. In We Want What's Ours: Learning from South Africa's Land Restitution Program (Atuahene, 2014), I labeled this dual harm a “dignity taking” and argued that the appropriate remedy is something more than mere compensation for things taken (reparations). What is instead required, I argue, is “dignity restoration,” which addresses deprivations of both property and dignity by providing material compensation to dispossessed populations through processes that affirm their humanity and establish their agency.

Bernadette Atuahene is a Professor of Law at Chicago-Kent College of Law, Illinois Institute of Technology. We thank Michael Perlin for making us aware of this article. It is a privilege to have Michael Perlin as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>171</sup> Fiske, 2004.

<sup>172</sup> Lindner, 2015b. See the 2015 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Toward A Life of Dignity for All,” in Kigali, Rwanda, June 2–5, 2015, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/25.php.

<sup>173</sup> Caught in Micro Debt, documentary film shown on Norwegian state television November 30, 2010. See also Brennpunkt: Fanget i mikrogjeld, www.nrk.no/nett-tv/klipp/688333/. See, furthermore, Bateman, and www.odi.org.uk/events/documents/2447-presentation-m-bateman.pdf. See, furthermore, Roodman and Morduch, 2009, Armendariz de Aghion and Morduch, 2005, Dichter, 2003, as well as Wichterich, 2000, 2010. Wichterich starts her 2011 paper as follows:

India is in the midst of a financial crisis that shows striking similarities to the US subprime crisis, both in its origins and the rescue strategies used. Just as the cheap mortgage granted to low-income households in the USA, the microcredits given to poor women in rural areas worked out as financialization of everyday live and integration of the women into the global financial market with its return-based logic. This jeopardized the social processes and the very objectives at the heart of the initial nonprofit microfinance model. The growth of this sector led to an over-supply of microcredits in villages and in turn to the over-indebtedness of women, the collapse of repayments and a capital shortage of the microfinance institutions. What seems at first sight to be a specifically Indian crisis results in fact from the market rationale of growth, overheating, and crisis.

<sup>174</sup> 2015 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Toward A Life of Dignity for All,” in Kigali, Rwanda, June 2–5, 2015, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/25.php.

<sup>175</sup> See howardrichards.org, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, Richards, 2011. See also:

- “Constructing a New Global Dispensation Beyond Economics,” by Howard Richards, keynote talk at an international conference on “Democracy, Human Rights and Social Justice in a New Global Dispensation – Challenges and Transformations,” University of South Africa, Pretoria, February 1–3, 2010, howardrichards.org/pacem/index.php?option=com\_content&task=view&id=137&Itemid=163.
- “Humanizing Methodologies in Transformation,” by Howard Richards, lecture at the University of South Africa, Pretoria, July 20, 2010.
- “An Ethical Alternative to the Philosophy of Friedrich von Hayek,” by Howard Richards, presentation to the Rethinking Economics group, Santiago de Chile, January 20, 2011.

<sup>176</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 176.

<sup>177</sup> Stephen Purdey in his contribution to the Great Transition Initiative (GTN) discussion on the topic “Economics for a Full World.” May 15, 2015:

Instead of trying to transition to a steady-state economy, government leaders worldwide are still fixated on the pursuit of economic growth as a top policy priority. If a “major change in philosophical vision and ethical practice” is required to defeat this fixation, then we’ll first need a good understanding of its power to persuade. Here are two examples, one political and one ethical, of this power. First, economic growth is politically expedient. Growth, as John Kenneth Galbraith once called it, is the ultimate social lubricant. It draws support and approbation from all sectors of society – rich and poor, employers and employees, public and private sectors alike, because they all stand to gain. The “rising tide lifts all boats” mantra is universally appealing and therefore politically compelling. It is also, of course, a utopian economic model which hints at an abrogation of governmental responsibility, even as it helps us understand the lure of growth.

See also note 93 in this Chapter 11.

<sup>178</sup> “How Do We Make the Economy Work for the Poor?” by Howard Richards, <http://unboundedorganization.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/09/Chapter-Two-cwp-September-10.pdf>, Chapter 2 in Economic Theory and Community Development, <http://unboundedorganization.org/related-material/>.

<sup>179</sup> Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001.

<sup>180</sup> Kahneman, 2011.

<sup>181</sup> Lindner, 2006a, pp. 46–47.

<sup>182</sup> Gray, 2002. See also Gray's review of Moral Tribes by Joshua Greene, 2013, in The Guardian, January 17, 2014, www.theguardian.com/books/2014/jan/17/moral-tribes-joshua-greene-review, where Gray writes:

If you think some version of Darwinism provides the best available account of humankind's place in the world (as I do) you will accept that morality has evolved along with the human animal. That doesn't mean morality can be understood using Green's fashionable mix of game theory and sociobiology. How human beings think and feel about morality is integral to what it means to them, but Greene tends to displace these culturally accreted understandings by clever-sounding theoretical notions – including ideas borrowed from the prevailing versions of market economics.

When he defends utilitarianism as a universal “meta-morality” that can regulate “trade-offs” among tribal moralities, it's no accident that he describes this super-morality as a common currency. This is an author who assures the reader that “participation in modern market economies, far from turning us into selfish bean counters, has expanded the scope of human kindness.” For Greene and thinkers like him, market exchange seems to be a model for moral life.

See also Gray, 2002.

<sup>183</sup> Capaldo, 2014.

<sup>184</sup> Neuroscientist Peter Sterling, 2016, begins his essay with this paragraph:

Exponential economic growth is rapidly destabilizing the biosphere. Among the many factors that stimulate such growth is the human tendency to consume goods and services far beyond what is required to meet basic needs. We have to grasp what drives this tendency in order to manage it. The brain's core circuits were long believed to stimulate us to seek pleasure – greedily and selfishly – while higher cortical circuits try to rein us in. Neuroscience now shows that the core circuits serve not pleasure per se, but efficient learning. When we obtain a reward that our frontal cortex values highly, the core circuit delivers a chemical pulse that we experience as satisfaction – so we repeat the behavior. Satisfaction is brief and diminishes as a particular reward becomes predictable. This circuit design works well for pre-industrial societies in which rewards are varied and unpredictable. But capitalism shrinks the diversity of possible rewards, leaving the remainder less satisfying, and making stronger doses, i.e., more consumption, necessary. The path toward sustainability must, therefore, include re-expanding the diversity of satisfactions.

I thank Paul Raskin for having invited the Great Transition Network list into a discussion of Sterling's essay.

<sup>185</sup> Linn, 2015. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book.

<sup>186</sup> “James Risen Prepared to ‘Pay Any Price’ to Report on War on Terror Amid Crackdown on Whistleblowers,” interview with Amy Goodman and Michael Hayden, Democracy Now, October 14, 2014, www.democracynow.org/2014/10/14/james\_risen\_prepared\_to\_pay\_any. See Risen, 2014. See also “A Not Very Private Feud Over Terrorism,” by Marc Sageman, New York Times, June 8, 2008, www.nytimes.com/2008/06/08/weekinreview/08sciolino.html?\_r=4&scp=1&sq=marc+sageman&st=nyt&oref=slogin&oref=slogin&:

...the huge counterterrorism machine, which costs the United States billions of dollars and has created armies of independent security consultants and counterterrorism experts in the last seven years.

<sup>187</sup> “Seven Years Since the Wall Street Crash,” by Nick Beams, Human Wrongs Watch, September 15, 2015, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/09/15/seven-years-since-the-wall-street-crash/>.

<sup>188</sup> “Authoritarianism, Class Warfare and the Advance of Neoliberal Austerity Policies,” by Henry A. Giroux, Truthout, January 5, 2015, <http://truth-out.org/news/item/28338-the-shadow-of-fascism-and-the-poison-of-neoliberal-austerity-policies>.

<sup>189</sup> “The Rise of ISIS is Fueled by Iraq's Deteriorating Economic Conditions,” The Real News, November 3, 2014, <https://youtu.be/OocGnXBG5BM>. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this video.

<sup>190</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil's Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/. See also the Military-Industrial Complex Speech by Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, on January 17, 1961, Public Papers of the Presidents, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960, pp. 1035–1040, <http://coursesa.matrix.msu.edu/~hst306/documents/indust.html>, see also <https://youtu.be/8y06NSBBRtY>. In this farewell speech Eisenhower warns of the military industrial complex. Already the English economist John Atkinson Hobson, 1902, had espoused the opinion that imperial expansion is driven by a search for new markets and investment opportunities overseas. His book gained Hobson an international reputation, and influenced people such as Vladimir Lenin and Leon Trotsky, as well as The Origins of Totalitarianism by Hannah Arendt, 1951.

<sup>191</sup> “Illegal Trade in Wildlife and Timber Products Finances Criminal and Militia Groups, Threatening Security and Sustainable Development.” United Nations Environmental Programme (UNEP), June 24, 2014, www.unep.org/newscentre/default.aspx?DocumentID=2791&ArticleID=10906&l=en.

<sup>192</sup> “Legalisiert den Handel mit Drogen,” by Tobias Käufer, Hannoversche Allgemeine, September 15, 2015, www.haz.de/Sonntag/Gastkommentar/drogenhandel-legalisieren. Translated from German by Lindner. German original:

Der Kampf gegen die Drogen ist unter den aktuellen Bedingungen nicht mehr zu gewinnen. Denn auf der Gewinnerseite steht ein weltweites Finanzsystem, das opportunistisch bis zur Selbstverleugnung wegschaut und seinen Anteil einstreicht, wenn es unfassbar große Geldströme wäscht. Und es ist eine Waffenindustrie, die beide Seiten beliefert: die von Drogenmilliarden gemästeten Kartelle und die Staaten, die sich verzweifelt dagegen wehren. Nicht nur in Mexiko.

Auf der Verliererseite steht die Gesellschaft. Jugendliche, die in Abhängigkeit und Kriminalität abgleiten, um die absurd hohen Straßenverkaufspreise zu zahlen. Gedemütigte Mädchen und Frauen, die ihren Körper und ihre Würde aufgeben, um den nächsten Kick zu organisieren. Die Demokratie, die hilflos mitansehen muss, wie ganze Politikgenerationen mit Drogengeld gekauft werden. Mutige Zivilisten, Menschenrechtler, Priester, die sich der Mafia in den Weg stellen, um dann ermordet wie ein Stück Dreck auf Müllhalden entsorgt zu werden.

See also Paley, 2014.

<sup>193</sup> Wood, 2003.

<sup>194</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>195</sup> Adresseavisen (a regional newspaper in Trondheim, Norway), January 26, 2015, <http://adressa.ald.no/bestillpluss?1&aviskode=ADR&artRefId=10578437&targetUrl=http%253A%252F%252Fwww.adressa.no%252F%253Fservice%253DpaywallRedirect%2526articleUrl%253Dhttp%253A%252F%252Fwww.adressa.no%252Fpluss%252Fnyheter%252Farticle10578437.ece>:

Dagens samfunn har klare totalitære trekk: Kontroll- og målesamfunnet har klare totalitære trekk, mener førstemanuensis Tord Larsen.

See also Larsen, 2009. See, furthermore, sociologist Hartmut Rosa, 2005, 2010. Rosa’s argument is that modern societies are subjected to too close-meshed time regimes that regulate, coordinate, and control them outside of any ethical concepts. Hartmut Rosa is a professor of Sociology at the Friedrich Schiller University of Jena in Germany, and the head of the Max-Weber center of advanced cultural and social studies of the University of Erfurt. See also Why Are We Stuck Behind the Social Acceleration? TED talk by Hartmut Rosa, March 11, 2015, <https://youtu.be/7uG9OFGId3A>. The lead question is: How to have a good life in light of rapid social acceleration? Rosa’s argument is that modern societies are subjected to too close-meshed time regimes that regulate, coordinate, and control them outside of any ethical concepts.

<sup>196</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006b, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>197</sup> Howard Richards, in a personal communication reflecting on Norman Kurland’s work, January 12, 2013:

I do not think it is responsible to be simply “in favor of private property” or “against private property” or to say

“Marx was right” or “Marx was wrong.” I do not think the words “capitalism” or “socialism” in most of the ways they are commonly understood can name something one can be simply “for” or “against.” (In the end, however, I come out being “for” both socialism and capitalism, properly defined, i.e. defined as I think it best to define them. I am working on these paradoxes in an essay I am working on in Spanish tentatively titled “How to Achieve Socialism without Socialism.” They are also somewhat explained in my talk at University of Cape Town, where I explain also why the debate has to go back to indigenous practices of community and transcend modern western categories.)

...

I met Adler when I was working for Robert Hutchins (I worked for him in 1960 – 1965) and I had the impression that he shared Hutchins’ view which is also that of Aristotle and is part of the social teachings of the Catholic Church and of most churches that property is in principle common (given by God or Nature) to everyone, while the separation of property into “mine” and “thine” is a practical arrangement due to the fact that holding property in common is often impractical. As St. Thomas says we who own property have legal dominion, but the duty to use the property to serve others. In Gandhi’s view we should regard ourselves as “trustees” of our property... This is sometimes called in secular terms the view that property rights serve social functions.

On the other hand Hutchins and traditional ethics generally are quite aware of the desirable function of property in establishing respect for persons and the integrity and freedom of human personalities. This does not need to lead to denying the social functions of property and the need to revise property institutions in the light of their social functions.

I agree with Norm that when Marx wrote that Communism consists of abolishing private property Marx was recommending something neither practical nor desirable. I do not want to underestimate the tragedy and human suffering that have resulted from that impractical and undesirable idea. But this does not imply that we have nothing to learn from Marx. Nor does it imply that we should underestimate the tragedy and human suffering that have resulted from imposing unenlightened ideas about private property by violence, torture, lies and all the rest – the latter being closer to home for one who writes from Chile.

I also think that unrestricted property rights (full respect for the dominium of Roman law) make it impossible to achieve social inclusion. As far as I can tell without taking time for more study, the Kelso idea is not really unrestricted property rights because it involves redistribution so that everybody has access to property. This would raise the issue how to make redistribution practical, how to carry it out without shutting down the dynamics that make the economy work (given that it does not in any case work very well)...

<sup>198</sup> I thank Linda Hartling for emphasizing the centrality of human relationships.

Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions to Section Two

<sup>1</sup> Jihad: A Story of the Others, documentary film by Deeyah Khan, 2015, <http://fuuse.net/jihad-a-story-of-the-others/>. The “godfather of the British jihadi movement,” Abu Muntasir, recruited dozens of young men to fight in foreign wars. Starting at minute 35:00 of the film, he sobs: “I rather live as slaves and have my kids go to school... I don’t want this false... what is this: honor! I am happy to be a coward!” He regrets “opening the way for people to join terror groups such as Islamic State and al-Qaida,” writes Tracy McVeigh in “‘Recruiter’ of UK Jihadis: I Regret Opening the Way to Isis,” The Guardian, June 13, 2015, www.theguardian.com/world/2015/jun/13/godfather-of-british-jihadists-admits-we-opened-to-way-to-join-isis.

<sup>2</sup> United States, 1973, p. 248.

<sup>3</sup> James Edward Jones, 2006, paper presented at the 2006 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 14–15, 2006:

Persons affected by the PVEE syndrome often defend, minimize and/or rationalize the most outrageous attitudes held and acts carried out by themselves or members of their particular group. When you talk to such people, you will quickly find that the reason that they take such a usually untenable position is because “their people” either are or have been victimized by one or more other groups. This is the golden rule turned on its head: “Do bad unto others because they (or someone else) did something bad to you.” It is a deceptively simple and somewhat pervasive point of view...

It is a privilege to have James Edward Jones as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>4</sup> The International Panel of Eminent Personalities to Investigate the 1994 Genocide in Rwanda and the Surrounding Events, 2000, Chapter 16, paragraph 4.

<sup>5</sup> Jihad: A Story of the Others, documentary film by Deeyah Khan, 2015, <http://fuuse.net/jihad-a-story-of-the-others/>.

<sup>6</sup> The “godfather of the British jihadi movement,” Abu Muntasir, recruited dozens of young men to fight in foreign wars. Starting at minute 35:00 of the film, he sobs: “I rather live as slaves and have my kids go to school... I don’t want this false... what is this: honor! I am happy to be a coward!" He regrets "opening the way for people to join terror groups such as Islamic State and al-Qaida," writes Tracy McVeigh in "Recruiter" of UK Jihadis: I Regret Opening the Way to Isis," The Guardian, June 13, 2015, www.theguardian.com/world/2015/jun/13/godfather-of-british-jihadists-admits-we-opened-to-way-to-join-isis.

<sup>7</sup> Harris and Nawaz, 2015, Nawaz, 2012. See also his TED talk Maajid Nawaz: A Global Culture to Fight Extremism, July 14, 2011, <https://youtu.be/EZwxKPv1CwA>. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of Nawaz's work.

<sup>8</sup> It is a privilege to have Jo Berry as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. We had our Skype meeting on May 5, 2011, and met again at the Cardozo Law School's Journal of Conflict Resolution Annual Symposium titled "Negotiating the Extremes: Impossible Political Dialogues in the 21st Century," in New York City on November 5, 2012.

<sup>9</sup> Brown, 2012a.

<sup>10</sup> "For Thanksgiving: What We Have to Do With 'Twelve Years a Slave,' the Movie," by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, November 26, 2013, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/for-thanksgiving-what-we-\_b\_4344576.html. Carol Smaldino is an esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>11</sup> "Mental Health Awareness Month in a Climate of Denial," by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, May 11, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/mental-health-awareness-m\_b\_9895080.html.

<sup>12</sup> "When the End of Human Civilization Is Your Day Job," by John H. Richardson, Esquire, July 7, 2015, www.esquire.com/news-politics/a36228/ballad-of-the-sad-climatologists-0815/.

<sup>13</sup> See, for instance, Miller, 1976/1986, 2008b.

<sup>14</sup> See a few examples for relevant literature, for instance, Lasch, 1991, Putnam, 2000, Baumeister, et al., 1996, Bushman and Baumeister, 1998, Baumeister, et al., 2003, Baumeister, 2005, Levine, 2007, Twenge and Campbell, 2009, Wood, et al., 2009, Ehrenreich, 2010, Twenge, et al., 2012, Twenge and Kasser, 2013, Twenge, 2014. See also how Howard Richards includes Foucault, 1961/2006, and Frank, 1961, in his chapter in Richards, 2013. See "Column: This Is What Happens When You Take Ayn Rand Seriously," by Denise Cummins, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), February 16, 2016, www.pbs.org/newshour/making-sense/column-this-is-what-happens-when-you-take-ayn-rand-seriously/. Cummins presents two case studies that show the disastrous consequences of following Ayn Rand's philosophy, namely, the company Sears, and the country Honduras. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. Also psychoanalyst Heinz Kohut has worked on narcissistic injury, see Kohut, 1973, p. 380:

One sees the need for revenge, for righting a wrong, for undoing the hurt by whatever means, and a deeply anchored, unrelenting compulsion in the pursuit of all these aims which gives no rest to those who have suffered a narcissistic injury – these are features which are characteristic for the phenomenon of narcissistic rage in all its forms and which sets it apart from other kinds of aggression.

I thank David Lotto, 2016, for reminding me of this quote.

<sup>15</sup> Steve Kulich, at the Second International Conference on Multicultural Discourses in Hangzhou, China, April 13–15, 2007. See also Lindner, 2007a.

<sup>16</sup> The Space between Self-Esteem and Self Compassion, by Kristin Neff, TEDxCentennialParkWomen, February 6, 2013, <https://youtu.be/IvtZBUSpl4>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this talk. See also Neff, 2011.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. See, furthermore, among others, Lasch, 1991, Lasch, 1991, Putnam, 2000, Bushman and Baumeister, 1998, Baumeister, et al., 2003, Baumeister, 2005, Levine, 2007, Twenge and Campbell, 2009, Wood, et al., 2009, Ehrenreich, 2010, Twenge, et al., 2012, Twenge and Kasser, 2013, Twenge, 2014. See also how Howard Richards includes Foucault, 1961/2006, and Frank, 1961, in his chapter in Richards, 2013.

<sup>18</sup> See "Column: This Is What Happens When You Take Ayn Rand Seriously," by Denise Cummins, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), February 16, 2016, www.pbs.org/newshour/making-sense/column-this-is-what-happens-when-you-take-ayn-rand-seriously/. Cummins presents two case studies that show the disastrous consequences of following Ayn Rand's philosophy, namely, the company Sears, and the country Honduras. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>19</sup> I thank Linda Hartling for sharing documentary material about Ayn Rand with me. See, among others, Love and Power, the first in a BBC2 documentary series by Adam Curtis, May 23, 2011, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b011k45f. It explores the idea that humans have been colonized by the machines they have built. See also a review of the series "All Watched Over by Machines of Loving Grace," by Sam Wollaston, The Guardian, May 23, 2011, www.guardian.co.uk/tv-and-radio/2011/may/23/review-machines-of-loving-grace.

<sup>20</sup> Lindner, 2012d, pp. 57–58.

<sup>21</sup> “The End of Identity Liberalism,” by Mark Lilla, New York Times, November 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/11/20/opinion/sunday/the-end-of-identity-liberalism.html.

<sup>22</sup> “Donald Trump’s Election a Rejection of Identity Politics,” by Paul Kelly, The Australian, January 28, 2017, www.theaustralian.com.au/.../donald-trumps-election-a-rejection-of-identity-politics/.../147b11c08b64702d3f9be1821416cb72.

<sup>23</sup> “The End of Identity Liberalism,” by Mark Lilla, New York Times, November 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/11/20/opinion/sunday/the-end-of-identity-liberalism.html:

One of the many lessons of the recent presidential election campaign and its repugnant outcome is that the age of identity liberalism must be brought to an end. Hillary Clinton was at her best and most uplifting when she spoke about American interests in world affairs and how they relate to our understanding of democracy. But when it came to life at home, she tended on the campaign trail to lose that large vision and slip into the rhetoric of diversity, calling out explicitly to African-American, Latino, L.G.B.T. and women voters at every stop. This was a strategic mistake. If you are going to mention groups in America, you had better mention all of them. If you don’t, those left out will notice and feel excluded. Which, as the data show, was exactly what happened with the white working class and those with strong religious convictions. Fully two-thirds of white voters without college degrees voted for Donald Trump, as did over 80 percent of white evangelicals.

<sup>24</sup> Campbell and Manning, 2014.

<sup>25</sup> Twenge, 2014.

<sup>26</sup> “The Coddling of the American Mind,” by Greg Lukianoff, and Jonathan Haidt, The Atlantic, September 2015, www.theatlantic.com/magazine/archive/2015/09/the-coddling-of-the-american-mind/399356/.

<sup>27</sup> “The Righteous Mind,” by Jonathan Haidt, September 7, 2015, <http://righteousmind.com/where-microaggressions-really-come-from/>. See also Haidt, 2012. See also “The Election, Lao Tzu, a Cup of Water,” by Ursula Kröber Le Guin, Book View Café, November 21, 2016, <http://bookviewcafe.com/blog/2016/11/21/the-election-lao-tzu-a-cup-of-water/>. I thank Linda Hartling of making me aware of Ursula Le Guin, Linda’s fellow Portland citizen, and her work.

<sup>28</sup> Margalit, 2002.

<sup>29</sup> Jones, 2006, paper presented at the 3rd Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, December 14–15, 2006. Jones writes:

Persons affected by the PVEE syndrome often defend, minimize and/or rationalize the most outrageous attitudes held and acts carried out by themselves or members of their particular group. When you talk to such people, you will quickly find that the reason that they take such a usually untenable position is because ‘their people’ either are or have been victimized by one or more other groups. This is the golden rule turned on its head: ‘Do bad unto others because they (or someone else) did something bad to you.’ It is a deceptively simple and somewhat pervasive point of view...

It is a privilege to have James Edward Jones as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>30</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 7: The Humiliation Addiction, in my book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict.

<sup>31</sup> “The End of Identity Liberalism,” by Mark Lilla, New York Times, November 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/11/20/opinion/sunday/the-end-of-identity-liberalism.html.

<sup>32</sup> “Call for Action to Curb Attacks on Environmental Campaigners,” IRIN – Humanitarian news and analysis (a service of the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs), August 22, 2014, www.irinnews.org/report/100518/call-for-action-to-curb-attacks-on-environmental-campaigners.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid.

<sup>34</sup> ZDF-History: Operation “Zersetzung” – Der geheime Terror der Stasi, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, <http://history.zdf.de/ZDF/zdfportal/programdata/c5479add-a5dd-35ff-99cf-ca2843da6ec4/20189842?generateCanonicalUrl=true>, see also <https://youtu.be/vHJAfWtyeOo>. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. See also Pingel-Schliemann, 2004, and Trobisch-Lütge, 2004, 2011.

<sup>35</sup> “When Generosity Hurts: Bill Gates, Public School Teachers and the Politics of Humiliation,” by Henry A. Giroux, TruthOut, October 5, 2010, <http://truth-out.org/archive/component/k2/item/92120:when-generosity-hurts-bill-gates-public-school-teachers-and-the-politics-of-humiliation>. I thank Brian Ward for having made us aware of this article. See some of Giroux’s publications: Di Leo, et al., 2013, Giroux, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014b, a, Nikolakaki, 2012.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. See for some of Giroux's publications: Di Leo, et al., 2013, Giroux, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014b, a, Nikolakaki, 2012.

<sup>37</sup> Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay discusses the "T-treaty trinity," the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), Trade in Services Agreement (TiSA), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP):

Such agreements, negotiated in near complete secrecy, pursue geopolitical objectives. They are an attempt to build a worldwide economic and financial order that supersedes national states and they represent also an effort to protect the corporate and banking elites – the establishment 1 percent – against national governments. In the case of the TTIP, its geopolitical objective is to prevent European countries from developing comprehensive trade agreements with Russia. In the case of TPP, the objective is to isolate China. In the eyes of Washington D.C. neocon planners, they are part of ongoing economic warfare.

See also Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>38</sup> "Unsere schönen neuen Kleider. Gegen die marktkonforme Demokratie – für demokratiekonforme Märkte," Dresdner Rede 2012, Ingo Schulze, February 26, 2012, www.nachdenkseiten.de/upload/pdf/SchulzeDresden.pdf. See also "Thesen gegen die Ausplünderung der Gesellschaft: 'Kapitalismus braucht keine Demokratie'," Ingo Schulze, Süddeutsche Zeitung, January 12, 2012, www.sueddeutsche.de/kultur/thesen-gegen-die-auspluenderung-der-gesellschaft-kapitalismus-braucht-keine-demokratie-1.1255949.

<sup>39</sup> Howard Richards in a personal communication on February 25, 2013.

<sup>40</sup> Neva Rockefeller Goodwin, pioneer of contextual economics education, co-director of the Global Development And Environment Institute at Tufts University (www.gdae.org) and project director of the Social Science Library (www.socialsciencelibrary.org), in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic "Why We Consume: Neural Design and Sustainability," March 25, 2016. In her comment to Escrigas, 2016, on June 2, 2016, Neva Goodwin recommends the Heterodox news website, www.heterodoxnews.com, when asked by students where they should go if they want to learn about economics in the real world. Under "study programs," there is an annotated list of universities throughout the world that offer at least some courses which go beyond the mainstream. I had the privilege of meeting Neva Goodwin at the Thirtieth Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures "Voices of a New Economics," in New York City on November 20, 2010.

<sup>41</sup> See, for example, www.brainyquote.com/quotes/quotes/m/mayeramsch170274.html.

<sup>42</sup> See also "How Obama Could Beat the Debt Ceiling and Go Out a Hero," by Ellen Brown, CounterPunch, October 28, 2015, www.counterpunch.org/2015/10/28/how-obama-could-beat-the-debt-ceiling-and-go-out-a-hero/. See also Goetzmann, 2016.

<sup>43</sup> "Democracy v. Concentrated Wealth: In Search of a Louis D. Brandeis Quote," by Peter Scott Campbell, The Green Bag 2D, Spring 2013, pp. 251–256, http://greenbag.org/v16n3/v16n3\_articles\_campbell.pdf.

<sup>44</sup> Etzioni, 2013, p. 334.

<sup>45</sup> Paul Raskin in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled "Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization," November 11, 2016, in his response to the comments on Raskin, 2016:

In other words, fixating on "the Anthropocene" confuses cause and effect: the enlargement of the human project (the Planetary Phase) is the cause, and the enlargement of human impacts (the Anthropocene) is the effect. The inversion dehistoricizes the source of the problem as a diffuse "humanity" (rather than a particular social formation), and thereby depoliticizes the response ("we have met the enemy, and he is us"). The "Planetary Phase," besides having an evocative ring, carries a comprehensive understanding of the challenge, and urges a comprehensive movement for addressing it.

<sup>46</sup> Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>47</sup> More, 2014.

<sup>48</sup> "Anthropocene Is the Wrong Word," by Kathleen Dean Moore, Earth Island Journal, Spring 2013, www.earthisland.org/journal/index.php/eij/article/anthropocene\_is\_the\_wrong\_word/.

<sup>49</sup> The Holocene is a geological epoch that began approximately 11,700 years BCE and continues to the present. The new term Anthropocene is used informally for the latest part of modern history and of significant human impact since the epoch of the Neolithic Revolution around 12,000 years Before Present.

<sup>50</sup> Rockström, 2015. See also Wijkman and Rockström, 2012. See more in note 82 in Chapter 5.

<sup>51</sup> On classism, have a look at Barbara Jensen, 2012.

<sup>52</sup> Freyd and Birrell, 2013. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book.

<sup>53</sup> How poverty is being exploited, how poor people and countries are being duped by globally active corporations, has been widely described. See, among others, Klas, 2011, on the “illusion” of microfinance. See for the abuse of the fact that convenience food made in Europe is a status symbol in the Global South, Das Geschäft mit der Armut: Wie Lebensmittelkonzerne neue Märkte erobern, documentary film by Joachim Walther, 3sat, 2016, www.3sat.de/programm/?viewlong=viewlong&d=20170412&dayID=ClnDaN12&cx=123. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe. Nutrition is also the theme of the work of Carlos Monteiro at the School of Public Health at the University of São Paulo in Brazil, see Conde and Monteiro, 2014, Lavery, et al., 2015. Giftiger Treibstoff für Afrika, is a documentary film by Isabelle Ducet und Marie-Laure Widmer Baggiolini, 3sat, 2017, www.3sat.de/mediathek/?mode=play&obj=65870. In Europe, strict quality standards apply for fuels. Swiss companies sell fuels which do not comply with these regulations to Africa.

<sup>54</sup> Gorz, 1964, 1967. See also “A Feminism Where ‘Lean In’ Means Leaning On Others,” by Gary Gutting and Nancy Fraser, The Stone (The Stone is a forum for contemporary philosophers and other thinkers on issues both timely and timeless), October 15, 2015, <http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2015/10/15/a-feminism-where-leaning-in-means-leaning-on-others/>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this interview.

<sup>55</sup> Rockström, 2015.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid.

<sup>58</sup> Daly, 1991.

<sup>59</sup> I first began to learn about the significance of the notion of unity in diversity in 1994, when cross-cultural psychologist Michael Harris Bond from Hong Kong taught at the Sommerakademie Friedens- und Konfliktforschung, July 11–16, 1999, in Clemenswerth, Germany. See Bond, 1999. Michael Bond is an esteemed member from the first moment in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See more in note 19 in the Introduction to Section One.

<sup>60</sup> See Yoshikawa, 1980, 1987.

<sup>61</sup> Martin, et al., 2001.

<sup>62</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017, quoting “Killings and Racial Tensions Commingle with Divided and Divisive Politics,” by Dan Balz, Washington Post, July 8, 2016, www.washingtonpost.com/politics/killings-and-racial-tensions-commingle-with-divided-and-divisive-politics/2016/07/08/5a422e08-451e-11e6-88d0-6adee48be8bc\_story.html?utm\_term=.8f5203cf84a3.

<sup>63</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017, quoting Putnam, 2007.

<sup>64</sup> Banks, et al., 2001, p. 13.

<sup>65</sup> Lindner, 2014b, 2017. I follow sociologist Alain Touraine, when he asks how a transnational economy can be reconciled with the reality of introverted communities, and when he replies that a few social rules of mutual tolerance and respect for personal freedom are not sufficient, that deeper bonds must and can be forged. Touraine argues that people can and should create a personal life-project and construct an active self or “subject,” with the ultimate aim to form meaningful social and political institutions. See Touraine, 2000, and Touraine, 2003. Alain Touraine focuses and social and political conflict in his work. I would have liked to attend the debate moderated by Michel Wieviorka in Paris in 2014, see Castells, et al., 2014. It is a privilege for me to be associated with the Maison des Sciences de l’Homme in Paris since 2001, initially through social psychologist Serge Moscovici. The first two conferences of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies were inspired and hosted by Hinnerk Bruhns, and supported by Michel Wieviorka, at the Maison des Sciences in 2003 and 2004, see www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeetings.php. It is a privilege to have Hinnerk Bruhns and other renowned colleagues from France as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>66</sup> See also Lindner, 2007d.

<sup>67</sup> See, among others, “Missing: Political Creativity,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, May 15, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/05/missing-political-creativity/.

<sup>68</sup> On June 5, 2008, more than one thousand representatives from indigenous communities across the Americas gathered in Lima, Peru, and agreed on a new social system, called Living Well. See, among others, www.villageearth.org/pages/Projects/Peru/perublog/2008/06/living-well-development-alternative.html#. See also Graeber, 2001. See also the Journal of Indigenous Wellbeing, <http://journalindigenousewellbeing.com>. Consider also the sustainability principle in The Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia.

<sup>69</sup> Catherine Alum Odora Hoppers edited the International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning, Volume 7, Number 2, “Development Education in the Global South,” 2015, <http://ingentaconnect.com/content/ioep/ijdeg/2015/00000007/00000002/art00002>. It is a privilege to have not only Catherine Odora Hoppers and her brother George, but also other authors in this issue as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, namely, Richards, 2015, Haavelsrud, 2015, and Sewchurran and McDonogh, 2015. Crain Soudien, 2015, recommends drawing on the concept of the transaction in John Dewey for a new approach to knowing, while Haavelsrud uses Odora Hoppers’ term of transformation by enlargement for the academy, by scientific methodologies inspired by forms of transdisciplinarity, praxis, and trilateral science as described by Johan Galtung, 1977, see Haavelsrud, 2015, pp. 54–55:

The concept of trilateral science describes the relationship between three worlds, the empirical, the foreseen, and the ideal world, or, in other words, the world as it is (the data or facts positively given), the world as it will be (the world as predicted or theorized) and the world as it ought to be (values). The gaps and differences between the three worlds can be reduced by transformations in all three. The aim of science should be to achieve greater consonance among the three: “The world as it is can be changed, and if so the foreseen world will also be changed. Values may be modified.”

See also Odora Hoppers, 2002, and her article “Indigenous Knowledge Systems: An Invisible Resource in Literacy Education,” The Soka Gakkai International (SGI) Quarterly: A Buddhist Forum for Peace, Culture and Education, January 2003, www.sgiquarterly.org/feature2003Jan-4.html.

See also Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012, Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>70</sup> Kjell Skyllstad in a personal communication on December 15, 2014.

<sup>71</sup> Battle, 1997.

<sup>72</sup> For essayist Arthur Koestler’s theory of holons and holarchies, see Koestler, 1967, 1970, 1978. I thank John Bunzl for reminding me of Koestler’s work. It is a privilege to have John Bunzl’s support for our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>73</sup> Braithwaite, 2002. It is a privilege to have John Braithwaite as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>74</sup> Powers, 1973, 1998.

<sup>75</sup> I had the privilege of listening to Phil Clark and Joanna Quinn during the “International Symposium on Restorative Justice, Reconciliation and Peacebuilding,” at the New York University School of Law, November 11–12, 2011, www.iilj.org/RJRP/about.asp. They introduced me to the work of Sally Engle Merry and Mark A. Drumbl, see Goodale and Merry, 2007, and Drumbl, 2007. I learned that British colonizers set up a “relationships commission” as far back as 1898. Lord Lugard wrote about the “dual mandate” in Africa, see Lugard, 1965. See also Clark, 2010.

<sup>76</sup> See, for instance, europa.eu/scadplus/glossary/subsidiarity\_en.htm.

<sup>77</sup> Marshall, 2008.

<sup>78</sup> Gaertner, et al., 2012.

<sup>79</sup> See, among others, Hornsey and Hogg, 2000, Brown and Hewstone, 2005, Crisp, et al., 2006, Dovidio, et al., 2009. I thank Sigrun Marie Moss for reminding me of the more recent developments in this field. See Moss, 2014, Moss and Vollhardt, 2015.

<sup>80</sup> Gaertner, et al., 2000.

<sup>81</sup> Moss, 2014, Moss and Vollhardt, 2015.

<sup>82</sup> Lindner, 2012b.

<sup>83</sup> Elias, 1939/1991, pp. 226–227.

<sup>84</sup> Patrick Modiano, 2005/2015, grappled with questions of identity and roots in all his novels.

<sup>85</sup> Nigerian author Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, 2013, felt “black” for the first time when she came to the United States of America. Gilad Atzmon, 2011, writes about the wound of Jewish identities.

<sup>86</sup> Selasi, 2013.

<sup>87</sup> World Passport, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/World\_Passport. It has been a great privilege to have Garry Davis in our conference in Honolulu in 2009, and in our workshop in New York the year before he passed away. His support for our dignity work has been deeply appreciated.

<sup>88</sup> Lifton, 1993.

<sup>89</sup> Matsumoto, et al., 2007, p. 92: “With Emotion Regulation (ER), ‘people voyage through life; without it, they vindicate their lives.’” It is a privilege to have David Matsumoto as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>90</sup> See, among many others, Csikszentmihalyi, 1996.

<sup>91</sup> In a way, my position is more radical than that of Klitgaard, 2017.

<sup>92</sup> As to “personal branding,” see Lair, et al., 2005. I discussed this topic in January 29, 2007, in Harrania, near Cairo, Egypt, with Sophie Wissa-Wassef, who makes a point of protecting her artists’ creativity by not disclosing to them whether their art sells or not. See www.humiliationstudies.org/intervention/art.php#ramseswissawassef or www.wissa-wassef-arts.com/intro.htm. See also Rushkoff, 2009. I thank Keith Grennan for this reference.

<sup>93</sup> Pleasantville is a film written, produced, and directed by Gary Ross in 1998. See also The Clonus Horror (1979) or The Island (2005). Remember also the 1999 film The Matrix. See, furthermore, the work of novelists such as Aldous Huxley, 1932, or Kazuo Ishiguro, 2005, Michel Houellebecq, 2010/2012, Dave Eggers, 2013, or Leif Randt, 2015, as well as Uwe Tellkamp, 2008, who asks whether it is possible to guard one’s dignity in the face of attempts to brainwash entire populations, as happened in East Germany before it collapsed in 1989.

<sup>94</sup> Rosenthal, 2013. See also Pirson, et al., 2016. I thank Heidi von Weltzien Høivik and Bjørn Ekelund, both esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, for connecting me with Michael Pirson. See also “The Messy Link Between Slave Owners and Modern Management,” by Katie Johnston, Harvard Business School Working Knowledge, January 16, 2013, <http://hbswk.hbs.edu/item/the-messy-link-between-slave-owners-and-modern-management>.

<sup>95</sup> “Don’t Blame Corbyn for the Sins of Blair, Brown and New Labour,” by Ken Loach, The Guardian, February 28, 2017, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2017/feb/28/dont-blame-corbyn-sins-blair-brown-new-labour.

<sup>96</sup> Jensen and Meckling, 1994, p. 10:

Like it or not, individuals are willing to sacrifice a little of almost anything we care to name, even reputation or morality, for a sufficiently large quantity of other desired things; and these things do not have to be money or even material goods.

<sup>97</sup> Tom Bowerman, Director of PolicyInteractive Research, policyinteractive.org, February 1, 2017:

The top five ordering of priorities for workplace choice from highest to lowest are: 1) doing a job I can be proud of; 2) enjoying work, having fun; 3) being with people I respect; 4) earning a good salary; and 5) learning new things, having new experiences.

<sup>98</sup> Lindner, 2012d. See also Klitgaard, 2017, or Richards and Andersson, 2017.

<sup>99</sup> Scholar Vandana Shiva received the Right Livelihood Award in 1993.

<sup>100</sup> Read about “the economics of manipulation and deception” in Akerlof and Shiller, 2015.

<sup>101</sup> Kant, 1785, chapter 1, see the German original on <http://gutenberg.spiegel.de/buch/grundlegung-zur-methaphysik-der-sitten-3510/1>:

Im Reiche der Zwecke hat alles entweder einen Preis, oder eine Würde. Was einen Preis hat, an dessen Stelle kann auch etwas anderes als Äquivalent gesetzt werden; was dagegen über allen Preis erhaben ist, mithin kein Äquivalent verstattet, das hat eine Würde.

<sup>102</sup> Singh, 2013. See also Kasser, 2017. Kasser discusses suggestions that engaging in pro-ecological behaviors (PEBs, such as recycling, eating locally, political activism) increases people’s measures of subjective well-being (SWB, such as happiness, life satisfaction, and hedonic balance), and vice versa. In other words, pro-ecological behavior might make happy, or happy people might engage in pro-ecological behavior. Other variables may be prioritizing intrinsic values over extrinsic values such as money or status, or mindfulness, or a choice to lead a more simple lifestyle. Tim Kasser writes in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” March 12, 2017, in response to Barrington-Leigh, 2017:

a) prioritizing intrinsic values (for personal growth and relationships) over extrinsic values (for money, image and status); b) how mindful one is (i.e., how focused a person is on accepting and attending to one’s momentary experiences); and c) whether one has made a choice to work less and lead a more voluntarily simple lifestyle. Each of these three variables has been empirically associated with BOTH greater SWB and more engagement in PEBs, suggesting each could potentially explain the documented positive correlation.

<sup>103</sup> I deeply resonate with Mimi Stokes-Katzenbach, who writes the following in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” April 1, 2017, in response to Barrington-Leigh, 2017:

If Positive Psychology is to make a useful contribution to transcending our common tragic fate, and is to help bring us through our global emergency in planetary thriving, it must, first, develop a definition of happiness that includes our present, and tragic, environmental reality, and the inherent nature-human interdependency; second, also develop a definition of happiness that does not include these same ecological factors, i.e., answer my question, What kind of happiness is individual well-being in a tragic ecological reality?

Consider also well-being-oriented indicators that go beyond subjective happiness:

- Amartya Sen and Martha Nussbaum’s “Capability Approach” measures items such as inequality, education, health, or environmental sustainability, rather than measuring the outcome, namely, happiness. See www.iep.utm.edu/sen-cap.
- Amartya Sen was involved in developing the OECD’s Better Life Index, which builds on the work of the Commission on Measurement of Economic Performance and Social Progress (or the Stiglitz-Sen-Fitoussi Commission) and asks people to rank their nation on eleven indicators: housing (conditions and spending), income (household income and financial wealth), jobs (earnings, job security, unemployment), community (quality of social support network), education, environmental quality, governance (involvement in democracy), health, life satisfaction (happiness), safety, and work-life balance. See www.oecdbetterlifeindex.org/#/111111111111.
- The Redefining Progress’s Genuine Progress Indicator (GPI) looks at health care, safety, a clean environment, and other indicators of wellbeing, starting with personal consumption data, then measuring income distribution; housework, volunteering, and higher education; crime; resource depletion; pollution; long-term environmental damage; changes in leisure time; defensive expenditures; lifespan of consumer durables and public infrastructure; and dependence on foreign assets. See www.rprogress.org/sustainability\_indicators/genuine\_progress\_indicator.htm.
- Bhutan’s Gross National Happiness Indicator includes non-economic aspects of wellbeing and sustainability. The index consists of 33 measures and has the four pillars of good governance, sustainable socio-economic development, cultural preservation, and environmental conservation classified into nine domains: psychological wellbeing, health, education, time use, cultural diversity and resilience, good governance, community vitality, ecological diversity and resilience, and living standards. See www.grossnationalhappiness.com.

I thank Carroll School Scholar of Corporate Responsibility and Professor of Management Sandra Waddock, for her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” April 1, 2017, in response to Barrington-Leigh, 2017.

<sup>104</sup> The Happy Planet Index (HPI) is an index of human well-being and environmental impact that was introduced by the British think-tank New Economics Foundation (NEF) in July 2006. See <http://happyplanetindex.org/>.

<sup>105</sup> See, for instance, the “Terrorist Exclusion List,” by the U.S. Department of State Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights, Bureau of Counter-terrorism, Office of the Coordinator for Counter-terrorism, December 29, 2004, www.state.gov/j/ct/rls/other/des/123086.htm.

<sup>106</sup> Recent research in the U.S. has shed light on the influence of elite anti-tax advocacy groups hijacking the conservative agenda, even though their interests are not necessarily aligned with other conservative interests such as business interests, or the interests of angry, culturally fearful conservative populists. The most significant elite anti-tax advocacy organization seems to be the US nationwide, multipurpose political federation called Americans for Prosperity (AFP), as part of “weaponized” conservative philanthropy. See Theda Skocpol and Hertel-Fernandez, 2016, as well as Jane Mayer, 2016, and her book on Dark Money. I thank Glyn Rimmington for making me aware of book by Mayer. See also “Who Owns the GOP?” by Theda Skocpol, Dissent, February 3, 2016, and their referral to Parker and Barreto, 2013, see www.dissentmagazine.org/online\_articles/jane-mayer-dark-money-review-koch-brothers-gop:

Research by political scientist Christopher Parker at the University of Washington reinforces our conclusion that ordinary Tea Party activists and sympathizers are worried about sociocultural changes in the United States, angry and fearful about immigration, freaked out by the presence in the White House of a black liberal with a Muslim middle name, and fiercely opposed to what they view as out of control “welfare spending” on the poor, minorities, and young people. Many Tea Partiers benefit from Social Security, Medicare, and military veterans’ programs, and do not want them to be cut or privatized. About half of Tea Party activists or sympathizers are also Christian conservatives intensely concerned with banning abortion and repealing gay marriage. ... Ideas and passions may be similar across time, but, according to our research, angry, culturally fearful conservative populists not controlled from above are a major force in the early twenty-first-century United States.

When I try to look at the situation through the lens of dignity and humiliation, then people who until now felt dejected and shameful seem to be increasingly willing to develop a burning sense of victimhood they did not deserve, of sense of humiliation strong enough to cry out for action (I have studied this dynamic in depth in Nazi Germany). Politicians such as Bernie Sanders attempt to identify factual root causes, while populists first bundle and instigate anger and then channel it toward scapegoats, those they mistake for humiliators, wittingly or unwittingly giving cover to the actual humiliators. Organizations such as the AFP could be described as Trojan Horses that cannibalize and dominate their hosts by way of what I call “the art of humiliation.”

<sup>107</sup> “The Birth of Philanthrocapitalism: The Leading New Philanthropists See Themselves As Social Investors,” The Economist, February 23, 2006, www.economist.com/node/5517656. Listen to Weekend Edition Sunday: 2016 Philanthropy Trends: Americans Donate Record $373 Billion, NPR’s Ailsa Chang speaks with Chuck Collins of the Institute for Policy Studies, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 4, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/534ecfa141812e2b6d9d869e/, where Collins explains that it is not GoFundMe or Crowdrise but megadonors who are behind the current rise in charitable giving. Megadonors increase the risk that recipients morph their mission according to the donors’ wishes, and megadonors withdraw funds from the tax revenue that is needed to maintain the infrastructure. Collins uses Yale University as an example for an island of fancy buildings in a dilapidated context. See also Collins, 2012, 2014, 2016, Collins, et al., 2005.

<sup>108</sup> In Lindner, 2006a, in the section “Love, Help, and Humiliation,” in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, I write on page 79 that cases of misunderstandings that have humiliating effects are difficult to deal with. “Cases of help and love that are “misunderstood” as humiliation are even more difficult. We find benevolent helpers on one side, no evil perpetrators at all, yet help and love sometimes cause deep feelings of humiliation in the recipients. Only one participant identifies this event as humiliation, the other labels it as help or love. The following vignette may illustrate the case of help and humiliation”:

I have cancer. I have no money for medicine. You come to help me. You bring me chocolate. You feel good. I appreciate your good intentions. However, don’t you see that I need medicine? Don’t you see that you serve your own interests more than mine by bringing me chocolate? You have proved to yourself and your friends that you are a helpful human being.

But what about me? You buy yourself a good conscience and I pay the price. I feel painfully humiliated by your blindness and ignorance. I am bitter. I understand you do not know better. You are naïve and well-intentioned, but to me, you seem either stupid or evil. A little more effort to understand my situation would really help! And by the way, how much money did you earn with these pesticides that caused my cancer?

See also Lindner, 2010b. See, furthermore, Nadler and Halabi, 2006, or Rosen, 1983.

<sup>109</sup> “When Restless Billionaires Trip on Their Toys,” by Andrew Ross Sorkin, January 11, 2016, New York Times, www.nytimes.com/2016/01/12/business/dealbook/billionaires-who-trip-on-their-toys.html.

<sup>110</sup> See the Eurobarometer 79.3, 2013, showing the results to the question: “Please tell me if you tend to trust or tend not to trust: Political Parties, the National Government, the National Parliament,” http://ec.europa.eu/public\_opinion/archives/eb/eb79/eb79\_first\_en.pdf. In 2013, trust in national parliament stood in Central and Eastern Europe at 17 percent, in Southern Europe at 19 percent, in Western Europe at 39 percent, and in Northern Europe at 63 percent. Trust in national government in 2013 stood in Central and Eastern Europe at 22 percent, in Southern Europe at 19 percent, in Western Europe at 37 percent, and in Northern Europe at 48 percent. Trust had gone down since it was measured in 2008 for all national institutions in all countries.

<sup>111</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

<sup>112</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>113</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>114</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014, who does not see capitalism as a mere mode of production, with state and nation as mere epiphenomena of capital, but as a triarchy combining Capital-State-Nation. Bauwens also reminds us of The Great Transformation by Karl Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001, a history of the emergence and perpetuation of capitalism from the late eighteenth century to the 1940s, in which Polanyi sees a double movement at play, namely, between the market forces or the “Smithian” capitalism of the nineteenth century on one side, and society on the other side, or the nation, to speak with Karatani, who forces the market back into a more “social” order. For example, the Fordist period inspired a labor movement to force a re-alignment of society around the welfare state, with the backlash starting in the eighties, when these social protections were “deregulated” again in favor of the 1 percent, with the result that workers are impoverished again in favor of the oligarchic elites. In other words, the nation, or what remains of community and reciprocity dynamics, revolts and mobilizes, and, if successful, it forces the state to discipline capital. Bauwens observes what also I observe all around the world, namely, that after the systemic crisis of 2008 this uprising fails, even though a Polanyian backlash can be found nearly everywhere on the globe: Both Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders in the 2016 U.S. electoral cycle “represent the Polanyian double movement, and are reacting against the effects of neoliberalism and its destruction of the U.S. middle class,” writes Bauwens. Trump speaks for the white middle class and workers and wishes to bring the back a better past, while Sanders represents those who suffer from precarity and envision a different future. The problem, however, is that this time the Polanyian double movement is hindered by capital having developed a transnational logic and capacity. Financial neoliberalism has globalized and fundamentally weakened the capacity of the nation-state to discipline its activities:

Faced with an all-powerful transnational capitalism, the various nation-state systems have proven pretty powerless to effect any change. Dare to challenge the status quo and paralyzing capital flight is going to destroy your country! This is one of the explanations of the deep distrust that people are feeling towards the current political system, which simply fails to deliver towards any majoritarian social demand.

Look at how the moderately radical Syriza movement in Greece was put under a European protectorate and had to abandon Greek sovereignty; or look at how the more antagonistically-oriented Venezuelan government is crumbling, along with other progressive governments in Latin America. So, while the electorate may vote for parties that promise to change the status quo and eventually bring to power movements like Podemos, a Labour Party under the leadership of Corbyn, or a Democratic Party strongly influenced by the Sanders movement, their capacities for change will be severely restricted.

The solution that Bauwens sees, resonates with my global observations, namely, that there is no alternative to creating transnational and translocal capacities, which means globally interlinking the efforts of all the local “civic and ethical entrepreneurial networks that are currently in development.” This is why I invest my life time into creating a dignity movement not just locally, but globally.

Section Three

<sup>1</sup> Le Bon, 1915/1916, p. 391. This 1999 edition of the book has a new introduction by Martha Hanna and a new Foreword by Irving Louis Horowitz. The book was originally published in London by T. Fisher Unwin, in 1916.

<sup>2</sup> The Wehrmacht Oath of Loyalty to Adolf Hitler, August 2, 1934.

<sup>3</sup> Preface, Shelley, 1819, www.bartleby.com/18/4/1003.html.

<sup>4</sup> Baldwin, 1963.

<sup>5</sup> “Mysterious Connections that Link Us Together,” Azar Nafisi, National Public Radio (NPR), July 18, 2005, www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=4753976. I thank Libby and Len Traubman for making us aware of this quote, and for their ongoing support for Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

Introduction to Section Three

<sup>1</sup> Wright, et al., 1962.

<sup>2</sup> A recent book by Eric Schlosser, 2013, is based on previously classified material that the author discovered through the Freedom of Information Act in the U.S.A. There are many other examples of “glitches,” among others, the 1979 NORAD Computer Glitch. Read on www.history.com/news/history-lists/5-cold-war-close-calls:

By the late 1970s, both the United States and the Soviets relied on computer systems to detect possible nuclear attacks. But while the new technology was more sophisticated, it also came with a fresh set of risks in the form of false alarms and glitches. Perhaps the most famous of these errors occurred at Colorado’s North American Aerospace Defense Command, or NORAD. On the morning of November 9, 1979, technicians at the site received an urgent alert that the Soviets had launched a barrage of missiles at North America. Convinced a nuclear attack was imminent, the U.S. air defense program scrambled 10 interceptor fighter planes, ordered the president’s “doomsday plane” to take off, and warned launch control to prepare its missiles for a retaliatory attack.

The panic soon subsided after NORAD consulted its satellite data and realized the nuclear warning was little more than a false alarm. Upon further inspection, they discovered that a technician had accidentally run a training program simulating a Soviet attack on the United States. The incident sent shock waves through the international community – Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev even wrote President Jimmy Carter a letter noting the “tremendous danger” caused by the error – but it was not the last time a computer issue led to a nuclear scare. Computer chip failures would later lead to three more false alarms at NORAD in the following year.

<sup>3</sup> Stanislav Petrov was only recently acknowledged and widely recognized for his actions in averting a potential nuclear war in 1983. Among others, he was awarded the Dresden Preis 2013 in Germany.

<sup>4</sup> See in this context also Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>5</sup> “When Generosity Hurts: Bill Gates, Public School Teachers and the Politics of Humiliation,” by Henry A. Giroux, TruthOut, October 5, 2010, <http://truth-out.org/archive/component/k2/item/92120:when-generosity-hurts-bill-gates-public-school-teachers-and-the-politics-of-humiliation>. I thank Brian Ward for having made us aware of this article. See for some of Giroux’s publications, Di Leo, et al., 2013, Giroux, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014b, a, Nikolakaki, 2012.

<sup>6</sup> “The Good News About Nuclear Destruction,” by Shane Connor, WND (formerly WorldNetDaily), August 24, 2006, www.wnd.com/2006/08/37591/. Shane Connor is a consultant and developer of civil defense solutions to government, military, private organizations, and individual families.

<sup>7</sup> This is the topic of Lindner, 2006a, Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict.

<sup>8</sup> Quoted from <http://dirtywars.org/the-book>, Scahill, 2013. See also Scahill, 2007, in an interview in the German newspaper: “Drohnenkrieg der USA: Jeder Tote wird zum Terroristen erklärt,” Daniel Haufler interviews Jeremy Scahill, Frankfurter Rundschau, October 25, 2013, www.fr-online.de/politik/drohnenkrieg-der-usa--jeder-tote-wird-zum-terroristen-erklart-,1472596,24783178.html: “Obama als Ankläger, Richter, Jury und Henker: Die USA führen ihre Kriege mit Drohnen und Propaganda. Ein Verstoß gegen das Völkerrecht, sagt Enthüllungsjournalist Jeremy Scahill.”

<sup>9</sup> Hobbes, 1651.

<sup>10</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 53.

<sup>11</sup> Wyatt-Brown, 1982. See also Wyatt-Brown, 2014. See also Cohen, 1996, Cohen and Nisbett, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1996, Cohen and Vandello, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1998, Leung and Cohen, 2011, Nisbett and Cohen, 1996, Vandello, et al., 2008, Vandello and Cohen, 2003.

<sup>12</sup> “Looking for a Fight: A New History of the Philippine-American War,” by Candice Millard, New York Times, February 17, 2012, www.nytimes.com/2012/02/19/books/review/a-new-history-of-the-philippine-american-war.html?pagewanted=all&\_r=0. Jones, 2012.

<sup>13</sup> Jones, 2012, p. 24.

<sup>14</sup> Jones, 2012, p. 10.

<sup>15</sup> Kagan, 1997. See also political scientist Ernst Fraenkel, 1941, who refers to sociologist Emil Lederer, who argues that the “power state” or “Machtstaat” is distinct from the “regular” legal state or Rechtsstaat, which “has its historical origins in the European aristocratic elite, which still played an important role within European society after the triumph of democracy. This elite acted behind the scene in the 1920s, but considered it necessary to intervene in support of the Nazi Party in the 1930s to prevent a possible socialist takeover,” see Tunander, 2009, p. 56.

<sup>16</sup> “Enormous Sense of Hopelessness and Anger,” by Noam Chomsky and Melissa Parker, Smashing Interviews Magazine, January 21, 2016, <http://smashinginterviews.com/interviews/newsmakers/noam-chomsky-interview-enormous-sense-of-hopelessness-and-anger-reflected-in-appeal-of-trump-and-sanders>:

Noam Chomsky: There are plenty of ways to combat ISIS seriously, but not by Ted Cruz’s carpet bombing. In fact, hit any of these things with a sledgehammer and you’ll make it worse. There’s a long record that shows that when you attack radical insurgencies or even individual terrorists with violence, you usually end up with something much worse. That’s the Ted Cruz reaction.

<sup>17</sup> See a discussion in Lindner, 2009a, Chapter 8: How We Can Reinvent Our Contexts, in the book Emotion and Conflict.

<sup>18</sup> “The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe: Political Pluralism in the OSCE Mediterranean Partners? Testimony by Shibley Telhami,” July 9, 2014, www.sadat.umd.edu/pub/TelhamiTestimony2.pdf. Shibley Telhami is the Anwar Sadat Professor for Peace and Development at the University of Maryland. It is a privilege to have Shibley Telhami as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>19</sup> “Unter falschen Vorzeichen,” by Manfred Ertel, Der Spiegel 39/2013, September 21, 2013, www.spiegel.de/spiegel/print/d-113750825.html, p. 103:

Ich merkte immer mehr, wie ich manipuliert wurde. Sie hörten mir nicht zu, wollten keinen Dialog, sie hatten nur ein Ziel: ihre Meinung zu verteidigen und durchzusetzen.

<sup>20</sup> “A War to End All Innocence: The Enduring Impact of World War I,” by A. O. Scott, New York Times, June 20, 2014, www.nytimes.com/2014/06/22/arts/the-enduring-impact-of-world-war-i.html?\_r=0:

Whether presented as memoir or fiction, post-1918 war writing returns again and again to the same themes and attitudes. Among them are an emphasis on the tedium and terror of ground combat; the privileging of the ordinary soldier’s perspective over that of officers or strategists; a suspicion of authority and a tendency to mock those who wield it; a strong sense of the unbridgeable existential division between those who fight and the people back home; a taste for absurdity, sarcasm and black humor; and the conclusion that, whatever the outcome or justice of the war as a whole, its legacy for the individual veteran will be cynicism and disillusionment.

<sup>21</sup> “Bassem Youssef: Fear Has No Future,” Deutsche Welle, June 30, 2014, www.dw.de/bassem-youssef-fear-has-no-future/a-17747272. Bassem Youssef spoke at the World Conference Center in Bonn in Germany on the occasion of the 2014 Deutsche Welle Global Media Forum.

<sup>22</sup> Identity and the Prism of Perspective, Shibley Telhami at TEDxUMD, July 5, 2014, <https://youtu.be/ywFn-G8DXk4>. This is the description text:

“Why is Barack Obama black?” This is the question Shibley Telhami starts with to understand the roots of identity. He concludes that identity affirms itself when under attack.

It is a privilege to have Shibley Telhami as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>23</sup> See in this context also Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>24</sup> Kalecki, 1943:

Under a laissez-faire system the level of employment depends to a great extent on the so-called state of confidence. If this deteriorates, private investment declines, which results in a fall of output and employment (both directly and through the secondary effect of the fall in incomes upon consumption and investment). This gives the capitalists a powerful indirect control over government policy: everything which may shake the state of confidence must be carefully avoided because it would cause an economic crisis.

<sup>25</sup> Howard Richards in a personal communication on February 9, 2014. See also Richards and Swanger, 2006a, 2008. Richards is a philosopher of social science and scholar of peace and global studies.

Chapter 12

<sup>1</sup> See, among others, the work of Alexander Wendt, 1992, 1999, social constructivist scholar in the field of international relations. I am thankful for having had the chance to communicate with Alexander Wendt, for the first time in 2005.

<sup>2</sup> Schmitt, 1927/2007. See also “Carl Schmitt i Det hvite hus,” by Rune Slagstad, Institutt for samfunnsforskning, Klassekampen, February 11, 2017, www.klassekampen.no/article/20170211/ARTICLE/170219981. Norwegian historian Rune Slagstad describes how populists now challenge, at its core, the modern state with its liberal democracy and the rule of law. See more in note 25 in the Preface. See also Tunander, 2009, in note 98 in Chapter 1. See, furthermore, Kagan, 1997, and Fraenkel, 1941, in note 15 in the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>3</sup> Schmitt, 1927/2007.

<sup>4</sup> Schmitt, 1963/2004.

<sup>5</sup> “Carl Schmitt i Det hvite hus,” by Rune Slagstad, Institutt for samfunnsforskning, Klassekampen, February 11, 2017, www.klassekampen.no/article/20170211/ARTICLE/170219981. See more in note 25 in the Preface. See also Tunander, 2009, in note 98 in Chapter 1. See, furthermore, Kagan, 1997, and Fraenkel, 1941, in note 15 in the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>6</sup> Brinkmann, 2017b.

<sup>7</sup> Wendt, 1992. See his later work Albert, et al., 2010, Wendt, 1999, 2003, 2015, Wendt, et al., 2006.

<sup>8</sup> “The ‘Hero Syndrome,’” by Sergeant Ben D. Cross, Arkansas State Police, School of Law Enforcement Supervision Session XLIII, November 1, 2014, www.cji.edu/site/assets/files/1921/the\_hero\_syndrome.pdf.

<sup>9</sup> Feldman, 2004.

<sup>10</sup> Axelrod, 2006.

<sup>11</sup> Imhof, et al., 2007. See also Nowak and Highfield, 2011.

<sup>12</sup> See, among others, Axelrod, 2006, Liberman, et al., 2004, Imhof, et al., 2007, Nowak and Highfield, 2011. See also Bernstein, 1971, 1973, 1975, 1990, 2000. I thank Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of Bernstein's work and that Bernstein introduced the concept of framing to describe how control of mental frames is used to regulate thinking and behavior in educational contexts. Bernstein describes framing as a mental process and a technique to exclude certain aspects of reality from entering the communication. See also Chong and Druckman, 2007.

<sup>13</sup> Liberman, et al., 2004, Abstract:

Two experiments, one conducted with American college students and one with Israeli pilots and their instructors, explored the predictive power of reputation-based assessments versus the stated "name of the game" (Wall Street Game vs. Community Game) in determining players' responses in an N-move Prisoner's Dilemma. The results of these studies showed that the relevant labeling manipulations exerted far greater impact on the players' choice to cooperate versus defect – both in the first round and overall – than anticipated by the individuals who had predicted their behavior. Reputation-based prediction, by contrast, failed to discriminate cooperators from defectors. A supplementary questionnaire study showed the generality of the relevant short-coming in naïve psychology. The implications of these findings, and the potential contribution of the present methodology to the classic pedagogical strategy of the demonstration experiment, are discussed.

<sup>14</sup> Guala, 2012, Abstract.

<sup>15</sup> Snow and Benford, 1988, p. 213. See also Ryan and Gamson, 2006, p.14:

Like a picture frame, an issue frame marks off some part of the world. Like a building frame, it holds things together. It provides coherence to an array of symbols, images, and arguments, linking them through an underlying organizing idea that suggests what is essential – what consequences and values are at stake. We do not see the frame directly, but infer its presence by its characteristic expressions and language. Each frame gives the advantage to certain ways of talking and thinking, while it places others "out of the picture."

<sup>16</sup> McKinlay and McVittie, 2008.

<sup>17</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>18</sup> Taylor, et al., 2000.

<sup>19</sup> "Journey through Terror," by Peter Taylor, BBC News, April 15, 2008, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/uk\_news/magazine/7347154.stm.

<sup>20</sup> Harald Jäger was born in 1943 and is a former East German Stasi lieutenant colonel who, on November 9, 1989, disobeyed orders and opened up the Bornholmer Straße border crossing, thus being the first to open the Berlin Wall. His final graduation thesis as a diplomated law expert in 1981 was titled Die Bildung der Spezialistentruppen "Sicherheit und Terrorabwehr" in den Grenzzollämtern der Zollverwaltung der DDR als Voraussetzung zur zielgerichteten und differenzierten Einbeziehung der Angehörigen der Zollverwaltung der DDR in das System der Terrorabwehr an den Grenzübergangsstellen der DDR.

<sup>21</sup> Côté, 2000.

<sup>22</sup> West, 2008.

<sup>23</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000. Social scientists Paul H. Ray and Sherry Ruth Anderson, through their surveys, identified three main cultural trends. First, the moderns, the cultural movement that started about 500 years ago and that endorses the "realist" worldview of either big business, big government, or big media, or past socialist, communist, or fascist movements. Then, the first countermovement against the moderns are the traditionals, the religious right and rural populations. The most recent countermovement are the cultural creatives, who value strong ecological sustainability for the planet, support women's issues, personal growth, authenticity, and are wary of big business. The cultural creatives movement is currently flowing together from two branches that both started out around 1960 and initially antagonized each other, namely, the consciousness movement, an inward-oriented movement, focusing on the inner state of the psyche, and the social movement, an outward-oriented movement, focusing on action for peace in the streets. When Ray and Anderson published their work in 2000, in the United States, traditionals comprised about 24 to 26 percent of the adult population (approximately 48 million people), moderns about 47 to 49 percent (approximately 95 million), and cultural creatives are about 26 to 28 percent (approximately 50 million). In the European Union, the cultural creatives were about 30 to 35 percent of the adult population.

<sup>24</sup> Jihad: A Story of the Others, documentary film by Deeyah Khan, <http://fuuse.net/jihad-a-story-of-the-others/>. See also "Popstjernen som slo tilbake," by Hanne Skartveit, VG, September 19, 2015, www.vg.no/nyheter/meninger/islam-debatten/popstjernen-som-slo-tilbake/a/23527457/. VG, Verdens Gang (the course of the world), is a Norwegian tabloid newspaper. It is a privilege to have Deeyah Khan as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>25</sup> Calcutt, 1998.

<sup>26</sup> Lindner, 2006b.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid.

<sup>28</sup> Jasper, 1997.

<sup>29</sup> Galtung, 1971, 1976.

<sup>30</sup> Vambheim, 2011.

<sup>31</sup> Vambheim, 2011, p. 15.

<sup>32</sup> "Wir lieben den Tod," by Adel S. Elias, Der Spiegel 43/1997, October 20, 1997, www.spiegel.de/spiegel/print/d-8805772.html, pp. 204–209:

SPIEGEL: Eminenz, bei einer Aktion der Hisbollah Mitte September wurde Ihr 18 Jahre alter Sohn Hadi von israelischen Soldaten getötet. Was empfinden Sie über diesen Verlust – Haß oder Trauer?

Nasrallah: Mein Sohn wurde nicht getötet, während er auf der Straße herumlungerte. Dieser Mudschahid stieß mit dem Gewehr in der Hand auf den Feind. Er marschierte entschlossen und selbstbewußt an die Front, durchdrungen vom tiefen Verlangen, den Feind zu vernichten. Sein Tod ist kein Sieg für die Israelis, sondern ein Sieg für die Hisbollah. Wir sind stolz auf diesen Gefallenen. Und ich als Generalsekretär der Hisbollah bin glücklich.

SPIEGEL: Auch als Vater, der seinen Sohn verloren hat?

Nasrallah: Wenn ich Sie glauben machen wollte, der Verlust meines Sohnes schmerze mich nicht, würde ich lügen. Aber Sie müssen die Dinge so sehen: Er ist als Märtyrer gestorben, und das ist das höchste Gefühl der Freude, das einen Vater beseelen kann. Wir schätzen und ehren die Märtyrer ganz außerordentlich, sie sind für uns wie Heilige.

SPIEGEL: Sind Ihre politischen Motive stärker als die Gefühle eines Vaters?

Nasrallah: Mein Freund, hören Sie genau zu. Was ich jetzt sage, ist religiös begründet: Wir sind Gottesgläubige, und nach unserem Glauben beginnt der Märtyrer ein neues, viel schöneres Leben im Paradies. Er nimmt eine besondere Stellung bei Gott ein. Während des Jüngsten Gerichts, wenn die Guten und die Schlechten vor Gott stehen, hat der Märtyrer ein Recht auf Fürsprache für seine Familienangehörigen.

SPIEGEL: Ihr Sohn hat sich also auch für die Familie geopfert?

Nasrallah: Hadi wird uns ganz sicher zu sich ins Paradies holen, allen Märtyrerfamilien wird diese Freude zuteil werden. Es ist das höchste Glück für uns, wenn wir unser kurzes irdisches Leben verlassen und es uns vergönnt ist, neben Gott, seinem Gesandten und dessen Nachfolgern leben zu dürfen. Ich danke Gott, daß er die Güte hatte, mich zum Mitglied einer Märtyrerfamilie zu machen.

SPIEGEL: Haben Sie Ihren Sohn angestiftet und ermutigt?

Nasrallah: Er hat ganz allein entschieden und freiwillig gehandelt. Hadi war entschlossen, um jeden Preis in die Reihen der Sondereinheiten aufgenommen zu werden, in die Elite des libanesischen Widerstands. Die Männer dieser Truppe erhalten ein besonders hartes militärisches Training, das fast 36 Monate dauert. Meine einzige Beteiligung bestand darin, daß meine Frau und ich seiner Entscheidung nicht im Wege standen, sondern sie respektierten.

SPIEGEL: Drei Jahre Ausbildung – das heißt, Ihr Sohn wurde schon im Alter von 15 Jahren Kämpfer. Kann man eine so schwerwiegende Entscheidung einem Kind überlassen? Hatten Sie keine Skrupel?

Nasrallah: Nein, wir betrachten unsere Söhne in diesem Alter als angehende Männer, die ihre Entscheidungen allein treffen können. Und ich muß Ihnen gestehen, daß ich sehr froh und glücklich über seinen Entschluß war. Der Weg des Widerstands ist steinig und dornig. Jeder dieser jungen Männer weiß, daß der von ihm eingeschlagene Weg der Weg des Märtyrers ist. Jeder von ihnen rechnet mit dem Tod und sehnt sich nach diesem Martyrium. Wir fürchten den Tod nicht, wir lieben ihn und dürsten danach.

SPIEGEL: Die Israelis haben frohlockt, als Ihr Sohn ums Leben kam. Für sie ist sein Tod ein Sieg im Kampf gegen den Terrorismus.

Nasrallah: Die Zionisten sollten sich nicht zu früh freuen. Sie sollten den Märtyrertod meines Sohnes Hadi richtig verstehen. Sie stehen Widerstandskämpfern gegenüber, die den Tod nicht fürchten, sondern ihn herausfordern. Die Führer der Hisbollah frönen nicht einem angenehmen Leben im Luxus. Ich verrate Ihnen ein Geheimnis: Mein Sohn Hadi ist nicht der einzige Sohn eines Hisbollah-Führers, der in den Reihen des Widerstands kämpft. Viele Söhne von Hisbollah-Verantwortlichen stehen an vorderster Front.

SPIEGEL: Nach dem Tod Ihres Sohnes drohten Sie, jetzt werde ein erbarmungsloser Krieg zwischen der Hisbollah und Israel ausbrechen. Wie haben Sie das gemeint? Werden Sie israelische Politiker oder deren Söhne als Zielscheibe auswählen?

Nasrallah: Wir sind keine Mörder, sondern Männer des Widerstands. Wir werden den Feind überall verfolgen. In einem erbarmungslosen Krieg sind alle Mittel erlaubt. Wir werden den Besatzern den Boden unter ihren Füßen zur Hölle machen. Palästina kann nur von Männern befreit werden, die zum Märtyrertod bereit sind – wie mein Sohn.

SPIEGEL: Ihr ältester Sohn, wie es auf arabisch heißt, ein Teil Ihres Herzens und das Licht Ihrer Augen, ist tot. Sie haben noch einen Sohn, würden Sie auch den opfern?

Nasrallah: Wenn mein zweiter Sohn es so will, gern. Er ist gerade 15 Jahre alt geworden und hat den Wunsch geäußert, den Weg seines älteren Bruders zu gehen und Märtyrer zu werden. Ich möchte mich ihm nicht in den Weg stellen.

SPIEGEL: Und was sagt Ihre Frau dazu?

Nasrallah: Ich wollte nur die Gewißheit haben, daß der Entschluß meines Sohnes wirklich feststeht. Seine Mutter war schneller als ich: Sie sagte, sie wäre glücklich, wenn er den Weg seines älteren Bruders einschlagen würde.

<sup>33</sup> Galtung, 1996, Galtung, et al., 2000. See also Galtung's description of the Dichotomy-Manicheism-Armageddon (DMT) syndrome at "Cultural Peace: Some Characteristics," by Johan Galtung, Transcend articles, October 12, 2003, www.transcend.org/files/article121.html. See also "Expert Colloquy – Dialogue Serving Intercultural and Inter-Religious Communication – Strasbourg," Council of Europe, October 7–9, 2002, interview with Johan Galtung, www.coe.int/T/E/Com/Files/Events/2002-10-Intercultural-Dialogue/Interview\_galtung.asp. See, furthermore, LeShan, 1992.

<sup>34</sup> Juergensmeyer, 2000, pp. 184–195.

<sup>35</sup> Vambheim, 2011, p. 15.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid.

<sup>37</sup> Galtung, et al., 2000.

<sup>38</sup> See the Inglehart–Welzel Cultural Map – World Values Survey wave 6 (2010 – 2014) on www.worldvaluessurvey.org/images/Cultural\_map\_WVS6\_2015.jpg, and explained on www.worldvaluessurvey.org/WVSContents.jsp as follows:

Analysis of WVS data made by political scientists Ronald Inglehart and Christian Welzel asserts that there are two major dimensions of cross cultural variation in the world: Traditional values versus Secular-rational values and Survival values versus Self-expression values.

The global cultural map shows how scores of societies are located on these two dimensions. Moving upward on this map reflects the shift from Traditional values to Secular-rational and moving rightward reflects the shift from Survival values to Self-expression values.

Traditional values emphasize the importance of religion, parent-child ties, deference to authority and traditional family values. People who embrace these values also reject divorce, abortion, euthanasia and suicide. These societies have high levels of national pride and a nationalistic outlook.

