Portrait of TI Devendra Chandravanshi using stones by artist Wajid Khan

With the pandemic aggressively spreading through the country and state, the situation looks grim. In fact a few frontline workers have also succumbed at the battle against COVID19. City based artist Wajid Khan, decided to pay homage to one of the fallen warriors TI Juni Indore, Devendra Chandravanshi – who lost his life to the disease on April 19. Known internationally for making art out of iron nails, Wajid decided to make the art using stone gathered from the vicinity of his residential society.

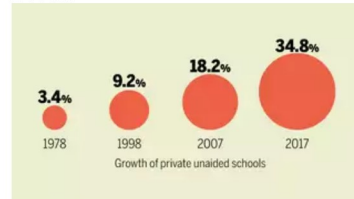

He recalls how he decided upon this artwork. “Although there were attacks happening on doctors and policemen across the country, there were many messages of gratitude from others who were showing their support to the frontline workers. I opened this discussion on social media, and I received numerous messages not just from India but also from Australia, New Zealand, Dubai. I had started gathering all the messages and was planning to make a portrait with these on flex and create a portrait of doctors and police.”

However, about a week back he received message from residents of Taatpatti Bakhil who were remorseful of the attacks on health workers in their area by some miscreants, and requested Khan if it would be possible to make his artwork with stones instead. “I started gathering stones from nearby area to work on the same and made this 50 by 50 feet portrait of TI Devendra” he shares. Khan worked for 12 hours every day in the last week to complete this portrait, around a residential complex at Khajrana.