Secular-rational values have the opposite preferences to the traditional values. These societies place less emphasis on religion, traditional family values and authority. Divorce, abortion, euthanasia and suicide are seen as relatively acceptable. (Suicide is not necessarily more common.)

Survival values place emphasis on economic and physical security. It is linked with a relatively ethnocentric outlook and low levels of trust and tolerance.

Self-expression values give high priority to environmental protection, growing tolerance of foreigners, gays and lesbians and gender equality, and rising demands for participation in decision-making in economic and political life.

Note also Inglehart and Welzel, 2005, and Norris and Inglehart, 2011.

<sup>39</sup> Admiration for Nelson Mandela's path, clearly, stands in contrast to the revulsion at the brutal concentration camps that his fellow brothers had implemented. See Trewheela, 2009.

<sup>40</sup> "What Americans Really Think About Muslims and Islam," by Shibley Telhami, Brookings Institution Press, December 9, 2015, www.brookings.edu/blogs/markaz/posts/2015/12/09-what-americans-think-of-muslims-and-islam-telhami#.Vmhur0cUDt8.twitter. Telhami finds that the views of two important American constituencies on Middle East policy, Evangelicals and American Jews, are particularly contrasting:

Among those identifying themselves as Jewish Americans (5 percent of the sample), only 20 percent say that Islamic and Western religious and cultural tradition are incompatible. This contrasts with 55 percent of Evangelical Christians. While 43 percent of Jewish Americans have favorable views of Islam (which is slightly higher than the national total of 37 percent), only 18 percent of Evangelicals feel the same. And 55 percent of Jewish Americans express favorable views of Muslims, in contrast to only 38 percent of Evangelicals.

It is a privilege to have Shibley Telhami as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>41</sup> Asal, et al., 2013.

<sup>42</sup> "Defining Christian Zionism," by Donald Wagner, www.christianzionism.org/articlesN.asp#Wagner02. Reverend Dr. Donald Wagner, an ordained Presbyterian minister, is associate professor of Religion and Middle Eastern Studies, and executive director of the Center for Middle Eastern Studies at North Park University. He served from 1980 to 1989 as national director of the Palestine Human Rights Campaign. He is the author of Anxious for Armageddon (1995), and Dying in the Land of Promise: Palestine and Palestinian Christianity from Pentecost to 2000 (revised edition, 2003). I thank Sam Bahour for making me aware of this text. See also Hoel, 2014.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid.

<sup>44</sup> “How to (Almost) Eliminate the Partisan Divide on the Middle East,” by Shibley Telhami, Washington Post, December 14, 2015, www.washingtonpost.com/news/monkey-cage/wp/2015/12/14/how-to-almost-eliminate-the-partisan-divide-on-the-middle-east/. It is a privilege to have Shibley Telhami as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. He explains that, overall, 13 percent of Americans identify as Evangelical and 11 percent as non-Evangelical Born-Again Christians, with Evangelicals being overwhelmingly white, while non-Evangelical Born-Again Christians include 20 percent African Americans and 10 percent Hispanics.

<sup>45</sup> See also Juergensmeyer, 2000.

<sup>46</sup> Summary of the violence and disruption statistics of 2015, gathered by the United States National Abortion Federation (NAF), <http://5aa1b2xfmfh2e2mk03kk8rsx.wpengine.netdna-cdn.com/wp-content/uploads/2015-NAF-Violence-Disruption-Stats.pdf>.

<sup>47</sup> “2 Abortion Foes Behind Planned Parenthood Videos Are Indicted,” by Manny Fernandez, New York Times, January 25, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/01/26/us/2-abortion-foes-behind-planned-parenthood-videos-are-indicted.html.

<sup>48</sup> Summary of the violence and disruption statistics of 2015, gathered by the United States National Abortion Federation (NAF), <http://5aa1b2xfmfh2e2mk03kk8rsx.wpengine.netdna-cdn.com/wp-content/uploads/2015-NAF-Violence-Disruption-Stats.pdf>.

<sup>49</sup> “Expert Colloquy – Dialogue Serving Intercultural and Inter-Religious Communication – Strasbourg,” Council of Europe, October 7–9, 2002, interview with Johan Galtung, www.coe.int/T/E/Com/Files/Events/2002-10-Intercultural-Dialogue/Interview\_galtung.asp. See also Galtung, 1996, Galtung, et al., 2000. See, furthermore, the description of the Dichotomy-Manicheism-Armageddon (DMT) syndrome in “Cultural Peace: Some Characteristics,” by Johan Galtung, Transcend articles, October 12, 2003, www.transcend.org/files/article121.html. See also LeShan, 1992.

<sup>50</sup> “Ted Cruz’s Campaign Is Fueled by a Dominionist Vision for America,” commentary by John Fea, Washington Post, February 4, 2016, www.washingtonpost.com/national/religion/ted-cruzs-campaign-is-fueled-by-a-dominionist-vision-for-america-commentary/2016/02/04/86373158-cb6a-11e5-b9ab-26591104bb19\_story.html?utm\_term=.bc4329410da8.

<sup>51</sup> “Mecca Makeover: How the Hajj Has Become Big Business for Saudi Arabia,” by Riazat Butt in Mecca, The Guardian, November 14, 2010, www.theguardian.com/world/2010/nov/14/mecca-hajj-saudi-arabia.

<sup>52</sup> “The Architects of the War on Islam,” by Maniza Naqvi, 3 Quarks Daily, August 6, 2012, www.3quarksdaily.com/3quarksdaily/2012/08/the-architects-of-the-war-on-islam.html#comments. I thank Judit Révész for making me aware of this article. Naqvi writes:

This is addressed to Muslims who think that Islam is under attack: They are right. Just take a look at the images of the House that Abraham built, the Ka’aba and see how progresses that ancient attack. Just look at the transformation of the environs of the Ka’aba and the Haram Shareef into a garish resort rivaling Las Vegas or Atlantic City. Just look, at the transformation of the sacred environs of the Haram Shareef into a shopping mall and Disney world – to understand the war on Islam and who is responsible for waging it. Just look at this and see how Islam has been trafficked as though it were a bonded slave, dressed up in bells and baubles to be whipped and sold in the marketplace. Who is it, Muslims should ask themselves, who has undertaken to do this and has destroyed and defaced the symbols, the reminders, the graves, the homes of the Prophet and his family? And is this okay with them that this should happen to their most revered place of worship?

Maniza Naqvi was born in Lahore Pakistan in 1960, and now works at the World Bank in Washington DC, U.S.A, also working in the areas of peace, poverty alleviation, demobilization of militaries and building good governance at community levels in post conflict countries, see www.sawnet.org/books/authors.php?Naqvi+Maniza.

<sup>53</sup> Abu-Rabi, 2007, p. 33.

<sup>54</sup> “Expert Colloquy – Dialogue Serving Intercultural and Inter-Religious Communication – Strasbourg,” Council of Europe, October 7–9, 2002, interview with Johan Galtung, www.coe.int/T/E/Com/Files/Events/2002-10-Intercultural-Dialogue/Interview\_galtung.asp.

<sup>55</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, the section “Apologies from the world! What the world can do for America,” in Chapter 5: Humiliation and Conflict, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 102–105.

<sup>56</sup> Acres of Diamonds, was delivered by Russell Conwell over 5000 times at various times and places from 1900–1925, see audio and text on www.americanrhetoric.com/speeches/rconwellacresofdiamonds.htm. His view of poverty was somewhat in resonance with defenders of the Indian caste system:

Some men say, “Don’t you sympathize with the poor people?” of course I do, or else I would not have been lecturing these years. I won’t give in but what I sympathize with the poor, but the number of poor who are to be with is very small. To sympathize with a man whom God has punished for his sins, thus to help him when God would still continue a just punishment, is to do wrong, no doubt about it, and we do that more than we help those who are deserving. While we should sympathize with God’s poor—that is, those who cannot help themselves – let us remember that is not a poor person in the United States who was not made poor by his own shortcomings, or by the shortcomings of someone else. It is all wrong to be poor, anyhow. Let us give in to that argument and pass that to one side.

<sup>57</sup> Jones, 2006.

<sup>58</sup> See, for instance, philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>59</sup> Father Athanase Seromba, who led the Nyange parish massacre and was sentenced to fifteen years in jail, was asked by one of the refugees: “‘Father, can’t you pray for us?’ Seromba replied: ‘Is the God of the Tutsi still alive?’ Later, he would order a bulldozer to push down the church walls on those inside and then urge militias to invade the building and finish off the survivors,” in “For Rwandans, the Pope’s Apology Must Be Unbearable,” by Martin Kimani, The Guardian, March 29, 2010, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/belief/2010/mar/29/pope-catholics-rwanda-genocide-church.

<sup>60</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>61</sup> Kaufman, 2001.

<sup>62</sup> Rashid, 2008. See also Tunander, 2009, and the discussion of Morgenthau earlier in this book.

<sup>63</sup> Vambheim, 2011, p. 15.

<sup>64</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 76.

<sup>65</sup> “Former Nuclear Blast Sites in Russia’s Murmansk Region to Become a National Park,” by Alexey Pavlov, translated by Maria Kaminskaya, Bellona, January 23, 2011, <http://bellona.org/news/future-energy-system/2011-01-former-nuclear-blast-sites-in-russias-murmansk-region-to-become-a-national-park>.

<sup>66</sup> Vambheim, 2016. I had the privilege of being one of Vambheim’s opponents when he defended his doctorate, and it is a privilege to have him on the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>67</sup> Vambheim, 2011, p. 18, italics in original.

<sup>68</sup> Chödrön, 2001. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of the work of Prema Chödrön.

<sup>69</sup> Chödrön, 2001, Chapter 17: Bodhisattva Activity:

This is the picture I prefer: In the middle of the river, with the shoreline out of view, the raft begins to disintegrate. We find ourselves with absolutely nothing to hold on to. From our conventional standpoint, this is scary and dangerous. However, one small shift of perspective will tell us that having nothing to hold on to is liberating. We could have faith that we won’t drown. Holding on to nothing means we can relax with this fluid, dynamic world. The prajnaparamita is the key to this training. Without prajnaparamita – or unconditional bodhichitta – the other five activities can be used to give us the illusion of ground. The foundation of the prajnaparamita is mindfulness, an open-ended inquiry into our experience. We question without the intention of finding permanent solutions. We cultivate a mind that is ready and inquisitive, not satisfied with limited or biased views. It’s like lying in bed before dawn and hearing rain on the roof. This simple sound can be disappointing because we were planning a picnic. It can be pleasing because our garden is so dry. But the flexible mind of prajna doesn’t draw conclusions of good or bad. It perceives the sound without adding anything extra, without judgments of happy or sad. It is with this unfixated mind of prajna that we practice generosity, discipline, enthusiasm, patience, and meditation, moving from narrow-mindedness to flexibility and fearlessness. The essence of generosity is letting go. Pain is always a sign that we are holding on to something – usually ourselves. When we feel unhappy, when we feel inadequate, we get stingy; we hold on tight. Generosity is an activity that loosens us up. By offering whatever we can – a dollar, a flower, a word of encouragement – we are training in letting go. As Suzuki Roshi put it: “To give is nonattachment, just not to attach to anything is to give.”

Chapter 19: Heightened Neurosis:

Instead of spending our lives tensing up, as if we were in the dentist’s chair, we learn that we can connect with the freshness of the moment and relax.

Chapter 22: The In-Between State:

...”right” is as extreme a view as “wrong.” They both block our innate wisdom... we evolve beyond the little me who continually seeks zones of comfort. We gradually discover that we are big enough to hold something that is neither lie nor truth, neither pure nor impure, neither bad nor good. But first we have to appreciate the richness of the groundless state and hang in there.

<sup>70</sup> Chödrön, 2001, Chapter 13: Meeting the Enemy:

The far enemy of equanimity is prejudice. We get self-righteous about our beliefs and set ourselves solidly for or against others. We take sides. We become closed-minded. We have enemies. This polarization is an obstacle to the genuine equanimity that informs compassionate action. If we wish to alleviate injustice and suffering, we have to do it with an unprejudiced mind. The heart practices set us up to become intimately acquainted with the near and far enemies. Our training is almost like inviting them to visit. As we move closer to our genuine ability to rejoice, we get to know our jealousy and resentment. As we start... Equanimity is bigger than our usual limited perspective. That we hope to get what we want and fear losing what we have – this describes our habitual predicament. The Buddhist teachings identify eight variations on this tendency to hope and fear: pleasure and pain, praise and blame, gain and loss, fame and disgrace. As long as we’re caught in one of these extremes, the potential for the other is always there. They just chase each other around. No lasting happiness comes from being caught in this cycle of attraction and aversion. We can never get life to work out so that we eliminate everything we fear and end up with all the goodies. Therefore the warrior-bodhisattva cultivates equanimity, the vast mind that doesn’t narrow reality into for and against, liking and disliking. To cultivate equanimity we practice catching ourselves when we feel attraction or aversion, before it hardens into grasping or negativity. We train in staying with the soft spot and use our biases as stepping-stones for connecting with the confusion of others. Strong emotions are useful in this regard. Whatever arises, no matter how bad it feels, can be used to extend our kinship to others who... The essence of bravery is being without self-deception. However, it’s not so easy to take a straight look at what we do. Seeing ourselves clearly is initially uncomfortable and embarrassing. As we train in clarity and steadfastness, we see things we’d prefer to deny – judgmentalness, pettiness, arrogance. These are not sins but temporary and workable habits of mind. The more we get to know them, the more they lose their power. This is how we come to trust that our basic nature is utterly simple, free of struggle between good and bad.

<sup>71</sup> Dignicommunication – a term coined by Evelin Lindner on November 2, 2014. See more on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/whoweare.php#digniwords.

<sup>72</sup> Habitat III took place in Quito, Ecuador, October 17–20, 2016, as the major United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development. Presidents, ministers, and other representatives from 170 countries, 200 mayors and delegations from 500 cities, met to discuss and adopt the New Urban Agenda, a global strategy for 21st century sustainable urbanism. After this conference, many questions remain unanswered: How will cities be able to fully implement the provisions of the recently concluded Paris agreement on the environment and carry the costs involved? What about standing up against the increasing malpractice of grabbing and transforming public space to serve commercial interests? What about the urban-rural divide? Activists are concerned over the reduction of the Habitat Agenda to a solely urban focus and call to “give adequate priority to the continuity – indeed, the symbiosis – between rural and urban areas,” see “A Needed Cornerstone for Habitat III: The Right to the City,” by Isabel Pascual, Citiscope, February 15, 2016, <http://citiscope.org/habitatIII/commentary/2016/02/needed-cornerstone-habitat-iii-right-city>. I thank Kjell Skjellstad for making me aware of this publication. See also “Governments and Social Movements Disagree on Future of Cities,” by Emilio Godoy, Inter Press Service (IPS), October 25, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/10/governments-and-social-movements-disagree-on-future-of-cities/:

The Habitat III accords “cannot generate the urban reforms that we need, such as integral access to land with services. That can only be achieved through struggle. It is local political participation that makes it possible to press for urban reform,” Isabella Goncalves, an activist with the Brazilian NGO Brigadas Populares, told IPS... The Habitat International Coalition criticized the New Urban Agenda’s “narrow vision,” and lamented that Habitat III had forgotten about protecting people from forced eviction and about the need to fight the shortage of housing and to achieve the right to universal housing... It also urged countries to “regulate global financial transactions; end or limit opaque speculative financial instruments; steeply tax real-estate speculation; regulate rents; enhance the social tenure, production and financing of housing and habitat; and prevent privatization of the commons, which is subject to attack under the neoliberal development model.”

<sup>73</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith

Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

<sup>74</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>75</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017. See also, “The Grim State of South Africa One Year after Nelson Mandela,” by Andrew Kenny, The Spectator, December 6, 2014, www.spectator.co.uk/2014/12/beyond-the-rainbow/#.

<sup>76</sup> See my discussion of the globalization process and its consequences in Lindner, 2006a, pp. 44–45:

Conservatives around the world may insist, for example, that bad people deserve to be called enemy. This word, and related words such as war, soldier, and victory, will not disappear because some soft-hearted dreamers wish it. These words are losing their meaning because they no longer describe reality. When a tree dies, it bears no more fruit. Likewise, the reality that bore words such as enemy, war, and victory is currently dying, through globalization, whether we support this development or not.

<sup>77</sup> Kury, 2012.

<sup>78</sup> See, among many other publications, Schwarz, 1997, Williams, 2000.

<sup>79</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>80</sup> See, among others, Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy, where I spell out the opportunities for change.

Chapter 13

<sup>1</sup> Hardisty, 1999, p. 6:

...a strong commitment to individual rights and freedoms for everyone, even my political enemies, has helped me in the study of the right. It helps to block my urge to demonize the rightist who demonize feminists and lesbians...

I thank Linda Hartling for having made me aware of Hardisty’s research already many years ago. See also an article highlighting that supporters of Donald Trump are not the caricatures journalists depict, but middle class: “Dangerous Idiots: How the Liberal Media Elite Failed Working-Class Americans,” by Sarah Smarsh, The Guardian, October 13, 2016, www.theguardian.com/media/2016/oct/13/liberal-media-bias-working-class-americans. See also “President Obama Admits His Biggest Mistake: Arrogance,” by Chris Cillizza, Washington Post, November 17, 2015, www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-fix/wp/2015/11/17/president-obamas-biggest-mistake-in-office-thinking-you-can-separate-politics-from-policy/?utm\_term=.a92c265fc1ff.

<sup>2</sup> Sociologist and philosopher Theodor Adorno is known for having shed light on authoritarianism. Three core components were originally listed by Adorno, et al., 1950, p. 148:

- authoritarian submission (submissive, uncritical attitude toward idealized moral authorities of the in-group)
- authoritarian aggression (a general aggressiveness, directed against various persons, which is perceived to be sanctioned by the established authorities)
- conventionalism (adherence to conventional, middle-class values)

See also Altemeyer, 1981, 1996, 2003, 2009, and the archive of Altemeyer’s original Global Change Game Website, <http://web.archive.org/web/20020805124207/www.mts.net/~gcg/index.html>. See Stenner, 2005, for more recent work on authoritarianism, as being latent until activated by a perception of threat (social threat theory), or Hetherington and Weiler, 2009, on authoritarian views being expressed under threat. See Suhay, 2015, for the insight that an increase in threat may trigger political behavior, and that physical threats such as terrorism may even lead non-authoritarians to behave like authoritarians, while more abstract social threats, such as the erosion of social norms or demographic changes, do not have that effect. See for a readable summary, “The Rise of American Authoritarianism,” by Amanda Taub, Vox, March 1, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/3/1/11127424/trump-authoritarianism#change, where Jonathan Haidt speaks of a button being pushed that says: “In case of moral threat, lock down the borders, kick out those who are different, and punish those who are morally deviant.” The article goes on to describe the five policies that authoritarians generally and Donald Trump voters specifically were likely to support:

- using military force over diplomacy against countries that threaten the United States
- changing the Constitution to bar citizenship for children of illegal immigrants
- imposing extra airport checks on passengers who appear to be of Middle Eastern descent in order to curb terrorism
- requiring all citizens to carry a national ID card at all times to show to a police officer on request, to curb terrorism
- allowing the federal government to scan all phone calls for calls to any number linked to terrorism.

I thank William M. Lafferty for making me aware of this article

See also “The Best Predictor of Trump Support Isn’t Income, Education, or Age. It’s Authoritarianism,” by Matthew MacWilliams, Vox, February 23, 2016, www.vox.com/2016/2/23/11099644/trump-support-authoritarianism.

In his 2016 campaign to become president of the United States, Donald Trump skillfully targeted the fears related to terrorism and immigration among authoritarians, focusing less on topics such as abortion or small government, thus following the path to success scripted in Hetherington and Suhay, 2011.

See, furthermore, Hardisty, 1999, or “Donald Trump’s Presidential Run Began in an Effort to Gain Stature,” by Maggie Haberman and Alexander Burns, March 12, 2016, New York Times, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/13/us/politics/donald-trump-campaign.html?smprod=nytcore-ipad&smid=nytcore-ipad-share. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article, and of Hardisty’s work already many years ago.

See also an article highlighting that supporters of Donald Trump are average middle class, “Dangerous Idiots: How the Liberal Media Elite Failed Working-Class Americans,” by Sarah Smarsh, The Guardian, October 13, 2016, www.theguardian.com/media/2016/oct/13/liberal-media-bias-working-class-americans.

Interestingly, views on parenting styles are the strongest predictors of authoritarianism; see the work on parenting styles by Feldman, 2003, 2013, or Hetherington and Weiler, 2009, and compare it with the work by Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c. The rise of ideals of equal dignity creates alternatives that were not present in the past, when, for instance, spanking was universally accepted as proper pedagogy, and erodes boundaries that once were fixed. It seems that authoritarians have stronger gag reflexes than liberals and react with strong disgust, among others, to homosexual orientations, see Terrizzi, et al., 2010. After 9/11, “the disgusting terrorist” was constructed using the performativity of disgust, see, for instance, Sara Ahmed, 2004. Ideologies are being experienced and embodied, they are not simply ideas or concepts, see Wilce, 2009.

Listen to The United States of Anxiety, Episode 7: This Is Your Brain on Politics, WNYC (nonprofit, noncommercial, public radio stations located in New York City), November 3, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/united-states-of-anxiety-podcast-episode-7. In this WNYC broadcast the field of biopolitics is being explored, the biology of political differences, see, among others, French, et al., 2014, Hibbing, et al., 2014, Wagner, et al., 2015. Biological information systems seem to play a role in forming differences between conservatives and liberals. Conservatives respond differently to fear than liberals and lock onto negative images more, while liberals seek novelty, new and pleasurable stimuli. In short: conservatives are scared, liberals are creative. The journalists collaborated with researchers for a pilot study that showed that those higher on the stress hormone cortisol voted less, while the cortisol baseline for Trump voters was twice as high as compared to Hillary Clinton voters.

<sup>3</sup> “Remembering Ireland’s 1916 Easter Rising,” by Mairead Maguire, Nobel Peace Laureate, TRANSCEND Media Service, April 11, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/04/remembering-irelands-1916-easter-rising/.

<sup>4</sup> For instance, “corruption committed in the name of good ends,” Caldero and Crank, 2011, p. 2. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book. See also Hartling and Lindner, 2017.

<sup>5</sup> Wambacq and Ciocan, 2011, p. 233. See Nietzsche, 1998, in Zarathustra: X. WAR AND WARRIORS:

By our best enemies we do not want to be spared, nor by those either whom we love from the very heart... My brethren in war! I love you from the very heart. I am, and was ever, your counterpart. And I am also your best enemy.

<sup>6</sup> I thank Carol Smaldino for making me aware of the book by Ryan Stevenson, 2015, where he describes the experience of “brokenness,” just as all of us are broken from the experience of being human.

<sup>7</sup> Read on Friederike Nadig on www.bpb.de/geschichte/deutsche-geschichte/grundgesetz-und-parlamentarischer-rat/39112/friederike-nadig-spd. Article 4, paragraph 3 of the Constitution of Germany (The Basic Law for the Federal Republic of Germany, German: Grundgesetz für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland) says: „Niemand darf gegen sein Gewissen zum Kriegsdienst mit der Waffe gezwungen werden” (No one may be compelled against his conscience to render military service under arms). Friederike Nadig (1897 – 1970), member of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, pushed for equal rights for men and women, particularly, for equal pay and equal rights of illegitimate and legitimate children. In addition, she was one of the most active proponents of the right to conscientious objection. The Federal Republic of Germany was the first country in the world to include to right of conscientious objection into its constitution. See also Sitter, 1995.

<sup>8</sup> Soldaten und Verweigerer: “Wir waren die Ersten!” documentary film by Carsten Günther, Das Erste, 2011. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>9</sup> Syrische Flüchtlinge: Kein Asyl für Kriegsdienstverweigerer, by Arnd Henze, Das Erste, May 10, 2017, www.tagesschau.de/inland/asyl-muenster-urteil-101.html:

Belehrung über “soldatische Pflicht”: Der Soldat muss die menschliche Regung der Furcht überwinden. (...) Furcht vor persönlicher Gefahr entschuldigt eine Tat nicht, wenn die soldatische Pflicht verlangt, die Gefahr zu bestehen.

<sup>10</sup> I appreciate the approach of Dan Baum, 2013, who provides the reader with a deeper understanding of the reasons for why people love weapons. I thank Michael Greene for making me aware of this book. It is a privilege to have Michael Greene as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>11</sup> “President Obama Admits His Biggest Mistake: Arrogance,” by Chris Cillizza, Washington Post, November 17, 2015, www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-fix/wp/2015/11/17/president-obamas-biggest-mistake-in-office-thinking-you-can-separate-politics-from-policy/?utm\_term=.a92c265fc1ff.

<sup>12</sup> See, among others, Obama, 2004, and Fanon, 1952/1967, 1961/1963.

<sup>13</sup> “Obama Regrets His Attack on ‘Stupid’ Police for ‘Racist’ Arrest of Harvard Scholar,” by Mail Foreign Service, Daily Mail, July 25, 2009, www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-1201199/Obama-regrets-attack-stupid-police-racist-arrest-Harvard-scholar.html. See Obama: I Don’t Know All The Facts But The Police Acted Stupid!, Fox News, posted on YouTube on July 23, 2009, <https://youtu.be/qYUrY2GtBfc>.

<sup>14</sup> “But I tell you, love your enemies, bless those who curse you, do good to those who hate you, and pray for those who mistreat you and persecute you,” this sentence is quoted from the King James Version of the Bible, and it appears in the 44th verse of the fifth chapter of the Gospel of Matthew in the New Testament of the Bible as part of the Sermon on the Mount.

<sup>15</sup> Marquardt, 2015.

<sup>16</sup> John Bolton in a personal communication to his supporters on March 12, 2014.

<sup>17</sup> Michelle Fine and Halkovic, 2014, p. 58:

Opatow, 2011, in extending Deutsch’s theorizing, has demonstrated that these distinct justice frameworks have profound consequences for influencing a nation’s, community’s, or person’s scope of justice, arguing that justice principles of deserving are extended only to those who are considered to be a part of one’s own moral community. Thus, the narrower one’s sense of community is, the narrower is one’s scope of justice.

See also Opatow, 1995. I thank Morton Deutsch for having introduced me to Michelle Fine and Susan Opatow in 2002, and for the great privilege of being able to learn from all since then.

<sup>18</sup> Hoffman, et al., 2015.

<sup>19</sup> “Inverted refrigerator,” quoted in Vambheim, 2016, p. 87, as a term coined by social anthropologist Thomas Hylland Eriksen.

<sup>20</sup> “The Coalition of Transformation vs. the Coalition of Restoration,” by Ronald Brownstein, The Atlantic, November 21, 2012, www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2012/11/the-coalition-of-transformation-vs-the-coalition-of-restoration/265512/.

<sup>21</sup> On the evening of November 13, 2015, a series of coordinated terrorist attacks occurred in Paris, France. 130 people were killed. The so-called Islamic State claimed responsibility for the attacks.

<sup>22</sup> Pamela Geller, in a communication to her list subscribers, November 16, 2015.

<sup>23</sup> Wyatt-Brown, 1982. See also Wyatt-Brown, 2014, and Cohen, 1996, Cohen and Nisbett, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1996, Cohen and Vandello, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1998, Leung and Cohen, 2011, Nisbett and Cohen, 1996, Vandello, et al., 2008, Vandello and Cohen, 2003.

<sup>24</sup> Wyatt-Brown, 2005, p. 2.

<sup>25</sup> Nisbett and Cohen, 1996.

<sup>26</sup> Fischer, 1989, p. 843.

<sup>27</sup> Wyatt-Brown, 1982. See also Wyatt-Brown, 2014, and Cohen, 1996, Cohen and Nisbett, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1996, Cohen and Vandello, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1998, Leung and Cohen, 2011, Nisbett and Cohen, 1996, Vandello, et al., 2008, Vandello and Cohen, 2003.

<sup>28</sup> “Donald Trump: The Best US President for Global Peace with His ‘Coherent’ Foreign Policy,” by Leo Semashko, supported by several signatories, December 3, 2016, Peace for Harmony, http://peacefromharmony.org/?cat=en\_c&key=685. The authors quote Martin Luther King Jr. saying “We must shift the arms race into a peace race,” and then continue: “This shift was began by Donald Trump, making America great again, saving it from the ruins and inspiring peace globalization instead of war globalization.”

<sup>29</sup> The authors of the above quoted text on the Peace for Harmony site refer to Donald J. Trump’s Foreign Policy Speech, April 27, 2016, www.donaldjtrump.com/press-releases/donald-j.-trump-foreign-policy-speech.

<sup>30</sup> “The Messy Truth,” by Team Van Jones, November 06, 2016, www.vanjones.net/the\_messy\_truth\_trailer:

In America today, the establishment is on the ropes, the rebels are on the rise, and now the people are ready to talk. People aren't just talking, they're screaming at the top of their lungs. But we can't seem to listen. In the midst of all the inflammation and toxicity of the election season, we've all lost the ability to step into someone else's shoes and see each other as human beings. We don't all have to agree, but we can learn a lot from each other. At a certain point people might surprise themselves and say something they hadn't already thought or heard.

According to Jones, Donald Trump as a leader is "much worse" than many people are ready to accept, but many of his voters – except those Jones calls "bigots" – are "much better," namely, those who found some of Donald Trump's remarks "disgusting but not disqualifying." See his interview with Trevor Noah on The Daily Show, December 5, 2016, www.cc.com/full-episodes/np0e6l/the-daily-show-with-trevor-noah-december-5--2016---van-jones-season-22-ep-22032.

<sup>31</sup> The Danger of a Single Story, TED talk by Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, October 7, 2009, <https://youtu.be/D9Ihs241zeg>:

Our lives, our cultures, are composed of many overlapping stories. Novelist Chimamanda Adichie tells the story of how she found her authentic cultural voice – and warns that if we hear only a single story about another person or country, we risk a critical misunderstanding.

I thank Drew Pham for making me aware of this talk.

<sup>32</sup> "This Is What 'Whitelash' Looks Like," by John Blake, CNN, November 20, 2016, <http://edition.cnn.com/2016/11/11/us/obama-trump-white-backlash/>. See also Anderson, 2016.

<sup>33</sup> Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>34</sup> "What Does Alternative for Germany (AfD) Want?" BBC News Service, September 5, 2016, www.bbc.com/news/world-europe-37274201.

<sup>35</sup> Trond Einar Frednes and Horst, 2015, describe the "laws" of gang culture in great detail, and how "normality" entails cruelty as expected tool, rather than cruelty necessarily flowing from the perpetrator's disturbed psychology (even though this might be the case in addition).

<sup>36</sup> Maalouf, 1998/2000. I thank Yves Musoni for reminding me of this book.

<sup>37</sup> Jennings and Murphy, 2000, Abstract:

The field of domestic violence has concentrated its theories, research, and treatment methods on the male–female dimensions of the problem. However, male–male issues also play a crucial role. The authors explain how traditional male socialization and rigid sex role stereotyping can have emotional and behavioral consequences that are displaced onto male–female relationships. In particular, "humiliation" is a potent and pervasive social mechanism that dominates male psychology, causing multiple problems in male self-esteem and interpersonal relations. Humiliation is the social form of shame and is deeply rooted in the same-sex relations of childhood groups, rituals of passage, and problematic relationships with father figures.

I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>38</sup> "On the Frontline in Syria: The Danish Gangster who Turned Jihadi," by Nagieb Khaja, The Guardian, July 7, 2014, www.theguardian.com/world/2014/jul/07/european-jihadi-danish-gangster-frontline-syria.

<sup>39</sup> Psychiatrist and sociologist Marc Sageman describes a less religious third wave of Al-Qaeda inspired terrorism, following two waves that were more religious. Some individuals involved in terrorism now seem to "discover" religion mere weeks before getting active. See Sageman, 2004, 2008, 2009, and "A Not Very Private Feud Over Terrorism," by Mark Sageman, New York Times, June 8, 2008, www.nytimes.com/2008/06/08/weekinreview/08sciolino.html?\_r=4&scp=1&sq=marc+sageman&st=nyt&oref=slogin&oref=slogin&. See also Gunning and Jackson, 2011, and Lakhani, 2013.

<sup>40</sup> "Criminal Pasts, Terrorist Futures: European Jihadists and the New Crime-Terror Nexus," by Rajan Basra, Peter R. Neumann, and Claudia Brunner, International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation (ICSR), King's College, London, <http://icsr.info/wp-content/uploads/2016/10/ICSR-Report-Criminal-Pasts-Terrorist-Futures-European-Jihadists-and-the-New-Crime-Terror-Nexus.pdf>. See also Neumann, 2015/2016.

<sup>41</sup> "How Muslims Compare With Other Religious Americans In Intensity of Religious Identity, Not Unlike Evangelicals," by Robert Ruby and Greg Smith, Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life, Muslim, July 6, 2007, www.pewresearch.org/2007/07/06/how-muslims-compare-with-other-religious-americans/. See also "The World's Muslims: Religion, Politics and Society," by James Bell, Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion and Public Life, Polling and Analysis, April 30, 2013, www.pewforum.org/files/2013/04/worlds-muslims-religion-politics-society-full-report.pdf.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid.

<sup>43</sup> “Defining Christian Zionism,” by Donald Wagner, www.christianzionism.org/articlesN.asp#Wagner02. Reverend Dr. Donald Wagner, an ordained Presbyterian minister, is associate professor of Religion and Middle Eastern Studies, and executive director of the Center for Middle Eastern Studies at North Park University. He served from 1980 to 1989 as national director of the Palestine Human Rights Campaign. He is the author of Anxious for Armageddon (1995), and Dying in the Land of Promise: Palestine and Palestinian Christianity from Pentecost to 2000 (revised edition, 2003). I thank Sam Bahour for making me aware of this text. See also Hoel, 2014.

<sup>44</sup> “How to (Almost) Eliminate the Partisan Divide on the Middle East,” by Shibley Telhami, Washington Post, December 14, 2015, www.washingtonpost.com/news/monkey-cage/wp/2015/12/14/how-to-almost-eliminate-the-partisan-divide-on-the-middle-east/. Islamic traditions are seen as incompatible with those of the West by 62 percent of Evangelical Republicans in the United States of America, while only 54 percent of non-Evangelical Republicans hold this view. American partisanship on Israel policy is carried by the 10 percent of Americans who are Evangelical Republicans, particularly by that segment of the Evangelical population that listens to Christian radio or watches Christian television.

<sup>45</sup> “West Bank Rabbi Dov Lior: Jewish law permits destruction of Gaza.” News Brief of The Global Jewish News Source (JTA), July 24, 2014, www.jta.org/2014/07/24/news-opinion/israel-middle-east/west-bank-rabbi-dov-lior-jewish-law-permits-destruction-of-gaza.

<sup>46</sup> “Krigeren med de ni liv,” by Cato Guhnfeldt, Aftenposten. November 5, 2012, p. 4:

Det er klart man tok gale avgjørelser også innen motstandsbevegelsen. Men man må huske på at det var krig. Det hendte vi måtte drepe uten å være sikker på at vedkommende var angiver. Men avgjørelsene var riktige der og da.

<sup>47</sup> “The World’s Muslims: Religion, Politics and Society,” by James Bell, Pew Research Center’s Forum on Religion and Public Life, Polling and Analysis, April 30, 2013, www.pewforum.org/files/2013/04/worlds-muslims-religion-politics-society-full-report.pdf. See an overview on www.pewforum.org/2013/04/30/the-worlds-muslims-religion-politics-society-overview/.

<sup>48</sup> Afghanistan: The Price of Revenge, documentary film by Alberto Marquardt, Al Jazeera, May 31, 2013, www.aljazeera.com/programmes/specialseries/2013/05/2013531103439130667.html.

<sup>49</sup> McCauley, 2017. Also Negrao, et al., 2005, suggest that the experience of humiliation is a combination of anger and shame. Feeling outraged and thinking of revenge is part of the syndrome of anger, while feeling confused, deficient, small, and sullied is part of the syndrome of shame, explains Clark McCauley, 2017, and suggests (p. 260) that:

1. the emotional experience of humiliation is a combination of anger and shame;
2. the anger is in response to the perpetrator’s enforced, unjust lowering of the victim; and
3. the shame is in response to the victim’s failure to resist or retaliate.

McCauley, 2017, p. 260, also refers to sociologist Jack Katz, 1988, who studied the subjective experiences of violent criminals. At the root of their behavior, Katz found shame, anger, and humiliation. “Doing stickup” represented a retaliation for everyday experiences of shame and humiliation, the glory of domination and control reversed shameful powerlessness. It is a privilege to have Clark McCauley as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>50</sup> “Political and Social Psychologists Weigh In,” by Tori DeAngelis, APA Monitor, September 2011, Volume 42, Number 8, www.apa.org/monitor/2011/09/bin-laden.aspx.

<sup>51</sup> “Humiliation in Asymmetric Conflict,” by Clark McCauley, contribution to the 2008 Workshop on Humiliation and Violent Conflict, Columbia University, New York, December 11–12, 2008, www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/McCauleyNY08meeting.pdf.

<sup>52</sup> Afghanistan: The Price of Revenge, documentary film by Alberto Marquardt, Al Jazeera, May 31, 2013, www.aljazeera.com/programmes/specialseries/2013/05/2013531103439130667.html.

<sup>53</sup> For an exploration of the notion of honor of the Taliban, see, among others, Atran, 2010c. In April 2017, the Taliban carried out their most deadly attack on a military installation in nearly five years: “Taliban Kills More Than 140 Afghan Soldiers in Suicide Assault,” by Bill Roggio, Long War Journal, April 22, 2017, www.longwarjournal.org/archives/2017/04/taliban-kills-more-than-100-afghan-soldiers-in-suicide-assault.php.

<sup>54</sup> “Rumsfeld Rejects Plan To Allow Mullah Omar ‘To Live in Dignity’: Taliban Fighters Agree to Surrender Kandahar,” by Brian Knowlton, New York Times, December 7, 2001, www.nytimes.com/2001/12/07/news/07iht-attack\_ed3\_\_7.html.

<sup>55</sup> McChrystal, 2013. See also “McChrystal details tension between Pentagon and Obama White House,” by Matt

Williams in New York, The Guardian, January 6, 2013, www.theguardian.com/world/2013/jan/06/stanley-mcchrystal-pentagon-obama-white-house.

<sup>56</sup> Security Council Open Debate on Sexual Violence in Council, April 17, 2013, Security Council Chamber Statement, by Zainab Hawa Bangura, the Special Representative of the Secretary General the United Nations, www.peacewomen.org/assets/file/SecurityCouncilMonitor/Debates/SexualViolence/April2013/srsg\_svic\_2013.pdf.

<sup>57</sup> Meffert, et al., 2013. See also Watkins and Watkins, 1997. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of the work done by the Watkins.

<sup>58</sup> “Compassion: Hot to Help: When Can Empathy Move Us to Action?,” by Daniel Goleman, March 1, 2008, Greater Good in Action, http://greatergood.berkeley.edu/article/item/hot\_to\_help.

<sup>59</sup> During my time in medicine, I did surgery, and therefore I know that it is not necessary to switch off empathy to be able to carry out surgery.

<sup>60</sup> See Hoffman, et al., 2015, and “The Hoffman Report and the American Psychological Association: Meeting the Challenge of Change,” by Kenneth S. Pope, September 15, 2015, <http://kspope.com/kpope/Hoffman.php>. I thank Linda Hartling for keeping me informed about the path that APA is taking. See, furthermore, “The Code not Taken: The Path from Guild Ethics to Torture and our Continuing Choices,” by Kenneth S. Pope, Canadian Psychological Association John C. Service Member of the Year Award Address, 2016, <http://kspope.com/PsychologyEthics.php>, Abstract:

Psychology’s controversial role in torture in settings like Abu Ghraib, Bagram, and Guantánamo fractured a comforting façade and raised questions about how we can best serve the profession. The controversy confronts us with choices about what our profession is, what it means, what it does – who we are, what we mean, what we do. It asks whether our lives and organizations reflect professional ethics or guild ethics. Professional ethics protect the public against abuse of professional power, expertise, and practice, and hold members accountable to values beyond self-interest. Guild ethics place members’ interests above public interest, edge away from accountability, and tend to masquerade as professional ethics. Psychology’s path to involvement in torture began before 9/11 and the “war on terror” with a move from professional ethics to guild ethics. In sharp contrast to its previous codes, APA’s 1992 ethics code reflected guild ethics, as did the subsequent 2002 code (APA, 2002). Guild ethics are reflected in the questionable nature of APA’s, 2006, 2007a, 2008a, and 2015 policies on interrogation and torture. This article examines tactics used to maintain the façade of professional ethics despite over a decade of publicized reports – in newspapers, professional journals, books, reports published by human rights organizations, and other widely available sources – of documentary evidence of psychology’s organizational involvement in what came to be called “enhanced interrogations.” It asks if we use versions of these tactics in our individual lives. If a credible identity, integrity, and professional ethics are not reflected in our individual lives, it is unlikely they will thrive in our profession and organizations.

<sup>61</sup> See Megyn Kelly on Exclusive Interview with Dr. James Mitchell, Fox News, December 16, 2014, <http://video.foxnews.com/v/3946118068001/megyn-kelly-on-exclusive-interview-with-dr-james-mitchell/?#sp=show-clips>. Mitchell describes his fear, as he feels suddenly turned into a scapegoat. He describes his patriotism, for he has done everything because he wanted to protect America. He rejects the torture report with the argument that he was not asked. And he is a “mild torturer,” who found some conditions overdone, for example, the Ministry of Justice’s waterboarding. The requirements said that every twenty seconds water must be poured over the prisoner’s head under a cloth. Then the tortured could breathe once, then followed the next twenty seconds. This then goes on for twenty minutes or so. Mitchell, originally a psychologist who has done “research” on such techniques, and in the secret hideouts of the CIA applied them so frequently that no longer remembers the details, according to an interview. He now prides itself on the show to have relaxed rules: at twenty second intervals, the patient suffocates, Mitchell said, so he changed it to ten second intervals. So in a session there were ten seconds of water, then a deep breath, ten seconds of water, plus he found after careful consideration, twice twenty seconds, and only once forty seconds. Only with Sheikh Mohammed, whom Mitchell called evil and arrogant, nothing worked. He had the talent, said Mitchell, during waterboarding, to absorb the water over the nose and spit it out directly from the mouth.

<sup>62</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017, quoting Caldero and Crank, 2011, p. 2.

<sup>63</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017, quoting Jemsek, 2011.

<sup>64</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2017, quoting Olsson, 2005.

<sup>65</sup> Clark, 2003.

<sup>66</sup> Clark, 2003, p. 130.

<sup>67</sup> General Wesley Clark: Wars Were Planned – Seven Countries In Five Years, uploaded on YouTube on September 11, 2011, https://youtu.be/9RC1Mepk\_Sw:

General Wesley Clark:

Because I had been through the Pentagon right after 9/11. About ten days after 9/11, I went through the Pentagon and I saw Secretary Rumsfeld and Deputy Secretary Wolfowitz. I went downstairs just to say hello to some of the people on the Joint Staff who used to work for me, and one of the generals called me in. He said, "Sir, you've got to come in and talk to me a second." I said, "Well, you're too busy." He said, "No, no." He says, "We've made the decision we're going to war with Iraq." This was on or about the 20th of September. I said, "We're going to war with Iraq? Why?" He said, "I don't know." He said, "I guess they don't know what else to do." So I said, "Well, did they find some information connecting Saddam to Al-Qaeda?" He said, "No, no." He says, "There's nothing new that way. They just made the decision to go to war with Iraq." He said, "I guess it's like we don't know what to do about terrorists, but we've got a good military and we can take down governments." And he said, "I guess if the only tool you have is a hammer, every problem has to look like a nail."

So I came back to see him a few weeks later, and by that time we were bombing in Afghanistan. I said, "Are we still going to war with Iraq?" And he said, "Oh, it's worse than that." He reached over on his desk. He picked up a piece of paper. And he said, "I just got this down from upstairs" – meaning the Secretary of Defense's office – "today." And he said, "This is a memo that describes how we're going to take out seven countries in five years, starting with Iraq, and then Syria, Lebanon, Libya, Somalia, Sudan and, finishing off, Iran." I said, "Is it classified?" He said, "Yes, sir." I said, "Well, don't show it to me." And I saw him a year or so ago, and I said, "You remember that?" He said, "Sir, I didn't show you that memo! I didn't show it to you!"

<sup>68</sup> "The Redirection: Is the Administration's New Policy Benefitting Our Enemies in the War on Terrorism?" by Seymour M. Hersh, New Yorker, Annals of National Security, March 5, 2007, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2007/03/05/the-redirection:

To undermine Iran, which is predominantly Shiite, the Bush Administration has decided, in effect, to reconfigure its priorities in the Middle East. In Lebanon, the Administration has cooperated with Saudi Arabia's government, which is Sunni, in clandestine operations that are intended to weaken Hezbollah, the Shiite organization that is backed by Iran. The U.S. has also taken part in clandestine operations aimed at Iran and its ally Syria. A by-product of these activities has been the bolstering of Sunni extremist groups that espouse a militant vision of Islam and are hostile to America and sympathetic to Al-Qaeda.

See also "Barack Obama's Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?" by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016, www.thecodeforglobalethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY:

As the de facto head of NATO, President Barack Obama and his neocon advisers, with the latter's Manichean view of the world, must bear a large part of the responsibility for these disastrous results. The chaos in the Middle East is a huge failure for him, even though the neocons in his administration would deem such a manufactured chaos, a success!

Indeed, the countries of Iraq, Libya and Syria were considered, to different degrees, to be regional rivals of Israel, besides having large reserves of oil. Moreover, the latter countries have been on top of the list of seven countries discovered by General Wesley Clark, in late September 2001, as being the very countries the Pentagon planned to attack and destroy.

Indeed, the countries of Iraq, Libya and Syria were considered, to different degrees, to be regional rivals of Israel, besides having large reserves of oil. Moreover, the latter countries have been on top of the list of seven countries discovered by General Wesley Clark, in late September 2001, as being the very countries the Pentagon planned to attack and destroy.

See more by Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>69</sup> Zunes, 2002.

<sup>70</sup> "Echoes from the Warsaw Ghetto in Gaza," an Interview with Cecilie Surasky by Christiana Voniati, Countercurrents, June 19, 2010, www.countercurrents.org/voniati190610.htm.

<sup>71</sup> "Op-Ed: My Outline for a Solution in Gaza," by Moshe Feiglin, Arutz Sheva, July 15, 2014, www.israelnationalnews.com/Articles/Article.aspx/15326#.U8tjALHCfZc.

<sup>72</sup> Scott and Philip, 2004. See a research bibliography and links on terrorism at www.socialpsychology.org/peace.htm#terrorism. I thank Francisco Gomes de Matos for discussing this point with me.

<sup>73</sup> Studies by Ariel Merari and others have found that Palestinian suicide bombers often have at least one relative or close friend who was killed or injured by the other side. See for recent publications, Merari, 2010, Webber, et al., 2015.

<sup>74</sup> Lindner, 2006a, pp. 113–114.

<sup>75</sup> Farida's predicament resonates with what Toni Morrison, 1987, describes in her novel Beloved, where she describes the killing of a baby so as to protect it from the fate of slavery. I thank Morton Deutsch for making me aware of this novel.

<sup>76</sup> According to Michel Foucault, 1975, when war is seen as imminent, biopolitique is on the table: The male body is imaged as the soldier's body and the female body as the reproductive body of preferably male offspring. Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 49:

In this fashion, during the past millennia, everything became subordinate to preparedness for defense against invaders, with only the methods of enforcing this subordination varying. Sparta, for instance, wanted its women to put their wombs at the service of the larger community, encouraging them to bear sons even for Spartans who were not their husbands. In most other cultures, women's wombs were the exclusive assets of their husbands. Nationalist discourses before and during World War II, in Japan, as well as in Germany, followed the same strategy, and also the Soviet government adopted a similar practice.

See also Åsne Seierstad, 2016, writing about to young sisters, of Somali origin, who left Norway to travel to Syria. I have fond memories of my visit to Åsne and her family in their home in Oslo on September 22, 2010.

<sup>77</sup> Silke, 2003.

<sup>78</sup> The experiences of others can be experienced as if they are one's own experiences. If other people suffer humiliation, this can be felt as own injury. Research on social identification and empathy is relevant. Research on mirror neurons has been hailed by some as explanation, however, this has been rejected as irrelevant hype by others. In September 2012, the first "Mirror Neurons: New Frontiers Summit" took place in Erice, Sicily, Italy. An overview is given in "What's So Special about Mirror Neurons?" by Ben Thomas, Scientific American, November 6, 2012, <http://blogs.scientificamerican.com/guest-blog/2012/11/06/whats-so-special-about-mirror-neurons/>. Christian Keysers was a leading investigator in Parma in the research group that made the original discoveries of mirror neurons from 2000 to 2004, see his recent book Keysers, 2011. See also Bråten, 2013. See for a very critical appraisal, Hickok, 2014. In my work, I describe the pathways of personal experiences of humiliation and how they can be channeled into narratives of humiliation at the group level. This can be achieved through top-down propaganda and recruitment – such as, for instance, in Nazi-Germany, Rwanda, or in movements instigating terror and hatred – or through bottom-up mechanisms that exist, for instance, in clan-based societies such as Somalia. See Lindner, 2000c, for my doctoral dissertation.

<sup>79</sup> See also Lindner, et al., 2009.

<sup>80</sup> Is personal grievance qualitatively different from group grievance? Veldhuis, et al., 2014, found similar ratings of humiliation after experiencing personal rejection in a computer game and rejection that also included in-group members. In contrast, Smith and Mackie, 2015, suggest that personal and intergroup emotions may be qualitatively distinct. McCauley and Moskaleiko, 2011, identify two separate mechanisms that can move individuals to terrorist action for personal grievance and group grievance, mechanisms that often work together. See also McCauley, 2017.

<sup>81</sup> See two documentaries made in France:

- La chambre vide, documentary film by Jasna Krajcinovic, Arte France, 2015, www.arte.tv/guide/fr/058864-000-A/la-chambre-vide#details-description. Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network.
- Djihad, les contre-feux, documentary film by Laetitia Moreau, Arte France, 2015, www.arte.tv/guide/fr/060819-000-A/djihad-les-contre-feux?autoplay=1#details-description. In this film, a mother in Marseilles is presented who lost her young son in Syria. This is the letter he wrote to her before his death translated by Lindner from the French original:

When you read these words, then I have left life on this toilsome world behind me, this very troublesome world, especially since I left you. I hope you understand why I did all this, why I left everything, even though I lived in a stable situation, a wonderful family, and had a job. Why all these sacrifices? Because the community of Mohammed was humiliated. Allah has rewarded us with the reconstruction of the Caliphate. Finally, Muslims have regained their pride. A successful life is not only work, having a house, a car, a wife and children. A successful life is to worship Allah and to have his blessing.

French original:

Si tu lis ces mots, ce que j'ai quitté cette vie sur terre, éprouvante, très éprouvante, surtout depuis que je suis vous quitté. J'espère que tu as compris pourquoi j'ai fait tout ça, pourquoi avoir tout quitté, alors que j'avais une situation stable, une famille merveilleuse, un travail. Pourquoi tous ces sacrifices? Parce que la Communauté de Mohammed est humilié. Allah nous a honoré avec la reétablissement du Califat, ou les musulmans retrouvé enfin la fierté. Reussier sa vie c'est pas juste travailler, avoir une maison, une voiture, une femme et des enfants. Reussier sa vie c'est adorer Allah et avoir sa satisfaction.

See also the work by French anthropologist Dounia Bouzar, 2016, and how she dissects how vulnerable teenagers are recruited into a desire to sacrifice themselves in “holy war” by way of professionally organized integration methodologies that are also known from sects in general.

<sup>82</sup> McCauley and Moskalenko, 2014a.

<sup>83</sup> Devin Atallah, 2017, has studied Palestinian refugee families who face structural violence and historical trauma, and explains resilience in terms of three interrelated themes: (a) Muqawama/resistance to military siege and occupation; (b) Awda/return to cultural roots despite historical and ongoing settler colonialism; and (c) Sumoud/perseverance through daily adversities and accumulation of trauma.

<sup>84</sup> Al-Aswany, 2002/2004, Al-Aswany, 2015.

<sup>85</sup> Hamid, 2007, 2014. I thank Kristian Berg Harpviken, former director of the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), for reminding me of this author in 2010.

<sup>86</sup> Pamuk and Freely, 2004.

<sup>87</sup> See also Røislien and Røislien, 2010, for a discussion “the logic of Palestinian terrorist target choice.” I thank Kristian Berg Harpviken, former director of the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), for making me aware of this article.

<sup>88</sup> Quoted in Vertigans, 2007, p. 167. See extracts of Ayman Al-Zawahiri’s Knights under the Prophet’s Banner, 2001, at www.fas.org/irp/world/para/ayman\_bk.html.

<sup>89</sup> “Jihadi Cool: Terrorist Recruiters’ Latest Weapon,” by Dina Temple-Raston, National Public Radio (NPR), March 26, 2010, www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=125186382.

<sup>90</sup> Lakhani, 2013.

<sup>91</sup> Breaking Bad is a crime drama television series by Vince Gilligan, originally aired on the AMC network (entertainment company headquartered in New York City) for five seasons, from January 20, 2008, to September 29, 2013. It is the story of Walter White (Bryan Cranston), a high school chemistry teacher diagnosed with terminal lung cancer. To secure his family’s financial future before he dies, he, and a former student, turn to producing and selling crystallized methamphetamine.

The methamphetamine epidemic took off on the West Coast of the United States in late 2002. See “Unnecessary Epidemic,” by Steve Suo, The Oregonian, October 03, 2004, www.oregonlive.com/special/oregonian/meth/stories/index.ssf?1003\_unnecessary\_epidemic.html.

Now this epidemic reaches Europe, see Härtel-Petri, 2014. The statistics are alarming, as ever younger individuals, especially young girls, increasingly use the drug. Crystal meth was originally used recreationally, but now it reaches an ever wider range of customers, wider than that of cannabis or heroin. In 2016, it is “conquering” Berlin, see “Horror-Droge auf dem Vormarsch Crystal Meth erobert Berlin,” Berliner Kurier, March 27, 2003, www.berliner-kurier.de/berlin/polizei-und-justiz/horror-droge-auf-dem-vormarsch-crystal-meth-erobert-berlin-23789654.

Some users and dealers profess that they were inspired by the film Breaking Bad. See Crystal Meth: Die Horror-Droge, documentary film by Christian P. Stracke, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, 2016, www.zdf.de/ZDFmediathek/beitrag/video/2312448/Crystal-Meth-Die-Horror-Droge#/beitrag/video/2312448/Crystal-Meth-Die-Horror-Droge, see also, among others, <https://youtu.be/bDpnF0UqaO8>. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>92</sup> Sageman, 2008, “Jihadi Cool: Terrorist Recruiters’ Latest Weapon,” by Dina Temple-Raston, National Public Radio (NPR), March 26, 2010, www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=125186382.

<sup>93</sup> Husain, 2007, Baker, 2009, 2011.

<sup>94</sup> Bartlett, et al., 2010, Sloatman and Tillie, 2006, Pisiu, 2012.

<sup>95</sup> “New Terrorism Adviser Takes A ‘Broad Tent’ Approach,” by Dina Temple-Raston, National Public Radio (NPR), January 24, 2011, www.npr.org/2011/01/24/133125267/new-terrorism-adviser-takes-a-broad-tent-approach. See also Wiktorowicz, 2004.

<sup>96</sup> See Talking to the Enemy, by Scott Atran, uploaded on November 18, 2010, <https://youtu.be/6ijmBd69878>, where Atran explores the evolutionary origins of religions in connection with the mindsets of extremist people in the twenty-first century. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of this video.

<sup>97</sup> Atran, et al., 2014

<sup>98</sup> “Radicalisation Is Not the Result of Failed Integration,” Interview with French extremism researcher Olivier Roy, by Michaela Wiegel, Quantara.de, March 29, 2016, <https://en.quantara.de/content/interview-with-french-extremism-researcher-olivier-roy-radicalisation-is-not-the-result-of>. Gilles Kepel has recently criticized Olivier Roy for his views. See “‘That Ignoramus’: 2 French Scholars of Radical Islam Turn Bitter Rivals,” by Adam Nossiter, The New York

Times, July 12, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/07/13/world/europe/france-radical-islam.html:

Mr. Kepel, 61, a professor at Sciences Po, the prestigious political science institute, finds much of the answer inside France – in its suburbs and their dysfunctional sociology – and in the role of Islam, angering many on the left.

Mr. Roy, 66, who as a bearded young man roamed Afghanistan with the mujahedeen in the 1980s and now teaches at the European University Institute in Florence, Italy, places greater emphasis on individual behavior and psychology in a jihadism he considers strictly marginal to Islam.

Mr. Kepel sees individuals as cogs in a system – part of a classically French, structuralist tradition that minimizes the role of individual human agency.

See also Roy, 2004.

<sup>99</sup> Roy, 2004. See also “ISIL Is Really a Revolt by Young Muslims Against their Parents’ Generation,” by Emma-Kate Symons, Quartz, December 3, 2015, <https://qz.com/562128/isil-is-a-revolt-by-young-disaffected-muslims-against-their-parents-generation/>. See, furthermore, “Terrorism Has Come About in Assimilationist France and Also in Multicultural Britain. Why Is That?” by Kenan Malik, The Guardian, November 15, 2016, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2015/nov/15/multiculturalism-assimilation-britain-france.

<sup>100</sup> Kepel, 2015. See also Kepel, 2006, 2008, Kepel and Milelli, 2008. See also Tuil, 2016.

<sup>101</sup> See Bidar, 2015. See also “Open Letter to the Muslim World,” by Abdenour Bidar, Reset DOC, January 14, 2015, www.resetdoc.org/story/00000022484. French original: “Lettre ouverte au monde musulman,” by Abdenour Bidar, Huffington Post, January 9, 2015, www.huffpostmaghreb.com/abdenour-bidar/lettre-ouverte-au-monde-m\_1\_b\_6443610.html.

<sup>102</sup> See note 98 above.

<sup>103</sup> Ibid.

<sup>104</sup> Twenge, 2006. See for more examples of relevant literature, for instance, Lasch, 1991, Putnam, 2000, Baumeister, et al., 1996, Bushman and Baumeister, 1998, Baumeister, et al., 2003, Baumeister, 2005, Twenge and Campbell, 2009, Wood, et al., 2009, Ehrenreich, 2010, Twenge, et al., 2012, Twenge and Kasser, 2013, or Levine, 2007.

<sup>105</sup> “From Hanover to IS: The Case of Safia S.,” by Sabrina Pabst, Deutsche Welle, October 19, 2016, www.dw.com/en/from-hanover-to-is-the-case-of-safia-s/a-36094144.

<sup>106</sup> beRATen e.V. – Beratungsstelle zur Prävention neo-salafistischer Radikalisierung, Hannover, www.beraten-niedersachsen.de/.

<sup>107</sup> Ginges and Atran, 2008. Canada’s indigenous populations are even driven into waves of suicide by suicides as an outflow of “cumulative humiliation” (Hartling, March 21, 2016), of a lingering trauma of colonialism and prejudice, of “cultural genocide.” See “Wave of Indigenous Suicides Leaves Canadian Town Appealing for Help,” by Liam Stack, New York Times, March 18, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/19/world/americas/canada-youth-suicide.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>108</sup> “Terror on Trial: First Hand Report on the Hofstadgroep Trial,” by Emerson Vermaat, Militant Islam Monitor, December 12, 2005, www.militantislammonitor.org/article/id/1400. I thank Petter Nesser for recommending this article to me.

<sup>109</sup> Petter Nesser is a senior researcher with the Terrorism Research Group at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI). I thank him for sharing his very deep, nuanced, and differentiated insights in a thoroughly informative conversation in Oslo on June 17, 2011. It was very enriching for me to also share with him my experiences with young clients during my years as psychological counselor in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984 to 1991. I have summarized and translated our conversation from Norwegian. See also Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006.

<sup>110</sup> I thank Petter Nesser for recommending to me, as the best description, the book by Albert Benschap, 2005, Chronicle of a Political Murder.

<sup>111</sup> See note 109 above.

<sup>112</sup> Schmitz-Berning, 2007. The phrase Third Reich was originally coined by the German thinker Arthur Moeller van den Moeller van den Bruck, 1923, in his book Das Dritte Reich. He distinguished two separate periods, the First Reich The Age of the Father, the Holy Roman Empire that began with Charlemagne in 800 CE, the Second Reich, The Age of the Son, the German Empire under the Hohenzollern dynasty (1871 – 1918), the Third Reich, The Age of the Holy Ghost, after the interval of the Weimar Republic (1918 – 1933). Although van den Bruck did not join the Nazi Party, the phrase Third Reich was nevertheless adopted by the Nazis for the totalitarian state they wanted to set up once in power. Many Germans saw in Hitler a German Messiah; the way he conducted the Nuremberg Rallies, just before the Autumn Equinox highlighted this impression. In 1939, the German press, however, was no longer to use the phrase. The official terms were then “German Reich,” “Greater German Reich,” or “National Socialist Germany.”

<sup>113</sup> It was first used by Ronald Reagan during his 1980 presidential campaign.

<sup>114</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000. Social scientists Paul H. Ray and Sherry Ruth Anderson, through their surveys, identified three main cultural trends. First, the moderns, the cultural movement that started about 500 years ago and that endorses the “realist” worldview of either big business, big government, or big media, or past socialist, communist, or fascist movements. Then, the first countermovement against the moderns are the traditionals, the religious right and rural populations. The most recent countermovement are the cultural creatives, who value strong ecological sustainability for the planet, support women’s issues, personal growth, authenticity, and are wary of big business. The cultural creatives movement is currently flowing together from two branches that both started out around 1960 and initially antagonized each other, namely, the consciousness movement, an inward-oriented movement, focusing on the inner state of the psyche, and the social movement, an outward-oriented movement, focusing on action for peace in the streets. When Ray and Anderson published their work in 2000, in the United States, traditionals comprised about 24 to 26 percent of the adult population (approximately 48 million people), moderns about 47 to 49 percent (approximately 95 million), and cultural creatives are about 26 to 28 percent (approximately 50 million). In the European Union, the cultural creatives were about 30 to 35 percent of the adult population.

<sup>115</sup> Taylor, 1989, Heelas, 1996, 2008, Wilce, 2009. This trend is now being introduced from the West to other world regions. There is a “psycho-boom” (xinli re), for instance, in China, see Huang, 2014, using translations of Pema Chödrön, Ken Wilber, and Eckhart Tolle. Sonya Pritzker, 2016:

Inner child workshops in China can be said to function in much the same way. Indeed, salons geared towards the inner child in this Beijing center consist of adaptations of exercises developed by a European psychologist who leads longer inner child workshops, variably focused on “transforming emotions,” “transforming beliefs,” and “meeting true self,” when he is in town.

<sup>116</sup> “The Coalition of Transformation vs. the Coalition of Restoration,” by Ronald Brownstein, The Atlantic, November 21, 2012, www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2012/11/the-coalition-of-transformation-vs-the-coalition-of-restoration/265512/.

<sup>117</sup> Liberaler Traum – autoritärer Traum? Philipp Blom über Demokratie und was sie gefährdet, by Judith Heitkamp, Bayerischer Rundfunk, October 19, 2016, www.br.de/radio/bayern2/kultur/kulturwelt/blom-gespraech-100.html. See also a recent publication by historian Philip Blom, 2017. Bavarian Broadcasting, BR, is a public-service radio and television broadcaster, based in Munich, capital city of the Free State of Bavaria in Germany.

<sup>118</sup> “On Trump’s Victory,” by Gilad Atzmon, November 10, 2016, www.gilad.co.uk/writings/2016/11/10/on-trumps-victory. I thank Hans-Joachim Dietze for making me aware of this quote. See also Atzmon, 2011.

<sup>119</sup> Petter Nesser is senior researcher with the Terrorism Research Group at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI). Read more about him in the Appendix to Section One. See Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006. Here are some of my notes of our conversation in Oslo on June 17, 2011, which I summarized and translated from Norwegian:

The Salafi movement is diverse, comprising everything from introverted mystics to groups that are political in thinking and action. Al Qaeda rhetoric may be against politics, but they do want political change. The groups that Nesser studies are very much opposed to the Muslim Brotherhood because they look at them as impure, since they compromise themselves for politics. Original Saudi Arabian Salafist thought combines now with ideologies of violent struggle from the Egypt of the sixties and seventies and the so-called Afghan Arabs.

<sup>120</sup> Read more about Petter Nesser in the Appendix to Section One.

<sup>121</sup> “Islam Right Now,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 5, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/09/islam-right-now/:

George Bush on February 10, 2003, on a possible attack on Iraq: “Liberty is God’s gift to every human being in the world,” in Washington Post, 10 Feb 2003. Osama bin Laden on February 11, 2003: “victory comes only from God, all we have to do is to prepare and motivate for jihad,” Audio message conveyed by jorgenj@peace.uit.no.

Galtung recommends “The Salafiscape in the Wake of the Arab Spring,” by Abbas Aroua, www.cordoue.ch.

<sup>122</sup> “ISIS vs. Al Qaeda: Jihadism’s Global Civil War,” by Daniel L. Byman, and Jennifer R. Williams, Brookings, February 24, 2015, www.brookings.edu/articles/isis-vs-al-qaeda-jihadisms-global-civil-war/.

<sup>123</sup> “Carl Schmitt i Det hvite hus,” by Rune Slagstad, Institutt for samfunnsforskning, Klassekampen, February 11, 2017, www.klassekampen.no/article/20170211/ARTICLE/170219981. See more in note 25 in the Preface. See also Tunander, 2009, in note 98 in Chapter 1. See, furthermore, Kagan, 1997, and Fraenkel, 1941, in note 15 in the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>124</sup> See also “Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can’t Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden,” by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>.

<sup>125</sup> Jordán and Wesley, 2006.

<sup>126</sup> Tocqueville, 1856. See also “The Future by Al Gore – Review,” by John Gray, The Guardian, January 31, 2013, www.theguardian.com/books/2013/jan/31/the-future-al-gore-review. See also Gore, 2013. See, furthermore, “Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can’t Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden,” by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>. See for a recent publication, Bergen, 2016.

<sup>127</sup> Kepel, 1993.

<sup>128</sup> “Europe’s Angry Muslims,” by Robert S. Leiken, Foreign Affairs, July/August 2005, www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/europe/2005-07-01/europes-angry-muslims.

<sup>129</sup> “Features: A Matter of Pride: Why We Can’t Buy Off the Next Osama bin Laden,” by Peter Bergen and Michael Lind, Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, Winter 2007, Number 3, <http://democracyjournal.org/magazine/3/a-matter-of-pride/>.

<sup>130</sup> Ibid.

<sup>131</sup> Goodwin and Jasper, 2004, Jasper, 1997, 2011, 2014, Jasper and Duyvendak, 2015.

<sup>132</sup> Jasper, 2011, p. 290. See also Shultziner, 2013. Jasper, 1997, sees four dimensions play distinct roles in social protest movements, namely, resources, strategy, biography, and culture. See also Cefai, 2007.

<sup>133</sup> “Teroristen: Letzte Chance,” Stefan Berg and Michael Sontheimer, Der Spiegel, February 13, 2010, www.spiegel.de/spiegel/print/d-69065794.html. German original translated by Lindner:

“Das Foto von schreienden vietnamesischen Kindern nach einem Napalm-Angriff,” so Hogefeld später, “war für mich eine einzige Aufforderung und Verpflichtung, zu handeln und den Verbrechen nicht zuzuschauen.”

<sup>134</sup> Lindner, 2006a, Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict.

<sup>135</sup> Wiktorowicz, 2004, 2005.

<sup>136</sup> The mass appeal of Adolf Hitler, for instance, has been explained with a schizophrenic structure that arose out of a preponderance of the public self. See Marbach, et al., 2007.

<sup>137</sup> Ås, 2008. Berit Ås explained her concept of Male Master Suppression Techniques to Evelin Lindner in her home in Asker, Norway, May 31, 2014, see <https://youtu.be/mRASpPcI8hk>. She explains how she started out with five master suppression techniques and later extended them. Berit Ås is professor of social science, the first female party leader in Norway (Democratic Socialists, AIK), a peace activist and feminist. She has been a Member of Parliament and founder of the Norwegian Women’s University. Her areas of research are accident and consumer research and in-depth women’s studies. She is a Knight of the Order of St. Olav first class. She is best known for her theory of five male master suppression techniques. Of these, she has lectured in more than forty countries on four continents. Among others, she refers to Robert Merton (damned if you do and damned if you don’t), Ingjald Nissen, and her mentor Harriet Holter. It was a privilege to have Berit Ås as opponent when I defended my doctoral dissertation in 2001 at the University of Oslo, and to have her as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>138</sup> Bass and Riggio, 2006. I thank Avi Shahaf of reminding me of Bass’ Transformational Leadership Theory. Transformational leaders hold positive expectations of their colleagues and care about their personal growth. Transformational leadership is said to have occurred when engagement in a group results in leaders and followers raising one another to increased levels of motivation and morality. Four components “I’s” describe transformational leadership:

- Idealized Influence (II): a transformational leader “walks the talk,” and is admired for this.
- Inspirational Motivation (IM): a transformational leader inspire and motivate others.
- Individualized Consideration (IC): a transformational leader is genuinely concerned with the personal growth of their colleagues.
- Intellectual Stimulation (IS): a transformational leader challenges others to attain their highest goals.

<sup>139</sup> My Brother the Islamist, documentary film produced and directed by filmmaker Robb Leech, 2011, www.mybrothertheislamist.com/, see also www.bbc.com/news/entertainment-arts-23969422.

<sup>140</sup> In 2017, Sebastian Junger and Nick Quested came out with the documentary film Hell on Earth: The Fall Of Syria

And The Rise of ISIS, where they explain how Da'esh could rise not least because democracy was seen as a greater threat by the ruling government in Syria. If the world community had intervened early on, subsequent carnage could perhaps have been avoided or minimized. See <http://channel.nationalgeographic.com/hell-on-earth/>. See also Sebastian Junger, 2016, and more in note 101 in the Introduction.

<sup>141</sup> The American Jihadist: Eric Harroun in His Own Words, April 12, 2014, <https://youtu.be/97ndpOAID50>. Harroun was found dead, of an accidental overdose, in his home on April 8, 2014. I thank Deeyah Khan of finding this video in the context of her research for her documentary film Jihad: A Story of the Others. See also Husain, 2007.

<sup>142</sup> "US Army Vet Eric Harroun, Who Fought in Syria, Died at Home," by James Gordon Meek, ABC News, April 10, 2014, <http://abcnews.go.com/Blotter/eric-harroun-us-army-vet-fought-syria-died/story?id=23273218>.

<sup>143</sup> "Radio Address to the Nation on Terrorism," by Ronald Reagan, May 31, 1986, online by Gerhard Peters and John T. Woolley, The American Presidency Project, www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=37376.

<sup>144</sup> The Rise of British Jihadists in Syria, published June 26, 2014, https://youtu.be/fxDuENvxw\_o. I thank Deeyah Khan of finding this video in the context of her research for her next documentary. See also <https://news.vice.com/video/british-jihadists-in-syria>.

<sup>145</sup> See Atran, 2003, 2006, 2010b, a, 2013, Atran, et al., 2007, Atran and Ginges, 2012, Atran, et al., 2014, Ginges, et al., 2007. See also Talking to the Enemy, by Scott Atran, uploaded on November 18, 2010, <https://youtu.be/6ijmBd69878>, where Atran explores the evolutionary origins of religions in connection with the mindsets of extremist people in the twenty-first century. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of this video.

<sup>146</sup> See Park, et al., 1997, Park and Hinshaw, 2010, Park, 2012. Crystal Park locates her research within health psychology. See also early work on cognitive dissonance by social psychologist Leon Festinger, 1957, 1980.

<sup>147</sup> Başoğlu, et al., 1997.

<sup>148</sup> See, among others, Deci, et al., 1999, p. 658:

...tangible rewards tend to have a substantially negative effect on intrinsic motivation (...) Even when tangible rewards are offered as indicators of good performance, they typically decrease intrinsic motivation for interesting activities.

Already in 1973, psychologists Mark R. Lepper and David Greene tested the over-justification hypothesis, see Lepper, et al., 1973. Extrinsic motivation can undermine intrinsic motivation, see, for instance Curry, et al., 1990. Helping behavior in children seems to be intrinsically motivated and is diminished when extrinsic incentives are offered. See Warneken and Tomasello, 2008, Abstract:

The current study investigated the influence of rewards on very young children's helping behavior. After 20-month-old infants received a material reward during a treatment phase, they subsequently were less likely to engage in further helping during a test phase as compared with infants who had previously received social praise or no reward at all. This so-called over-justification effect suggests that even the earliest helping behaviors of young children are intrinsically motivated and that socialization practices involving extrinsic rewards can undermine this tendency.

<sup>149</sup> "The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe: Political Pluralism in the OSCE Mediterranean Partners? Testimony by Shibley Telhami," July 9, 2014, www.sadat.umd.edu/pub/TelhamiTestimony2.pdf. Shibley Telhami is the Anwar Sadat Professor for Peace and Development at the University of Maryland, and it is a privilege to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>150</sup> Final Report of the Task Force on Combating Terrorist and Foreign Fighter Travel, Washington DC, The U.S. House of Representatives Homeland Security Committee, September 2015, <https://homeland.house.gov/wp-content/uploads/2015/09/TaskForceFinalReport.pdf>. In March 2015, the U.S. House of Representatives Homeland Security Committee launched a bipartisan Task Force on Combating Terrorist and Foreign Fighter Travel. Eight Members of Congress were charged with examining the threat to the United States from "foreign fighters" – individuals who leave home, travel abroad to terrorist safe havens, and join or assist violent extremist groups. The Task Force assessed domestic and overseas efforts to obstruct terrorist travel, as well as security gaps. It was released on September 29, 2015. The document maintains that "despite concerted efforts to stem the flow, we have largely failed to stop Americans from traveling overseas to join jihadists."

See also Al-Qaida, the Islamic State, and the Future of the Global Jihadi Movement: A Conversation with Ambassador Tina Kaidanow, The Brookings Institution, Washington, DC, September 16, 2015, www.brookings.edu/~media/events/2015/09/16-global-jihad/20150916\_alqaeda\_isis\_jihad\_transcript.pdf.

<sup>151</sup> "Are Thousands of Westerners and Americans Fighting with Extremists in Iraq and Syria?" by Steve Contorno, researched by Steve Contorno, edited by Angie Drobnic Holan, PolitiFact (a project of the Tampa Bay Times), June 18, 2014, www.politifact.com/truth-o-meter/statements/2014/jun/18/mike-rogers/are-thousands-westerners-and-americans-fighting-ex/. See also an accessible overview in Mantel, 2014.

<sup>152</sup> Ibid.

<sup>153</sup> Sageman, 2004, 2008, 2009.

<sup>154</sup> Bergen, 2016.

<sup>155</sup> “The Roots of Muslim Rage,” by Bernard Lewis, The Atlantic, September 1990, www.theatlantic.com/magazine/archive/1990/09/the-roots-of-muslim-rage/4643/2/. I thank Deepak Tripathi for making me aware of this article. It is a privilege to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also Tripathi, 2013a, and his book published in Dignity Press, Tripathi, 2013b.

<sup>156</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 68.

<sup>157</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>158</sup> Abu-Rabi, 2007, p. 34–35, Conclusion:

First, religion in the contemporary Arab and Muslim world forms a great part of the public sphere. For various reasons, both state and society permit the public expressions of religion. Second, although religion contains positive social and ethical values, both State and Islamism have exploited religion to advance and/or protect certain political and economic interests. Third, since the beginning of the decolonization process almost half a century ago, the political elite have failed to offer a coherent nationalist program or ideology to rid their societies of economic dependence and political stagnation. Fourth, authoritarianism has been the hallmark of the power elite in Arab and Muslim societies. Democracy has not been anchored in contemporary Arab and Muslim societies, and to take hold in the Arab and Muslim world, democracy must be homegrown. Fifth, because of widespread social, economic, and demographic changes taking place in the past five decades, religion has gained more public prominence than ever before. In the ensuing social and economic dislocation experienced by a significant number of people, religion has offered hope and solace. Sixth, the relationship between State and Islamist movements in the Arab world has been awkward at best. The State is primarily responsible for the consolidation of authoritarianism and political repression, which made the rise of Islamism possible (if not welcome) by a large number of people. Seventh, although the Islamist movements are diverse by nature, they exhibit common characteristics relating to their interpretation of the sacred Text and the role of Shari’ah in contemporary life. All agree on the idea of constructing an Islamic political system and argue that Islam is both “religion and state.” Eighth, Shari’ah contains general rules that cannot be simply implemented without a thorough rational critique and appreciation. Finally, as opposed to the religious formulation of the nineteenth century Islamic reform movement spearheaded by such thinkers and activists as Jamal al-Din al-Afghani, Sayyid Ahmad Khan, and Muhammad ‘Abduh, the contemporary Islamic advocates the implementation of the Shari’ah as a prelude to the foundation of the Islamic state.

<sup>159</sup> Lord Douglas Hurd of Westwell (Conservative) on February 9, 2006, during three hours of deliberations on Iran policy at the House of Lords, where several members discussed their country’s history of intervention in Iranian affairs. See “Glory and Humiliation: Iran, Britain and that Coup, The House of Lords Reviews Bitter British-Iranian History,” by Arash Norouzi, The Mossadegh Project, February 12, 2006, www.mohammadmossadegh.com/news/house-of-lords/. I thank Deepak Tripathi for making me aware of this article. It is a privilege to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also Tripathi, 2013a, and his book published in Dignity Press, Tripathi, 2013b.

<sup>160</sup> Volkan, 2004. See also Volkan, 1997.

<sup>161</sup> See, for instance, Wright, 2006. See also Creed, 2009.

<sup>162</sup> “My Trip to Al Qaeda: Six Questions for Lawrence Wright,” by Scott Horton, Harper’s Magazine, September 6, 2010, <http://harpers.org/blog/2010/09/my-trip-to-al-qaeda-six-questions-for-lawrence-wright/>.

<sup>163</sup> In Lifton, 2003, p.105.

<sup>164</sup> See “Osama Bin Laden’s Jihad,” and text of Fatwahs and Declaration of War, www.mideastweb.org/osamabinladen1.htm. I thank Tony Webb for making me aware of this website.

<sup>165</sup> See Danner, 2008, p. 3.

<sup>166</sup> “American Apocalypse: How ‘Superpower Syndrome’ Is Ravaging the World,” by Robert Jay Lifton, The Nation, December 4, 2003, www.thenation.com/article/american-apocalypse. See also Lifton, 2003. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this quote. See also the work by David Lotto, such as in Muenster and Lotto, 2010, and Lotto, 2016.

<sup>167</sup> For more on normative paradigms, see Etzioni, 2013.

<sup>168</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, pp. 84–88. Honor killings have been reported in many parts of the world, including Bangladesh, Britain, Brazil, Ecuador, Egypt, India, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Pakistan, Morocco, Sweden, Turkey, and Uganda. There is a vast amount of literature addressing honor killing. See, for instance, a summary and evaluation of qualitative research about honor killings, United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), 2005. Many prefer to use the term femicide rather than honor killing, since the main focus is on killing women.

<sup>169</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010, p. 86:

I believe it is important that people in the West, including those who are otherwise far removed from the world of honor, learn to better understand it. At a minimum, in an increasingly interconnected world, it is unwise to stay uninformed about the larger world. Honor killings may not touch them, but global extremism may – and much terrorism is fed by the same honor code. To help those who wish to break free from this code – for instance, the girl who asks for protection against honor killing or the girl who wishes to flee from being forced into marriage – people in the West must know more about their predicament. One of the problems is that well-intentioned people who are removed from the frontline may be unaware of how unforgiving the world of honor can be, or they may choose to overlook its harshness, particularly when motivated by the desire to respect other cultures, and/or daunted by the enormity of its potential for cruelty, and/or intimidated by their incapability to respect cruelty. One unfortunate result may be that they are in danger of letting down the victims. And, last but not least, if the culture of honor is to be invited into a culture of human rights, rather than uninformed laissez-faire or stereotyped rejection, we need to be able to apply respectful and informed rejection to concepts that violate human dignity.

Officials from the United Kingdom High Commission in Islamabad, who rescue forced marriage victims who are British citizens in a frontline job, know all about the cruel choice that these girls face: remaining in a forced marriage, or fleeing and losing their family forever. Within the United Kingdom, Crown Prosecution Service lawyer Nazir Afzal travels the country to warn against the danger that British authorities may be tempted to bridge the gap between those two moral worlds through mediation when approached by a girl who fears for her life and seeks help. Attempts of mediation run the risk to humiliate the immigrant family to the degree that killing is hastened rather than avoided. Also Jasvinder Sanghera knows everything about this predicament. She is an activist and advocate for women's rights and cofounder and director of Karma Nirvana. Having been a victim of forced marriage herself, she has emerged from it more resourceful.

<sup>170</sup> Banaz: A Love Story, documentary film directed and produced by Deeyah Khan, 2012, <https://youtu.be/VepuyvhHYdM>. The film chronicles the life and death of Banaz Mahmood, a young British Kurdish woman killed in 2006 in South London on the orders of her family in a so-called honor killing.

<sup>171</sup> Norwegian politician Jonas Gahr Støre, 2012, warned that much of so-called dialogue in international meetings is rather useless. Steinar Bryn is affiliated with the Nansen Academy since 1989 as the head of Nansen Dialogue Network in Norway, and he explains what needs to be taken care of to make dialogue useful. See Skurdal and Bryn, 2012, or Feller and Ryan, 2012.

<sup>172</sup> Hafez, 2007b, Abstract.

<sup>173</sup> “Robert Fisk: ‘We Remain Blindfolded About Isis’ Says the Man Who Should Know,” by Robert Fisk, The Independent, November 15, 2015, www.independent.co.uk/voices/robert-fisk-we-remain-blindfolded-about-isis-says-the-man-who-should-know-a6735426.html. See also Keenan, 1993.

<sup>174</sup> “Brighton Bombing 25 Years on: Making Friends with My Father’s Killer,” by Chris Hall, The Guardian, October 10, 2009, www.theguardian.com/lifeandstyle/2009/oct/10/brighton-bomb-conservative-anniversary. Read more about Jo Berry in the Appendix to Section One. It is a privilege to have Jo Berry as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>175</sup> Yves Musoni in a personal communication on December 25, 2011. I thank Yves Musoni for reminding me of Maalouf, 1998/2000. It is a privilege to have Yves Musoni as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

Chapter 14

<sup>1</sup> Horne, 1977. See also Adjrid, 1992.

<sup>2</sup> “Charlie Hebdo: Paris Attack Brothers’ Campaign of Terror Can Be Traced Back to Algeria in 1954: Algeria is the Post-Colonial Wound that Still Bleeds in France,” by Robert Fisk, The Independent, January 9, 2015, www.independent.co.uk/voices/comment/charlie-hebdo-paris-attack-brothers-campaign-of-terror-can-be-traced-back-to-algeria-in-1954-9969184.html. I thank Margunn Bjørnholt for making me aware of this article. See also Salafistes, documentary film by Lemine Ould Mohamed Salem and François Margolin, 2016, www.allocine.fr/film/fichefilm\_gen\_cfilm=244500.html. This documentary film goes to Mauritania, Tunisia, Algeria, and the Sharia zone in northern Mali between 2012 and 2015. Preachers of holy war, such as imams, sheikhs, and chairmen of sharia courts explain what they consider to be a righteous Islam. They explain why a thief's hand should be cut off, and why they are at war with the West. France was in uproar about the film and some argued that it ought to be forbidden, because it provided too much of a propaganda stage for extremist Islamists.

<sup>3</sup> Taylor, 1994, p. 25:

A number of strands in contemporary politics turn on the need, sometimes the demand, for recognition. The need, it can be argued, is one of the driving forces behind nationalist movements in politics.

See also Fuller, 2003.

<sup>4</sup> It was first used by Ronald Reagan during his 1980 presidential campaign.

<sup>55</sup> BCE stands for "Before the Common Era," and is equivalent to BC, which means "Before Christ."

<sup>6</sup> See www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/pics16.php#siwa. When I lived and worked in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984 to 1991, I received the necklace you see on the photo as a gift, together with a large bracelet and ring. It came from the oasis Siwa, the very oasis where Alexander the Great once listened to the oracle, two thousand years ago. Siwa is a very remote oasis in the desert west of the Nile Delta, a very rare salt oasis with a unique age-old culture. The necklace, of solid heavy silver, was part of a family's heritage, for centuries, always worn by the girl that was ready to get married next. But now money had arrived in the oasis. As happens all around the world, invaluable riches are given away for pennies and replaced by valueless plastic. When I received this necklace, I wanted to give it back to Siwa immediately, I want to tell its people there that they should never sell out their cultural heritage. But, I was told, if I did so, the necklace would simply be sold again, and I should rather wear it to tell the story. Today, only two of those necklaces are known to exist, mine, and one single one in the museum of Siwa.

<sup>7</sup> Arrian and Hammond, 2013.

<sup>8</sup> Social scientist and social activist Riane Eisler developed a cultural transformation theory where she describes how otherwise widely divergent societies all around the globe employ what she has named the dominator model of society, rather than the partnership model. See Eisler, 1987. See her most recent book, Eisler, 2007.

<sup>9</sup> Trigger, 1993, p. 52.

<sup>10</sup> "Violence Is a Preventable Disease," by Mairead Maguire, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 9, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/02/violence-is-a-preventable-disease/. See also "On World Day, UN Agencies Urge Countering Threats to Cultural Diversity," United Nations News Centre, May 21, 2017, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=56804#.WSGEbskIGqA.

<sup>11</sup> Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>12</sup> "Is Robust American Growth a Thing of the Past?" by Edward Luce, Financial Times, February 19, 2016, www.ft.com/intl/cms/s/2/80c3164e-d644-11e5-8887-98e7feb46f27.html.

<sup>13</sup> "History Has Knocked Very Loudly on Our Door. Will We Answer?" World Future Forum 2016 – Opening Speech by Jakob von Uexküll, March 15, 2016, www.worldfuturecouncil.org/2016/03/15/world-future-forum-2016-opening-speech-jakob-von-Uexküll/. As to the term "dreamers," see also Coates, 2015. I thank Peter Coleman for giving me Coates's book as a gift!

<sup>14</sup> Foucault, 1979, 1991, Foucault and Gordon, 1980.

<sup>15</sup> Richards, 2013.

<sup>16</sup> LeShan, 1992. See also Galtung, 1996, Galtung, et al., 2000. See also Galtung's description of the Dichotomy-Manicheism-Armageddon (DMT) syndrome at "Cultural Peace: Some Characteristics," by Johan Galtung, Transcend articles, October 12, 2003, www.transcend.org/files/article121.html. See also "Expert Colloquy – Dialogue Serving Intercultural and Inter-Religious Communication – Strasbourg," Council of Europe, October 7–9, 2002, interview with Johan Galtung, www.coe.int/T/E/Com/Files/Events/2002-10-Intercultural-Dialogue/Interview\_galtung.asp.

<sup>17</sup> "Address to a Joint Session of Congress and the American People," by George W. Bush, The White House, United States Capitol, Washington, DC, <http://georgewbush-whitehouse.archives.gov/news/releases/2001/09/20010920-8.html>.

<sup>18</sup> Asiem El Difraoui in "Gestohlene Symbolik, Propaganda, Terror: Das Online-Magazin 'Dabiq' – und der Widerstand," ttt – titel thesen temperatmente, Das Erste, January 7, 2016, www.daserste.de/information/wissen-kultur/ttt/sendung/islamischer-staat-magazin-dabiq-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters. See also Richter and El Difraoui, 2015.

<sup>19</sup> Dabiq is a town in northern Syria, the site of the battle of Marj Dabiq in 1516, in which the Ottoman Empire defeated the Mameluke Sultanate of Egypt. According to Islamic eschatology, Dabiq is one of two possible locations for an epic battle between invading Christians and Muslims. It will bring a Muslim victory and the beginning of the end of the world. Da'esh has named their online propaganda and recruitment magazine Dabiq, first published in July 2014 in English and other languages. See copies reproduced at the Clarion Project's website, www.clarionproject.org/news/islamic-state-isis-isil-propaganda-magazine-dabiq#.

<sup>20</sup> See the work by Monty Marshall, 2014–2016, on complexity. His foundational premises are, he wrote in a personal message on February 5, 2016, “that social identity groups are the universal organizing units of a peaceful social order which are self-actuating, self-organizing, self-regulating, and self-correcting.” It is a privilege to have Monty Marshall as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its inception.

<sup>21</sup> Psychologist Carol Dweck, 1999, found that the challenges of life can be approached with an ego-oriented performance orientation or a task-oriented learning-mastery orientation, or as Linda Hartling would express it, a fixed mindset versus a growth mindset. Those with an ego orientation entertain an implicit entity theory of intelligence, they regard intelligence as fixed and try to look smart and avoid mistakes. Others think that intelligence is malleable, they adhere to an incremental theory of intelligence, and have an intrinsic motivation to achieve mastery in a task, desire to learn new things, even if they might get confused, make mistakes, and not look smart. Students with mastery goals are basically more successful. See also Dweck, 2007.

Psychologist David Yeager, et al., 2013, examined how holding a fixed mindset versus holding a growth mindset influenced interpretations of other people's hostile intent. In a meta-analytic study of eight independent samples that included 1,128 students, Yeager and his colleagues found that a fixed mindset predicted hostile attributions equally for males and females, and for students from communities with higher and lower levels of violence. “In a following study, Yeager found that by experimentally changing implicit theories to a more incremental growth mindset substantially reduced attributions of hostile intent in both urban and suburban schools. In a final study, Yeager found that a short-term intervention (two class sessions) could result in more benign intent attributions over an eight-month school year,” in Hartling and Lindner, forthcoming.

<sup>22</sup> Newman, et al., 1997, have found evidence for the hypothesis of defensive projection, whereby people's own hostile and threatening personality traits are projected onto others and serve to justify the subject's aggressive behavior towards them. I thank Nils Vidar Vambheim for drawing my attention to this research.

<sup>23</sup> Publius Flavius Vegetius Renatus and Reeve, 2004.

<sup>24</sup> Translated by Lindner from Hitler's speech to the German press on November 10, 1938, www.zum.de/psm/ns/hitler13\_aussen.php, as quoted in Treue, 1958, p. 175ff:

Die Umstände haben mich gezwungen, jahrzehntelang fast nur vom Frieden zu reden. Nur unter der fortgesetzten Betonung des deutschen Friedenswillens und der Friedensabsichten war es mir möglich, dem deutschen Volk Stück für Stück die Freiheit zu erringen und ihm die Rüstung zu geben, die immer wieder für den nächsten Schritt als Voraussetzung notwendig war. Es ist selbstverständlich, daß eine solche jahrzehntelang betriebene Friedenspropaganda auch ihre bedenklichen Seiten hat; denn es kann nur zu leicht dahin führen, daß sich in den Gehirnen vieler Menschen die Auffassung festsetzt, daß das heutige Regime an sich identisch sei mit dem Entschluß und dem Willen, den Frieden unter allen Umständen zu bewahren. Das würde aber nicht nur zu einer falschen Beurteilung der Zielsetzung dieses Systems führen, daß die Deutsche Nation, statt den Ereignissen gegenüber gewappnet zu sein, mit einem Geist erfüllt wird, der auf die Dauer als Defaitismus gerade die Erfolge des heutigen Regimes nehmen würde und nehmen müßte. Der Zwang war die Ursache, warum ich jahrelang nur vom Frieden redete. Es war nunmehr notwendig, das deutsche Volk psychologisch allmählich umzustellen und ihm langsam klarzumachen, daß es Dinge gibt, die, wenn sie nicht mit friedlichen Mitteln durchgesetzt werden können, mit Mitteln der Gewalt durchgesetzt werden müssen. Dazu war es aber notwendig, nicht etwa nun die Gewalt als solche zu propagieren, sondern es war notwendig, dem deutschen Volk bestimmte außenpolitische Vorgänge so zu beleuchten, daß die innere Stimme des Volkes selbst langsam nach der Gewalt zu schreien begann. Daß heißt also, bestimmte Vorgänge so zu beleuchten, daß im Hirn der breiten Masse des Volkes ganz automatisch allmählich die Überzeugung ausgelöst wurde: wenn man das eben nicht im Guten abstellen kann, dann muß man es eben mit Gewalt abstellen; so kann es aber auf keinen Fall weitergehen. Diese Arbeit hat Monate erfordert, sie wurde planmäßig begonnen, planmäßig fortgeführt, verstärkt. Vielen haben Sie nicht begriffen, meine Herren; viele waren der Meinung, das sei doch alles etwas übertrieben. Das sind jene überzüchteten Intellektuellen, die keine Ahnung haben, wie man ein Volk letzten Endes zu der Bereitschaft bringt, geradezustehen, auch wenn es zu blitzen und zu donnern beginnt.

<sup>25</sup> Adolf Hitler: Reichstagsrede mit Kriegserklärung an Polen, Berlin, Deutscher Reichstag in der Kroll-Oper, September 1, 1939, www.nationalsozialismus.de/dokumente/adolf-hitler-reichstagsrede-mit-kriegserklaerung-an-polen-vom-01-09-1939-volltext/.

<sup>26</sup> Mallmann, et al., 2008.

<sup>27</sup> Kuźniar, 2009.

<sup>28</sup> In Hitlers Verbündete (3/3): Rumänien und Ungarn, film by Peter Prestel and Rudolf Sporrer, www.phoenix.de/hitlers\_verbuendete/285540.htm, translated from German by Lindner. Veteran Norbert Major says:

Warum haben wir gekämpft? Obwohl es Wahnsinn war? “Weil wir Soldaten waren! Wir hatten einen Eid geleistet! Auf seine Durchlaucht, den Reichsverweser Horthy!” Nur wer zuerst schießt, überlebt!

<sup>29</sup> Lukacs, 1997.

<sup>30</sup> Adolf Hitler in a letter on September 16, 1919, in Jäckel and Kuhn, 1980, p. 88, see also www.lpb-bw.de/publikationen/pogrom/pogrom4.htm:

Der Antisemitismus aus rein gefühlsmäßigen Gründen wird seinen letzten Ausdruck finden in der Form von Pogromen.. Der Antisemitismus der Vernunft jedoch muß führen zur planmäßigen gesetzlichen Bekämpfung und Beseitigung der Vorrechte des Juden, die er zum Unterschied der anderen zwischen uns lebenden Fremden besitzt (Fremdengesetzgebung). Sein letztes Ziel aber muß unverrückbar die Entfernung der Juden überhaupt sein.

<sup>31</sup> Shay, 2011, p. 181.

<sup>32</sup> van der Kolk, 2014, p. 31. I thank Linda Hartling for reminding me of this book.

<sup>33</sup> Adolf Hitler in a public declaration to the German Reichstag in Berlin on January 30, 1939, translated by Lindner from Kurt Bauer, Lehrveranstaltung “Schlüsseltexte und –dokumente zur Geschichte des Nationalsozialismus,” Universität Wien, Institut für Zeitgeschichte, Wintersemester 2008/09, www.kurt-bauer-geschichte.at/PDF\_Lehrveranstaltung%202008\_2009/20\_Hitlerrede\_1939-01-30.pdf, pp. 14–15:

Ich möchte zur jüdischen Frage folgendes bemerken. Es ist ein beschämendes Schauspiel, heute zu sehen, wie die ganze Welt der Demokratie vor Mitleid trieft, dem armen gequälten jüdischen Volke gegenüber, allein hartherzig verstockt bleibt angesichts der dann doch offenkundigen Pflicht zu helfen... Ich bin in meinem Leben sehr oft Prophet gewesen und wurde meistens ausgelacht. In der Zeit meines Kampfes um die Macht war es in erster Linie das jüdische Volk, das nur mit Gelächter meine Prophezeiungen hinnahm, ich würde einmal in Deutschland die Führung des Staates und damit des ganzen Volkes übernehmen und dann unter vielen anderen auch das jüdische Problem zur Lösung bringen. Ich glaube, dass dieses damalige schallende Gelächter dem Judentum in Deutschland underdes wohl schon in der Kehle erstickt ist. (Lebhafter Beifall) Ich will heute wieder ein Prophet sein: Wenn es dem internationalen Finanzjudentum inner- und außerhalb Europas gelingen sollte, die Völker noch einmal in einen Weltkrieg zu stürzen, dann wird das Ergebnis nicht die Bolschewisierung der Erde und damit der Sieg des Judentums sein, sondern die Vernichtung der jüdischen Rasse in Europa! (Anhaltender stürmischer Beifall).

<sup>34</sup> Sherratt, 2013.

<sup>35</sup> Sherratt, 2013, p. 25.

<sup>36</sup> Sherratt, 2013, p. 26.

<sup>37</sup> Sherratt, 2013, p. 21.

<sup>38</sup> Staub, 1989, 1993, 2012, 2015.

<sup>39</sup> Lindner, 2000i, c, f, h, d, 2001g, 2006d.

<sup>40</sup> BCE stands for “Before the Common Era,” and is equivalent to BC, which means “Before Christ.”

<sup>41</sup> Garland, 2010 .

<sup>42</sup> “English and Norman Society,” by Mike Ibeji, BBC, February 17, 2011, www.bbc.co.uk/history/british/normans/society\_01.shtml.

<sup>43</sup> Historian Torgrim Titlestad, 2016, explains that it is no coincidence that Norway is often regarded as one of the most progressive democratic and freedom-based countries. Viking sagas show how widespread democratic thinking was in Norse communities and how the Norse thing system and the individual’s legal status are the source of Norway’s modern democratic system. Viking sagas show that plunder and conquest were not the main characteristic of Viking times, but rather struggles for freedom, people resisting authoritarian rulers, and insistence on freedom of religion.

<sup>44</sup> Bagge, 2006.

<sup>45</sup> “Þorgeir Ljósveitningagoði – The Conversion to Christianity in 1000 AD,” Saga Museum, Reykjavik, Iceland, www.sagamuseum.is/overview/thorgeir-ljosvetningagodhi.

<sup>46</sup> Stefánsson and Karlsdóttir, 2009. Þórarinn Stefánsson (Eagle of Thor) is the husband of Ragnheidur Karlsdóttir, whom I met on January 23, 2015, in connection with the doctoral defense of Jingyi Dong, in which I served as opponent. I am profoundly thankful to him for sharing his life story and insights with me. Stefánsson is a physicist, and he started out with studying electrons and ions and how they move. Yet, since the topic of fusion never took off, and solid state became en vogue, he turned to looking at how students learn. For instance, the most challenging task is to learn something that changes slowly: you can teach a child the clock if you move it quickly, not when you let it go at its speed. Stefánsson began to understand the importance of practice, and that students need to test their theoretical knowledge in practice. In the case of physics, this would mean a laboratory. Yet, he met resistance among this fellow physicists, who had a preference for theory, not least because they were proud of their students being brighter than others, believing that listening to lectures was all they needed.

When he studied learning theories, Stefánsson found a few, each of them not excellent, but, taken together, useful: On one side, there is what is going on “in the head,” and we can look at Piaget and how he used Darwin as analogy, or zoology, since he was originally a zoologist; we can look at Vygotsky who took Marx as analogy or the development of societies; and we can look at information theory. And on the other side, there is “behavior.” Most scholars make the mistake of specializing only in one.

<sup>47</sup> “How did Iceland become Europe’s giant-slayers?” by Simon Usborne, The Guardian, June 28, 2016, www.theguardian.com/football/shortcuts/2016/jun/28/iceland-europes-giant-slayers-unbeaten-run-euro-2016-france-quarter-finals-success.

<sup>48</sup> Althoff, 2006.

<sup>49</sup> 2007 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, in Hangzhou, China, April 13–16, 2007, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoware/annualmeeting/09.php. See also Lindner, 2007a.

<sup>50</sup> See, for example, www.chinacsr.com/en/2007/10/11/1744-china-plans-harmonious-society-measurement-standard, and ec.europa.eu/employment\_social/social\_inclusion/jrep\_en.htm.

<sup>51</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>52</sup> Lu, 1981.

<sup>53</sup> Lu, 2000a, b. See also Lu, 2002b, a, c, 2003, 2004. I thank Jingyi Dong for her personal communication on June 25, 2015, where she shared her views on the role of Lu Xun with me. She took an image by Catherine Hoppers as starting point, an image that depicts a white and a black man fighting, oblivious of the fact that they stand in the mouth of a crocodile that will eat both. This image aims to visualize that a global economic system will eat all, and that it would be preferable to focus attention on the crocodile rather than on infighting. See this image in the Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions to Section Three and more images and photos on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoware/evelin/pics13.php. Dong wrote to me:

Let me give my comment on Lu Xun and you respectively. Let’s use the picture created by Catherine Hoppers. Lu Xun was the one who sharpened the knives of the two fighting men, while you are the one who calls the two men to a halt and reminds them of the crocodile. Lu Xun was a victim of humiliation. Unfortunately, he was also the greatest master of language arts with the most penetrating insights. This enabled him not only to expose the problems of a diseased society, but also to push for a new spiral of humiliation; you are the one who points to ways to stop humiliation.

I do not blame Lu Xun, for he was not the only who did this. Lu Xun lost his father in his childhood. Look at the early leaders of the Communist Party of China: Li Dazhao lost his parents before he was three years old and lost his grandparents when he was 15 years old; Chen Duxiu lost his father in childhood; Qu Qiubai’s father was addicted to opium and his mother committed suicide to get rid of debt. Living in patriarchal communities, where females were marginalized, these boys lost shelter from the adult males in the family. Meanwhile, they did not get the paternal love that the community was obliged to offer. What would be the influence on their mindsets? These were unusually talented boys who would later become holders of rich academic capital and consequently participants of politics.

What would they do when they grew up? Your theory can tell.

The communist movement in China started from the university campus, then penetrated into the army, then to rural society, and ultimately Mao established a field with a unique structure. My ultimate ambition is to trace this trajectory by the light of your theory. I would like to highlight the difference between you and Lu Xun: Lu Xun asked a question, and you have the key to the question!

<sup>54</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more prominent. See Lindner, 2012d. Already when I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson’s and Kate Pickett’s work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk. Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Stiglitz, 2012, Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality.

In China, the novelist Liao Yiwu could perhaps be called the new Lu Xun. Yiwu, 2002/2008, has interviewed people for whom the “new” China – the China of economic growth and globalization – is no more beneficial than the old. Like Yiwu, also Belarusian Svetlana Alexievich, 2013/2016, describes the horrors of our time by recording the testimonies of witnesses.

<sup>55</sup> Lindner, 2000b.

<sup>56</sup> Feigon, 2002, p. 140. Feignon’s views on Mao Zedong are criticized as being too forgiving, as opposed to Chang and Halliday, 2005, who might have been too polemically negative of Mao Zedong, see Lin and Benton, 2010.

<sup>57</sup> Chang and Halliday, 2005, has been criticized as being too polemically negative of Mao Zedong, see Lin and Benton, 2010.

<sup>58</sup> Guo, et al., 2006, Yongyi, 2011. Song Yongyi, a librarian at California State University, Los Angeles, leads a coalition of scholars, who published the Chinese Cultural Revolution Database, with 40,000 entries, including unpublished speeches, documents, and other information, www.chineseupress.com/chineseupress/promotion/cultural-revolution-cd-new2006/e\_revolution.htm, see also <http://prchistory.org/remembrance/>. Song was jailed for five years during the Cultural Revolution. See also “Rediscovering History in China,” a project by Ian Johnson, www.ian-johnson.com/index.php?page=china-rediscovering-the-past-and-the-present.

<sup>59</sup> Morning Sun, a two-hour documentary film by Carma Hinton, Geremie Barmé, and Richard Gordon, 2003, attempts “to create an inner history” of the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution (circa 1964 – 1976), www.morningsun.org/about/index.html. Morning Sun is a presentation of the Independent Television Service (ITVS) and the Center for Asian American Media (formerly NAATA), with the participation of Arte and the BBC:

Li Rui and his daughter Li Nanyang. Li Rui, the Communist Party veteran who drew international attention for his recent call for political reform at the 16th Party Congress, was at one time Mao’s secretary. As an idealistic youth, he traveled to the Communist base at Yan’an in the late 1930s, and he first suffered revolutionary persecution there during the early 1940s. As one of Mao’s secretaries, he briefly had access to the inner circle of China’s ruling elite in the 1950s, but his criticisms of the Great Leap Forward led to his denunciation and exile. His daughter, Li Nanyang, was discriminated against in school because of her father’s downfall. A sincere believer in the ideals of the revolution, Li Nanyang rejected her father as an enemy of the Party; it was many years before the two could reconcile.

<sup>60</sup> Schell and Delury, 2013. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book. Orville Schell was educated at Harvard University and the University of California, Berkeley and is the author of numerous books and articles on China. The former dean of the Graduate School of Journalism at Berkeley, he is presently the Arthur Ross Director of the Center on U.S.-China Relations at the Asia Society in New York City. John Delury received his Ph.D. in modern Chinese history at Yale University, where he wrote his dissertation on the Ming-Qing Confucian scholar Gu Yanwu. He taught at Brown, Columbia, and Peking University, and was associate director of Asia Society’s Center on U.S.-China Relations. He is currently an assistant professor of East Asian studies at Yonsei University in Seoul. See also Kaufman, 2010, Luo, 1993.

<sup>61</sup> Callahan, 2009, p. 141. See also Wang, 2008. William Callahan is the director of the Asian Studies in Europe and China project, director of the Centre for Contemporary Chinese Studies, and Senior Lecturer in International Politics at the Department of Politics at the University of Durham in the United Kingdom. It is a privilege to have William Callahan as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Callahan reports of a collection of explicit photographs and descriptions of rape and sexual abuse stemming from Japanese wartime atrocities, which depict women “in negative ways as the violated national bodies that challenge national honor – and demand nationalist revenge,” Callahan, 2010, p. 179.

<sup>62</sup> Wang, 2012. I thank Selina Köhr for making me aware of this book. See also Wang, 2008. Zheng Wang is a Public Policy Scholar at the Kissinger Institute on China and the United States of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. See also “Never Forget National Humiliation,” by Gideon Rachman, Financial Times, August 27, 2012, www.ft.com/intl/cms/s/2/634a39ec-e888-11e1-8ffc-00144feab49a.html#axzz2VpjEJcJw.

<sup>63</sup> Conquest, 2008, Front matter.

<sup>64</sup> Conquest, 2008, Gellately, 2007.

<sup>65</sup> Figes, 2007.

<sup>66</sup> Ibid.

<sup>67</sup> Schlögel, 2008.

<sup>68</sup> Pushkin, 1876, Marie: A Story of Russian Love. This novel allows a deeper understanding of Russia during the reign of Catherine the Great, with honor being at the core of its love romances as well as of its murders and conquests.

<sup>69</sup> “May 31, 1929: Ford Signs Agreement with Soviet Union,” This Day in History, www.history.com/this-day-in-history/ford-signs-agreement-with-soviet-union.

<sup>70</sup> American Experience: Henry Ford, documentary film as part of the collection The Titans, 2013, www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/films/henryford/.

<sup>71</sup> Volkogonov, 1978, in Albrecht, 1980, p. 139:

According to Volkogonov, Red Militarism is not related to Marxist ideology as such; it is to be found in countries characterized by socio-economic backwardness, is likely to be found in countries with a strong authoritarian heritage, and is related to nationalism, which spills over into hegemonism and chauvinism. Manifestations of Red Militarism are to be sought in the composition of party leadership and the relative share of military activities in the economy. The combination of these elements is considered to provide for an excessive, self-sustaining development; Red Militarism “makes use of all elements of the state structure to build up the military potential with the aim of attaining expansionist and hegemonic aims.”

See also Volkogonov and Shukman, 1998.

<sup>72</sup> Adler, 1993, 2004, Adler, et al., 2009.

<sup>73</sup> Conquest, 2008.

<sup>74</sup> Vita Constantini (Life of Constantine the Great), a panegyric written in Greek in honor of Constantine the Great by Eusebius of Caesarea in the fourth century CE, never completed due to the death of Eusebius in 339, Chapter XII: Constantine’s Address to the Council concerning Peace, www.documentacatholicaomnia.eu/03d/0265-0339,\_Eusebius\_Caesariensis,\_Vita\_Constantini\_%5BSchaff%5D,\_EN.pdf.

<sup>75</sup> Freeman, 2003b.

<sup>76</sup> Freeman, 2003a. I thank Lasse Moer for making me aware of this book.

<sup>77</sup> “Did al-Ghazali Kill the Science in Islam?” by Nuh Aydin, Fountain Magazine, Perspectives, Issue 87 / May – June 2012, www.fountainmagazine.com/Issue/detail/did-al-ghazali-kill-the-science-in-islam-may-june-2012. I thank Lasse Moer for making me aware of this article.

<sup>78</sup> “Religious Fundamentalism-Extremism-Violence,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 8, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/02/religious-fundamentalism-extremism-violence/.

<sup>79</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/. See also the Military-Industrial Complex Speech by Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, on January 17, 1961, Public Papers of the Presidents, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960, pp. 1035–1040, <http://coursesa.matrix.msu.edu/~hst306/documents/indust.html>, see also <https://youtu.be/8y06NSBBRtY>. In this farewell speech Eisenhower warns of the military industrial complex. Already the English economist John Atkinson Hobson, 1902, had espoused the opinion that imperial expansion is driven by a search for new markets and investment opportunities overseas. His book gained Hobson an international reputation, and influenced people such as Vladimir Lenin and Leon Trotsky, as well as The Origins of Totalitarianism by Hannah Arendt, 1951. See more in note 46 in Chapter 11, in note 127 in this Chapter 14, and in note 199 in Chapter 18.

<sup>80</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid.

<sup>82</sup> The Bandung Conference was the first large-scale Asian–African or Afro–Asian conference, of twenty-nine Asian and African states, most newly independent, which took place on April 18–24, 1955, in Bandung, Indonesia. Nearly one-quarter of the Earth’s land surface and a total population of 1.5 billion people was represented.

<sup>83</sup> “Speech by President Sukarno of Indonesia at the Opening of the Conference,” Bandung, Indonesia, April 18, 1955, “The World and Japan” Database Project, Database of Japanese Politics and International Relations, Institute for Advanced Studies on Asia, University of Tokyo, source: The Ministry of Foreign Affairs Republic of Indonesia, www.ioc.u-tokyo.ac.jp/~worldjpn/documents/texts/docs/19550418.S1E.html.

<sup>84</sup> “Tredje verden-prosjektets død skaper et monster: Sekter uten grenser” (The Third World Project’s Death Creates a Monster: Sects Without Borders), by Yohan Shanmugaratnam, Klassekampen, July 3, 2014.

<sup>85</sup> “Telegram to the Secretary of State, Department of State,” by George K. Kennan, National Security Archive, 1946, <http://nsarchive.gwu.edu/coldwar/documents/episode-1/kennan.htm>.

<sup>86</sup> “In an Age of ‘Realists’ and Vigilantes, there is Cause for Optimism,” by John Pilger, September 19, 2013, <http://johnpilger.com/articles/in-an-age-of-realists-and-vigilantes-there-is-cause-for-optimism>.

<sup>87</sup> Totten, et al., 2004, p. 245.

<sup>88</sup> The Act of Killing (2012) and The Look of Silence (2014), are documentary films by Joshua Oppenheimer. The Act of Killing is a portrait of the perpetrators of the 1965 Indonesian genocide, in which perhaps a million people suspected of being Communists were killed. In The Look of Silence the focus is on the murder of a single victim, Ramli Rukun. In 2014, after a screening of The Act of Killing for US Congress members, Oppenheimer called on the U.S. to acknowledge its role in the killings.

<sup>89</sup> “Joshua Oppenheimer Won’t Go Back to Indonesia,” interview by Adam Shatz, New York Times, July 9, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/07/12/magazine/joshua-oppenheimer-wont-go-back-to-indonesia.html?\_r=1. Oppenheimer states that the West shares considerable responsibility for the mass killings in Indonesia. Particular the United States “provided the special radio system so the Army could coordinate the killings over the vast archipelago.”

<sup>90</sup> Comisión Nacional sobre la Desaparición de Personas (CONADEP), 1984.

<sup>91</sup> Cardenas, 2009.

<sup>92</sup> The Equal Justice Initiative (EJI), 2015. See also “Facing the Past: Lynching and American Civic Memory,” by Karen Murphy, Facing Today, February 19, 2015, <http://facingtoday.facinghistory.org/facing-the-past-lynching-and-american-civic-memory/>. See photographs and postcards of lynching in America at <http://withoutsanctuary.org/>.

<sup>93</sup> “Facing the Past: Lynching and American Civic Memory.” See note 92 above.

<sup>94</sup> Coates, 2015, pp. 22–23. I thank Peter Coleman for giving me this book as a present in November 2015. It is a privilege to have Peter Coleman as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>95</sup> Coates, 2015, p. 32.

<sup>96</sup> Ibid.

<sup>97</sup> Ibid.

<sup>98</sup> Raymond G. Helmick, Senior Associate of the Preventive Diplomacy Program and professor of conflict resolution at the Department of Theology, Boston College, U.S.A., wrote in a personal communication on December 4, 2014:

...great public concerns that are directly results of humiliation and failure to recognize the dignity of people. Both the Islamic State crisis, that so occupies international worry this year, and the eruption of anger over the Ferguson and now also New York killings of unarmed black Americans fall into that class.

The ways people speak of responding to these crises are so lacking in respect for those who are expressing their frustrations in this way are further provocations to more of the same indignation. Much of our American political system is crying out for more and more military involvement in a battle with ISIS. It has to be understood that the problem we face today with outraged Muslims is a direct result of what we were told, from the deck of an aircraft carrier, was “Mission Accomplished” eleven years ago. The accomplishment of that mission is manifest only now in this present surge of violence from people who have been profoundly insulted by the Americans’ and the West’s assumption of superiority to them and all their aspirations in the wars in Iraq (both wars: 1990–1991 and since 2003) and Afghanistan and the resulting islamophobia with which we have burdened Muslims both within our own countries and abroad. Within the white population of the United States there still remains a profound lack of feeling for the humiliation suffered by our black population.

It is a privilege to have Raymond Helmick as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>99</sup> Paul H. Ray, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Why We Consume: Neural Design and Sustainability,” January 14, 2016:

In several hundred studies, we found that cultural differences in values and worldviews were vastly better predictors to consumer behavior, than learning of the kind mentioned in neural research, or than the kinds of variables used in conventional behaviorist or personality psychology. Values state what is most important in life, and worldviews state beliefs about how life works.

The key discovery that gave rise to the cultural creatives research findings was that this is grows out of cultural change processes, and psychological variables are not correlated with that. In fact, in numerous studies in Japan, Western Europe and the United States, competition among three competing subcultures organize cultural changes in consumption and in sustainability-related behaviors. These are traditionals, moderns, and cultural creatives (who are the leaders in creating change toward sustainable culture).

Each of the three subcultures is very similar in pattern to its cognate type in the other developed nations. In a comparison of cultural creatives in the Netherlands and the U.S., we found that they are more similar to each other than they are to their countrymen in the other two subcultures.

This was especially true for sustainability-related products, and any kind of “green” behaviors, or attitudes in “green” public issues. And there was better leverage for change by working off of values and lifestyle preferences, and interpreting consumption changes in terms of worldviews. Values and worldviews simply lie at a deeper level in consumer behavior than attitudes and opinions, and are more accessible to influence through interpersonal contact.

See also Ray and Anderson, 2000.

<sup>100</sup> See the five episodes of Der heilige Krieg (The Holy War): Das Schwert des Propheten; Kreuzzug nach Jerusalem; Die Türken vor Wien; Dschihad für den Kaiser; Terror für den Glauben, www.fernsehserien.de/der-heilige-krieg/episodenguide.

<sup>101</sup> Teichmann, 2014.

<sup>102</sup> Read also Anderson, 2013, on Curt Prüfer, who worked under the supervision of Max von Oppenheim. Von Oppenheim instructed Prüfer on strategies of sabotage against the British rule in Egypt.

<sup>103</sup> McMeekin, 2010.

<sup>104</sup> Oberhaus, 2007.

<sup>105</sup> SMS Wolf (formerly the Hansa freighter Wachtfels) was an armed merchant raider of the Imperial German Navy in World War I.

<sup>106</sup> The prisoners reported that they were treated honorably on board, see, among others, Frederic George Traves, 1919, who later wrote about his experiences. The crew of the ship was less satisfied, as they suffered greatly under the ill treatment from the arrogance of their own officers, who acted according to the hierarchical military system of the time and upheld status differences in a situation that called for solidarity, since all were exposed to the same dangers. The reality of “we will all swim or sink together” did not translate into lessening elite arrogance.

<sup>107</sup> Anderson, 2013.

<sup>108</sup> Lawrence, 1938. See also his autobiography, Lawrence, 1922.

<sup>109</sup> “IS Want Western Countries to Invade: What’s The Purpose of “Global” Terrorism?” by Gwynne Dyer, Information Clearing House, November 30, 2014, www.informationclearinghouse.info/article40350.htm.

<sup>110</sup> Neumann, 2015/2016.

<sup>111</sup> Blin and Chaliand, 2007, Chaliand and Blin, 2015.

<sup>112</sup> Laqueur, 1977, 2001, 2009.

<sup>113</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber’s three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

See also Karlberg, 2013. He explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality, see Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>114</sup> Sageman, 2008.

<sup>115</sup> Bergen, 2016.

<sup>116</sup> “Die deutsche Wiege der Extremisten,” by Stefan Kreitewolf, Das Handelsblatt, March 1, 2015, www.handelsblatt.com/politik/deutschland/salafisten-in-dinslaken-die-deutsche-wiege-der-extremisten/11417998.html.

<sup>117</sup> Bedrohen Salafisten Deutschland? Südwestrundfunk, January 11, 2016, www.planet-wissen.de/videoplanetwissenbedrohensalafistendeutschland100.html. See also Kaddor, 2015. Südwestrundfunk, SWR, “Southwest Broadcasting,” is a regional public broadcasting corporation serving the southwest of Germany, specifically the federal states of Baden-Württemberg and Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>118</sup> “‘IS’ Secret Police – The Trial of Nils D.,” by Matthias von Hein, Deutsche Welle, January 19, 2016, www.dw.com/en/is-secret-police-the-trial-of-nils-d/a-18990262.

<sup>119</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/.

<sup>120</sup> “Crimes against peace: (i) Planning, preparation, initiation or waging of war of aggression or a war in violation of international treaties, agreements or assurances; (ii) Participation in a common plan or conspiracy for the accomplishment of any of the acts mentioned under (i).” See Principle VI in Principles of International Law recognized in the Charter of the Nürnberg Tribunal and in the Judgment of the Tribunal, with commentaries 1950, http://legal.un.org/ilc/texts/instruments/english/commentaries/7\_1\_1950.pdf.

<sup>121</sup> Charter of the United Nations, Chapter I: Purposes and Principles, www.un.org/en/sections/un-charter/chapter-i/.

<sup>122</sup> Opening Statement before the International Military Tribunal by Justice Robert H. Jackson, Chief of Counsel for the United States, to the International Military Tribunal in the Palace of Justice at Nuremberg, Germany, November 21, 1945, www.roberthjackson.org/collection/speeches/as-nuremberg-prosecutor-945-1946/.

<sup>123</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 25ff.

<sup>124</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/.

<sup>125</sup> Military-Industrial Complex Speech by Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, on January 17, 1961, Public Papers of the Presidents, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960, pp. 1035–1040, <http://coursesa.matrix.msu.edu/~hst306/documents/indust.html>, see also <https://youtu.be/8y06NSBBRtY>. In this farewell speech Eisenhower warns of the military industrial complex.

<sup>126</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/.

<sup>127</sup> Ibid.:

Since World War II, the United States has interfered either militarily or covertly in the internal affairs of very many countries. These include China, 1945–49; Italy, 1947–48; Greece, 1947–49; Philippines, 1946–53; South Korea, 1945–53; Albania, 1949–53; Germany, 1950s; Iran, 1953; Guatemala, 1953–1990s; Middle East, 1956–58; Indonesia, 1957–58; British Guiana/Guyana, 1953–64; Vietnam, 1950–73; Cambodia, 1955–73; The Congo/Zaire, 1960–65; Brazil, 1961–64; Dominican Republic, 1963–66; Cuba, 1959–present; Indonesia, 1965; Chile, 1964–73; Greece, 1964–74; East Timor, 1975–present; Nicaragua, 1978–89; Grenada, 1979–84; Libya, 1981–89; Panama, 1989; Iraq, 1990–present; Afghanistan 1979–92; El Salvador, 1980–92; Haiti, 1987–94; Yugoslavia, 1999; and Afghanistan, 2001–present.

See also “How Many Muslim Countries Has the U.S. Bombed Or Occupied Since 1980?” by Glenn Greenwald, The Intercept, November 11, 2014, <https://firstlook.org/theintercept/2014/11/06/many-countries-islamic-world-u-s-bombed-occupied-since-1980/>.

<sup>128</sup> See, for instance, “International Is Out and National Is Again Back,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), July 13, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/07/international-is-out-and-national-is-again-back/. See also historian VijayPrashad, 2012, who describes how the Brandt Report was ridiculed, for instance, by Ronald Reagan:

Reagan mocked the proceedings, particularly those “who mistake compassion for development, and claim massive transfers of wealth somehow, miraculously, will produce new well-being.” The North-South dialogue effectively ended.

The Brandt Report was written by the Independent Commission, first chaired by then German Chancellor Willy Brandt in 1980, to review international development issues and it illuminated the drastic differences in the economic development for the North and South hemispheres of the world. See Brandt and Independent Commission On International Development Issues, 1980.

<sup>129</sup> Similar strategic thoughts were already developed in the “Wolfowitz Doctrine” (unofficial name) of 1992, which flowed into the foreign policy principles of Amirian President George W. Bush.

<sup>130</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/. See also “The Blundering Obama Administration and its Apparent Incoherent Foreign Policy,” by Rodrigue Tremblay July 11, 2014, www.thenewamericanempire.com/tremblay=1160.htm.

<sup>131</sup> “Scholar and Retired Army Officer Andrew Bacevich on the U.S. War for the Greater Middle East,” Andrew J. Bacevich with Stephen Kinzer, Boston Review, April 4, 2016, <http://bostonreview.net/us/andrew-j-bacevich-interviewed-stephen-kinzer-war-greater-middle-east>. See his most recent book, Bacevich, 2016.

<sup>132</sup> How We Got Into a Permanent War? Andrew Bacevich in the Brian Lehrer Show, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, November 23, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/how-we-got-permanent-war/. See also, “Ending Endless War: A Pragmatic Military Strategy,” by Andrew J. Bacevich, Foreign Affairs, September/October 2016, www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/united-states/2016-08-03/ending-endless-war.

<sup>133</sup> Niebuhr, 1952/2008.

<sup>134</sup> “The Blundering Obama Administration and its Apparent Incoherent Foreign Policy,” by Rodrigue Tremblay July 11, 2014, www.thenewamericanempire.com/tremblay=1160.htm. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>135</sup> Jost and Ross, 1999.

<sup>136</sup> Martin, 2010, p. 166. Glen T. Martin is the President of the World Constitution and Parliament Association (www.worldparliament-gov.org), President of the Institute on World Problems (www.earth-constitution.org), and professor of philosophy at Radford University (www.radford.edu/gmartin). It is a privilege to have Glen Martin as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>137</sup> Martin, 2010, p. 166.

<sup>138</sup> Glen Martin in a personal communication on January 28, 2010. The Earth Charter provides a template for global analysis and action. The mission of the Earth Charter Initiative is to promote the transition to sustainable ways of living and a global society founded on a shared ethical framework that includes respect and care for the community of life, ecological integrity, universal human rights, respect for diversity, economic justice, democracy, and a culture of peace. See www.earthcharter.org.

<sup>139</sup> Martin points at section 8.3 titled: “The Sovereign Nation-State as Inherently Terrorist” in Martin, 2010.

<sup>140</sup> “My collateral damage is your evil intention! Bias can humiliate,” in Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 5 of the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 70–71. The list of irrational biases and interference effects is long, from the halo effect, the “Florida effect,” framing effects, anchoring effects, the confirmation bias, outcome bias, hindsight bias, availability bias, the focusing illusion, and so on, see, for instance, Kahneman, 2011, or Wilson, 2002b, or Ross and Ward, 1996.

<sup>141</sup> Ross, 1995.

<sup>142</sup> Discussions about these topics took place in the context of the 2010 Annual Conference of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Peace at Home, Peace in the World,” in Istanbul, Turkey, April 28–30, 2010, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/15.php.

<sup>143</sup> Orhan Pamuk held his Nobel Lecture on December 7, 2006, at the Swedish Academy, Stockholm. See www.nobelprize.org/nobel\_prizes/literature/laureates/2006/pamuk-lecture.html. I thank Rigmor Johnson for sending me this quote. The lecture was titled “Babamın Bavulu” (My Father’s Suitcase) and was given in Turkish. In the lecture he allegorically spoke of relations between Eastern and Western civilizations using the theme of his relationship with his father (translation by Maureen Freely):

What literature needs most to tell and investigate today are humanity’s basic fears: the fear of being left outside, and the fear of counting for nothing, and the feelings of worthlessness that come with such fears; the collective humiliations, vulnerabilities, slights, grievances, sensitivities, and imagined insults, and the nationalist boasts and inflations that are their next of kin... Whenever I am confronted by such sentiments, and by the irrational, overstated language in which they are usually expressed, I know they touch on a darkness inside me. We have often witnessed peoples, societies and nations outside the Western world—and I can identify with them easily—succumbing to fears that sometimes lead them to commit stupidities, all because of their fears of humiliation and their sensitivities. I also know that in the West—a world with which I can identify with the same ease—nations and peoples taking an excessive pride in their wealth, and in their having brought us the Renaissance, the Enlightenment, and Modernism, have, from time to time, succumbed to a self-satisfaction that is almost as stupid.

<sup>144</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 71.

<sup>145</sup> Ibid.

Chapter 15

<sup>1</sup> BCE stands for “Before the Common Era,” and is equivalent to BC, which means “Before Christ.”

<sup>2</sup> “Stanford Expert Describes How the U.S. And China Can Manage Their Relationship and Avoid Conflict,” by Clifton B. Parker, Stanford Report, August 20, 2014, <http://news.stanford.edu/news/2014/august/us-china-relations-082014.html>. See also “Thucydides Trap,” by Karl Eikenberry, American Review, August 4, 2014, <http://americanreviewmag.com/stories/Thucydides-Trap>. See, furthermore, Syse, 2003.

<sup>3</sup> Machiavelli, 1532.

<sup>4</sup> Hobbes, 1651.

<sup>5</sup> “Police Mediation: An Idea Whose Time Has Come,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, January 25, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/01/police-mediation-an-idea-whose-time-has-come/.

<sup>6</sup> Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001.

<sup>7</sup> Sassen, 2014.

<sup>8</sup> Jaspers, 1919.

<sup>9</sup> Becker, 1973.

<sup>10</sup> Giuseppe Verdi’s Messa da Requiem may serve as an example. It had its first performance at the San Marco church in Milan, Italy, on May 22, 1874. It deeply moves its listeners, still today, and the reason is that it was written to honor a much missed person. On May 22, 1873, Alessandro Manzoni died, the great romantic poet of Italy. Verdi was so cast down by grief that he could not attend the funeral. Manzoni had, like Verdi, worked for the unification of Italy, for humanity and justice. Verdi’s Requiem Mass, however, was not only written for Manzoni, it revolves around the idea of humanity and its rebellion against death in general, it laments life’s impermanence altogether.

In commemoration of the destruction of the city of Dresden on February 13, 1945, a Requiem is traditionally performed in Dresden. It was Rudolf Kempe, who, in 1951, founded this tradition with Verdi’s Requiem. Also in 2005 Verdi’s Requiem Mass was on the program.

<sup>11</sup> The theory was originally proposed by Jeff Greenberg, Sheldon Solomon, and Tom Pyszczynski. See the first complete formal statement of terror management theory including epistemological assumptions and proposal for an experimental existential psychology in Solomon, et al., 1991, and more recent publications related to the events of September 11, 2001, Pyszczynski, et al., 2003.

<sup>12</sup> Jaspers, 1951, p. 20.

<sup>13</sup> Jünger, 1979.

<sup>14</sup> Jünger, 1979, p. 85. See also Hedges, 2002.

<sup>15</sup> Twain, 1904.

<sup>16</sup> McCauley, et al., 2013. It is a privilege to have Clark McCauley as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>17</sup> McCauley and Moskalkenko, 2014a, McCauley, et al., 2013.

<sup>18</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000. Social scientists Paul H. Ray and Sherry Ruth Anderson, through their surveys, identified three main cultural trends. First, the moderns, the cultural movement that started about 500 years ago and that endorses the “realist” worldview of either big business, big government, or big media, or past socialist, communist, or fascist movements. Then, the first countermovement against the moderns are the traditionals, the religious right and rural populations. The most recent countermovement are the cultural creatives, who value strong ecological sustainability for the planet, support women’s issues, personal growth, authenticity, and are wary of big business. The cultural creatives movement is currently flowing together from two branches that both started out around 1960 and initially antagonized each other, namely, the consciousness movement, an inward-oriented movement, focusing on the inner state of the psyche, and the social movement, an outward-oriented movement, focusing on action for peace in the streets.

When Ray and Anderson published their work in 2000, in the United States, traditionals comprised about 24 to 26 percent of the adult population (approximately 48 million people), moderns about 47 to 49 percent (approximately 95 million), and cultural creatives are about 26 to 28 percent (approximately 50 million). In the European Union, the cultural creatives were about 30 to 35 percent of the adult population.

<sup>19</sup> Reformbewegungen, www.forum-islam.ch/de/reformbewegungen/index.php. Summarized and translated from the German original by Lindner:

Das osmanische Reich war in dieser Hinsicht weniger tragfähig. Umso stärker wogen zunächst seine verwaltungsmässigen und militärischen Kapazitäten. Als letztere an der westlichen Übermacht scheiterten, machte sich auf der arabischen Halbinsel eine islamische Reformbewegung bemerkbar: Der Wahhabismus reorientierte sich eng am Wort des Korans, nachdem das Verlassen dieses Pfades als Ursache der Niederlage empfunden worden war. Der Wahhabismus gilt heute als konservativste Form des Islam.

<sup>20</sup> “Don’t Blame ‘Wahhabism’ for Terrorism,” by Mohammed Alyahya, New York Times, October 19, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/10/20/opinion/dont-blame-wahhabism-for-terrorism.html?\_r=0.

<sup>21</sup> For former Norwegian ambassador Carl Schjøtz Wibye, 2017, Wahhabism is not a religion, rather a sect built on extreme fantasies of a desperate desert preacher in the 1700s, later globalized through Saudi Arabia’s revenues from oil, ultimately leading to Taliban, Al-Qaeda, and Da’esh. In his view, the most dangerous aspect is the practice of takfir, or excommunication, declaring another self-professed Muslim a kafir or unbeliever.

<sup>22</sup> Mohamedou, 2011.

<sup>23</sup> “The Data That Turned the World Upside Down,” by Hannes Grassegger and Mikael Krogerus, Motherboard, January 28 2017, https://motherboard.vice.com/en\_us/article/how-our-likes-helped-trump-win.

<sup>24</sup> “Who Gets Radicalized? What I Learned From My Interviews With Extremist Disciples,” by Amra Sabic-El-Rayess, Huffington Post, June 19, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/entry/who-gets-radicalized-what-i-learned-from-my-interviews\_us\_5765fddce4b0ed0729a1c5c3.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.

<sup>26</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, “Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change,” by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

<sup>27</sup> Psychologists Jim Sidanius and Felicia Pratto speak of legitimizing myths, or compelling cultural ideologies that are taken as self-apparently true in society and that disguise the use of force and discrimination and make it acceptable. See Sidanius and Pratto, 1999. See an overview in “Power Inequities,” by Máire A. Dugan, Beyond Intractability, February 2004, www.beyondintractability.org/essay/power-inequities. See also Pratto and Stewart, 2011, where they describe how legitimizing myths change over time. They refer, for instance, to the United States’ expansion of its territory through the 1800s, and how it was underpinned by the doctrine of manifest destiny, indicating that Native Americans were “savages.” Twentieth-century and twenty-first-century occupations of other nations, however are no longer seen as “colonization” by the United States now but as “democratizing.” The U.S. feels superior to the old colonial powers of Europe now and views itself as the world’s premier egalitarian democracy. The authors enumerate the list of justifications that reign now: national security, national interest, national liberation, religious purity, “together with stereotypic images of the enemy as barbaric, especially in contrast to images of one’s own nation and allies as virtuous, can justify war, pre-emptive strikes, arms build-ups, violations of national sovereignty, terrorism, and violations of the International Humanitarian Law.” Pratto and Stewart make clear that even “liberal” legitimizing myths can be used to justify the use of force or warfare, for example, when invading Afghanistan was to liberate its women from the oppression by the Taliban. Massive and brutal violence was employed by Marxist and “egalitarian” revolutionary movements, from the Russian revolution to Peru’s Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path).

<sup>28</sup> For the notion of chosen trauma, see Volkan, 1997, 2004, 2006, 2013.

<sup>29</sup> Expert journalists for right-wing extremism Röpke and Speit, 2013, cover text:

The racially motivated crimes of Nationalsozialistischer Untergrund (NSU) with probably ten murders and several bomb attacks reveal a new dimension of right-wing violence in Germany. But this is not an isolated case. Since 1949, right-wing extremists have repeatedly formed terrorist groups that operated with a similar pattern: small clandestine cells, robberies for the procurement of money and weapons, attacks against immigrants, political opponents and societal institutions. A look behind the scenes reveals that the perpetrators of yesterday and today are not isolated and that the danger this poses was underestimated by the authorities for decades.

<sup>30</sup> The Nationalsozialistischer Untergrund (National Socialist Underground, or NSU) was a far-right German terrorist group uncovered in November 2011, after having committed murder and bank robberies throughout the country since 2000. The Attorney General of Germany called the NSU a “right-wing extremist group,” who has the purpose to “kill out of xenophobic and anti-state sentiments all citizens of foreign origin,” see the “Haftbefehl gegen die Brandstifterin von Zwickau wegen mutmaßlicher Mitgliedschaft in der terroristischen Vereinigung ‘Nationalsozialistischer Untergrund (NSU),’” by Harald Range, Attorney General of Germany, November 12, 2011, www.generalbundesanwalt.de/de/showpress.php?themenid=13&newsid=419.

See also Der Kuaför aus der Keupstrasse, documentary film by Andreas Maus, 2015, <https://youtu.be/R8PnnuOULwc>. The film tells the story of the nail bomb attack in front of a Turkish hairdresser in Cologne, Keupstraße, on June 9, 2004. It focuses on the consequences for the victims and their families, who, for years, were treated as the main suspects. The film reconstructs the police investigation on the basis of interrogation protocols. It is clear that for the police the victims were the perpetrators, because they excluded the possibility that the crime had a xenophobic motive. Only years later, the attack was associated with the so-called Nazi underground (NSU). The film shows how the bombings, but perhaps even more the subsequent suspicions, have profoundly shaken lives in the Mülheim district. The case of Cologne was mirrored in the other cities in Germany, where the NSU murdered and the victims were suspected. The film opens the discussion on the question of structural xenophobia in Germany in a new way, namely, from the perspective of those affected.

<sup>31</sup> Hameiri, et al., 2014, Abstract:

The premise of most interventions that aim to promote peacemaking is that information that is inconsistent with held beliefs causes tension, which may motivate alternative information seeking. However, individuals – especially during conflict – use different defenses to preserve their societal beliefs. Therefore, we developed a new paradoxical thinking intervention that provides consistent – though extreme – information, with the intention of raising a sense of absurdity but not defenses. We examined our hypotheses in a longitudinal field experiment and found that participants who were exposed to the intervention expressed more conciliatory attitudes regarding the conflict, even 1 y after the intervention, which also manifested in their voting (self-report measure) to more dovish parties in the Israeli 2013 elections.

<sup>32</sup> “History Has Knocked Very Loudly on Our Door. Will We Answer?” World Future Forum 2016 – Opening Speech by Jakob von Uexküll, March 15, 2016, www.worldfuturecouncil.org/2016/03/15/world-future-forum-2016-opening-speech-jakob-von-uexkull/. Even the UN SDG strategy suffers from dangerous religious dogma, says Uexküll, as it will take 207 years to eliminate poverty with the proposed strategy, and the global economy would have to grow 175 times of its present size” – an obvious impossibility.

<sup>33</sup> “Shocking Images of Drowned Syrian Boy Show Tragic Plight of Refugees,” by Helena Smith in Athens, The Guardian, September 2, 2015, www.theguardian.com/world/2015/sep/02/shocking-image-of-drowned-syrian-boy-shows-tragic-plight-of-refugees.

<sup>34</sup> Abu Zubaydah cooperated already before torture was used, and he was not part of the inner leadership circle of Al-Qaeda, see, among others, “ICRC Report on the Treatment of Fourteen ‘High Value Detainees’ in CIA Custody,” by the International Committee of the Red Cross, New York Review of Books, February 2007, www.nybooks.com/media/doc/2010/04/22/icrc-report.pdf, pp. 28–31.

See also “Two Psychologists’ Role in CIA Torture Program Comes into Focus,” by Joseph Tanfani and W.J. Hennigan, Los Angeles Times, December 14, 2014, www.latimes.com/world/afghanistan-pakistan/la-fg-torture-psychologists-20141214-story.html#page=1:

On April 15, 2002, they [Jessen and Mitchell] were at a secret CIA prison in Thailand supervising an interrogation of the CIA’s first Al-Qaeda prisoner, Abu Zubaydah, who had been captured in Pakistan. The early interrogation was relatively benign. Zubaydah, who was recovering from gunshot wounds, was put in an all-white room with bright lights. Guards wore all black uniforms, including gloves, ski masks and goggles, and communicated only by hand signals. Loud rock music was played to “enhance his sense of hopelessness.”

<sup>35</sup> McCauley and Moskalenko, 2014a.

<sup>36</sup> I admire veteran Drew Pham’s analysis of his need to kill as a path to gaining respect, see “The Long March Ahead: A Veteran’s Place in Resistance,” by Drew Pham, November 22, 2016, www.wrath-bearingtree.com/2016/11/the-long-march-ahead-a-veterans-place-in-resistance/. It is a great privilege for me to know Drew Pham personally, in his capacity of working at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR) at Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City.

<sup>37</sup> Festinger, 1954, 1957, 1980.

<sup>38</sup> See, among others, Der Kriminalist: Schein und Sein Season 2, Episode 7, January 18, 2008, www.imdb.com/title/tt1158829/.

<sup>39</sup> German crime TV series are very different from those authored, for instance, by Agatha Christie and her focus on the intellectual challenge in exposing a cold-blooded perpetrator who is usually driven by greed. They are also different to many American series that play on “good versus evil,” with the courage required on the good side to overcome evil being celebrated with huge explosions and dangerous stunts.

<sup>40</sup> Milgram, 1974.

<sup>41</sup> Solomon, 2005.

<sup>42</sup> Respecting, understanding, while not condoning, this is also the rationale behind Salafistes, a documentary film by Lemine Ould Mohamed Salem and François Margolin, 2016, www.allocine.fr/film/fichefilm\_gen\_cfilm=244500.html. This documentary film goes to Mauritania, Tunisia, Algeria, and the Sharia zone in northern Mali between 2012 and 2015. Preachers of holy war, such as imams, sheikhs, and chairmen of sharia courts explain what they consider to be a righteous Islam. They explain why a thief’s hand should be cut off, and why they are at war with the West. France was in uproar about the film and some argued that it ought to be forbidden, because it provided too much of a propaganda stage for extremist Islamists.

<sup>43</sup> Aust, 1985, Hauser, 1998, Kraushaar, 2006, Stern and Herrmann, 2007.

<sup>44</sup> “Die Behörden tappen im Dunkeln,” Peter Neumann interviewed by Britta Sandberg, Der Spiegel 42/2016, October 15, 2016, pp. 22–23.

<sup>45</sup> “Was bedeutet es, die RAF zu verstehen? Mit RAFlern zu reden, heißt nicht, ihre Taten zu billigen. Eine Gegenrede auf Jan Philipp Reemtsma,” by Horst-Eberhard Richter, Die Tageszeitung (Taz), October 27, 2004, www.taz.de/!681743/. German original translated by Lindner:

Dessen absoluten Gehorsam bestimmte, psychoanalytisch formuliert, eine totale Übereignung des persönlichen Überichs. Dafür belohnte ihn die Gruppe mit der Verleihung einer fiktiven Selbstüberhöhung, abgestützt durch aggressive Abwehr enormer Ängste.

I had the privilege of having the support of Jan Philip Reemtsma during my years in Hamburg 1991 – 1994, when I organized the Hamburger Ideenketten.

<sup>46</sup> “Nicaragua: Die Sex-Affären der Commandantes! Totgeschwiegen! Weil das sonst dem Gegner helfen könnte!,” Der Spiegel 31/1998, July 27, 1998, pp. 128–132.

<sup>47</sup> American Experience: Henry Ford, documentary film as part of the collection The Titans, 2013, www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/films/henryford/.

<sup>48</sup> Gilad and Junginger, 2010. See also Korten, 1995.

<sup>49</sup> See, among others, historian Yuki Tanaka’s work, Tanaka, et al., 2011, Tanaka and Young, 2010.

<sup>50</sup> Hasegawa, 2005.

<sup>51</sup> See Seconds From Disaster: Nagasaki: The Forgotten Bomb, documentary film series 6, 2013, featuring historian Tsuyoshi Hasegawa, <http://natgeotv.com/uk/seconds-from-disaster/>, https://youtu.be/lRosq6Q\_yZE. Seconds from Disaster is an American documentary television series that first began broadcasting in 2004 on the National Geographic Channel. This episode is an analysis of the controversial claim that the second atomic bomb attack on Nagasaki was essential to bringing a swift end to World War II. See also Kimura and Minohara, 2013. Summary of the film by Lindner: The President of the United States, Harry S. Truman, had lost faith in the Soviets toward the end of World War II, since they expanded their sphere of influence in Europe too shamelessly. Truman did not wish the Soviets to also expand into the Pacific. Stalin informed that the Soviet Union would enter into the war against Japan on August 15. If Truman wanted to avoid the loss of American lives, he could have waited for the Soviet Union to enter the war against Japan, because a two-front war would have forced Japan on its knees. Truman could just have waited for that to happen, and in that way, avoid the loss of American lives. However this was not his aim. He needed to contain Stalin. So, he sent the nuclear bomb to Hiroshima on August 6, before the expected Soviet entry date into the war. This bomb did not make the Japanese surrender, however. The Japanese were not interested in saving lives either. Truman had asked Japan to surrender unconditionally, yet, Japan was afraid that an unconditional surrender would imperil the “Chrysanthemum Throne,” the institution of the Japanese monarchy, the very foundation of Japanese identity. The Japanese war council consisted of six members, three of which could be called a peace faction, and three a war faction. Both factions’ main interest was to protect the Emperor. Shocked by the atomic bomb, Stalin renounced the non-aggression pact with Japan on August 9, and attacked the Japanese in Manchuria. On the same day, the United States sent their second atomic bomb on Nagasaki. Still, surrender was not imminent in Japan even now. The peace faction, however, approached the Emperor, and he understood that if the Soviets were to occupy Japan, his position would even be more in peril, given communism’s preferences, than it would be with American pragmatism. So, in that way, the peace camp protected his interests better than the war camp. Emperor Hirohito thus announced the surrender of Japan to the utter dismay of the war camp, given that the Emperor had always stood by his army. The Imperial Palace was even briefly seized in a coup d'état. Yet, on August 15, the Emperor's surrender speech was broadcast over the radio.

<sup>52</sup> Bardi, 2013.

<sup>53</sup> Professor in physical chemistry at the University of Florence, Italy, Ugo Bardi in "Der geplünderte Planet" – der Club of Rome und die globale Ressourcen-Krise, ttt – titel thesen temperamente, Das Erste, June 16, 2013, www.daserste.de/information/wissen-kultur/ttt/sendung/hr/sendung\_vom\_16062013-114.html. Translated by Lindner from the German original: "Es ist keine Lösung des Energieproblems, es ist ein ohnmächtiger Versuch, um jeden Preis weiterzumachen, obwohl man genau weiß: Es ist Dead End." Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>54</sup> "A Chatham House Report: Executive Summary," December 2012, www.chathamhouse.org/sites/default/files/public/Research/Energy,%20Environment%20and%20Development/1212\_resourcesfutures.pdf. Chatham House (The Royal Institute of International Affairs) in London promotes the rigorous study of international questions and is independent of government and other vested interests. It is precluded by its Charter from having an institutional view. The opinions expressed in this publication are the responsibility of the authors. I thank Dan Smith, director of International Alert, for discussing this report in his blog "Resources – the Coming Crunch and Some Things That Could Be Done About It," on Dan Smith's Blog: Analysis and Commentary on World Issues, January 7, 2013, dansmithsblog.com/2013/01/07/resources-the-coming-crunch-and-some-things-that-could-be-done-about-it/.

<sup>55</sup> See Joughin, et al., 2014, and Rignot, et al., 2014.

<sup>56</sup> "Scientists Warn of Perilous Climate Shift Within Decades, Not Centuries," by Justin Gillis, New York Times, March 22, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/03/23/science/global-warming-sea-level-carbon-dioxide-emissions.html?\_r=0. See also the first book by climate scientist James Hansen, 2009.

<sup>57</sup> "When the End of Human Civilization Is Your Day Job," by John H. Richardson, Esquire, July 7, 2015, www.esquire.com/news-politics/a36228/ballad-of-the-sad-climatologists-0815/.

<sup>58</sup> In 2017, the scientists in charge of the Doomsday Clock set the clock at just two and a half minutes from the apocalypse, considering that the Earth is now closer to oblivion than it has ever been since 1953, at the height of the nuclear confrontation between the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union. See <http://thebulletin.org/timeline>. See also the William J. Perry Project (www.wjperryproject.org) that was created by the former U.S. secretary of defense to work toward a world in which nuclear weapons are never used again.

<sup>59</sup> "It Is Still 3 Minutes to Midnight: 2016 Doomsday Clock Statement," edited by John Mecklin, Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, January 21, 2016, [http://thebulletin.org/sites/default/files/2016%20doomsday%20clock%20statement%20-%20final\[5\].pdf](http://thebulletin.org/sites/default/files/2016%20doomsday%20clock%20statement%20-%20final[5].pdf). In 2017, the scientists in charge of the Doomsday Clock set the clock at just two and a half minutes from the apocalypse, considering that the Earth is now closer to oblivion than it has ever been since 1953, at the height of the nuclear confrontation between the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union. See <http://thebulletin.org/timeline>. See also the William J. Perry Project (www.wjperryproject.org) that was created by the former U.S. secretary of defense to work toward a world in which nuclear weapons are never used again.

<sup>60</sup> "Food Is the New Oil; Land, the New Gold," by Lester R. Brown, president of the Earth Policy Institute, Human Wrongs Watch, February 7, 2013, human-wrongs-watch.net/2013/02/09/20442/.

<sup>61</sup> "Spotlighting Humanity's 'Silent Ally,' UN launches 2015 International Year of Soils," United Nations News Centre, December 5, 2014, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=49520#.VJSJGf8At. FAO director-general José Graziano da Silva. He warns: "Unfortunately, 33 percent of our global soil resources are under degradation and human pressures on soils are reaching critical limits, reducing and sometimes eliminating essential soil functions."

<sup>62</sup> "On Day to Combat Desertification, UN calls for action to restore land resources," United Nations News Centre, June 17, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=54255#.V2V\_qaLICgy. See also "Land Degradation Could Force 135 Million to Migrate in Next 30 Years," by Manipadma Jena, Inter Press Service (IPS), October 18 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/10/qa-land-degradation-could-force-135-million-to-migrate-in-next-30-years/.

<sup>63</sup> FIVAS is working to map out and spread information on issues affecting water in the global south. They aim to influence national and international policies to maintain the rights of individuals and to protect the environment. Bearing forth the voice of affected groups is central to our work towards Norwegian authorities, Norwegian companies and in international networks. www.fivas.org/ENGLISH.aspx.

<sup>64</sup> See, among others, Capra and Mattei, 2015, or Angus, 2016.

<sup>65</sup> Stephen Purdey, international relations specialist and research affiliate of the Waterloo Institute for Complexity and Innovation at the University of Waterloo in Ontario, Canada, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 24, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016. Herman Greene is the President of the Center for Ecozoic Societies, www.ecozoicsocieties.org.

<sup>66</sup> I therefore planned for a postdoctoral research project where I would contact TNC boards to find out more, see Lindner, 2000g. See also Collins, 2016. For classism, have a look at Barbara Jensen, 2012.

<sup>67</sup> Collins, 2016, p. 4. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of Collins’ book.

<sup>68</sup> Polly Higgins, in a personal message, October 3, 2013. See also Higgins, 2016.

See a precursor to the concept of ecocide in Christopher Stone, 1972, and for “a look back forty years later,” Anna Grear, 2012. See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016. Consider the sustainability principle in The Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia. In September 2016, the International Criminal Court added environmental disasters and destruction, even land grabs, to the definition of Crimes Against Humanity, which shows that real international legal instrument now follow soft law (Earth Charter) or symbolic language (ecocide, where the mens rea required cannot be demonstrated). See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016. There are voices, however, that warn that introducing a crime of ecocide in the International Criminal Court (ICC) can ultimately be undesirable, because the vehicle of an international crime overreaches and is insufficient at the same time. See Capra and Mattei, 2015. See also Ugo Mattei of the Hastings College of Law at the University of California, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 5, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. The ICC, because of the lack of international centralized power or independence, is just a mockery of an institution, writes Mattei, and continues:

Ecocide is too serious of an issue to be entangled with such a spectacle of an international institution that never worked to reach the actual powerful culprits. Moreover, even if we were to take seriously international criminal law in a world of dramatic power imbalance, a crime of ecocide would necessarily require a level of culpability that is most probably absent in all the major episodes of devastation of the environment. Disasters such as Fukushima, Chernobyl, or even the Gulf spill would clearly fall below that. There are issues of corporate responsibility, of criminal consequences of recklessness, of sufficiency, of omissions, or of causality that handled by any good criminal attorney would clear let wealthy corporate actors immune from responsibility.

It is hard to believe that any powerful wrongdoer will be deterred by such a crime, and, as consequence, the very idea of ecocide will suffer prestige and credibility.

We live in a world in which very few people have any awareness of the disasters of the Anthropocene, so we need diffused ecological literacy. We live in a world in which people believe that the only concept of law is that of a vertical model in the hands of governments, so we need diffused legal literacy.

In seeking a legal solution for problems of such ecological relevance, involving so many non-human interests traditionally and presently ignored and massively violated by the very structure of extractive capitalism, we need (if at all available) the best not the worst part of legal systems. We need to culturally transform the perception of law, to disentangle it with notions of power-concentration, to give it back to communities as a decentralized cultural and legitimate tool to share problems and solutions. Nothing is further away from people and social movements than an appeal to jails, cops, and police to solve our ecological problems. Would such a move increase international ecological legal literacy?

It is an honor for me to be part in Anna Grear’s network, as well as Paul Raskin’s GTN discussions.

<sup>69</sup> “U.S Soldier Dragged through Mogadishu,” by Alex Selwyn-Holmes, Iconic Photos, March 10, 2010, <https://iconicphotos.wordpress.com/2010/03/10/u-s-marine-dragged-through-mogadishu/>:

For a war that began with memorable images, it is both fitting and ironic that it ended because of another set of dramatic images. The photos taken by Canadian photographer Paul Watson, of a dead American soldier being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu spelled the beginning of the end for U.S.-U.N. peacekeeping force. Domestic opinion turned hostile as horrified TV viewers watched images of the bloodshed – including this Pulitzer-prize winning footage of Somali warlord Mohammed Aidede’s supporters dragging the body of U.S. Staff Sgt. William David Cleveland through the streets of Mogadishu, cheering. President Clinton immediately abandoned the pursuit of Aidede, the mission that cost Cleveland his life and gave the order for all American soldiers to withdraw from Somalia by March 31, 1994. Other Western nations followed suit.

<sup>70</sup> Sam Engelstad in a personal communication on September 28, 1999, quoted with his permission. See also Lindner, 2001i.

<sup>71</sup> See, among others, Cochran, 1999. In social and political philosophy, cosmopolitanism regards all human beings as one single moral community, while pluralists see the nation-state as the relevant community unit.

<sup>72</sup> “Text of President Clinton’s address to genocide survivors at the airport in Kigali, Rwanda, as provided by the White House,” CBSNews, March 25, 1998, www.cbsnews.com/news/text-of-clintons-rwanda-speech/.

<sup>73</sup> Solomon, 2015.

<sup>74</sup> Read more about the Rahanweyn in Ken Menkhaus, 2003. It was an enriching experience for me to meet Ken Menkhaus and his wife in Nairobi, Kenya, and learn from them, on December 19, 1998.

<sup>75</sup> Solomon, 2015.

<sup>76</sup> Nelson, 2012, Abstract. See also Goodwin, et al., 2014b, Nelson, 2010a.

<sup>77</sup> Lewis, 1971.

<sup>78</sup> Scheff and Retzinger, 1991, Scheff, 1994, Scheff, 1997, Scheff, 2000, Scheff, 2006, Scheff, 2007, Scheff, 2013, Scheff and Retzinger, 1997.

<sup>79</sup> “Der ‘Eiserne Kanzler’: Demontage einer Kultfigur,” by Sven Felix Kellerhoff, Die Welt, October 7, 2012, www.welt.de/welt\_print/article921164/Der-Eiserne-Kanzler-Demontage-einer-Kultfigur.html. See also the film: Historische Ereignisse: Vor 150 Jahren: Bismarck – Kanzler und Dämon, part 1: Vom Landjunker zum Reichsgründer, and part 2: Regierungsgewalt und Machtverlust, documentary film by Christoph Weinert, 2012, www.phoenix.de/content/phoenix/die\_sendungen/diskussionen/historische\_ereignisse/527387?datum=2012-10-07.

<sup>80</sup> “Das Duell: Wie ein Unnaer den Lauf der deutschen Geschichte beeinflusste,” by Klaus Seifert, Lokalkompass.de, January 20, 2012, www.lokalkompass.de/unna/kultur/das-duell-d127400.html.

<sup>81</sup> Willms, 2015.

<sup>82</sup> Akte D, part 1: Das Versagen der Nachkriegsjustiz, part 2: Das Kriegserbe der Bahn, part 3: Die Macht der Stromkonzerne, Das Erste, 2014, www1.wdr.de/fernsehen/dokumentation\_reportage/wdr-dok/sendungen/das-versagen-der-nachkriegsjustiz-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>83</sup> “Anwohner wollen Stilllegung von Grohnde erzwingen – Atomkraftgegner drohen mit Klage,” by Peter Mlodoch, Weser Kurier, March 26, 2015, www.weser-kurier.de/region\_artikel,-Atomkraftgegner-drohen-mit-Klage-\_arid,1088361.html. On January 31, 2015, regional groups met in Hannover to prepare for the 4th anniversary of the Fukushima disaster and for subsequent activities. Also in Hannover, on March 14, 2015, under the motto “Fukushima warns! – Decommission the AKW Grohnde,” the Regional Conference Grohnde presented lectures and held discussion sessions covering the current situation in Fukushima, an inventory of nuclear waste, and informed about the legal action against the nuclear Grohnde. See “Regionalkonferenz Grohnde: Fukushima-Aktion am 14. März in Hannover,” http://ag-schacht-konrad.de/index.php?option=com\_content&task=view&id=1495&Itemid=280.

<sup>84</sup> “Sibirien: Suche nach verschollenen Atombatterien,” Der Spiegel, 41/2013, October 7, 2013, p. 132, and www.spiegel.de/spiegel/print/d-115560291.html.

<sup>85</sup> Appiah, 2010.

<sup>86</sup> McGoey, 2012. See also “What Will Future Generations Condemn Us For?” by Kwame Anthony Appiah, Washington Post, September 26, 2010, www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/09/24/AR2010092404113.html.

<sup>87</sup> Brooklyn Grange, www.brooklyngrangefarm.com.

<sup>88</sup> Horizons – Innovative Ways to Feed an Ever Expanding Urban Population, BBC World News, April 28 and 29, 2012, www.modernghana.com/news/388493/1/horizons-innovative-ways-to-feed-an-ever-expanding.html. BBC World News’ Horizons speaks to pioneers in the USA and The Netherlands about innovative ways to feed an ever expanding urban population.

<sup>89</sup> Ibid.

<sup>90</sup> Richards and Swanger, 2006a, Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>91</sup> Lecture 15 in Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>92</sup> Salomon and Nevo, 2002, discussed in Vambheim, 2016, p. 9.

<sup>93</sup> Salomon and Nevo, 2002, quoted in Vambheim, 2016, p. 9.

<sup>94</sup> Galtung, 1996.

<sup>95</sup> Orwell, 1949.

<sup>96</sup> United Nations, 2015. The number of people living on less than $1.25 a day has been reduced from 1.9 billion in 1990 to 836 million in 2015, although the target of halving the proportion of people suffering from hunger was narrowly missed.

<sup>97</sup> See also Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>98</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>99</sup> Internationaler Militärgerichtshof Nürnberg, 1989.

<sup>100</sup> "Truth to Power," by Noam Chomsky, and David McNeill, Japan Times, February 22, 2014, www.japantimes.co.jp/news/2014/02/22/world/noam-chomsky-truth-to-power/.

<sup>101</sup> Ibid.

<sup>102</sup> Soldaten und Verweigerer: "Wir waren die Ersten!" documentary film by Carsten Günther, Das Erste, 2011. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>103</sup> Historian Henrik Eberle and Hans-Joachim Neumann, a professor emeritus of medicine at Berlin's Charité University Hospital, recently attempted to discover whether Hitler was ill and this could serve as an explanation for the monstrosity of his decisions. See Eberle and Neumann, 2009. Adolf Hitler took an early version of "Viagra" before he spent time with Eva Braun. No evidence was found that Hitler had syphilis, which he had identified as a "Jewish Disease" and raged against in his autobiography Mein Kampf. The records, made by medical officer Dr. Josef Steiner Brin when Hitler was briefly jailed for a failed coup in 1923, said that he had "right-sided cryptorchidism" but was otherwise "healthy" and "strong" (cryptorchidism is caused by a testicle not descending into the scrotum during puberty), see Ullrich, 2013. In other words, he might have doubted his own "manhood."

<sup>104</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>105</sup> "Training Code of Conduct, Survival, Evasion, Resistance, and Escape (SERE)," Army Regulation 350–30, Training, <https://fas.org/irp/doddir/army/ar350-30.pdf>. SERE was a program established by the U.S. Air Force at the end of the Korean War (1950 – 1953) for those at high risk to be captured by the enemy. The program provided U.S. military personnel, U.S. Department of Defense civilians, and private military contractors with training in evading capture, survival skills, and the military code of conduct.

<sup>106</sup> Jack Bauer is a character in the Fox television series 24, who, among others, worked as a member of the Counter Terrorist Unit (CTU) based in Los Angeles, and during Season 7 working with the FBI in Washington, DC

<sup>107</sup> "Whatever It Takes: The Politics of the Man Behind '24,'" by Jane Mayer, New Yorker, February 19, 2007, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2007/02/19/whatever-it-takes. See the Torture Made in USA, documentary film by Marie-Monique Robin, 2009. And see Pope, 2011.

<sup>108</sup> See Vamik Volkan, 2001, for the transgenerational transmissions and chosen traumas, or the work of Michael Wohl, who speaks of a multigenerational picture of the dynamics of trauma. See Wohl and Branscombe, 2008, Wohl and Van Bavel, 2011. Franz Ruppert, 2008, works with multigenerational trauma and family constellations. See also Gobodo-Madikizela, 2008, or Fromm, 2011.

See, furthermore, Hélène Opperman Lewis, 2016, who convened our 2013 Annual Dignity Conference in South Africa, and who sheds light on the impact of the Boer Wars. It is a privilege to have Hélène Lewis as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I so much thank her for giving me The Boer Whore by Nico Moolman, 2012, to read.

Steve Olweean, President of the International Humanistic Psychology Association, explains: "Every society and culture has its traditional victim story, if we look back far enough. It emerges in our folklore, our arts, our monuments, our historic icons of group identity and belonging, and at times our justification and readiness for retribution, particularly toward descendants of past perpetrators, or simply those who remind us of them,"

<http://cbiworld.org/home/conferences/tt/>:

Transgenerational Trauma is seen as an underlying and complex global syndrome that divides, polarizes, and perpetuates enemy images, has been a central basis for past conflict and wars, and is a potent fuel for the eruption of violence in the present and future. Understanding its dynamics and implications, and developing ways to effectively prevent and treat it, are essential to healing and reconciliation within and between communities, establishing compassionate local and global relations, and achieving sustainable peace.

<sup>109</sup> See the section “Apologies from the world! What the world can do for America,” in Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 5: Humiliation and Conflict, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict, pp. 102–105.

<sup>110</sup> Kohout, 2010.

<sup>111</sup> Coser, 1974. See also Lewis Coser, 1956.

<sup>112</sup> “The Torture Colony,” by Bruce Falconer, The American Scholar, Essays – Autumn 2008, September 1, 2008, <https://theamericanscholar.org/the-torture-colony/>. In a remote part of Chile, a German evangelist cult leader built a utopia community whose members helped the Pinochet regime torture and kill dissidents. When I was in Chile in 2012, due to time pressure, I failed realizing my plan to visit this community to attempt getting a sense of how such indignity was possible under the banner of dignity. See also Fröhling, 2012.

<sup>113</sup> Wright, 2013. The 2015 documentary film Going Clear: Scientology and the Prison of Belief directed by Alex Gibney and produced by Home Box Office (HBO), is based on Wright’s book. It was released, also internationally, despite a sustained campaign by Scientology to block its release.

<sup>114</sup> I thank Linda Hartling for reminding me of Jean Baker Miller’s conceptualization of strategies of disconnection: a.k.a. strategies of survival as “ways for staying out of connection because the only relationships that had been available were in some fundamental way disconnecting and violating... There was good reason to develop these strategies,” Miller, et al., 1994, p. 3. Miller and Stiver, 1997, p. 105:

Methods people develop to stay out of relationship in order to prevent wounding or violation. These begin as the form through which psychological problems are expressed, but can become the main problem. They evolve out of a person’s attempt to find some way to make or preserve connection, in.

<sup>115</sup> Beyond Revenge, documentary film, Pressenza Berlin, 2016, www.pressenza.com/2016/10/beyond-revenge-documentary-film-freely-available-online/, and <https://youtu.be/JLZ9fU6Ljgs>. The film traces mechanisms of revenge back to the first big states of Mesopotamia, where this mechanism was institutionalized in the form of law and punishment and executed by state authorities. The message the film conveys is that enshrining revenge into law had detrimental consequences insofar as it “led to the loss of an inner process of reconciliation” and that therefore, “nowadays we have no tools for achieving a real inner reconciliation after harm has been done to us. We yearn for punishment even though it cannot heal the inner damage that has happened to us.” The documentary gives the floor to people who share their very personal process of reconciling with violence, sometimes after decades of suffering from resentment, fear, and bitterness. They describe a sense of liberation, a gain in energy and happiness through reconciliation that goes far beyond mere forgiveness. Luz Jahnen, co-producer and author of the study that was the basis for the documentary, reports that the film has elicited “gratitude,” for that this topic was presented in such a way that viewers could confront their own experiences more clearly.

<sup>116</sup> Coman, et al., 2014. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this research.

<sup>117</sup> Jervis, 2006, p. 641. Jervis suggests going back fifty years, revisiting the typology introduced by M. Brewster Smith, et al., 1956.

<sup>118</sup> “Will Trump Ever Be Blamed?” by Olga Khazan, The Atlantic, April 4, 2017, www.theatlantic.com/science/archive/2017/04/will-trump-ever-take-the-blame/521769/. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. “Beliefs are like possessions,” and what is being intensified through dynamics of humiliation is “trait polarization,” according to Hetherington, et al., 2016, as well as “selective evaluation,” and “selective attribution,” see Tilley and Hobolt, 2011.

In Nazi-Germany, the following outcry was widely heard when something went wrong: “Wenn das der Führer wüßte!” (If only Hitler knew about this!). In other words, even the worst disaster was not attributed to Adolf Hitler. Whatever happened, he would save them, this was their conviction; if only he knew, if only he were in a position to intervene, he would certainly do so. He himself judged the situation along the following lines: At the very end, when Germany was already utterly destroyed, he concluded that the Germans themselves had failed him, that they had not been strong enough in their Opferbereitschaft (willingness to give their all), and therefore deserved to go down. In short: his plan was good, his intentions were good, but he was failed and undermined by the very people he wanted to lift into greatness. Until the very last moment, people believed in him, in the Endsieg (final victory), and even in the face of disaster people there were still enough “believers” around to shoot fellow Germans who no longer wanted to “give everything to the last man.” While Italy abandoned Benito Mussolini much earlier, a majority of Germans stayed strong in their belief in Hitler.

<sup>119</sup> Hebrews 12:6, The Bible, New International Version (NIV), www.biblegateway.com/passage/?search=Hebrews+12:6.

<sup>120</sup> Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c.

<sup>121</sup> Miller, 2006a.

<sup>122</sup> Sue, et al., 2007.

<sup>123</sup> See, among others, Greene, 2006, and Yamada, 2015. It is a privilege to have Michael Greene and David Yamada as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>124</sup> Sue, et al., 2007, Evans, 2010. I thank Ines Balta for making me aware of Patricia Evans' work.

<sup>125</sup> Johnson, 2008.

<sup>126</sup> Adler, 1993, 2004, Adler, et al., 2009.

<sup>127</sup> "The Spirit Level Authors: Why Society Is More Unequal Than Ever: Five Years after the Spirit Level, Authors Richard Wilkinson and Kate Pickett Argue That Research Backs Up Their Views on the Iniquity of Inequality," by Kate Pickett and Richard Wilkinson, The Guardian, March 9, 2014, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2014/mar/09/society-unequal-the-spirit-level. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for drawing my attention to this article, where Kate Pickett and Richard Wilkinson look back on their path-breaking publication Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also Johnson, et al., 2012, Eckenrode, et al., 2014, and Due, et al., 2009, Berkman, et al., 2014. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from less inequality.

<sup>128</sup> Thorndike, 1920.

<sup>129</sup> Fuller, 2003, Fuller and Gerloff, 2008.

<sup>130</sup> Carveth, 2013. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of Carveth's work. It is a privilege to have Michael Britton as member on the board of directors of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>131</sup> Carveth, 1994.

<sup>132</sup> Meffert, et al., 2013. See also Watkins and Watkins, 1997. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of the work done by the Watkins.

<sup>133</sup> Ralph K. White, a former U.S. Information Agency official, later a political scientist and psychologist at George Washington University, was the foremost advocate of what he called realistic empathy in foreign affairs. White contends that only through empathy can one accurately tell the story adversaries are telling themselves about "us," about themselves, or about the situation they believe they face. See also James Blight and Lang, 2010, pp. 38–39. I thank John McFadden for making me aware of this work. White makes a clear distinction between empathy and sympathy. White, 1984, pp. 160–161 (emphasis in original):

Empathy is the great corrective for all forms of war-promoting misperception... It [means] simply understanding the thoughts and feelings of others. It is distinguished from sympathy, which is defined as feeling with others – as being in agreement with them. Empathy with opponents is therefore psychologically possible even when a conflict is so intense that sympathy is out of the question... We are not talking about warmth or approval, and certainly not about agreeing with, or siding with, but only about realistic understanding.

...

How can empathy be achieved? It means jumping in imagination into another person's skin, imagining what it might be like to look out at his world through his eyes, and imagining how you might feel about what you saw. It means being the other person, at least for a while, and postponing skeptical analysis until later... Most of all it means trying to look at one's own group's behavior honestly, as it might appear when seen through the other's eyes, recognizing that his eyes are almost certainly jaundiced, but recognizing also that he has the advantage of not seeing our group's behavior through the rose-colored glasses that we ourselves normally wear. He may have grounds for distrust, fear and anger that we have not permitted ourselves to see. That is the point where honesty comes in. An honest look at the other implies an honest look at oneself.

White identified three critical mistakes in foreign policymaking that prevent empathy from occurring: (1) not seeing an opponent's longing for peace; (2) not seeing an opponent's fear of being attacked; and (3) not seeing an opponent's understandable anger, see White, 1984, pp. 162–163.

<sup>134</sup> See the work of psychotherapist Charles Truax, et al., 1970, on accurate empathy. I thank John McFadden also here for making me aware of this work.

<sup>135</sup> Arie Nadler wrote about radical empathy and radical reconciliation. It is a privilege to have Arie Nadler as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Arie Nadler, 2012, p. 304:

Consistent with Arendt's terminology, I propose to label forgiveness for "radical evil" as "radical forgiveness" and the intergroup reconciliation that may follow as "radical reconciliation." ... Such an understanding was expected to culminate in empathy with the perpetrator of “radical evil,” that we propose to label as “radical empathy.”

See also the work of John McFadden, 2016. It is a privilege to have his support for our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>136</sup> Meffert, et al., 2013.

<sup>137</sup> Online Etymology Dictionary, www.etymonline.com/index.php?search=empathy&searchmode=none.

<sup>138</sup> Titchener, 1909, Gallese, 2003, Bråten, 2013.

<sup>139</sup> Shamay-Tsoory, 2011.

<sup>140</sup> Ralph K. White, a former U.S. Information Agency official, later a political scientist and psychologist at George Washington University, was the foremost advocate of what he called realistic empathy in foreign affairs. White contends that only through empathy can one accurately tell the story adversaries are telling themselves about “us,” about themselves, or about the situation they believe they face. See also James Blight and Lang, 2010, pp. 38–39. I thank John McFadden for making me aware of this work. White makes a clear distinction between empathy and sympathy. White, 1984, pp. 160–161 (emphasis in original):

Empathy is the great corrective for all forms of war-promoting misperception... It [means] simply understanding the thoughts and feelings of others. It is distinguished from sympathy, which is defined as feeling with others – as being in agreement with them. Empathy with opponents is therefore psychologically possible even when a conflict is so intense that sympathy is out of the question... We are not talking about warmth or approval, and certainly not about agreeing with, or siding with, but only about realistic understanding.

...

How can empathy be achieved? It means jumping in imagination into another person’s skin, imagining what it might be like to look out at his world through his eyes, and imagining how you might feel about what you saw. It means being the other person, at least for a while, and postponing skeptical analysis until later... Most of all it means trying to look at one’s own group’s behavior honestly, as it might appear when seen through the other’s eyes, recognizing that his eyes are almost certainly jaundiced, but recognizing also that he has the advantage of not seeing our group’s behavior through the rose-colored glasses that we ourselves normally wear. He may have grounds for distrust, fear and anger that we have not permitted ourselves to see. That is the point where honesty comes in. An honest look at the other implies an honest look at oneself.

White identified three critical mistakes in foreign policymaking that prevent empathy from occurring: (1) not seeing an opponent’s longing for peace; (2) not seeing an opponent’s fear of being attacked; and (3) not seeing an opponent’s understandable anger, see White, 1984, pp. 162–163.

<sup>141</sup> White, 1984, pp. 162–163.

<sup>142</sup> Lamm and Majdandzic, 2015. See also Shamay-Tsoory, 2011. See, furthermore, “Compassion: Hot to Help: When Can Empathy Move Us to Action?,” by Daniel Goleman, March 1, 2008, Greater Good in Action, http://greatergood.berkeley.edu/article/item/hot\_to\_help. Goleman reports:

In fact, those who fall within psychology’s “Dark Triad” – narcissists, Machiavellians, and sociopaths – can actually put cognitive empathy to use in hurting people. As Ekman told me, a torturer needs this ability, if only to better calibrate his cruelty. Talented political operatives can read people’s emotions to their own advantage, without necessarily caring about those people very much.

<sup>143</sup> The Power of Empathy, by Brené Brown, <http://tinyurl.com/z9wc5x9>, or <https://youtu.be/jz1g1SpD9Zo>. I thank Floyd Webster Rudmin for making me aware of this talk. It is a privilege to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also Brown, 2012a.

<sup>144</sup> The Neuroscience of Compassion, by Tania Singer, presentation given at the 2015 annual meeting of the World Economic Forum, with the theme “new global context,” held in Davos, January, 21–24, 2015, published on March 9, 2015, <https://youtu.be/n-hKS4rucTY>, see also www.weforum.org. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this video. In this presentation, Tania Singer explains that her aim is to improve global cooperation and to see how we can become better global citizens. Singer regards the training of perspective-taking as crucially important in a globalizing world, since it would improve conflict resolution skills, and help to better understand out-groups, other cultures, and other religions. She and her colleagues define three different “modules” of compassion, which represent three different neurological networks, see also Klimecki, et al., 2014:

- Presence: attention and interoceptive awareness
- Affect: emotion/contagion, care/compassion/gratitude, prosocial motivation, dealing with difficult emotions, empathy (as different from compassion)
- Cognitive perspective-taking/mindreading: meta-cognition, perspective-taking on others, perspective-taking on others, mentalizing, theory of mind (the ability to attribute mental states, such as beliefs, intents, desires, pretending, knowledge, to oneself and others, and to understand that the mental states of others may be different to mine) For Singer, empathy is a precursor to compassion, which can lead to antisocial behavior, for example, when healthcare workers or caregivers feel overwhelmed and burnt out by the suffering they face. Therefore, she advises to transform empathy into compassion, as compassion as a warm and caring emotion does not involve being invaded by the other persons' feelings.

The results of the trainings that Singer et al. have carried out show that the stable preferences that economists see as foundational (you are either altruistic or egoistic) are not as stable. Preferences can change, even at the level of the neurological networks. No longer can the neo-classicistic image of the Homo economicus be taken for granted. Singer works with Dennis Snower on caring economics and suggests that while the typical utility functions in economic theory is consumption, which, if emphasized, leads to selfish behavior, emphasizing care leads to prosocial behavior (see, among others, Ahrens and Snower, 2014). Singer et al. differentiate seven motivation systems, based on psychological and biological knowledge, which if activated, influence decisions:

- Achievement is the motivation to be best
- Anger leads to aggressive behavior
- Consumption leads to selfish behavior
- Power leads to competitive behavior
- Fear and threat lead to defensive behavior
- Affiliation means that one wishes to belong to an in-group, which, of course, can turn out to be antisocial if it is built on out-group enmity
- Care leads to prosocial behavior

For policy making, if we wish for global cooperation, Singer recommends to use her results to create a context that activates the care motivation.

<sup>145</sup> Linda Hartling, summarized Tania Singer's research results in a personal communication on September 3, 2016, as concluding that "empathy is not enough":

To feel with others is not enough, indeed, it can lead to "empathy fatigue," which has been called "compassion fatigue" in mental health circles. Singer suggests that compassion is empathy + the judgment/wisdom of thought available through frontal lobes. Jean Baker Miller might describe this as "feeling-thought" based on an assumption of human connection as healthy.

<sup>146</sup> See note 144 above.

<sup>147</sup> Singer and Klimecki, 2014, contrast empathic distress and compassion as follows:

- Empathic distress: self-related emotion, negative feelings, e.g., stress, poor health, burnout, withdrawal and non-social behavior.
- Compassion: other-related emotion, positive feelings, e.g., love, good health, approach and prosocial motivation.

<sup>148</sup> Ingold, 2000. I thank Ingrid Fuglestad for reminding me of this reference.

<sup>149</sup> Harrison, 1999.

<sup>150</sup> During my time in medicine, I did surgery, and therefore I know that it is not necessary to switch off empathy to be able to carry out surgery.

<sup>151</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>152</sup> Fontan, 2008. See also Fontan, 2012. It is a privilege to have Victoria Fontan as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>153</sup> See Megyn Kelly on Exclusive Interview with Dr. James Mitchell, Fox News, December 16, 2014, <http://video.foxnews.com/v/3946118068001/megyn-kelly-on-exclusive-interview-with-dr-james-mitchell/?#sp=show-clips>. Mitchell describes his fear, as he feels suddenly turned into a scapegoat. He describes his patriotism, for he has done everything because he wanted to protect America. He rejects the torture report with the argument that he was not asked. And he is a "mild torturer," who found some conditions overdone, for example, the Ministry of Justice's waterboarding. The requirements said that every twenty seconds water must be poured over the prisoner's head under a cloth. Then the tortured could breathe once, then followed the next twenty seconds. This then goes on for twenty minutes or so. Mitchell, originally a psychologist who has done "research" on such techniques, and in the secret hideouts of the CIA applied them so frequently that no longer remembers the details, according to an interview. He now prides itself on the show to have relaxed rules: at twenty second intervals, the patient suffocates, Mitchell said, so he changed it to ten second intervals. So in a session there were ten seconds of water, then a deep breath, ten seconds of water, plus he found after careful consideration, twice twenty seconds, and only once forty seconds. Only with Sheikh Mohammed, whom Mitchell called evil and arrogant, nothing worked. He had the talent, said Mitchell, during waterboarding, to absorb the water over the nose and spit it out directly from the mouth.

<sup>154</sup> Hayden, 2016. See also “Playing to the Edge” To Fight Terrorism, Michael Hayden interviewed by Trevor Noah, The Daily Show, February 25, 2016, www.cc.com/video-clips/evluqc/the-daily-show-with-trevor-noah-michael-hayden---playing-to-the-edge--to-fight-terrorism. See, furthermore, “To Keep America Safe, Embrace Drone Warfare,” by Michael Hayden, New York Times, February 19, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/02/21/opinion/sunday/drone-warfare-precise-effective-imperfect.html.

<sup>155</sup> I thank Kirk Schneider, 2013, author of The Polarized Mind, past president of the Society for Humanistic Psychology of the APA (2015 – 2016) and vice-president of the Existential-Humanistic Institute, for contacting me and making me aware of his work.

<sup>156</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>157</sup> “I Don’t Think She Deserved The Nobel,” Anirudh Bhattacharyya interviews Genevieve Chenard, Outlook, March 18, 2013, www.outlookindia.com/magazine/story/i-dont-think-she-deserved-the-nobel/284270.

<sup>158</sup> McGoey, 2012. See also “What Will Future Generations Condemn Us For?” by Kwame Anthony Appiah, Washington Post, September 26, 2010, www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/09/24/AR2010092404113.html.

<sup>159</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>160</sup> See note 153 above.

<sup>161</sup> Solomon, 2005.

<sup>162</sup> Linda Hartling, in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>163</sup> Ibid.

<sup>164</sup> Hartling and Lindner, 2016a. See also MacDonald and Jensen-Campbell, 2011.

<sup>165</sup> “PTSD: The Futile Search for the ‘Quick Fix,’” by Kali Tal, Scientific American, February 26, 2013, http://blogs.scientificamerican.com/guest-blog/2013/02/26/ptsd-the-futile-search-for-the-quick-fix/?WT\_mc\_id=SA\_CAT\_MB\_201302274900:

The Department of Veterans Affairs acknowledges that women are more than twice as likely as men to develop PTSD (10 percent for women; 4 percent for men, a number that includes all male veterans). They note that women experience sexual assault more often than men do, and that sexual assault results in higher rates of PTSD than many other traumas. The Justice Department’s Office of Violence Against Women and the CDC have recently published the following statistics (2012 – 2013).

I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this article

<sup>166</sup> Pynchon, 2005, Perry, 2007. See also “Orphans’ Lonely Beginnings Reveal How Parents Shape A Child’s Brain,” by Jon Hamilton, National Public Radio (NPR), February 24, 2014, www.npr.org/sections/health-shots/2014/02/20/280237833/orphans-lonely-beginnings-reveal-how-parents-shape-a-childs-brain.

<sup>167</sup> Woo, et al., 2014.

<sup>168</sup> See, among others, Schore and Sieff, 2015.

<sup>169</sup> Kemme, et al., 2014. See also Von Menschen und Waffen, a documentary film by Thomas Lauterbach, Südwestrundfunk, 2013, www.swr.de/junger-dokumentarfilm/junger-dokumentarfilm-menschen-waffen/-/id=100850/did=12168610/nid=100850/1a9bw85/. This film was made after the Winnenden school shooting on March 11, 2009, at a secondary school in Winnenden, Baden-Württemberg, in southwestern Germany, resulting in sixteen deaths, including the suicide of the perpetrator, a seventeen years old young man, who had graduated from the school one year earlier. Südwestrundfunk, SWR, “Southwest Broadcasting,” is a regional public broadcasting corporation serving the southwest of Germany, specifically the federal states of Baden-Württemberg and Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>170</sup> “Wandel der Kindererziehung in Deutschland: Mehr Liebe, weniger Hiebe,” by Christian Pfeiffer, Süddeutsche Zeitung, January 15, 2012, www.sueddeutsche.de/politik/wandel-der-kindererziehung-in-deutschland-mehr-liebe-weniger-hiebe-1.1258028:

Danach werden mit Gegenständen oder sonst massiv geschlagene Kinder später sechsmal häufiger zu Mehrfach-Gewalttätern als gewaltfrei und liebevoll erzogene. Dreimal so oft geraten sie in kriminelle oder rechtsextreme Jugendcliquen. Sie konsumieren fünfmal häufiger regelmäßig Cannabis und schwänzen viermal häufiger für mindestens zehn Tage im Jahr die Schule. Eine weitere Befragung zeigt die Folgen bei Erwachsenen. Wer in der Kindheit die Ohnmacht des Geschlagenen erlitten hat, möchte später dreimal häufiger eine scharfe Schusswaffe besitzen und sich so endlich mächtig fühlen. Außerdem befürwortet er tendenziell ein hartes Strafrecht sowie die

Todesstrafe.

<sup>171</sup> Lakoff and Johnson, 1999. See also Lindner, 2005c.

<sup>172</sup> Banks and Hirschman, 2016. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book. See also Hartling, 2008a, Lieberman, 2015, or Miller, 1986a.

<sup>173</sup> Fallon, 2013.

<sup>174</sup> See Vamik Volkan, 2001, for the transgenerational transmissions and chosen traumas, or the work of Michael Wohl, who speaks of a multigenerational picture of the dynamics of trauma. See Wohl and Branscombe, 2008, Wohl and Van Bavel, 2011. Franz Ruppert, 2008, works with multigenerational trauma and family constellations. See also Gobodo-Madikizela, 2008, or Fromm, 2011.

See, furthermore, Hélène Opperman Lewis, 2016, who convened our 2013 Annual Dignity Conference in South Africa, and who sheds light on the impact of the Boer Wars. It is a privilege to have Hélène Lewis as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I so much thank her for giving me The Boer Whore by Nico Moolman, 2012, to read.

Steve Olweean, President of the International Humanistic Psychology Association, explains: “Every society and culture has its traditional victim story, if we look back far enough. It emerges in our folklore, our arts, our monuments, our historic icons of group identity and belonging, and at times our justification and readiness for retribution, particularly toward descendants of past perpetrators, or simply those who remind us of them,”

<http://cbiworld.org/home/conferences/tt/>:

Transgenerational Trauma is seen as an underlying and complex global syndrome that divides, polarizes, and perpetuates enemy images, has been a central basis for past conflict and wars, and is a potent fuel for the eruption of violence in the present and future. Understanding it’s dynamics and implications, and developing ways to effectively prevent and treat it, are essential to healing and reconciliation within and between communities, establishing compassionate local and global relations, and achieving sustainable peace.

<sup>175</sup> Fallon, 2013. See also Fallon, 2006.

<sup>176</sup> Otten and Jonas, 2013, p. 33.

<sup>177</sup> Perlin and Weinstein, 2014, Collazzoni, et al., 2014, Torres and Bergner, 2010. I thank Leonard Morgenbesser for making me aware of the latter article.

<sup>178</sup> For the 2007 Workshop on Transforming Humiliation and Violent Conflict at Columbia University see /www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/10.php. See also Lazare, 2004. It was a privilege to have Aaron Lazare as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, and we honor his spirit since he passed away in 2015.

<sup>179</sup> “Volkswagen: The Scandal Explained,” by Russell Hotten, BBC News, December 10, 2015, www.bbc.com/news/business-34324772. German automaker Volkswagen Group was found to have intentionally programmed turbocharged direct injection (TDI) diesel engines in about eleven million cars worldwide, and in 500,000 in the United States, during model years 2009 through 2015, to activate certain emissions controls only during laboratory emissions testing. The programming caused the vehicles’ nitrogen oxide (NOx) output to meet US standards during regulatory testing, but emit up to 40 times more NOx in real-world driving.

<sup>180</sup> “Fear and Respect: VW’s Culture under Winterkorn,” by Andreas Cremer and Tom Bergin, Reuters, October 10, 2015, www.reuters.com/article/us-volkswagen-emissions-culture-idUSKCN0S40MT20151010.

<sup>181</sup> Samurai and Idiots: The Olympus Affair (BBC title: 1.7 Billion Dollar Fraud: Full Exposure), documentary film by Hyoe Yamamoto, 2015, Vesuvius, Point du Jour, in cooperation with BBC, Arte, ZDF, SVT, DR, www.pointdujour-international.com/catalogueFiche.php?idFiche=38282&PHPSESSID=55a81bc6a21f799774889fcd7d4899c. See also www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b054f7qp.

<sup>182</sup> A band of ronin (leaderless samurai) avenged the death of their master.

<sup>183</sup> See for a deep analysis also “Japan Right Now – And the USA,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, Number 432, June 13, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/06/japan-right-now-and-the-usa/.

<sup>184</sup> “Olympus’s Deceit Was Dishonourable,” by John Gapper, Financial Times, November 9, 2011, www.ft.com/cms/s/0/60ba6782-0abd-11e1-b9f6-00144feabdc0.html.

<sup>185</sup> “More Than a Clash of the Cultures at Olympus,” by Jonathan Soble, Financial Times, October 14, 2011, <http://search.ft.com/search?queryText=More+than+a+clash+of+the+cultures+at+Olympus>.

<sup>186</sup> “Who Owns Japan? And Who Runs It?” British Chamber of Commerce in Japan, July 11, 2012, www.bccjapan.com/events/2012/7/who-owns-japan-and-who-runs-it/.

<sup>187</sup> “JR, Train Driver Faulted in Final Report on Crash,” The Japan Times, Kyodo News, June 29, 2007, www.japantimes.co.jp/news/2007/06/29/news/jr-train-driver-faulted-in-final-report-on-crash/#.VtKmruaOWgw.

<sup>188</sup> I thank my dear friend Tohru Tada for explaining me more in a personal communication on October 9, 2013. He wrote that everything is hearsay, because the Japan Railways Group conceals the practice of nikkin kyouiku. It appears, however, that not all train personnel who make mistakes are forced into nikkin kyouiku, but that this “re-education” is particularly being used as harassment for people disliked by the leadership (e.g. those who belong to certain trade unions). Japanese websites on this practice give examples of nikkin kyouiku, such as having to write long self-critical reflections or meaningless reports that have nothing to do with the mistakes one had committed, to weed a field, to clean up toilets, and so forth. This is often conducted in front of other workers.

<sup>189</sup> Rosenthal and Zimmerman, 2012.

<sup>190</sup> I thank Tohru Tada, Tina Ottman, and Lisa Rogers for kindly explaining everything to me in personal communications in January 2016.

<sup>191</sup> Ury, 1999.

<sup>192</sup> Staub, 1989, 1993, 2012, 2015.

<sup>193</sup> On September 18, 2015, the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) issued a notice of violation of the Clean Air Act to German automaker Volkswagen Group.

<sup>194</sup> “Führungskultur bei VW soll Abgas-Skandal ermöglicht haben,” Die Zeit, October 29, 2015, www.zeit.de/wirtschaft/2015-10/volkswagen-aufsichtsrat-stephan-weil-kritikkultur.

<sup>195</sup> Riesman, et al., 1950/2001.

<sup>196</sup> Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>197</sup> See, among others, the book by Deresiewicz, 2014, Excellent Sheep, see www.billderesiewicz.com/books/excellent-sheep:

Excellent Sheep takes a sharp look at the high-pressure conveyor belt that begins with parents and counselors who demand perfect grades and culminates in the skewed applications Deresiewicz saw firsthand as a member of Yale’s admissions committee. As schools shift focus from the humanities to “practical” subjects like economics and computer science, students are losing the ability to think in innovative ways. Deresiewicz explains how college should be a time for self-discovery, when students can establish their own values and measures of success, so they can forge their own path. He addresses parents, students, educators, and anyone who’s interested in the direction of American society, featuring quotes from real students and graduates he has corresponded with over the years, candidly exposing where the system is broken and clearly presenting solutions.

See also Bloom, 1987, Wilshire, 1990, Putnam, 1995, Readings, 1996, Schmidt, 2000, Giroux and Paulo Freire (Foreword), 2001, Bok, 2003, Giroux and Giroux, 2004, Hersch and Merrow, 2005, Karabel, 2005, Levine, 2006, Lewis, 2006, Kronman, 2007, Donoghue, 2008, Newfield, 2008, Gornitzka and Langfeldt, 2008, Folbre, 2009, Nussbaum, 2010, Taylor, 2010, Osler, 2010, Hacker and Dreifus, 2010, Richards, 2011, Riley, 2011, Arum and Roksa, 2011, Ginsberg, 2011, Jensen, 2012, Giroux, 2014b, or Frank, 2016. See, furthermore, “Schooling Ourselves in an Unequal America,” by Rebecca Strauss, New York Times, June 16, 2013, <http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/06/16/schooling-ourselves-in-an-unequal-america/?src=me&ref=general>. As to the UK, see “Coalition of Thinkers Vow to Fight Marketisation of Universities,” by Shiv Malik, The Guardian, November 8, 2012, www.guardian.co.uk/education/2012/nov/08/coalition-thinkers-fight-marketisation-universities, where we read that the purpose of university is being “grossly distorted by the attempt to create a market in higher education.” See also “Why I am Not a Professor OR the Decline and Fall of the British University,” by Mark Tarver, 2007, www.lambdassociates.org/blog/decline.htm.

For Germany, see Münch, 2011. See also how the corporate sector in Germany has developed a “master plan” for how to change the educational system, in “Die Hochschule der Zukunft: Das Leitbild der Wirtschaft,” by Dieter Hundt, Präsident, Bundesvereinigung der Deutschen Arbeitgeberverbände e. V. (BDA), and Hans-Peter Keitel, Präsident, Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie e. V. (BDI), Berlin, February 2010, www.arbeitgeber.de/www%5Carbeitgeber.nsf/res/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf/\$file/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf. I thank Ines Balta for making me aware of this publication.

<sup>198</sup> In my work, I apply the ideal-type approach as described by sociologist Max Weber, 1904/1949. See Coser, 1977, p. 224:

Weber’s three kinds of ideal types are distinguished by their levels of abstraction. First are the ideal types rooted in historical particularities, such as the “western city,” “the Protestant Ethic,” or “modern capitalism,” which refer to phenomena that appear only in specific historical periods and in particular cultural areas. A second kind involves abstract elements of social reality – such concepts as “bureaucracy” or “feudalism” – that may be found in a variety of historical and cultural contexts. Finally, there is a third kind of ideal type, which Raymond Aron calls “rationalizing reconstructions of a particular kind of behavior.” According to Weber, all propositions in economic theory, for example, fall into this category. They all refer to the ways in which men would behave were they actuated by purely economic motives, were they purely economic men.

See also Karlberg, 2013. He explains that analytical constructs never correspond perfectly with some presumably objective reality, see Karlberg, 2013, p. 9:

Care must be taken, therefore, not to reify these frames or over-extend the metaphors that inform them. These frames can, however, serve as useful heuristic devices for organizing certain forms of inquiry and guiding certain forms of practice – such as inquiry into the meaning of human dignity and the application of this concept in fields such as human rights and conflict resolution.

<sup>199</sup> Otto, 1917/1923. See also Palmquist, 2015. I thank Mark Singer for making me aware of Stephen Palmquist’s work on philosopher Immanuel Kant. It is a privilege to have Kant expert Mark Singer as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. From my point of view, Palmquist rightly points out that religious Schwärmerei as Kant calls it, is not correctly translated with “fanaticism” nor “enthusiasm.” However, also Palmquist’s suggestion of “delirium” does not resonate with me. The best term for me, since it also encapsulates Kant’s disdain for this phenomenon, would be “puppy love.” I personally feel the same sentiment that Kant feels: I reject religion that expresses itself in any form of “puppy love,” while I do not reject “critical mysticism.”

<sup>200</sup> In his book The Sacred and the Profane, Eliade, 1957/1959, partially builds on Otto’s The Idea of the Holy, showing how religion emerges from the experience of the sacred.

<sup>201</sup> Eliade, 1949/1954.

<sup>202</sup> Petter Nesser is senior researcher with the Terrorism Research Group at the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI). I thank him for sharing his very deep, nuanced, and differentiated insights in a thoroughly informative conversation in Oslo on June 17, 2011. Here are some of my notes, summarized and translated from Norwegian by Lindner:

The Salafi movement is diverse, comprising everything from introverted mystics to groups that are political in thinking and action. Al Qaeda rhetoric may be against politics, but they do want political change. The groups that Nesser studies are very much opposed to the Muslim Brotherhood because they look at them as impure, since they compromise themselves for politics. Original Saudi Arabian Salafist thought combines now with ideologies of violent struggle from the Egypt of the sixties and seventies and the so-called Afghan Arabs.

See also Nesser, 2006, 2011, 2014, Tønnessen, 2006.

<sup>203</sup> “Facing Gaia: A New Enquiry Into Natural Religion,” the Gifford Lectures by Bruno Latour, University of Edinburgh, 2013, www.giffordlectures.org/lectures/facing-gaia-new-enquiry-natural-religion.

<sup>204</sup> Sudhir Chella Rajan in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” September 26, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016.

<sup>205</sup> Intergroup emotions theory has provided strong evidence for the affective impact of texts which address identity groups, see, among others, Smith and Mackie, 2015.

<sup>206</sup> David Korten, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Why We Consume: Neural Design and Sustainability,” January 24, 2016, responding to Sterling, 2016.

<sup>207</sup> Ibid.

<sup>208</sup> Schwartz, 2004. See also Choice, a RSA animate, where Renata Salecl explores the paralyzing anxiety and dissatisfaction that surround limitless choice. Does the freedom to be the architects of our own lives actually hinder rather than help us? Does our preoccupation with choosing and consuming actually obstruct social change? See <https://youtu.be/1bqMY82xWo>, and the RSA’s free public events program www.thersa.org/events. See also Salecl, 2004.

<sup>209</sup> See also Chapter 8: When False Choices Crowd Out Important Choices, in Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>210</sup> Miller, 2006b. See her first, seminal book, Miller, 1976/1986, 1986b.

<sup>211</sup> Read about the International Society for Health and Human Rights on www.hhri.org/about/.

<sup>212</sup> Jones, 2009. See also Latour, 2004, and “When Nothing Is Cool,” by Lisa Ruddick, The Point, 2015, <http://thepointmag.com/2015/criticism/when-nothing-is-cool>, an abridged version of an article in Bammer and Boetcher Joeres, 2015. See also Jameson, 1991, and Latour, 2004. Ruddick asks why academia has not been able “to shift away from norms that make ruthlessness look like sophistication,” and she writes:

Some years ago Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick touched on this complex in her well-known essay on paranoid reading, where she identified a strain of “hatred” in criticism. Also salient is a more recent piece in which Bruno Latour has described how scholars slip from “critique” into “critical barbarity,” giving “cruel treatment” to experiences and ideals that non-academics treat as objects of tender concern. Rita Felski’s current work on the state of criticism has reenergized the conversation on the punitive attitudes encouraged by the hermeneutics of suspicion. And Susan Fraiman’s powerful analysis of the “cool male” intellectual style favored in academia is concerned with many of the same patterns I consider here.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

<sup>213</sup> See note 212 above.

<sup>214</sup> Ibid.

<sup>215</sup> Latour, 2004, p. 225.

<sup>216</sup> Carveth, 2013. See also Carveth, 1994, for his discussion of Heidegger, Winnicott, Freud, Klein, Lacan, Mahler, and St. Paul with respect to what Winnicott, 1965, would call “true self.”

<sup>217</sup> See note 212 above.

<sup>218</sup> Rippin, 2013.

<sup>219</sup> See note 212 above.

<sup>220</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>221</sup> Ibid.

<sup>222</sup> World Dignity University initiative, www.worlddignityuniversity.org/joo/.

<sup>223</sup> The model of emotion described by cultural theorist Sara Ahmed, 2004, indicates that emotions are not “in” either the individual or the social, but “produce the very surfaces and boundaries that allow the individual and the social to be delineated as if they are objects,” Ahmed, 2004, p. 10.

<sup>224</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>225</sup> “US Iraq War Veteran Speaks Out Before Australian Tour,” an interview with Vince Emanuele, Only in America Blogspot, June 25, 2013, <http://onlyinamericablogging.blogspot.com/2013/06/an-interview-with-vince-emanuele.html> (originally on waca.net.au/us-iraq-war-veteran-speaks-out-before-australian-tour/). See also US Activist and Iraq War Veteran Vincent Emanuele Speaks Out, video, Information Clearing House, July 12, 2013, www.informationclearinghouse.info/article35533.htm. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of Emanuele’s engagement. It is a privilege to have Anthony Marsella as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

See also “I Helped Create ISIS,” by Vincent Emanuele, Telesur, December 18, 2015, www.telesurtv.net/english/opinion/I-Helped-Create-ISIS-20151218-0016.html.

<sup>226</sup> “US Iraq War Veteran Speaks Out Before Australian Tour,” an interview with Vince Emanuele, Only in America Blogspot, June 25, 2013, <http://onlyinamericablogging.blogspot.com/2013/06/an-interview-with-vince-emanuele.html> (originally on waca.net.au/us-iraq-war-veteran-speaks-out-before-australian-tour/).

<sup>227</sup> See, among others, Enloe, 1990, 1993, 2000, 2004, 2007.

<sup>228</sup> Cohn, 1987.

<sup>229</sup> “Inside UN Peacekeeping: Policy Changes that Work for Women,” with Nadine Puechguirbal, Senior Gender Advisor, UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and Cynthia Enloe, research professor, International Development, Community and Environment Department, Clark University, talk at the Consortium on Gender, Security and Human Rights at UMass Boston, October 4, 2012. I thank Muna Killingback for making me aware of this event. It is a privilege to have Muna Killingback as member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. In the invitation to the event, the speakers were introduced as follows: “Puechguirbal, drawing on over a decade of experience working inside UN peacekeeping missions – and Enloe, reflecting on her experience of trying to forge feminist questions about militarized politics – will candidly discuss the continuing impact of “gender blindness” on even well-meaning international organizations, as well as the daily challenges feminists face in keeping their integrity in peacekeeping and humanitarian work.”

<sup>230</sup> Gunning and Jackson, 2011, Jackson, 2010, Jackson, et al., 2011, Smyth, et al., 2009. See also <http://richardjacksonterrorismblog.wordpress.com/>. I thank Birgit Brock-Utne for introducing me to Jackson’s work.

<sup>231</sup> 2011 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Enlarging the Boundaries of Compassion,” in Dunedin, New Zealand, August 29 – September 1, 2011, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/17.php.

<sup>232</sup> “The Subjugated Knowledge of Terrorism,” by Richard Jackson, January 3, 2012, richardjacksonterrorismblog. See his talk titled Unknown Knowns: The Subjugated Knowledge of Terrorism at a conference “A Decade of Terrorism and Counter-Terrorism since 9/11: Taking Stock and New Directions in Research and Policy,” University of Strathclyde, Glasgow, UK, at <https://vimeo.com/29262905>.

<sup>233</sup> “Does U.S. Intervention Overseas Breed Terrorism? The Historical Record,” by Ivan Eland, Cato Institute Foreign Policy Briefing, Number 50, December 17, 1998, <http://object.cato.org/sites/cato.org/files/pubs/pdf/fpb50.pdf>.

<sup>234</sup> “Chris Hedges Speaks on Osama bin Laden’s Death,” by Chris Hedges, Truthdig, May 2, 2011, www.truthdig.com/report/item/chris\_hedges\_speaks\_on\_osama\_bin\_ladens\_death\_20110502/.

<sup>235</sup> Ehsan Shahghasemi in a personal communication on February 12, 2014. Ehsan Shahghasemi is a Ph.D. Candidate at the Department of Communication of the University of Tehran.

<sup>236</sup> Johan Galtung, in a private communication with Lindner, January 27, 2014, published here with his permission.

<sup>237</sup> “Can SAARC Survive India and Pakistan’s Squabbles? A key international body is being swamped by rivalry,” by Zahid Shahab Ahmed, National Interest, September 1, 2016, <http://nationalinterest.org/feature/can-saarc-survive-india-pakistans-squabbles-17556?page=show>:

Usually at forums like SAARC, “face saving” is an unwritten norm followed by all the participants. In accordance with this norm, member states try to not confront each other in public gatherings – a significant aspect of Asian culture. It also means dealing with contentious issues quietly, for example on the sidelines of formal meetings as has been a common practice at SAARC. However, this was not the case of the recent meeting of SAARC interior ministers in Islamabad. It could be because the meeting was held in the backdrop of heightened tensions between India and Pakistan. There are different versions of the story. For instance, Pakistani reports claim that Indian Home Minister Rajnath Singh left the meeting after “losing” arguments with his Pakistani counterpart Chaudhry Nisar Ali Khan. The issue was once again the Kashmir dispute. It is the typical case of one man’s terrorist is another man’s freedom fighter. At the meeting, Khan demanded a separation between legitimate freedom struggles and terrorism. In contrast, the Indian media reported Singh’s visit as “brief and tense” in which India’s strong stand against terrorism was presented in Islamabad. In his briefing to the Indian parliament, Singh, said “this Neighbour [Pakistan] does not agree.” This shows New Delhi’s frustration with Pakistan, which unlike other SAARC members is challenging Indian hegemony.

It is a privilege to have Zahid Shahab Ahmed as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>238</sup> “Some Myths about Muslims,” by Nivedita Menon, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/some-myths-about-muslims/. Examples are the Indonesian Communist Party, the Nasserite and Ba’athist regimes in Egypt, Syria and Iraq, or the Iranian government of Mohammed Mossadegh.

<sup>239</sup> “Monograph on Terrorist Financing – Staff Report to the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States” by John Roth, Douglas Greenburg, and Serena Wille, 2004, www.9-11commission.gov/staff\_statements/911\_TerrFin\_Monograph.pdf.

<sup>240</sup> “The Paris Killings – A Fatal Trap for Europe,” by Roberto Savio, Inter Press Service (IPS), January 12, 2015, www.ipsnews.net/2015/01/opinion-the-paris-killings-a-fatal-trap-for-europe/:

A Pew Research Center on the Muslim world inform us that it is in South Asia that Muslims are more radical in terms of observance and views. In that region, those in favor of severe corporal punishment for criminals are 81 percent, compared with 57 percent in the Middle East and North Africa, while those in favor of executing those who leave Islam are 76 percent in South Asia, compared with 56 percent in the Middle East.

<sup>241</sup> Ibid.:

Thus the Arab countries of today were born as the result of a division by France and Britain. A few of those countries, like Egypt, had an historical identity, but countries like Iraq, Arabia Saudi, Jordan, or even the Arab Emirates, lacked even that. It is worth remembering that the Kurdish issue of 30 million people divided among four countries was created by European powers.

<sup>242</sup> Ibid.

<sup>243</sup> Khalidi, 2004.

<sup>244</sup> Religious Factors in the Diplomacy of Violent Conflicts, paper given by Raymond G. Helmick, May 5, 2015, at the conference on “International Politics, Diplomacy and Religion,” European University Institute, Florence, Italy. Priest of the New England Jesuit Province, Raymond Helmick has worked with conflict since 1972, and it is a privilege to have him as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>245</sup> “IS want Western Countries to Invade: What’s The Purpose of “Global” Terrorism?” by Gwynne Dyer, Information Clearing House, November 30, 2014, www.informationclearinghouse.info/article40350.htm.

<sup>246</sup> “The US-Iranian-Syrian Diplomatic Dance,” by Dan Smith, Dan Smith’s Blog: Analysis and Commentary on World Issues, October 9, 2013, dansmithsblog.com/2013/10/09/the-us-iranian-syrian-diplomatic-dance/.

<sup>247</sup> Institute for Economics and Peace, 2014.

<sup>248</sup> See, among others, Scheuer, 2011.

<sup>249</sup> General Wesley Clark: Wars Were Planned – Seven Countries In Five Years, uploaded on YouTube on September 11, 2011, https://youtu.be/9RC1Mepk\_Sw:

General Wesley Clark:

Because I had been through the Pentagon right after 9/11. About ten days after 9/11, I went through the Pentagon and I saw Secretary Rumsfeld and Deputy Secretary Wolfowitz. I went downstairs just to say hello to some of the people on the Joint Staff who used to work for me, and one of the generals called me in. He said, “Sir, you’ve got to come in and talk to me a second.” I said, “Well, you’re too busy.” He said, “No, no.” He says, “We’ve made the decision we’re going to war with Iraq.” This was on or about the 20th of September. I said, “We’re going to war with Iraq? Why?” He said, “I don’t know.” He said, “I guess they don’t know what else to do.” So I said, “Well, did they find some information connecting Saddam to Al-Qaeda?” He said, “No, no.” He says, “There’s nothing new that way. They just made the decision to go to war with Iraq.” He said, “I guess it’s like we don’t know what to do about terrorists, but we’ve got a good military and we can take down governments.” And he said, “I guess if the only tool you have is a hammer, every problem has to look like a nail.”

So I came back to see him a few weeks later, and by that time we were bombing in Afghanistan. I said, “Are we still going to war with Iraq?” And he said, “Oh, it’s worse than that.” He reached over on his desk. He picked up a piece of paper. And he said, “I just got this down from upstairs” – meaning the Secretary of Defense’s office – “today.”

And he said, “This is a memo that describes how we’re going to take out seven countries in five years, starting with Iraq, and then Syria, Lebanon, Libya, Somalia, Sudan and, finishing off, Iran.” I said, “Is it classified?” He said, “Yes, sir.” I said, “Well, don’t show it to me.” And I saw him a year or so ago, and I said, “You remember that?” He said, “Sir, I didn’t show you that memo! I didn’t show it to you!”

<sup>250</sup> “Remarks of President Barack Obama – State of the Union Address As Delivered,” The White House, Office of the Press Secretary, January 13, 2016, www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2016/01/12/remarks-president-barack-obama-%E2%80%93-prepared-delivery-state-union-address.

<sup>251</sup> “Jihadists Deepen Collaboration in North Africa,” by Carlotta Gall, New York Times, January 1, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/01/02/world/africa/jihadists-deepen-collaboration-in-north-africa.html?smid=tw-share&\_r=3.

<sup>252</sup> “The Algerian Tragedy,” by Omar Ashour, Project Syndicate, January 25, 2013, www.project-syndicate.org/commentary/the-origins-of-algeria-s-hostage-crisis-by-omar-ashour?barrier=true. See also Ashour, 2009. There are voices, however, who suspect that more sinister intentions may have been behind the “Arab Spring” uprisings and the chaos in the Middle East in general, namely, that it rather was a chaos stoked from outside. See “Barack Obama’s Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?” by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016, www.thecodeforglobalethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY. See more by Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay, 2010. See also “The Redirection: Is the Administration’s New Policy Benefitting Our Enemies in the War on Terrorism?” by Seymour M. Hersh, New Yorker, Annals of National Security, March 5, 2007, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2007/03/05/the-redirection.

<sup>253</sup> “Top 5 Reasons Why ‘Failed State’ Is a Failed Concept,” by William Easterly and Laura Freschi, Aid Watch, January 13, 2010, <http://aidwatchers.com/2010/01/top-5-reasons-why-%E2%80%9Cfailed-state%E2%80%9D-is-a-failed-concept/>:

One can only speculate about the political motives for inventing an incoherent concept like “state failure.” It gave Western states (most notably the US superpower) much more flexibility to intervene where they wanted to (for other reasons): you don’t have to respect state sovereignty if there is no state. After the end of the Cold War, there was less hesitation to intervene because of the disappearance of the threat of Soviet retaliation. “State failure” was even more useful as justification for the US to operate with a free hand internationally in the “War on Terror” after 9/11.

The term “failed state” came to prominence with the publication of Helman and Ratner, 1992. See also “Failed States Are a Western Myth,” by Elliot Ross, The Guardian, June 28, 2013, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2013/jun/28/failed-states-western-myth-us-interests.

<sup>254</sup> “Think Again: Failed States,” by James Traub, Foreign Policy, June 20, 2011, <http://foreignpolicy.com/2011/06/20/think-again-failed-states/>. See also Patrick, 2011.

<sup>255</sup> Ehrenreich Brooks, 2005..

<sup>256</sup> Ibid.

<sup>257</sup> “For Pakistan, Deep Ties to Militant Network May Trump U.S. Pressure,” by Pir Zubair Shah and Carlotta Gall, New York Times, October 31, 2011, www.nytimes.com/2011/11/01/world/asia/haqqani-militants-act-like-pakistans-protected-partners.html?hp.

<sup>258</sup> Ibid.

<sup>259</sup> Ibid.

<sup>260</sup> “‘Execution Orgy’: Pakistan Learns from a Brutal Terrorist Attack,” by Hasnain Kazim, Spiegel Online International, December 14, 2015, www.spiegel.de/international/world/pakistan-security-improves-in-wake-of-deadly-school-attack-a-1067740.html.

<sup>261</sup> Ibid.

<sup>262</sup> Kristian Berg Harpviken spoke at the conference “Konfliktløsning, fredskultur og flerkulturell forståelse,” at the Nordland Akademi for Kunst og Vitenskap, Melbu, Vesterålen, Norway, July 5–8, 2010, www.nordland-akademi.no. It is a privilege to have Kristian Berg Harpviken as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>263</sup> “Blowback in Paris,” by Nafeez Ahmed, Middle East Eye, January 8, 2015, www.middleeasteye.net/columns/blowback-paris-1534074535. Nafeez Mosaddeq Ahmed is director of the Institute for Policy Research and Development in London, <http://iprd.org.uk>.

<sup>264</sup> Kolås, 2010, Abstract:

This paper deploys a discursive approach to the “scripting” of the November 2008 Mumbai “terror attacks” and their aftermath, including ensuing debates about counter-terrorism in India. It explores the perspectives of a range of actors who participated in very different ways in the social construction of the attacks, including media consumers and producers, key participants in public debates, and even the masterminds of the attacks. Important insights into the planning and implementation of the attacks are drawn from phone conversations intercepted by Indian intelligence, between the gunmen and their “controllers.” The Mumbai attacks were scripted and staged in a conscious effort to obtain maximum media coverage, which also made the masterminds dependent on the media. The war story created by the media featured violence simply as a means of “fighting a battle,” obscuring the significant role of violence as a display of force by both security forces and “terrorists.”

I thank Kristian Berg Harpviken for making me aware of this article.

<sup>265</sup> Schmidt and Schröder, 2001, pp. 8–9.

<sup>266</sup> Sovacool, 2011.

<sup>267</sup> “Coming Home to Roost: American Militarism, War Culture, and Police Brutality,” by Colin Jenkins, The Hampton Institute, February 27, 2014, www.hamptoninstitution.org/coming-home-to-roost.html. Jenkins describes the summer of 1994, when he participated in a U.S. Army Basic Training in Columbia, South Carolina, 19 years old. The following words of U.S. Army General George Patton were loudly disseminated from the loudspeakers:

Americans love to fight, traditionally. All real Americans love the sting and clash of battle... you are here because you are real men and all real men like to fight!... Americans love a winner! Americans will not tolerate a loser! Americans despise cowards! Americans play to win all of the time. I wouldn’t give a hoot in hell for a man who lost and laughed. That’s why Americans have never lost nor will ever lose a war; for the very idea of losing is hateful to an American!

<sup>268</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>269</sup> According to philosopher Martha Nussbaum, 1995, a person may be objectified if they are treated:

- as a tool for another’s purposes (instrumentality)
- as if lacking in agency or self-determination (denial of autonomy, inertness)
- as if owned by another (ownership)
- as if interchangeable (fungibility)
- as if permissible to damage or destroy (violability)
- as if there is no need for concern for their feelings and experiences (denial of subjectivity).

<sup>270</sup> See note 267 above.

<sup>271</sup> “Briefing General Assembly, UN rights expert urges dual fight against torture, corruption,” United Nations News Centre, October 21, 2014, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=49136#.VEjhSxY08ud.

<sup>272</sup> Nora Sveaass took initiative to establish Health and Human Rights Info (www.hhri.org), to make professional experiences and resources more easily accessible to health professionals working with people exposed to human rights abuses, armed conflict, forced migration and other human rights violations. See also Sveaass, 2013.

<sup>273</sup> For the notion of chosen trauma, see Volkan, 1997, 2004, 2006, 2013.

<sup>274</sup> Norgaard, 2015. See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>275</sup> See Chapter 8 of Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>276</sup> “Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society,” writes Johan Galtung. See “Sociocide, Palestine and Israel,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, October 8, 2012, www.transcend.org/tms/2012/10/sociocide-palestine-and-israel/ (italics in original):

Sociocide, the killing of a society’s capacity to survive and to reproduce itself, should become equally and prominently a crime against humanity. A society is a self-reproducing social system. So are human beings, with our basic needs for survival, wellness, identity, freedom. Society is also an organism, with a lifespan far beyond that of individuals. For humans to survive as humans their basic needs have to be met. For that to happen the society has to survive. For the society to survive the basic social prerequisites must be met:

- for security, against violence, killing, wounding the members;
- for economic sustainability, against their starvation, illness;
- for identity culturally, a meaning with life, against alienation;
- for autonomy politically, to be a master of their own house.

As society unfolds so do humans, and vice versa. Life breeds life.

This also holds for nomadic societies based on hunter-gatherers. Monasteries are incapable of self-reproduction biologically when based on one gender, but are highly viable societies based on recruitment.

Under modernity, identity is carried by the nation, with four characteristics: an idiom, a religion-world view, a history – of the past, present and future – and geographical attachment. Time, Space, with the means to communicate and something to believe is crucial.

Under modernity the state is the key executor of all the above.

Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society.

Sociocide molests the human members. In the longer run, lethally. Sociocide is what Western, and not only Western, colonialism has done for centuries, denying others their autonomy, imposing their own identity – language and world-view – moving others out of their own historical dialectic and into history as Western periphery, denying them the land they are attached to with their hearts and minds. And their bodies for security and sustenance, for food, water, health.

See also Cormann, 2015.

<sup>277</sup> Higgins, 2016. See a precursor to the concept of ecocide in Christopher Stone, 1972, and for “a look back forty years later,” Anna Grear, 2012. See, furthermore, Boyd, 2012, or Angus, 2016. Consider the sustainability principle in the Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia. In September 2016, the International Criminal Court added environmental disasters and destruction, even land grabs, to the definition of Crimes Against Humanity, which shows that real international legal instrument now follow soft law (Earth Charter) or symbolic language (ecocide, where the mens rea required cannot be demonstrated).

There are voices, however, that warn that introducing a crime of ecocide in the International Criminal Court (ICC) can ultimately be undesirable, because the vehicle of an international crime overreaches and is insufficient at the same time. See Capra and Mattei, 2015. See also Ugo Mattei of the Hastings College of Law at the University of California, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 5, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. The ICC, because of the lack of international centralized power or independence, is just a mockery of an institution, writes Mattei, and continues:

Ecocide is too serious of an issue to be entangled with such a spectacle of an international institution that never worked to reach the actual powerful culprits. Moreover, even if we were to take seriously international criminal law in a world of dramatic power imbalance, a crime of ecocide would necessarily require a level of culpability that is most probably absent in all the major episodes of devastation of the environment. Disasters such as Fukushima, Chernobyl, or even the Gulf spill would clearly fall below that. There are issues of corporate responsibility, of criminal consequences of recklessness, of sufficiency, of omissions, or of causality that handled by any good criminal attorney would clear let wealthy corporate actors immune from responsibility.

It is hard to believe that any powerful wrongdoer will be deterred by such a crime, and, as consequence, the very idea of ecocide will suffer prestige and credibility.

We live in a world in which very few people have any awareness of the disasters of the Anthropocene, so we need diffused ecological literacy. We live in a world in which people believe that the only concept of law is that of a vertical model in the hands of governments, so we need diffused legal literacy.

In seeking a legal solution for problems of such ecological relevance, involving so many non-human interests traditionally and presently ignored and massively violated by the very structure of extractive capitalism, we need (if at all available) the best not the worst part of legal systems. We need to culturally transform the perception of law, to disentangle it with notions of power-concentration, to give it back to communities as a decentralized cultural and legitimate tool to share problems and solutions. Nothing is further away from people and social movements than an appeal to jails, cops, and police to solve our ecological problems. Would such a move increase international ecological legal literacy?

It is an honor for me to be part in Anna Grear's network, as well as Paul Raskin's GTN discussions.

<sup>278</sup> Rickards, 2014.

<sup>279</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>280</sup> Vaughan, 2008. It is a privilege to have Geneviève Vaughan as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

See also Goodwin, et al., 2014a. Leading feminist theorists Julie A. Nelson and Neva Goodwin suggest that a feminist perspective is essential for understanding issues such as financial crisis, climate change, and behavioral economics. See, for instance, Goodwin, et al., 2014a, Nelson, 2010a. I had the privilege of meeting Neva Goodwin at the Thirtieth Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures "Voices of a New Economics," in New York City on November 20, 2010.

<sup>281</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>282</sup> Diesing, 1962. See also Hartwig, 1983, and Hartwig, 2008. I thank Morton Deutsch and Eric Marcus for making me aware of Diesing's work.

<sup>283</sup> Carveth, 2013.

<sup>284</sup> Sundararajan, 2012.

<sup>285</sup> "Overwhelmed by these social services, the spirit of community falters: families collapse, schools fail, violence spreads, and medical systems spiral out of control. Instead of more or better services, the basis for resolving many of America's social problems is the community capacity of the local citizens," McKnight, 1995, book description. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of this book by John McKnight, and that by McKnight and Block, 2010. The Community Development Program at the Institute for Policy Research at Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, has established the Asset-Based Community Development Institute based on three decades of research and community work by John P. Kretzmann and John L. McKnight.

<sup>286</sup> "People's Tragedy: Neoliberal Legacy of Thatcher and Reagan," by Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), October 15, 2014, <http://www.gcgi.info/index.php/blog/627-people-s-tragedy-neoliberal-legacy-of-thatcher-and-reagan>. It is a privilege to have Kamran Mofid as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>287</sup> "Economics, Globalisation and the Common Good: A Lecture at London School of Economics," by Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), May 12, 2015, <http://www.gcgi.info/index.php/news/694-economics-globalisation-and-the-common-good-a-lecture-at-londonschool-of-economics>.

<sup>288</sup> Hartzband and Groopman, 2009, p. 103. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>289</sup> Diesing, 1962. See also Hartwig, 1983, and Hartwig, 2008. I thank Morton Deutsch and Eric Marcus for making me aware of Diesing's work.

<sup>290</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>291</sup> Hartwig, 2008, p. 4.

<sup>292</sup> See, among others, the book by Deresiewicz, 2014, Excellent Sheep, see www.billderesiewicz.com/books/excellent-sheep:

Excellent Sheep takes a sharp look at the high-pressure conveyor belt that begins with parents and counselors who demand perfect grades and culminates in the skewed applications Deresiewicz saw firsthand as a member of Yale's admissions committee. As schools shift focus from the humanities to "practical" subjects like economics and computer science, students are losing the ability to think in innovative ways. Deresiewicz explains how college should be a time for self-discovery, when students can establish their own values and measures of success, so they can forge their own path. He addresses parents, students, educators, and anyone who's interested in the direction of American society, featuring quotes from real students and graduates he has corresponded with over the years, candidly exposing where the system is broken and clearly presenting solutions.

See also Bloom, 1987, Wilshire, 1990, Putnam, 1995, Readings, 1996, Schmidt, 2000, Giroux and Paulo Freire (Foreword), 2001, Bok, 2003, Giroux and Giroux, 2004, Hersh and Merrow, 2005, Karabel, 2005, Levine, 2006, Lewis, 2006, Kronman, 2007, Donoghue, 2008, Newfield, 2008, Gornitzka and Langfeldt, 2008, Folbre, 2009, Nussbaum, 2010, Taylor, 2010, Osler, 2010, Hacker and Dreifus, 2010, Richards, 2011, Riley, 2011, Arum and Roksa, 2011, Ginsberg, 2011, Jensen, 2012, Giroux, 2014b, or Frank, 2016. See, furthermore, “Schooling Ourselves in an Unequal America,” by Rebecca Strauss, New York Times, June 16, 2013, <http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/06/16/schooling-ourselves-in-an-unequal-america/?src=me&ref=general>.

As to the UK, see “Coalition of Thinkers Vow to Fight Marketisation of Universities,” by Shiv Malik, The Guardian, November 8, 2012, www.guardian.co.uk/education/2012/nov/08/coalition-thinkers-fight-marketisation-universities, where we read that the purpose of university is being “grossly distorted by the attempt to create a market in higher education.” See also “Why I am Not a Professor OR the Decline and Fall of the British University,” by Mark Tarver, 2007, www.lambdassociates.org/blog/decline.htm.

For Germany, see Münch, 2011. See also how the corporate sector in Germany has developed a “master plan” for how to change the educational system, in “Die Hochschule der Zukunft: Das Leitbild der Wirtschaft,” by Dieter Hundt, Präsident, Bundesvereinigung der Deutschen Arbeitgeberverbände e. V. (BDA), and Hans-Peter Keitel, Präsident, Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie e. V. (BDI), Berlin, February 2010, www.arbeitgeber.de/www%5Carbeitgeber.nsf/res/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf/\$file/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf. I thank Ines Balta for making me aware of this publication.

<sup>293</sup> Linda Hartling, in a personal communication on September 8, 2015.

<sup>294</sup> “Die Hochschule der Zukunft: Das Leitbild der Wirtschaft.” See note 292 above.

<sup>295</sup> Lappé, 2016.

<sup>296</sup> “Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society,” writes Johan Galtung. See in “Sociocide, Palestine and Israel,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, October 8, 2012, www.transcend.org/tms/2012/10/sociocide-palestine-and-israel/ (italics in original):

Sociocide, the killing of a society’s capacity to survive and to reproduce itself, should become equally and prominently a crime against humanity. A society is a self-reproducing social system. So are human beings, with our basic needs for survival, wellness, identity, freedom. Society is also an organism, with a lifespan far beyond that of individuals. For humans to survive as humans their basic needs have to be met. For that to happen the society has to survive. For the society to survive the basic social prerequisites must be met:

- for security, against violence, killing, wounding the members;
- for economic sustainability, against their starvation, illness;
- for identity culturally, a meaning with life, against alienation;
- for autonomy politically, to be a master of their own house.

As society unfolds so do humans, and vice versa. Life breeds life.

This also holds for nomadic societies based on hunter-gatherers. Monasteries are incapable of self-reproduction biologically when based on one gender, but are highly viable societies based on recruitment.

Under modernity, identity is carried by the nation, with four characteristics: an idiom, a religion-world view, a history – of the past, present and future – and geographical attachment. Time, Space, with the means to communicate and something to believe is crucial.

Under modernity the state is the key executor of all the above.

Sociocide is the intended wounding-killing of a society by eliminating the prerequisites for a live, vibrant, dynamic society.

Sociocide molests the human members. In the longer run, lethally. Sociocide is what Western, and not only Western, colonialism has done for centuries, denying others their autonomy, imposing their own identity– language and world-view – moving others out of their own historical dialectic and into history as Western periphery, denying them the land they are attached to with their hearts and minds. And their bodies for security and sustenance, for food, water, health.

See also Cormann, 2015.

<sup>297</sup> Ecology and Society is a leading journal for the discussion of nature-society interactions, for which the term social-ecological and similar expressions have become mainstream terminology.

<sup>298</sup> Global wildlife populations have fallen by 58 percent since 1970, and if the trend continues the decline could reach two-thirds among vertebrates by 2020, according to World Wildlife Fund (WWF), et al., 2016. See also Ceballos, et al., 2015, Kolbert, 2006, Spufford and Kolbert, 2007, and Kolbert, 2014. See, furthermore, Davis, 2009, and The

Wayfinders, the 2009 Massey Lecture by Wade Davis, Convocation Hall, Toronto, uploaded November 20, 2011, on <https://youtu.be/KfbGdoTQKuM>. See also philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>299</sup> World Wildlife Fund (WWF), et al., 2016.

<sup>300</sup> Young, et al., 2015.

<sup>301</sup> Das Gift im Kuhstall – Sterbende Tiere, kranke Menschen, documentary film, Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, 2013, www.ardmediathek.de/wdr-fernsehen/die-story?documentId=17138936, and <https://youtu.be/c4uUx507ZZU>:

Kühe, die stolpern, hinfallen und schließlich getötet werden. Bauern, die an Muskelschwäche erkranken und Kinder, die behindert zur Welt kommen. Die Ursache für diese Schreckensbilder ist ein Bakterium, Clostridium Botulinum. Dieses Bakterium ist ein echter Killer, hochgefährlich und seit über zehn Jahren in vielen deutschen Rinderställen aktiv.

Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, WDR, West German Broadcasting Cologne, a German public-broadcasting institution based in the Federal State of North Rhine-Westphalia with its main office in Cologne.

<sup>302</sup> Antibiotika ohne Wirkung? documentary film by Antje Büll, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, February 10, 2014, www.ndr.de/ratgeber/gesundheit/infektion\_immunsystem/antibiotika283.html, and https://youtu.be/D\_7rsOQ2VSI:

Jedes Jahr sterben 15.000 Menschen in Deutschland an Infektionen mit antibiotika-resistenten Keimen. Neue wirksame Antibiotika gibt es noch nicht. Wie ernst ist die Lage? Antibiotika werden laufend verordnet – selbst, wenn sie überflüssig sind. Aber warum verschreiben die Ärzte so viel davon – manchmal sogar bei harmlosen Erkältungen? Ärzte fürchten längst nicht mehr nur den Krankenhauskeim MRSA, sondern auch Darmkeime, bei denen die vorhandenen Medikamente versagen. Doch neuartige Antibiotika sind nicht in Sicht. Was sind die Ursachen dafür, dass manche Antibiotika heute schon nicht mehr wirken? Welche Auswege gibt es?

Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg.

<sup>303</sup> “The Conflict Horizon 3: Only Connect,” Dan Smith, Dan Smith’s Blog: Analysis and Commentary on World Issues, April 25, 2014, dansmithsblog.com/2014/04/25/the-conflict-horizon-3-only-connect/.

<sup>304</sup> Carol Smaldino, in a personal communication on April 21, 2013. Carol Smaldino is an esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>305</sup> “Rich People Just Care Less,” by Daniel Goleman, New York Times, October 5, 2013, opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/10/05/rich-people-just-care-less/?\_r=1&. See also Piff, et al., 2012.

<sup>306</sup> Lindner, 2000c.

<sup>307</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>308</sup> Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>309</sup> These atrocities committed are being labelled quasi genocide, since the victims, the members of the Isaaq clan, were not systematically exterminated, in contrast to Rwanda, for instance, where even “half-blood” were potential targets for extermination. Also, until the end of the genocide, there were Isaaq ministers in the government, something that would have been unthinkable in Rwanda. See the report by a United Nations employee who does not wish to be named, December 1998, Hargeisa, in Lindner, 2000c, p. 58.

<sup>310</sup> Lindner, 2000c, p. 173.

<sup>311</sup> Lindner, 2010a, pp. 22–23.

<sup>312</sup> Waller, 1996, p. 4.

<sup>313</sup> Arendt, 1963.

<sup>314</sup> See Bar-Tal, et al., 2007, for a discussion of the societal implications of collective emotions, for example, in conflict situations.

<sup>315</sup> Soleim, et al., 2015. See also “Risikerte livene sine – ble fratatt all ære,” by Stig Brøndbo, February 19, 2015, https://uit.no/nyheter/artikkel?p\_document\_id=406292.

<sup>316</sup> Sarajevo My Love, a film by Eylem Kaftan, published on June 12, 2013, <https://youtu.be/nmuqWmALnjo>. The film portrays Jovan Divjak, an ethnic Serb who defended Sarajevo against attack from Serb forces during the Bosnian war. I thank Ardian Adžanela for making us aware of this film and for introducing me to Jovan Divjak on August 7, 2016. See the video we created, Jovan Divjak Reflects on Human Dignity, <https://youtu.be/3-oQecU8hLs>.

<sup>317</sup> Scholars who analyzed slavery note that sometimes a very special accommodation-resistance dialectic of obeying but not necessarily complying evolved, which allowed slaves to carve out a degree of autonomous and very distinctive culture, which eschewed the values embraced by the master class. See, for instance, Engerman and Genovese, 1975, and Smith, 1998.

<sup>318</sup> Mazzetti, 2013. See the book description:

The most momentous change in American warfare over the past decade has taken place in the corners of the world where large armies can't go. The CIA, originally created as a Cold War espionage service, is now more than ever a paramilitary agency ordered by the White House to kill off America's enemies. In The Way of the Knife, Pulitzer Prize-winning New York Times reporter Mark Mazzetti recounts the untold story of America's shadow war, one that blurred the lines between soldiers and spies and lowered the bar for waging war across the globe. This new approach – carried out by CIA operatives and special operations troops – has been embraced by Washington as a lower-risk and cost effective alternative to the messy wars of occupation, but as Mazzetti demonstrates in this revealing book, the way of the knife has created enemies just as it has killed them.

<sup>319</sup> “The Change Within: The Obstacles We Face Are Not Just External,” by Naomi Klein, The Nation, May 12, 2014, www.thenation.com/article/179460/change-within-obstacles-we-face-are-not-just-external#. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this article.

<sup>320</sup> Merz, 2012.

<sup>321</sup> Ibid.

<sup>322</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016: “I don't like the term social capital... because it comes from the frame of economics.” See furthermore, Dennis Meadows' Foreword to Bernard Lietaer, et al., 2012. See also Goetzmann, 2016.

<sup>323</sup> “It's the Egyptian Economy, Stupid,” by Amitai Etzioni, National Interest, January 24, 2013, <http://nationalinterest.org/commentary/its-the-egyptian-economy-stupid-7984>.

<sup>324</sup> Maalouf, 2009. I thank Mai-Bente Bonnevie for making me aware of this book. It is a privilege to have Mai-Bente Bonnevie as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See a summary of the book on CDurable.info, <http://cdurable.info/Amin-Maalouf-Le-dereglement-du-monde,1660.html>, translated from French by Lindner:

The central thesis of this long essay could be summarized as follows: the maladjustment of the world has less to do with a “clash of civilizations” and more with the simultaneous depletion of civilization. Humankind has reached its “moral threshold of incompetence.” The age of ideological divisions and its debates is now followed by divisions of identity, where there is no more debate.

Islam and the West: both discourses have their theoretical consistency, but each, in practice, betrays its own ideals. Islam and the West: both discourses have their theoretical consistency, but each, in practice, betrays its own ideals. The West is unfaithful to its own values, which disqualifies it in the eyes of the people it claims to acculturate to democracy. The Arab-Muslim world no longer has neither the legitimacy of the family nor the patriotic legitimacy around which it was historically structured. Living in humiliation and regressive nostalgia for its “Golden Age,” the era of Islamism succeeding the era of nationalism, it is condemned to a headlong rush into radicalism. These “symmetrical maladjustments” are only one element of a broader global derangement that requires humanity to come together to deal with the emergencies, like climatic degradation which threatens all peoples. And if prehistory of humanity ended before our eyes, opening in the great convulsions, a new chapter of human history begins?

French original:

La thèse centrale de ce vaste essai pourrait être ainsi résumée: le dérèglement du monde tient moins à la ‘guerre des civilisations’ qu’à l’épuisement simultané des civilisations, l’humanité ayant atteint en quelque sorte son ‘seuil d’incompétence morale’. A l’âge des clivages idéologiques qui suscitaient le débat succède celui des clivages identitaires, où il n’y a plus de débat.

Islam et Occident : les deux discours ont leur cohérence théorique, mais chacun, dans la pratique, trahit ses propres idéaux. L’Occident est infidèle à ses propres valeurs, ce qui la disqualifie auprès des peuples qu’il prétend acculturer à la démocratie. Le monde arabo-musulman n’a plus ni la légitimité généalogique ni la légitimité patriotique autour desquelles il s’était historiquement structuré. Vivant dans l’humiliation et la nostalgie régressive de son ‘Age d’or’, l’ère des islamismes ayant succédé à l’ère des nationalismes, il se trouve condamné à une fuite en avant dans le radicalisme. Ces ‘dérèglements symétriques’ ne sont qu’un des éléments d’un dérèglement planétaire plus global qui exige que l’humanité se rassemble pour faire face à des urgences qui, à l’exemple des perturbations climatiques, menacent tous les peuples. Et si la Préhistoire de l’humanité prenait fin sous nos yeux, ouvrant dans les convulsions le grand chapitre d’une nouvelle Histoire de l’homme qui commence?

<sup>325</sup> Tocqueville, 1856. See also “The Future by Al Gore – Review,” by John Gray, The Guardian, January 31, 2013, www.theguardian.com/books/2013/jan/31/the-future-al-gore-review. See Gore, 2013.

<sup>326</sup> There are voices, however, who suspect that more sinister intentions may have been behind the “Arab Spring” uprisings and the chaos in the Middle East in general, namely, that it rather was a chaos stoked from outside. See “Barack Obama’s Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?” by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016, www.thecodeforgloblethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY. See more by Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay, 2010. See also “The Redirection: Is the Administration’s New Policy Benefitting Our Enemies in the War on Terrorism?” by Seymour M. Hersh, New Yorker, Annals of National Security, March 5, 2007, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2007/03/05/the-redirection.

<sup>327</sup> Utvik, 2006. I thank Petter Nesser for making me aware of Utvik’s work.

<sup>328</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>329</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014, who does not see capitalism as a mere mode of production, with state and nation as mere epiphenomena of capital, but as a triarchy combining Capital-State-Nation. Bauwens also reminds us of The Great Transformation by Karl Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001, a history of the emergence and perpetuation of capitalism from the late eighteenth century to the 1940s, in which Polanyi sees a double movement at play, namely, between the market forces or the “Smithian” capitalism of the nineteenth century on one side, and society on the other side, or the nation, to speak with Karatani, who forces the market back into a more “social” order. For example, the Fordist period inspired a labor movement to force a re-alignment of society around the welfare state, with the backlash starting in the eighties, when these social protections were “deregulated” again in favor of the 1 percent, with the result that workers are impoverished again in favor of the oligarchic elites. In other words, the nation, or what remains of community and reciprocity dynamics, revolts and mobilizes, and, if successful, it forces the state to discipline capital. Bauwens observes what also I observe all around the world, namely, that after the systemic crisis of 2008 this uprising fails, even though a Polanyian backlash can be found nearly everywhere on the globe: Both Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders in the 2016 U.S. electoral cycle “represent the Polanyian double movement, and are reacting against the effects of neoliberalism and its destruction of the U.S. middle class,” writes Bauwens. Trump speaks for the white middle class and workers and wishes to bring the back a better past, while Sanders represents those who suffer from precarity and envision a different future. The problem, however, is that this time the Polanyian double movement is hindered by capital having developed a transnational logic and capacity. Financial neoliberalism has globalized and fundamentally weakened the capacity of the nation-state to discipline its activities:

Faced with an all-powerful transnational capitalism, the various nation-state systems have proven pretty powerless to effect any change. Dare to challenge the status quo and paralyzing capital flight is going to destroy your country! This is one of the explanations of the deep distrust that people are feeling towards the current political system, which simply fails to deliver towards any majoritarian social demand.

Look at how the moderately radical Syriza movement in Greece was put under a European protectorate and had to abandon Greek sovereignty; or look at how the more antagonistically-oriented Venezuelan government is crumbling, along with other progressive governments in Latin America. So, while the electorate may vote for parties that promise to change the status quo and eventually bring to power movements like Podemos, a Labour Party under the leadership of Corbyn, or a Democratic Party strongly influenced by the Sanders movement, their capacities for change will be severely restricted.

The solution that Bauwens sees, resonates with my global observations, namely, that there is no alternative to creating transnational and translocal capacities, which means globally interlinking the efforts of all the local “civic and ethical entrepreneurial networks that are currently in development.” This is why I invest my life time into creating a dignity movement not just locally, but globally.

<sup>330</sup> 2016 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Enlarging the Boundaries of Compassion,” in Dubrovnik, Croatia, September 19 – 23, 2016, www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/27.php

<sup>331</sup> Motzfeldt Loades, 2016, p. 34.

<sup>332</sup> Krüger, 2013.

<sup>333</sup> “How Spin Doctors Destroyed Our Democracy – and What We Can Do to Repair It,” by Andreas Whittam Smith, The Independent, July 13, 2016, www.independent.co.uk/voices/broken-democracy-spin-doctors-destroyed-uk-politics-theresa-may-repair-it-a7135146.html. Andreas Whittam Smith is The Independent’s founding editor, and in this article, he explains how the professionalization of politics has turned the business of Westminster into a brand, with dangerous consequences. I thank Kamran Mofid for making me aware of this article. See also Osborne, 2007.

<sup>334</sup> “The Moral Collapse of U.S. and Global Society – and the Necessary Conditions for Rebirth,” by Glen T. Martin, OpEdNews, April 29, 2014, www.opednews.com/articles/The-Moral-Collapse-of-U-S-by-Dr-Glen-T-Martin-Democracy\_Earth\_Morality-Morals\_Values-140429-270.html. I thank Ernesto Kahan for making us aware of this article. It is a privilege to have Ernesto Kahan and Glen Martin as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>335</sup> “World Drug Report 2016,” by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), www.unodc.org/doc/wdr2016/WORLD\_DRUG\_REPORT\_2016\_web.pdf. Heroin use and related overdose deaths have increased sharply over the last two years in some countries in North America and Western and Central Europe, with new psychoactive substances remaining a serious concern: “heroin continues to be the drug that kills the most people and this resurgence must be addressed urgently.”

<sup>336</sup> Lane, 2001.

<sup>337</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 3, 2016.

<sup>338</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>339</sup> Rosa, 2005, 2010. Hartmut Rosa is a professor of Sociology at the Friedrich Schiller University of Jena in Germany, and the head of the Max-Weber center of advanced cultural and social studies of the University of Erfurt. See also Why Are We Stuck Behind the Social Acceleration? TED talk by Hartmut Rosa, March 11, 2015, <https://youtu.be/7uG9OFGId3A>. The lead question is: How to have a good life in light of rapid social acceleration? Rosa’s argument is that modern societies are subjected to too close-meshed time regimes that regulate, coordinate, and control them outside of any ethical concepts.

<sup>340</sup> “Schleichende Pathologisierung der Gesellschaft,” Werner Seppmann über die Zunahme von Gewalt und Irrationalismus in der Gesellschaft, interviewed von Reinhard Jellen, Teil 2, heise online, November 23, 2011, www.heise.de/tp/artikel/35/35916/1.html. Translated from German by Lindner:

Daily competition is made absolute by people, made subjective and personal, and accepted as natural and without alternative, if not even declared to be part of the realm of freedom. In that way, people practice and internalize the very exclusion that is shown to them by the institutions.

German original:

Der alltägliche Konkurrenzkampf wird von den Menschen verabsolutiert, versubjektiviert und personalisiert und als naturgegeben und alternativlos akzeptiert, wenn nicht gleich zum Reich der Freiheit deklariert. Damit üben die Menschen jene Ausschließungsmechanismen ein, die ihnen durch die Institutionen vorexerziert wurden.

<sup>341</sup> Trojanow, 2013. Translated from the German original by Lindner:

An essay on human dignity in late capitalism. Those who produce nothing and consume nothing are superfluous, according to the murderous logic of late capitalism. Overpopulation is the biggest problem of our planet, this is the opinion of international elites. But if humanity is to be reduced, then who is going to disappear, asks Trojanov in his humanist polemic against the superfluity of humans. In his penetrating analysis, he runs the gamut from the ravages of climate change on the mercilessness of neoliberal labor market policies to the mass media apocalypses that we, the apparent winner, follow with enthusiasm. But we deceive ourselves: It is also about us. Everything is at stake.

German original:

Ein Essay zur Würde des Menschen im Spätkapitalismus. Wer nichts produziert und nichts konsumiert, ist überflüssig so die mörderische Logik des Spätkapitalismus. Überbevölkerung sei das größte Problem unseres Planeten so die internationalen Eliten. Doch wenn die Menschheit reduziert werden soll, wer soll dann verschwinden, fragt Trojanow in seiner humanistischen Streitschrift wider die Überflüssigkeit des Menschen. In seinen eindringlichen Analysen schlägt er den Bogen von den Verheerungen des Klimawandels über die Erbarmungslosigkeit neoliberaler Arbeitsmarktpolitik bis zu den massenmedialen Apokalypsen, die wir, die scheinbaren Gewinner, mit Begeisterung verfolgen. Doch wir täuschen uns: Es geht auch um uns. Es geht um alles.

<sup>342</sup> “Warren Buffet on Derivatives,” www.fintools.com/docs/Warren%20Buffet%20on%20Derivatives.pdf, edited excerpts from the Berkshire Hathaway annual report for 2002.

<sup>343</sup> Neues aus der Anstalt, with Urban Priol, Erwin Pelzig, Georg Schramm, Jochen Malmsheimer, Volker Pispers, and Max Uthoff, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, October 1, 2013, www.zdf.de/ZDFmediathek/#/beitrag/video/1997428/Neues-aus-der-Anstalt-vom-1-Oktober. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. Summary in German by Lindner:

Georg Schramm beschreibt die Situation der Wirtschaft indem er Warren Buffet zitiert und dessen Analyse vom Krieg der Reichen gegen die Armen mit Derivativen als Massenvernichtungswaffen. Es beginnt seine Satire damit, Länder mit Drogenabhängigen zu vergleichen, die mit billigem Geld angefixt wurden. Bald erhöhen jedoch die Dealer die Preise, und dann kommt das Inkassounternehmen, raubt alles, von Wasser, Gas, und Strom bis zu den Renten, und das globale Inkassounternehmen ist der IWF. Der "Drogendealer" selbst ist auch süchtig, und der Junkie macht eine Riesenparty, wenn der Stoff für zwei Tage gesichert ist. Milliarden Dollar billiges Geld wurden an die Dealer geliefert, und während viele Amerikaner von Lebensmittelkarten leben, besitzen 700 der Reichsten zwei Drittel von allem. Wie gewinnt man einen Drogenkrieg? Normalerweise, indem man Syndicate und Drogenkartelle zerschlägt. Das geschieht aber nicht. Die Regierungen sind untätig, denn auch sie sind Grosskunden der Dealer. Stattdessen werden die Endverbraucher auf kalten Entzug gesetzt wenn sie randalieren und aufeinander losgehen.

<sup>344</sup> Rich, 1994, 2013, Brown, 2012b. Even if only ten percent of what John Perkins, 2004, has to say is true, it is profoundly worrying. See also an interview by Mike McCormick of Talking Stick TV in Seattle, at <https://youtu.be/yTbdnNgqfs8>.

<sup>345</sup> Oxley, 2012.

<sup>346</sup> Akte D, part 1: Das Versagen der Nachkriegsjustiz, part 2: Das Kriegserbe der Bahn, part 3: Die Macht der Stromkonzerne, Das Erste, 2014, www1.wdr.de/fernsehen/dokumentation\_reportage/wdr-dok/sendungen/das-versagen-der-nachkriegsjustiz-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>347</sup> A recent book by Eric Schlosser, 2013, is based on previously classified material that the author discovered through the Freedom of Information Act in the U.S.A. There are many other examples of "glitches," among others, the 1979 NORAD Computer Glitch. Read on www.history.com/news/history-lists/5-cold-war-close-calls. See more in note 2 to the Introduction to Section Three.

<sup>348</sup> R. Buckminster Fuller said in "The New York Magazine Environmental Teach-In" by Elizabeth Barlow, New York Magazine, March 30, 1970, see books.google.de/books?id=cccDAAAAMBAJ&printsec=frontcover&redir\_esc=y#v=onepage&q&f=false, p. 30:

We should do away with the absolutely specious notion that everybody has to earn a living. It is a fact today that one in ten thousand of us can make a technological breakthrough capable of supporting all the rest. The youth of today are absolutely right in recognizing this nonsense of earning a living. We keep inventing jobs because of this false idea that everybody has to be employed at some kind of drudgery because, according to Malthusian Darwinian theory he must justify his right to exist. So we have inspectors of inspectors and people making instruments for inspectors to inspect inspectors. The true business of people should be to go back to school and think about whatever it was they were thinking about before somebody came along and told them they had to earn a living.

<sup>349</sup> Tom Bowerman, Director of PolicyInteractive Research, policyinteractive.org, February 1, 2017:

The top five ordering of priorities for workplace choice from highest to lowest are: 1) doing a job I can be proud of; 2) enjoying work, having fun; 3) being with people I respect; 4) earning a good salary; and 5) learning new things, having new experiences.

<sup>350</sup> Since I wrote the book A Dignity Economy, the topic of inequality has become ever more prominent. See Lindner, 2012d. Already when I wrote my book, everybody told me about Richard Wilkinson's and Kate Pickett's work. See, among others, Wilkinson, 2005, and Wilkinson and Pickett, 2009. See also <https://youtu.be/zYDzA9hKCNQ>. See, furthermore, the Equality Trust at www.equalitytrust.org.uk. Since then, more authors have become household names, such as Stiglitz, 2012, Thomas Piketty, 2013/2014, Atkinson, 2015, or Frank, 2016. See also a publication by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), 2015, for why all benefit from more equality.

<sup>351</sup> Journalist Janne Teller made a good case for macro-economic pressures leading people to look for scapegoats, in Culture Magazine Aspekte, in Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, May 9, 2014, www.zdf.de/aspekte/kultur-im-zdf-aspekte-themen-am-9.-mai-2014-mit-mando-diao-janne-teller-katty-salie-bibiana-beglau-rechtsruck-in-ungarn-33026630.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

See also "Partners in Crime? The EU, Its Strategic Partners and International Organised Crime," Fride: A European Think Tank for Global Action (FRIDE ceased its think tank activities on December 31, 2015, for economic reasons), www.fride.org/descarga/WP5\_EU\_Strategic\_partners\_and\_international\_organised\_crime.pdf, page 7:

Increasingly, terrorist groups resort to criminal activities to fund their campaigns, when they have not traded political aims for economic gain.

In March 2016, the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism – better known as START – launched an online course on “The Terror-Crime Nexus and Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear (CBRN) Threats.” START is a university-based research and education center comprised of an international network of scholars committed to the scientific study of the causes and human consequences of terrorism in the United States and around the world, www.start.umd.edu/news/start-launches-online-course-terror-crime-nexus-and-cbrn.

<sup>352</sup> “De nye gigantene,” by Bent Sofus Tranøy, Klassekampen, July 5, 2014, www.klassekampen.no/article/20140705/PLUSS/140709933, p. 3.

<sup>353</sup> Piketty, 2013/2014.

<sup>354</sup> Haldane, 2004. Another author is Adair Turner, 2012, working with Institute of New Economic Thinking (INET), a think tank financed by the hedge fund billionaire George Soros.

<sup>355</sup> “Inequality and Democracy,” by Roberto Savio, Other News, May 17, 2014, www.other-news.info/2014/05/inequality-and-democracy/:

Is economic growth “a rising tide lifting all boats,” and is “capital trickling down to everybody”?

The United Nations claims that extreme poverty worldwide has been halved. The number of people living on less than 1.25 dollars a day fell from 47 percent in 1990 to 22 percent in 2010. There are still 1.2 billion people living in extreme poverty, but a new middle-class is emerging worldwide, even if the success in the numbers is due basically to Brazil, China and India. So, the argument from the defenders of the present economic model is “if there are a few super rich, why do we ignore the enormous progress that has created 1 billion new middle-class citizens?”

The neoliberal period unleashed by the Washington Consensus made financial capitalism doing better than productive capitalism.

Problems:

- Inequality, with extreme wealth for a few, the middle class shrinking in rich countries, and permanent unemployment for ever more,
- the rich are not paying taxes as before, because of a large number of fiscal benefits and fiscal paradises,
- politics has become subservient to economic interests,
- social and ecological resources are hollowed out and plundered. Current consumption patterns rapidly deplete the world’s non-renewable resources, according to a new UNEP report released on 7 June 2014 (“176 percent Rise in Metal Prices, 260 percent Rise in Energy Prices Marks Era of Soaring Costs as Resources Decline,” by United Nations Environment Programme-hosted International Resource Panel (IRP), June 6, 2014, www.unep.org/newscentre/Default.aspx?DocumentID=2791&ArticleID=10885&l=en).

See also note 177 in Chapter 11.

<sup>356</sup> Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001.

<sup>357</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014, who does not see capitalism as a mere mode of production, with state and nation as mere epiphenomena of capital, but as a triarchy combining Capital-State-Nation. Bauwens also reminds us of The Great Transformation by Karl Polanyi and Joseph E. Stiglitz (Foreword), 1944/2001, a history of the emergence and perpetuation of capitalism from the late eighteenth century to the 1940s, in which Polanyi sees a double movement at play, namely, between the market forces or the “Smithian” capitalism of the nineteenth century on one side, and society on the other side, or the nation, to speak with Karatani, who forces the market back into a more “social” order. For example, the Fordist period inspired a labor movement to force a re-alignment of society around the welfare state, with the backlash starting in the eighties, when these social protections were “deregulated” again in favor of the 1 percent, with the result that workers are impoverished again in favor of the oligarchic elites. In other words, the nation, or what remains of community and reciprocity dynamics, revolts and mobilizes, and, if successful, it forces the state to discipline capital. Bauwens observes what also I observe all around the world, namely, that after the systemic crisis of 2008 this uprising fails, even though a Polanyian backlash can be found nearly everywhere on the globe: Both Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders in the 2016 U.S. electoral cycle “represent the Polanyian double movement, and are reacting against the effects of neoliberalism and its destruction of the U.S. middle class,” writes Bauwens. Trump speaks for the white middle class and workers and wishes to bring the back a better past, while Sanders represents those who suffer from precarity and envision a different future. The problem, however, is that this time the Polanyian double movement is hindered by capital having developed a transnational logic and capacity. Financial neoliberalism has globalized and fundamentally weakened the capacity of the nation-state to discipline its activities:

Faced with an all-powerful transnational capitalism, the various nation-state systems have proven pretty powerless to effect any change. Dare to challenge the status quo and paralyzing capital flight is going to destroy your country!

This is one of the explanations of the deep distrust that people are feeling towards the current political system, which simply fails to deliver towards any majoritarian social demand.

Look at how the moderately radical Syriza movement in Greece was put under a European protectorate and had to abandon Greek sovereignty; or look at how the more antagonistically-oriented Venezuelan government is crumbling, along with other progressive governments in Latin America. So, while the electorate may vote for parties that promise to change the status quo and eventually bring to power movements like Podemos, a Labour Party under the leadership of Corbyn, or a Democratic Party strongly influenced by the Sanders movement, their capacities for change will be severely restricted.

The solution that Bauwens sees, resonates with my global observations, namely, that there is no alternative to creating transnational and translocal capacities, which means globally interlinking the efforts of all the local “civic and ethical entrepreneurial networks that are currently in development.” This is why I invest my life time into creating a dignity movement not just locally, but globally.

<sup>358</sup> “My Uncle sold Me for 170 Dollars to Be a Suicide Bomber,” by Subel Bhandari and Hares Kakar, Deutsche Presse-Agentur, November 30, 2011, found on www.rawa.org/temp/runews/2011/11/30/my-uncle-sold-me-for-170-dollars-to-be-a-suicide-bomber.html. News from the Revolutionary Association of the Women of Afghanistan (RAWA).

<sup>359</sup> Koenigs, 2007. For those who wish to acquire a feel for the pathways of radicalization, Koenigs recommends Updike, 2006.

<sup>360</sup> Koenigs, 2007, p. 3–4.

<sup>361</sup> “The Next Great American Consumer: Infants to 3-Year-Olds: They’re a New Demographic Marketers are Hell-Bent on Reaching,” by Brian Braiker, Adweek, September 26, 2011, www.adweek.com/news/advertising-branding/next-great-american-consumer-135207. According to Victor C. Strasburger, professor of pediatrics at the University of New Mexico School of Medicine, children under the age of seven are “psychologically defenseless” against advertising. “We’ve created a perfect storm for childhood obesity – media, advertising, and inactivity,” said Strasburger as lead author of a policy statement published June 27, 2011, by the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) Council on Communications and Media. “American society couldn’t do a worse job at the moment of keeping children fit and healthy – too much TV, too many food ads, not enough exercise, and not enough sleep,” he said, quoted from aap.org/advocacy/releases/june2711studies.htm, referring to the Council on Communications and Media, 2011. See also Strasburger, et al., 2013.

In Sweden, all advertisements aimed at children under the age of twelve have been banned. In the U.S., business is trying to prevent regulation on advertising to children, see “Will Food Industry’s New Marketing Guidelines Satisfy the Feds?,” by Katy Bachman, Adweek, July 15, 2011, www.adweek.com/news/advertising-branding/will-food-industrys-new-marketing-guidelines-satisfy-feds-133437.

It seems that the language of “values” and “ecology” has been applied to the market in particularly blunt ways in the U.S., see the self-representation of the Right Media Exchange, the Platform for Premium Digital Advertising, www.rightmediablog.com (discontinued by Yahoo in 2015, italics added by Lindner):

Right Media launched digital advertising’s first exchange platform in the spring of 2005 and is currently the largest exchange in the industry. Our success stems from the principles we started with: transparent, fair, open and efficient. We’ve stayed true to these values throughout a variety of market cycles. Since Yahoo! acquired the company in 2007, we have been working to build a premium exchange with more than 300,000 active global buyers and sellers and more than 11 billion daily transactions. Today, the Right Media platform supports an ecosystem of leading digital advertising companies, including differentiated ad networks, direct advertisers in our non-guaranteed marketplace, data providers, technology innovators, and global agencies. Our strategy includes focusing on: premium buying and selling, data-driven valuation, audience sourcing, interoperability. As the industry changes, Right Media is evolving to change with it. The Right Media platform is designed to help all participants in the digital advertising ecosystem conduct business with one another in a seamless fashion, and deliver marketers the greatest number of options in how they define and reach their relevant audiences.

<sup>362</sup> Lebow, 1955.

<sup>363</sup> Ibid.

<sup>364</sup> 6th Julius Nyerere Annual Lecture on Lifelong Learning “Engaging Critically with Tradition, Culture, and Patriarchy through Lifelong Learning: What would Julius Nyerere say?” By Catherine A. Odora Hoppers, University of the Western Cape, September 3, 2009.

<sup>365</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>366</sup> In Richards, 2013. See also Richards, 1995, and Richards, 1995, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, b.

<sup>367</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda.

<sup>368</sup> “The Future of the United States of America,” by Howard Richards, TRANSCEND Media Service, January 2, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/01/the-future-of-the-united-states-of-america/:

Already in the second century after Christ the Romans needed a Great Simplification. Like the British in the nineteenth century, the Romans in the second century found that they could not trade or govern in a vast diverse empire without imposing some simplicity on it. Roman law, and especially the jus gentium that applied alike to Roman citizens and to non-citizens, was a Great Simplification, and by the same token it was an eclipse of community. The empire was an overwhelming military force interested in collecting tribute and in protecting merchants, but not interested in how its component ethnic groups gave meaning to their lives and exchanged matter and energy with the physical environment. The law abstracted from the empire’s multicultural diversity with its wealth of languages, spiritual and material practices, moral codes, kinship and marriage obligations, patterns of mutual obligations, ceremonies, rituals, and stories. Simplifying for the sake of commerce and for the sake of public administration, it classified certain rules as “natural.” The word “natural” meant “the same everywhere.” In practice, “everywhere” meant “wherever Rome rules.”

Fast forwarding past the Middle Ages, a millennium and a half later, in the sixteenth to eighteenth centuries, the successor states of the Roman Empire were constructing the cultural and social structures of modernity. For their Great Simplification, they “received” the ideal of rule of law that antiquity had bequeathed them, but only to encounter another obstacle to modernization. Living in a Europe (formerly known as “Christendom”) dotted with great cathedrals, the modernizers had to achieve a certain distance from God. God had then and still has today the inconvenient trait of telling people what to do. (“Islam” means “submission” or “submission of desires to the will of God.”) It was impossible to build a social and cultural structure around market exchange while God was constantly butting in commanding people to feed the hungry, give drink to the thirsty, clothe the naked, bury the dead, shelter the traveler, comfort the sick, and ransom the captive (the traditional Seven Works of Mercy, roughly following Matthew 25: 31-46). Enlightenment minds like Jean-Jacques Rousseau rose to the occasion by substituting “Nature” for “God” (comparing the Spiritual Exercises of Saint Ignatius and Emile by Rousseau will show that wherever Ignatius wrote “God” Rousseau wrote “Nature”). What Nature commanded was first and foremost what Roman law said was natural, which was in turn first and foremost the constitutive rules of markets. Although the idea that Nature had decreed laissez faire economics framed by a social contract guaranteeing pre-existing natural rights, encountered much opposition in France and in England with their long and complex intellectual traditions, it encountered little opposition in the new United States of America. As has been outlined above, once such ideas and their corresponding institutions are in place it becomes inevitable, or nearly so, that the physical welfare of the people will come to depend on an always precarious confidence of investors. It was not the 1% who created the double whammy to serve their own interests, and it was not created during Ronald Reagan’s presidency in the 1980s. The double whammy was created by history; its roots go back at least to an eclipse of community in the second century; and it does not serve anybody’s interests.

<sup>369</sup> McCauley, et al., 2013.

<sup>370</sup> Richards, 2013.

<sup>371</sup> See Richards, 2013, as well as Iglesias, 2010, Richards, 1995, 2010, Richards and Swanger, 2006a, and Chapter 4 in Odora Hoppers and Richards, 2012. I thank Howard Richards for making me aware of the analysis of the sociological background of Roman law by Ferdinand Tönnies, 1887/1955. See also Jolowicz, 1932, and Merryman, 1969. See, furthermore, the work of Norbert Elias, 1939/1994, 1969. Howard Richards in a personal communication on October 15, 2016:

My point about Roman law is that it deliberately abstracted from primary groups and local culture in order to create a Law of Nations suitable for organizing their vast empire and commerce within it on the basis of a few simple rules applicable to everybody. Now their civil law has become the frame for the global economy.

See for a recent overview over Roman law and society, Ando, et al., 2016. Roman law (Latin: ius romanum) has its origins in ancient Rome, including the Roman military jurisdiction and the legal developments spanning a thousand years of jurisprudence, from the Twelve Tables or lex duodecim tabularum (circa 449 BCE) to the Corpus Juris Civilis (529 CE) by the Byzantine Emperor Justinian I. It got renewed attention in the early Middle Ages. English and North American common law, among others, is strongly influenced by Roman law, actively using a Latin legal glossary, for example stare decisis, culpa in contrahendo, pacta sunt servanda. See more in note 368 in Chapter 15.

<sup>372</sup> See, among others, Dewey, 1905.

<sup>373</sup> Critical realism is being associated with names such as Roy Bhaskar, Rom Harré, Margaret Archer, Heikki Patomäki, and others. See for an overview over critical realism, Archer, et al., 1998. See also the book description of Porpora, 2015:

Critical realism is a philosophy of science that positions itself against the major alternative philosophies underlying contemporary sociology... Douglas V. Porpora argues that sociology currently operates with deficient accounts of truth, culture, structure, agency, and causality that are all better served by a critical realist perspective. This approach argues against the alternative sociological perspectives, in particular the dominant positivism which privileges statistical techniques and experimental design over ethnographic and historical approaches. However, the book also compares critical realism favorably with a range of other approaches, including poststructuralism, pragmatism, interpretivism, practice theory, and relational sociology.

<sup>374</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>375</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>376</sup> Giddens, 1990. I was very impressed when listening to Giddens talking at the 1984 World Congress of the International Sociological Organization that took place in Bielefeld, Germany, and attracted 3,678 participants. I am still thankful to Inge Wonneberger-Reichert for sending me to this congress. Radicalized modernity grew out of industrial modernity with its focus on order, calculability, science, and instrumental rationality, as well as social control by institutions. Radicalized modernity lays bare its negative after-effects: consumerism and individualism breaking down the family and other socializing institutions, time-space distancing leading to social contact becoming impersonal, and mutual trust diminishing. See also Zygmunt Bauman, 2000, and his notion of a liquid modern world.

<sup>377</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>378</sup> Richards, 2013.

<sup>379</sup> Wood, 2003.

<sup>380</sup> Mies, 1986.

<sup>381</sup> Howard Richards refers to Vivienne Jabri, 2007, director of the Centre for International Relations and Senior Lecturer in International Relations in the Department of War Studies, King’s College London.

<sup>382</sup> See, among others, Richards, 1995, Richards, 2004, Richards and Swanger, 2006b, and also Bhaskar, 1986. The phrase “social structure” is a contested concept, and in resonance with Douglas Porpora, 2015, Howard Richards defines social structure as “material relations among social positions and social constructs.” See “The Future of the United States of America,” by Howard Richards, TRANSCEND Media Service, January 2, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/01/the-future-of-the-united-states-of-america/, and Porpora, 1993:

Although the social relations (like the relation of buyer to seller, or the relation of employer to employee), the social positions (like the position of owner), and the social constructs (like contracts) are constituted by cultural rules, the social structure thus constituted is material.

<sup>383</sup> I thank Linda Hartling for emphasizing the centrality of human relationships.

<sup>384</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>385</sup> Jervis, 2006.

<sup>386</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>387</sup> Peace researcher Nils Petter Gleditsch, 2012, for instance, calls for more recognition for what the peace movement has achieved. He refers to pioneers of the peace movement such as Sonja Lid, co-founder of the first peace office (fredskontor) in Norway in 1962, when Cold War nuclear bomb testing endangered the health of people. He refers to Joshua Goldstein, 2011, to James Payne, 2004, or Steven Pinker, 2011, see also Lacina, et al., 2006. It is a great privilege for me to know both Sonja Lid and Nils Petter Gleditsch. I admire their work infinitely, see an overview over the work of the peace offices in Rød-Larsen and Hjort-Larsen, 2012.

<sup>388</sup> “Inequality and Democracy,” by Roberto Savio, Other News, May 17, 2014, www.other-news.info/2014/05/inequality-and-democracy/:

Is economic growth “a rising tide lifting all boats,” and is “capital trickling down to everybody”?

The United Nations claims that extreme poverty worldwide has been halved. The number of people living on less than 1.25 dollars a day fell from 47 percent in 1990 to 22 percent in 2010. There are still 1.2 billion people living in extreme poverty, but a new middle-class is emerging worldwide, even if the success in the numbers is due basically to Brazil, China and India. So, the argument from the defenders of the present economic model is “if there are a few super rich, why do we ignore the enormous progress that has created 1 billion new middle-class citizens?”

The neoliberal period unleashed by the Washington Consensus made financial capitalism doing better than productive capitalism.

Problems:

- Inequality, with extreme wealth for a few, the middle class shrinking in rich countries, and permanent unemployment for ever more
- the rich are not paying taxes as before, because of a large number of fiscal benefits and fiscal paradises
- politics has become subservient to economic interests
- social and ecological resources are hollowed out and plundered. Current consumption patterns rapidly deplete the world’s non-renewable resources, according to a new UNEP report released on 7 June 2014 (“176 percent Rise in Metal Prices, 260 percent Rise in Energy Prices Marks Era of Soaring Costs as Resources Decline,” by United Nations Environment Programme-hosted International Resource Panel (IRP), June 6, 2014, www.unep.org/newscentre/Default.aspx?DocumentID=2791&ArticleID=10885&l=en).

See also note 177 in Chapter 11.

<sup>389</sup> See www.oxfam.org/en/pressroom/pressrelease/2013-01-19/annual-income-richest-100-people-enough-end-global-poverty-four-times.

<sup>390</sup> World Commission on Environment and Development and Brundtland, 1987.

<sup>391</sup> Raskin, et al., 2002. See also Raskin, 2008, and Brangwyn and Hopkins, .

<sup>392</sup> Raskin, 2014, p. 4. Sustainability, unfortunately, is yet another term that has been hijacked by economism throughout the past years. Within the international legal system, “a resource economics definition of sustainability encourages development, while granting dispensation to public choice that sacrifices human and environmental integrity for instrumental economic objectives” writes philosopher John Martin Gillroy in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Sustainability and Well-Being: A Happy Synergy,” March 3, 2017, in response to Barrington-Leigh, 2017.

<sup>393</sup> Raskin, 2014, p. 4.

<sup>394</sup> Raskin, 2014, p. 7.

<sup>395</sup> Razeto-Barry and Canals, 2015.

<sup>396</sup> “10 Insights on the Ego-2-Eco Economy Revolution,” by Otto Scharmer, September 10, 2013, www.blog.ottoscharmer.com/?p=557. Otto Scharmer is a Senior Lecturer at MIT and founding chair of the Presencing Institute. See also Scharmer and Kaufer, 2013. I thank Lynn King, Chinese American global leadership coach, trainer, and consultant, for talking to me about Otto Scharmer’s work. It is a privilege to have Lynn King as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>397</sup> Depression is the second most common cause of disability worldwide after back pain, according to a review of research, see Ferrari, et al., 2013. See also Lane, 2001. See, furthermore, “What if Sociologists Had as Much Influence as Economists?” by Neil Irwin, New York Times, March 17, 2017, www.nytimes.com/2017/03/17/upshot/what-if-sociologists-had-as-much-influence-as-economists.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article. According to the World Health Organisation (WHO, www.who.int/), major depression (i.e. severe depressed mood that is episodic in nature and recurs in 75–80 percent of cases) is now the leading cause of disability worldwide with a lifetime prevalence of 17 percent in the Western world, thus ranking fourth among the ten leading causes of global disease burden. In addition, the WHO states that depression is the most common mental disorder leading to suicide and they project that, at its present rate of growth, depression will be the second leading contributor to global disease burden by 2020. See also notes 90, 91, and 92 in the Introduction.

<sup>398</sup> “The Mythology of Freedom and Democracy,” by Dhananjayan Sriskandarajah, Inter Press Service (IPS),

November 7, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/11/the-mythology-of-freedom-and-democracy/. Women who step up to defend human rights are facing worsening obstacles amid a global trend of fundamentalism and populism, a group of United Nations experts has warned, see “Fundamentalism and Populism Pose Deepening Threat to Women Human Rights Defenders, UN Experts Warn,” United Nations News Centre, November 25, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=55645#.WDniRH2OWgx:

“The statistics almost defy belief. What is even harder to understand is why: why men prey on women and girls; why societies shame the victims, why governments fail to punish deadly crimes, why the world denies itself the fruits of women’s full participation,” Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon told a UN Women-hosted Orange the World event at UN Headquarters in New York to raise money to end violence against women and girls, and kick off 16 Days of Activism against gender-based violence.

<sup>399</sup> Maria Dahle, at the occasion of the United Nations’ 60-years Jubilee in 2008 in Oslo, and the OSCE conference in 2011 in Warsaw. Maria Dahle shared her insights with me in person in Oslo on February 13, 2013. The Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR) is the principal institution of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). ODIHR organizes an annual meeting in Warsaw to review the implementation of a broad range of OSCE human dimension commitments, including in the areas of human rights and fundamental freedoms, elections, the promotion of tolerance, use of the death penalty, and the rights of national minorities. The Human Dimension Implementation Meeting (HDIM) lasts 10 working days and is attended by representatives of OSCE participating States, NGOs, and international organizations and institutions. See Dahle, 2011. See also Dahle, 2008.

<sup>400</sup> “World Report 2017: Demagogues Threaten Human Rights: Trump, European Populists Foster Bigotry, Discrimination,” Human Rights Watch, January 12, 2017, www.hrw.org/news/2017/01/12/world-report-2017-demagogues-threaten-human-rights.

<sup>401</sup> “The New Brexit and Trumpian World Order: Will They Engulf Europe and the Rest of the World?” by Kamran Mofid, Globalization for the Common Good Initiative (GCGI), November 12, 2016, www.gcgi.info/index.php/blog/830-will-brexit-trump-style-revolt-engulf-europe-and-the-rest-of-the-world#.WCeGvatiQKc.gmail.

<sup>402</sup> Jones, 2011. See also Jones, 2008.

<sup>403</sup> “Why Gender Equality Stalled,” by Stephanie Coontz, New York Times, February 16, 2013, www.nytimes.com/2013/02/17/opinion/sunday/why-gender-equality-stalled.html?pagewanted=all&\_r=0. See real median household income in the United States, according to the Census Bureau’s annual figures, <https://fred.stlouisfed.org/series/MEHOINUSA672N>.

<sup>404</sup> “Individual and Human Rights,” by Howard Richards, by Chileufú, October 20, 2016, <http://chileufu.cl/individual-and-human-rights/>.

<sup>405</sup> “Turning the United States Around,” by Howard Richards, Chileufú, <http://chileufu.cl/turning-the-united-states-around/>.

<sup>406</sup> Bastiat, 1848, French original:

Lorsque la Spoliation est devenue le moyen d’existence d’une agglomération d’hommes unis entre eux par le lien social, ils se font bientôt une loi qui la sanctionne, une morale qui la glorifie.

<sup>407</sup> Bastiat, 1848, French original:

Je parle à quiconque tient la Richesse pour quelque chose. – Entendons par ce mot, non l’opulence de quelques-uns, mais l’aisance, le bien-être, la sécurité, l’indépendance, l’instruction, la dignité de tous.

<sup>408</sup> Bastiat, 1850.

<sup>409</sup> Bastiat’s reflections remind of the thinking that Ayn Rand later brought to the United States later; see my analysis in Chapter 4 of Lindner, 2012d. See also note 32 in Chapter 4.

<sup>410</sup> “Against Foucault: Middle Foucault, Part Twelve,” video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 26, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, youtu.be/voUdwSZPAR0. See also the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues, Richards, et al., 2015a. In this lecture, Richards analyzed the middle period of Foucault’s thinking (1970 – 1976):

Even before Foucault cast power in the role of general enemy, power had been groomed for the role because it had played a somewhat similar role in the past. Whatever else “power” (“le pouvoir”) denoted, power was the entity that had re-established itself by putting down the revolts in France in 1848, in 1870, and in 1940. (Foucault and Deleuze, 1972, p. 308) It tended to be the word that named whatever put down popular revolts anywhere; so that if the revolt was successful one said the people won; if the revolt failed one said power won.

<sup>411</sup> Richards, 2014:

So we have a problem: Nothing authorizes us to believe that humanity today is so different from humanity in the past that today we can get our act together and work in concert to solve our problems without sharing a metanarrative that tells us who we are and what our role is in the great scheme of things. But liberal economics is a toxic brew. It shreds community more than it builds it. It smothers diversity and imposes the crudest and most violent forms of cognitive injustice. Its growth imperative and its systematic demand to create conditions for capital accumulation and ever more capital accumulation are killing the biosphere very rapidly, so rapidly that if we think in a perspective of geological time the end of life on this planet is the equivalent of only a few seconds away.

Sometimes we seem to face a cruel choice: either no metanarrative or a toxic metanarrative. Either civil wars between mutually incompatible ethnic fundamentalisms which in principle can share no common ground, or else a secular state imposing certain death by liberal economics on one and all.

...

My second simple question is: "Where are we going?" The beginning of a simple answer is: "We are going to a green future." The simple reason why we are going to a green future is that we cannot possibly go to any other future. Failing to maintain the delicate equilibriums of the biosphere is not an option. Human cultures whose constitutive rules and basic norms are incompatible with the laws of physics, the laws of chemistry, and the facts of biology are not sustainable.

<sup>412</sup> "Against Foucault: Middle Foucault, Part Twelve," video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 26, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, youtu.be/voUdwSZPAR0. See also the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues, Richards, et al., 2015a. In this lecture, Richards analyzed the middle period of Foucault's thinking (1970 – 1976).

<sup>413</sup> "Ein katastrophaler Fehler": SPIEGEL-Gespräch Der amerikanische Historiker Timothy Snyder über die Vorbedingungen des Holocaust – und die gefährlichen Folgen unbedachter Nahostpolitik, Der Spiegel 44/2015, November 24, 2015, pp. 140–143. See the original German text, pp. 140–141:

Snyder: Etwas verkürzt könnte man sagen: Es gibt vor allem zwei falsche Lehren aus dem Holocaust. Eine linke und eine rechte. Letztere besagt: Autoritäre Regime mit totalitären Zügen müssen gestürzt werden. Die US-Regierung der Bush-Jahre glaubte das. Auch deshalb begann sie den Irakkrieg, mit den bekannten Folgen. Die Neokonservativen misstrauen dem Staat. Aber wer glaubt, man könne ein Land befreien, indem man einen Staat zerstört, macht einen katastrophalen Fehler.

SPIEGEL: Und die falsche linke Lehre?

Snyder: Die Überzeugung, dass Auschwitz die Kehrseite der Moderne sei, eine unterschwellige Folge des Fortschritts und des wissenschaftlichen Denkens. Das Gegenteil ist der Fall. Die Nazis misstrauten der Wissenschaft und ihrer Universalität zutiefst und hielten sie für eine jüdische Erfindung. Deshalb entwickelten sie eine ökologisch begründete Panik – das ist der Kern der Lebensraum-Idee.

SPIEGEL: Aber die Nazis liebten die moderne Technik, bauten Autobahnen, nutzten neue Medien wie Radio und Kino, entwickelten die Raketentechnik. Auch Menschen, die nicht mit dem "Dritten Reich" sympathisierten, waren von seinem eigentümlichen Modernismus fasziniert.

Snyder: Das stimmt. Aber Hitler meinte, dass jede wirklich wichtige Technologie aus der Kreativität der Rasse entstehe – wie jede wahre Kunst. Das Konzept einer universalistischen Wissenschaft empfand er als jüdisches Täuschungsmanöver.

See also Snyder, 2010, 2015, 2017.

<sup>414</sup> "Carly Fiorina: 'This Is How Socialism Starts,'" by Greg Richter, NewsMax, November 10, 2015, www.newsmax.com/Headline/carly-fiorina-dodd-frank-how-socialism/2015/11/10/id/701604/.

<sup>415</sup> Dignity-ism or dignism, see, among others, Lindner, 2012d: A world where every newborn finds space and is nurtured to unfold their highest and best, embedded in a social context of loving appreciation and connection. A world, where the carrying capacity of the planet guides the ways in which everybody's basic needs are met, a world, where we are united in respecting human dignity and celebrating diversity, where we prevent unity from being perverted into oppressive uniformity, and keep diversity from sliding into hostile division.

<sup>416</sup> Critical realism is being associated with names such as Roy Bhaskar, Rom Harré, Margaret Archer, Heikki Patomäki, and others. See for an overview over critical realism, Archer, et al., 1998. See also note 98 in Chapter 9.

<sup>417</sup> "Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Three," video lecture by Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 6, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, <http://youtu.be/OD001HfydoY>. See also the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues, Richards, et al., 2015a.

<sup>418</sup> Inspired by Howard Richards' lecture "Against Foucault: Early Foucault, Part Ten," Catherine Odora Hoppers and

Evelin Lindner engaged in a dialogue with Howard Richards, Pretoria, South Africa, May 22, 2013, taped by Justine Richards, <https://youtu.be/wZoikaoun7E>. See also the book that resulted from these lectures and dialogues, Richards, et al., 2015a:

Howard Richards: My general perspective is that humans create cultures, which then can be more or less successful as adaptations to physical reality.

Evelin Lindner: I think Antonio Gramsci somewhere said something similar, that the role of the intellectual is to adjust culture to physical reality...

Howard Richards: ...which perhaps amounts to the same thing as John Dewey seeing the brain, the body, the mind, culture, and language, all as having evolved to solve the problems that life presents...

Catherine Hoppers: ...from which it would follow that the societies honored today as “developed” are not nearly as “evolved” as they think they are, because they cannot solve their problems...

Howard Richards: ...I would say first and foremost their “meta-problem.”

Evelin Lindner: Do you mean “metaphysical problem.”

Howard Richards: I think I do, but I would be afraid people will misunderstand me. Most people would say the meta-problem is an economic problem.

Evelin Lindner: You mean problems like debt, poverty, inequality, inflation, unemployment. But here “what most people would say” is itself a meta-problem. Most people think the problems of economics have solutions within economics...

Catherine Hoppers: ...you mean they think they pose questions economists can answer...

Evelin Lindner: ...so if we would be brave and say the meta-problem is metaphysical, or that solving it requires a paradigm shift, or a culture-shift, or re-inventing politics...

Catherine Hoppers: ...or second level indigenization...

Evelin Lindner: ... I am tempted to say revolution, but I refrain because I do not want to imply violence followed by central planning and repression. But we have to say something that pushes the envelope of conventional thought to wake people up.

Catherine Hoppers: We could say the meta-problem is not an economic one because it cannot be solved within the constitutive rules provided by the mainly Roman law legal framework of the global economy.

Howard Richards: Let me say what the problem is.

Evelin Lindner: You mean the meta-problem.

Howard Richards: The meta-problem, the one that raises the stakes to the level of categories of thought...

Catherine Hoppers: ... and practice. The metaphysics of a people is not just thought, it is lived. Foucault helped me to see this too.

Howard Richards: The meta-problem is not just that we cannot get our priorities straight. As I was saying if we had our priorities straight there would be more therapeutic communities...

Catherine Hoppers: ...or maybe we should just say more mutual support among human beings so as not to confine ourselves within the somewhat ethnocentric and pseudo-medical concept of “therapy”...

Howard Richards: And if we had our priorities straight there would be a massive shift to green technologies and sustainable lifestyles...

Evelin Lindner: And so on. We could make a list of what ought to be.

Catherine Hoppers: It could be almost a consensus list. Actually we already have what amounts to a consensus on what ought to be in the universal declarations of rights declared in international treaties and conventions.

Howard Richards: But when we try to move from what ought to be into practice we are paralyzed. We have to do what the economy requires.

Evelin Lindner: So we are saying...

Catherine Hoppers: ...with help from Michel Foucault...

Evelin Lindner: ...that economics as we know it works within the imperatives of a system rooted in basic categories of thought/practice most people take for granted. Maximizing profits trumps mental health, ecology, human rights and so on not because capitalists are greedy but because profit-maximizing is the mainspring that moves the system that generates everybody’s daily bread. If you break the mainspring you get unemployment, stock market crashes, capital flight, businesses closing, banks failing, prices rising, the value of money falling, savings wiped out, cutbacks in public services like health and education – and yet if you do not break the mainspring, if you do everything you can to create a business-friendly environment, sooner or later you get some of these same things anyway, along with rising inequality, falling real wages, and a dying biosphere. So until we convert to a “dignity economy” running on different categories of thought/practice, we are trapped.

Howard Richards: Karl Marx once wrote that we are still living in the pre-history of humanity. The history of humanity properly so-called will not begin until we are free to create institutions that solve our problems.

<sup>419</sup> Boyd and Richerson, 2009.

<sup>420</sup> Karlberg, 2004, p. 2.

<sup>421</sup> Galtung, 1977, pp. 59–65.

<sup>422</sup> Haavelsrud, 2015, pp. 54–55.

<sup>423</sup> Maalouf, 2009. I thank Mai-Bente Bonnevie for making me aware of this book. It is a privilege to have Mai-Bente Bonnevie as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See a summary of the book on CDurable.info, <http://cdurable.info/Amin-Maalouf-Le-dereglement-du-monde,1660.html>, translated from French by Lindner:

The central thesis of this long essay could be summarized as follows: the maladjustment of the world has less to do with a “clash of civilizations” and more with the simultaneous depletion of civilization. Humankind has reached its “moral threshold of incompetence.” The age of ideological divisions and its debates is now followed by divisions of identity, where there is no more debate.

Islam and the West: both discourses have their theoretical consistency, but each, in practice, betrays its own ideals. The West is unfaithful to its own values, which disqualifies it in the eyes of the people it claims to acculturate to democracy. The Arab-Muslim world no longer has neither the legitimacy of the family nor the patriotic legitimacy around which it was historically structured. Living in humiliation and regressive nostalgia for its “Golden Age,” the era of Islamism succeeding the era of nationalism, it is condemned to a headlong rush into radicalism. These “symmetrical maladjustments” are only one element of a broader global derangement that requires humanity to come together to deal with the emergencies, like climatic degradation which threatens all peoples. And if prehistory of humanity ended before our eyes, opening in the great convulsions, a new chapter of human history begins?

French original:

La thèse centrale de ce vaste essai pourrait être ainsi résumée: le dérèglement du monde tient moins à la ‘guerre des civilisations’ qu’à l’épuisement simultané des civilisations, l’humanité ayant atteint en quelque sorte son ‘seuil d’incompétence morale’. A l’âge des clivages idéologiques qui suscitaient le débat succède celui des clivages identitaires, où il n’y a plus de débat.

Islam et Occident : les deux discours ont leur cohérence théorique, mais chacun, dans la pratique, trahit ses propres idéaux. L’Occident est infidèle à ses propres valeurs, ce qui la disqualifie auprès des peuples qu’il prétend acculturer à la démocratie. Le monde arabo-musulman n’a plus ni la légitimité généalogique ni la légitimité patriotique autour desquelles il s’était historiquement structuré. Vivant dans l’humiliation et la nostalgie régressive de son ‘Age d’or’, l’ère des islamismes ayant succédé à l’ère des nationalismes, il se trouve condamné à une fuite en avant dans le radicalisme. Ces ‘dérèglements symétriques’ ne sont qu’un des éléments d’un dérèglement planétaire plus global qui exige que l’humanité se rassemble pour faire face à des urgences qui, à l’exemple des perturbations climatiques, menacent tous les peuples. Et si la Préhistoire de l’humanité prenait fin sous nos yeux, ouvrant dans les convulsions le grand chapitre d’une nouvelle Histoire de l’homme qui commence?

<sup>424</sup> Maalouf, 2009.

Chapter 16

<sup>1</sup> George Washington (1732 – 1799) was the first President of the United States, and he stepped down, even though he could have stayed on in power. In his Farewell Address of 1796, he warns future generations of the political dangers to avoid for the original values of the country to prevail. Among others, he warns against the “impostures of pretended patriotism” of people who thrive on division rather than unity. See the Address at http://avalon.law.yale.edu/18th\_century/washing.asp.

<sup>2</sup> The Bible, English Standard Version, Hosea 8:7: “For they sow the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind.” See also Lüders, 2015. See a book about Western interventions in Iran, Iraq, and Syria, by correspondent Michael Lüders, 2017, with the same title.

<sup>3</sup> “To sow dragon’s teeth,” is a metaphor that refers to actions that lead to conflict. In Greek mythology, it is part of the classical legends of Cadmus and Jason. According to legend, dragon’s teeth grow into fully armed warriors after being sown.

<sup>4</sup> Translated by Lindner from “Die ich rief, die Geister, werd’ ich nun nicht los,” in Der Zauberlehrling.

<sup>5</sup> This proverb was shared by Adil Abd al-Mahdi, a former Iraqi vice-president, see “Letter from Iraq: What We Left Behind: An Increasingly Authoritarian Leader, a Return of Sectarian Violence, and a Nation Worried for Its Future,” by Dexter Filkins, New Yorker, April 28, 2014, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2014/04/28/what-we-left-behind.

<sup>6</sup> Global wildlife populations have fallen by 58 percent since 1970, and if the trend continues the decline could reach two-thirds among vertebrates by 2020, according to World Wildlife Fund (WWF), et al., 2016. See also Ceballos, et al., 2015, Kolbert, 2006, Spufford and Kolbert, 2007, and Kolbert, 2014. See, furthermore, Davis, 2009, and The Wayfinders, the 2009 Massey Lecture by Wade Davis, Convocation Hall, Toronto, uploaded November 20, 2011, on

<https://youtu.be/KfbGdoTQKuM>. See also philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>7</sup> Harari, 2015/2016, and “Homo Sapiens 2.0? We Need a Species-Wide Conversation About the Future of Human Genetic Enhancement,” by Jamie Metzl, TechCrunch, May 1, 2016, <https://techcrunch.com/2016/05/01/homo-sapiens-2-0-we-need-a-species-wide-conversation-about-the-future-of-human-genetic-enhancement/>:

Whatever the intentions of diplomats and scientists, the fact remains that the science is surging exponentially, popular understanding of it is advancing linearly at best, and the regulatory framework surrounding it is only creeping forward glacially

...

Because a rational conversation about the need to build infrastructure in West Africa to stanch the disease was therefore not possible, the American conversation, when it finally showed up so late in the game, sowed fear and forestalled a more logical and helpful response.

A far more irrational and dangerous panic will likely emerge when genetically modified humans start appearing among us unless we can have an informed conversation today about the opportunities and challenges of human genetic enhancement.

A species-wide conversation on our future has never before been carried out. We didn't do it at the dawn of the industrial or nuclear ages for understandable reasons, even though we might have avoided some terrible outcomes if we had.

With a growing percentage of the world population connected to the information grid in one way or another, we now have a limited opportunity to avoid making the same mistake and begin laying a foundation for decisions we will need to collectively make in the future. Given the political divisiveness of this issue, the window will not stay open long.

Such a conversation would involve connecting individuals and communities around the world with different backgrounds and perspectives and varying degrees of education in an interconnected web of dialogue.

It would link people adamantly opposed to human genetic enhancement, those who may see it as a panacea, and the vast majority of everyone else who has no idea this transformation is already underway. It would highlight the almost unimaginable potential of these technologies but also raise the danger that opponents could mobilize their efforts and undermine the most promising work to cure cancers and eliminate disease.

But the alternative is far worse. If a relatively small number of even very well intentioned people unleash a human genetic revolution that will ultimately touch most everyone and alter our species' evolutionary trajectory without informed, meaningful, and early input from others, the backlash against the genetic revolution will overwhelm its monumental potential for good.

Homo Sapiens of the world, let us begin this conversation.

<sup>8</sup> “ISIS Atrocities and US Imperialism,” by Patrick Martin, World Socialist Web Site (WSWS), September 4, 2014, www.wsws.org/en/articles/2014/09/04/pers-s04.html.

<sup>9</sup> American Experience: Henry Ford, documentary film as part of the collection The Titans, WGBH Educational Foundation, 2012, www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/films/henryford/.

<sup>10</sup> “The Neurochemistry of Power: Implications for Political Change,” by Nayef Al-Rodhan, Politics in Spires, University of Cambridge, February 27, 2014, <http://politicsinspires.org/neurochemistry-power-implications-political-change/>. Nayef Al-Rodhan is a philosopher, neuroscientist, and geostrategist. He is a senior member of St. Antony's College at Oxford University, Oxford, United Kingdom, Senior Fellow and director of the Centre for the Geopolitics of Globalization and Transnational Security at the Geneva Centre for Security Policy, Geneva, Switzerland. See his work in Al-Rodhan, 2008, 2009.

<sup>11</sup> Eymericus, 1578. Latin original: “...quoniam punitio non refertur primo & per se in correctionem & bonum eius qui punitur, sed in bonum publicum ut alij terreantur, & a malis committendis avocentur.”

<sup>12</sup> Kirsch, 2008.

<sup>13</sup> “The Sheikh Who Lifted the Veil: Talking to Sheikh Mustapha Rashid,” by Myra Abdallah, Now, June 26, 2014, <https://now.mmedia.me/lb/en/interviews/553382-the-sheikh-who-lifted-the-veil>:

...the veil is not a Muslim obligation and nothing in the Quran makes the veil mandatory. Fatwas claiming the opposite are incorrect and are not based on textual evidence from the Quran. Therefore, they shouldn't be taken into consideration, especially since they are imposing mandatory behavior and this is the highest obligation in Islam. In the Arabic language, a “hijab” is a block, a wall. This definition was misunderstood, and women were forced to cover their heads. So far, none of the clerics could invalidate my fatwa. Besides, a woman's face is more attractive than her hair. Why should she hide her hair and leave her face uncovered?

I thank Vidal Ruse for making me aware of this article.

<sup>14</sup> “Telling the Truth About ISIS and Raqqa,” by David Remnick, New Yorker, November 22, 2016, www.newyorker.com/news/news-desk/telling-the-truth-about-isis-and-raqqa.

<sup>15</sup> “How to Win a War and Lose the Peace,” by Paddy Ashdown, The Telegraph, October 15, 2006, www.telegraph.co.uk/news/uknews/1531454/How-to-win-a-war-and-lose-the-peace.html.

<sup>16</sup> “The Problem with Iraq’s Offensive against the Islamic State,” IRIN – Humanitarian news and analysis (a service of the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs), March 2, 2015, www.irinnews.org/report/101183/the-problem-with-iraq-s-offensive-against-the-islamic-state.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid.

<sup>18</sup> “Iraq Crisis: How Saudi Arabia Helped Isis Take over the North of the Country,” by Patrick Cockburn, The Independent, July 13, 2014, www.independent.co.uk/voices/comment/iraq-crisis-how-saudi-arabia-helped-isis-take-over-the-north-of-the-country-9602312.html.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> “Iraq Crisis: How Saudi Arabia Helped Isis Take over the North of the Country,” by Patrick Cockburn, The Independent, July 13, 2014, www.independent.co.uk/voices/comment/iraq-crisis-how-saudi-arabia-helped-isis-take-over-the-north-of-the-country-9602312.html.

<sup>21</sup> “Syria Archbishop Calls on West to Back President Bashar al-Assad in War Against Islamist Rebels,” by Colin Freeman, The Telegraph, October 13, 2015, www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/middleeast/syria/11929694/Syria-archbishop-calls-on-West-to-back-President-Bashar-al-Assad-in-war-against-Islamist-rebels.html.

<sup>22</sup> “Die Türkei ist das Drehkreuz des globalen Dschihad,” by Banu Güven and Claus Christian Malzahn, Die Welt, September 9, 2014, www.welt.de/politik/ausland/article132246350/Die-Tuerkei-ist-das-Drehkreuz-des-globalen-Dschihad.html. See also Türkei – Drehkreuz des Terrors? documentary film by Halil Gülbeyaz, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, 2016, www.arte.tv/guide/de/065356-000-A/tuerkei-drehkreuz-des-terrors. Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg. During the 2010 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Peace at Home, Peace in the World,” in Istanbul, Turkey, April 28–30, 2010, we were able to gain deep insight into the psychological depth of this situation, see also www.humiliationstudies.org/whowere/annualmeeting/15.php.

<sup>23</sup> Les pharaons de l’Egypte moderne / Pharaon im heutigen Ägypten, documentary film by Jihan El Tahri, Arte France 2015, part 1: Gamal Abdel Nasser, <http://tinyurl.com/z5k5rrf>, part 2: Anwar el-Sadat, <http://tinyurl.com/gn58p53>, part 3: Husni Mubarak, <http://tinyurl.com/gndcoq3>. Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network.

<sup>24</sup> Al-Aswany, 2002/2004, Al-Aswany, 2015, column written for Al-Masry Al-Youm, January 20, 2014.

<sup>25</sup> See note 23 above.

<sup>26</sup> See, for instance, Delkatesh, 2011. There are voices, however, who suspect that more sinister intentions may have been behind the “Arab Spring” uprisings and the chaos in the Middle East in general, namely, that it rather was a chaos stoked from outside. See “Barack Obama’s Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?” by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016, www.thecodeforglobalethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY. See more by Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay, 2010. See also “The Redirection: Is the Administration’s New Policy Benefitting Our Enemies in the War on Terrorism?” by Seymour M. Hersh, New Yorker, Annals of National Security, March 5, 2007, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2007/03/05/the-redirection.

<sup>27</sup> Al-Aswany, 2015, column written for Al-Masry Al-Youm, January 20, 2014.

<sup>28</sup> Ennahdha – Une histoire tunisienne / Ennahdha – Tunesien im Wandel, by Christophe Cotteret, Arte France / Belgium, 2011, <http://tinyurl.com/hnuehnp>. Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network.

<sup>29</sup> On June 9, 2014, Tunisia launched a Truth and Dignity Commission (TDC) to establish the truth about human rights violations, thus joining more than forty other countries that have instituted truth commissions in the aftermath of massive human rights abuses, <https://youtu.be/rLGa3EuEZQo>.

<sup>30</sup> “Think Again: Failed States,” by James Traub, Foreign Policy, June 20, 2011, <http://foreignpolicy.com/2011/06/20/think-again-failed-states/>. See also Guns, Briefcases, and Inequality: The Neglected War in Kachin State + Prospects for Peace and National Reconciliation in Burma/Myanmar, presentation by Alex Moodie from the Burma Partnership, who spoke about the looting of Burma and how the new way of conquering is military-connected business “investment,” on March 9, 2014, at the 2014 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Returning Dignity,” in Chiang Mai, Thailand, March 8–12, 2014, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/23.php.

<sup>31</sup> Les pharaons de l’Egypte moderne / Pharaon im heutigen Ägypten, documentary film by Jihan El Tahri, Arte France 2015, part 3: Husni Mubarak, <http://tinyurl.com/gndcoq3>. Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network.

<sup>32</sup> “Pathway to Dictatorship: How Donald Trump Would Reshape America,” by Thomas Homer-Dixon, co-authored with Jack Goldstone, Toronto Globe and Mail, October 17, 2016, www.homerdixon.com/2016/10/18/how-donald-trump-would-reshape-america/. It is a privilege to have Jack Goldstone as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>33</sup> Paul Richards, in his September 2006 talks.

<sup>34</sup> For an English text, see, among many others, “Anders Behring Breivik Attacks Inspired by Serbian Nationalists, Court Hears,” The Guardian, April 18, 2012, www.theguardian.com/world/2012/apr/18/anders-behring-breivik-serb-nationalists. See, furthermore, among innumerable publications in Norway, Borchgrevink, 2012.

<sup>35</sup> See Anders Behring Breivik’s Complete Manifesto “2083 – A European Declaration of Independence: De Laude Novae Militiae, Pauperes commilitones Christi Templique Solomonici,” by Andrew Berwick (anglicized pseudonym of Anders Breivik), July 22, 2011, 1515 pages, as he posted it online at <https://publicintellgence.net/anders-behring-breiviks-complete-manifesto-2083-a-european-declaration-of-independence/>. See a complete list of comments Anders Behring Breivik has left at Document.no at www.document.no/anders-behring-breivik/, July 23, 2011. What is being called “right-wing” extremism expresses itself in two main branches in Norway, with a smaller branch focusing on race, which would include anti-Semitism, and a larger branch, to which also Breivik belonged, focusing on culture and nation. See an in-depth analysis of Breivik’s terrorist operation in Hemmingby and Bjørge, 2016, and an analysis of Breivik’s ideas in Kjos, 2013, and an account of how he grew up in Seierstad, 2013/2015. See more in note 22 in the Preface.

<sup>36</sup> See also Stadtwald, 1992.

<sup>37</sup> See also Grønnerød, et al., 2016.

<sup>38</sup> “Max Blumenthal: Anders Behring Breivik, a Perfect Product of the Axis of Islamophobia,” July 23, 2011, <http://maxblumenthal.com/2011/07/anders-behring-breivik-a-perfect-product-of-the-axis-of-islamophobia/>. See more in note 35 above.

<sup>39</sup> Max Blumenthal: Anders Behring Breivik, a Perfect Product of the Axis of Islamophobia,” July 23, 2011, <http://maxblumenthal.com/2011/07/anders-behring-breivik-a-perfect-product-of-the-axis-of-islamophobia/>. See more in note 35 above.

<sup>40</sup> “Oslo Suspect Wrote of Fear of Islam and Plan for War,” by Steven Erlanger, and Scott Shane, New York Times, July 23, 2011, www.nytimes.com/2011/07/24/world/europe/24oslo.html?\_r=1&nl=todaysheadlines&emc=tha2. See more work by Hegghammer, 2010/2011, and Hegghammer and Norwegian Defence Research Establishment (FFI), 2013.

<sup>41</sup> “The Rise of the Macro-Nationalists,” by Thomas Hegghammer, New York Times, July 30, 2011, www.nytimes.com/2011/07/31/opinion/sunday/the-rise-of-the-macro-nationalists.html?\_r=0.

<sup>42</sup> See a new sociopolitical documentary film, Mad Dog: Gaddafi’s Secret World, hosted by Christopher Olgiati, published by BBC, broadcasted as part of BBC Storyville series in 2014, www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b03tj0n0.

<sup>43</sup> “CIA Helped Gaddafi Torture Libyan Dissidents, Documents Show,” by Joseph Fitsanakis, Intelnews.org, September 5, 2011, <http://intelnews.org/2011/09/05/01-812/>.

<sup>44</sup> “Charles Taylor Conviction Upheld on Appeal: Judges Confirm 50-Year Prison Sentence for Liberian Ex-President,” by Matthew Rhodes, International Justice, ICC, Institute for War and Peace Reporting (IWPR), ACR Issue 363, September 27, 2013, <http://iwpr.net/report-news/charles-taylor-conviction-upheld-appeal>. See also Charles Taylor Sentence, by The Human Rights Channel on YouTube, https://youtu.be/1OBj\_Bx1njl?list=PL7826159DABA873FF.

<sup>45</sup> “The Long Shadows of History,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 15, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/09/the-long-shadows-of-history/.

<sup>46</sup> There is a recent trend in Melanesian religious and political movements to discard the term cargo cult as being analytically and ethically inadequate, see, among others, Kaplan, 1995, Lindstrom, 1993. Others argue that the term remains useful, not least to understand the central moral and existential crisis flowing from the pressure on the traditional exchange system and notions of personhood and fairness that underlies cargo cults, and as “a vantage point for a culture-critical approach to Western society, as it challenges the sharp distinction between religious and economic values that makes it difficult to understand contemporary moral paradoxes,” Otto, 2009, Abstract.

<sup>47</sup> See Bugliosi and Gentry, 1992. See also The Trial of Charles Manson, by Douglas O. Linder, University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law, 2008, <http://law2.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/manson/manson.html>. Read the testimony of prosecution witness Paul Watkins about the meaning of Helter Skelter at “Testimony of Paul Watkins in the Charles Manson Trial,” <http://law2.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/manson/mansontestimony-w.html>, and read about “The Influence of the Beatles on Charles Manson,” <http://law2.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/manson/mansonbeatles.html>.

<sup>48</sup> Researcher Lars Gule has personally discussed with Breivik on the Internet: “Forsker: – Breivik har 12–15.000 meningsfeller i Norge,” Tim Peters, Eva-Therese Grøttum, Dennis Ravndal, Jarle Grivi Brenna, VG, June 1, 2012, www.vg.no/nyheter/innenriks/terrorangrepet-22-juli-rettssaken/forsker-breivik-har-12-15-000-meningsfeller-i-norge/a/10054092/. VG, Verdens Gang (the course of the world), is a Norwegian tabloid newspaper. See also Breivik’s Ideas “Shared by Many,” BBC Radio, July 25, 2011, <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/10054092/10054092.stm>.

Mass killers often turn the gun on themselves, but Anders Behring Breivik, the gunman in Norway who killed 93 people on Friday, has said he wants to explain his motives in the courtroom. But should his motives be classified as the symptom of a deranged mind, or do they indicate something more widespread in the European psyche? Norwegian philosopher Lars Gule believes he argued with Anders Breivik on an online forum, and he “did not stand out with a particularly aggressive or violent rhetoric... he was quite mainstream.” “When it comes to opinions and statements, he was not alone... it shows some of the warped sense of reality that is operating” in certain Norwegian communities, he said. Matthew Goodwin, author of New British Fascism, said that he was “struck by the similarities” between Breivik’s manifesto and some far-right parties in Britain. “There are also large sections of the public... who are very concerned over some of the same issues – the role of Islam in European society, immigration, multiculturalism. “They might not endorse violence, but I think there is a pool of wider potential there.”

See more in note 35 above.

<sup>49</sup> Steve Kulich at the Second International Conference on Multicultural Discourses in Hangzhou, April 13–15, 2007. See also Lindner, 2007a.

<sup>50</sup> Wood, et al., 2009.

<sup>51</sup> Baumeister, et al., 1996, in Madsen, 2014b, p. 612.

<sup>52</sup> Madsen, 2014b, p. 621. See also “Botox-salget til himmels” (Sales of Botox rocketing), by Bodil Sundbye, VG, 2010, March 22, 2010, <http://minnote.no/index.php/2010/03/botox-salget-til-himmels/>. VG, Verdens Gang (the course of the world), is a Norwegian tabloid newspaper.

<sup>53</sup> Madsen, 2014a, Rosenberg, et al., 1995.

<sup>54</sup> Madsen, 2014b, pp. 621–622.

<sup>55</sup> “Trening vs kirurgi” (Working out Versus Surgery), by Silje K. Førsund, Kvinner og Klær, July 16, 2010, pp. 11–18, p. 18. See also “How ‘Empowerment’ Became Something for Women to Buy,” by Jia Tolentino, New York Times, April 12, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/04/17/magazine/how-empowerment-became-something-for-women-to-buy.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>56</sup> Parker, 2003.

<sup>57</sup> “South Korean Girls’ Obsession with Double Eyelid Surgery as They Strive to Look Like ‘Pretty Western Celebrities,’” by Daily Mail Reporter, Daily Mail, October 24, 2012, www.dailymail.co.uk/femail/article-2222481/South-Korean-girls-obsession-double-eyelid-surgery-strive-look-like-pretty-western-celebrities.html

<sup>58</sup> “Images of 20 Chinese Women Before and After Plastic Surgery Draw Eyes Online,” by Katie Nelson, Shanghaiist, November 10, 2014, <http://shanghaiist.com/2014/11/10/20-women-before-after-plastic-surgery.php>:

Most of the women sought out similar treatments that have become widely popular in Asia. This includes double eyelid surgery and rhinoplasty using a silicone implant to augment the bridge of the nose. Many of the women also underwent V-line surgery, a jawline contouring procedure popular in South Korea that gives the face a more narrow, heart-shaped appearance. Wide eyes, high nose bridges and a narrow faces with pointed chins are coveted features among many Asian women, and a number of Chinese women (and men) are flocking to South Korea in hopes to attain this look at the hands of skilled surgeons... Lin Wen is a 21-year-old senior student from Ningbo. She previously disliked her “snub” nose, small eyes and face shape. Lin had a nose job, Botox injections, double eyelid surgery and received eyelash extensions and colored contacts.

<sup>59</sup> Yang, 2013.

<sup>60</sup> The Space between Self-Esteem and Self Compassion, by Kristin Neff, TEDxCentennialParkWomen, February 6, 2013, <https://youtu.be/IvtZBUSpl4>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this talk. See also Neff, 2011. See, furthermore, among others, Lasch, 1991, Lasch, 1991, Putnam, 2000, Bushman and Baumeister, 1998, Baumeister, et al., 2003, Baumeister, 2005, Levine, 2007, Twenge and Campbell, 2009, Wood, et al., 2009, Ehrenreich, 2010, Twenge, et al., 2012, Twenge and Kasser, 2013, Twenge, 2014. See also how Howard Richards includes Foucault, 1961/2006, and Frank, 1961, in his chapter in Richards, 2013.

<sup>61</sup> The Space between Self-Esteem and Self Compassion, by Kristin Neff, TEDxCentennialParkWomen, February 6, 2013, <https://youtu.be/IvtZBUSpl4>.

<sup>62</sup> “On Shutdown, Waning US Influence, Syrian Showdown,” Noam Chomsky interviewed by Harrison Samphir, Truthout, October 9, 2013, <http://truth-out.org/news/item/19287-in-conversation-with-noam-chomsky-on-us-politics-global-affairs-and-capitalist-reform>. In this interview, Noam Chomsky offers his perspective on the U.S. government shutdown, the Syrian civil war, capitalist reform in South America and more in a Truthout interview.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> George Washington (1732 – 1799) was the first President of the United States, and he stepped down, even though he could have stayed on in power. In his Farewell Address of 1796, he warns future generations of the political dangers to be avoided for the original values of the country to prevail. See the Address at http://avalon.law.yale.edu/18th\_century/washing.asp.

<sup>65</sup> American president John F. Kennedy, in his inaugural address on January 20, 1961, www.jfklibrary.org/Asset-Viewer/BqXIEM9F4024ntF17SVAjA.aspx.

<sup>66</sup> “What Orwell Can Teach Us About the Language of Terror and War,” by Rowan Williams, The Guardian, December 12, 2015, www.theguardian.com/books/2015/dec/12/words-on-war-a-summons-to-writers-orwell-lecture. This is an edited extract of the 2015 Orwell lecture with the full version available at theorwellprize.co.uk/the-orwell-lecture-2015/. I thank Ken Pope and Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>67</sup> “The Orwellian Paradigm: Killing You, for Your Own Safety,” by Faisal Moghul, Anti War, April 13, 2013, <http://original.antiwar.com/faisal-moghul/2013/04/12/the-orwellian-paradigm/>:

“What could be more destructive to the cherished freedoms that make America a “shining city on a hill” than giving a “high level official” the power to kill Americans on US soil without any due process, accountability or transparency? What could be more Orwellian than asserting such dictatorial authority, which has always been the hallmark of totalitarian states, in the name of protecting the public’s safety? The cost of war is not measured solely in terms of blood and treasure. War also corrodes human morality to a point where even the most inhumane acts become perfectly acceptable. In fact, summary executions without due process and the right to a fair trial served as one of the justifications for removing Saddam Hussein’s regime.

...

More than half a century ago Orwell had warned us that the scourge of war eventually turns inward. “The war is waged by each ruling group against its own subjects, and the object of the war is not to make or prevent conquests of territory, but to keep the structure of society intact. The very word “war,” therefore, has become misleading” (emphasis added). Stated differently, war becomes a buzzword for concealing a rather insidious internal dynamic, one that treats those who oppose the status quo – the intrepid whistleblower, the outspoken journalist, the vocal activist – as a legitimate target for persecution.

...

Understanding how this process works is vital, for tyranny always treads a familiar path: first it clamors for unfettered authority to resolve some overriding problem; then it consolidates that power; next it gradually expands its vocabulary and application; finally, it turns around and uses that power to persecute everyone. Indeed, those who wield unrestrained power will inevitably abuse it.”

<sup>68</sup> Shigeo Abe in Samurai and Idiots: The Olympus Affair (BBC title 1.7 Billion Dollar Fraud: Full Exposure), documentary film by Hyoe Yamamoto, 2015, Vesuvius, Point du Jour, in cooperation with BBC, Arte, ZDF, SVT, DR, www.pointdujour-international.com/catalogueFiche.php?idFiche=38282&PHPSESSID=55a81bc6a21f799774889fcd7d4899c, or www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b054f7qp.

<sup>69</sup> See note 66 above.

<sup>70</sup> “The Reign of Absurdiocy,” by Uri Avnery, Human Wrongs Watch, November 30, 2015, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/11/30/the-reign-of-absurdiocy/>. Avnery explains how terrorism is a weapon, a method of operation, to frighten the victims into surrendering to the will of the terrorist, often used by oppressed peoples, for instance, the French Resistance to the Nazis in World War II.

<sup>71</sup> “The Redirection: Is the Administration’s New Policy Benefitting Our Enemies in the War on Terrorism?” by Seymour M. Hersh, New Yorker, Annals of National Security, March 5, 2007, www.newyorker.com/magazine/2007/03/05/the-redirection:

To undermine Iran, which is predominantly Shiite, the Bush Administration has decided, in effect, to reconfigure its priorities in the Middle East. In Lebanon, the Administration has cooperated with Saudi Arabia’s government, which is Sunni, in clandestine operations that are intended to weaken Hezbollah, the Shiite organization that is backed by Iran. The U.S. has also taken part in clandestine operations aimed at Iran and its ally Syria. A by-product of these activities has been the bolstering of Sunni extremist groups that espouse a militant vision of Islam and are hostile to America and sympathetic to Al-Qaeda.

See also “Barack Obama’s Meager Legacy of Incomplete Accomplishments and of Provoked Wars: What Happened?” by Rodrigue Tremblay, May 30, 2016, www.thecodeforglobalethics.com/pb/wp\_0b5e796a/wp\_0b5e796a.html#LEGACY:

As the de facto head of NATO, President Barack Obama and his neocon advisers, with the latter’s Manichean view of the world, must bear a large part of the responsibility for these disastrous results. The chaos in the Middle East is a huge failure for him, even though the neocons in his administration would deem such a manufactured chaos, a success!

Indeed, the countries of Iraq, Libya and Syria were considered, to different degrees, to be regional rivals of Israel, besides having large reserves of oil. Moreover, the latter countries have been on top of the list of seven countries discovered by General Wesley Clark, in late September 2001, as being the very countries the Pentagon planned to attack and destroy.

Indeed, the countries of Iraq, Libya and Syria were considered, to different degrees, to be regional rivals of Israel, besides having large reserves of oil. Moreover, the latter countries have been on top of the list of seven countries discovered by General Wesley Clark, in late September 2001, as being the very countries the Pentagon planned to attack and destroy.

See more by Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay, 2010.

<sup>72</sup> “America’s Imperial Delusion: The US Drive for World Domination Has No Historical Precedent,” by Eric Hobsbawm, The Guardian, June 14, 2003, www.theguardian.com/world/2003/jun/14/usa.comment.

<sup>73</sup> “On Shutdown, Waning US Influence, Syrian Showdown,” Noam Chomsky interviewed by Harrison Samphir, Truthout, October 9, 2013, <http://truth-out.org/news/item/19287-in-conversation-with-noam-chomsky-on-us-politics-global-affairs-and-capitalist-reform>:

What happened in Syria was, President Obama had made a statement announcing what he called his “red line”: You can’t use chemical weapons, you can do anything else but [use] chemical weapons. Credible reports came through that Syria had used chemical weapons. Whether it’s true actually is still open to question, but it’s very probably true. At that point, what was at stake was what is called credibility. So if you read the political actors, political leadership, foreign policy commentary, they constantly point out accurately that US credibility was at stake, and we have to maintain US credibility. So therefore something had to be done to show you can’t violate our orders. So a bombing was planned, which would probably make the situation worse, but would at least establish US credibility. And so what is “credibility”? It’s a very familiar notion. It’s basically the notion that is central to the Mafia. So suppose say the Godfather produces some kind of edict and says you’re going to have to pay protection money. Well, he has to back up that statement. It doesn’t matter whether he needs the money or not. If some small storekeeper somewhere decides he’s not going to pay the money, the Godfather doesn’t let him get away with it. The money doesn’t mean anything to him, but he sends in his goons to beat him to a pulp. You have to establish credibility, otherwise conformity to your orders will tend to erode. International affairs runs in much the same way. The United States is the Godfather when it establishes edicts. Others had better live up to them, or else. We have to demonstrate that. So that’s what the bombing of Syria was to have demonstrated.

<sup>74</sup> Beckwith, 2015. Kathy Beckwith summarized her research and her reasons for hopefulness in this way (personal message on April 21, 2016):

Once people learn why we’ve gone to war, and what alternatives we ignored, they’ll question claims made today. They’ll see the patterns of how war is sold. The truth is there are alternatives that offer more security and uphold justice far better, for a lot less cost and destruction, and there’s no reason in the world we can’t use them instead of war. I didn’t start out with that book title; it came from what I discovered.

It is a privilege to have Kathy Beckwith’s book A Mighty Case Against War in our Dignity Press, www.dignitypress.org.

<sup>75</sup> Johan Galtung in his endorsement of a book on NATO by sociologist and geopolitical analyst Mahdi Darius

Nazemroaya, 2012:

A very timely book. Yes, US-led NATO is globalizing, like the US-led finance economy. No doubt also for it to protect the latter, the “free market.” It is a classical case of overstretch to help save the crumbling US Empire and Western influence in general, by countries most of whom are bankrupt by their own economic mismanagement. All their interventions share two characteristics. The conflicts could have been solved with a little patience and creativity, but NATO does not want solutions. It uses conflicts as raw material it can process into interventions to tell the world that it is the strongest in military terms. And, with the help of the mainstream media, it sees Hitler everywhere, in a Milosevic, a bin Laden, a Hussein, a Qaddafi, in Assad, insensitive to the enormous differences between all these cases. I hope this book will be read by very, very many who can turn this morbid fascination with violence into constructive conflict resolution.

I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this book.

<sup>76</sup> “Interview with Johan Galtung: The Pioneering International Peace Research Association He Founded in 1964,” by Antonio C. S. Rosa, TRANSCEND Media Service, on the occasion of the IPRA 2014 – 50th Anniversary Conference, July 28, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/07/interview-with-johan-galtung-the-pioneering-international-peace-research-association-he-founded-in-1964/.

<sup>77</sup> Ismail, et al., 2014, quoted from “Government Agents ‘Directly Involved’ in Most High-Profile US Terror Plots,” by Spencer Ackerman, Guardian UK, July 21, 2014, <http://readersupportednews.org/news-section2/318-66/24903-government-agents-directly-involved-in-most-high-profile-us-terror-plots>. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this book.

<sup>78</sup> “Vom Bundesamt für Verfassungsschutz betreutes Morden?” Presserklärung der Nebenklage NSU-Prozess, Prozessbericht aus Sicht der Nebenklage im Prozess gegen Verantwortliche des “Nationalsozialistischen Untergrund,” 7. April, 2016, www.nsu-nebenklage.de/blog/2016/04/07/07-04-2016-presserklaerung/.

<sup>79</sup> International relations have been theorized widely, and I am privileged to have received the advice of Joshua Goldstein and Pevehouse, 2016, at important moments. Economic historian Charles Kindleberger, 2013, is often regarded as the father of hegemonic stability theory. Political economist Robert Gilpin, 1981, 1988, argues that history has seen subsequent international orders that all have in common that they are created by hegemonic states as a result of war. The prevailing order is always shaped to serve the dominant major powers’ interests. The system will therefore necessarily be challenged by rising powers. The most dangerous moment in world politics occurs when the weakened main power no longer stands ready to enforce the rules of the established order. This breeds uncertainty, insecurity and risk behavior, claims Gilpin. He agrees with Paul Kennedy, 1987, and his analyses of “imperial overstretch” being one of the reasons that hegemons fall. Gilpin adds that all hegemons inevitably fall because it is difficult to stay as hegemon.

<sup>80</sup> See note 79 above.

<sup>81</sup> Spengler, 1918–1922/1963.

<sup>82</sup> Toynbee, 1934–1961.

<sup>83</sup> Logiest, 1982.

<sup>84</sup> See Desmond Tutu’s Foreword in Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>85</sup> Lindner, 2000c, pp. 245–246. See Lindner’s conversation with members of the former German aristocracy, among others, on August 3, 1999, in Eitorf-Merten, Germany: “Hitler wurde als der ‘Dämon’, das Böse schlechthin, angesehen.”

<sup>86</sup> “Der Orden unter dem Totenkopf: 16. Fortsetzung Die Waffen-SS im Krieg,” by Heinz Höhne, Der Spiegel 5/1967, January 30, 1967, www.spiegel.de/spiegel/print/d-45549385.html: “...Urtyp des unreifen, vom Hitler-Kult trunkenen Jungfanatikers Ultra-Nazi...”

<sup>87</sup> Kirst, 1975/1976. I thank my father for making me aware of this book. He received it as a gift from his students when he was a teacher shortly after it had been published. His students demanded that he read passages of this book aloud to them, so that they would be able to grasp what had befallen Germany before they had been born.

<sup>88</sup> Tisa von der Schulenburg, www.tisa-von-der-schulenburg.de/. See also “High-Born Prussians Who Defied Their Origin,” by Michael Kimmelman, New York Times, July 15, 2009, www.nytimes.com/2009/07/16/arts/design/16abroad.html?\_r=0.

<sup>89</sup> Translated by Lindner from the German original, Haffner, 1978, p. 139.

<sup>90</sup> Punk auf der Insel – Wilde Jahre West-Berlin, documentary film by Margarete Kreuzer, rbb, 2015, www.rbb-online.de/doku/k-l/wilde-jahre-west-berlin.html. Rbb, Rundfunk Berlin-Brandenburg / Berlin-Brandenburg Broadcasting, is an institution under public law for the German states of Berlin and Brandenburg, situated in Berlin and Potsdam.

<sup>91</sup> Aust, 1985, Hauser, 1998, Kraushaar, 2006, Stern and Herrmann, 2007.

<sup>92</sup> Lindner, 2000c, pp. 329–330. See also Lindner, 2000f, 2001g.

<sup>93</sup> In Ahmed, 1996, p. 103.

<sup>94</sup> Hargeisa is the capital of the North. Members of the Hargeisa group founded the SORRA group (Somali Relief and Rehabilitation Association) in 1990. See parts of my conversation with the group in Hargeisa, Somaliland, on December 1, 1998, in the video documentation Somaliland: The SORRA group and “The alphabet through the wall,” as part of the doctoral research The Psychology of Humiliation: Somalia, Rwanda / Burundi, and Hitler’s Germany. See links to the videos on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoeware/videos.php.

<sup>95</sup> Lindner, 2000c, p. 58.

<sup>96</sup> 练乙铮 “学术自由几钱斤? (How Much Money Is Academic Freedom Worth?), by Yizheng Lian, Hong Kong Economic Journal, September 2, 2011, http://blog.yahoo.com/\_2EWF3ONIDZEGUFEZDQTPJOTBHI/articles/420217. Quoted in Dong, 2015, p. 97. Lian was a consultant on CCCPC policy in Hong Kong from 1998, and was removed from office by the Hong Kong government in 2004.

<sup>97</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 98.

<sup>98</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 99.

<sup>99</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 99.

<sup>100</sup> Bourdieu uses the term field for spheres such as economy, politics, arts, journalism, bureaucracy, science, and education. The position of agents in a field depends on the volume of economic, cultural, or political capital that they possess, but also on how different forms of capital are distributed, see Bourdieu and Wacquant, 1992, p. 108, Bourdieu, 1996, p. 278. I commend Jingyi Dong for having applied Bourdieu’s conceptualization on China, and thank her for having taught me much about Bourdieu’s theory. See Dong, 2015.

<sup>101</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 33, Bourdieu and Wacquant, 1992, pp. 114–115.

<sup>102</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 33, Bourdieu and Wacquant, 1992, pp. 99–100.

<sup>103</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 36, Bourdieu and Wacquant, 1992, pp. 219, 276–278.

<sup>104</sup> Dong, 2015, p. 148.

<sup>105</sup> Bourdieu and Passeron, 1990, p. 159.

<sup>106</sup> See, among others, the book by Deresiewicz, 2014, Excellent Sheep, see www.billderesiewicz.com/books/excellent-sheep:

Excellent Sheep takes a sharp look at the high-pressure conveyor belt that begins with parents and counselors who demand perfect grades and culminates in the skewed applications Deresiewicz saw firsthand as a member of Yale’s admissions committee. As schools shift focus from the humanities to “practical” subjects like economics and computer science, students are losing the ability to think in innovative ways. Deresiewicz explains how college should be a time for self-discovery, when students can establish their own values and measures of success, so they can forge their own path. He addresses parents, students, educators, and anyone who’s interested in the direction of American society, featuring quotes from real students and graduates he has corresponded with over the years, candidly exposing where the system is broken and clearly presenting solutions.

See also Bloom, 1987, Wilshire, 1990, Putnam, 1995, Readings, 1996, Schmidt, 2000, Giroux and Paulo Freire (Foreword), 2001, Bok, 2003, Giroux and Giroux, 2004, Hersch and Merrow, 2005, Karabel, 2005, Levine, 2006, Lewis, 2006, Kronman, 2007, Donoghue, 2008, Newfield, 2008, Gornitzka and Langfeldt, 2008, Folbre, 2009, Nussbaum, 2010, Taylor, 2010, Osler, 2010, Hacker and Dreifus, 2010, Richards, 2011, Riley, 2011, Arum and Roksa, 2011, Ginsberg, 2011, Jensen, 2012, Giroux, 2014b, or Frank, 2016. See, furthermore, “Schooling Ourselves in an Unequal America,” by Rebecca Strauss, New York Times, June 16, 2013, <http://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2013/06/16/schooling-ourselves-in-an-unequal-america/?src=me&ref=general>. As to the UK, see “Coalition of Thinkers Vow to Fight Marketisation of Universities,” by Shiv Malik, The Guardian, November 8, 2012, www.guardian.co.uk/education/2012/nov/08/coalition-thinkers-fight-marketisation-universities, where we read that the purpose of university is being “grossly distorted by the attempt to create a market in higher education.” See also “Why I am Not a Professor OR the Decline and Fall of the British University,” by Mark Tarver, 2007, www.lambdassociates.org/blog/decline.htm.

For Germany, see Münch, 2011. See also how the corporate sector in Germany has developed a “master plan” for how to change the educational system, in “Die Hochschule der Zukunft: Das Leitbild der Wirtschaft,” by Dieter Hundt, Präsident, Bundesvereinigung der Deutschen Arbeitgeberverbände e. V. (BDA), and Hans-Peter Keitel, Präsident, Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie e. V. (BDI), Berlin, February 2010, www.arbeitgeber.de/www%5Carbeitgeber.nsf/res/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf/\$file/Hochschule\_der\_Zukunft.pdf. I thank Ines Balta for making me aware of this publication.

<sup>107</sup> 张俊超 大学青年教师发展现状及应对策略 (Current Development and Strategies of Young University Teachers), by Junchao Zhang, Beijing: CSSPW, 2009, quoted in Dong, 2015, p. 89.

<sup>108</sup> Bourdieu, 1984b.

<sup>109</sup> Lappé, 2016:

The seed market, for example, has moved from a competitive arena of small, family-owned firms to an oligopoly in which just three companies – Monsanto, DuPont, and Syngenta – control over half of the global proprietary seed market. Worldwide, from 1996 to 2008, a handful of corporations absorbed more than two hundred smaller independent companies, driving the price of seeds and other inputs higher to the point where their costs for poor farmers in southern India now make up almost half of production costs. And the cost in real terms per acre for users of bio-engineered crops dominated by one corporation, Monsanto, tripled between 1996 and 2013.

<sup>110</sup> Frances Moore Lappé in her response on April 22, 2016, to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Farming for a Small Planet: Agroecology Now,” based on Lappé, 2016.

<sup>111</sup> Ibid.

<sup>112</sup> Lappé, 2016.

<sup>113</sup> “Hawking: Humans at Risk of Lethal ‘Own Goal,’” by David Shukman, BBC News Services, January 19, 2016, www.bbc.com/news/science-environment-35344664.

<sup>114</sup> On classism, have a look at Barbara Jensen, 2012.

<sup>115</sup> Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>116</sup> Tim Jackson, Centre for Environmental Strategy, at the Faculty of Engineering and Physical Sciences, University of Surrey in the UK, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic “Marxism and Ecology: Common Fonts of a Great Transition,” October 1, 2015:

The question of whether there is an inherent growth imperative in contemporary society is of course an extremely important one. A number of ecological economists have argued not only that there is such an imperative, but that it flows inevitably from some rather basic features of capitalism, such as the creation of money as credit and the charging of interest on debt. If this were shown to be the case, it would certainly seem to rule capitalism out of any sustainable form of post-growth or steady-state economy. But as my colleague Peter Victor and I have recently argued, this does not in fact seem to be the case. Our recent paper to Ecological Economics illustrates a quasi-stationary economy which is entirely consistent with the existence of credit creation and a money system based on interest-bearing debt.

A more credible candidate for a growth imperative lies in the relentless pursuit of labor productivity. At the very least, a continual reduction in the labor required to produce a given level of economic output leads through simple arithmetic to a stark choice between growth and unemployment. There are answers to this dilemma, for instance, by reducing working hours, by structural shifts towards low productivity sectors, and by redistributing the ownership of capital assets.

See also Jackson, 2009.

<sup>117</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>118</sup> Shigeo Abe in Samurai and Idiots: The Olympus Affair. See more in note 68 above.

<sup>119</sup> Galtung, 1971, 1976. In Lindner, 2016e, I discuss Ibn Khaldun and Arnold Toynbee and how they speak of the periphery versus the center, as does also peace researcher Johan Galtung. However, there is a difference. While Toynbee focuses on the embattled border region and the “hardened” culture it can give rise to, Galtung speaks of the exploited periphery where a culture of obedience is being engendered, but, where also alternative solutions may emerge.

<sup>120</sup> Kraidy and Murphy, 2008:

Galtung’s theory sees the global as a sine qua non intermediary between various locals. In contrast, Geertz’s translocal orientation reflects a web-like network with sensitivity to periphery-to-periphery contact.

<sup>121</sup> Ibn Khaldun, 1377/1958, is a historiographer, historian, and a forerunner of the contemporary disciplines of sociology and demography, who addressed themes such as politics, urban life, economics, and knowledge. I studied him when I lived and worked as a clinical psychologist in Cairo, Egypt, from 1984–1991. I saw him describe the very contrast between sedentary life and nomadic life that was very apparent for me while living in Cairo. Ibn Khaldun described how desert warriors lose power when they conquer a city. Ibn Khaldun's central concept was that of aşabiyyah, or "social cohesion," or "group solidarity," arising in tribes and other small kinship groups, sometimes intensified by religious ideology, therefore also identifiable as "tribalism." I observed the workings of clan cohesion later first hand during my doctoral research in Somaliland in 1998. According to Ibn Khaldun, this cohesion has two sides: while it helps groups to accumulate power, it also contains within itself psychological, sociological, economic, and political seeds of the group's downfall, when a new group arrives with more vigorous cohesion. See also, "Why Nomads Win: What Ibn Khaldun Would Say About Afghanistan," by Gerard Russell, Afghanistan and Middle East specialist, Huffington Post, April 11, 2010, www.huffingtonpost.com/gerard-russell/why-nomads-win-what-ibn-k\_b\_447878.html.

<sup>122</sup> See also "The Settlers' Prussia," by Uri Avnery, Human Wrongs Watch, October 17, 2015, <http://human-wrongs-watch.net/2015/10/18/the-settlers-prussia/> and original at <http://zope.gush-shalom.org/home/en/channels/avnery/1445000540/>.

<sup>123</sup> Toynbee, 1934–1961.

<sup>124</sup> 2016 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, "Cities as Risk – From Humiliation to Dignity," in Dubrovnik, Croatia, September 19–23, 2016, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/27.php. See also Lindner, 2016e.

<sup>125</sup> Former Yugoslavia is the territory that was up to 25 June 1991 known as The Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY). Six republics made up the federation: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia (including the regions of Kosovo and Vojvodina) and Slovenia.

<sup>126</sup> These atrocities committed are being labelled "quasi genocide," since the victims, the members of the Isaaq clan, were not systematically exterminated, in contrast to Rwanda, for instance, where even "half-blood" were potential targets for extermination. Also, until the end of the genocide, there were Isaaq ministers in the government, something that would have been unthinkable in Rwanda. See the report by a United Nations employee who does not wish to be named, December 1998, Hargeisa, in Lindner, 2000c, p. 58.

<sup>127</sup> Lindner, 2016e.

<sup>128</sup> Galtung, 1971, p. 109.

Chapter 17

<sup>1</sup> "Bassem Youssef: Fear Has No Future," Deutsche Welle, June 30, 2014, www.dw.de/bassem-youssef-fear-has-no-future/a-17747272.

<sup>2</sup> See, among others, Volkan, 2004.

<sup>3</sup> Ali, 2002.

<sup>4</sup> "A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror," by Chalmers Johnson, TomDispatch.com, October 22, 2007, www.alternet.org/story/65838/bush%27s\_response\_to\_9\_11\_was\_deadlier\_than\_the\_attacks\_themselves, a review of Stephen Holmes, 2007. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this essay. Chalmers Ashby Johnson (1931 – 2010) was an American author and professor emeritus of the University of California, San Diego, who had served in the Korean War, and was a consultant for the C.I.A. from 1967 to 1973. He is the author of the Blowback Trilogy: Blowback (Johnson, 2000), The Sorrows of Empire (Johnson, 2004), and Nemesis: The Last Days of the American Republic (Johnson, 2006). See also, Johnson, 2010. Stephen Holmes builds his argument, among others, on James Mann, 2004a, who describes the Bush administration's Cold War thinking.

<sup>5</sup> "Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called 'The Devil's Dynamo'?" by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/:

Since World War II, the United States has interfered either militarily or covertly in the internal affairs of very many countries. These include China, 1945–49; Italy, 1947–48; Greece, 1947–49; Philippines, 1946–53; South Korea, 1945–53; Albania, 1949–53; Germany, 1950s; Iran, 1953; Guatemala, 1953–1990s; Middle East, 1956–58; Indonesia, 1957–58; British Guiana/Guyana, 1953–64; Vietnam, 1950–73; Cambodia, 1955–73; The Congo/Zaire, 1960–65; Brazil, 1961–64; Dominican Republic, 1963–66; Cuba, 1959–present; Indonesia, 1965; Chile, 1964–73; Greece, 1964–74; East Timor, 1975–present; Nicaragua, 1978–89; Grenada, 1979–84; Libya, 1981–89; Panama, 1989; Iraq, 1990–present; Afghanistan 1979–92; El Salvador, 1980–92; Haiti, 1987–94; Yugoslavia, 1999; and Afghanistan, 2001–present.

See more in note 46 in Chapter 11, in note 127 in Chapter 14, and in note 199 in Chapter 18.

<sup>6</sup> See note 4 above.

<sup>7</sup> Huntington, 1996.

<sup>8</sup> Holmes, 2007, p. 72. Chalmers Johnson, in his review of Holmes book, recommends Ricks, 2006, to understand how the 2003–2011 Iraq war was lost. See the review here: “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, see note 4 above.

<sup>9</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 15.

<sup>10</sup> Holmes, 2007, p. 312.

<sup>11</sup> Holmes, 2007, p. 106, Mann, 2004a.

<sup>12</sup> Stone, 2004, see also Stone, 2007.

<sup>13</sup> “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, see note 4 above. John Yoo, 2005, is a prominent member of the Federalist Society, an association of conservative Republican lawyers. See also Quilligan, 2013.

<sup>14</sup> “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, see note 4 above. See also Power, 2002.

<sup>15</sup> Power, 2002.

<sup>16</sup> Pratto and Stewart, 2011.

<sup>17</sup> Fried, 2015.

<sup>18</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 67.

<sup>19</sup> “Pianist Lang Lang: An Avante Garde Pianist,” by Na Young Kwon, International Examiner, October 21, 2009, www.iexaminer.org/2009/10/avante-garde-pianist/:

Being “Number One” became the shared mantra of father and son, who together moved to Beijing in the hopes of having Lang Lang accepted into the conservatory... Now in his late twenties, Lang Lang has broadened his scope as a concert pianist to include his work with UNICEF as an International Goodwill Ambassador. He visited Zanzibar – part of Tanzania, located off the coast of East Africa – venturing beyond the chic hotels and restaurants in major metropolitan cities where concert halls are located. “During that trip, I often thought of my own difficult childhood, but my days and nights in Africa redefined the meaning of difficulty and put many things in perspective for me. I kept remembering what Kofi Annan, the [former] UN secretary-general, had told me in New York before I’d left for Africa. “Lang Lang,...your responsibility as an artist goes beyond music. Your art must serve people and peace.”

<sup>20</sup> Fanon, 1952/1967. See also Midiohouan, 1991.

<sup>21</sup> Gottman, et al., 1997.

<sup>22</sup> “The Mysterious Link Between the US Military Prison Camp Bucca and ISIS Leaders,” by Mohammed Mahmoud Mortada, Al-Akhbar, September 13, 2014, <http://english.al-akhbar.com/node/21519>.

<sup>23</sup> “The Paradoxical Consequences of USA Counter-Terrorism Programs: Jihadist Terrorist Perceived Motives and Successes,” by Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, October 20, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/10/the-paradoxical-consequences-of-usa-counter-terrorism-programs/:

As the United States of America counter terrorism programs continue to expand their “war” against national and international terrorism, it is clear they are “failing” to understand the problematic consequences of their policies and actions. What is being promoted as essential and effective policies and actions to contain and defeat extremist Jihadist terrorism, is. Paradoxically, resulting in the further growth and development of Jihadist terrorism, and increased criticism and distrust of the United States of America among Islamic and Non-Islamic nations. It is clear “Al-Qaeda,” long considered to be the organized source of Jihadist Terrorism, has become a vision, impulse, ideology and radical social movement. Because of this, Jihadist Terrorism can no longer be “defeated” using policies and actions unsuited to a global era. This is the challenge to before the government and citizens of the United States of America. The continued disrespect, humiliation, and vilification of Islam, implicit and explicit, in USA foreign policies and actions, especially existing counter-terrorism approaches, sustain and nurture anger, resentment, and revenge. USA approaches have failed politically, economically, culturally, and morally. These approaches are in need of major evaluation and reconsideration.

<sup>24</sup> The contact hypothesis, or the hope that contact will foster friendship, was proposed by Gordon Allport, 1954, suggesting that relations between groups can be improved through positive intergroup contact. However, this hypothesis proved not to work in all cases, only under certain conditions, namely, the following four: equal status, cooperation, common goals, institutional support. The hypothesis is valid at the aggregate level, though, as shown by a meta-analysis by Pettigrew and Tropp, 2006. Intergroup contact can also have “ironic” effects:

...there is mounting evidence that nurturing bonds of affection between the advantaged and the disadvantaged sometimes entrenches rather than disrupts wider patterns of discrimination. Notably, prejudice reduction interventions may have ironic effects on the political attitudes of the historically disadvantaged, decreasing their perceptions of injustice and willingness to engage in collective action to transform social inequalities,” Dixon, et al., 2012, Abstract.

I thank Sigrun Marie Moss for making me aware of this research on the “ironic” effects of intergroup contact.

<sup>25</sup> Smith, 2000.

<sup>26</sup> Allred, 1999, Averill, 1982, 1993.

<sup>27</sup> Ali, 2002.

<sup>28</sup> “The Logic of Violence in the Islamic State’s War,” by Stathis N. Kalyvas, Washington Post, July 7, 2014, www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/monkey-cage/wp/2014/07/07/the-logic-of-violence-in-islamic-states-war/.

<sup>29</sup> “Jihad’s Fatal Attraction: The Challenge for Democracies Is to Provide an Alternative Means of Satisfying the Quest for Glory that Motivates those who Join in Isis’s Barbarism,” by Scott Atran, The Guardian, September 4, 2014, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2014/sep/04/jihad-fatal-attraction-challenge-democracies-isis-barbarism. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of this article.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid.

<sup>33</sup> Papadopoulos, 2006, pp. 92 and 95.

<sup>34</sup> Katz, 1988. I thank McCauley, 2017, for making me aware of Katz’s research. It is a privilege to have Clark McCauley as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>35</sup> Kühne, 2011. It is a privilege to have Thomas Kühne as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>36</sup> Kühne, 2011, p. 239.

<sup>37</sup> Lorenz, 1963/1966. It should not be forgotten, however, that Konrad Lorenz’ “cathartic” model of instincts and of aggression is now widely believed to be incorrect. Human aggression is not a nervous energy that has to be dissipated in some way, be it harmlessly through some substitutes for aggression, or, if not, then through actual fighting.

<sup>38</sup> A number of physiological reactions create the “hero face” posturing of a chimpanzee as well as of a Homo sapiens. These reactions range from a raised head, stuck-out chin, slightly raised and inward rotated arms, and a stiffened body through tighter striated musculature. The aim is to appear more threatening, even if only by bluff, since raised hair produces no more than a pretense of strength. A cat humps its back, also here making the animal appear bigger and thus more dangerous than it really is.

<sup>39</sup> BCE stands for “Before the Common Era,” and is equivalent to BC, which means “Before Christ.”

<sup>40</sup> “Human Nature: An Evolutionary Paradox,” by John Scales Avery, Human Wrongs Watch, August 15, 2016, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2016/08/17/human-nature-an-evolutionary-paradox/>.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid. See also Hinde and Rotblat, 2003.

<sup>43</sup> Arendt, 1970.

<sup>44</sup> Juergensmeyer, 2000.

<sup>45</sup> The word gonzo seems to first have been used in 1970 in connection with an article by Hunter S. Thompson, “The Kentucky Derby Is Decadent and Depraved,” Thompson, 1970, who later popularized gonzo journalism as a style of journalism that is written without claims of objectivity, often including the reporter as part of the story via a first-person narrative. See also Thompson, 1979.

<sup>46</sup> “The Pornography of Jihadism,” by Simon Cottee, The Atlantic, September 12, 2014, www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2014/09/isis-jihadist-propaganda-videos-porn/380117/2/. I thank Deeyah Khan for making me aware of this article.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

<sup>48</sup> Translated from German by Alice Asbury Abbott, Suttner, 1908, pp. 142. German original, Suttner, 1889, p. 84:

“Und wie war’s Dir selber zu Mute, als Du zum erstenmale ins Gemenge kamst?” – “O wonnig, erhebend!” – “Du brauchst nicht zu lügen, mein Junge. Nicht der Stabsoffizier fragt nach Deinen pflichtschuldigen Lieutenantsgefühlen, sondern der Mensch und Freund.” – “Ich kann nur wiederholen: wonnig und erhebend. Schauerlich – ja ... aber: so großartig! Und das Bewußtsein, daß ich die höchste Mannespflicht erfülle mit Gott für König und Vaterland! Und dann: daß ich den Tod, dieses sonst so gefürchtete und gemiedene Gespenst, hier so nahe um mich herum walten sehen, – seine Sense auch über mir erhoben – das versetzt mich in eine eigene, über die Gewöhnlichkeit so erhabene, epische Stimmung ... Die Muse der Geschichte fühle ich uns zu Häupten schweben und unserem Schwert die Siegeskraft verleihen. Ein edler Zorn durchglüht mich gegen den frechen Feind, der das Recht der deutschen Lande niedertreten wollte, und es ist mir ein Hochgefühl, diesen Haß befriedigen zu dürfen ... das ist ein eigen, geheimnisvolles Ding, dieses Umbringendürfen – nein, Umbringen müssen – ohne ein Mörder zu sein und mit unerschrockener Preisgebung des eigenen Lebens”...

<sup>49</sup> Kühne, 2011, p. 239.

<sup>50</sup> Kühne, 2011, p. 237.

<sup>51</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 4, 2016.

<sup>52</sup> Kühne, 2011, p. 241.

<sup>53</sup> Staub, 1989, 1993, 2012, 2015.

<sup>54</sup> Browning, 1992.

<sup>55</sup> Kühne, 2011, p. 242.

<sup>56</sup> Haffner, 2000.

<sup>57</sup> “Med hilsen fra en tribunehore,” by Mina Finstad Berg, Maddam.no, September 9, 2014, <http://maddam.no/2014/09/med-hilsen-fra-en-tribunehore/>.

<sup>58</sup> NSA Ajit Doval Sir Speech at SASTRA University, published on November 26, 2014, <https://youtu.be/v4RaCJrT51w>.

<sup>59</sup> “Proscribed Terror Groups or Organisations,” Counter-Terrorism Policy Paper by the Home Office of the Government of the United Kingdom, July 12, 2013, last updated November 2, 2015, www.gov.uk/government/publications/proscribed-terror-groups-or-organisations--2.

<sup>60</sup> Defence and Diplomacy: Terrorists Targeting Schools, hosted by Sultan Mehmood Hali, Pakistan Television Corporation (PTV), published on February 4, 2016, <https://youtu.be/z1YAZMWsdu0>, with guests Lt. Gen Raza Muhammad Khan, Former President National Defence University of Islamabad, and Atle Hetland, a Norwegian Social Scientist: “Having been beaten back by the Military Operation Zarb-e-Azb, the terrorists have started targeting educational institutions. Their rationale appears to be reach soft targets and also deny the future generations of Pakistan education, which they badly need.” The two guests “examine the problem from a military and social angle.” It is a privilege to have Atle Hetland as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>61</sup> Keri Lawson-Te Aho in a personal communication on January 18, 2014.

<sup>62</sup> “A ‘Deep and Disturbing’ Decline in Media Freedom,” World Press Freedom Index, Reporters Without Borders (RSF), April 20, 2016, <https://rsf.org/en/deep-and-disturbing-decline-media-freedom>. See also “Right to Information Dead on Arrival at UN,” by Thalif Deen, Inter Press Service (IPS), January 19, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/01/right-to-information-dead-on-arrival-at-un/.

<sup>63</sup> Holmes, 2007. See a review of this book in “A Guide for the Perplexed: Intellectual Fallacies of the War on Terror,” by Chalmers Johnson, Asia Times Online, October 22, 2007, www.atimes.com/atimes/Middle\_East/IJ24Ak01.html. I thank Anthony Marsella for making me aware of this essay. Chalmers Ashby Johnson (1931 – 2010) was an American author and professor emeritus of the University of California, San Diego, who had served in the Korean War, and was a consultant for the C.I.A. from 1967 to 1973. He is the author of the Blowback Trilogy: Blowback (Johnson, 2000), The Sorrows of Empire (Johnson, 2004), and Nemesis: The Last Days of the American Republic (Johnson, 2006). See also, Johnson, 2010. Stephen Holmes builds his argument, among others, on James Mann, 2004a, who describes the Bush administration's Cold War thinking.

<sup>64</sup> Lindner, 2012c. I thank Francisco Gomes de Matos for being my guardian in Brazil and introducing me to a number of important people and organizations.

<sup>65</sup> "UN Expert Urges Chile to Stop Using Anti-Terrorism Legislation and to Adopt National Strategy to Address the Mapuche Question," The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), July 30, 2013, www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=13599&LangID=E:

The United Nations Special Rapporteur on human rights and counter-terrorism, Ben Emmerson, today urged Chilean authorities to refrain from applying anti-terrorism legislation in connection with the Mapuche indigenous peoples' land protests. At the end of his first official visit to Chile, the expert also called on the Government to place the Mapuche question as one of the top priorities of the national political dialogue.

<sup>66</sup> Ricardo Jost Pereira Rodrigues in a personal communication on July 12, 2012.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid.

<sup>69</sup> Lindner, 2012e.

<sup>70</sup> Gilberto Freyre (1900–1987) was the "father" of lusotropicalism. I thank Clara Becker for making me aware of Freyre's work, and also the work of Sérgio Buarque de Holanda. Gilberto de Mello Freyre was a Brazilian sociologist, anthropologist, historian, writer, painter and congressman. His best-known work is Casa-Grande e Senzala (literally, The Plantation Big House and the Slave Quarters, Freyre, 1933, but translated into English as Masters and the Slaves). The book is considered a classic of modern cultural anthropology. It depicts life on traditional plantations and the miscegenation (racial mixing crossbreeding, interbreeding) that emerged in this context. Freyre's argument is that miscegenation had a positive influence in Brazil rather than representing a weakness. This was a new point of view, paving the way for Afro-Brazilian art and literature to be highly regarded rather than denigrated, and to Brazil becoming proud of their very unique Brazilian culture. According to Freyre's analysis, the Portuguese tendency to miscegenation among colonized peoples provided the background for this development. Even though Freyre never used the phrase "racial democracy" in his published works, his argument was that Brazil, even though far from being a paradise of racial harmony, still was a place of much greater social cohesion than other, comparable world regions.

<sup>71</sup> "Swedish Expert Slams Norway Terror Alert," The Local, July 28, 2014, www.thelocal.se/20140728/sweden-slams-norways-terror-alert-tactics. See also Human Rights Watch, 2014, With Liberty to Monitor All: How Large-Scale US Surveillance Is Harming Journalism, Law, and American Democracy.

<sup>72</sup> "Strategi for økt overvåking: Tidligere høyesterettsdommer og leder for Lundkommisjonen om offentlige terroralarmer" (Strategy for Increased Surveillance: Former Supreme Court Judge and Chairman of the Lund Commission on Government Terror Alerts), by Emilie Ekeberg og Lars Thorvaldsen, Klassekampen, August 1, 2014, www.klassekampen.no/article/20140801/ARTICLE/140809998. Translated by Lindner from the original Norwegian text:

Torsdag 24. juli varslet Justisministeren, PST og politiet på en felles pressekonferanse at Norge står overfor en konkret og tidsavgrenset terrortrussel. Det er ifølge myndighetene ikke klart hvem eller hva som er målet, men det skal være ekstreme islamister som står bak. Myndighetene har bedt folk være på vakt, og melde fra til politiet om de ser noe mistenkelig. Tirsdag denne uken sa justisminister Anders Anundsen (Frp) at trusselnivået er noe redusert, men at situasjonen fortsatt er alvorlig og uavklart. Grunnlag for økt overvåking: Det politiske grunnlaget for å øke overvåkingen er frykt i befolkningen, og angstdrivende terroralarmer bidrar dermed til å øke oppslutningen om overvåkingen, mener Ketil Lund.

<sup>73</sup> Schmid, 2013, pp. 10.

<sup>74</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 11, quoting from Countering Radicalisation in America: Lessons from Europe, Special Report Number 262, by Lorenzo Vidino, United States Institute of Peace, Washington, DC, November 2010, see www.usip.org/events/countering-radicalization-lessons-europe.

<sup>75</sup> Die sieben Irrtümer der Deutschen Einheit: Glücksfall oder Milliardengrab? ZDF-History, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, September 19, 2010, www.zdf.de/zdf-history/die-sieben-irrtuemer-der-deutschen-einheit-5443030.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate. In this documentary film Nikolaj Sergeevič Portugalov very calmly explains how the national humiliation of Russia through American arrogance is almost intolerable to him. American foreign minister James Baker and German chancellor Helmut Kohl had promised to refrain from moving NATO's borders closer to Russia, and they broke that promise.

<sup>76</sup> Gefährliche Verbindungen: Donald Trump und seine Geschäftspartner, documentary film by Johannes Hano und Alexander Sarovic, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, May 24, 2017, www.heute.de/zdfzoom-dokumentation-gefaehrliche-verbindungen-trump-und-seine-geschaeftpartner-47232790.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>77</sup> “Afghanistan’s U.S.-Funded Torturers and Murderers,” by John Sifton, Asia advocacy director, Human Rights Watch, published in Foreign Policy, March 6, 2015, www.hrw.org/news/2015/03/06/afghanistan-s-us-funded-torturers-and-murderers, who subtitles: “The United States continues to fund and support a network of abusive Afghan strongmen in the name of security. It’s time to stop”:

Human Rights Watch (HRW) has documented systematic, gross human rights violations by some of these forces that has included numerous cases of torture, extrajudicial executions of civilians, and forced disappearance of detainees. The findings raise concerns about Afghan government and U.S. efforts to arm, train, vet, and hold accountable the country’s security apparatus – run by a network of strongmen, many of whom attained official authority as allies of the United States in the fight against the Taliban.

<sup>78</sup> “American Jewish Community Ends Support of Turkish Interests on Hill,” by Eli Lake, The Washington Times, June 8, 2010, www.washingtontimes.com/news/2010/jun/8/jewish-community-ends-support-turkey-capitol-hill/?page=all.

<sup>79</sup> “Turkey’s Doctrine of Pre-emptive Authoritarianism,” by Mustafa Akyol, Al-Monitor, April 10, 2014, www.al-monitor.com/pulse/originals/2014/04/authoritarian-turkey-preemptive-erdogan.html#.

<sup>80</sup> “Besieged, Abused, Ignored: Ethiopian Annihilation of the Ogaden People,” by Graham Peebles, CounterPunch, February 8–10, 2013, www.counterpunch.org/2013/02/08/ethiopian-annihilation-of-the-ogaden-people/.

<sup>81</sup> “Legalize It All: How to Win the War on Drugs,” by Dan Baum, Harper’s Magazine, April 2016, <http://harpers.org/archive/2016/04/legalize-it-all/>. See also “Report: Aide Says Nixon’s War on Drugs Targeted Blacks, Hippies,” by Tom LoBianco, CNN, March 24, 2016, <http://edition.cnn.com/2016/03/23/politics/john-ehrllichman-richard-nixon-drug-war-blacks-hippie/>. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of these articles. For another example, see “Israel Mows the Lawn,” by Mouin Rabbani, London Review of Books, Volume 36 (15), July 31, 2014, www.lrb.co.uk/v36/n15/mouin-rabbani/israel-mows-the-lawn. On page 8, we read that in 2004, a year before Israel’s unilateral disengagement from the Gaza Strip, Dov Weissglass, advisor to Ariel Sharon, explained the initiative’s purpose to an interviewer from Haaretz:

The significance of the disengagement plan is the freezing of the peace process ... And when you freeze that process, you prevent the establishment of a Palestinian state, and you prevent a discussion on the refugees, the borders and Jerusalem. Effectively, this whole package called the Palestinian state, with all that it entails, has been removed indefinitely from our agenda. And all this with ... a [US] presidential blessing and the ratification of both houses of Congress ... The disengagement is actually formaldehyde. It supplies the amount of formaldehyde that is necessary so there will not be a political process with the Palestinians.

<sup>82</sup> Fassin, 2015. I thank Hinnerk Bruhns for making me aware of the work of sociologist and anthropologist Didier Fassin.

<sup>83</sup> “‘Je suis français, je suis juif, je suis musulman. Je suis Charlie’: On the trail of Convivencia,” by Raja Sakrani, Käte Hamburger Kolleg “Recht als Kultur,” January 2015, www.recht-als-kultur.de/de/aktuelles/diskurs/.

<sup>84</sup> “Latin America and the Caribbean Can Make Hunger History – UN Agricultural Agency,” United Nations News Centre, January 25, 2017, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=56043#.WI3BWvKOWgx.

<sup>85</sup> Richards, 2016a. See also historian Philipp Ther, 2014/2016, p. x, and his summary of the main pillars of neoliberal ideology:

Blind belief in the market as an adjudicator in almost all human affairs, irrational reliance on the rationality of market participants, disdain for the state as expressed in the myth of “big government,” and the uniform application of the economic recipes of the Washington Consensus.

See also “Is Europe Disintegrating?” by Timothy Garton Ash, The New York Review of Books, January 19, 2017, www.nybooks.com/articles/2017/01/19/is-europe-disintegrating/. I thank Elenor Richter-Lyonette for making me aware of this article.

<sup>86</sup> David Korten in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” September 21, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016.

<sup>87</sup> “The U.S. Media’s Problems Are Much Bigger than Fake News and Filter Bubbles,” by Bharat N. Anand, Harvard Business Review, January 05, 2017, <https://hbr.org/2017/01/the-u-s-medias-problems-are-much-bigger-than-fake-news-and-filter-bubbles?curator=MediaREDEF>:

Three forces combine to create the media coverage of political campaigns we observe today: connected media, which spreads messages faster than traditional media; fixed costs and advertising-reliant business models in traditional media, which amplify sensational messages; and viewers' news consumption patterns, which leads to people sorting across media outlets based on their beliefs and makes messages they already agree with far more effective. Each reinforces the others. Without these enabling factors, even the best marketing campaign would go nowhere, and fake news or leaked information from cyberattacks would have little effect.

I thank Seymour M. (Mike) Miller for making Linda and me aware of this article.

<sup>88</sup> "Have Twitter Bots Infiltrated the 2016 Election?" by Andrew McGill, The Atlantic, June 2, 2016, www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2016/06/have-twitter-bots-infiltrated-the-2016-election/484964/. See also Hellesøy Harrison, 2016.

<sup>89</sup> "Interview with John Scales Avery, One of the Greatest Living Intellectuals on Earth," by Binu Mathew, Human Wrongs Watch, March 15, 2017, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2017/03/23/interview-with-john-scales-avery-one-of-the-greatest-living-intellectuals-on-earth/>.

<sup>90</sup> Ibid.

<sup>91</sup> Jenni, 2011.

<sup>92</sup> Akte D, part 1: Das Versagen der Nachkriegsjustiz, part 2: Das Kriegserbe der Bahn, part 3: Die Macht der Stromkonzerne, Das Erste, 2014, www1.wdr.de/fernsehen/dokumentation\_reportage/wdr-dok/sendungen/das-versagen-der-nachkriegsjustiz-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany's regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>93</sup> "UN Report Reveals Convergence of Environmental Crime with Corruption, Raft of Other Illegal Activities," United Nations News Centre, December 9, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=55763#.WFAr5H2OWgx.

<sup>94</sup> "Illegal Trade in Wildlife, Timber Products Funding Criminals, Armed Groups – Joint UN Report," United Nations News Centre, June 24, 2014, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=48122#.U80hg7Hzkmy.

<sup>95</sup> Lindner, 2016e. The environmental cost of turbo-tourism is one of several aspects that inspire the outcry "tourism is terrorism." Hrvoje Carić, of the Institute for Tourism in Zagreb, Croatia, has calculated in 2015 that one-year income from cruise ships was 52.8 million Euros, while the cost of environmental damage was as high as 390 million Euros. In other words, the direct cost of pollution for the Croatian part of the Adriatic exceeds the financial benefits for the Croatian economy seven times, not even counting indirect damage.

<sup>96</sup> See the end of part 1.2 of Der erschöpfte Planet – Machtfaktor Erde, documentary film by Angela Andersen and Claus Kleber, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, 2011, part 1.1: <http://youtu.be/58FbrvB94Qs>, part 1.2: <http://youtu.be/ZAMD7CrUbHk>, part 1.3: <http://youtu.be/YifhqsGKB0M>, part 2.1: <http://youtu.be/5JW8qw1-9f4>, part 2.2: <http://youtu.be/QE3YHYCbIMM>, part 2.3: http://youtu.be/CUIkRM\_lrII. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>97</sup> Das Geschäft mit der Armut: Wie Lebensmittelkonzerne neue Märkte erobern, documentary film by Joachim Walther, 3sat, 2016, www.3sat.de/programm/?viewlong=viewlong&d=20170412&dayID=ClnDaN12&cx=123. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe. See also the work, for instance, of Carlos Monteiro at the School of Public Health, University of São Paulo, São Paulo, Brazil, Conde and Monteiro, 2014, Laverly, et al., 2015.

<sup>98</sup> "The Charitable-Industrial Complex," by Peter Buffett, son of investor Warren Buffett, New York Times, July 26, 2013, www.nytimes.com/2013/07/27/opinion/the-charitable-industrial-complex.html?hpw&\_r=0. See also Fontan, 2012, and Lindner, 2010b.

<sup>99</sup> Teju Cole has been credited with coining the term White-Savior Industrial Complex. He calls on "innocent heroes" who wish to be helpers, to understand that they may "play a useful role for people who have much more cynical motives": "The White Savior Industrial Complex is a valve for releasing the unbearable pressures that build in a system built on pillage. We can participate in the economic destruction of Haiti over long years, but when the earthquake strikes it feels good to send $10 each to the rescue fund. I have no opposition, in principle, to such donations (I frequently make them myself), but we must do such things only with awareness of what else is involved. If we are going to interfere in the lives of others, a little due diligence is a minimum requirement," see "The White-Savior Industrial Complex," by Teju Cole, The Atlantic, March 21, 2012, www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2012/03/the-white-savior-industrial-complex/254843/.

For the topic of conservation, see "A Challenge to Conservationists: Can We Protect Natural Habitats Without Abusing the People Who Live in Them?," by Mac Chapin, World Watch Magazine, November/December 2004, Volume 17, Number 6, www.worldwatch.org/epublish/1/102. See also "The Indigenous 'People of Wildlife' Know How to Protect Nature,” by Baher Kamal, Inter Press Service (IPS), March 10 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/03/the-indigenous-people-of-wildlife-know-how-to-protect-nature/.

<sup>100</sup> Pogge, 2002. It has been a great privilege for me to learn from Thomas Pogge, starting more than twenty years ago, when he was part of the Ethics Programme of the Norwegian Research Council, led by Dagfinn Føllesdal. Earlier, we studied at Hamburg University at the same time, without meeting then.

Altruism and compassion can and must go together, see, for instance, Singer and Ricard, 2015, or Ricard, 2013/2016. Note the effective altruism movement that goes beyond traditional altruism or classical charity. Journalist Linda Polman, 2010, is highly critical to donating to any charity, particularly those funded and beholden to national interests, except for one, namely, Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF), also known as Doctors Without Borders.

<sup>101</sup> “Next Generation Bioweapons: The Technology Of Genetic Engineering Applied To Biowarfare And Bioterrorism,” by Michael J. Ainscough, Colonel, USAF, The Counterproliferation Papers, Future Warfare Series Number 14, April 2002, www.fas.org/irp/threat/cbw/nextgen.pdf, p. 11. Source: Federation of American Scientists (FAS), Washington, DC, www.fas.org. FAS was founded in 1945 by scientists who worked on the Manhattan Project to develop the first atomic bombs. The USAF Counterproliferation Center is located at the Air War College, Air University, Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama, www.au.af.mil/au/awc/awcgate/awc-cps.htm. The Counterproliferation Papers Series was established by the USAF to provide information and analysis to assist the understanding of the U.S. national security policy-makers and USAF officers to help them better prepare to counter the threat from weapons of mass destruction.

<sup>102</sup> Shiva, 2000, p. 12.

<sup>103</sup> Siebert, 2010, p. 812, quoted in “Individual and Collective Misfortune: Possibilities of Transcendence,” by Reimon Bachika, Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, 2016, www.humiliationstudies.org/publications/publications.php.

<sup>104</sup> Oxley, 2012.

<sup>105</sup> Lindner, 2016b. See also Norgaard, 2011, 2015, Nelson, 2010b or a new journal of Implicit Religion, a journal of the Centre for the Study of Implicit Religion and Contemporary Spirituality at Middlesex University, UK, <http://socrel.oxfordjournals.org/content/61/2/local/advertising.pdf>.

<sup>106</sup> Hochschild, 1983.

<sup>107</sup> “History Has Knocked Very Loudly on Our Door. Will We Answer?” World Future Forum 2016 – Opening Speech by Jakob von Uexküll, March 15, 2016, www.worldfuturecouncil.org/2016/03/15/world-future-forum-2016-opening-speech-jakob-von-uexkull/. Even the UN SDG strategy suffers from dangerous religious dogma, says Uexküll, as it will take 207 years to eliminate poverty with the proposed strategy, and the global economy would have to grow 175 times of its present size” – an obvious impossibility.

<sup>108</sup> Sudhir Chella Rajan, expert on climate and migration, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “The Church of Economism and Its Discontents,” on November 21, 2015, in response to Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>109</sup> See Chapter 8 of Lindner, 2012d, A Dignity Economy.

<sup>110</sup> Escrigas, 2016. Cristina Escrigas is the former executive director of, and current adviser to, the Global University Network for Innovation (GUNI), an organization created by UNESCO, the United Nations University, and the Technical University of Catalonia (UPC). She was previously director of the UNESCO Chair in Higher Education Management, developing strategies for universities in Spain and Latin America. She has conducted numerous research projects and organized international conferences on emerging issues in higher education.

<sup>111</sup> Bude, 2014

<sup>112</sup> “The ‘Just Enough’ Policy: Behavioral Control of Collective Protest through Minimum Reward,” by Antony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 22, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-just-enough-policy-behavioral-control-of-collective-protest-through-minimum-reward/:

... The answer to questions raised in the opening of this article may reside in an organized effort to control behavioral responses by making use of a well-known psychological principle that offers “Just enough.” This principle pairs a positive behavior with a “sufficient” reward to maintain control of desired outcomes. While there are increasing signs of American citizen discontent with both government (e.g., 6 percent citizen satisfaction with Congress based on surveys, election defeats of incumbents) and corporate (e.g., community activism, OWS, union protests) sectors, collective discontent has been denied, contained, or suppressed. The well-known words attributed to Queen Marie Antoinette – actually penned by Jean-Jacques Rousseau – capture the exigencies of the situation. “The peasants have no bread, let them eat cake (brioche).” No, no, no, never give too much! The key is “Just Enough!”

Just enough comfort, to keep them pacified

Just enough tolerance, to keep them silent

Just enough patience, to keep them waiting
 Just enough doubt, to keep them wondering
 Just enough satisfaction, to keep them content
 Just enough humiliation, to keep them humbled
 Just enough force, to keep them controlled
 Just enough deceit, to keep them believing
 Just enough confusion, to keep them bewildered
 Just enough money, to keep them grateful
 Just enough vilification, to keep them angry
 Just enough sorrow, to keep them dulled
 Just enough entertainment, to keep them pre-occupied
 Just enough suspicion, to keep them paranoid
 Just enough patriotism, to keep them feeling exceptional
 Just enough comfort food, to keep them lethargic
 Just enough uncertainty, to keep them fearful
 Just enough secrecy, to keep them guessing
 Just enough “dumb” movies and TV shows, to keep them dumb
 Just enough partisanship, to keep them divided
 Just enough fear of job loss, to keep them passive
 Just enough force, to keep them hesitant
 Just enough technology changes, to keep them hypnotized
 Just enough media collaboration, to keep them ignorant
 Just enough freedom, to keep them thinking they have choice
 Just enough surveillance, monitoring, and archiving of privacy, to keep them ignorant of understanding emerging technological realities
 Just enough beer, grass, dope, and dancing to keep them laughing
 Just enough violence, to keep them violent
 Just enough celebrities, to keep them dreaming
 Just enough stereotyping, to keep them biased
 Just enough advertising, to keep them buying
 Just enough hope, to keep them hopeful.

<sup>113</sup> Karlberg, 2014:

...if humans are presumed to be nothing more than intelligent and egoistic animals seeking to satisfy their material interests and appetites in an environment of scarce resources, with the meaning and purpose of our lives defined by success or failure in this regard – then how does the construction of a more just and sustainable global civilization become imaginable or desirable? And what would motivate the struggle and sacrifice required to bring it about? Likewise, if humans are presumed to be living out transitory lives en route to a destination of eternal salvation or damnation, and if this earthly existence is nothing more than a way of separating the saved from the damned, and if the entire process is about to reach an apocalyptic conclusion – then how does the construction of a more just and sustainable global civilization become imaginable or desirable? And what would motivate the struggle and sacrifice required to bring it about?

<sup>114</sup> Karlberg, 2014, see note 113 above.

<sup>115</sup> Kim and Kirk, 2013.

<sup>116</sup> “Schleichende Pathologisierung der Gesellschaft,” Reinhard Jellen interviewt Werner Seppmann über die Zunahme von Gewalt und Irrationalismus in der Gesellschaft, Telepolis, November 23, 2011, www.heise.de/tp/artikel/35/35916/1.html:

...die Irrationalität eines Gesellschaftssystems, welches die Bedürfnisbefriedigung der Menschen zu einer Nebenfolge des Wirtschaftswachstums degradiert. Der alltägliche Konkurrenzkampf wird von den Menschen verabsolutiert, versubjektiviert und personalisiert und als naturgegeben und alternativlos akzeptiert, wenn nicht gleich zum Reich der Freiheit deklariert. Damit üben die Menschen jene Ausschließungsmechanismen ein, die ihnen durch die Institutionen vorexerziert wurden.

<sup>117</sup> Stout, 2005. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of Martha Stout’s work.

<sup>118</sup> We had our 2016 Annual Dignity Conference in Dubrovnik, Croatia, where I lived throughout September 2016. Prior to that, I spent the month of August 2016 in Sarajevo. I deeply thank the family of Ardian Adžanela for wonderfully welcoming me in their midst in Sarajevo. See the article I wrote during these months, Lindner, 2016e.

<sup>119</sup> “Understanding Yugoslavia,” by Cameron Hewitt, Rick Steve’s Europe, www.ricksteves.com/watch-read-listen/read/understanding-yugoslavia.

<sup>120</sup> Pavlović, 2006.

<sup>121</sup> “Marović i Mesić razmenili izvinjenja građanima Hrvatske i SCG,” B92, September 9, 2003, www.b92.net/info/vesti/index.php?yyyy=2003&mm=09&dd=10&nav\_id=119131.

<sup>122</sup> “Reckoning: The 1991 Siege of Dubrovnik and the Consequences of the ‘War for Peace,’” by Srdja Pavlovic, www.yorku.ca/soi/\_Vol\_5\_1/\_HTML/Pavlovic.html.

<sup>123</sup> Marsella, 2014. Marsella sees the causes of the mass acts of violence both specific to the people, forces, and circumstances of each instance, but also as residing in larger and enduring sets of forces and events that exist at different levels of our lives, and that interact and cascade off one another in an ever amplified and self-defeating cycle of individual and societal deviancy.

Marsella enumerates the roots of violent shooting and bombing events:

- (1) formative causes (e.g., genetics, temperament, early life experiences, characterological dispositions, social structural circumstances, race, poverty),
- (2) precipitative causes (e.g., bullying, rejection, humiliation, perceived abuses by government),
- (3) exacerbative causes (e.g., membership in violence groups, gun availability and accessibility), and
- (4) maintenance causes (e.g., membership in a broader culture and/or milieu that justifies violence, sanctions it, and legitimates it as a way to resolve individual and social inequities):

Within this framework of multiple and interactive causality, events, forces, practices, and values at macro-social levels (i.e., government, social structure, economic system) “trickle down” to microsocial levels (i.e., family, schools, workplaces, media), and then “trickle down” to individual psychological and behavioral levels (e.g., beliefs, emotions, values). In a few words, we are socialized by the culture in which we live. This socialization can prepare us for becoming productive and responsible citizens, or demented and sociopathic persons committed to violence and destruction, driven by an ends justifies the means mentality.

...

Think back to the 2012 presidential election in the United States. There was an obvious absence of substantive discussions about major societal issues, including materialism, consumerism, commodification, greed, distribution of power, celebrity fixations, abuses of constitutional human rights, local, national, and international militarism, injustice and humiliation of the poor, immigrants, and certain religious and cultural groups. At best, if these were spoken, it was minimal in words and time, and the election focused on specific events (e.g., Libyan assassinations, national debt, abortion, candidate personality).

The clever use of media (i.e., TV political ads, image creations and management) kept us from raising or even addressing major problems we face as a nation – our identity, our values, our role as a resource for peace rather than war, for justice rather than its miscarriages, for people rather than corporations, for decency rather than humiliation, and for democracy rather than “hypocrisy.”

...

Say what you will in argument and contention, the United States of America is a “Culture of Violence,” and we are exporting that culture in all of its manifestations and forms across the world as we encourage greed, profit, consumerism, materialism, commodification, environmental exploitation, demonization of nations and cultures, militarization of societies, abuses of human rights, criminal acts of assassination under the guise of protection, and endemic and epidemic fear.

Think of Sandy Creek in a new light: A “unique” emotionally troubled and confused individual gradually becomes socialized to intolerable levels of hate, anger, and alienation, and soon becomes immune to the horrors of death and destruction that he fantasizes. He is immersed daily in a culture that accepts and approves violence via a media, entertainment, and public and private institution that glorifies and justifies “power,” “domination,” “force” and “dehumanization.” With easy access to assault weapons, he constructs a deviant reality with each passing day. Finally, it becomes time (1) for him to be an avenging angel (note how many movies, TV shows, and honor this theme), (2) for all others to suffer at his hand, (3) for him redeem the abuses seen or witnessed each day on streets, schools, workplaces, and (4) to act as an armed militaristic hero righting wrongs. Everyone becomes his target, in a final gesture of contempt and protest toward a family, school, and life that has denied him any semblance of worth as a person. Yes, he pulled the trigger, but so did our culture of violence. And, we must ask, is it only guns that cause mass violence acts? What happens when toxins, viruses, bombs, automobiles, and drones begin to exact a toll. Guns were a means to an end, and there are hundreds of millions still out there, and more being purchased and stored each day. Anger and rage will find other means, because violence is nurtured in a cultural milieu that supports it and sustains it.

...

We can lament, apologize, pray, change some laws regarding gun control, and even speak correctly of the need for improvements in prevention-oriented school mental health services. But the major cause, our “culture of violence” that socializes all of our minds and behavior each day, is not being addressed, nor even acknowledged by our local and national leaders. Rather, they have focused on how we must guard against and control “demented individuals,” who are the trigger-pullers, but not the sources that socialize minds.

...

We need a national dialog that will yield an action agenda. This agenda must simultaneously address the many cultural forces that shape the context of our lives. As individuals and a nation, we must choose peace over war, empathy over detachment, responsibility over self-interest, connection over separation, civility over exploitation, and justice over all. We need to build a culture of peace. And to do so, we will have to give priority to a new moral code that prizes peace.

<sup>124</sup> “Evidence on Rampant Violence Against Children ‘Compels Us to Act’ – UNICEF Report,” United Nations News Centre, September 4, 2014, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=48639#.VAsGi2Pitru.

<sup>125</sup> Institute for Economics and Peace, 2015. The Global Terrorism Index is a partnership between the Institute for Economics and Peace, and the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism (START) Center at the University of Maryland. The Global Terrorism Index is a comprehensive survey of key local trends, patterns and drivers of terrorism activity in 162 countries. It draws upon START’s Global Terrorism Database, which has to date codified over 140,000 terrorist incidents. We read on pp. 6–7:

Defining terrorism is not a straightforward matter. There is no single internationally accepted definition of what constitutes terrorism, and the terrorism literature abounds with competing definitions and typologies. IEP accepts the terminology and definitions agreed to by the authors of the GTD, the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism (START) researchers and its advisory panel. The GTI therefore defines terrorism as “the threatened or actual use of illegal force and violence by a non-state actor to attain a political, economic, religious, or social goal through fear, coercion, or intimidation.” This definition recognizes that terrorism is not only the physical act of an attack, but also the psychological impact it has on a society for many years after. In order to be included as an incident in the GTD the act has to be: “an intentional act of violence or threat of violence by a non-state actor.” This means an incident has to meet three criteria in order for it to be counted as a terrorist act:

1. The incident must be intentional – the result of a conscious calculation on the part of a perpetrator.
2. The incident must entail some level of violence or threat of violence – Including property damage, as well as violence against people.
3. The perpetrators of the incidents must be sub-national actors. This database does not include acts of state terrorism.

In addition to this baseline definition, two of the following three criteria have to be met in order to be included in the START database from 1997:

- The violent act was aimed at attaining a political, economic, religious, or social goal.
- The violent act included evidence of an intention to coerce, intimidate, or convey some other message to a larger audience other than to the immediate victims.
- The violent act was outside the precepts of international humanitarian law.

<sup>126</sup> “‘Now Is the Time to Act,’ UN Urges on Release of First Global Report on Suicide Prevention,” United Nations News Centre, September 4, 2014, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=48637#.VAsGYmPitrt:

More than 800,000 people commit suicide every year – around one person every 40 seconds – according to the United Nations health agency’s first global report on suicide prevention, which was published on September 4, 2014.

<sup>127</sup> Etzioni, 2013, p. 334:

Thomas Kuhn pointed out that even scientific paradigms resist change, even though the essence of the scientific methodology is openness to new evidence. Paradigms are frequently sustained even as more and more facts cast them in doubt (so called “stubborn facts”), until the paradigm can no longer hold and the dam breaks, opening the way for a new paradigm to replace it.

The reason for such persistence is that to form a normative paradigm (and a symbiotic legal code) requires great effort and investment. Decades of moral dialogue, consensus building, legislation, court cases, and public education slowly build such a paradigm. Millions of people come to believe in it, weave it into their worldview and political preferences, and even intertwine it with their personal identities. Hence the strain of dissonance between the paradigm and reality may be high before one can expect a paradigm to break down and it be replaced with a new one. This Article suggests that, when possible, a more gradual transition is to be preferred, and seeks to contribute toward that end.

See also Mental Health Awareness Month in a Climate of Denial,” by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, May 11, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/mental-health-awareness-m\_b\_9895080.html.

<sup>128</sup> “James Mitchell: ‘I’m Just a Guy Who Got Asked to Do Something for His Country,’” by Jason Leopold, The Guardian, April 18, 2014, www.theguardian.com/world/2014/apr/18/james-mitchell-cia-torture-interview:

The findings, according to a summary leaked to McClatchy, are damning: that the agency misled the White House, Congress and the American people; that unauthorized interrogation methods were used; that the legal opinions stating the techniques did not break US torture laws were flawed; and perhaps most significant, that the torture yielded no useful intelligence.

I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>129</sup> Cainkar and Maira, 2005. See also Galli, 2016.

<sup>130</sup> “Recommendation Rec(2006)2 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the European Prison Rules,” Council of Europe, Strasbourg, France, January 11, 2006, <http://legislationline.org/documents/action/popup/id/8028>.

<sup>131</sup> “Collateral Costs: Incarceration’s Effect on Economic mobility,” Pew Charitable Trusts, 2010, www.pewtrusts.org/~media/legacy/uploadedfiles/pes\_assets/2010/CollateralCosts1.pdf.

<sup>132</sup> “Sentencing and Corrections Practices in Germany and the Netherlands: Implications for the United States,” by Ram Subramanian and Alison Shames, Vera Institute of Justice, New York, October 2013, www.vera.org/sites/default/files/resources/downloads/european-american-prison-report-v3.pdf.

<sup>133</sup> Traditionally, the police force in Northern European countries has enjoyed considerable trust, however, throughout the past decades, the trend to shrink the public sector has weakened the local capabilities of the police force even in countries such as Norway. See, for instance, “Befolkningen fortjener mer politi,” by Ingelin Killengren, director of the Norwegian police force, 2008, www.politi.no/vedlegg/lokale\_vedlegg/politidirektoratet/Vedlegg\_251.pdf.

<sup>134</sup> “New FBI Report Casts Doubt on NRA’s ‘Good Guy Stops Bad Guy’ Nonsense,” by Mike Weisser, Huffington Post, September 29, 2014, www.huffingtonpost.com/mike-weisser/fbi-report-active-shooters\_b\_5900748.html:

More than half (56 percent) were terminated by the shooter who either took his or her own life, simply stopped shooting or fled the scene. Another 26 percent ended in the traditional Hollywood-like fashion with the shooter and law enforcement personnel exchanging gunfire and in nearly all of those situations the shooter ended up either wounded or dead. In 13 percent of the shooting situations, the shooter was successfully disarmed and restrained by unarmed civilians, and in 3 percent of the incidents the shooter was confronted by armed civilians, of whom four were on-duty security guards and one person was just your average “good guy” who happened to be carrying a gun.

See also Böckler, et al., 2013, and “A Study of Active Shooter Incidents in the United States Between 2000 and 2013, Unclassified,” by the U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington Navy Yard, Washington, DC, September 16, 2013, www.fbi.gov/about-us/office-of-partner-engagement/active-shooter-incidents/a-study-of-active-shooter-incidents-in-the-u.s.-2000-2013.

<sup>135</sup> Stillwell, et al., 2008.

<sup>136</sup> “We Can Defeat ISIS,” by Amitai Etzioni, Huffington Post, August 4, 2015, www.huffingtonpost.com/amitai-etzioni/we-can-defeat-isis\_b\_7933364.html.

<sup>137</sup> Kruse, 2015, quoted by Richard Norgaard in his reply to the contributions to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on December 8, 2015, on his essay The Church of Economism and Its Discontents, Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>138</sup> Richard B. Norgaard, professor of energy and resources at the University of California at Berkeley, USA, in his reply to the contributions to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on December 8, 2015, on his essay The Church of Economism and Its Discontents, Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>139</sup> “When Nothing Is Cool,” by Lisa Ruddick, Criticism, The Point, 2015, <http://thepointmag.com/2015/criticism/when-nothing-is-cool>, an abridged version of an article in Bammer and Boetcher Joeres, 2015. See also Jameson, 1991, Latour, 2004, and Jones, 2009. Ruddick asks why academia has not been able “to shift away from norms that make ruthlessness look like sophistication,” and she writes:

Some years ago Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick touched on this complex in her well-known essay on paranoid reading, where she identified a strain of “hatred” in criticism. Also salient is a more recent piece in which Bruno Latour has described how scholars slip from “critique” into “critical barbarity,” giving “cruel treatment” to experiences and ideals that non-academics treat as objects of tender concern. Rita Felski’s current work on the state of criticism has reenergized the conversation on the punitive attitudes encouraged by the hermeneutics of suspicion. And Susan Fraiman’s powerful analysis of the “cool male” intellectual style favored in academia is concerned with many of the same patterns I consider here.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

<sup>140</sup> “2002 State of the Union Address,” by President George W. Bush, January 29, 2002, <http://georgewbush-whitehouse.archives.gov/news/releases/2002/01/print/20020129-11.html>.

<sup>141</sup> “Warum geschlossene Grenzen auch Freiheit bedeuten,” by Hans-Werner Sinn, Die Zeit, February 1, 2016, www.welt.de/wirtschaft/article151713703/Warum-geschlossene-Grenzen-auch-Freiheit-bedeuten.html.

<sup>142</sup> “Sexualstrafrecht: ‘Nein ist Nein’ als Grundtenor,” by Nico Fried, Süddeutsche Zeitung, Mai 1, 2016, www.sueddeutsche.de/politik/sexualstrafrecht-nein-ist-nein-als-grundtenor-1.2975249.

<sup>143</sup> “Nearly One in Four Adolescent Girls Experience Physical Violence: Alarming Levels of Acceptance of Violence Against Girls,” UNICEF, October 10, 2014, www.unicef.org/media/media\_76221.html.

<sup>144</sup> “Stand Up for and Invest in Teenage Girls, UN Says on World Population Day,” United Nations News Centre, July 11, 2016, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=54427#.V4aYUKLICgx.

<sup>145</sup> “EU Kids Online: National Perspectives,” by Leslie Haddon, Sonia Livingstone, and the EU Kids Online network, October 2012, www.lse.ac.uk/media@lse/research/EUKidsOnline/EU%20Kids%20III/Reports/PerspectivesReport.pdf.

<sup>146</sup> In the documentary film Porn On The Brain, aired on Channel 4 on September 30, 2013, presenter Martin Daubney, journalist and father of a boy of four, asks neuroscientists, therapists and educators, but also young people: Is pornography really harmful to children and young people? What scientific evidence is there? The results are that particularly young people risk not just being traumatized but having their very brain structure affected. The trauma can then be so difficult to bear that others are being hurt. Channel 4 is a British public-service television broadcaster. See also Daubney, 2015, Abstract:

Martin Daubney is an award-winning journalist and broadcaster. He was the longest-ever serving editor of the men’s magazine Loaded. However, when he became a father, he found himself reassessing his attitude to lads’ magazines and pornography. The journey led to his involvement in the Channel 4 documentary Porn on the Brain, where he investigated how teenagers’ pornography habits have changed, and the effect that modern pornography — its content and accessibility — is having on their brains.

See, furthermore, “Experiment That Convinced Me Online Porn Is the Most Pernicious Threat Facing Children Today,” by Martin Daubney, Daily Mail Online, September 25, 2013, www.dailymail.co.uk/femail/article-2432591/Porn-pernicious-threat-facing-children-today-By-ex-lads-mag-editor-MARTIN-DAUBNEY.html.

See also Nur Porno im Kopf, 3sat, October 16, 2014,

www.3sat.de/page/?source=/wissenschaftsdoku/sendungen/178675/index.html. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe.

<sup>147</sup> Woods, 2003.

<sup>148</sup> “Experiment That Convinced Me Online Porn Is the Most Pernicious Threat Facing Children Today,” by Martin Daubney, Daily Mail, September 25, 2013, www.dailymail.co.uk/femail/article-2432591/Porn-pernicious-threat-facing-children-today-By-ex-lads-mag-editor-MARTIN-DAUBNEY.html.

<sup>149</sup> Woods, 2003. John Woods is a member of the British Psychotherapy Foundation and the Institute of Group Analysis, a consultant psychotherapist at the Portman Clinic, and works with adults and children who have shown harmful sexual behavior. He has written books and articles on various clinical topics, dramatic monologues, and full length plays dealing with psychotherapeutic engagement with trauma and abuse.

<sup>150</sup> “Brain Activity in Sex Addiction Mirrors that of Drug Addiction,” by Nick Olejniczak, Research, University of Cambridge, July 11, 2014, www.cam.ac.uk/research/news/brain-activity-in-sex-addiction-mirrors-that-of-drug-addiction. Dr. John Williams is the Head of Neuroscience and Mental Health at the Wellcome Trust, and he warns:

Compulsive behaviors, including watching porn to excess, over-eating and gambling, are increasingly common. This study takes us a step further to finding out why we carry on repeating behaviors that we know are potentially damaging to us. Whether we are tackling sex addiction, substance abuse or eating disorders, knowing how best, and when, to intervene in order to break the cycle is an important goal of this research.

<sup>151</sup> Voon, et al., 2014.

<sup>152</sup> “Brain Activity in Sex Addiction Mirrors that of Drug Addiction,” by Nick Olejniczak, Research, University of Cambridge, July 11, 2014, www.cam.ac.uk/research/news/brain-activity-in-sex-addiction-mirrors-that-of-drug-addiction:

The researchers also asked the participants to rate the level of sexual desire that they felt whilst watching the videos, and how much they liked the videos. Drug addicts are thought to be driven to seek their drug because they want — rather than enjoy — it. This abnormal process is known as incentive motivation, a compelling theory in addiction disorders. ... Dr Voon and colleagues also found a correlation between brain activity and age – the younger the patient, the greater the level of activity in the ventral striatum in response to pornography. Importantly, this association was strongest in individuals with compulsive sexual behavior. The frontal control regions of the brain – essentially, the “brakes” on our compulsivity – continue to develop into the mid-twenties and this imbalance may account for greater impulsivity and risk taking behaviors in younger people.

<sup>153</sup> “The Long March Ahead: A Veteran’s Place in Resistance,” by Drew Pham, November 22, 2016, www.wrath-bearingtree.com/2016/11/the-long-march-ahead-a-veterans-place-in-resistance/. It is a great privilege for me to know Drew Pham personally, in his capacity of working at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR) at Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City.

<sup>154</sup> Rainald Goetz, 2012, wrote a novel about an egomaniacal manager’s rise and fall, similar to the true trajectory of Thomas Middelhoff, a highflying German corporate manager, who, even after being sentenced to three years in prison in 2014, still proudly displays a “bad boy” image.

<sup>155</sup> “The Tyranny of Democracy,” by Paul Larudee, TRANSCEND Media Service, November 21, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/11/the-tyranny-of-democracy/.

<sup>156</sup> “The Coalition of Transformation vs. the Coalition of Restoration,” by Ronald Brownstein, The Atlantic, November 21, 2012.

<sup>157</sup> Philosopher Walter Benjamin, 1940/1974, warned that, as history is controlled by the victors, we are moving backwards into the future, a move that is illusionary. He is joined in these warnings by many others, among them journalists such as Owen Hatherley, 2015, who writes on architecture, politics, and culture.

<sup>158</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000.

<sup>159</sup> Lindner, 2014b. See also lawyer Amy Chua, 2003, and her discussion of how exporting market democracy may breed ethnic hatred and global instability. See sociologist Peter Evans, 2008, for the potential of counter-hegemonic globalization movements to challenge the contemporary view of globalization as neoliberal globalization.

<sup>160</sup> Bruce Fisher in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Struggle for Meaningful Work,” January 18, 2017, in response to Klitgaard, 2017.

<sup>161</sup> Lindner and Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies network members, 2006–2017.

<sup>162</sup> Raskin, 2016, Lindner, 2016d.

<sup>163</sup> Lindner, 2016d.

<sup>164</sup> Hetherington and Weiler, 2009.

<sup>165</sup> “Turning the United States Around,” by Howard Richards, Chileufú, <http://chileufu.cl/turning-the-united-states-around/>.

<sup>166</sup> 2016 Workshop on Transforming Humiliation and Violent Conflict at Columbia University in New York City, December 8–9, 2016. See also Lindner and Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies network members, 2006–2017.

<sup>167</sup> “Why Scientific Studies Are So Often Wrong: The Streetlight Effect,” by David H. Freedman, Discover Magazine, December 10, 2010, <http://discovermagazine.com/2010/jul-aug/29-why-scientific-studies-often-wrong-streetlight-effect>.

Chapter 18

<sup>1</sup> Tolstoy, 1886/1935.

<sup>2</sup> The situation is so urgent that it is time for disaster ethics (Katastrophenethik), explains Thomas Metzinger, professor for theoretical philosophy at the University of Mainz, in Die Kraft des Guten: Warum das egoistische Gen nur die halbe Wahrheit ist, by Gert Scobel, 3sat, April 13, 2017, www.3sat.de/page/?source=/scobel/188236/index.html. 3sat is a public and advertising-free television network in Central Europe.

<sup>3</sup> “Evolving Democracy,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 13, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/02/evolving-democracy/.

<sup>4</sup> Raskin, 2016, pp. 110–111.

<sup>5</sup> Nina Jensen is a Norwegian marine biologist and secretary general of World Wildlife Fund Norway, and she is the sister of the Norwegian Minister of Finance, Siv Jensen. Nina Jensen explains the inadequacy of climate and environmental policies around the world as follows: Politicians “obviously have not enough knowledge and expertise about how bad the situation actually is, how tremendous the effects of climate change and loss of biodiversity will be and to what extent also economic assets will be at stake. Had politicians really understood these relationships, they would act on a whole different scale.” See “Føling for fjæra: Danse med ulver, dykke med haier, Portrettet av Nina Jensen” Klassekampen, February 11, 2017, p. 38–40. What makes her testimony particularly interesting is that even she, clearly, is not able to adequately alert her very own sister, a politician and finance minister.

<sup>6</sup> Stephen Purdey, international relations specialist and research affiliate at the Waterloo Institute for Complexity and Innovation, University of Waterloo, Ontario, Canada, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” September 21, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016.

<sup>7</sup> Space Exploration – A Powerful Symbol of Global Cooperation, Jim Zimmerman, NASA, interviewed by Susan T. Coleman, The Peacebuilding Podcast, December 13, 2016, <http://us11.campaign-archive1.com/?u=e5c2110f5cc4fe346c79bf3d1&id=06298a46ca&e=e7c4dd8362>. I thank Judit Révész for making me aware of this interview.

<sup>8</sup> The so-called public trust doctrine, which indicates that the citizens of a country own the natural resources, has been advocated in recent years as a tool to compel governments across the world to take action against climate change, see, among others, Our Children’s Trust, www.ourchildrenstrust.org.

<sup>9</sup> Lyotard, 1979/1984.

<sup>10</sup> Callinicos, 1989, Calhoun, 1993.

<sup>11</sup> Giddens, 1990, Giddens, 1991.

<sup>12</sup> Bauman, 2000.

<sup>13</sup> Beck, 1986.

<sup>14</sup> Castells, 1996–1998.

<sup>15</sup> Lindlof and Taylor, 2011.

<sup>16</sup> Pettit, 1997a.

<sup>17</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>18</sup> “Keynes’ Limitations and Trump’s Disasters, by Howard Richards, Chileufú, November 2016, <http://chileufu.cl/keynes-limitations-and-trumps-disasters/>:

The rust belt workers of America were not only impoverished by free trade, runaway industries, weakened unions and porous borders, but also humiliated. They were cast in the role of the uneducated, the xenophobic, the prejudiced, the homophobes, the sexists and the racists. The new world order sells free trade as a humanitarian ideal not only by packaging it as impeccable rationality which only the stupid fail to understand, but also by packaging it as love for neighbor on a global scale that only the hardhearted fail to appreciate. The flipside is that American workers are cast in the role of the stupid and the hateful. The losers become the deplorables...

<sup>19</sup> Jameson, 1991, Chapter 1, section VI, www.marxists.org/reference/subject/philosophy/works/us/jameson.htm.

<sup>20</sup> Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay discusses the “T-treaty trinity,” the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), Trade in Services Agreement (TiSA), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP):

Such agreements, negotiated in near complete secrecy, pursue geopolitical objectives. They are an attempt to build a worldwide economic and financial order that supersedes national states and they represent also an effort to protect the corporate and banking elites – the establishment 1 percent – against national governments. In the case of the TTIP, its geopolitical objective is to prevent European countries from developing comprehensive trade agreements with Russia. In the case of TPP, the objective is to isolate China. In the eyes of Washington D.C. neocon planners, they are part of ongoing economic warfare.

See also Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>21</sup> “Lessons from the Demise of the TPP,” by Jomo Kwame Sundaram and Anis Chowdhury, Inter Press Service (IPS), January 5, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/01/lessons-from-the-demise-of-the-tpp/.

<sup>22</sup> Carson, 1962. See also American Experience: Rachel Carson, documentary film directed by Michelle Ferrari, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), 2017, www.pbs.org/video/2365935530/, www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/films/rachel-carson/. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing this wonderful film with me. Our relationship can be described just like the one between Rachel Carson and Dorothy Freeman. Earlier, Linda Hartling showed me Not for Ourselves Alone: The Story of Elizabeth Cady Stanton & Susan B. Anthony, documentary film by Ken Burns, 1999, National Public Radio (NPR) and WETA, www.pbs.org/stantonanthony/.

<sup>23</sup> Gift im Acker – Glyphosat, die unterschätzte Gefahr? documentary film by Volker Barth, Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, 2015, www.ardmediathek.de/radio/die-story/Gift-im-Acker-Glyphosat-die-untersch%C3%A4tzt/WDR-Fernsehen/Video?bcastId=7486242&documentId=31418678, and <https://youtu.be/tWZspPPB85U>.

See other documentaries:

- Das Gift im Kuhstall – Sterbende Tiere, kranke Menschen, documentary film, Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, 2013, www.ardmediathek.de/wdr-fernsehen/die-story?documentId=17138936, and <https://youtu.be/c4uUx507ZZU>. Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, WDR, West German Broadcasting Cologne, a German public-broadcasting institution based in the Federal State of North Rhine-Westphalia with its main office in Cologne.

- Antibiotika ohne Wirkung? documentary film by Antje Büll, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, February 10, 2014, www.ndr.de/ratgeber/gesundheit/infektion\_immunsystem/antibiotika283.html, and https://youtu.be/D\_7rsOQ2VSI. Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg.

<sup>24</sup> “Agricultural Revolution in Germany: We Want It and We Can Do It,” by Dirk Zimmermann, Greenpeace, January 25, 2017, www.greenpeace.org/international/en/news/Blogs/makingwaves/ariculture-revolution-germany-berlin/blog/58577/.

<sup>25</sup> World Wildlife Fund (WWF), 2014. See, among many others publications, Ceballos, et al., 2015, Kolbert, 2006, Spufford and Kolbert, 2007, Kolbert, 2014. See, furthermore, Davis, 2009, and The Wayfinders, the 2009 Massey Lecture by Wade Davis, Convocation Hall, Toronto, uploaded November 20, 2011, <https://youtu.be/KfbGdoTQKuM>. See, furthermore, philosopher Alan Wilson Watts (1915 – 1973), and his Alan Watts: A Conversation with Myself in four parts, beginning with <https://youtu.be/8aufuwMiKmE>.

<sup>26</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 4, 2016: “Awake is William Stafford’s answer to the question, are you an optimist or a pessimist. He said he is just awake.”

<sup>27</sup> Raskin, 2016, pp. 110–111.

<sup>28</sup> Emmott, 2013.

<sup>29</sup> “War and Peace, Climate Change and Citizen Responses,” communication from the Schumacher Center for a New Economics, September 9, 2014, <http://us5.campaign-archive2.com/?u=69d509d113032e3126c4543ce&id=3dfa2a710e&e=5017fb4435>.

<sup>30</sup> Schöne neue Welt: “Die Welt wird auf den Kopf gestellt,” documentary film on Silicon Valley by Claus Kleber, Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, 2016, www.zdf.de/schoene-neue-welt/schoene-neue-welt-43773220.html. Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen, ZDF, Second German Television, is a German public-service television broadcaster based in Mainz, Rhineland-Palatinate.

<sup>31</sup> “Crowded Planet,” review by Clive Cookson, The Financial Times, July 12, 2013, www.ft.com/cms/s/2/a7e5ba20-e7e4-11e2-9aad-00144feabdc0.html#axzz3Cq4fyzJ8. See Ridley, 2010.

<sup>32</sup> Danny Dorling, 2013, professor of geography at the University of Sheffield.

<sup>33</sup> Hans Rosling and Steven Pinker have been criticized of having a positivity bias, also called Pollyannaism, which means remembering pleasant items more accurately than unpleasant ones. The 1913 novel Pollyanna by Eleanor H. Porter describes a girl who tries to find something to be glad about in every situation. See also “A Confused Statistician,” by Anne H. Ehrlich and Paul R. Ehrlich, Millennium Alliance for Humanity and Biosphere, November 12, 2013, <http://mahb.stanford.edu/blog/a-confused-statistician>.

<sup>34</sup> Ridley, 2010, p. 88.

<sup>35</sup> “The Rational Optimist,” review by Samuel Brittan, The Financial Times, June 12, 2010, www.ft.com/intl/cms/s/2/b2cbb506-74de-11d1-aed7-00144feabdc0.html#axzz3Cq4fyzJ8.

<sup>36</sup> Lindner, 2007b.

<sup>37</sup> Lindner, 2002, p. 127.

<sup>38</sup> See also lawyer Amy Chua, 2003, and her discussion of how exporting free market democracy may breed ethnic hatred and global instability.

<sup>39</sup> Bourdieu and Passeron, 1990, p. 159.

<sup>40</sup> Jameson, 1991. See also “When Nothing Is Cool,” by Lisa Ruddick, Criticism, The Point, 2015, <http://thepointmag.com/2015/criticism/when-nothing-is-cool>, an abridged version of an article in Bammer and Boetcher Joeres, 2015. See also Jameson, 1991, Latour, 2004, and Jones, 2009.

<sup>41</sup> Habermas and Dews, 1992, p. 187, as quoted in Outhwaite, 1994.

<sup>42</sup> Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>43</sup> More, 2014.

<sup>44</sup> John Barry, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “The Church of Economism and Its Discontents,” on November 9, 2015, in response to Norgaard, 2015.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.

<sup>46</sup> Harvey, 2000.

<sup>47</sup> Social psychologist Jonathan Haidt, 2012, in his book The Righteous Mind, identifies mass immigration as trigger for authoritarian responses. Psychologist Svend Brinkmann, 2017a, sees unbridled individualism electing collectivist responses. Foreign affairs commentator Gideon Rachman, 2017, in his book Easternization, explains that it was economic globalization that brought a protectionist response to the fore. “In essence, the populist surge is an illiberal democratic response to decades of undemocratic liberal policies,” writes political scientist Cas Mudde in “Europe’s Populist Surge: A Long Time in the Making,” by Cas Mudde, Foreign Affairs, November/December 2016, www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/europe/2016-10-17/europe-s-populist-surge.

<sup>48</sup> “Schöne, verdammte Norm: Gerade Frankreich und die USA sollten nicht dem Rechtspopulismus verfallen,” essay by Dirk Kurbjuweit, Spiegel Online, December 12, 2015, pp. 92–93, https://magazin.spiegel.de/SP/2015/51/140390039/?utm\_source=spon&utm\_campaign=centerpage. See also Winkler, 2009–2015.

<sup>49</sup> Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>50</sup> Solomon, 2005.

<sup>51</sup> Solomon, 2005. See also Galtung, 2012.

<sup>52</sup> Jackson, 1990.

<sup>53</sup> “The Coming Anarchy,” by Robert D. Kaplan, The Atlantic, February 1994, www.theatlantic.com/magazine/archive/1994/02/the-coming-anarchy/304670/, pp. 44–76.

<sup>54</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 27. See also the 1979 dystopian film Mad Max by George Miller, or novelist Cormac McCarthy, 2006, describing a father and his young son’s journey across post-apocalyptic America some years after an extinction event when the land is covered with ash and devoid of life. Sociologist Peter Frase, 2016, sees “exterminism” as one of four possible futures: communism, rentism, socialism, and exterminism. Frase arrives at this categorization by using two intersecting spectrums, one ranging from inequality to hierarchy and the other from scarcity to abundance. Frase reminds us of Walter Benjamin, 1940/1974, and his warnings that we are moving backwards into the future, a move that is illusionary. He is joined in these warnings by many others, among them journalists such as Owen Hatherley, 2015, who writes on architecture, politics, and culture.

<sup>55</sup> “Mobiles now Become Weapons As Tactics Change In Syria’s New Phoney War,” by Robert Fisk, The Independent, April 12, 2013, www.independent.co.uk/news/world/middle-east/mobiles-become-weapons-as-tactics-change-in-syrias-new-phoney-war-8570465.html.

<sup>56</sup> Schlachtfeld Internet – Wenn das Netz zur Waffe wird, a co-production of Norddeutscher Rundfunk, the US broadcaster WGBH and the Austrian Servus TV, by Svea Eckert und Alexandra Ringling and James Bamford, see <http://youtu.be/-dGdRwsWaEc>. Norddeutscher Rundfunk, NDR, North German Broadcasting, is a public radio and television broadcaster, based in Hamburg. See for media coverage in Germany, for instance, “‘Schlachtfeld Internet’: Das schwarze Budget der NSA,” von René Martens, Die Zeit, January 12, 2015, www.zeit.de/kultur/film/2015-01/schlachtfeld-internet-snowden-ard.

<sup>57</sup> “Kontrollierte Eskalation,” Der Spiegel 4/2015, January 17, 2015, p. 29, and “The Digital Arms Race: NSA Preps America for Future Battle,” by Jacob Appelbaum, Aaron Gibson, Claudio Guarnieri, Andy Müller-Maguhn, Laura Poitras, Marcel Rosenbach, Leif Ryge, Hilmar Schmundt, and Michael Sontheimer, Spiegel Online International, January 17, 2015, www.spiegel.de/international/world/new-snowden-docs-indicate-scope-of-nsa-preparations-for-cyber-battle-a-1013409.html. See also www.spiegel.de/fotostrecke/photo-gallery-controlled-escalation-fotostrecke-122938.

The National Security Agency intelligence service isn’t just trying to achieve mass surveillance of Internet communication. The digital spies of the Five Eyes alliance want more. Documents from the archive of Edward Snowden indicate they are planning for wars of the future in which the Internet will play a critical role, with the aim of being able to use the net to paralyze computer networks and, by doing so, potentially all the infrastructure they control. This slide is from an NSA presentation on its Quantum theory program.

<sup>58</sup> See also Krüger, et al., 2013.

<sup>59</sup> “‘Black budget’ Summary Details U.S. Spy Network’s Successes, Failures and Objectives,” by Barton Gellman and Greg Miller, Washington Post, August 29, 2013, www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/black-budget-summary-details-us-spy-networks-successes-failures-and-objectives/2013/08/29/7e57bb78-10ab-11e3-8cdd-bcdc09410972\_story.html?hpid=z1.

<sup>60</sup> Langner, 2012.

<sup>61</sup> Langner, 2012.

<sup>62</sup> Schell, 2003.

<sup>63</sup> “The Call of the Nation,” by Uri Avnery, Human Wrongs Watch, December 10, 2016, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2016/12/13/the-call-of-the-nation/>:

The human mind changes much slower than material circumstances. It limps at least three or four generations behind, clinging to outdated ideas and ideals, while political, economic and military realities race ahead. Modern nationalism arose only some two or three centuries ago. It is a comparatively recent invention. Some believe that it was created by the French revolution. A notable historian argued that it was created by the Spanish settlers in South America, who wanted to get rid of Spanish imperialism and constitute themselves as independent nations. Be that as it may, nationalism quickly became the dominant force in the world. By the end of World War I, it had broken up the old empires and created a dozen new nation-states. World War II finished the job. The nation state stands on two legs: the material and the spiritual. The material need to create larger markets and defend them against other large markets was obvious. The spiritual need of belonging to a human group was less so.

<sup>64</sup> “Evolving Democracy,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, February 13, 2017, www.transcend.org/tms/2017/02/evolving-democracy/.

<sup>65</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 11.

<sup>66</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 2.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid.

<sup>69</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 13.

<sup>70</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 21.

<sup>71</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>72</sup> Göle, 2013.

<sup>73</sup> Lamont, et al., 2016.

<sup>74</sup> Gabriela Saab in a personal communication on January 14, 2017:

The word for this resilience and flexibility in trying something that was denied in the first place is jeitinho (little flair, little way, little knack). It is a way of life in Brazil (for good and bad, that is important!). It means we would always (always!) try again and hope someone is going to be nice to us and help. Never get disappointed before trying once more! And the magic is that it usually works!

It is a privilege to have Gabriela Saab as esteemed member in the core leadership group of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>75</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 45. Mills, 1958.

<sup>76</sup> Rifkin, 2009.

<sup>77</sup> Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>78</sup> “Full Text of Alfred Nobel’s Will,” www.nobelprize.org/alfred\_nobel/will/will-full.html.

<sup>79</sup> “How Did Western Europe Cope with a Much Stronger Soviet Union and Warsaw Pact?” by Jan Øberg, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF) Press Info # 385, TFF Series “The New Cold War” # 6, August 29, 2016, <http://blog.transnational.org/2016/08/tff-pressinfo-385/>.

<sup>80</sup> Miller, 2006b. See her first, seminal book, Miller, 1976/1986. See also Choice, a RSA animate, where Renata Salecl

explores the paralyzing anxiety and dissatisfaction that surround limitless choice. Does the freedom to be the architects of our own lives actually hinder rather than help us? Does our preoccupation with choosing and consuming actually obstruct social change? See <https://youtu.be/1bqMY82xzWo>, and the RSA's free public events program www.thersa.org/events. See also Salecl, 2004.

<sup>81</sup> Giddens, 1991, p. 202. I thank Dino Karabeg for reminding me of this quote.

<sup>82</sup> Stael and Craiutu, 1818/2008, p. 407.

<sup>83</sup> Chambers, 1952, pp. 469–460.

<sup>84</sup> Bitter Lake, BBC documentary film by Adam Curtis, 2015, <https://youtu.be/VRbq63r7rys>. I thank Drew Pham for making me aware of this film.

<sup>85</sup> “Kabul: City Number One – Part 3,” by Adam Curtis, BBC Blogs, October 13, 2009, www.bbc.co.uk/blogs/adamcurtis/entries/302443a3-c143-3a71-8046-10ba64464fe6. Rostow laid out his theory in a book he called “The Stages of Economic Growth: A Non-Communist Manifesto.”

<sup>86</sup> “Kabul: City Number One – Part 3,” by Adam Curtis, BBC Blogs, October 13, 2009, www.bbc.co.uk/blogs/adamcurtis/entries/302443a3-c143-3a71-8046-10ba64464fe6:

Walt Whitman Rostow... said that if you put the right technologies in place and educated key elites then the countries would inevitably develop into advanced capitalist societies. They would go through a series of logical stages (there were five) until you got what he modestly called “Rostovian Lift-off.” Rostow laid out his theory in a book he called The Stages of Economic Growth: A Non-Communist Manifesto.

<sup>87</sup> Milne, 2008.

<sup>88</sup> McClelland, 1978, addressed entrepreneurial development and training in achievement thinking and behavior for small business owners in India, Tunisia, Iran, Poland, Malawi and the US.

<sup>89</sup> “Kabul: City Number One – Part 3,” by Adam Curtis, BBC Blogs, October 13, 2009, www.bbc.co.uk/blogs/adamcurtis/entries/302443a3-c143-3a71-8046-10ba64464fe6.

<sup>90</sup> Toynbee, 1962, Cullather, 2002.

<sup>91</sup> See also Martin, 2014.

<sup>92</sup> “Who Gets Radicalized? What I Learned From My Interviews With Extremist Disciples,” by Amra Sabic-El-Rayess, Huffington Post, June 19, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/entry/who-gets-radicalized-what-i-learned-from-my-interviews\_us\_5765fddce4b0ed0729a1c5c3.

<sup>93</sup> “Ein katastrophaler Fehler”: SPIEGEL-Gespräch Der amerikanische Historiker Timothy Snyder über die Vorbedingungen des Holocaust – und die gefährlichen Folgen unbedachter Nahostpolitik, Der Spiegel 44/2015, November 24, 2015, pp. 140–143. See the original German text, pp. 140–141:

Snyder: Etwas verkürzt könnte man sagen: Es gibt vor allem zwei falsche Lehren aus dem Holocaust. Eine linke und eine rechte. Letztere besagt: Autoritäre Regime mit totalitären Zügen müssen gestürzt werden. Die US-Regierung der Bush-Jahre glaubte das. Auch deshalb begann sie den Irakkrieg, mit den bekannten Folgen. Die Neokonservativen misstrauen dem Staat. Aber wer glaubt, man könne ein Land befreien, indem man einen Staat zerstört, macht einen katastrophalen Fehler.

SPIEGEL: Und die falsche linke Lehre?

Snyder: Die Überzeugung, dass Auschwitz die Kehrseite der Moderne sei, eine unterschwellige Folge des Fortschritts und des wissenschaftlichen Denkens. Das Gegenteil ist der Fall. Die Nazis misstrauten der Wissenschaft und ihrer Universalität zutiefst und hielten sie für eine jüdische Erfindung. Deshalb entwickelten sie eine ökologisch begründete Panik – das ist der Kern der Lebensraum-Idee.

SPIEGEL: Aber die Nazis liebten die moderne Technik, bauten Autobahnen, nutzten neue Medien wie Radio und Kino, entwickelten die Raketentechnik. Auch Menschen, die nicht mit dem “Dritten Reich” sympathisierten, waren von seinem eigentümlichen Modernismus fasziniert.

Snyder: Das stimmt. Aber Hitler meinte, dass jede wirklich wichtige Technologie aus der Kreativität der Rasse entstehe – wie jede wahre Kunst. Das Konzept einer universalistischen Wissenschaft empfand er als jüdisches Täuschungsmanöver.

See also Snyder, 2010, 2015, 2017.

<sup>94</sup> Escrigas, 2016. Cristina Escrigas is the former executive director of, and current adviser to, the Global University Network for Innovation (GUNI), an organization created by UNESCO, the United Nations University, and the Technical University of Catalonia (UPC).

<sup>95</sup> Ted (F.E.) Trainer is an Australian academic, and an advocate of economic de-growth, simple living, and “conserver” lifestyles. He shows that the “decoupling claim” is not feasible. It claims that economic growth can be separated from demand for materials and energy, thus enabling these to be kept down to sustainable levels. Trainer presents evidence from about thirty studies, which all indicate that little or no decoupling is taking pace, let alone on the scale that ecomodernists assume is possible. See “Decoupling: The Issue, and Collected Evidence,” July 8, 2016, <http://thesimplerway.info/DECOUPLING.htm>, “But Can’t Technical Advance Solve the Problems?,” April 9, 2016, <http://thesimplerway.info/TECHFIX.htm>, “The Extreme Implausibility of Ecomodernism,” March 16, 2016, <http://thesimplerway.info/ECOMODERNISMcrit.htm>.

See also Alexander, 2009, Doherty and Etzioni, 2003, Trainer, 2014. Trainer is on the faculty of the Simplicity Institute, Office of Environmental Programmes, Melbourne University, Australia, see <http://simplicityinstitute.org/ted-trainer>. He works with the Simpler Way project, which has primarily been about trying to show that the required alternative ways would be easily, cheaply, and quickly built if people wanted to do that. See www.socialsciences.arts.unsw.edu.au/tsw/TheAltSoc.Ing.html for a detailed sketch.

See also “History Has Knocked Very Loudly on Our Door. Will We Answer?” World Future Forum 2016 – Opening Speech by Jakob von Uexküll, March 15, 2016, www.worldfuturecouncil.org/2016/03/15/world-future-forum-2016-opening-speech-jakob-von-Uexküll/.

See, furthermore, “Consume More, Conserve More: Sorry, But We Just Can’t Do Both,” by George Monbiot, The Guardian, November 24, 2015, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2015/nov/24/consume-conserve-economic-growth-sustainability.

<sup>96</sup> Many are impressed by the truly impressive promises waiting in technological progress, yet, many hope that the question of “promises for whom?” will solve itself. Albert Hammond is a social entrepreneur who holds degrees engineering and applied mathematics, and he summarizes those promises in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Degrowth Alternative,” February 1, 2015:

Hi All, I have to weigh in. Bending the direction of growth is not only feasible, but to some degree likely; decoupling from the economic engine of capitalism and from growth (in some sense) is not. Indeed, far from facing a resource crisis, we are drowning in cheap resources – oil, natural gas, sunlight. Moreover, it seems quite clear that the on-going and accelerating pace of science and technological change may be one of the best hopes for shaping the direction of growth. Within 20 years, we will likely have grid scale batteries and solar devices above 35 or 40 percent efficient. We will likely have synthetic biology so powerful that we can not only increase food yields but nutritional content and transform many chronic diseases. We may even have workable fusion energy sources, thanks to high temperature superconducting magnets. As Arthur points out, the population growth pressure will fade away. And we will have mobile access to unlimited information and computing power– which, with a little luck, will translate into really effective self-education systems available to everyone. To me, that education revolution and the spreading transformation of the role of women (it is not yet 100 years since women became legal citizens of the US and could vote) are the really big – and the really hopeful – transition drivers for the next 50 years.

I speak in part based on a current project that I am doing with MIT that has provided a look into where science can go/is going. Unless you are paying very close attention, it is really hard to grasp how rapidly the frontier of knowledge is advancing in dozens of fields. So if we avoid a global war or similar total breakdown of society for another 3–4 decades, I think it likely that the weight of informed opinion in the world will in fact drive change in more positive directions. For one quick example, who would have guessed that the acceptance of gay marriage in the U.S. has spread even more quickly than the change that made cigarette smoking socially unacceptable 2 decades earlier? This is an example of what I have called the soft variables that can change far more rapidly than the hard variables of energy and infrastructure.

This is overly condensed – the more detailed and subtle version of the argument is not short – but I suggest we look for ways to bend the curve, not break it.

Al Hammond

<sup>97</sup> Berit Ås, in a personal conversation in her home in Asker, Norway, May 31, 2014. It was a privilege to have Berit Ås as opponent when I defended my doctoral dissertation in 2001 at the University of Oslo, and to have her as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. See also Ås, 2008.

<sup>98</sup> The phrase “possessive individualism” was the best-known contribution to political philosophy by Crawford Brough Macpherson, 1962 (1911 – 1987). The theory of “possessive individualism” describes an individual who conceives of herself as the sole proprietor of his or her skills and owes nothing to society.

<sup>99</sup> Eder, 1992.

<sup>100</sup> Eder, 1992, p. 378.

<sup>101</sup> Ibid.

<sup>102</sup> Sociologist Hans-Georg Soeffner, 1988.

<sup>123</sup> Wilson and Gowdy, 2013, p. S6.

<sup>124</sup> Wilson and Gowdy, 2013.

<sup>125</sup> Frank, 2011.

<sup>126</sup> Wilson and Gowdy, 2013, p. S6. See also Hodgson and Knudsen, 2010.

<sup>127</sup> See Elina Penttinen, 2013, on how “the mechanistic-deterministic worldview derived from the Newtonian model has influenced the epistemology and methodology of IR (i.e., the idea that the world is constituted of independent fragments), and seeks ways to develop a new methodology for IR by drawing on the potential of a non-fragmented worldview”:

The author argues that it is this modern Western view of human beings (or societies) as isolated and separate from the world that prevents IR from finding new solutions to the questions of war and conflict. Drawing upon case studies, testimonies and examples from film, this book instead proposes joy as an alternative methodology for studying IR, exploring the possibility of self-healing in physical and emotional trauma in extreme violent conditions. The author also discusses how posthumanism contributes to positive psychology in understanding happiness and empowerment, and demonstrates how these findings can further widen the study of IR.

<sup>128</sup> Siebert and Ott, 2016, p. 33.

<sup>129</sup> Boehm, 2001. Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, explain in footnote 4:

In a survey analyzing 48 small primordial societies, partly organized as egalitarian hunter–gatherers, partly as chiefdoms, Boehm (1993) reports regular intentional sanctions placed on leaders who overstepped their prerogatives or on individuals trying to usurp the group such as public opinion and open discussion in councils, criticism and ridicule, and open disobedience. In more severe cases, the egalitarian alliance also ostracized the leader and terminated his leadership. In some cases, the African !Kung, the Australian aborigines, and the south American Yaruro even executed former leaders or “extremely aggressive men.” Bingham (1999) has speculated that the threat of being injured by stone-throwing – a technique that must at some time have been invented in human phylogeny – may have been instrumental in guaranteeing a balance of power within the early groups.

<sup>130</sup> Ostrom, 1990, 2010.

<sup>131</sup> The Planetary Integrity Project: Creating a Safe Operating Space in Law and Governance, 2016, <http://planetaryboundariesinitiative.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/10/PIP-Report-Sept-2016.pdf>.

<sup>132</sup> 2011 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Enlarging the Boundaries of Compassion,” in Dunedin, New Zealand, August 29 – September 1, 2011, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/17.php.

<sup>133</sup> The Next Step: Earth Trusteeship, by Klaus Bosselmann, at the Fifth Interactive Dialogue of the United Nations General Assembly on Harmony with Nature, United Nations Headquarters, New York, April 21, 2017. Klaus Bosselmann is Professor of Law and Director of the New Zealand Centre for Environmental Law at the University of Auckland, and Chair of the IUCN World Commission on Environmental Law Ethics Specialist Group. See also Bosselmann, 2015.

<sup>134</sup> Christopher Boehm, 1993, 1999, 2012.

<sup>135</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S36. See also Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?” by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>136</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S36.

<sup>137</sup> Ibid.

<sup>138</sup> Eisler, 1987, Fiske, 1991.

<sup>139</sup> Rifkin, 2009. Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>140</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000. Social scientists Paul H. Ray and Sherry Ruth Anderson, through their surveys, identified three main cultural trends. First, the moderns, the cultural movement that started about 500 years ago and that endorses the “realist” worldview of either big business, big government, or big media, or past socialist, communist, or fascist movements. Then, the first countermovement against the moderns are the traditionals, the religious right and rural populations. The most recent countermovement are the cultural creatives, who value strong ecological sustainability for the planet, support women’s issues, personal growth, authenticity, and are wary of big business. The cultural creatives movement is currently flowing together from two branches that both started out around 1960 and initially antagonized each other, namely, the consciousness movement, an inward-oriented movement, focusing on the inner state of the psyche, and the social movement, an outward-oriented movement, focusing on action for peace in the streets. When Ray and Anderson published their work in 2000, in the United States, traditionals comprised about 24 to 26 percent of the adult population (approximately 48 million people), moderns about 47 to 49 percent (approximately 95 million), and cultural creatives are about 26 to 28 percent (approximately 50 million). In the European Union, the cultural creatives were about 30 to 35 percent of the adult population.

<sup>141</sup> Taylor, 1989, Heelas, 1996, 2008, Wilce, 2009. This trend is now being introduced from the West to other world regions. There is a “psycho-boom” (xinli re), for instance, in China (Huang, 2014), with translations of Pema Chödrön, Ken Wilber, and Eckhart Tolle. Sonya Pritzker, 2016:

Inner child workshops in China can be said to function in much the same way. Indeed, salons geared towards the inner child in this Beijing center consist of adaptations of exercises developed by a European psychologist who leads longer inner child workshops, variably focused on “transforming emotions,” “transforming beliefs,” and “meeting true self,” when he is in town.

<sup>142</sup> Carveth, 2013. I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this book. Also Maria Montessori thought in a similar line in her educational theory, when she called on instructors to “give priority to the inner teacher who animated” the child. The trope of the wisdom of the inner teacher that sits at our hearts is also to be found, for instance, in Tibetan Buddhists.

<sup>143</sup> On June 5, 2008, more than one thousand representatives from indigenous communities across the Americas gathered in Lima, Peru, and agreed on a new social system, called Living Well. See, among others, www.villageearth.org/pages/Projects/Peru/perublog/2008/06/living-well-development-alternative.html#. Consider also the sustainability principle in The Great Law of the Iroquois Confederacy and the Ley de la Madre Tierra in Bolivia.

<sup>144</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 4, 2016.

<sup>145</sup> Wergeland, 1843, p. 23:

Haard er den Himmel, som bedækker Norge, Klimatet er strength; vi ere Beboere af en hyperboræisk Afkrog paa Kloden, og Naturen har bestemt os til at savne saamange af de mildere Landes Fordele. Men Naturen, god midt i sin tilsyneladende Ubarmhjertighed, og retfærdig midt i sin Uretfærdighed, har aabenbar villet levne os Erstatning for hine Savn, og derfor beskikket, at Norges, i nogle Henseender saa ufordeeltige, Beliggenhed skulde i andre Henseender være saare velgjørende.

I thank Bernt Hagtvæt and Nikolai Brandal for making me aware of this quote. It is a privilege to have Bernt Hagtvæt as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>146</sup> Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>147</sup> Frost, 2003, p. 11.

<sup>148</sup> “Fra Roosevelt til Brundtland,” foredrag under prisutdelingen av Tore Frost, Fangenes testament pris 2011 tildeles filosof Tore Lindholm, Fredshuset i Risør, 25. juni 2011, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/fredsreiser/2011/fangenes\_testamente\_2011.htm. Frost berørte flere grunnleggende problemstillinger: Hvor langt kan vi strekke de ulike rettighetene, og hva skal vi legge mest vekt på: individuelle forskjeller eller felles likheter? I foredraget trakk Frost de store linjene fra menneskerettighetenes opprinnelse og frem til i dag, og var innom både “menneskerettighetenes mor” Eleanor Roosevelt og Gro Harlem Brundtland.

It was a great honor and immense joy for me to receive the 2009 Prisoner’s Testament” Peace Award (Fangenes testament pris), www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/fredsreiser/2009/takketales\_evelin\_lindner.htm.

<sup>149</sup> Roosevelt, 1948.

<sup>150</sup> “Respekt for menneskets verdighet – en hovedfaktor i alle forsoningsprosesser,” tale under prisutdelingen av filosof Tore Frost, representant for priskomiteén, Blanche Majors Forsoningspris 2012 tildeles HKH Kronprins Haakon, Fredshuset i Risør, 13. juni 2012, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/forsoningspris/2012/hovedtale\_respekt\_menneskeverd.htm. Translated from the Norwegian original by Lindner: “Alle mennesker er født frie i (deres iboende) verdighet og (er derfor) like i (deres) menneskerettigheter.”

<sup>151</sup> “Respekt for menneskets verdighet – en hovedfaktor i alle forsoningsprosesser,” tale under prisutdelingen av filosof Tore Frost, representant for priskomiteén, Blanche Majors Forsoningspris 2012 tildeles HKH Kronprins Haakon, Fredshuset i Risør, 13. juni 2012, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/forsoningspris/2012/hovedtale\_respekt\_menneskeverd.htm. Translated and summarized from the Norwegian original by Lindner:

Idéen om menneskets iboende verdighet umuliggjør forestillinger om gradert verdighet Menneskets verdighet er ikke lenger å forstå som et resultat av eksterne garantister, tvert om er menneskets verdighet begrunnet på en kvalitet som er naturgitt, nettopp iboende i menneskets natur. Uavhengig av såvel Gudsautoritet som fornuftsautoritet er det et faktum, slår Verdenserklæringen av 1948 fast, at mennesket har en verdighet (dignity).

<sup>152</sup> “Respekt for menneskets verdighet – en hovedfaktor i alle forsoningsprosesser,” tale under prisutdelingen av filosof Tore Frost, representant for priskomiteén, Blanche Majors Forsoningspris 2012 tildeles HKH Kronprins Haakon, Fredshuset i Risør, 13. juni 2012, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/forsoningspris/2012/hovedtale\_respekt\_menneskeverd.htm. Translated and summarized from the Norwegian original by Lindner:

Det er også klokt ikke å forsøke seg på definitive begrunnelser av denne karakter. Kravet om anerkjennelse av menneskets iboende verdighet er et postulat uten innhold.

<sup>153</sup> Palmquist, 2015. I thank Mark Singer for making me aware of Stephen Palmquist’s work on philosopher Immanuel Kant. It is a privilege to have Kant expert Mark Singer as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. From my point of view, Palmquist rightly points out that religious Schwärmerei as Kant calls it, is not correctly translated with “fanaticism” nor “enthusiasm.” However, also Palmquist’s suggestion of “delirium” does not resonate with me. The best term for me, since it also encapsulates Kant’s disdain for this phenomenon, would be “puppy love.” I personally feel the same sentiment that Kant feels: I reject religion that expresses itself in any form of “puppy love,” while I do not reject “critical mysticism.”

<sup>154</sup> “Respekt for menneskets verdighet – en hovedfaktor i alle forsoningsprosesser,” tale under prisutdelingen av filosof Tore Frost, representant for priskomiteén, Blanche Majors Forsoningspris 2012 tildeles HKH Kronprins Haakon, Fredshuset i Risør, 13. juni 2012, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/forsoningspris/2012/hovedtale\_respekt\_menneskeverd.htm. Translated from the Norwegian original by Lindner:

Vårt følelsesliv, i spennet mellom lidenskap og lidelse, konfronterer oss med kjærligheten som selve grunnpremisset for menneskelivet i hele dets kompleksitet. Kjærligheten er hva livet dreier seg om.

<sup>155</sup> “Respekt for menneskets verdighet – en hovedfaktor i alle forsoningsprosesser,” tale under prisutdelingen av filosof Tore Frost, representant for priskomiteén, Blanche Majors Forsoningspris 2012 tildeles HKH Kronprins Haakon, Fredshuset i Risør, 13. juni 2012, www.aktive-fredsreiser.no/forsoningspris/2012/hovedtale\_respekt\_menneskeverd.htm. Translated and summarized from the Norwegian original by Lindner:

Konfrontert med dette, fristes jeg imidlertid – helt på fallrepet – til å pirke en siste gang på det globale menneskebildes faretruende tendens til abstrakt og livsfjern humanisme. Det dreier seg nok en gang om verdenshumanismens formular: Respekt for menneskets iboende verdighet. Med kjærligheten som en tydeliggjørelse av hva vi mener med menneskets “iboende verdighet,” så virker denne appell til respekt nokså floskelaktig, samtidig som ordet “respect” også virker lite adekvat i denne sammenheng. Respekt er vel forøvrig noe vi mennesker skal vise overfor alt liv, det er ikke noe som eksklusivt gjelder menneskelivet alene. Derfor burde vi kanskje se oss om etter andre og langt mer adekvate uttrykk for vår forpliktelse overfor menneskelivet. Kanskje det lot seg gjøre å pusse støvet av den gamle tids vokabular: ærefrykt for (menneske-)livet? Ordet “ærefrykt” gir helt persisten påminnelse til oss om at mennesket er noe vi med rette ærer, men det er også et livsvesen vi med like god grunn bør frykte. Ordet antyder fallhøyden i det menneskelige liv og den bør vi vokte oss for å forflate. Ordet åpenlegger dimensjonene over menneskelivet i dets intense lidenskap og lidelse. Ærefrykt for mennesket – på godt og ondt – i dets rystende kjærlighetsliv.

<sup>156</sup> “Politics and Conscience,” speech by Václav Havel, 1984, www.vaclavhavel.cz/showtrans.php?cat=clanky&val=73\_aj\_clanky.html&typ=HTML:

In an author’s note, Havel writes, “This speech was written for the University of Toulouse, where I would have delivered it on receiving an honorary doctorate, had I attended.”

Havel, of course, had no passport and could not travel abroad. At the ceremony at the University of Toulouse-Le Mirail on May 14, 1984, he was represented by the English playwright Tom Stoppard.

The essay first appeared in Prague in a saynizdat collection called The Natural World as Political Problem: Essays on Modern Man (Prague: Edice Expedice, Volume 188, 1984). The first English translation, by Erazim Kohák and Roger Scruton, appeared in the Salisbury Review, Number 2 (January 1985). This is the translation used here.

<sup>157</sup> See American Experience: Rachel Carson, documentary film directed by Michelle Ferrari, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), 2017, www.pbs.org/video/2365935530/, www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/films/rachel-carson/. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing this wonderful film with me. Our relationship can be described just like the one between Rachel Carson and Dorothy Freeman. Earlier, Linda Hartling showed me Not for Ourselves Alone: The Story of Elizabeth Cady Stanton & Susan B. Anthony, documentary film by Ken Burns, 1999, National Public Radio (NPR) and WETA, www.pbs.org/stantonanthony/. See also Carson, 1962.

- <sup>158</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 4, 2016.
- <sup>159</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. See a review by social psychologist and Kurt Lewin expert David Bargal, 2011b. Read more about David Bargal in note 169 in the Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions at the end of Section Three.
- <sup>160</sup> Emotional Literacy is a book by Claude M. Steiner, 2003, a psychotherapist who has written extensively about transactional analysis (TA). I thank Janet Gerson of reminding me of Steiner's work.
- <sup>161</sup> Freire, 1968/1973.
- <sup>162</sup> Rosenwein, 2006, pp. 19;197–202.
- <sup>163</sup> Ross, 2013, pp. 9, 45–46.
- <sup>164</sup> Oliner and Oliner, 1988.
- <sup>165</sup> The Greater Good Science Center at the University of California, Berkeley, CA, <http://greatergood.berkeley.edu/about>.
- <sup>166</sup> Keltner, et al., 2010, p. 15. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this particular book edited by Dacher Keltner.
- <sup>167</sup> See also the idea of a “long sixteenth century” (circa 1450 – 1640), by historian Fernand Braudel, 1949, or the “long nineteenth century” (1789 – 1914), by historian Eric Hobsbawm, in Hobsbawm, 1962, 1975, 1987.
- <sup>168</sup> Münkler, 2015.
- <sup>169</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.
- <sup>170</sup> Wandel durch Annäherung, presentation by Egon Bahr, July 15, 1963, at the Evangelical Academy in Tutzing, Germany, German original: www.fes.de/archiv/adsd\_neu/inhalt/stichwort/tutzing\_rede.pdf; English translation: “Change through Rapprochement,” http://germanhistorydocs.ghi-dc.org/sub\_document.cfm?document\_id=81.
- <sup>171</sup> Encyclical Letter Laudato Si' of the Holy Father Francis on Care For Our Common Home, May 23, 2015, http://w2.vatican.va/content/francesco/en/encyclicals/documents/papa-francesco\_20150524\_enciclica-laudato-si.html.
- <sup>172</sup> Marshall, 1999. It is a privilege to have Monty Marshall as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its inception.
- <sup>173</sup> “Humiliated fury” is a term coined by psychologist Helen Block Lewis in Lewis, 1971. I thank Thomas Scheff for making me aware of Lewis's work. See for some of his work, Scheff and Retzinger, 1991, Scheff, 1994, Scheff, 1997, Scheff, 2000, Scheff, 2006, Scheff, 2007, Scheff, 2013, Scheff and Retzinger, 1997.
- <sup>174</sup> “Obama Warns of Long Campaign as Iraq Strikes Continue against Isis,” by Martin Chulov in Irbil, Mark Townsend in London, Jon Swaine in New York, The Observer, August 10, 2014, www.theguardian.com/world/2014/aug/09/obama-isis-northern-iraq-kurds-long-term-airdrops:
 Meanwhile, the former foreign secretary, David Miliband, speaking in the Observer, acknowledged that the 2003 invasion of Iraq had contributed to the country's current disintegration and mounting crisis at the hands of Islamist militants.
 Miliband, expressing fresh regret over Britain's involvement in the war, admitted that the outcome of the war in Iraq “induces a high degree of humility.”
 “It's clearly the case that the invasion of Iraq, or more importantly what happened afterwards, is a significant factor in understanding the current situation in the country,” said Miliband, during a wide-ranging interview in New York.
- See David Miliband in an exclusive interview: “David Miliband: ‘I Want Ed to Succeed. I'm Sure He Feels the Same About Me,’” by Jon Swaine in New York, The Observer, August 9, 2014, www.theguardian.com/politics/2014/aug/09/david-miliband-interview-new-york.
- <sup>175</sup> “The Truth about the IS,” by Chandra Muzaffar, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/09/the-truth-about-the-is/.
- <sup>176</sup> “God Wills It!” by Ury Avnery, Uri Avnery's Column, September 6, 2014, www.avnery-news.co.il/english/. Ury Avnery is a journalist, writer, peace activist, a former member of the Israeli parliament Knesset, and the founder of Gush Shalom.
- <sup>177</sup> Amir Rana, director of the Pak Institute for Peace Studies (<http://san-pips.com>), September 9, 2014, <https://plus.google.com/u/0/114138804998079535274/posts?cfem=1>.

<sup>178</sup> “Egypt: Polarisation and Genocide,” by Richard Falk, Global Justice in the 21st Century, August 24, 2013, <https://richardfalk.wordpress.com/2013/08/24/1295/>. Richard Falk is Albert G. Milbank Professor Emeritus of International Law at Princeton University and visiting distinguished professor in Global and International Studies at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He is also the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Palestinian human rights.

<sup>179</sup> “Egypt: Polarisation and Genocide,” by Richard Falk, Global Justice in the 21st Century, August 24, 2013, <https://richardfalk.wordpress.com/2013/08/24/1295/>. Falk is dismayed at the brutality with which the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt is being crushed after its deposal in the military coup of 2013, and how little protest this brutality elicits. He writes: “Think of it: the group that had prevailed in a series of free elections throughout the nation is scapegoated overnight into ‘terrorists’ that must be crushed.” He concludes:

These Egyptian developments also raise awkward questions about whether there exist outer limits to the politics of self-determination, which has authenticated many national movements against European colonialism and oppressive rule. Egypt is in the throes of what might be called a process of Satanic self-determination, and there is no prospect of humanitarian intervention even if the motivation were present, which it isn’t. Who would even have the temerity to invoke the norm of Responsibility to Protect (R2P), so pompously relied upon to validate the destruction of Gaddafi’s Libya, in the dire circumstances of the Muslim Brotherhood? R2P is not an emergent principle of international law, as advocates claim, but an operative principle of geopolitical convenience.

The ethos of human solidarity means that none of us dedicated to human rights, to the accountability of leaders for crimes against humanity, and to the quest for humane governance should abandon Egypt in this tragic hour of need. At the same time, we need to admit that there is no politics of human solidarity capable of backing up the ethos even in the face of genocidal tremors.

<sup>180</sup> “Governments Can Reduce Our Dignity to that of Tagged Animals,” by Edward Snowden, The Guardian, May 3, 2016, www.theguardian.com/us-news/2016/may/03/edward-snowden-assassination-complex-governments-tagged-animals-drone-warfare-whistleblower. In his Foreword in The Assassination Complex, a new book about drone warfare, Snowden explains why leaking information about wrongdoing is a vital act of resistance. I thank Ulrich Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. It is a privilege to have Ulrich Spalthoff as member on the board of directors of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, and director of Dignity Press.

<sup>181</sup> Etzioni, 2013.

<sup>182</sup> Etzioni, 2013, p. 335:

Daily news reminds one that people in very different parts of the world feel personally aggrieved, insulted, and humiliated when they hold that their nation’s sovereignty has been violated, even if the troops of another nation merely crossed a minor, vague line in the shifting sands. Millions of people have shown that they are willing to die to protect the sovereignty of their nation, an indication of the depth of their commitment to this precept. The same complex of normative ideas is also tied to the strongly held precepts of self-determination that played a key role in the dismantling of colonial empires and the rise of independent nation states. The right of state sovereignty is trumpeted by the governments and citizens of both autocracies and democracies – all of whom readily decry foreign intervention into their affairs on nationalist grounds. The liberal international order as a normative paradigm, which is centered on the respect for sovereignty, is ensconced in a slew of international laws and institutions, such as the International Criminal Court (ICC) and most notably in the Charter of the United Nations (UN).

<sup>183</sup> Etzioni, 2013, Abstract.

<sup>184</sup> “Individual Responsibility,” by John Scales Avery, Human Wrongs Watch, January 20, 2017, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2017/01/20/individual-responsibility/>.

<sup>185</sup> Lindner, 2016e.

<sup>186</sup> John Bunzl in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Struggle for Meaningful Work,” January 19, 2017, in response to Klitgaard, 2017.

<sup>187</sup> See, for instance, “Ecuador Revives Campaign for UN Tax Body,” by Thalif Deen, Inter Press Service (IPS), January 27, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/01/ecuador-revives-campaign-for-un-tax-body/.

<sup>188</sup> “Interview with John Scales Avery, One of the Greatest Living Intellectuals on Earth,” by Binu Mathew, Human Wrongs Watch, March 15, 2017, <https://human-wrongs-watch.net/2017/03/23/interview-with-john-scales-avery-one-of-the-greatest-living-intellectuals-on-earth/>.

<sup>189</sup> See Amy Chua, 2007, on hyperpower, Michael Hudson, 2003, on super imperialism, or Richard Johnson, 2007, on how the concept of hegemony remains useful. Watch also the interview “The Moment of Empire” that Harry Kreisler conducted with Amy Chua on November 21, 2007, as part of the “Conversations with History” at the Institute of International Studies, University of California, Berkeley. See www.youtube.com/watch?v=QenLIFx4cCQ. In this interview, Chua explains the advantages of the “inclusivity of tolerance”: The best and brightest will never be in one ethnicity; tolerance is a necessary, even though not sufficient element to become or remain a hyperpower (an empire that dominates the world). What Chua found in her research was that hyperpowers, throughout history, to maximize power, made use of diversity rather than suppressing it, and they did so through inclusive tolerance. Tolerance was employed because it produced strategic advantages, rather than from the perspective of present-day enlightenment-definitions of tolerance: slavery and persecution is simply too inefficient and it is easier to rule by the compliance of underlings. Chua describes the evolution of hyperpowerdom as evolving from personalities to processes, from conquest to commerce, from invasion to immigration, from autocracy to democracy. At the present point in history, the relevant resources are innovation, commerce, trade, and attracting the best and brightest, if needed, through immigration. The Dutch were the first, Chua points out. Scots, Huguenots, and Jews made the Britain empire possible, a development that was enabled through the Bill of Rights that was enacted by the Parliament of England in 1689. Hyperpowers, however, fall with intolerance and xenophobia: Fear-driven chauvinism and ethnocentrism undercut tolerance and cause power to spiral downward. Too much tolerance, however, too much diversity, is as subversive as too much intolerance. In the case of too much tolerance, unity – or what Chua calls “glue” – lacks. America was the first democratic hyperpower. According to a study, foreign-born entrepreneurs stood behind one in four U.S. technology startups over the past decade. See also Wadhwa, et al., 2009. When military domination is no longer feasible, the question arises as to how to create the “glue” of good-will and loyalty. Persians and Mongols used military power, Rome granted citizenship also to non-Romans, however, the United States, if it wishes to preserve power, can do neither. Chua explains the advantages of building “glue” through immigration (incorporating the best and brightest from all around the world) and outsourcing (creating links of loyalty in other parts of the world). Chua predicts that China, since it is an ethnically defined society, will never become a hyperpower, even if the United States were to fall. To summarize Chua’s arguments, she speaks up for unity in diversity, and warns against letting unity in diversity veer toward uniformity and division.

The advantages of inclusivity, one may argue, however, are not valid for hyperpowers only. The global community is a case, at the highest global scale. There are also less grand scale cases, and as present-day example Indonesia may serve. Mohammad Yazid, staff writer at the Jakarta Post, explains that the lesson for Indonesia is that “the majority needs to promote tolerance, mutual respect, protection and empathy for ethnic, religious and political minorities.” See “From Jakarta to Kosovo – What’s the Big Attraction?” by Mohammad Yazid, Jakarta Post, June 5, 2007, www.thejakartapost.com/news/2007/06/05/jakarta-kosovo-what039s-big-attraction.html.

<sup>190</sup> “Schöne, verdammte Norm: Gerade Frankreich und die USA sollten nicht dem Rechtspopulismus verfallen,” essay by Dirk Kurbjuweit, Spiegel Online, December 12, 2015, pp. 92–93, https://magazin.spiegel.de/SP/2015/51/140390039/?utm\_source=spon&utm\_campaign=centerpage. See also Winkler, 2009–2015.

<sup>191</sup> Kent Klitgaard, 2017, in his response to comments on the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “The Struggle for Meaningful Work,” on February 16, 2017.

<sup>192</sup> Ibid.

<sup>193</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 6, 2016.

<sup>194</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on September 4, 2016.

<sup>195</sup> Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 5.

<sup>196</sup> Juliet B. Schor is the Co-founder of the Center for a New American Dream, www.newdream.org.

<sup>197</sup> Kimmel, 2013.

<sup>198</sup> 2016 Stanford University’s 125th Commencement Address by Ken Burns, June 12, 2016, <http://news.stanford.edu/2016/06/12/prepared-text-2016-stanford-commencement-address-ken-burns/>. Ken Burns, historical documentary filmmaker, and I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of his address.

<sup>199</sup> “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/: “Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called ‘The Devil’s Dynamo’?” by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/:

When the Cold War ended with the collapse of the Soviet Union, a Washington-based think tank called “Project for a New American Century” maintained that a strategic moment had arrived: The United States was now the sole superpower, and it ought to use military force to dominate and reshape the rest of the world. Many PNAC members occupied key positions in the administration of George W. Bush. These included Dick Cheney, I. Lewis Libby, Donald Rumsfeld, Paul Wolfowitz, Eliot Abrams, John Bolton and Richard Perle. The idea that the United States can and should achieve global hegemony through military force seems to motivate US policy today. The goal of controlling the world's supply of scarce resources seems to be almost forgotten. Today, the motive seems to be power for the sake of power; domination for the sake of domination. But of course, the military-industrial complex does not care so deeply about resources. All that it needs to be enriched is perpetual war. Today, the US government is taking actions that seem almost insane, risking a nuclear war with Russia and simultaneously alienating China. In the long run, such hubris cannot succeed. Overspending on war will lead to economic collapse. Ironically the military sells itself as the protector of the security of the population, but it does no such thing. On the contrary, it threatens to kill hundreds of millions of ordinary people in a nuclear war.

...

The Nuremberg principles, which were used in the trial of Nazi leaders after World War II, explicitly outlawed "Crimes against peace: (i) Planning, preparation, initiation or waging of war of aggression or a war in violation of international treaties, agreements or assurances; (ii) Participation in a common plan or conspiracy for the accomplishment of any of the acts mentioned under (i)."

See more in note 46 in Chapter 11, and in note 127 in Chapter 14.

<sup>200</sup> Knausgård, 2009–2011.

<sup>201</sup> "Testosterone In Male Songbirds May Enhance Desire To Sing But Not Song Quality," Johns Hopkins University, December 18, 2013, <http://releases.jhu.edu/2013/12/18/testosterone-in-male-songbirds-may-enhance-desire-to-sing-but-not-song-quality/>. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of the connection between testosterone and birdsong.

<sup>202</sup> "Suicide Rate Spikes Among Young Veterans," by Leo Shane III, Stars and Stripes, January 9, 2014, www.stripes.com/report-suicide-rate-spikes-among-young-veterans-1.261283. Researchers found that the risk of suicide for veterans is 21 percent higher when compared to civilian adults. From 2001 to 2014, as the civilian suicide rate rose about 23.3 percent, the rate of suicide among veterans jumped more than 32 percent. See the "VA Suicide Prevention Program Facts about Veteran Suicide," U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, July 2016, www.va.gov/opa/publications/factsheets/Suicide\_Prevention\_FactSheet\_New\_VA\_Stats\_070616\_1400.pdf.

<sup>203</sup> Tim Weiskel, Cambridge Climate Research Associate, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth," August 1, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016:

The fundamental problem (as the Odum brothers pointed out decades ago) is that humans maximize for net return while nature maximizes for gross return. As a species, we operate at fundamental cross-purposes with the governing "laws" of Earth's ecosystem. If we do not learn that, AND learn to subordinate our notions of "rights" and "justice" to those which can operate sustainably within the Earth's functioning ecosystem, we will become extinct.

<sup>204</sup> Alan Zulch, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of "Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth," August 1, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. Alan Zulch is a program officer with the Kalliopeia Foundation, with a master's degree in transpersonal psychology and bachelor's in conservation and resources from U.C. Berkeley. He previously worked with the Global Oneness Project and the Global MindShift Foundation following twelve years in the corporate world managing web, call center and telecommunications teams. See <http://ourworld.unu.edu/en/contributors/alan-zulch>.

<sup>205</sup> Alan Zulch, ibid.

<sup>206</sup> Alan Zulch explains (ibid.) that simplification will occur because in a dissipative structure such as the Earth, entropy can only be mitigated through simplicity:

We are on a finite planet, facing predicaments that Bill Rees well describes. Before long, simplifying won't be a lifestyle choice or political stance, but a condition. As ecologist Jacopo Simonetta has pointed out, we're not facing an energy crisis, we're in an entropy crisis. We have insufficient capacity to dissipate entropy in our increasingly complex closed system. And this isn't just physical entropy, but, fascinatingly, cultural, too, as Simonetta points out (www.cassandralegacy.blogspot.com/2016/03/the-other-side-of-global-crisis-entropy.html).

Zulch thinks that the human failure to understand or manage entropy is related to "our culture's inability to face limits, death, endings, closure, the shadow. Rather than face such realities directly, we moderns too often marginalize, banish, and deny them." In resonance with Carol Smaldino, Zulch reminds that, "as true for all shadow material, what we refuse to face consciously re-emerges from the underworld in distorted fashion, in the form of narcissism, cruelty, projection, anxiety, and compulsive behavior (Think consumption habits: 'You can never get enough of what you don't really need.')."

<sup>207</sup> See Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>208</sup> Sarah Lyons-Padilla, et al., 2015, see a summary in "I've Studied Radicalization – and Islamophobia Often Plants the Seed," by Sarah Lyons-Padilla, The Guardian, June 13, 2016, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2016/jun/13/radicalisation-islamophobia-orlando-shooting-florida-muslims-

trump. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this Guardian article, and am glad to have her as esteemed member in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. Sarah Lyons-Padilla builds on research done by Arie Kruglanski, see, among others, Doosje, et al., 2016, Dugas and Kruglanski, 2014. It is a privilege to have also Arie Kruglanski as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>209</sup> Fineman, 2004, Waring, 1988.

<sup>210</sup> “Phyllis Schlafly, ‘First Lady’ of a Political March to the Right, Dies at 92,” by Douglas Martin, September 5, 2016, New York Times, www.nytimes.com/2016/09/06/obituaries/phyllis-schlafly-conservative-leader-and-foe-of-era-dies-at-92.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of Phyllis Schlafly and her life mission.

<sup>211</sup> See, among others, Scheuer, 2011.

<sup>212</sup> Turk, 2004, Abstract:

The sociology of terrorism has been understudied, even though considerable literatures on various forms of social conflict and violence have been produced over the years. The aim here is to note what has been learned about the social origins and dynamics of terrorism in order to suggest agendas for future research. Arguably the main foci of sociological studies of terrorism should be (a) the social construction of terrorism, (b) terrorism as political violence, (c) terrorism as communication, (d) organizing terrorism, (e) socializing terrorists, (f) social control of terrorism, and (g) theorizing terrorism. For each issue, I provide a brief summary of current knowledge, with bibliographic leads to more detailed information, as well as identify research issues.

I thank Kristian Berg Harpviken, for making me aware of this article.

<sup>213</sup> Borchgrevink and Harpviken, 2010. It is a privilege to have Kristian Berg Harpviken as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>214</sup> Borchgrevink and Harpviken, 2010, p. 254.

<sup>215</sup> “Why Foreign Military Intervention Usually Fails in the 21st Century,” by Richard Falk, Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (TFF), December 3, 2014, <http://blog.transnational.org/2014/12/why-foreign-military-intervention-usually-fails-in-the-21st-century/>.

<sup>216</sup> Schmid, 2013, p. 10.

<sup>217</sup> “White House: ‘War on Terrorism’ Is Over,” by The Washington Times, August 6, 2009, www.washingtontimes.com/news/2009/aug/06/white-house-war-terrorism-over/?feat=home\_headlines. See also, “Obama Administration Says Goodbye to ‘War on Terror,’” by Oliver Burkeman in Washington, The Guardian, March 25, 2009, www.theguardian.com/world/2009/mar/25/obama-war-terror-overseas-contingency-operations: “US Defence department seems to confirm use of the bureaucratic phrase ‘overseas contingency operations.’”

<sup>218</sup> Ibid.

<sup>219</sup> “‘Over My Dead Body’: Spies Fight Obama Push to Downsize Terror War,” by Eli Lake, The Daily Beast, May 21, 2014, www.thedailybeast.com/articles/2014/05/21/over-my-dead-body-spies-fight-obama-push-to-downsize-terror-war.html:

The Obama administration concluded in 2012 that al Qaeda posed no direct threat to the U.S. – and has sought to scale back the fight ever since, over intel officials’ rising objections... In all of these examples, the common theme of frustration is that while the political will to fight a long war against a less centralized al Qaeda network wanes in America, the threat gathers overseas. “There is a desire for peace and I understand that. Everyone admits theoretically that the enemy gets a vote. But the war is not over till the enemy says it’s over,” James Mattis, who served as Obama’s commander of Central Command between 2010 and 2013, told The Daily Beast.

<sup>220</sup> Ibid.

<sup>221</sup> Historian Philipp Blom, 2008, draws together such diverse examples as the industrialization with its assembly line method and minimum wage, quantum physics and the discovery of radioactivity, advances in aviation and shipbuilding, the emergence of new views on the human psyche, such as in psychoanalysis, the staging of new music, such as by Igor Stravinsky, or women’s rights, and Futurism.

<sup>222</sup> Kimmel, 2013.

<sup>223</sup> “2014 No Good. May All Good Forces Unite in 2015!” by Johan Galtung, Transcend Media Service, December 31, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/12/2014-no-good-2015-any-better/. Galtung lists 15 current areas that are openly or latently conflictual:

- USA-Japan-South Korea vs North Korea vs China
- USA-ASEAN vs China-Taiwan and Japan vs Korea over China Sea islands
- USA-NATO-Japan vs China-Russia-SCO over encircling
- USA-EU vs Russia over Ukraine-Georgia membership in NATO-EU
- USA-led coalition/NATO vs Many, diverse parties in Afghanistan
- USA-led coalition/NATO vs Many, diverse parties in Iraq
- USA-Shia-Iran(?) vs Arabia-Sunni-caliphate/ISIS-Turkey(?)
- Kurds vs Turkey-Syria-Iraq-Iran over autonomy
- Israel vs Palestine over The Holy Land/Cana'an
- USA-Israel vs Arab-Muslim countries over Israel vs Palestine
- USA vs 134 states over terrorism using state torture-sniping-droning
- USA-UK-Canada-Australia-New Zealand ("Five eyes") vs the World, spying
- USA vs China (USA-EU vs Eurasia) over the shape of geopolitics
- USA-UK-France-Italy-Norway vs Libya-Mali-Sudan-Somalia etc. in Africa
- USA vs Latin America/Caribbean over equality of the Americas

<sup>224</sup> See Vamik Volkan, 2001, for the transgenerational transmissions and chosen traumas, or the work of Michael Wohl, who speaks of a multigenerational picture of the dynamics of trauma. See Wohl and Branscombe, 2008, Wohl and Van Bavel, 2011. Franz Ruppert, 2008, works with multigenerational trauma and family constellations. See also Gobodo-Madikizela, 2008, or Fromm, 2011.

See, furthermore, Hélène Opperman Lewis, 2016, who convened our 2013 Annual Dignity Conference in South Africa, and who sheds light on the impact of the Boer Wars. It is a privilege to have Hélène Lewis as esteemed members in our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship. I so much thank her for giving me The Boer Whore by Nico Moolman, 2012, to read.

Steve Olweean, President of the International Humanistic Psychology Association, explains: "Every society and culture has its traditional victim story, if we look back far enough. It emerges in our folklore, our arts, our monuments, our historic icons of group identity and belonging, and at times our justification and readiness for retribution, particularly toward descendants of past perpetrators, or simply those who remind us of them,"

<http://cbiworld.org/home/conferences/tt/>:

Transgenerational Trauma is seen as an underlying and complex global syndrome that divides, polarizes, and perpetuates enemy images, has been a central basis for past conflict and wars, and is a potent fuel for the eruption of violence in the present and future. Understanding it's dynamics and implications, and developing ways to effectively prevent and treat it, are essential to healing and reconciliation within and between communities, establishing compassionate local and global relations, and achieving sustainable peace.

<sup>225</sup> See Carol Smaldino's deep reflections published in Huffington Post. For three recent postings, consider:

- "Mental Health Awareness Month in a Climate of Denial," by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, May 11, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/mental-health-awareness-m\_b\_9895080.html.
- "Psychological Policy For Presidents: The Deplorable Dilemma," by Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, September 17, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/carol-smaldino/psychological-policy-for-\_b\_12059406.html.
- "Life after Hate with Ex-White Supremacist Christian Picciolini," Carol Smaldino, Huffington Post, May 10, 2017, www.huffingtonpost.com/entry/5913779ae4b04e66b8c3ad99.

It is a privilege to have Carol Smaldino as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>226</sup> Alan Zulch. See note 206 in this Chapter 18.

<sup>227</sup> "Don't Blame Trump: Heal Thyself, America," by Peter T. Coleman, Huffington Post, July 24, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/entry/dont-blame-trump-heal-thyself-america\_us\_5794d247e4b0e002a3138ef1.

<sup>228</sup> "21 September 2016: 10 Pointers," by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 26, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/09/21-september-2016-10-pointers/:

The roots of war are unsolved conflict and-or unconciled trauma. The root of conflict is incompatible goals. Conflicts are solved by making them compatible, through mediation finding what the parties' goals and a vision of a new reality with reasonably compatible goals. The root of trauma is past violence. Traumas are conciled by clearing the past and creating a future, through conciliation wishing the violence undone, and proposing future cooperative joint projects.

"The State of the World—By Journalism," by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, September 23, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/09/the-state-of-the-world-by-journalism/:

And journalism should cover deeper issues such as the long shadows of history, from the split of the Roman Empire along Catholic-Orthodox lines over 1600 years ago in Europe, the 1893 Durand line in Central Asia, the 1916

Sykes-Picot lines in the Middle East, to learn whether consciousness and joint processing of history could be useful. Deeper causes: hidden scripts in the collective subconscious. Like US Dualism-Manichaeism-Armageddon: two parties, one good-the other evil; for evil only a final battle will work. Include assumptions, ask why? One day journalists may ask questions to shed light on shadows, and on how to make the subconscious conscious. If they ask competent questions about bacteria and toxic pollution, why not also about peace? Most violence is West against East or against South. Maybe one day journalism will make miracles come true: the West recognizing past errors – Italy did for 1911. And rejecting old scripts for the present. For a better future state of the world, made by compelling deep journalism.

<sup>229</sup> Ruben Nelson in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” September 14, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016.

<sup>230</sup> See, among others, Rieff, 2016, or Wyatt-Brown, 1982. See also Wyatt-Brown, 2014.

<sup>231</sup> Lindner, 2006a, pp. 103–104.

<sup>232</sup> “A Conversation with Holger Hoock,” May 9, 2017, <http://holgerhoock.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/02/A-Conversation-with-Holger-Hoock.pdf>. Hoock, 2017. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this book

<sup>233</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 7: The Humiliation Addiction, in my book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict.

<sup>234</sup> Wyatt-Brown, 1982. See also Wyatt-Brown, 2014, and Cohen, 1996, Cohen and Nisbett, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1996, Cohen and Vandello, 1997, Cohen, et al., 1998, Leung and Cohen, 2011, Nisbett and Cohen, 1996, Vandello, et al., 2008, Vandello and Cohen, 2003.

<sup>235</sup> “Interview zum Mittelmeer-Drama: CDU-Veteran Geißler zur Flüchtlingspolitik: ‘Scharfmacherische faule Ausrede’,” with Martina Fietz, Focus, April 21, 2015, www.focus.de/politik/deutschland/interview-zum-mittelmeer-drama-cdu-veteran-geissler-zur-fluechtlingspolitik-scharfmacherische-faule-ausrede\_id\_4626161.html. Translated from German by Evelin Lindner.

<sup>236</sup> Wie die USA von Deutschland aus den Kampf gegen den Terror führen, ARD Fernsehdiskussion Beckmann, Das Erste, November 28, 2013, published on November 29, 2013, on <https://youtu.be/AaKB79tWhDU>. Translated from German by Evelin Lindner. See the German original, where Weidenfeld said:

In meinen zwölf Jahren als Amerikakoordinator habe ich drei Verhaltensweisen der amerikanischen Regierung erlebt: In dem Moment, wo man mit ihnen einer Meinung ist, sind wir die besten Freunde, wir umarmen uns, man hat Angst um seine Rippen, weil die Umarmungen so intensiv sind. Wenn wir in zweitrangigen Fragen nicht einer Meinung sind, dann sagt die amerikanische Regierung regelmäßig, das passiert mit uns, wo bleibt die Dankbarkeit in der Geschichte, wir haben die Freiheit und die Sicherheit der Deutschen erobert und erhalten und was passiert. Wenn wir in einer ernsten Frage anderer Auffassung sind, dann kommt Geheimdienstmaterial auf den Tisch, das Deutschland belastet und entweder ihr macht mit oder ihr seid dran.

See also “US Threatens to Penalize Allies on UN Voting,” by Thalif Deen, Inter Press Service (IPS), February 7, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/02/us-threatens-to-penalize-allies-on-un-voting/.

<sup>237</sup> Taibbi, 2017.

<sup>238</sup> “Why Trump?” by George Lakoff, Huffington Post, March 3, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/george-lakoff/why-trump\_1\_b\_9372450.html:

Direct causation is dealing with a problem via direct action. Systemic causation recognizes that many problems arise from the system they are in and must be dealt with via systemic causation. Systemic causation has four versions: A chain of direct causes. Interacting direct causes (or chains of direct causes). Feedback loops. And probabilistic causes. Systemic causation in global warming explains why global warming over the Pacific can produce huge snowstorms in Washington DC: masses of highly energized water molecules evaporate over the Pacific, blow to the Northeast and over the North Pole and come down in winter over the East coast and parts of the Midwest as masses of snow. Systemic causation has chains of direct causes, interacting causes, feedback loops, and probabilistic causes – often combined.

Direct causation is easy to understand, and appears to be represented in the grammars of all languages around the world. Systemic causation is more complex and is not represented in the grammar of any language. It just has to be learned.

Empirical research has shown that conservatives tend to reason with direct causation and that progressives have a much easier time reasoning with systemic causation. The reason is thought to be that, in the strict father model, the father expects the child or spouse to respond directly to an order and that refusal should be punished as swiftly and directly as possible.

Many of Trump's policy proposals are framed in terms of direct causation.

I thank Michael Britton for making me aware of this article.

<sup>239</sup> D'Antonio, 2015. Donald Trump's mother hailed from the Isle of Lewis, the largest island of the Outer Hebrides, off Scotland's northwest coast. Its culture of humble collaborative egalitarianism represents an extreme contrast to Donald Trump's approach. See "Donald Trump's Mother Was an Immigrant – From a Remote Rugged Island in Scotland," by Carol Zall, Public Radio International (PRI), October 29, 2016, www.pri.org/stories/2016-10-29/donald-trumps-mother-was-immigrant-remote-rugged-island-scotland.

<sup>240</sup> Fred Jr. died an alcoholic, 42 years old, in 1981.

<sup>241</sup> Trump's mixture of Scottish and German background has been labeled, by novelist Joseph Conrad, as "possibly the worst heritage you could have, because Scots-Germans have, as he said, the instincts of a puritan, combined with an insatiable imagination for conquest." See "Donald Trump's Mother Was an Immigrant – From a Remote Rugged Island in Scotland," by Carol Zall, Public Radio International (PRI), October 29, 2016, www.pri.org/stories/2016-10-29/donald-trumps-mother-was-immigrant-remote-rugged-island-scotland.

<sup>242</sup> Margalit, 1996, 1997, 2002.

<sup>243</sup> "Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called 'The Devil's Dynamo'?" by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/:

In his farewell address (January 17, 1961) US President Dwight D. Eisenhower warned of the dangers of the war-based economy that World War II had forced his nation to build: "... We have been compelled to create an armaments industry of vast proportions," Eisenhower said, "... Now this conjunction of an immense military establishment and a large arms industry is new in American experience. The total influence – economic, political, even spiritual – is felt in every city, every state house, every office in the federal government. ... We must not fail to comprehend its grave implications. Our toil, resources and livelihood are all involved; so is the very structure of our society. ... We must stand guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist. We must never let the weight of this combination endanger our democratic processes. We should take nothing for granted.

Military-Industrial Complex Speech by Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, on January 17, 1961, Public Papers of the Presidents, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960, pp. 1035–1040, <http://coursesa.matrix.msu.edu/~hst306/documents/indust.html>, see also <https://youtu.be/8y06NSBBRtY>. See more in note 46 in Chapter 11, in note 127 in Chapter 14, and in note 199 in this Chapter 18.

<sup>244</sup> "Why Is the Military-Industrial Complex Sometimes Called 'The Devil's Dynamo'?" by John Scales Avery, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 30, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/06/the-devils-dynamo/:

Since World War II, the United States has interfered either militarily or covertly in the internal affairs of very many countries. These include China, 1945–49; Italy, 1947–48; Greece, 1947–49; Philippines, 1946–53; South Korea, 1945–53; Albania, 1949–53; Germany, 1950s; Iran, 1953; Guatemala, 1953–1990s; Middle East, 1956–58; Indonesia, 1957–58; British Guiana/Guyana, 1953–64; Vietnam, 1950–73; Cambodia, 1955–73; The Congo/Zaire, 1960–65; Brazil, 1961–64; Dominican Republic, 1963–66; Cuba, 1959–present; Indonesia, 1965; Chile, 1964–73; Greece, 1964–74; East Timor, 1975–present; Nicaragua, 1978–89; Grenada, 1979–84; Libya, 1981–89; Panama, 1989; Iraq, 1990–present; Afghanistan 1979–92; El Salvador, 1980–92; Haiti, 1987–94; Yugoslavia, 1999; and Afghanistan, 2001–present.

<sup>245</sup> Wixon and Merchant, 2014, p. 2. I thank Linda Hartling for sharing this quote with me.

Inspiring and Thought-Provoking Questions to Section Three

<sup>1</sup> Albert Einstein (1879 – 1955), German original: "Es gibt keine großen Entdeckungen und Fortschritte, solange es noch ein unglückliches Kind auf Erden gibt." Kinderhilfe für Siebenbürgen is a contemporary project inspired by Einstein's saying. Jenny Rasche, a young woman from Germany, felt called to action when she saw extremely neglected Roma families in Rumania. She began by finding a way to nourish the children and bring them to school. This gained her the trust of the mothers. After a while, the young sons, after school, taught their fathers to become responsible members of their community, for instance, by building proper housing. See www.roma-kinderhilfe.de/index.php/de/.

<sup>2</sup> Linda Hartling in a personal communication on December 18, 2015, in favor of Tikkun editor Peter Gabel's usage of the term re-humiliation, and of Joyce Fletcher's term of being invisibilized. Fletcher, like Hartling, uses the work of Jean Baker Miller to apply a growth-in-connection model of human growth and development to organizational settings.

<sup>3</sup> Jean Baker Miller coined the phrase waging good conflict, a term that was central for my book Emotion and Conflict (2009). Waging good conflict means refraining from the domination techniques that were employed by leaders in the past.

<sup>4</sup> “Stopping the Snake: Indigenous Protesters Shut Down Construction of Dakota Access Pipeline,” Amy Goodman with Winona LaDuke, Joye Braun, Ajamu Baraka, Democracy Now, August 18, 2016, www.democracynow.org/2016/8/18/stopping\_the\_snake\_indigenous\_protesters\_shut. Winona LaDuke is a Native American activist and executive director of the group Honor the Earth. She lives and works on the White Earth Reservation in northern Minnesota. She was the Green Party vice-presidential nominee in 1996 and 2000. Winona LaDuke:

...the system is crumbling all around us. And at the end of the fossil fuel era, it's time to move towards an elegant transition. But in the final thrashings of the fossil fuel era, what you have is a lot of extreme behavior going on. You have extreme extraction. You have, you know, tar sands mining. You have blowing-up, you know, oil rigs. And you have endless, endless contamination. And at the same time, you have climate change happening. You know, in our teachings, we talk about this as the time when you've got to make a choice between two paths as a country. One path is well-worn, and it's scorched; the other is not well-worn, and it's green.

See for more the Seven Fires Prophecy and Benton-Banai, 1988. The prophecy is interpreted in different ways by LaDuke and Benton-Banai. I thank Winona LaDuke's assistant Nicolette Stagle for helping me understand.

See also “Seven Fires Prophecy of the Anishnabe People and the Process of Reconciliation,” with Grandfather William Commanda, Keeper of the Seven Fires Wampum Belt of the Anishnabe (Algonquin) Peoples, often called “The Gandhi of the Indian World,” www.oneprayer.org/Seven\_Fires\_Prophecy.html:

We believe that the road towards blind materialism, the choice for the majority of humanity and especially the Light Skinned or European/American, created an environment where Nature and Natural People have suffered immensely. In the end, it can only lead to our collective destruction. Our way is above all a Spiritual Path. We are not, nor have we ever, been slaves to the material path. Our strength lies in our native ability to go beyond all that happened to our people in the past 508 years. The joining together of the material knowledge of the West with the spiritual wisdom and values of the Indigenous Peoples of this land is a path of healing and survival for all humanity.

<sup>5</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017, Chapter One: South Africa Now as Threat and as Promise.

<sup>6</sup> Donati and Archer, 2015, p. 14. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this quote. The Swedish Theory of Love is a 2016 Swedish documentary film directed by Erik Gandini, where sociologist Zygmunt Bauman explains that independence strips people from the ability of socializing. I thank Guri Lorentzen Østbye for making me aware of this film.

<sup>7</sup> “Im Zweifel links: Wiederkehr der Würde,” by Jakob Augstein, Der Spiegel 13/2017, March 25, 2017, p. 10, https://magazin.spiegel.de/SP/2017/13/150231519/?utm\_source=spon&utm\_campaign=centerpage. German original translated by Lindner:

Now ends a mindset, where everything has a price and only the price decides about the value. Where values are only worthwhile if they can be calculated. Where politics are an evil that stands in the way of market justice. Where the market is not only seen as more efficient – it also is given more legitimacy than democracy. Therefore pure market was pure morality. This was the wretched economism... But those who place human dignity at the center of their deliberations recognize that no person is always a benefit optimizer, and societies are no economic aggregates.

German original:

Ans Ende kommt jetzt ein Denken, in dem alles einen Preis hat und nur der Preis über den Wert entscheidet. Und Werte lohnen sich nur, sofern sie sich ausrechnen lassen. Und Politik ist ein leidiges Übel, das der Marktgerechtigkeit im Wege steht. Und der Markt ist nicht nur effizienter – er verfügt auch über mehr Legitimation als die Demokratie. Darum ist der reine Markt die reine Moral. Das war dieser armselige Ökonomismus... Wer aber die Würde des Menschen in den Mittelpunkt des Denkens stellt, erkennt, dass kein Mensch immer ein Nutzenoptimierer ist und Gesellschaften keine volkswirtschaftlichen Aggregate sind.

<sup>8</sup> Betty A. Reardon in a personal communication on July 6, 2010, in Melbu, Vesterålen, Norway. I am deeply thankful to Betty Reardon for her untiring support for our dignity work since we first met in 1995. It was a great privilege to meet her for the first time at the UNESCO expert meeting “Towards a Women's Agenda for a Culture of Peace,” April 25–18, 1995, invited by Ingeborg Breines. I had the privilege of having a chapter in her edited book, see Lindner, 1999. See for one of her recent publications, Reardon and Hans, 2010.

<sup>9</sup> Barthes, 1971/1996. I thank Howard Richards for reminding me of this book by Roland Barthes.

<sup>10</sup> “Bringing In the Future: An Essay on Time,” by Johan Galtung, TRANSCEND Media Service, November 21, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/11/bringing-in-the-future-an-essay-on-time/.

<sup>11</sup> “Toward a Post-Predatory World,” by Michael Britton, 2016, unpublished essay.

<sup>12</sup> Coleman, et al., 2007, Coleman, 2011, Coleman, et al., 2008, Vallacher, et al., 2010. See for more, “Project on Dynamical Systems, Peace, Conflict and Social Change,” by Peter Coleman, <http://ac4.ei.columbia.edu/ac4-supported-initiatives/dynamical-systems-theory-at-columbia-university-v2/>. See also Coleman, et al., 2009, Goldman and Coleman, 2005b, a. Peter Coleman is Professor of Psychology and Education Director at the Morton Deutsch International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution (MD-ICCCR). He and his colleagues use a dynamical systems approach to conceptualize the intransigence entailed in intractable conflict. The Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship is honored to have Morton Deutsch and Peter Coleman, together with Claudia Cohen, Beth Fisher-Yoshida, Andrea Bartoli, and many others of their colleagues, as esteemed members of the first hour in our global advisory board.

<sup>13</sup> Vallacher, et al., 2010, p. 256.

<sup>14</sup> Ross, 1995. It was a privilege to have Lee Ross as my doctoral advisor, and later as esteemed member of the first hour in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>15</sup> Marshall, 1999. See also Dan Shapiro, 2016, on How to Resolve Your Most Emotionally Charged Conflicts. It is a privilege to have Monty Marshall and Dan Shapiro as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship since its inception.

<sup>16</sup> Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>17</sup> Bhaskar, 2008. See Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>18</sup> Searle, 1995, Chapter 9. See Richards and Andersson, 2017, Introduction.

<sup>19</sup> Barad, 2003, p. 829. Physicist Niels Bohr speaks of intra-actions and that one must reject the presumed inherent separability of observer and observed, knower and known.

<sup>20</sup> Jervis, 2006, p. 641. Jervis suggests going back fifty years, revisiting the typology introduced by M. Brewster Smith, et al., 1956.

<sup>21</sup> See on tipping points, among others, Gladwell, 2000.

<sup>22</sup> Neurath, 1959, p. 201.

<sup>23</sup> Tolstoy, 1886/1935.

<sup>24</sup> See for the projection of four possible sustainable lifestyles for 2050, UNEP/Wuppertal Institute Collaborating Centre on Sustainable Consumption and Production (CSCP), 2011–2012.

<sup>25</sup> Raskin, et al., 2002, p. 14.

<sup>26</sup> Raskin, et al., 2002, p. 15.

<sup>27</sup> Siebert and Ott, 2016, p. 12.

<sup>28</sup> Hirschman, 1977. See also Adelman, 2013, and “Understanding Society – Innovative Thinking About a Global World: Hirschman on the Passions” by Daniel Little, May 14, 2013, <http://understandingsociety.blogspot.no/2013/05/hirschman-on-passions.html>.

<sup>29</sup> “More of the Same: World Bank Doing Business Report Continues to Mislead,” by Anis Chowdhury and Jomo Kwame Sundaram, Inter Press Service (IPS), December 15, 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/12/more-of-the-same-world-bank-doing-business-report-continues-to-mislead:

The World Bank’s Doing Business Report 2017, subtitled “Equal Opportunity for All,” continues to mislead despite the many criticisms, including from within, levelled against the Bank’s most widely read publication, and Bank management promises of reform for many years... Despite its ostensible commitment to “equal opportunities for all,” the DBR cannot conceal its intent and bias, giving higher scores to countries that favor corporate profits over citizens,’ especially workers’ interests, and national efforts to achieve sustainable development. Sadly, many developing country governments still bend over backwards to impress the World Bank with reforms to improve their DBR rankings. This obsession with performing well in the Bank’s “beauty contest” has taken a heavy toll on workers, farmers and the world’s poor – the majority of whom are women – who bear the burden of DBR-induced reforms, despite its proclaimed concerns for inequality, gender equity and “equal opportunities for all.”

<sup>30</sup> Howard Richards and Catherine Odora Hoppers have been referred to previously in this book, and their insistence that more regulatory rules are not enough, what is needed are new constitutive rules. It was an important moment for me to hear political economist Gar Alperovitz in the Thirty-First Annual E. F. Schumacher Lectures on November 5, 2011, in New York City (www.neweconomicsinstitute.org), when he explained how he had lost faith, after decades of working for reform, after decades of hoping that the format of cooperatives, for instance, would provide the hoped-for break-through. He now calls for much more comprehensive and far-reaching new orientations. These are, clearly, only three of a myriad similar voices. See also my 2012 book on A Dignity Economy. Ted Trainer, of the limits to growth movement in Australia, sees capitalism as “the problem and no reforms within it or version of it can enable a sustainable and just world,” in “A Critique of No Local, the Book Arguing that Localism Can’t Save the Planet,” by Ted Trainer, September 1, 2016, shared in a personal communication, where he critiques Greg Scherer, 2011. Trainer explains in this text how neither a myopic localist approach is feasible, nor is the leftist globalist idea that “the class in control of the industrial affluence and growth system” should be replaced so that a new central power could “redirect the system to more just outcomes.” The latter is not feasible, Trainer argues, because we have entered the era of limits.

<sup>31</sup> “Tapping the Victim Syndrome!” Voters as Victims Fuel Trump’s Appeal,” by Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, June 13, 2016, www.transcend.org/tms/2016/06/tapping-the-victim-syndrome-voters-as-victims-fuel-trumps-appeal/.

<sup>32</sup> Canadian economist Rodrigue Tremblay discusses the “T-treaty trinity,” the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), Trade in Services Agreement (TiSA), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP):

Such agreements, negotiated in near complete secrecy, pursue geopolitical objectives. They are an attempt to build a worldwide economic and financial order that supersedes national states and they represent also an effort to protect the corporate and banking elites – the establishment 1 percent – against national governments. In the case of the TTIP, its geopolitical objective is to prevent European countries from developing comprehensive trade agreements with Russia. In the case of TPP, the objective is to isolate China. In the eyes of Washington D.C. neocon planners, they are part of ongoing economic warfare.

See also Tremblay, 2010. It is a privilege to have Rodrigue Tremblay as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>33</sup> “Fear of Terrorism Lifts Donald Trump in New York Times/CBS Poll,” by Jonathan Martin and Dalia Sussman, New York Times, December 10, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/12/11/us/politics/fear-of-terrorism-lifts-donald-trump-in-new-york-times-cbs-poll.html?\_r=0.

<sup>34</sup> Germany is only one among many examples, where the strategy of “picking up” disaffected youths is being practiced. Andrea Müller, expert for right-wing extremism, Jugendbildungsstätte Bremen, LidiceHaus, Bremen, Germany, observes this strategy since many years.

<sup>35</sup> Bourdieu and Passeron, 1990.

<sup>36</sup> “Impunity Leads Perpetrators to Continue Child Rights Violations in DR Congo – UN Report,” United Nations News Centre, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=48316#.U84t7bHzkmy.

<sup>37</sup> “The Global Slavery Index 2016 Report,” Global Slavery Index (www.globalslaveryindex.org), <http://assets.globalslaveryindex.org/downloads/Global+Slavery+Index+2016.pdf>.

<sup>38</sup> Der Vietnamkrieg: Gesichter einer Tragödie / La sale guerre (The Vietnam War – Faces of a Tragedy), French/German documentary film by Christel Fomm, Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, 2015, see also https://youtu.be/6\_LVr\_IUtKE. Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, WDR, West German Broadcasting Cologne, is a German public-broadcasting institution based in the Federal State of North Rhine-Westphalia with its main office in Cologne.

See also “Vietnamkrieg – Gesichter einer Tragödie” Krieg im Spiegel der Medien,” by Daland Segler, Frankfurter Rundschau, April 14, 2015, www.fr-online.de/tv-kritik/-vietnamkrieg---gesichter-einer-tragoedie--krieg-im-spiegel-der-medien,1473344,30425514.html.

<sup>39</sup> “Suicide Rate Spikes Among Young Veterans,” by Leo Shane III, Stars and Stripes, January 9, 2014, www.stripes.com/report-suicide-rate-spikes-among-young-veterans-1.261283. Researchers found that the risk of suicide for veterans is 21 percent higher when compared to civilian adults. From 2001 to 2014, as the civilian suicide rate rose about 23.3 percent, the rate of suicide among veterans jumped more than 32 percent. See the “VA Suicide Prevention Program Facts about Veteran Suicide,” U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, July 2016, www.va.gov/opa/publications/factsheets/Suicide\_Prevention\_FactSheet\_New\_VA\_Stats\_070616\_1400.pdf.

<sup>40</sup> We had the 2013 Annual Conference of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies, “Search for Dignity,” in Stellenbosch, South Africa, April 24–28, 2013, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/21.php. I was privileged to live in different parts of South Africa subsequent to our conference and become profoundly enriched by the people I met.

<sup>41</sup> History offers many examples. From social servitude only to fall into economic and political dependency, this was the fate of the peasantry of Sicily when it arose from feudalism, see Blok, 1988.

<sup>42</sup> See more images and photos on www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/evelin/pics13.php. I thank Jingyi Dong for her personal communication on June 25, 2015, where she shared her views on the role of famous Chinese writer Lu Xun with me and related her comments to the image by Catherine Hoppers. Dong wrote to me:

Let me give my comment on Lu Xun and you respectively. Let's use the picture created by Catherine Hoppers. Lu Xun was the one who sharpened the knives of the two fighting men, while you are the one who calls the two men to a halt and reminds them of the crocodile. Lu Xun was a victim of humiliation. Unfortunately, he was also the greatest master of language arts with the most penetrating insights. This enabled him not only to expose the problems of a diseased society, but also to push for a new spiral of humiliation; you are the one who points to ways to stop humiliation.

I do not blame Lu Xun, for he was not the only who did this. Lu Xun lost his father in his childhood. Look at the early leaders of the Communist Party of China: Li Dazhao lost his parents before he was three years old and lost his grandparents when he was 15 years old; Chen Duxiu lost his father in childhood; Qu Qiubai's father was addicted to opium and his mother committed suicide to get rid of debt. Living in patriarchal communities, where females were marginalized, these boys lost shelter from the adult males in the family. Meanwhile, they did not get the paternal love that the community was obliged to offer. What would be the influence on their mindsets? These were unusually talented boys who would later become holders of rich academic capital and consequently participants of politics. What would they do when they grew up? Your theory can tell.

<sup>43</sup> Watch Square Idée, a series on Arte, <http://sites.arte.tv/square/fr/square-idee-square-0>. See, for instance:

- Comment va la démocratie ? (How is democracy doing?), May 10, 2015, with Francis Fukuyama and Geoffroy de Lagasnerie, who speaks about "l'art de la révolte" (the art of revolt), <http://info.arte.tv/fr/comment-va-la-democratie>, or <https://youtu.be/OrAabVskKLM>.

- Meeting Snowden: Avec Birgitta Jonsdottir, Larry Lessig et Edward Snowden, May 29, 2017, <http://sites.arte.tv/square/fr/meeting-snowden-square>, or <https://youtu.be/giHR8NHyyUM>.

Arte France, Association relative à la télévision européenne, is a Franco-German TV network.

<sup>44</sup> Raymond Williams, 1961, academic, novelist, and critic, wrote in The Long Revolution, p. 10: "It seems to me that we are living through a long revolution, which our best descriptions only part interpret. It is a genuine revolution, transforming men and institutions; continually and variously opposed by explicit reaction and by pressure of habitual forms and ideas. Yet it is a difficult revolution to define, and its uneven action is taking place over so long a period that it is almost impossible not to get lost in its exceptionally complicated process." I thank Tony Webb for making me aware of Williams' discussion. The Levellers were members of a political movement during the English Civil Wars which emphasized popular sovereignty, extended suffrage, equality before the law, and religious tolerance, all of which were expressed in the manifesto "Agreement of the People" (issued between 1647 and 1649). The trope of the "unfinished revolution" has been taken up by many authors, among them Shaw, 2000, Steele, 2007b. See also the unfinished revolution of Douglas Engelbart, to which Dino Karabeg introduced me, as well as reminding me of the work of Erich Jantsch, 1980, or Donella Meadows, 2008.

<sup>45</sup> Kirst, 1975/1976. I thank my father for making me aware of this book. He received it as a gift from his students when he was a teacher shortly after it had been published. His students demanded that he read passages of this book aloud to them, so that they would be able to grasp what had befallen Germany before they had been born.

<sup>46</sup> Milani, 2008.

<sup>47</sup> "It Was the Democrats' Embrace of Neoliberalism That Won It for Trump," by Naomi Klein, The Guardian, November 9, 2016, www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2016/nov/09/rise-of-the-davos-class-sealed-americas-fate.

<sup>48</sup> Recent research in the U.S. has shed light on the influence of elite anti-tax advocacy groups hijacking the conservative agenda, even though their interests are not necessarily aligned with other conservative interests such as business interests, or the interests of angry, culturally fearful conservative populists. The most significant elite anti-tax advocacy organization seems to be the US nationwide, multipurpose political federation called Americans for Prosperity (AFP), as part of "weaponized" conservative philanthropy. See Theda Skocpol and Hertel-Fernandez, 2016, as well as Jane Mayer, 2016, and her book on Dark Money. I thank Glyn Rimmington for making me aware of book by Mayer. See also "Who Owns the GOP?" by Theda Skocpol, Dissent, February 3, 2016, www.dissentmagazine.org/online\_articles/jane-mayer-dark-money-review-koch-brothers-gop:

Research by political scientist Christopher Parker and Barreto, 2013, at the University of Washington reinforces our conclusion that ordinary Tea Party activists and sympathizers are worried about sociocultural changes in the United States, angry and fearful about immigration, freaked out by the presence in the White House of a black liberal with a Muslim middle name, and fiercely opposed to what they view as out of control "welfare spending" on the poor, minorities, and young people. Many Tea Partiers benefit from Social Security, Medicare, and military veterans' programs, and do not want them to be cut or privatized. About half of Tea Party activists or sympathizers are also Christian conservatives intensely concerned with banning abortion and repealing gay marriage. ...according to our research, angry, culturally fearful conservative populists not controlled from above are a major force in the early twenty-first-century United States.

When I try to look at the situation through the lens of dignity and humiliation, then people who until now felt dejected and shameful seem to be increasingly willing to develop a burning sense of victimhood they did not deserve, of sense of humiliation strong enough to cry out for action (I have studied this dynamic in depth in Nazi Germany). Politicians such as Bernie Sanders attempt to identify factual root causes, while populists first bundle and instigate anger and then channel it toward scapegoats, those they mistake for humiliators, wittingly or unwittingly giving cover to the actual humiliators. Organizations such as the AFP could be described as Trojan Horses that cannibalize and dominate their hosts by way of what I call “the art of humiliation.”

<sup>49</sup> “Donald Trump on Jeb Bush Attack: He’s a ‘Very Low-Energy Kind of Guy,’ ‘Had to Do Something,’” by David Sherfinski, The Washington Times, September 2, 2015, www.washingtontimes.com/news/2015/sep/2/donald-trump-jeb-bush-attack-hes-very-low-energy-k/.

<sup>50</sup> “Donald Trump: Your Sons Love for Hunting African Animals Has Nothing to Do With the Second Amendment,” by Tanya Young Williams, Huffington Post, October 20, 2015, www.huffingtonpost.com/tanya-young-williams/donald-trump-your-sons-lo\_b\_8333534.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>51</sup> A Dangerous Game, 2014, U.S. feature film, www.adangerousgamemovie.com/. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this film.

<sup>52</sup> “Privilege, Pathology and Power,” by Paul Krugman, New York Times, January 1, 2016, www.nytimes.com/2016/01/01/opinion/privilege-pathology-and-power.html. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>53</sup> See note 34 above.

<sup>54</sup> “Stories from ISIS Recruits: Drugs, Money and Preying on Youth,” by Chaker Khazaal, Huffington Post, March 1, 2016, www.huffingtonpost.com/chaker-khazaal/stories-from-isis-recruit\_b\_9349974.html. Lebanese social worker Maya Yamout reports:

In fact, many of those I interviewed had the absent-father syndrome. They missed their father figure, so ISIS and other terrorist organizations send someone like a Sheikh to pretend they’re there for them. Next thing you know, they are in Syria or Iraq fighting.

Nancy and Maya Yamout conducted interviews with thirty-five suspected terrorists being jailed in Lebanon for their master’s program at the Modern University for Business and Science in Beirut, Lebanon, and found out that all interviewed terrorists had their father image destroyed, either the father was absent or had humiliated the son. They conducted interviews with thirty-five suspected terrorists being jailed in Lebanon.

<sup>55</sup> Lindner, 2006a.

<sup>56</sup> Lu, 2000a, b. See also Lu, 2002b, a, c, 2003, 2004. I thank Jingyi Dong for her personal communication on June 25, 2015, where she shared her views on the role of Lu Xun with me. She explained:

The communist movement in China started from the university campus, then penetrated into the army, then to rural society, and ultimately Mao established a field with a unique structure. My ultimate ambition is to trace this trajectory by the light of your theory. I would like to highlight the difference between you and Lu Xun: Lu Xun asked a question, and you have the key to the question!

<sup>57</sup> Jenny Rasche, a young woman from Germany was inspired by Albert Einstein’s saying: “Es gibt keine großen Entdeckungen und Fortschritte, solange es noch ein unglückliches Kind auf Erden gibt” (There are no great discoveries and advances as long as there is an unhappy child on earth). She founded the project Kinderhilfe für Siebenbürgen. See www.roma-kinderhilfe.de/index.php/de/.

<sup>58</sup> See for more details, for instance, Preventing Terrorism and Countering Violent Extremism and Radicalization that Lead to Terrorism: A Community-Policing Approach, www.osce.org/secretariat/116516, EXIT-Deutschland: www.exit-deutschland.de, SAVE – Sisters Against Violent Extremism: www.women-without-borders.org/save/, Aufklärungsnetzwerk gegen Radikalisierung (RAN): http://ec.europa.eu/dgs/home-affairs/what-we-do/networks/radicalisation\_awareness\_network/index\_en.htm.

<sup>59</sup> With respect to humankind having all the knowledge, see, as one example, David Schwartzman, 2016, and his calculations of “how much and what kind of energy” humanity needs. The so-called public trust doctrine, which indicates that the citizens of a country own the natural resources, has been advocated in recent years as a tool to compel governments across the world to take action against climate change, see, among others, Our Children’s Trust, www.ourchildrenstrust.org.

<sup>60</sup> Ury, 1999, p. xvii.

<sup>61</sup> Clearly, there is a connection between equality and equal dignity – the connection is entailed in the human rights stipulation that equal chances and enabling environments for all are necessary to protect human dignity.

<sup>62</sup> Discourse analyst Michael Karlberg, 2013, explains that, indeed, such a new social order would not be without hierarchy. Hierarchy is, however, no longer a structure of dominance or an outcome of power-seeking behavior: “Organic hierarchy provides the organization, coordination, and efficiency by which the diverse potentialities of autonomous individuals can be realized and their energies can be applied in productive ways that promote the common good.”

<sup>63</sup> See, for instance, Michael Maren, 1997, and his book on a humanitarian worker’s “road to hell.” This book was being read by almost all humanitarian aid workers I met in Africa in 1998 and 1999, when I carried out my doctoral research, and all resonated with its sad message. We thank Anton Verwey, formerly UNHCR, for sharing his path with us in our 27th Dignity Conference in Croatia in 2016, www.humiliationstudies.org/whoweare/annualmeeting/27.php. While many idealists try to solve problems for people on the ground, those in power positions, including in humanitarian organizations, are often beholden to the power hierarchy they are part of, lest they will lose their position, including their privileges.

<sup>64</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 43.

<sup>65</sup> See, among others, Brown, 1970, Rubin and Brown, 1975.

<sup>66</sup> Tocqueville, 1856. See also “The Future by Al Gore – Review,” by John Gray, The Guardian, January 31, 2013, www.theguardian.com/books/2013/jan/31/the-future-al-gore-review. See also Gore, 2013.

<sup>67</sup> Until being appointed minister, Erik Solheim was as a diplomat and a participant in the Norwegian delegation that worked to resolve the Sri Lankan Civil War before the outbreak of Eelam War IV. On May 3, 2016, United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon announced that Solheim takes over the post of executive director of UNEP, the United Nations’ Environment Programme, in June 2016. Read more about Erik Solheim in the Appendix to Section One.

<sup>68</sup> Erik Solheim was Minister of International Development in Norway, when the interview took place in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Oslo, Norway, on January 10, 2011. Solheim’s reflections are summarized and translated from Norwegian by Lindner. It is a privilege to have the support of Erik Solheim for the World Dignity University initiative, see humiliationstudies.org/education/education.php.

<sup>69</sup> “A Painful Lesson From Brexit: Why DiEM25 needs a simpler message,” by Brian Eno and Yanis Varoufakis, DiEM25, July 4, 2016, <https://diem25.org/a-painful-lesson-from-brexit-why-diem25-needs-a-simpler-message/>:

Since the mid-1970s, once the first post-war capitalist phase ended (with the collapse of the New Deal-inspired Bretton Woods system), those relying on wage income to live have fallen off the escalator. Most of the gains from technology, productivity, globalization, have gone to the top 1% and none to the bottom 80%. People can put up with poverty, but not with humiliation – not with having their noses rubbed in their poverty by people in yachts, golf clubs and Mercedes Benzes, telling them that their poverty is self-inflicted.

Yanis Varoufakis is a Greek economist, academic and politician, who served as the Greek Minister of Finance from January to July 2015. I thank Rigmor Johnsen for making me aware of this article and for her support to Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies.

<sup>70</sup> See for a discussion of terror, panic, and polarization Renos Papadopoulos, 2006, who draws on his expertise in the Greek roots of notions such as terror and panic, and combines it with his Jungian orientation.

<sup>71</sup> Norbert Müller is on the board of Schura Hamburg (SCHURA – Rat der islamischen Gemeinschaften in Hamburg e.V.), a merger of mosque associations in Hamburg, Germany. The interview with Norbert Müller took place in Hamburg on October 22, 2010. Müller’s reflections are summarized and translated from German by Lindner. Müller sees two groups being radicalized, apart from the highly educated group, there is a second group:

Then there are the outsiders with criminal backgrounds, petty criminals who were once in jail, young men who then discover religion for themselves and find a holding point there. This is a new-islamization, a re-conversion, just like there are born-again Christians and Muslims, where religion is used as identity reinforcement.

See more in the Appendix to Section One.

<sup>72</sup> “Press Conference by President Obama,” Antalya, Turkey, Kaya Palazzo Resort, White House, November 16, 2015, www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2015/11/16/press-conference-president-obama-antalya-turkey:

This is not a traditional military opponent. We can retake territory. And as long as we leave our troops there, we can hold it, but that does not solve the underlying problem of eliminating the dynamics that are producing these kinds of violent extremist groups.” Obama concludes by saying that his only interest is to end suffering and to keep the American people safe. “But what we do not do, what I do not do is to take actions either because it is going to work politically or it is going to somehow, in the abstract, make America look tough, or make me look tough... I’m not interested in doing is posing or pursuing some notion of American leadership or America winning, or whatever other slogans they come up with that has no relationship to what is actually going to work to protect the American people, and to protect people in the region who are getting killed, and to protect our allies and people like France.

<sup>73</sup> Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005. Howard Richards, in a personal communication on October 23, 2016: “According to Immanuel Wallerstein the global economy is the one and only object of study of the social sciences today; everything else is caught up in a web of causes and effects where the structure of the global economy is the principal cause.” See also Lindner, 2012d.

<sup>74</sup> Richards, 2013, Wallerstein, 1974–1989. See also Harvey, 2005.

<sup>75</sup> In Hidden Persuaders, social critic Vance Packard, 1957, explains the sophisticated creation of needs by the advertising industry. In The Status Seekers, Packard, 1959, describes Americans’ struggle to climb the ladder within the society’s social stratification. In Waste Makers, Packard, 1960, criticizes planned obsolescence, illustrating Karl Marx’s saying, “The production of too many useless things results in too many useless people.” In A Nation of Strangers, Packard, 1972, chronicles the wearing down of communal structure through frequent geographical transfers of corporate executives. In The People Shapers, Packard, 1977, highlights how human behavior is manipulated by the use of psychological and biological testing. In Our Endangered Children, Packard, 1983, warns of the dangers with American preoccupation with money, power, status, and sex. In The Ultra Rich: How Much Is Too Much? Packard, 1989, examines the lives of thirty American multimillionaires and their debaucheries.

With regard to Hidden Persuaders, also the work of Allan Schnaiberg is still relevant, who described three theories of consumption: 1) the Pure Consumption Model, suggesting consumer sovereignty, the neoclassical model; 2) the Distorted Consumption Model, where corporations create needs and demand; 3) the Structured Consumption Model, where government infrastructure shapes our consumption patterns. See, for instance, Schnaiberg, 1980, or Gould, et al., 1996.

I thank Sheldon Krinsky for reminding me of the work of Packard and Schnaiberg, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Why We Consume: Neural Design and Sustainability,” January 29, 2016.

See also the work of psychologist Martin Textor, 1992, working in Germany, and warning, since many years, that the social fabric of society is being worn down.

<sup>76</sup> Galtung, 1996, p. 76–77.

<sup>77</sup> See, among others, Zehr, 2005, Braithwaite, 2002, or Villa-Vicencio and Verwoerd, 2000. It is a privilege to have Howard Zehr, John Braithwaite, and Charles Villa-Vicencio as esteemed members in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>78</sup> See, among others, Helmick, et al., 2001. It is a privilege to have Raymond Helmick as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship, together with several contributors to this book, such as Andrea Bartoli, Ervin Staub and Laurie Anne Pearlman, Donna Hicks, or Olga Botcharova.

<sup>79</sup> See a diagram of how to broaden the focus of peacebuilding to include also the pre-conflict situation in Grävingholt, et al., 2009, p. 5.

<sup>80</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 16.

<sup>81</sup> Galtung, 1971, Galtung, 1976. In Lindner, 2016e, I discuss Ibn Khaldun and Arnold Toynbee and how they speak of the periphery versus the center, as does also peace researcher Johan Galtung. However, there is a difference. While Toynbee focuses on the embattled border region and the “hardened” culture it can give rise to, Galtung speaks of the exploited periphery where a culture of obedience is being engendered, but, where also alternative solutions may emerge.

<sup>82</sup> Kraidy and Murphy, 2008:

Galtung’s theory sees the global as a sine qua non intermediary between various locals. In contrast, Geertz’s translocal orientation reflects a web-like network with sensitivity to periphery-to-periphery contact.

<sup>83</sup> Coates, 2015, p. 146. See also Midiohouan, 1991.

<sup>84</sup> Lévinas, 1961/1969, 1982, 1985b, a.

<sup>85</sup> Lindner, 2014b.

<sup>86</sup> Pickering, 2010.

<sup>87</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 24, italics in original.

<sup>88</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 51.

<sup>89</sup> Staub, 1989, 1993, 2012, 2015.

<sup>90</sup> Escrigas, 2016.

<sup>91</sup> Wayne Visser, Kaleidoscope Futures, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” May 24, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016.

<sup>92</sup> McMaster, 2013. Finland has demonstrated high standards even on Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development measurements like the Programme for International Student Assessment.

<sup>93</sup> McMaster, 2013, p. 524.

<sup>94</sup> Sahlberg, 2015.

<sup>95</sup> Ibid.

<sup>96</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 145. According to a survey of middle and high school students in the United States, less than one third indicated that their school provided a caring, encouraging environment, and less than half reported that they had competencies such as empathy, conflict resolution and decision-making skills, see Benson, 2006. See also Durlak, et al., 2011, and an Annotated Bibliography over Social and Emotional Learning Research at www.edutopia.org/self-research-annotated-bibliography. See also CASEL: Collaborative for Academic, Social, and Emotional Learning (www.casel.org), of which psychologist and science journalist Daniel Goleman is a co-founder.

<sup>97</sup> Nevo and Brem, 2002. I thank Nils Vidar Vambheim for making me aware of this publication.

<sup>98</sup> Particularly displaced youths are vulnerable, see “Displaced Youth: Selling Souls to Sex and Drugs,” by Rose Delaney, Inter Press Service (IPS), July 15 2016, www.ipsnews.net/2016/07/displaced-youth-selling-souls-to-sex-and-drugs/. See also “UNHCR’s Engagement with Displaced Youth: A Global Review,” by Rosalind Evans and Claudia Lo Forte, with Dr. Erika McAslan, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Policy Development and Evaluation Service (PDES), March 2013, www.unhcr.org/513f37bb9.pdf.

<sup>99</sup> Wang and Aamodt, 2011.

<sup>100</sup> See an accessible summary of the IQ variation over time in the human population and some of the explanations in “People Getting Dumber? Human Intelligence Has Declined Since Victorian Era, Research Suggests,” by Macrina Cooper-White, Associate Science Editor, The Huffington Post, May 22, 2013, www.huffingtonpost.com/2013/05/22/people-getting-dumber-human-intelligence-victoria-era\_n\_3293846.html. See also Woodley, et al., 2013, or Levesque, et al., 2011.

<sup>101</sup> Benson, 2006.

<sup>102</sup> See relational-cultural theory and cultural-historical activity theory. Linda Hartling builds on relational-cultural theory, as developed by her mentor Jean Baker Miller and colleagues, see, among others, Hartling, et al., 2008. Linda Hartling is the former Associate Director of the Jean Baker Miller Training Institute, and it is an immense privilege to have her now as the director of Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies. Relational-cultural theory (CRP) evolved from the work of Jean Baker Miller, M.D., pioneer in women’s psychology. It assumes that humans have a natural drive toward relationships, and it applies a growth-in-connection model of human growth and development to organizational settings. See Miller, 1976/1986, and for an overview, among others, Hartling, et al., 2008, and Jordan, 2010.

<sup>103</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>104</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>105</sup> See, among many, King, 2007, and Vetlesen, 2015.

<sup>106</sup> See Ugo Mattei, Hastings College of Law at the University of California, and his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “Against Ecocide: Legal Protection for Earth,” July 5, 2016, in response to Femke Wijdekop, 2016. The ICC, because of the lack of international centralized power or independence, is just a mockery of an institution, writes Mattei, and continues:

Ecocide is too serious of an issue to be entangled with such a spectacle of an international institution that never worked to reach the actual powerful culprits. Moreover, even if we were to take seriously international criminal law in a world of dramatic power imbalance, a crime of ecocide would necessarily require a level of culpability that is most probably absent in all the major episodes of devastation of the environment. Disasters such as Fukushima, Chernobyl, or even the Gulf spill would clearly fall below that. There are issues of corporate responsibility, of criminal consequences of recklessness, of sufficiency, of omissions, or of causality that handled by any good criminal attorney would clear let wealthy corporate actors immune from responsibility.

It is hard to believe that any powerful wrongdoer will be deterred by such a crime, and, as consequence, the very idea of ecocide will suffer prestige and credibility.

We live in a world in which very few people have any awareness of the disasters of the Anthropocene, so we need diffused ecological literacy. We live in a world in which people believe that the only concept of law is that of a vertical model in the hands of governments, so we need diffused legal literacy.

In seeking a legal solution for problems of such ecological relevance, involving so many non-human interests traditionally and presently ignored and massively violated by the very structure of extractive capitalism, we need (if at all available) the best not the worst part of legal systems. We need to culturally transform the perception of law, to disentangle it with notions of power-concentration, to give it back to communities as a decentralized cultural and legitimate tool to share problems and solutions. Nothing is further away from people and social movements than an appeal to jails, cops, and police to solve our ecological problems. Would such a move increase international ecological legal literacy?

<sup>107</sup> Stainback, et al., 2016.

<sup>108</sup> “Why a Feminist Foreign Policy Is Needed More than Ever,” by Margot Wallström, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Sweden, Inter Press Service (IPS), March 7, 2017, www.ipsnews.net/2017/03/why-a-feminist-foreign-policy-is-needed-more-than-ever/:

The world is torn by conflicts that are perhaps more complex and more difficult to solve than ever before. Almost half of all conflicts reoccur within five years. Over 1.5 billion people live in fragile states and conflict zones. In order to respond to these global challenges, we need to connect the dots and see what drives peace. We need to change our policies from reactive to proactive, focusing on preventing rather than responding.

<sup>109</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 156, adapted from Lindner, 1999.

<sup>110</sup> Vambheim, 2016, p. 94.

<sup>111</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010. According to primatologist Frans de Waal, bonobos “make love, not war,” in contrast to chimpanzees, who “use violence to get sex, while bonobos use sex to avoid violence.” Bonobos, previously known as “pygmy chimpanzees,” are among the most sexual of all living animals. Sexual activity connects not just males and females, more importantly, females build coalitions among themselves, which enable them to contain male supremacy and aggressiveness. The fundamental difference between Homo sapiens’ two closest relatives, bonobos and chimpanzees, is “that one resolves sexual issues with power, while the other resolves power issues with sex,” de Waal, 2005, p. 19. De Waal suggests that bonobo females are able to contain males because bonobos live in ecological niches that offer more resources, while female chimpanzees tend to be alone when they come across males. See Clay, et al., 2016, and also Ryan and Jethá, 2010, and “The New York Times Misleads on Monogamy: Why Do Even the Best Journalists Mislead Readers About Human Sexual Evolution?” by Christopher Ryan, Psychology Today, September 16, 2013, www.psychologytoday.com/blog/sex-dawn/201309/the-new-york-times-misleads-monogamy.

<sup>112</sup> “Hva er en feministisk utenrikspolitikk, temahefte forklart,” by Elisabeth Kristiansen, Fred og frihet, Number 1, 2016, WILPF Norge – Internasjonal kvinneliga for fred og frihet, www.ikff.no/wp-content/uploads/2012/05/Fred-og-frihet-nr-1-2016.pdf, pp. 12–14. I thank Trine Eklund for making me aware of the renewed focus in Scandinavia on establishing a fredsdepartement in Scandinavia. It is a privilege to have Trine Eklund as esteemed member in the global advisory board of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>113</sup> Deresiewicz, 2014.

<sup>114</sup> Lindner, 2016b, pp. 11–12.

<sup>115</sup> Lindner, 2016b.

<sup>116</sup> During our 27th Dignity Conference in Dubrovnik in 2016, I became aware that trading communities like Venice and Dubrovnik interestingly were among the first to abolish the trade of slaves, even though slaves were still kept in private homes, and it was allowed to keep them pro usu suo, Latin for one’s own use. It seems that Christian motives were stronger than the profit motive. See “Dubrovnik Republic Abolished Slavery before Many World Powers Did,” Welcome Dubrovnik: Dobro Došli u Dubrovnik, Number 28, 2016, pp. 32–33, www.tzdubrovnik.hr/user\_files/made/welcome/w28web.pdf:

Among the numerous humanitarian laws enacted by the Dubrovnik government, the one from the year 1416 is definitely worth mentioning. The law did doubtlessly not arise solely from a feeling of shame before the rest of the world, but directly from a feeling of humanity, characteristic of medieval communities. This legal decision tells us most convincingly of the Christian love for the most disenfranchised people at the bottom of the social scale – the slaves. More than anything else, the abolition of slavery in the early 15th century did more credit than anything else to the Dubrovnik Republic in the Europe of the time. The slave trade was abolished before Dubrovnik in Split

(1373), Korčula (1378 and 1418) and also in Venice. It should definitely be pointed out that Dubrovnik abolished the slave trade long before some other states (in England it was abolished in 1807, while in the USA it was not completely abolished until after the American Civil War, 1861–1865). The Dubrovnik government reached its decision on 27 January 1416, with the following explanation and sanctions in the event of the regulations not being obeyed:

“Believing that the people trade is shameful, criminal, repulsive and in breach of every form of humanity, that considerable guilt and shame is brought upon our city because human beings – created in the image and likeness of God – are treated like merchandise, and people are sold in the same way as animals, the (Dubrovnik) government decides and orders that no citizen or peasant of the city of Dubrovnik and its surroundings, or any other person who calls himself a man of Dubrovnik, will – in no way and under no excuse or interpretation – dare to and agree to sell or buy a male or female slave, or mediate in such a trade, or enter into such an agreement with any citizen or peasant engaged in or supporting such business.”

<sup>117</sup> “Dubrovnik Republic Abolished Slavery before Many World Powers Did,” Welcome Dubrovnik: Dobro Došli u Dubrovnik, Number 28, 2016, pp. 32–33, www.tzdubrovnik.hr/user\_files/made/welcome/w28web.pdf, p. 33.

<sup>118</sup> The Act of Killing (2012) and The Look of Silence (2014), are documentary films by Joshua Oppenheimer. The Act of Killing is a portrait of the perpetrators of the 1965 Indonesian genocide, in which perhaps a million people suspected of being Communists were killed. In The Look of Silence the focus is on the murder of a single victim, Ramli Rukun. In 2014, after a screening of The Act of Killing for US Congress members, Oppenheimer called on the U.S. to acknowledge its role in the killings.

<sup>119</sup> “Joshua Oppenheimer Won’t Go Back to Indonesia,” interview by Adam Shatz, New York Times, July 9, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/07/12/magazine/joshua-oppenheimer-wont-go-back-to-indonesia.html?\_r=1. Oppenheimer states that the West shares considerable responsibility for the mass killings in Indonesia. Particular the United States “provided the special radio system so the Army could coordinate the killings over the vast archipelago.”

<sup>120</sup> Ted Trainer, in a personal communication on January 17, 2015, in response to my message following his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) Discussion on the topic “The Degrowth Alternative,” January 14, 2015. Ted (F.E.) Trainer is an Australian academic, and an advocate of economic de-growth, simple living, and “conserving” lifestyles. Trainer is on the faculty of the Simplicity Institute, Office of Environmental Programmes, Melbourne University, Australia, <http://simplicityinstitute.org/ted-trainer>. He is also a conjoint lecturer in the School of Social Sciences, University of New South Wales. He has taught and written about sustainability and justice issues for many years. See also Trainer, 2014.

<sup>121</sup> Ted Trainer, in a personal communication on January 17, 2015, in response to my message following his contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) Discussion on the topic “The Degrowth Alternative,” January 14, 2015:

Many green people are working heroically to save the whale for instance, but not realizing that their ultimate goals cannot be achieved unless we scrap the present global economic system, and much of the culture of consumerism. Meanwhile many on the red-left are working hard on justice etc. projects but not clearly aware that resource limits rule out any vision of a good society in which all live affluently. I think we will see a coming together as conditions worsen, so that we all go on focusing on our particular interests but see ourselves as part of a coalition that realizes that consumer-capitalism has to be replaced. Above all my perspective is that many good groups do not realize well enough that we have to think in terms of a form of satisfactory society in which we can all live well on a tiny fraction of present rich world per capita resource use.

<sup>122</sup> Ray and Anderson, 2000. Social scientists Paul H. Ray and Sherry Ruth Anderson, through their surveys, identified three main cultural trends. First, the moderns, the cultural movement that started about 500 years ago and that endorses the “realist” worldview of either big business, big government, or big media, or past socialist, communist, or fascist movements. Then, the first countermovement against the moderns are the traditionals, the religious right and rural populations. The most recent countermovement are the cultural creatives, who value strong ecological sustainability for the planet, support women’s issues, personal growth, authenticity, and are wary of big business. The cultural creatives movement is currently flowing together from two branches that both started out around 1960 and initially antagonized each other, namely, the consciousness movement, an inward-oriented movement, focusing on the inner state of the psyche, and the social movement, an outward-oriented movement, focusing on action for peace in the streets. When Ray and Anderson published their work in 2000, in the United States, traditionals comprised about 24 to 26 percent of the adult population (approximately 48 million people), moderns about 47 to 49 percent (approximately 95 million), and cultural creatives are about 26 to 28 percent (approximately 50 million). In the European Union, the cultural creatives were about 30 to 35 percent of the adult population.

<sup>123</sup> “Keynes’ Limitations and Trump’s Disasters,” by Howard Richards, Chileufú, November 2016, <http://chileufu.cl/keynes-limitations-and-trumps-disasters/>.

<sup>124</sup> Bhaskar, 2008.

<sup>125</sup> Taylor, 1971, 1993a, Searle, 1995. Searle speaks of “institutional facts,” for instance, with respect to property rights and contract rights, see Manicas, 2006. See, furthermore, Porpora, 1993, Donati and Archer, 2015, and Richards, 2004. I thank Howard Richards for including me into his life-long journey of reflecting on social change.

<sup>126</sup> See, among others, Axelrod, 2006, Liberman, et al., 2004, Imhof, et al., 2007, Nowak and Highfield, 2011. See also Bernstein, 1971, 1973, 1975, 1990, 2000. I thank Vidar Vambheim for reminding me of Bernstein’s work and that Bernstein introduced the concept of framing to describe how control of mental frames is used to regulate thinking and behavior in educational contexts. Bernstein describes framing as a mental process and a technique to exclude certain aspects of reality from entering the communication. See also Chong and Druckman, 2007.

<sup>127</sup> Liberman, et al., 2004, Abstract:

Two experiments, one conducted with American college students and one with Israeli pilots and their instructors, explored the predictive power of reputation-based assessments versus the stated “name of the game” (Wall Street Game vs. Community Game) in determining players’ responses in an N-move Prisoner’s Dilemma. The results of these studies showed that the relevant labeling manipulations exerted far greater impact on the players’ choice to cooperate versus defect – both in the first round and overall – than anticipated by the individuals who had predicted their behavior. Reputation-based prediction, by contrast, failed to discriminate cooperators from defectors. A supplementary questionnaire study showed the generality of the relevant short-coming in naïve psychology. The implications of these findings, and the potential contribution of the present methodology to the classic pedagogical strategy of the demonstration experiment, are discussed.

<sup>128</sup> Guala, 2012b, p. 51, where Guala reminds of the work of Putnam, 2000, that shows the strong link between the weak reciprocity manifested in continuous participation in the activities of the local community, and more general prosocial attitudes such as altruism. Guala concludes: “The capacity to cultivate long-term relationships is correlated with people’s willingness to cooperate outside the small circle of friends and family, and it is subject to medium-term cycles of growth and decay.”

<sup>129</sup> Rosas, 2012, p. 37. Philosopher and experimental economist Francesco Guala’s target article was Guala, 2012a, and his response to the comments, Guala, 2012b, p. 51:

No reciprocity theorist today would claim that prosocial emotions (including anger at injustice, or punitive drives generally) are unreal. Similarly, no one would seriously argue that human behavior is always calculative or strategic. Apart from psychopaths we are all (psychologically) prosocial, altruistic people. Rosas puts it nicely, saying that humans are psychologically unselfish, but biologically selfish creatures.

<sup>130</sup> John Fullerton, now a new member of the Club of Rome, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 31, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016:

I particularly liked Paul’s near dismissal of the “Conventional Worlds” scenarios – both Market Forces and Policy Reform variations, what Paul calls “the false god of moderation that invites us to passively drift down the garden path to barbarization.” Of course, this is precisely the path we (collectively) are on, with all the well-meaning focus on “green growth,” internalizing “externalities” (an oxymoron), calls for greater market transparency with Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) metrics (our idolatry of markets and their ability to guide us is a deadly confusion of means and ends), Divest/Invest campaigns, quantifying in monetary terms ecosystem services offered by vital and priceless ecosystem function, circular economy manufacturing processes, impact investing, carbon demand-side reduction targets, more progressive taxation regimes, and on and on. ALL are essential incremental change, part of any ultimate solution. All are important work. But mostly what they accomplish is the extension of our runway, not systemic change, because they do not involve a fundamental change in the way we think. They could lull us into false confidence that we are on the right track. Collectively, they are the result of our intellectually lazy or simply ignorant preference to worship what Paul calls the “false god of moderation,” or simply represent the only way we can have our voices heard. We must see this for what it is, our ongoing 500-year-old Modern Era (and thus deeply ingrained literally into our DNA) reductionist mindset of treating symptoms like carbon emissions rather than seeking and then addressing root causes, holistically understood.

<sup>131</sup> Raskin, 2016, Raskin, et al., 2002.

<sup>132</sup> Michael Bauwens, in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” October 31, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016. Bauwens points at macro-historian Kojin Karatani, 2010/2014, as one voice among others providing maps of civilizational transitions. Karatani suggests that a key element of such transitions is a reconfiguration of modes of exchange, and that a future civilization will have to return to both the commons and reciprocity mechanisms as key drivers for the exchange of human value and natural resources. For the past years, Bauwens has also built on Alan Page Fiske, 1991, and his Structures of Social Life, and on David Ronfeldt, 1996, and his TIMN framework (Tribes, Institutions, Markets, and Networks). Bauwens writes:

Karatani takes a multi-modal approach. This means he recognizes and shows that at least four modes of exchange have existed throughout history and throughout all regions of the world, but what matters is their internal configuration, and especially, what is the dominant mode of exchange in any given system, which acts as an “attractor” for the others. Karatani starts with describing the dominance of pooling in early nomadic societies based on kinship bands, the dominance of reciprocity and the gift economy in tribal federations; the dominance of state and rank-based redistribution (“Authority Ranking”) in pre-capitalist class formations and finally, the dominance of the capitalist market. This means that civilizational transitions, marked by the evolution of one dominant exchange system to another, are regular occurrences in world history, and they are quite systematically described in Karatani’s remarkable synthesis. On the European continent, the two last of such transitions were the 10th transition of the post-Roman plunder economy into the feudal land-based economy, brilliantly described in Robert Moore’s First European Revolution, and the 15th century start of the transition to a market-based economy.

<sup>133</sup> Volkan, 2004.

<sup>134</sup> See Lindner, 2006a, Chapter 7: Humiliation Addiction, in the book Making Enemies: Humiliation and International Conflict. See also the conceptualization of the post victim ethical exemption syndrome as an outgrowth of humiliation, by James Edward Jones, 2006. See, furthermore, Lewis Coser, 1956, and his differentiation of realistic and un-realistic conflict. First and foremost, conflict simply presupposes a relationship and social interaction. Not all hostile impulses lead to social conflict, and not every conflict is accompanied by aggressiveness. Realistic conflicts are those that arise from frustration of specific demands and are pursued toward the attainment of specific results. Other pathways than conflict are taken if available. Realistic conflict is thus a means, unlike non-realistic conflict, which is an end in itself. It is fed by one antagonist’s need to release tension. The main point is the release of aggressiveness, and the target of hostility can easily change. Clearly, realistic conflicts can also be accompanied by distorted sentiments. Conflict may be motivated by both, realistic conflict issues and parties’ affective investment in the conflict. See a summary of Coser, 1956, by the University of Colorado’s Conflict Research Consortium Staff, at www.colorado.edu/conflict/peace/example/coser.htm.

<sup>135</sup> Claudia Neubauer, Fondation Charles Léopold Mayer (FPH), in her contribution to the Great Transition Network (GTN) discussion on the topic of “A Higher Calling for Higher Education,” May 25, 2016, in response to Escrigas, 2016. See also Neubauer and Calamé, 2013. See, furthermore, Fellman, 1998. John Amos Comenius (1592 – 1670) speaks of gardens. He is a Czech philosopher, pedagogue and theologian, considered to be the “father of modern education.” Philosopher Henning Vierck has even created a Comenius garden in one of the most socially vulnerable parts of Berlin, see Der Comeniusgarten in Berlin, ttt – titel thesen temperatmente, Das Erste, July 24, 2016, www.daserste.de/information/wissen-kultur/ttt/sendung/comeniusgarten-berlin-neukoelln-100.html. Das Erste (The First), is a television channel that is coordinated by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ARD, a consortium of public broadcasters in Germany, a joint organization of Germany’s regional public-service broadcasters.

<sup>136</sup> Perhaps such terminologies are necessary at the beginning of awareness movements, yet, I believe, they ought to be avoided at later stages, since they draw too much attention to what they want to avoid. Negating a frame activates that frame, as explained, among others, by Lakoff, 2002, 2004, 2016. Listen also to On The Media: Normalize This! How Talking About Trump Makes Him Normal in Your Brain, Brooke Glastone speaks with George Lakoff, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 2, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/george-lakoff/: “According to George Lakoff, a cognitive linguist and author of Don’t Think Of An Elephant! Know Your Values and Frame the Debate, the very fundamentals of journalism should be redefined in order to stave off normalizing Trump. Lakoff and Brooke discuss the unconscious effects that Trump’s language, image, and name have on the brain.”

Listen also to On The Media: Normalize This! Masha Gessen on the “Impulse to Normalize,” Brooke Glastone speaks with Masha Gessen, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 2, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/masha-gessen-impulse-normalize/. Gessen calls on the media to focus on the gap between facts and the truth and to bridge the gap between reporting the facts and telling the truth. See also Gessen, 2013. Listen, furthermore, to On The Media: Normalize This! Left Language, Right Language, Brooke Glastone speaks with John McWhorter, WNYC-FM New York Public Radio, December 2, 2016, www.wnyc.org/story/left-language-right-language/, and see McWhorter, 2016, to reflect on ways to avoid obscuring the truth.

Psychotherapy uses the fact that negation activates what is negated in the form of paradox intervention, see Watzlawick, et al., 1967, and paradox intention, see Viktor Frankl, 1946.

<sup>137</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 45.

<sup>138</sup> Phillips and Hardy, 2002, p. 15.

<sup>139</sup> The field of Michael Karlberg is the study of discourse as a social force. See Karlberg, 2013, Conclusion:

As the examples above illustrate, the maturation of human dignity lies, ultimately, in the reframing of human consciousness. And as the preceding analysis explains, the work of reframing will have to occur, in part, at the level of discourse, because discourse is a primary medium through which the codes of human culture and consciousness evolve. Moreover, at this critical juncture in history, this reframing has become an evolutionary imperative. Our reproductive and technological success as a species has transformed the conditions of our own existence. Over seven billion people now live on this planet and our technologies have amplified our impact a thousand-fold. Inherited codes of culture and consciousness are proving maladaptive under these conditions.

In this context, reframing significant discourses according to the logic of organic interdependence is a vital adaptive strategy. Skeptics may, of course, dismiss this view as naïve and unrealistic. But is it realistic to assume that the prevailing culture of contest can be sustained indefinitely on a planet with over seven billion people wielding increasingly powerful and destructive technologies? Is it realistic to assume that narrowly self-interested motives can continue to drive human behavior in this context? Is it realistic to assume that the struggle for power and domination can continue to define our social existence indefinitely under such conditions? What is needed, in this regard, is a new realism – a new interpretive frame. The logic of the social body frame offers this. And, in the process, it provides a genuine foundation for human dignity.

<sup>140</sup> Bateson, 1954, is often credited for the initial concept of an interpretive frame. He pointed out that discrete communicative acts are rendered meaningful within larger interpretive frames. For example, an apparently “hostile” communicative act can take on completely different meanings when interpreted through the frame “this is play” or the frame “this is war.” Building on these insights, Goffman, 1974, conceptualized frames as cognitive schemata or mental frameworks that shape our perceptions, interpretations, and representations of reality; mentally organize our experience; and provide normative guides for our actions. Following this work by Bateson and Goffman, the concept of frames and framing has been conceptualized with different nuances across the social and psychological sciences. However, what unifies these conceptions is the understanding that people must rely on acquired structures of interpretation to sift, sort, and make sense out of the otherwise overwhelming universe of information and experience they encounter in their daily lives.

<sup>141</sup> Etzioni, 2013.

<sup>142</sup> Snow and Benford, 1988, p. 213.

<sup>143</sup> Van Dijk, 2001.

<sup>144</sup> Chong and Druckman, 2007.

<sup>145</sup> The story of the Five Levels of Martial Arts, was told by Li Young Li at the symposium “Snowdrift Dialogues” in February 2014, and re-told by Kim Stafford, the son of the Oregon pacifist, poet, and activist William Stafford in the Peace Poet William Stafford Centennial Celebration Talk by Kim Stafford (son), taped by the Tualatin Valley Community TV on February 13, 2014, and published on 18 February 18, 2014, <https://youtu.be/pmOds9pF8cg>, see also www.ci.oswego.or.us/loreads. In this talk, William Stafford’s son Kim discusses his father’s daily writing practice, and how this led to a life of compassion and witness. Kim is an essayist and poet who has taught writing at Lewis and Clark College and other colleges and workshops locally and abroad for over 30 years. I thank Linda for telling us about Kim Stafford’s talk.

<sup>146</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 84.

<sup>147</sup> See, for instance, europa.eu/scadplus/glossary/subsidiarity\_en.htm.

<sup>148</sup> Marshall, 2008.

<sup>149</sup> See “Column: This Is What Happens When You Take Ayn Rand Seriously,” by Denise Cummins, Public Broadcasting Service (PBS), February 16, 2016, www.pbs.org/newshour/making-sense/column-this-is-what-happens-when-you-take-ayn-rand-seriously/. Cummins presents two case studies that show the disastrous consequences of following Ayn Rand’s philosophy, namely, the company Sears, and the country Honduras. I thank Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>150</sup> See also “Why the P2P and Commons Movement Must Act Trans-Locally and Trans-Nationally,” by Michel Bauwens, P2P Foundation, June 12, 2016, <https://blog.p2pfoundation.net/p2p-commons-movement-must-act-trans-locally-trans-nationally/2016/06/16>. I thank Uli Spalthoff for making me aware of this article. Bauwens recommends Karatani, 2014. Like Alan Page Fiske, 1991, in Structures of Social Life, also Karatani recognizes four basic modes of social life, and these modes exist at all times and in all places. As to levels of measurement, psychologist Stanley Smith Stevens, 1946, developed the best known classification with four levels, or scales of measurement: nominal, ordinal, interval, and ratio.

<sup>151</sup> Raskin, 2016, p. 84.

<sup>152</sup> Miller, 1986a.

<sup>153</sup> Bruce Schuman in his contribution to the Great Transition Network Initiative discussion titled “Journey to Earthland: Making the Great Transition to Planetary Civilization,” September 24, 2016, in response to Raskin, 2016.

<sup>154</sup> World Happiness Report 2017, <http://worldhappiness.report/ed/2017/>:

Norway has jumped from 4th place in 2016 to 1st place this year, followed by Denmark, Iceland and Switzerland in a tightly packed bunch. All of the top four countries rank highly on all the main factors found to support happiness: caring, freedom, generosity, honesty, health, income and good governance. Their averages are so close that small changes can re-order the rankings from year to year. Norway moves to the top of the ranking despite weaker oil prices. It is sometimes said that Norway achieves and maintains its high happiness not because of its oil wealth, but in spite of it. By choosing to produce its oil slowly, and investing the proceeds for the future rather than spending them in the present, Norway has insulated itself from the boom and bust cycle of many other resource-rich economies. To do this successfully requires high levels of mutual trust, shared purpose, generosity and good governance, all factors that help to keep Norway and other top countries where they are in the happiness rankings.

<sup>155</sup> Shaw, 1889.

<sup>156</sup> Popper, 1957.

<sup>157</sup> Brandal, et al., 2013.

<sup>158</sup> Space Exploration – A Powerful Symbol of Global Cooperation, Jim Zimmerman, NASA, interviewed by Susan T. Coleman, The Peacebuilding Podcast, December 13, 2016, <http://us11.campaign-archive1.com/?u=e5c2110f5cc4fe346c79bf3d1&id=06298a46ca&e=e7c4dd8362>. I thank Judit Révész for making me aware of this interview.

<sup>159</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>160</sup> Jeannette Armstrong holds the Canada Research Chair in Okanagan Indigenous Knowledge and Philosophy at the University of British Columbia. She works with “Unveiling Syilx Okanagan Traditional Knowledge,” see www.chairs-chaires.gc.ca/chairholders-titulaires/profile-eng.aspx?profileId=3020.

<sup>161</sup> Tikkun editor at large Peter Gabel in a personal communication on December 1, 2010:

Dear Evelin and Linda, Thank you for this good letter and for creating such an important field as Humiliation Studies. In my book The Bank Teller and Other Essays on the Politics of Meaning (Gabel, 2000) and in my as yet unpublished The Desire for Mutual Recognition, I argue in effect that humiliation is the root of all evil and show how it is the foundation for the very structure of the alienated self, how we develop a false outer self to protect our being against the anticipation of humiliation due to non-recognition of our essential humanity. It sounds like the two of you and your group have been creating exactly the kind of organization needed to bring this kind of awareness to a larger audience, and perhaps to help change this continuing intergenerational replication of fear of the other, rage, and social separation.

<sup>162</sup> “Humiliation Is the Root of All Terrorism,” by Tikkun editor at large Peter Gabel, TruthOut, December 16, 2015, www.truth-out.org/speakout/item/34062-humiliation-is-the-root-of-all-terrorism. I thank Seymour M. (Mike) Miller and Linda Hartling for making me aware of this article.

<sup>163</sup> Ibid.

<sup>164</sup> Ibid.

<sup>165</sup> How to Save the World from Fascism, And Meet Human Needs in Harmony with Nature,” by Howard Richards, April 14, 2017, Chileufú, <http://chileufu.cl/>.

<sup>166</sup> Ibid.

<sup>167</sup> Malinowski, 1944.

<sup>168</sup> How to Save the World from Fascism, And Meet Human Needs in Harmony with Nature,” by Howard Richards, April 14, 2017, Chileufú, <http://chileufu.cl/>.

<sup>169</sup> Social change is only possible if we accept the interdependence of theory, research and action/practice, writes David Bargal, 2011a. See also his most recent work in Burnes and Bargal, 2017. I am deeply thankful for David Bargal’s guidance since we met at Columbia University in 2002, and his care at his university during my time in my beloved Jerusalem in 2004. I am deeply thankful also for his review of my book on gender, humiliation, and global security in Bargal, 2011b. David Bargal David Bargal is Gordon Brown professor at the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work at the Hebrew University, Jerusalem. Even though I had learned “by heart” every corner of Jerusalem’s Old City when I worked at the Alyn Hospital as a psychology student in 1975, David still showed me new faces of Jerusalem, the city that ought to be The Peace Capital of the World. See www.humiliationstudies.org/intervention/jerusalem.php.

<sup>170</sup> Pickering, 2010.

<sup>171</sup> Merle Lefkoff in a personal communication on December 18, 2015. See also the Center for Emergent Diplomacy (ECOS), www.emergentdiplomacy.org. It is a privilege to have Merle Lefkoff as esteemed member in the global advisory board of our Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies fellowship.

<sup>172</sup> Merle Lefkoff lives in the Santa Fe region, where theoretical biologist, and complex systems researcher Stuart Alan Kauffman was faculty in residence at the Santa Fe Institute dedicated to the study of complex systems from 1986 to 1997. We thank her for reminding us of the paper “Coevolution to the Edge of Chaos,” by Kauffman and Johnsen, 1991, and of the classic At Home in the Universe by Kauffman, 1995. For his thoughts on “The Adjacent Possible,” see the Edge Foundation, November 9, 2003, www.edge.org/conversation/the-adjacent-possible. See also his recent work in Kauffman, 2016, Kauffman and Gare, 2015. Merle Lefkoff shared her insights at the 27th Dignity Conference in Dubrovnik, Croatia, on 21st September 2016, where she facilitated a Dignilogue titled “Indigenous Knowledge and the New Science of Complex Adaptive Systems,” see <https://youtu.be/ZmVxqHnSo40>.

<sup>173</sup> Laszlo, 2014. I thank Dino Karabeg for connecting me with Alexander Laszlo.

<sup>174</sup> Laszlo, 2015. See also Dennis, 2014.

<sup>175</sup> Anthony Marsella, in a personal communication on June 26, 2013. See also “Lifeism: Beyond Humanity,” Anthony J. Marsella, TRANSCEND Media Service, March 17, 2014, www.transcend.org/tms/2014/03/lifeism-beyond-humanity/.

<sup>176</sup> Witt and Schwesinger, 2013, p. S37:

It is not sufficient for leadership to rely solely on authority conferred to them. Instead, leadership must be based on personal capabilities and skills that allow the leaders at their level of responsibility to exert pro-social dominance ... and promote group interests, negotiate compromises where group interests and organizational goals are in conflict, and seek consensus regarding task assignments.

<sup>177</sup> See Visser and Courtice, 2011, or “The 7 Habits of Effective Sustainability Leaders” by Wayne Visser, www.waynevisser.com/articles/7-habits-sustainability-leaders.

<sup>178</sup> The butterfly story by evolutionary biologist Elisabet Sahtouris, www.sahtouris.com/noflash.php?ref=5\_3,0.

<sup>179</sup> The butterfly metaphor gives the impression as if the path of humankind is pre-programmed and rather free of human intent and agency.

<sup>180</sup> The butterfly story by evolutionary biologist Elisabet Sahtouris, www.sahtouris.com/noflash.php?ref=5\_3,0.

<sup>181</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 45.

<sup>182</sup> Also from Lindner, 2000a, p. 439.

<sup>183</sup> Adapted from Lindner, 2000a, p. 439. See also Lindner, 2006a, p. 48.

<sup>184</sup> Lindner, 2006a, p. 47.

<sup>185</sup> After the commons were enclosed in England, starting during the sixteenth century, what sociologist Eric Mielants, 2007, calls “terroristic” laws were introduced that criminalized idleness, thus pushing people into early capitalist manufacturing.

<sup>186</sup> Emotional Literacy is a book by Claude M. Steiner, 2003, a psychotherapist who has written extensively about transactional analysis (TA). I thank Janet Gerson of reminding me of Steiner’s work.

<sup>187</sup> Rosenwein, 2006, pp. 19;197–202.

<sup>188</sup> Ross, 2013, pp. 9, 45–46.

<sup>189</sup> Freire, 1968/1973.

<sup>190</sup> Lindner and Desmond Tutu (Foreword), 2010.

<sup>191</sup> See “Was für ein Leben,” Blog Arnstcht, Arnstadt, Geschichte, Leute, September 30, 2009, <https://blog-arnstcht.de/2009/09/was-fur-ein-leben/>. I thank Christoph Rosenau for making me aware of Günther Sattler and his flyer for freedom. Without Christoph Rosenau’s and his family’s support since 1978, my dignity work would not be possible.

<sup>192</sup> SED is the acronym Sozialistische Einheitspartei Deutschlands.

<sup>193</sup> Translated by Lindner from the German original: “An alle Bürger von Arnstadt! Kommt alle am 30. September um 14 Uhr zur friedlichen Kundgebung gegen die willkürliche Politik der SED,” Flugblatt von Günther Sattler,

www.ddr89.de/ddr89/texte/aufruf14.html:

WAS FÜR EIN LEBEN ?

was für ein leben?
wo die wahrheit zur lüge wird,
wo der falsche das zepter führt.

was für ein leben?
wo die freiheit tot geboren, wo schon scheint alles verloren.

was für ein leben?
wo alte männer regieren,
wo noch menschen an grenzen krepieren.

was für ein leben?
wo die angst den alltag bestimmt, wo das ende kein ende nimmt.

was für ein leben?
wo man seinen nachbarn nicht mehr traut, wo man nicht mehr aufeinander baut.

was für ein leben?
wo man nicht sein kann, der man ist,
wo man so schnell vergißt.

was für ein leben?
wo träume sterben, sterben,
wo es nichts mehr gibt zum vererben, außer scherben.

was für ein leben?
wo es für wenige alles gibt,
wo der kleine keinen ausweg sieht.

was für ein leben?
wo liebe nicht existiert,
wo man langsam erfriert.